And ſuche perſones as are but chaffe, that is to ſaye, in pretenſe of holy-neſſe, merely gaye, but withinfoorth voide and emptie of all deuotion, ſhall flye about this way and that waye, whyther ſoeuer carnall deſyre and affec-tion ſhall carry them: but ſuche as are good wheate, hauyng within thẽ ſub-ſtaunciall and true godlynes, ſhall not be ſcattered abrode al about with the wynde: but whan the chaffe is tryed awaye, they ſhall declare the ſubſtaun-tiall ſtedfaſtnes of theyr mynde, whiche nothyng could moue. That tempeſt ſhall not make any perſones euill, but ſhall ſhewe them openly to be knowen what they were, euen when they were not ſeen: in like ſoꝛte, as the clere light

where it is, dooeth not make any perſones blynde or deformed, but sheweth who be deformed or blynde. The trueth of the goſpel is bright light, which they ſhall not abide nor away withall, that dyd afore shew forth their peynted breathe vnder the counterfait cloke of holyneſſe, wherag afore God they were men of wickednes: and contrary wyſe they ſhall be embraced and muche made of, whiche whereas vnto the worldewarde they were reputed for abiectes, yet neuertheles had a perfite zele of godly deuocio in their breaſtes. Such perſons as at the ſtrog force of the doctrine of God, whan they heare it, ſhalbe moued and ſtirred to doyng of miſchief, and to ſlaughter, ſhall not than kyſt of all bee made wicked: but ſuche occaſion beeyng geuen, it ſhall openly appere what maner felowes they were afore. For an occaſio doth not make folkes wicked, but doeth diſcouer theim and shewe theim as they be. Suche an one as whan the loſſe of goodes is ſet before his eyes, or whā perill of any croſſe or of death is shewed hym, wyll fall from the profeſſynge of the trueth, and forſake it, ſhall not euen than firſt of all beginne to be wicked but he ſhall at ſuche a tyme playnly declare what maner an one he was afore. Neither ſhal euery one byandby that is dipped in water, endure thzoughout in this examinacion or trial: but ſuche an one as hath fully receiued into him the ſpirite of God, and he that hath throughly conceiued the fier of charitie and loue vnperiſhable: ſuche an one ſhall not bee moued with any ſtorme of myſaeuentures or euils, but ſhall rather bee the more better pourged and the more ſtedfaſt, in lyke ſort as wheate and other graine is pourged and made clene with the faming of the wynde, and as gold is fcoured by the vertue of the fyer. Leat therefore euery bodye prepare theimſelfes to this rygorouſe and preciſe tryall, truſtyng not a whit to his nobleneſſe of birth, puttig none affiaunce in the holyneſſe of his auncеſtrie, nor putting no truſt in the carnall ceremonies of Moyſes law, but arming and feling his ſolle with fortreſſes, & wardes of more pithyhie ſubſtaūce to truſte to. It ſhall be no ſmalle poynt of the matter, what ſort euery bodie be founde to be of. Health euerlaſtyng, and euerlaſting damnacion ſhall trye out and diuide the ſound, frō the lyghte ones that are but puffes, and the right borne Iſraelites from the baſtardes.

And the chaffe ſhall be burne.

For the well clenſed corne ſhall he laye vp into the barne of the heauenly lyfe, and the chaffe ſhall he burne vp in fier that neuer ſhall bee quenched. The iudgement ſhall here in ſum piece bee shewed, but after this preſent life it is, that the wicked receyue the affliction of endleſſe peyne and tormente. With theſe and many other ſaiynges mo, did Johan exhort the people to repentaūce of their former lyfe, and to the deſire of Meſſias, which was than shortly to cum, now puttyng them in feare of peryll, nowe ſtyrryng them to goodneſſe with promiſe of rewardes, and (as ye would ſay) awakenyng the myndes of the people vnto the earneſte zele of euangelicall godlines, with the gladſom newes of redemption and ſaluacion.

The texte. Than Herode the Tetrarche, whē he was rebuked of him for Herodias his brothers wife, and for all the euils which Herode did, added this aboue all, and laied Johan in priſon.

And this boldneſſe of ſpeakyng ſo plainly, the common bulgare people, in conſideration of the notable holyneſſe of the man, could abide very well: the Publicanes could ſuffer it well inough: the ſoldiers alſo toke it in good part: and al theſe whā thei wer reproued, did willingly acknowlage their diſeaſe,

and

and beyng brought in a feare, they sought for remedy. But Herode could in no wise away withal, who with his haulte stomake (because he was a kyng) woulde haue all thynges to be lawfull for hym, that stoode with his lust or fansy. yet did he beare very good fauour and loue to John. He verye wel sawe and also did no lesse alowe the perfection of his lyfe, beeyng suche as was in fewe menne, yea and in many thynges also woulde he bee rewled by the counsail of John. But yet in that point in which it had been chefely of all expedient and behourable to geue care vnto Johns sayinges, he did not onely not doe after his counsayle, but also caste hym into prysone for geuing hym good aduertisement. And brought John to destruccion, whan John was diligent to call him backe from destruccion. Of this sorte are oftentimes þ herdes of suche Prynces, as the wysedome of the ghospell hath not throughlye wonne ne recouerd from the dominiō of abominable lustes. Sum suche mē be lordes & rulers ouer others, as on their owne behalfes are bōdseruāūtes to their own violent and strong affections: and suche thinke themselfes exempt for this poynte specially to be kynges, that they bee slaues and bond men to abcmination, no mā sayig blacke their iye. They many tymes cal vnto theyr seruice to be about thē, men well approued and knowen for their holines of liuing, they haue many tymes priuate communication with the same, & after the counsail or aduise of suche they do many thynges: not that they haue delite in true godlynes, but that they may by such a cloke purchase to themselfes an opinion of perfite liuyng, and that they may somewhat mollifye mennes repining and grutching at their naughty doinges: or to the ende, that whan they pile and polle the people, whā they exise wicked battail, whā they play tiramous partes towardes sum that beare good herte and wyl to the common wrale: they may seme to doe these thynges too, by the counsayl of most approued honest men. And euen in the like sorte did Herode abuse þ pilche of Camels hyde, wherewith John was clad: in the lyke sorte did he abuse the leatherne belte wherwith John was girt, so did he abuse the spare diet that John vsed: so did he the innocencie of Johns whole life: so lykewyse dyd he the authoritie of John, through whiche he mighte doe very muche with the people, and altogether to the maintenaūce of his own tiranny. And for thys cause the Lorde Jesus dooeth afterward call him fore. For this is the wily craftines of cuill prynces of this worlde: vnto whome if it shall at any tyme fortune right professours of the ghospel to be called to seruice, either þ gospellers muste eschewe the coumpany and conuersacion of suche maysters, in whose houses they shall sooner be marred and brought to naughtinesse on their own parties, then they shal turne the others to better waies, or els thei muste prepare their mindes aforehande to the like rewarde for shewyng the truth without dissimulacion, that John forfunted to get for his labour. For whan Herode nothyng growyng out of kynde from the maners and facions of his father and others his auncestours, plaied many wicked and tiranous partes, pilyng & polling the people, pulling away all libertie by oppressiō, punishyng in others the same thynges in whiche he was a common offender himself, vsing all offices of magistrates vnder him as sale ware for money, vsyng also to sell the ministracions of priesthood, & kepig within his house openly in the face of all the worlde, one Herodias, the wife of Philyp beyng his brother, and had by force of strong hand taken her away from his sayed

brother yet beyng aliue, togeather with a doughter of the ſame Philippes: this holy man becauſe he couldē not abide ſuche inceſt and vnnaturalneſſe of mariage in a kynges houſe, from whens eſpecially aboue al other places, it was conuenient that example of keping the lawes ſhould proceede, aduertiſed him to refrain himſelf from ſuche a wicked miſdede. But with a deuiliſh king, the deuiliſhe requeſt of a gierle beyng a minion dauncer togeather with the ſuggeſtion of a deuiliſh woman, weighed more, then the holſome aduertiſement of ſo vncorrupt a man: with the whiche good aduertiſemēt he was nothyng the better, but remained ſtil ſo ferre out of the way from being amēded, that vnto his hainous enormities afore paſt, he added one dede of myſchief more, the moſt vngracious that euer was: that is to wete, caſting Iohn into pryſon, and procedyng ſo ferre at laſte in outragious woodnes, that he cauſed the heade of the moſte innocent man to bee chopt of, and ſo gaue it to the wenche for a reward of her vicious wanton dauncyng.

The texte. ¶ And it fortuned that whan all the people receiued baptyſme, (and whan Ieſus was baptyſed, and did praye,) the heauen was opened, and the holye ghoſte came downe in a bodely ſhape lyke a doue vpon hym. And a voyce came from heauen whiche ſayde: Thou art my beloued ſonne, in thee do I delite.

But now, (to returne to the diſcourſe of the ſtorie) before that the lord Ieſus would entre into the buſie office of preachyng, which he entended with in the coumpaſſe of a ſhort tyme to accōpliche, and bryng to a perfite ende, to the entent that he would leaue no one poynt of humilitie or of righteouſnes vnfulfilled: thought no diſdain to cum with the reſidue of folkes vnto baptiſme, not to be purified himſelf, (whiche he neded not) but to conſecrate and halow the lauacre or founte of eternall ſaluacion to our behofe thrōugh his baptiſme. He hūbled himſelf, but that notwithſtanding, he was aſwel by the voice of Iohn, as alſo by the moſt clere teſtimonie of his eternal father, openly cōmended in the face of all the people, to the entent that they might knowe him euē by the face to be by ſight, of whō the prophetes had afore tymes ſpoken muche by prophecie, and of whō Iohn had openly witneſſed. So than, at that time a great numbre of the common people wer in baptiſing, and in the ſame cumpany Ieſus Chriſt cūming as one among the mo, had inſtantly declired of Iohn to haue baptiſme, as though he had been like other mē ſubiect to ſin: Iohn would haue refuſed to baptiſe him, acknowlagyng him as ſauiour & geuer of puritie, of whom he ought rather to had been baptiſed himſelf. And thiſſame teſtimony was geuē firſt of Iohn to the dignitie of Ieſus being there perſonally in place, euē before al the multitude of the people: but the heauēly father did by a more euident marke, diſſeuer his ſonne Ieſ from the reſidue of the cūpany that wer baptiſed. For vnto al the reſt, whā they were in baptiſing, there appered no ſigne ne token at al. But immediatly after that the lord Ieſ was baptiſed, as he was now makig his deuout praiers to god (teaching vs thereby, that whan the ſtate of innocencie is perfitely renewed through baptiſme, we ought immediatly to cōuert and beſtow our ſelues to ſuch ſtudies & exercyſes as are of the ſpirit, emōg which deuout praier hath the firſt place) heauen opened, which his baptiſme ſet wide open to vs, where as vntil that day it had been ſhut vp frō vs. And frō thens came doun the holy ghoſt, being of hiſelf inuiſible, but for that time enueſted & clad with a figure or likenesse vysible, because he should be seene with the yes of men. And as for the likenesse, it was of a doue, because that this bird, beyng as a sygne to represent innocencie, or simplicitie, had many hundred yeres afore brought a braunche of an olyue tree into the arke of Noe, for a token that the wrathe of God was pacified, and also a caution or pledge of warratie that the floudde was at an end. And in dede the said flouddo of Noe, by whiche ye worlde was at that time scoured and pourged of all naughty creatures, did tomeine a misticall figure of our baptisme, whereby all our sinnes are drowned by, our bodies and soules bothe, beyng preserued in perfyte safetie. In this lykenesse than dyd the holy ghoste descende downe, & reste vpon the holy toppe of the lorde Iesus head, openly betokenyng that he it was, whom God the father had plentiously anoynted with all heauenly giftes of grace, whiche gyftes he woulde afterwarde poure out vpon al persons, as many as by puttyng their affiaunce and truste in him, wer or should afterward bee graffed in the brotherhoode of his bodye thorough baptisme. There came also vnto him besides this likenes of a doue, an euident testimonie of his fathers voice, not now declared by ye prophetes, not by Moses, not by angels, but publyshed by the father selfe, not that the father may in his verye owne lykenesse as he is, bee either heard, or seen, or by any sence of the body comprehended or perceyued: but lyke as the holy ghoste beeyng inuisible did openly shewe hymself to the eyes of men in a visible signe, euen so the heauely father sending downe a voice thorough ye elementes aboue, did sensibly pearce eares of me. And the voice that sowned from on high, was in these wordes. Thou arte mine owne onely dere beloued sonne in whom I am thoroughly pleased & satisfied. To none of al the holy me that euer were in olde time, was there euer any testimonye of suche lyke sorte as this geuen. A doue cumming before, pointed out certainly, to whome this voyce did appertaine, to thentent that no man should deme it to be John, that was commended with the sayd poyse, of the whiche John, a greate manye of folkes had conceyued such an high estimation, that they verily ye thought him to be the Messias selfe. By so many testimonies was it the pleasure of Christ to bee commended vnto ye world, ere he would addresse him to enter the high charge of preachyng: geuyng in the meane tyme a lesson to vs by example of hymselfe, that no man should presse or roumble himselfe into suche an high office sodainlye or vnreuerently, ere he made himselfe mete for it. He had priuately had testimonye geuen him of Aungels, of Elizabeth, of Simeō, of Anna, of the Magians: & in the open face of the worlde by John, (whose authoritie was of ryghte great wayghte and force among the Iewes,) and by the holy ghoste, and by the fathers owne selfe.

Vpon hym.

And a voice came from heauen.

Thou arte my beloued sōne, in the do I delite.

¶ And Iesus hymselfe began to be about thirty yeres of age, so that he was supposed to bee the sonne of Ioseph, whiche was the sonne of Heli, which was the sonne of Mathat, whiche was the sonne of Leui, which was the sonne of Melchi, which was the sonne of Janna, whiche was the sonne of Ioseph, which was the sonne of Mataratthias, which was the sonne of Amos: which was the sonne of Nahū, which was the sonne of Esli, whiche was the sonne of Nagge, whiche was the sonne of Maath, which was the sonne of Mathathias, which was the sonne of Semei, which was the sonne of Ioseph, which was the sonne of Iuda, which was the sonne of Iohanna, whiche was the sonne of Resa, whiche was the sonne of Zorobabell, which was the sonne of Salathyell, whiche was the sonne of Neri, whiche was the sonne of Melchi, whiche was the sonne

the ſonne of Abdi, whiche was the ſonne of Coſam, whiche was the ſonne of Helmadam, whiche was the ſonne of Er, whiche was the ſonne of Jeſu, whiche was the ſonne of Eliezer, whiche was the ſonne of Joram, whiche was the ſonne of Eſtatha, whiche was the ſonne of Leui, whiche was the ſonne of Simeon, whiche was the ſonne of Juda, whiche was the ſonne of Joſeph, whiche was the ſonne of Jonam, whiche was the ſonne of Eliachim, whiche was the ſonne of Melcha, whiche was the ſonne of Menam, whiche was the ſonne of Mathatha, whiche was the ſonne of Nathan, whiche was the ſonne of Dauid, whiche was the ſonne of Jeſſe, whiche was the ſonne of Obed, whiche was the ſonne of Boos, whiche was the ſonne of Salmon, whiche was the ſonne of Naaſſon, whiche was the ſonne of Aminadab, whiche was the ſonne of Aram, whiche was the ſonne of Eſrom, whiche was the ſonne of Phares, whiche was the ſonne of Juda, whiche was the ſonne of Jacob, whiche was the ſonne of Iſaac, whiche was the ſonne of Abraham, whiche was the ſonne of Thara, whiche was the ſonne of Nachor, whiche was the ſonne of Saruch, whiche was the ſonne of Ragau, whiche was the ſonne of Phalec, whiche was the ſonne of Heber, whiche was the ſonne of Sala, whiche was the ſonne of Cainam, whiche was the ſonne of Arphaxat, whiche was the ſonne of Sem, whiche was the ſonne of Noe, whiche was the ſonne of Lamech, whiche was the ſonne of Mathuſala, whiche was the ſonne of Enoch, whiche was the ſonne of Jareth, whiche was the ſonne of Malaleel, whiche was the ſonne of Cainam, whiche was the ſonne of Enos, whiche was the ſonne of Seth, whiche was the ſonne of Adam, whiche was the ſonne of God.

And Jeſus himſelf began to be of thirtie yeres of age.

And vnto all the thynges aboue mencioned, there was alſo annexed the auctoritie of full yeres, fitte for ſuche a purpoſe. For at the time whan the lorde Jeſus came vnto baptiſme, he was well toward the pointe of thirtie yeres of age: not that page is eſtemed afore God, but becauſe it was couenter, that he whiche ſhould drawe all perſones vnto him, ſhould ſatiſfie all creatures in all behalfes: neyther in ſuche a perſone any one poynte to bee, whiche any creature myghte any thyng lykelye depraue or fynde faulte withall. The age therefore of due ripeneſſe was choſen therevnto and taried for, vntill it came: becauſe that ouer young age (whan one is but a ſtrypyng towardes a young man) is not of any authoritie or regarde among men: for the generall opinion of people is, that ſuche an one is vnerpert and vnſkilful: and on the other ſide, olde age is the lighter eſtemed and paſſed on, by reaſon that the power and habylitie of the witte, is muche decayed, and ſuche ones greatly ſuſpected of dotyng. And forbecauſe that the bleamyche of ones linage doeth ſooze abate a greate piece of his autoritie amonge the common people, this poynte alſo was prouided for, that Jeſus ſhould for ſo long tyme be veryly thoughte and beleued to be the ſoonne of Joſeph, vntyll the goſpell were throughe his myracles and preachynge, ſufficiently brought to light and made famous. This was a thyng for the dignitie of Chriſte, to bee borne of a pyrgyn: but becauſe it was not muche materiall that the ſame ſhoulde euen at the fyrſte daye cum to lyghte and knowledge abrode, and yet thoughe it had, it woulde haue beena very harde matter to bee perſuaded to the worlde: he vſed the wrong opinion of the people an other waye to a good purpoſe, becauſe no maner thyng ſhould in the meane tyme diminyſhe his autoritie in his preachynge, yf he myghte of any maner lykelyhood haue been ſaued to bee borne in aduoutrye. It was his pleaſure to cum into the worlde borne oute of a ſymple meane houſe: but yet ſuche an houſe, as no ſpotte of yll name or fame had at any tyme ſtayned.

So that he was ſuppoſed to be the ſonne of Joſeph.

For verily to a teacher of the ghoſpel, not only the fault ſelf, but alſo al likenes and appearance of the fault muſt be auoided, and a teacher ought of duetie not only to be a man of good cõmendatiõ for ỹ vertuous qualities that he hath, hath but also without any infeccion or sparke of suche thynges, of which the people vseth to conceiue any mistrust of euil. For this is the cõmon opinió of moste men, that scarcely at any time there doeth of euill parentes cum good chyldren. Therfore Christe, who shunned not the reproch of pouertie, who shonke not to be borne out of a meane house: yet eschewed ỹ simple reproche & slaunder that might haue cum of his age and of his descent. And although he Joseph was not the father of Jesus by nature, but by thordre of ỹ law only, (because he was the spouse husbande of ỹ Jesus mother:) yet neuerthelesse because he maried a wife of the same tribe and house that hiself was of, I haue thought it beste to begynne the reckenyng of our lordes pergrewe, at hym, to the ende that it may the more euidently appere, that a very manne he was in dede, on the bodies behalf naturally borne of them, of whome the forsaid synges of the prophetes had before his cummyng tolde that borne he shoulde be. For after the higher nature of his godhed, the heauenlye fathers selfe ackowlaged and openly protested Jesus to be his owne very soonne. Than Joseph the spouse of the virgin Marie (who was mother to Jesus,) was after the fourme of the law, called the sonne of Heli, beyng his vncle by the fathers side, but after the trueth of naturall generacion, he was the sõne of Jacob, whiche Jacob reised sede vnto his brother Heli, beyng borne oute of ỹ same bealy that himself was, because the same Heli was deceassed without issue, & so vpon his wife, who he at his dyeng left a widow, Jacob, begot a sonne called Joseph, Heli was the sonne of Mathat, and he again had Leui to his father. Leui was borne of Melchi, who was begottē of Janna the sonne of Joseph sonne of Matatthias, to whō Jmos was father. And him did Naũ beget, who was the sonne of Helli, & Helli borne of his father Nagge, and Nagge issued out of Maath, the sonne of Matathias. This Matathias was cum of the seede of Semei, the sonne of Joseph, who was begotten and borne of Juda. Juda had to his father Joanna, the soonne of Rhesi, beyng sõne to Zorobabel, Zorobabels father was Salathiel, borne hiself of Neri, the sonne of Melchi, who was descended of the linage of Addi the sonne of Cosam, begotten of Helmadã. And he was lineallye descended of Her, the sonne of Jesu, who was borne of Heleazer the soonne of Joram. And father to Joram was Mattha, beyng hymselfe borne of Leui the sonne of Simeon, borne of Juda the sonne of Joseph. And him had Jonã begottē beyng himself the sonne of Heliachim, the sonne of Meleã. And he was borne of Mathatha, beyng the sonne of Nathan.

Which was the sonne of Heli.

This man had kyng Dauid begotten of Barsabee, by whom was restored the stocke of Salomon, whiche failed afore, and decayed in Ozochias. Dauid was begotten of Jesse the sonne of Obed, beyng borne of Booz. Father to this mã was Salmõ, the sonne of Naasson, beyng borne of Aminadab, to whom Aram was father, and Aram sonne to Esrom, begotten of phares the sonne of Juda, Juda came by lineall discente from the Patriarke Jacob the sonne of Jsaac, whom Abraham being an aged man had accordyng to Goddes promyse, begotten of his olde wife Sara. And Abraham was borne of Tharra the sonne of Nachor, beyng begottē of Saruch the sõne of Ragau, to whom Phalec was father, and father to him again was Heber, begotten of Sale, the sonne of Cainan, and Cainan the sonne of Arphaxat, whose father was Sem, the sonne of Noe, and Noe, the sonne of Lamech, and he the

sonne of Mathusalah, beyng borne of Enoch, whose father was Jareth, and he descended of Malaleel, the sonne of Cainan, who was begotte of Enoch the sonne of Seth, whose father was Adam, and begotte Seth after that he had lyued an hundred and thirtie yeres. Adam was the head of al mākind hauyng none other autour ne progenitour of his generacion but onely God, of whom he was created of the clate of the yearth, beyng to him (as it wer) in stede of a mother. And forbecause that all mankynde was infected & tayncted throughe the synne of this our yearthly father, and resemblynge the inclynacion of the same fyrst father, it was now fallen into all kynde of viciousnesse: there was sente the lord Jesus as a restorer and a redemer of the same mankynde whan it was so extremely fallen, to the end that the same whiche had ful & whole fallē down throughe þ disobedience of one, might be reconciled again throughe the obedience of one: and to the ende that lyke as all those whiche had folowed the steps of their earthly father, became therby subiect vnto deathe: so they whiche beyng exempted from the synned of the synner throughe baptisme, were grafted into the heauenlye Adam (which is Jesus Christe,) and did cleue fast vnto the steppes of the same: should attayne euerlastyng life in heauen. And in dede the begynnynges of mankynde whan it fell, and of the same, at the restorynge of it, dooe in many behalfes answer taunt pour taunt, the one contrary to the other. For nothyng at all was there doen in this matter by blynde chaūce or casualtie: but all the whole processe and discourse of thynges was tempered and ordred by the wisedom and ordinaunce of God almightie. The talkyng of Eue with the serpent whan she was a virgin, was the begynnyng of our deadly perishyng: and the talkyng of the virgin Marie with Gabriell, was the begynnynge of our healthe and recouerie. Eue beeyng corrupte with the lure of an apple laughyng on her, both cast awaie her housbande, and also brought in death into the worlde: & Marie beyng a virgin for euer & euer vncorrupted, constauntly despysynge all allurements of the flesche, and with simple plain faythe willingly yeldyng her self vnto the will of god, brought forth the man that brought helth and saluacion to the worlde. Adam also was tempted, and ouercomed: Christ beeyng tempted, ouercame the temptour. Adam folowyng the mynde of his wyfe whan she was corrupted, was caste out of paradise for his laboure: Christe obeiyng his father euen vnto death, sette the waye into heauen wide open. For the sensuall pleasure of tasting an apple, was Adam made a bonde seruaunt vnto the deuill: Christe by settyng all the kyngdomes and delycate pleasures of þ world at naught, deliuered our enemie into our handes, to be subdued at oure owne pleasure. The one throughe the eatyng of an apple, lost al his posteritie and succession: and the other throughe abstinence of meat restored them that afore were lost. The one was driuen awaie out of Paradise into the yearth, replenished with miserie, and lyyng al desert: and þ other hath made a waye vnto heauen safe and strongly fensed from al desertnesse. Adā throughe þ vain desire of pronde knowelage, plucked his succession after him vnto death, and Christ throughe the hūble obedience of faith, did restore life again. Yea, and besides al this, on bothe parties woode and tree. On the one syde the serpent by meane of the tree, ouercame and beguiled Adam: & on the other side Christ by meane of the tree, beguiled & also ouercame þ deuill. By meane of the tree came death: by meane of the tree came lyfe. The head and chiefe captayne of our destruccion was made out of the yearth, beeyng a virgin: and the head of our saluacion, borne of the virgin Marie. Adam was created to the lykenesse of God, and Christe beeyng the true lykenesse of God, tooke on hym bothe the lykenesse and nature of manne. Adam was deceyued through his wyfe Eue: and Christe hath called backe his spouse the churche, from the deceiptefull errour of the deuyll. On the one partie, a woman, whyle she seketh to bee made wyse, brought furthe the begynnyng of all foolyshenesse: and on the other partie, a woman, while she sheweth herselfe voyde of al suche presumpcion, bryngeth furth vnto vs the fountayne of wysedome. The firste Adam while he hath moze desyre to be wyse then obedient, brought in folishenesse into the worlde: and the new Adam wheras he was the wisedome of his father, was contente to be made as a foole for our sakes, to the ende that we might be made wise in him. Through pryde came our fall: and through humilitie came our settyng vp agayne. Adam being through the serpent made bare of all the good qualities of the mynde, couered hymselfe with leaues plucked from the tree: Christe being riche in giftes celestiall, desired no maner thing at all of this worldes. The figures also of the olde Testament do beray well accorde with the storie of the ghospell. Moses guided and led the Israelites out of Egypte: and Christe hath deliuered them from the derkenesse of ignorance, and from the bondage of vice. They had their passage there through the water, and we here through baptisme haue a ready waye to saluacion and freedome. There was a pilour of a cloude and of fyer: and here the father sendeth a voyce downe through a cloude, and our spirite is baptised with fyer. Through the first lawe is occasion of death: through the lawe of the ghospell we are called agayne to lyfe. But the olde lawe dyd with thounderynges and lyghtenynges make them soze afeard: and the lawe of the ghospell doeth with gentilnesse and benefites call vs forth to saluacion. Moses was terrible to be seen, but in such wyse that constreyned he was to couer his face: Christe is mylde and full of courteous humanitie, and puttyng hymselfe in companie emong the thickeste of the people. Moses went vp to the hill to talke with God: and Christe came downe to vs, to the intent that God should speake to vs by hym. The fyrste Adam while he coueteth to be equal with God, is compared to bzute beastes, voyde of vnderstandyng. The seconde Adam whan he humbled himselfe from his godly maiestie downe to the bassenesse of our humaine nature, wheras we were moze abiecte and vile then euen the bzute beastes are, he lyfted vs vp to the participation and bzotherhood of his godhed. Nowe to conclude, through Jesus the sonne of Mane was their returnyng into the lande flowyng wyth mylke and honey: and through Jesus the sonne of a virgin is our returnyng agayne into paradyse. Let vs therfore goe awaye from the disposicion of our first parentes, and duely folowyng the lyfe of our Lozde Jesus, let vs wyth pure myndes embzace his benefite, and let vs with al godly zele and endeuour folowe his exaumple to the best of our powers: hymselfe will ayde vs thereto with his helpe, the whiche of his goodnesse hath geuen the exaumple: let vs embzace the merciable and vnwzathfull maker of the lawe euangelicall. Lette vs folowe our guide, who only and none but he, is hable to bzyng all nacions of the whole worlde home vnto that same lande, whiche continually without ende doeth moste plenteously flowe with all kynde of ioyes.

¶ Jesus beeyng full of the holy ghoste, returned from Jordan, and was ledde by the spirite into wildernesse, and was fowerty daies tempted of the deuill. And in those daies did he eate nothyng. And whan they were ended, he after warde houngred. And the deuill sayed vnto hym: If thou be the sonne of God, commaunde this stone that it bee bicade. And Jesus answered hym, saying: It is wrytten: Man shall not lyue by bread only, but by euery woorde of God.

Returned from Jordan.

AND Jesus (vpon whose head the doue had lighted before at his baptisme, beeyng not a voyde signe, but the holy ghoste hymselfe in that lykenesse,) although he were nowe full of the holy ghoste, yet before he would enterpryse the office of preachyng the ghospell: because he would be in all thinges approued and tryed euen to the vttermoste, ere he wouldc take suche an office in hande: he departed from Jordan, geuyng therby a lesson, that after baptisme, menne shoulde endeuoure themselfes to the moze higher exercises of godly lyuyng: he withdrawe himselfe from the coumpanie of people, with whom to be familiar and muche conuerssaunce, doeth many tymes corrupte a manne, and also doeth cause the authoritie of a teacher to be the lesse esteemed and regarded. And by the spirite of God, wherwith he was wholy rauished and possessed, he was moued and led furthe into wildernesse, from whence John had to foze come furthe emong the people. And this did Jesus euen as one that mynded to bidde the enemie of mankynde, quickely to come of and make readie all hys crafties and ingiens: veraply of purpose, both to shewe and declare vnto vs that the deuyll, who had hitherto been as a conqueroure ouer mankind, & had holden them captiue, maye bee banquyshed and subdued: and also as it were, with his fynger to poynte vnto vs the waye howe to wynne the victoiy ouer hym. A place was sought and found apte & mete for the temptours purpose, and that was wildernesse: and occasion was ministred by the meanes of hounger. For Jesus to doe the parte that Moses did in this behalfe, nowe that he went about to geue vnto the worlde a newe lawe, that is to wete, a doctrine of grace, which is the ghospell, he fasted as Moses had doen, fowertie dayes: and in all this tyme of the sayed fowertie daies, he touched no maner of meate, but passed ouer all this tyme with holy prayers, vnto God: geuyng laude and glozye to the same, and with geuyng continuall thankes vnto his heauenly father. And this was a paterne and a saumple oz president of a certayne rare and vnwoonte vertue in manne. Neyther was he ignozaunt of the crafties and subtilties of Satan, who by all meanes possible neuer moze earnestly pitcheth and setteth his snares and grinnes, then whan he perceyueth the myndc and soule of man with notable endeuour to encline and drawe towardes heauenly lyuyng. And Satan had heard that one there shoulde come, whiche shoulde discoumfeight and destruie his puissaunce: and whether that mightie conqueroure were nowe alreadie come oz no, he stoode in doubte: and what maune Jesus should be, he could not tell. For Satan who had beguiled mankynde to foze by his subtile crafties and wyles, was nowe contrarywyse to bee beguiled by the politique wyse-

And was ledde by the spirite into wildernesse.

And in those daies did he eate nothyng.

wyſedome of God. He had heard John openly confeſſe and ſaye, I am not Chriſte. Wherfore ſeeyng and perceyuyng many thynges in Chriſte, whiche ferre ſurmounted the compace of mans power: and on the other ſyde agayne, ſeeyng hym to bee an houngred, and to be in great affliction throughe defaulte of takyng bodily ſuſteinaunce, (whereas it is not read that Moſes and Helias after the faſtyng and abſteinyng from meate by the ſpace of lyke noumbre of dayes were an houngred:) he ſuppoſed Jeſus to be nothyng elſe but a manne, yea and ſuche a manne, as by his craftie conueighaunce myght be corrupted. Nowe the wilie and ſubtill deuyſe of the temptour was this: that is to wete, eyther to ouercome and wynne hym in dede, or at the leaſte wyſe to hunte out, whether he were that Sonne of God or no, whiche had been promyſed by the Prophetes. Whiche thyng yf he myght haue perceyued ſo to bee, than would he bende all his ſtrength and force to this ende and purpoſe, that by one waye or other he myght hinder and lette the redemption of mankynde.

But no crafte is hable to take place or effecte againſte the wyſedome of God, whiche in ſuche ſorte tempered and ordred all her doynges, that it dyd not onely ſubdue and conquier that ſame our moſte ſubtile and craftie enemy, but alſo deſeated hym of his purpoſe by his wordes, leauyng hym in as muche doubte and vncertaynte, as he was before. By the infirmitie of the fleſche he mocked and diſapoynted hym of his purpoſe, a theugh the ſtoutneſſe and puiſſaunce of the ſpirite, together with the ſure force of holy ſcripture, he ben-quiſhed and ſubdued hym, ſo that hauyng the foyle & ouerthrowe to his great ſhame, he was driuen awaye, and departed in as muche vncertaynte, whether this were the ſonne of God or no, as he was before at his firſt cummyng.

Satan therfore layed agaynſt Jeſus that ſame effectuall darte and artillerie, that he firſte vſed agaynſt the firſte parentes of mankynde, Adam and Eue: and therewith ouerthrewe them, albeit he onely enticed them with the lure of a faire apple that laughed vpon them: but here in Jeſus eale, houngre alſo, bee-yng an euill that no manne can endure withall, was a ſtrong helper forwarde to the thyng, that the temptour wente aboute. Eſau, beeyng compelled with houngre, ſolde the title and intereſt of his birtheright that he ſhould haue had by elderſhip, he ſolde it for a meſſe of portage. And the Lorde Jeſus (yf it had been his pleaſure) myght theugh his diuine power, eyther haue kept away houngre from cummyng to hym, or elſe haue driuen it awaye whan it was come. Neuertheleſſe he wolde not ſo doe, but it was his full pleaſure and will to lay a baite for the temptour to vſe, wherwith the ſame teptour ſhould bee taken his owne ſelfe. The weakeneſſe of his bodie beeyng ſuche as other men had, was laied in Satans waie, as a ſtreete baite to vſe for his purpoſe: but the temptour ſtumbled, & hit on the hooke of the power of his godhead. He ſawe the body of a man witherynge and dyeng clene awaye with houngre, to be in great affliction and paine, and none other lyke but thoſelye to be in the ieoperdie and perill of death. (And men playnly affirme that there is no kynde of death more penfull, then to be famyſhed to death.) He ſawe hym in the wil-dernesſe ferre from any towne or village, from whence any meate myght bee gotten or miniſtred vnto hym for his ſuſteinaunce. Takyng therfore a bolde-neſſe of theſe thynges the ſpirite of wickednesſe aſſaileth the Lorde Jeſus be-yng replete with the ſpirite of holyneſſe: he biddeth bace, and begynneth firſte with hym, of whom he was to be subdued: he biddeth hym come furth, who was so strong and valiaunte for hym to matche withall: he attempteth to take in the snare, one ferre wyser and more warie than hymselfe. What nedeth thou (sayeth Satan) to bee thus tormented with houngre? If thou bee that same sonne of God whiche was promised to bee sente to redeme the worlde, commaunde that this stone turne into breade for thy behouse, and that wyll bee an euidente token where by for the to declare, that thou art the sonne of God in dede. For thy father vndoubtedly wyll not in this behalfe geue a deafe eare to his sonne, beyng thus in distresse and ieoperdie of death through houngre. And seeyng that he created all thynges of naught, it should bee an acte of no great matter, if the Sonne of God turne a stone into breade. But Iesus beeyng not ignoraunte what the temptour herein hunted for, so tempered his aunswere, that he neyther consented to the temptours counsayle, nor yet disclosed the nature of his godhead to his enemy, who nowe by a newe and a straunge conueighaunce, was thronge the infirmitie, and weakenesse of Iesus bodye, both to bee beguiled, and also to bee conquered. He denyeth not but the Sonne of God had power to turne stones into breade, ne disalloweth to assuage the houngre of the body with meate whiche was ordeyned therfore, but by the autoritie of the holy scripture of God, he plainly theweth, that there is a lyfe of the soule muche more to bee regarded then the lyfe of the bodye: and that there is a spirituall meate, whiche is more requisite to be desired, then the meate that for a shorte tyme prolongeth the bodily lyfe, whiche lyfe neuertheleffe must of neceffitie perishe within a shorte space afterwarde, eyther by meanes of sickeneffe, or of age, or of some other casualtie. For the meate of the spirite geueth lyfe for euer to endure, and this meate is the woorde of God.

If thou bee the sonne of God, commaunde this stone, that it be bread.

It is written: Man shall not lyue by bread onely but by euery woorde of God.

This firste assaulte therfore of the deuyll, Iesus auoyded with this aunswer: It is wrytten (sayeth he, in the booke of deuteronomie. Mann liueth not by breade onely, but by euery woorde that proceedeth out of the mouthe of God. Deut. viii. a

And for this purpose doeth the Lorde nowe take the woorde of the diuine scriptures for his staigh: firste to teache vs humilitie and sobrenesse, that we ought not precisely to affirme any thyng without the autoritie of Scripture geuen vnto vs from God: Secondly he declareth vnto vs, that there is no weapon of more effectuall strength agaynste all the instinctes and mocions of wicked deuils, then the autoritie of the holy Scripturers. Out of the sayed Scriptures, is the true meate of the soule to bee fought and gotten, if a manne be of mynde and will to lyue to godwarde, to whom warde whoso liueth not, the same is already but a deadman, yea although to the eye he appeare to bee alyue. The firste parentes Adam and Eue did eate, & they died for their labour. That yf they had geuen the temptour that same aunswere, whiche the Lorde Iesus here at this present tyme gaue him, and had more regarded the Lordes commaundemente, the due keeping wherof geueth lyfe euerlastyng, then the appetite and lust of that mortall apple: they had not endaungered both themselues and all their succession after them to death and damnacion. And thus much further doeth the exaumple of our saluecur teache, that miracles are not to bee shewed for the lust or pleasure of men, but at suche tymes onely, whan the glorye of Christe doeth call for it, or els charitie and loue towardes our brother, doeth necessarily require it. For eyther to worke or to feigne sightes of woondres for a vainglorious boastyng, (as who shoulde saye, this can I doe:)

And for the lyke purpose and consideracion, doeth he at this presente denie a miracle to Satan.

¶ And the deuill tooke him into an high mountayne, and shewed hym all the kyngdomes of the worlde, euen in the twinckelyng of an ye, and the deuill saied vnto hym: All this power will I geue the euery whitte, and the glorye of them, (for they are deliuered vnto me, and vnto whomsoeuer I will geue it:) If thou therefore wilt fall downe before me, and worshippe me, they shall be all thyne. Iesus answered and saied vnto hym: Auoide from me Satan. For it is written: Thou shalt worshippe the Lord thy God, and hym onely shalt thou serue. The text.

The deuill, though he were vanquished at this firste bickeryng, yet ceassed not from tryng maisteries with Iesus to our exaumple, leste that we beeyng once conquerours, shoulde geue our selfes to sittyng still, voyde of all feare or care: but that we should haue euermore from tyme to tyme, a mynde readye and well armed and fensed agaynste his newe assaultes. Albeit euen in this temptacion also afore gooyng, there wanted not the gryme and snare of mouyng Iesus to presumpteouse vsurpyng and takyng vpon hym, whan Satan saied: If thou bee the Sonne of God. For suche as of nature are arrogaunte and prounde, and desirous of glorye, doe ofte tymes attempte to reache to suche thynges as are ferre aboue theyr powers: because they wyll not lese any parte of the opinion and estimacion that menne haue of them: and so by craftie couloure and counterfaite glosse, they take vnto them the thyng that is not in them, hunteyng for glorye and fame emong menne. After that sorte doe many by deceiptefull and craftie feactes vsurpe vnto themselfes the gyfte of prophecie, whiche they haue not: and many make bauntes and crakes of hauing visions of Aungelles, whiche they yet neuer sawe. Eut the Lorde Iesus contrarye wyse: although he were greatteſt of all the worlde, yet he wyll not be acknowen of his greatnesse, but hydeth it, shewyng furthwarde no countenaunce but of infirmitie and weakenesse of the bodye, ne at any tyme sheweth he furth his godly power, but whan so to doe is expediente for the healthe of manne, to the ende that the fathers glory maye bee renoumed and croumped abrode by the sonne. Satan therfore (as he is malicious, and wyll neuer haue dooen ne bee in reste,) dooeth eftesones inuade the Lorde, and sette vpon hym with the same dacte that he had dooen afore, but in a soondrie matter, assaying whether he that coulde not bee ouerthrowen with hounger, myght possiblie bee corrupted with the ryches and honours of this worlde. For ambicion (whiche is the desyre of honour and aduauncemente) is a foore mischiefe bothe pestilente and also in maner vnpossible to bee ouercomed. It is an euyll that stealeth on a manne euen in moste excellente vertues and qualities, crepyng in and acquaintyng it selfe in herres that labboure to clyme and to mounte vppe vnto thynges of high difficultie: in so muche, that whom neyther aduersitie, nor pouertie, ne sickenesse haue been hable to breake, whom neyther any riottous excesse, or leacherie, hath been hable to corrupte, them dooeth the earneste desire and affeccion of glory, ouerthrowe and bryng quyte vnder foote. For what thyng is there so mischeuous or so wicked, whiche mortall meane wyll refuse bothe to doe and suffre, yf they maye therby beare rewle, and bee in authoritie? Is not oftetymes the croune of a royalme bought with poysonynges, with murdreing of the nerest kynred, with incestuous mariage within the degrees forbidden by goddes lawe, and with other vilanies not to bee named? With the slaughter and murdremente of howe many persones, is the seigniourie of some one citie nowe and than gotten into mennes handes and possession? Honoure is swete: a gaye thyng it is to bee a rewler: and a royall matter to excell and passe others.

And reignyng dooeth vtterly in all behalfes, seme to bee a certayne poynte of Godhed emong menne. With this same swete flatterying poyson were the firste parentes Adam and Eue caught. The lure of the flatterying apple was delectable to theyr iyes: but the high perfection of knowlage falsely promysed vnto them by the Serpente, and the dignitie of beeyng equall with the state of Goddes, was muche more delectable to theyr myndes. With this engein therfore dyd the temptoure assaple Jesus, and he not a whitte shronnke backe from thy vnrestefull malepertnesse of thesame temptoure: to the ende that he wouldbe vanquisshe hym to our behoufe, and wouldetacche vs the faction howe to gette the ouerhande of hym. The dieuyll than tooke Jesus vppe into an high mountayne, and out of thesame mountayne as out of a beakon or an high place of spyall, he sodaynlye in a momente layeth all the kyngdomes of the worlde before his iyes (for a wicked spirite by the permission and sufferaunce of God maye so muche doe, as to repiesente vnto mennes iyes a lyuely semblaunce of thynges, after a certayne straunge and woondrefull maner:) and euen in thesame momente also, looke whatsoeuer poynte pryuces haith within their courtes, or otherwyse belongyng vnto them: thesame dooeth Satan by a certayne sleight, as it were of a iuglyeng

caſt, ſette before the iyes of Jeſus (as for exaumple,) richeſſe, ſeruaunces, palayces, armies, troumpettes, ſeruyce and attendaunce of menne, crouchyng and buelyng vnto them, the wes of royaltye whan they goe abrode, tryoumphes, ambaſſades, power to commaunde and to haue all thynges doorn at a beche, and other thynges a greate maygnye, wherewithall the flatterye of all peoples, dooethe wurthyppe and exalte mortall prynces of the worlde, beyng ofteeymes both fooliſhe and vngodlye, or howeſoeuer other thynges bee, ywiſſe frayll, and not hauyng anye long tyme to lyue: yet the people vſe them as berave Goddes. : yea and the prynces ſelues beeyng ſette in a pryde throughe the proſperouſe fortune of thynges tranſytorye, thynke themſelues better then God almyghties ſelowes. A certayne ſpectacle of all theſe thynges woonderful to beholde and imagine, dyd that ſame craftie iugler ſoodainly in a moment repreſente before the iyes of the Lorde Jeſus, who cannot bee deceyued with anye ſleyghtes of iugleyng, forſamuche as nothyng is hydden or vnknowen vnto hym. And vnto thys royall ſhewe of thynges, dyd the lying and malaperte Satan ſette oute a paineted ſorte of wordes more ſtately and gloryous, then the thinges ſelues were. All theſe ſame thynges (ſayeth he ſo goodlye, ſo ryche, and ſo full of royaltie, bee deliuered to my power and diſpoſicion, to geue and to graunte vnto whomeſoeuer me lyketh. For the ſoueraygne and the God of thys worlde, I am. That if thou wilte acknowlage my ſoueraygne godlye power, and fallyng downe flatte at my knees wylte bows and kneele vnto me, the whole vnpurſuall power and poſſeſſyon of all theſe realmes and kingdomes that thou ſeeſte, will I deliuer vp into thy handes. Thou ſeeſte howe greate the name of Ceaſar is euerywhere: and yet howe ſmall a poreyon of the worlde is it, that acknowlageth hym for theyr Lorde and ſoueraygne? And thou alone ſhalte haue and enioye them euerye one without exceptyon, and ſhalte bee wurthypped as a God here on yerthe, ſo that thou wilte acknowlage me for the autour and geuer of ſo greate a blyſſulneſſe. Thou knoweſte here (I am ſure) good chriſten reader, the moſt lying and moſte preſumptuouſe ſayinges of hym, who ſayde once vnto thoſe vnfortunate fiſſte parentes of mankynde, Adam and Eue: ye ſhall in no wyſe dye: but ye ſhall bee as Goddes, knowyng good and euyll. Here the Lorde Jeſus damned the wicked woordes of Satan, with woordes of Goddes holye Scripture, ſaying: Thaunte Satan with all thy deceyptfull promyſes. An hurtfull gaine it is, and full of hyndreaunce, that is boughte with the loſſe of dueIone and denocyon towardes GOD. The thyng that thou woulbeſte coueinaunte and entente to haue, is wicked, and the thyng that thou promyſeſte is in bayne. For writtyn it is in the booke of Deuteronomie: The Lorde thy God ſhalte thou wurſhippe, and him onely ſhalte thou ſerue. God will not ſuffer hys glorye to bee putte ouer from hymſelfe to an other: nor will not ſuffer to haue anye partener in it. He is the true God and Lorde of all thynges whatſoeuer there is in heauen or in yearthe. And vnto all that are true wurſhippers of hym, he freely promyſeth the inheritaunce of the kyngdome of heauen. Hys ſaying muſte men bee rewled by, rather then by ſayne: who

All this power will I geue the. &c.

If thou wilte fall downe before me. &c.

Deu. vi. c. 8. Thy Lorde God ſhalte thou wurſhip. &c.

lyke as thou dooeste wickedly require to haue to thy selfe, the honoure that is due to God alone: so doeste thou promyse not onely thynges of vanyte, and thynges that shall not any long tyme endure, but also perteyning to an other mannes possession, and not to thyne.

The Lorde Jesus mighte haue answered: wherefore dooeste thou promyse me that is myne owne alreadye? Agayn with what face dooeste thou require me to fall downe at thy knees, sence that I am God the whiche created thee, the whiche expulsed thee for thy pryde, and caste thee downe out of heauen, and ready and hable euen nowe to caste thee downe into hell as soone as I shall so thynke good? Ouer these perayre kingdomes whiche thou offerest me, no power ne title it is that thou hast, if the wrongiudgemente and vngodlinesse of the mortall people did not geue thee power and auctorite ouer them. By theyr folye it is, that thou arte of any power. True loue and deuocyon towardes GOD, shall reuyue agayne: and where shall thy kyngdome than bee? Thus myghte Jesus haue sayde: but Satan was at that presente to be beguiled, and not to be instructed, ne taught. Neyther was he worthy to bee tolde of his faulte, forasmuche as he could by no manier meanes be reformed. Ye but for oure behoule was all this pageaunte played: we it were to whome thys lesson was geuen, that whatsoeuer thyng hath the dyshonoure of God ioyned with it, how profytable soeuer it seeme to bee, is with greate stoutenesse to bee refused and defyed: not as thoughe rychesse are of themselues euyll: or that to bee a kyng is of it selfe euyll: or to bee a publyque magistrate or in hyghe auctorite is of it selfe euyll: but for that in manyer no manne maketh hymselfe a ware to these thynges, but by naughtye meanes and conueyghaunce: and for that the thynges are not enioyed ne possessed without some daungyer of forgettyng the bounden ductie and loue towardes God: and because they are subiecte to the hasarde of ieoperdyes and perylles innumerable. And truelye whatsoeuer persone beeyng corrupted with inordynate desyre of such thynges as these, dooeth make lyght of Goddes commaundementes, vseth fraude and falsehoode, stealeth, forsweareth, sleagheth, vseth vyghte and wrong as all one, suche an one hath euen nowe already kneeled downe and dooen worshyp to the prince of thys worlde, and hath denyed God, by a league made with Goddes aduersarye. And as often as the mynde of a Christen manne is enticed, that for encreasyng of his substaunce, or for obteynyng rewle and auctorite, or for purchasyng of glorye and renoume, the trueth maye bee forsaken, and wickednesse receyued in the place thereof: let hym by thys exaumple of Christe hys Capytayne, make aunswere without feare. Auaunte Satan with al thy deceyptfull promisses: onely GOD is to bee worshypped and bought vnto: and whoso hath hym hys good Lorde, the same is Lorde of all thynges with hym.

The texte. ¶ And he caryed him to Hierusalem, and sette him on a pinnacle of the temple, and sayed vnto him: If thou bee the sonne of God, caste thy selfe downe from hence. For it is written, he shall geue his Aungels charge ouer thee to kepe thee. and in their handes they shall beare thee vp, that thou dashe not thy foote agaynste a stone. And

Jesus

Jesus answered and sayed vnto him: It is sayed: thou shalte not tempte the Lorde thy God. And as soone as all the temptacyon was ended, the deuyll departed from him for a season.

Neyther doeth the endlesse malapertenesse of Satan, although it were thus also put of from hys purpose, not yet neyther geue ouer, or surceasse from tempting. He setteth vpon Jesus once more, as an enemye ofte to bee banquished: to the ende that we shoulde vnderstande our selues to haue in this life a contynuall fyghte with the same oure aduersarie, neyther anye thing to be so much agaynst all Goddes forbode, wherevnto he dareth not presume to prouoke and entyce the true seruauntes of God: but yet that good mennenede not to feare, to whose behouffe Christe Jesus hath vanquished him, and who haue dartes and weapons enough, of most strength and vertue out of the holy scriptures, wherewith the malaperte impoztunitie of the temptour maye in a momente bee out faced and quaylled. For all the aduauntage that he getteth by tempting is to none other poynte, but by ministring suche a good occasyon, to make the vertue of the good men greatter and better tryed. He therfore leadeth away the Lorde Jesus from the hyghe mountayne vnto the citye of Hierusalem, and there setteth hym vpon the vppermoste pynnacle of the temple, and exhortons prouoketh hym by temptacion, to the ende that eyther beeyng ouercomed with vayne glorye he shoulde cast himselfe downe headlong and so breake hys necke, or els by that token he shoulde deserie himselfe to bee the sonne of God. And a defence to maynteyne his fraude withall, he stole out of the wholy scrypture, albeit vnderstanded and taken in a wrong sence, and not applyed to suche a purpose as it ought to be. For by such lyke meanes doe the wicked persones and heritiques many tymes abuse the scrypture of God, and deceyue the vnwarie, whan they dep3aue and turne by a wrong sence, the rule of goddes woorde to theyr owne affectyons. Here (sayeth he) declare thou, whether thou be the sonne of God, or not. Cast thy selfe downe headlong, and in case thou shalte haue no harme at all there by, it maye than bee open and euident vnto all creatures, that thou arte the sonne of God. Neyther is there any daungier of any misaduēture to befal thee. For it is writen in the psalmes, as touching the sonne of God, that he shall geue charge to his aungels concerning thee, that they see thee preserued, and that they shall with theyr handes beare thee vp, that thou mayeste not stumble with thy foote at any stone.

He shall geue his Aungels charge ouce thee. &c.

psal. xxi. c.

This prophecie was not shewed directly of Christe alone, but of any godlye manne whatsoeuer he bee, that trusting boldelye on Goddes mightie helpe, ought not to bee a feardе on his owne behalfe from anye eiuilles of this worlde, according as the Lorde Jesus him selfe bidde his Apostles to bee oute of all feare or care in their hartes, for not so muche as an heare of one of theyr heades shoulde perysshe, contrarye to the myndе and pleasure of theyr heauenlye father. But Jesus makyng no counte naunce all thys whyle, that he was naturally the sonne of God: onely made this answere folowing, whiche myght haue bene made of any good man whatsoeuer he had bene: and with a texte of holy scripture rightly alleged, he

ceruyted the texte of Scripture whiche Satan had falsely cyted, as if one thoulde haue diseuered out one nayle with an other in a boorde. But contrarywise (sayeth he) it is written in the booke of Deute: enomie: Thou shalte Thou shalte not tempte the Lorde thy God. not tempte the Lorde thy God. His helpe shall bee readye, whan anye casualtye or whan any matter concernyng Goddes cause, shall bryng them into daungier: but not whan thou shalte for a vayneglorye or a braggе prouoke and require the high power of God to bee shewed. Neyther doeeth the tendrenesse of god towardes vs, serue to mayntayne the glory of the carnall pleasure of manne: but he at suche times as his will is, declaring his owne glory in man, doth succour man being destitute of the ayde and helpe of the world.
But vnworthye is that persone of goddes helpe, who for his owne vayneglorye dooeth wilfully caste himselfe into a manifeste daunguer of hys lyfe.
Neyther is it the propertye of a true godlye man to appoynete vnto God, whan or howe he ought to deliuer vs from perils, for asmuche as certayne we are, that whether he delyuer vs, or delyuer vs not, that thyng is ordeyned and wrought by hym, that is moste for oure healthe and safegarde. Ot-tentymes it is more for oure benefyte, and good happe to bee sycke, then to bee in health: to dye, then to liue: to bee in affliction, then to haue prosperine.
It is presente godlinesse to depende of him with a synple hearte: and a willed thyng it is, with mannes curyous searchyng, to tempte what hys power may extende to dooe. For he is of power to doe all thynges, but he will not dooe but what is beste. With these and other wayes moe, did oure head maister Jesus, suffer himselfe to be tempted of Satan immedyately in maner after his baptysme: to the ende that we sheulde not thynke it to bee suffycyente, that all oure synnes haue bene forgeuen vs through the lauatre of baptisme: but that we muste take in hande and entre a sharpe battayle with oure enemie Satan, who will leaue nothyng vnattempted, for to drawe vs backe agayne into oure olde bondage. At oure baptysme we mouster to the behouse of oure captayne, and we promyse to warre vnder hys banners agaynste the armye of Satan. And as for meane of thys worlde we haue nothyng to dooe withall, in the waye of anye querell, for asmuche as Christe, commaundeth vs to loue, yea euen oure enemies too: but we haue to dooe with the wicked spirites: who fight agaynst vs from on hygh, with fierie dartes, and with muche pollicie. But Jesus oure sourreygne hath once discomfeyghted all theyr powers, and therfore hath he deliuered them into oure handes easye enough to bee vanquyshed: yea and will eftsoones subdue them in vs, yf we will folowe the same trade of fyghtyng, whereby Christe brought them vnder subiectyon. They assaulte vs some whyles by themselues, puttyng vngodly thoughtes in oure hertes: many tymes by cyuell meanne, as theyr souldyers, they assayle vs whan they procure and make out messagyers that maye prouoke vs to all sensuall volup. lousenesse, that with braullyng and with raylyng woordes maye moue and stiere vs to wrathe and manslaughter. And bayres wherwith to catche vs they some whiles fette of thys worlde, the promotions, rychesse, and pompes whereof, they doe by heapes cast into oure yes.

And

And many tymes euen out of our owne selfes they take baytes for vs. For there bee in vs certayne affectionate pangues of nature, whiche we are not able to cast awaye from vs onlesse we shoulde vtterly shake of our humayne nature, as for exaumple, appetite to meate and drynke, desyre to fulfill the lustes of carnall concupiscence, after that nature hathe made vs of full age thereto. And although moderately to vse carnall copulacion with the lawfull wyfe is none enormitie: nor agaynste the high pleasure of God it is, to allaie thirste and hounger with meate and drynke: yet in this behalfe dooeth our subtill and wylye enemye lye in wayte for vs, that eyther we maye geue these affections the bridle in rakyng more then for the sufficiaunce of nature is necessarie, or els appeace the rage of them by suche wayes as is not conuenient. Of whiche sorte for exaumple these that here folowe may bee: as if one should touche an other mannes wyfe, or vse his owne wyfe immoderately, or doe the acte after facions vnsemely: or yf one should with offending his Christe brother, eate of thinges offered vnto Idolles, whan he maye auoyde that slaundre, and yet otherwyse well enough relieue the necessitie of the bodye.

There bee also in euery of vs certayne speciall inclinations bothe of the bodye and of the mynde to certayne vices, whether it so bee, that these same were firste taken of our parentes, and so haue sticked still in vs, or whether they haue been taken of a custome, or els whether they haue by any other meanes, come vnto vs. As for exaumple: one manne is of nature more prone to couetise, an other to glottonie, an other to leacherie, an other to wrathe, an other to ambicion. Of all these dooeth our enemie leaue not one thyng vnwatched, whereby he maye drawe vs to damnacion. But we must agaynste his lying in awaite, bee bothe stoute and also diligent in watchyng. The spirite of Christe shall geue vs bothe strength and witte agaynste all his ingiens: and the holy scriptures shall minister vnto vs armoure and weapon enough.

And as soone as al the temptacion was ended, the deuill departed from vpon.

He that suffereth vs to bee tempted, wyll not suffre vs to bee ouercommed: but wyll so ordre the fight, that the ende of the fielde and battayle shall turne to our benefite. Our enemie beyng putte to the worse, will not ceasse to haue enuy at vs, but he wyll at lengthe ceasse to inuade: and the oftener he shall come, so muche the more often discoumfeighted and weakened shall he at all tymes departe agayne. For howe the case should afterwarde stande with vs, Christe dyd nowe expresse by exaumple of hymselfe. For after that the deuill had dispeched and spente out of all the fractes and craftie poynes that he coulde agaynste the Lorde, and yet sawe that he was neuer a whitte the nerer of his purpole, beeyng not onely ouercomed, but also deluded and defeacted in wordes, he departed awaye: howbeit but for a season, that is to say, to returne againe to tempting whan he myght seke and procure an occasion therto. For sence the tyme that he coulde not gette out of Jesus to confesse that he was the sonne of God, whom he was not hable with any goodly shewe of thynges to corrupte: he afterwarde laboured through the helpe of hys souldiers the Phariseis, the Scribes, and the priestes, to putte hym to death. Yet euen in this behalfe also, dyd Jesus by a godly policie, mocke and defeadte the wyl-

nesse of his aduersarie: for the thynges that Satan with all his strength laboured to bryng to passe to our castyng awaye, the same dyd Christe turne into our saluacion. Yea, and then moste especially of all dyd Satan perceyue his tyrannie to bee cleane ouerthrowen: when he assured hymselfe of moste vndoubted victory. Firste came baptisme, whiche geueth the state of innocentie: then afterwarde came wildernesse, and continuall prayer, fastyng, and therewithall battayle with Satan, agaynst whom we are moste chiefely armed with auoydyng the compaynie and resorte of people, emong whom there is in no place wantyng matter enough to prouoke and stiere weake myndes vnto vices moe then one. Prayer fenseth and gardeth the soule: Fastyng abateth the strength of the bodye, and encreaseth more strength in the soule.

The texte. ¶ And Jesus returned by the power of the spirite, into Galile. And there went a fame of hym throughout all the region. And he taught in their Synagoges and was commended of all menne.

There was nowe nothyng remaynyng, but for Jesus to addresse hymselfe to the office of teachyng. And this is the verye true office moste specially belongyng to Bysshoppes, whiche office no manne doeth after a ryght sorte take in hande, onlesse he bee many wayes tryed and proued, onlesse he bee founde a conquerour and a subduer of all naughtie appetites, whiche doe corrupte and perysshe the woorde of God, so that he maye bee hable to teache others too, by what meanes they maye resist Satan. For it is not enough that a teacher of the ghospell be pure from vices, but he muste also bee stoute and vncorrupte, that neyther for lucre, ne for any sensuall pleasure of the bodye, ne for ambition, ne for the feare of any ciuylles, he wyll declyne from the vpright streightnesse of the trueth of the ghospell, whiche trueth Satan doeth not at any tyme ceasse to assaulte by suche persones as loue this worlde more then they loue the glory of God.

And this the Lorde Jesus beeyng mynded to teache vs, after the premisses all finyshed and doone, returned nowe agayne into Galile in great power and vertue of the spirite whiche he was replete withall.

And Jesus returned by the power of the spirite into Galile. For of the temptacion aforesayed, he had gathered strength of the spirite, not that any spice of any newe power had growen vnto hym more then he had fore: but for that the thyng which he had in his mynde, dyd more vrge and shewe furthe it selfe, settyng out vnto vs therewhyle, as it were in a playne picture, what the charge and care of an euangelicall teacher ought to bee, and what he ought to looke for. It was his will and pleasure to begynne his firste preachyng of the ghospell in Galile, beeyng the moste abiecte and balse region of the Jewes: partely, to agree iustely with the prophecie of Esay, in whiche it was foresayed, that aboute the coastes of Zabulon and Nepthalim, that is to saye, nere to Galile of the Gentyles, the lyght of Goddes trueth shall spryng vppe: and partely to the entente that no parte of the prosperous proceedyng of the ghospell, should be impured

to the ayde or mayntenaunce of this worlde, in case the ghospell hadde ben taught or brought to lyght by learned menne, by eyche folkes, or by menne of power, or in case it had sprong vp out of a region beeyng any thyng famous. For God did of a purpose choose and picke out all thynges vile and abiecte in worldely estimacion, to the ende that all the whole glorye of so maruellouse a matter should redound vnto hymselfe. Iudeuen now we already was the fame of Iesus not vnspoken of among the people of Galile, with whom, by reason of some miracles priuately shewed that all the worlde knewe not of, he was come in knowlage to many, yea, euen before his baptisme, a fewe disciples euen at that tyme gathered vnto hym, whom it was his pleasure to haue as witnesses of all his whole lyfe and doctryne. And euen at the same betyme, he by eyche and eyche withdrewe hymselfe from the affectionate willes of hys kynesfolkes, because he would by his doyng teache vs, that kynesfolkes also ofte tymes hurte the syncerite and puritie of doctryne. But after that Iohn was cast in prison (for during the tyme of Johns preachyng, Iesus dyd in maner altogether holde his peace, because there should no spice of contencion growe or aryse betweene the disciples of the one and the other whether shoulde haue the preeminence) he with a great courage entreth the busy office of preachyng the ghospell openly in the face of the worlde. For it was nowe tyme, that the lawe beeyng restrigned and kepte vnder bandes (the figure whereof Iohn dyd beare) the libertie of the ghospell shoulde putte further the head, and thewe it selfe. For emprisonyng and feteres was moste mete for the lawe beeyng full of shadowes, and beeyng darkened with mysticall doubtfull sayinges: but mete it was to sette the light of the ghospell vppe on hygh, to the entente it myght bee open in syght to all regions and coastes of the worlde without exception, as well to the greatest as to the leaste, as well to the learned as to the vnlearned.

Than as soone as the Lord was returned into Galile through the power of the spirite of God, with whome he was filled, (whiche power was nowe as well by his doctryne as also by miracles, partely vttered: the fame which had to fore (as ye would saye) slepten abrode but among a fewe persones in comparison, concernyng Iesus, was than published and blowed abrode throughout al that region. For vnto a teacher of the ghospell, a famouse name is requisite: not for that suche an one ought to seke glory emong men, but for that an honest opinion of the teacher doeth purchase vnto the same bothe credite and authoritie. But the saied honest opinion, as it is not to be desired, so is it not by all maner waies to be acquired and gotten. Let a teacher of the ghospell according to the exaumple of Iesus solyue, that whereas he maketh no bauntyng boste of hymselfe, he may yet neuertheleste be aduaunced by the testimonie of the heauenly father, by the power and vertue of the holy ghoste, and by the voyce of Ihon, that is to saye, of euery honest and good man, in whom the grace of God reseth: let hym so lyue, that he maye through the perfection of his liuyng and behauioure, enuye the eyes of all folkes vpon hym. And to bee shorte, let hym be of suche feith and constaunt affiaunce in God, that yf the case should so require, he may glorifie God euen with the wyning myracles too, howbeit, as the worlde nowe is, it is a miracle great a great enough, if suche an one neyther with richesse, neyther with sensual pleasures, nor with worldly promocion, promocion, me with dreadfull offering of tormentes, me with the feare of death ne ielie, will not any whit at all be turned from the parenesse of the veritie eua-And he- gelicall. Howe among the Jewes it was a custome, that often seasons, but fore the they Synagoges. moste specially on the Sabboth daies, the people assembled together into the temple, or into theyr Synagoges, to vnderstand that the tyme of reasyng which the lawe enioyned them from all filthie & seculer workes, should not be spente on dycing and cardyng, on harlottes, on banquettyng and reuelyng, on chy-dyng and brallyng and other weray naughtie wiegs: but to be bestowed about thynges pertenyng to the soule. And in the saied temple or Synagoges there was talking of one with an other, not concernyng trifling matters of the worlde, but about the lawe of the Lorde, about Messias to come, who was with moste ardent prayers looked for of all good and godly folkes. And what euery man could, he conferred and declared among es all the presence of what state or degree soeuer he were. And whosoeuer made any countenaunce that he had what to teache vnto the people, there was deliuered vnto hym a booke of the lawe of God, wherbence it is the parte & duetie of a teacher of the ghos-pell, to fette out wherwith to fede the soules of the people, and not out of the dreames of men. And whatsoeuer thyng was in this place and audience done, couldenot be priuie or hidden, because there flocked thither a great multitude of all sortes and degrees of people.

The texte. And he came to Nazareth where he was nourced, and (as his custome was) he went in to the Synagoge on the Sabboth daye, and stode vp for to reade: And there was deliuered vnto him the booke of the Prophete Esai. And whē he had opened the booke he found the place, where it was written: The spirite of the Lord vpon me, because he hath anoynted me: to preache the ghospell to the people, he hath sent me: to heale the broken hearted, to preache deliueraunce to the captyue, and sight to the blynde: frely to sette at liberte them that are bruised, and to preache the accepteable yere of the Lorde. And he closed the booke, and gaue it agayne to the minister and sate downe.

And hytherto veraply the ghospelles cause dyd sufficiently well procede, vntyll he came to his kynsfolke, and to the knowelage of his familiar frendes and acquaintaunce, becau... we ‡ould vnderstande, that he whiche teacheth heauenly thynges, ought as muche as he maye, to estraunge hymselfe from the fleshe, and from the blond of his kinred. For whan he had passed throughe certaine litle townes and cities of Galile, at the last he came to Nazareth, in whiche place, by reason that he had been there brought vp of a young noutre chylde, and had long tyme liued there with his parentes and kynsfolkes, he was supposed of many to had been borne, and for the same cause was also

comonly called a Nazarean. And to thentent the Nazareans should not fynde themselues grieued, that he had thought skorne of his kinffolkes and alliaūce, as one that had more mynde and desyre to go hunting about for glory emong people of straunge parties where none of his kynne dwelt: he came thither also to Nazareth breyng nowe a manne of great fame, and muche spoken of, whereas he hadrofore had no suche fame in those quarters. And because he would declare that he had nowe renounced and geuen vp all priuate busynesse and affayrs of the worlde: he came accordyng to his accustomed maner into the common Synagoge. For no where ought suche a man to be more conuersaunt, then in the temple, whose is consecrated to the profityng of all folkes in generall. And when he heard others treatyng and reasonyng of Moses lawe, he also arose vp, signifying by that gesture (as others vsed to doe) that he also breyng inspired with the holy ghoste, had some thyng in his mynde that he was willyng to speake before the multitude breyng there assembled. For hiche custome euen at this daye endureth in the churches, by the ordinaunce of S. Paul, that menne shall speake and heare by course. And in case any man haue any thyng opened vnto him by reuelacion, woorthy or mete to bee knowen, he that spake afore, shall leaue of, and shall geue place to the partie that succeedeth hym, because that no troublous noyse, and confusion of speakyng, so as one maye not bee heard for an other, shall aryse in the holy congregacion, in whiche it is decent, that all thynges bee doen with peace and tranquillitie. And stoode vppe for to reade.

The booke was deliuered vnto Jesus, and that accordyng to the custome and vsage, for vs to be instructed and taught therby from whēce the doctrine of saluation ought to proceede, that is to wete, not out of the inuencions of men, not out of the policions of Philosophiers, but out of the booke of holye scripture, whiche hath been reueled vnto vs by the secrete instincte and operacion of the spirite of God. Jesus, in whom all the treasoures of knowlage and wysedome were hidden, had no nede of any booke, but yet he toke the booke, because he would commende vnto vs the earnest settyng of our myndes on the readyng of holy scripture. The minister of the Synagoge reacheth furth the booke vnto hym, but he tooke it hym shutte. Jesus, who alone hath the key and openeth that is layed vp hidden in the olde lawe, whan he had taken the booke, openeth it, and turneth it. For Jesus himselfe laye secretely hidden, and diepely hidde in the lawe. And truly mete it was, that the Jewes selfes should geue the thyng, wherwith they should anon after be conuinced. And the booke that was deliuered vnto Jesus, was not at all auentures, as though it forced nothing what booke it were, but it was the booke of ỹ Prophete Esay, then whom never did there any man eyther more clerely, or elis more euidently prophecie of Christe, and of the doctryne of the ghospel. Neither did the thyng by a blynde chaunce so happen: but it was so conueighed by goddes prouidence, that the booke beyng opened abrode, and a leafe turned, that same berey place came chiefly fyrste to hande, the whiche dyd moste clerely and plainly talke of Christe, and in the whiche, Christe by the mouth of the Prophete speaketh of himselfe in this maner: The spirite of ỹ Lord is on me, because he hath enoynted me: to bryng glad tydinges to the poore by preaching of the ghospell hath he sent me: to heale the contrite, that is to saye, throughly broken in herte: to preache remission and free deliuerance to suche as are in captiuitie, and syght vnto the blinde: to set freely at libertie suche as are all bruysed: to preache the yere: And there was deliuered vnto hym the booke, &c. And when he had opened the booke, &c.

pere of the Lorde both acceptable and muche to be wished for: and to preache the daie of retribution. When the Lord Jesus had with his owne voyce pronounced these woordes standing vpon his feete, he redelyuered the booke that together againe as he had receyued it, vnto the minister, signifying by his so doing, the obstinate vnbeliefe of some of the Iewes, who sitting still beatyng on the letter of the lawe, dyd neyther vnderstande, ne woulde acknowleage Christe beyng the soule and the lyfe of the lawe. Now immediatly after this, taketh he on hym the parte and office of a teacher, and sate hym downe quietly about to expoune the sentence that he had read. As touchyng that he read the

And sate downe. verse of the Prophete standyng on his feete, it was a thing doen for the authoritie of the scripture of God, wherunto it is mete that all dignitie of manne do reuerently hum ble it selfe. As touchyng that he taught sitting downe, it is for a declaration, that an expouner and preacher of Goddes holy scripture, ought to bee voyde and altogether clere from the troubleous vnquietnesse of all carnall and worldely desyres.

The texte. ¶ And the yes of all them that were in the Synagoge, were fastened on him. And he began to saye vnto them: This day is this scripture fulfilled in your eares. And all bare hym witnesse, and wondred at the gracious woordes, whiche proceded out of his mouthe. And they sayed: Is not this Josephes sonne? And he sayed vnto them: ye will precely say vnto me this prouerbe: Physician, heale thy selfe. What soeuer we haue heard doen in Capernaum, do thesame here lykewyse in thyne owne countrey. And he sayed: Verayly I saye vnto you: no prophete is accepted in his owne countrey.

But partely the newe fame whiche had nowe already begon to bee spredabrode of Jesus, & partely the authoritie of a teacher, whiche he now first of all tooke vpon him, & finally a certayne heauenly grace shyning in his veray countenaunce, dyd cause that the yes of all the people, whiche were then present in that congregation, were earnestly fixed on him, for suche an audience doeth the Lord Jesus loue, as kepe their Sabboth, resting from all troubleous desires and affeccions of this worlde: suche as with mutuall concorde one with another are gathered together into one place: such as haue the yes of theyr minde loking none other way, but streight vpon Jesus, but streight towardes euerlastyng saluacion. For he dayly speaketh vnto vs in the mistical scripture of God: he speaketh by euangelicall Prophetes, that is to saye, by the enterpretours & expounders of the holy bookes of scripture. But happy and blissed are they, to whom the Lord Jesus speaketh, they geuyng suche earnest ye & eare vnto hym. For to suche doeth he vouchesaue to open the mysterie of the depe hidden sence. For as soone as he sawe the yes of all the presence caste full and moreouer (all maner synnes beeyng freely pardoned) should helpe all suche as had theyr hertes corrupted with many sondrye diseases of vices and of naughty lustes: whiche teacher ferthermore should preache deliuerance and setting at libertye vnto all persones, that either beyng geuen to Idolatrie were kepte fast of the deuill as captiues and prisoners, or els beyng as thrall to the superstition of the lawe, mighte not reache ne atteigne to the libertie of the spirite: whiche teacher besides all this, should through faith open the ies vnto suche as were blynde in soule, & abode in a moste diepe myste of manyfolde errours, in suche wise as with theyr sayde ies they should be hable to behold and looke vpon the light of the eternall veritie accordyng to the prophecie, whiche the same Prophete wrote in another place: where he sayth, the people that satte in darkenesse hath seen a great light. Which teacher ouer and aboue the premisses, should restore vnto theyr first state of fredome, all suche persones, as semed to bee all crushed and bruised to pieces by Satan with all kyndes of euilles: and which teacher finally should declare in open preachyng, that the true Jubilee of the Lorde was now come, a tyme like as to bee herteily wished for of al creatures, euen so with moste ardent myndes to bee accepted and embraced of all people without exception.

Moles gaue a tradicion of a sabboth of dayes, in whiche he commaunded that euery seuenth daye, they should all rest from sloumbryng or vnclenly occupations: he gaue also a tradicion of a sabboth of yeares, in whiche he ordeyned that euery seuenth yere it should bee rested from tillyng of the yearth, neyther any thyng to bee requyred of the same, sauyng what it would bryng forth of it owne selfe. He gaue ferthermore a tradicion of a yere, called the restorer of the fyrste state of libertie, vnto whiche, (of the prophetie of the thyng) was geuen the name of Jubilee, emong the Hebrewes. This yere of Jubilee came about in course agayne after vii. tymes seuen yeares, and was euermore the fyftieth (for seuen tymes seuen maketh xl ix.) And this yere of Jubilee was moste hertely to bee wished for of all the Israelites, that either with bonde seruice, or els with debte were any thyng oppressed. But like as the sabboth of Moles refreshed mennes bodies onely with beeyng at reste and quiete: so did the seuenth yere onely prouide for the resting of the yearth from tillage. But nowe there is shewed vnto vs our knowelage a perpetuall sabboth, neuer to bee interrupted or broken: in whiche the mynde and soule beyng free & vacant from all troublous vnquiet, resse of eiuil delyres, ought wholly to attede to the quiet applying and exercise of heauenly thynges, and not now with perilse carefulnesse to prouide altogether for yearthly thynges, for alsmuche as to them that loue God, no maner thyng at all is wantyng. Yea, and moreouer the Jubilee of Moles did not helpe any others but onely the Israelites: it gaue neither free deliuerance, ne yet full deliuerance, yea and that same verey thyng whiche it did geue, extended no ferther then to the bodye, and endured but for a shorte tyme. But this peare of the Lorde, pooeth vnto all persones, whosoeuer are endebted to the deuill through synne, whosoeuer bee as bonde seruauntes subiecte to euill spirites, whosoeuer through ignorauncc of the trueth are blynde, whosoeuer bee in all kyndes of naughtinesse so farre paste, þ they are vnhable to euery good worke: vnto all suche pooeth this Jubilee of the Lorde bryng perfecte & free remissiõ, deliuerance or libertie, sight, healthy, and complete perfection in euery behalfe. So muche the more therfore ought ye with prompt zeles, and endeuoures to enbrace that is offered. For the thyng that ye haue hearde promised by the prophecie, ye maye now if ye wyl, in the dede selfe fynde to be true. Ye haue heard it with your eares, but ye haue nede of readie and delyrefull hertes, yf ye wyll bee apte to receyue so great a blissefulnesse. It is euen the highest thing that possibly maye bee, wherof this free offre is made vnto you. But woe vnto them, that shall delspyle the bountifull & gracious goodnesse of God, so wyllingly offreing it selfe vnto them. It is the yeare of Jubilee, freelye offreyng deliuerance and saluacion vnto all suche as with mekenes of submission, and with readinesse of beleuyng, shewe themselfe wylling to bee taught, and apte to receyue healing. But after this yeare of Jubilee must succede and folowe the yeare of retribucio and vengeasse: which shal adiudge and minister euerlastyng peynes in hell vnto all suche as shall haue refused the goodnesse of God. By these wordes dyd the Lorde Jesus in an humble and lowe manner, signifie hymselfe to bee the same man, of whom the Prophecie of Esaie did make promysse: whereas the moste parte beleeued the sayed place of the Prophete not to concerne Messias, but to concerne Esaie hymselfe. For whan Jesus was in baptisyng, the holye ghoste slydyng downe from heauen in the visible likenesse of a doue, and lighting vpō his heade, did all the people to wete, that thilsame was euen verayely he, whome the prophecie had ment of. Enoyntyng betokeneth a certayne mylde and tendill still thyng. For there is nothyng more tendill, supple, or caulme, then oile: wherof was euen that name Messias geuen him, which is in Greke Christon, in Latine Unctum, in Englysche, the enoynted. For as for the preachyng of John, it was sharpe, and soure, and full of threatyng: but Christe did with mildenesse, with courteous familiaritie, and with beneficial good turnes continually moue and prayer the people to receyue saluacion. Whan Jesus dyd with moste highe auc-toritie and no lesse myldenesse speake and treate of the premisses, many had him in great estimacion therfore, and meruepled at his talke beyng verayly ferre vnlyke to the talke of the Phariseis: that is to wete, caulme, mylde, and mete, amiable, poudred with muche grace, hauyng in it no spice of haultnes or pryde, no poynte of soure looke or presumpteous talkyng vpon hym, and yet neuertheselfe of suche force, that it contepned in it condigne auctoritie. For the wordes of the Phariseis, because they issued forth from an hearte corrupted with ambicion, with auarice, with enuie, and with many other naughtye affections, did moste tymes smacke of the spyrng that they gushed out of. But the wordes whiche proceded from the mouthe of Jesus because they welled forth from a hyeft replenished with the heauenly spirite of God, were not onely amiable and swete vnto all good folkes, but also pithithy and effectuall towarde saluacion. Yet neuertheselfe some there were emong these Nazareans, in whose myndes and opinions the meanesse of Jesus kynred and familie that he came of (to the outwarde acceptacion of the worlde) made the auctoritie of the heauenlye doctrine to bee the lesse regarded. For in consideracion that they euery one dyd yet all this while beleue hym to bee the sonne of Joseph and Marie, and that the slender habilitie and substaunce aswell of Joseph and Marie bothe, as also of theyr alyaunce and kynsfolkes was not vnknowen: in consideracion also, that they hadde seen hym many yeares euen from his chyldehood to had learned at none other schoole, sauyng onelye his fathers occupacion of carpentrie: ne at any tyme to had haunted the schooles of the Phariseis and of the experte lawiers, (who taughte the misteries of the holye scripture bookes with muche highe ſolemnitie and haulteneſſe of countinaunce:) they did muche mercuaple where and how he had goodlyply gotten ſo great vertue and power, whiche he had to doe ſhewed forth in other cities by diuerſe and ſondrye myracles: they muſed where he had gotten that ſame wondrefull knowlage of diuinitie bookes: they wondred where he had gotten ſo great eloquence to ſpeake after that ſorte with auctoritie. For they did not yet vnderſtād, of how muche more power and effecte the enioyntyng of the ſpirite of God is, then the doctrine of the Phariſeis. Eſtemyng hym therefore by the thynges whiche they knewe in him after the fleſhe, they ſayed: Is not this ſame felowe the ſonne of Ioſeph the carpenter? for they knewe not the heauenly father, who than wrought by his ſoonne. And becauſe that Ieſus wrought ferre fewer miracles in the citie of Nazareth, then he ſhewed in other cities, certayne of his kynſfolkes beeyng halfe in a fume and indignacion therewith, detracted and reprooued hym, as thoughe that ſyther he had not his power ready to ſerue hym euery where, or els that he oughed his owne kynſfolkes ſuche deſpite, that he wouldе ſhewe no myracles emong them, wherin they hunted for a certayne worldely prayſe and glorye to themſelues warde by ſuche a matter, the glory wherof was altogether due vnto god. The vngodly murmuryng of theſe perſones, did Ieſus rebuke and alate with ſuche ſaynges as here folowe. Because ye haue hearde (ſayeth he) that I haue elſwhere emong others healed all kyndes of diſeaſes: veraply ye wyll ſaye vnto me, that is woont to be ſaied in a common prouerbe: Thou phiſition heale thyne owne ſelfe. We haue heard ſaye, that thou haſte wrought certayne woondrefull thynges aboue the courſe of nature in the Citie of Capernaum, where thou were but a ſtraungier, not hauyng there any that are nere of bloud or kinred vnto thee. But conuenient it were that thou ſhouldeſt bee benefictall moſte chiefly to thyne owne kynſfolkes: what thou dooeſt to thy countreymen and kynſfolkes, the ſame thou dooeſt vnto thine owne ſelfe. Therfore if this vertue and power of thyne, bee appropriate vnto thee, and contynuall in thee, than whatſoeuer thou haſte dooen emong the Capernaites and ſtraungiers, do euen here lykewyſe emong thyne owne kynſfolkes beeyng moſte nere vnto thee: and doe it here in thyne owne countrey. Vnto the wicked murmoure of theyr hertes beeyng now diſcloſed and vttered, the lord aunſwered in this manner: I am in dede a Phiſician readye to heale all the diſeaſes of all creatures, if anye partie ſhewe hymſelf apte to be healed. For no phiſician (be he neuer ſo well learned, ne neuer ſo well willyng to do good,) is hable to helpe or cure the ſicke, if they call the medicine away from them, when it is offred them, and miſtruſte the kepthful phiſician. And in dede this is the affectiō of the moſte common ſorte of men, that they eſteme the phiſician ſo muche the more, that he is come a man vnknowen, out from ſome ferre cōtrey or region: and in ſuche a place dooeth he fynde more truſte and affiaunce to bee put in hym, where he is eſtemed by none other thyng but by his arte and by the name of a phiſician. And in dede as touchyng his cūnyng whiche he carryeth about with hym where euer he goeth, he is at all times and in euery place one maner a manne: but where he fyndeth men full of myſtruſtyng and contemners, he cannot by his cunnyng doe good to ſo many: not for that he hath in ſuche a place any leſſe wyll or els power on his owne behalf, but becauſe the parties, whome his mynde and wyll was to relieue, wyll nons of the benefite of healthe for deſpite and grutche that they beare to theyr owne ſelfes. And the ſame that chaunceth to the phiſicians, dooeth muche more chaunce vnto the prophetes. For the cunnyng of phisicians dooeth ofte tymes helpe some, yea, whether they will or no: But the Prophete because he dooeth moste chiefly cure soules, hath it not lying in his power, though he wolde, to helpe suche as refuse saluacion whan it is offered. And refuse it he dooth, whosoeuer mystrusteth. And many for none other cause mystruste the Prophetes, but because they esteme theselame, not of the power of God werkyng by them, but of the weakenesse of body, whiche they see in them lyke as in other mortall men. Turne ye the stories of the olde prophetes ouer and ouer, & ye shall finde it to bee a thyng of moste vndoubted certaynte, that I nowe saye vnto you: whiche is, that neuer was there yet anye Prophete had in price within his natiue countrey and emong his owne kynfolkes: not for that they be lesse hable or willyng to dooe good to theyr owne frendes, then to straungiers or forreine persones, but because the vnbeliefe of the kynfolkes maketh them vnwoorthie of suche benefite at goddes handes.

The terte. But I tell you of a trueth: many wedowes were in Israell in the dayes of Helias, whē heauen was shut three yeres and sixe monethes, whan great famithement was throughout all the lande, and vnto none of theim was Helias sent sauyng vnto Sarepta beside Sydō vnto a woman that was a wedowe. And many lepres wer in Israel in the tyme of Heliseus the prophet: and none of them was cleused, sauyng Naaman the Syrian.

For the benefites of God are not geuen for the respecte of kynred, but for the good herte of a man: not to the coulynage of the fleasshe, but to the promptnesse of the spirite: not to the nacion, but to the feyth. For this I affirme vnto you for a matter oute of doubte: that in the tyme whyle Helias was lyuyng, whan by the continuall space of three yeres full, and six monethes, there hadde fallen downe no rayne from heauen, and the barayneesse of the yearth by reaso ther of, had oppressed all the quarters there about with great famine, there were many wydowes in the nacion of the Israelites: and yet the sayed prophete beeyng here at the poynte to perysshe thzough hounger, he was not sent to any one of them all to bee fedde, but vnto the wedowe of Sarephtha, in the countreye of Sydon. Why was he not rather sent to the wedowes of Hierusalem, there to multiplye the steane of meale, and the pitcher of oyle: or to shewe a notable miracle to some one of them by restoryng a dead chylde vnto lyfe agayne? For sothe because that emong the Israelites there was not one of all the wedowes, that coulde equally matche or compare with the sincere feyth and affiaunce in God, of the sayd heathen and barbarous woman. She beeyng delyred, gaue hym water readilye without any styckyng: and whan he prompted that her steane of meale, and her pitcher of oyle should not waste, she beleued, and made hym portage as she was bydden to dooe. This was forsothe a mynde and herte of an Israelite in a woman beeyng no Israelite: so feere is the good herte more regarded and esteemed afore god, thē is the blood or kynred. And did there not a mucle lyke thyng befall in the tyme of Heliseus the prophet who succeded Helias? For no doubt there is, but that emong the Israelites there were manye Lepres, the whiche fownd a great misse of their bodely health: Why than was neuer an one of thē made cleane by Heliseus, but Naaman of Syria, beyng before that time and ydolatre, & an aliene borne to the nacion of the Israelites? Could not the prophet haue been hable to doe theselame emong his own countrey folke, that he was hable to dooe on an aliene and heathen man? Was he (trowe ye) more quicke and readie to dooe good to suche as were not of goddes religio,

And manye lepres were in Israel, in the tyme of Heliseus. iiii. Reg. v.

and yet borne in a forayne countrey too, thē to men of his owne people and nacion: No. But the feith of the man deserued that benefite of goddes hande. For he had a sure feith that god was able by his true seruaunte to dooe as great a thyng as that. And whan he was bidden to plounge hymselfe seuen tymes in flume Jordan, he obeyed and did it. Yf the lepres of Israell had had thesame feith with them, euē they should haue felt the benefitiall goodnesse of God too.

And all they in the Synagogue, whan they hearde these thynges, were fulled with wrathe: and arose vp, and thrust hym out of the citie, and led hym euen to the edge of the hyll, whereon their citie was builte, that they might cast hym down headlong. But he departed and went his waye euen through the middes of them. The texte.

Whan Jesus had with these sayinges, plainly without any flaterie or colour laid to his countreymen of Nazareth they vnbelefe, for the respect whereof they made themselues vnworthie of goddes benefites: and all vnder one did geue halfe a signification, that thende would be, that the free gift of the power of the ghospell should passe awaye and remoue, not onely from his countreymen of Nazareth, beyng vnbeleuers that would not turne to the feith, but also from all the Jewes in general, vnto the wedow of Sydō, that is to sate, to ỹ churche of the Gentiles, & to Naaman of Syria, ỹ is to sate, to the Gentiles who afore that tyme were idolaters & worshippers of false goddes: the enuious grutching & murmour of ỹ Nazarēs turned into manifest indignacion & fuming. For ỹ herres of them euery one were brought so ferre oute of pacience, because he had been so bolde to speake suche wordes in the open Synagogue, (preferring the peoples of Sydon & of Syria before the Israelites, whereas the saied people were mē vtterly abhorred & detested emōg the Jewes: ỹ making a plain vprore & sedicion, they droue hym out, & banished hym the citie of Nazareth. And not beyng therwith satisfied, they brought hym euen to the brough and edge of the mountaine, vpon whiche thesame citie was buylded, vetylye mynding & purposyng to tumble hym down euen there headlong. O vnnaturall countreymē: O fauour of ỹ waueryng mynded people, into how great a madnesse sodainly chaunged. And after all this is doen, they metuaile that saluacio cōmeth not to them whereas themselues do banishe away from them the worker and geuer of saluacio. Thei disdeyne to haue the godly beliefulnesse of the heathē to be praised, and yet do they not all the while emende their owne wicked vnbelief: They did verat eagrely desire to haue a phisitian: & yet cannot they abide to swallow downe ỹ holsome pille of the veritie beeyng bittur in their mouthes. Thei wyl nedes haue their bodies made holc, nothing regarding ỹ diseales of the mynde. And the medicine of the solle beyng sicke, is true & plaine speakyng: whiche because it is true, is thought sharpe & byting. They haue more mynde to pleasaūt flatreyng poiso, though it worke death, thē to a bitter medicine ỹ might bring them helth. They require to haue miracles shewed emōg them for vainglorie of the world, which Christ neuer shewed but for the health of men, & to goddes glorie. Neither was his cūming into the world purposely to heale the bodyes, which should within short space after decaie and perisshe: but to cure soules that should liue for euer. And now cōsider me here, how perfectely & ouerthwartely ỹ Nazarēs worshipped & serued God. It was ỹ Sabboth day, & they reckoned it a thyng agaunst al godlyhood on ỹ day to sewe a seame in a shooe: but whan a countreyman of theyr owne, gentilly calleth them vnto saluacio, thei accoūpte it no wicked dede at all, sedicioully with al theyr force to driue hym before them to a place where he might breake his necke. For lostly Satā did his bulie cure by these instrumentes to accomplishe the thyng that he had tofore by his owne selfe tempted Jesus vnto. And here founde he baillifles or seruauntes, more graceleffe and myscheuous, then himself. For Satan for his part durst not presume any ferther, but to moue Jesus that he would caste hymself downe headlong from the high pinnacle of the temple: but these felowes swarmyng together in a plumpe, hale and drawe to a steepe edge of an high mountayne, and as muche as in them lyeth do toumble downe at the same place, a countreyman and tounesman of the same citie that themselues were of, beyng knowen emōg them: and one that had doen them all good. Their wicked wyll did asmuche as euer it was hable: but their wicked will had no suche power as to do it. For the tyme was not yet come in whiche it was expedient for vs that Jesus shoulde dye, who in dede was come to suffre death for vs, but not till his owne tyme that his heauenlye father had appoynted, nor anye other kynde of death, then whiche he had specially chosen. Nor euerye Sabboth did like hym for the purpose, but the Sabboth of Easter, in whiche it was seemely for the lambe that should redeme the worlde, to be offered vp in sacrifice: neither was a steepe edge of a rocke or a mountaine for his purpose, but the high exalting vp on the crosse. Lucifer was toumbled down headlong out of heauen for his pryde, and therefore is he a busie prouoker of others to sodayne ruine, and downfallyng. The sonne of God had of his own disposicion leat himselfe fayre and softe downe into yearth to the ende that beyng hoysted vp on the crosse, he mighte drawe vp all thynges vnto hymselfe, and might by exaumple of hymselfe lift them vp into heauen through humilitie, whom that same prince and head captayne of pride laboured to toumble down headlong into hell through presumpcion and vnbelief. Neither was Nazareth a place conuenient for the executing of that sacrifice, but Jerusalē. Jesus therefore suffred hymselfe to bee driuen oute of the Citie, to auoide bestowing of his preaching vpon people vnworthie (which selfsame thyng to do, he taughte his Apostles also:) But to bee toubled down the rocke headlong he would not suffre, because it pleased hym willingly of his owne accorde to suffre death. What than did he? He turned not hymselfe into a

But he departed through, &c. lyde or a serpente, or any other lykeneffe made by some sleyght of tuglyng or legerdemayn, to theten to escape: but wout any hurt at all, passed he fayre & softely through the middes of them, whiche tofore had violently haled & pulled hym to caste hym down headlong: wherin he openly declared ỹ malice of mā to haue no power on hym, vnleffe he would willyngly of his owne accorde, deliuer hymselfe to be taken of them, & to be putte to death. And with this onelye kynde of auoydement was the moste mercifull Lorde Jesus cōtented, that is, to forsake & leaue thē whō he perfectlye knewe to be vncurable. Otherwise (if it had so pleased hym) it laye in his power euē with a mere becke to haue driuen them all to breakyng theyr neckes, who had haled him thither for the same purpose. But his delyre was rather to haue them liue, ỹ emēdyng themself by cōtinuaunce of tyme, they might of malefactours be made innocent, then to caste them awaye at the wurste whan they were offenders. For oftetymes yf men bee restreigned of theyr benefite that they maie not haue it at theyr willes whā they would so readye as they haue had it, it maketh them the better to fele the misse & lacke of hym that is readye for to do them good. Certes by this myracle they might haue been moued aswel to reuerence & acknowelage his power, against the vertue whereof the conspiryng of the furious multitude was not hable any thyng at all to dooe, as also to loue the goodneffe of hym, who when they had attempted the vttermoſte miſchiefe agaynſt hym that laye in theyr powers, yet was rather willyng to reſerue them to a tyme of repentaunce, then to caſt them awaye at the wurſtes eternall puniſhmente.

¶ And he came downe to Capernaum (a citie of Galilee) and there taughte them on the Sabboth dayes. And they were aſtouned at his doctrine: for his preaching was with power. And in the Synagogue there was a manne, which had an vncleane ſpirite of a deuill, & cryed with a lowde voyce, ſayyng: leat me alone, what haue we to do with vs, thou Jeſus of Nazareth? Art thou come to deſtroye vs? I knowe thee what thou art, euen the holy of God. And Jeſus rebuked hym ſayyng: holde thy peace and come out of hym. And when the deuill hadde thrown hym in the myddes, he came out of hym and hurte hym not. And feare came on them all, and they ſpake emong themſelues, ſayyng: what maner a thyng is this? for with auctoritie and power, he commaundeth the foule ſpirites, and they come out. And the fame of hym was ſpred abrode throughout euery place of the countreye round about. The texte.

Jeſus therfore, forſakyng the proude citie of Nazareth, beyng rebellious agaynſt the doctrine of the gholpell, came downe and tooke his waye toward a citie of Galilee called Capernaum, beeyng a citie of great tychelle, and therfore dyuerſed in all rioteous exceſſe in al voluptuouſneſſe, in ambicion, in pryde and in the other vices whiche vſſeromlyly are companyons to tychelle. But here becauſe of their voluptuous ſenſuall liuing, he vſed no familliaritie of carnall conuerſacion emong them: (whiche familliaritie hath euermore been a breder of contempte, & hath vſed to make mennes auctoritie the leſſe regarded.) wherfore here alſo in Capernaum, as his cuſtome was elſwhere to do, he wente into the teple vpon the Sabboth daye, and preached. For the wickednelle of the Nazareans (beyng ſo great, that they had goen about wilfully to murdre hym being their beſt frende,) could not ſo weigghe hym, that beyng offended with ſo haynous a dede of miſchiefe as that was, he would forſake the countrey of the Jewes, and fooꝛth with putte ouer the gyft of the golpel from them vnto the Gentiles: but now he fulfylled in dede the ſame thyng, whiche he afterwarde taughte in woꝛdes to his diſciples: whiche is, that when they wer dryeuen out of one citie, they ſhould flee vnto another, not ſetteyng theyr mynde, ne deuiſyng how to auenge theyr iniurye, but how to ſette fooꝛth the golpell further and further, in ſuche wyſe, as the malice of thoſe that dyue them awaye out of theyr tounes, myght proffite to the exppedicion of ſetteyng fooꝛwarde the profeſſion of the gholpell. And the Capernaites (although they wer men all geuen to worldly affaires, noꝛ muche abhoꝛred from the maniers of the heathen, emong whome, by reaſon of the trade of byeng and ſellyng that the one vſed with the other they were often conuerſaunt:) he found muche moꝛe gentil and honeſte in taking oꝛ interpretyng his woꝛdes, and doopynges, then he founde his owne countreymen the Nazareans: to whom neuertheleſſe foꝛ his well knowen, and throughly tryed and continual perfeccion of lyfe, he ought to haue been moꝛe deerely beloued. For the Capernaites bery greatlye woondred at the doctryne of Jeſus: conſyderyng that it was no waſhe mengled geare, noꝛ peynted and gloſſed as was the doctrine of the Phariſees, of waſhynges, of truely paying the tithes of Mynt and Rue, of eaſtyng gyftes into the offryng boxe of god, and of ſuche other lyke thynges, whiche rather contened ſuperſtition then vertuous doctrine, and whiche were layed vpon the ſimple people to maynteyne the glooꝛye and lucre of the phariſees: whereas they themſelues that taughte theſe thynges, kept not ſo muche as the chiefe commaundementes of the lawe: but the doctrine of Jeſus was found ſubſtaunciall and full of auctoritie. They were aſtouned at his doctrine. For his preachyng was with power.

For firſt, whatſoeuer he taught was moſte certaine truethe, and alſo agreea-

the with naturall reason. Secondarily it was of it selfe mucke materiall vnto true godlynesse, and to eternall saluation. Furthermore, his singular perfection of liuyng, caused his doctryne to bee regarded accordingly.

And ouer and beside all this, many a miracle was there wrought and shewed by hym, with suche power and vertue as hadde neuer been shed ne seen there, whiche euidently declared the doctrine that he taught to bee of God, and not of mannes spirite. For the Lorde Jesus did his myracles not for lucre or vaine glory, but suche with them he succoured the wofull necessities of suche persons as were in extreme distresse, to the ende that by doyng them benefites, he might winne their hertes loue: and secondely the miracles were for a tyme shewed to the bodely eyes, to the ende that by the same miracles they myght learne to beleue the ghostly thynges, whiche though they were inuisible, yet were more earnestly then any corporall benefites to bee desyred: lastely they were a figure and a representacion of those thynges that were wrought in their soules. For was not the Sabboth daye and the people religiously and with great deuotion rested from the workes forbidden, whiche yet of themselues were not euill, as for example to go a iourney, to kindle a fyer, to grynde their corne, to presse their wynes, or to bleche vp their garment beyng broken or vnmeete. Without doubt in deede it was Sabboth daye, that is to saye the daye of reste, but within their myndes there was a great trouble and vnquietnesse, whiche the spirite of Satan did therin reyse, who wounderfully tossed and vexed their myndes with diuerse motions of enuie, of yre, of wrath, of auengyng displeasures, and of crueltie. For there and no where els is the true Sabboth, where the spirite of the Lorde quieteth the mynde to reste from all vicious and inordinate lustes. And in this thing there was then presente a certain figure in their synagogue, whiche was a certayn man, whose bodye was possessed with an vncleane deuill, and this example was to vs halfe a warning and a pricking in remembraunce, in how much more miserable and piteous case they are, whose myndes are possessed with deuils of vices, yea more foule and filthyuoyed, then that deuill was. For what deuill is more vncleane or more noysome then lecherous concupiscence, then wrathe, then ambicion, then the gredie desyre of money, then enuie, then hypocrisie? with these deuils suche others lyke, were the Jewes for the moste parte possessed, who dwelt in the Synagogue, whiche synagogue had not as yet receyued the spirite of Christe: but was vexed with so many deuils as there reygned vices in them. Neither were they able to receyue the moste mylde spirite of the gospell, vntyll the Lorde Jesus expulsed and droue out from them, that euill spirite of Satan that helde them in his possession.

Therefore the sayed partie so possessed with Satan, beeyng not able to abide the newe vertue of Jesu: whiche priuely vttered it selfe, began to crye out horribly roryng. Oh but out, what haste thou to do with vs thou Jesus of Nazareth? Art thou come to destroye vs before the tyme? we knowe what tormentes abydeth vs at the last daye. But nowe thy presence tourmenteth and vexeth vs before that daye. We requite no saluation of thee, we aske no releasse of peyne, but onelye prayse thee to delaye or deferre it vntill than. We neuer felte the lyke of these tormentes by the presence of any other prophete. Whereupon it is not vnknowen to vs, who thou art. For doubtlesse thou arte that same onely holy of God, that shall conquer all vngodlynesse, and driue out of the worlde all vncleanesse. The lawe hath his holinesse, the lawe hath his cleanesse: but thou

There was a man which had an vncleane spirite.

What hast thou to doe with vs thou Jesus of Nazareth?

arte he onely, whom god had sanctifyed and declared holy with heauenly holynesse. The lorde Jesus, would not suffre hymselfe to bee praysed or spoken of by that wicked spirite, but would all the glory of his prayse to bee referred to his father onely, and to come from hym, knowyng right well that this confession of the deuill came not foorth of a syncere fayth, but of a malicious will and purpose. For he professeth Christe to bee Jesus, and to be the sonne of God, only to geat hym to confesse thesame of hymselfe, and playnly to vtter what he was to his harmes, dooyng the selfesame thing by the mouth of this man, that Satan the temptour of hym had tofore gonne about to doo, and had laboured in his owne persone: he professeth Christe of a subtile and craftie myndc: not that hymselfe might attepte saluacion, but that he myght lette and hynder the saluacion of others. Neyther was it loue that caused hym to vtter that voyce: but feare of punishemente. Wherfore as an euill and malicious vile slaue of a desperate myndc impossible to bee recouered to grace, he deserued to heare these thankes for his confession.

Holde thy peace thou vncleane spirite, and departe from that man, whom by tyrannie thou doest possesse: I am come to saue men. And whan the deuill had thrown hym in the myddes, he came out of hym, and hurt hym not. At this mighty and almightie voyce of Jesus commaundyng hym to departe, the vncleane spirite whan he had thrown down the man vpo the yearth and vexed hym, he departed from hym: so that no harme appered vpon vnto the man beyng now safe and cleane delyuered. That he threwe hym down, it was an euident signe, of his peruerse will, and a token that sore agaynste his myndc he forsoke that same his dwellyng place. That he hurt hym not, it prouyeth playnly, that the wicked spirittes can hurt none of them, whiche doo wholly commit themselues vnto the saluecur. For the goodnesse of this one Jesus onely, is of more strength to saue man, then the malice of innumerable deuills to destroye or hurt thesame. Other men whan they labour to deliuer mennes bodies from noysome spirittes, are woont to take for the purpole, a to vse all possible kindes of remedies, and thynges of vertue and strength to putte awaye that euill: as are, for exaumple, certayne prayers specially prescribed and appoynted therefore, and made with certayn woordes apte for that purpole: burnyng of frankincense: sprincling of holy water, or other thinges accustomed: certayn herbes hauing a vertue and propertie to expell them: with many other kyndes of ceremonyes not vnlyke the feacte of sorcerie, and witchecrafte. And yet right seldome is it seen, that those thynges expell an euill spirite. That if at any tyme he doo departe out of him, he leaueth behinde him some tokens and markes of his manyfest malice: either tearyng awaye some membre and lymme of his bodye, as a legge or an arme: or els leuyng behynde him some disease or sickenesse vncurable. But whan the people sawe that at the mere woorde and sharpe commaundement of Jesus, the euill spirite sodaynly departed from the manne, so that he was perfectly healed, and not so muche as the leste marke or signe that could be of his euill remayned, they all that sawe this doen were astouned and began to wondre. And thus they talked emong themselues of Jesus.

And spedy holpe thy peace & com out of hym.

And feare came vpon them all.

What a straunge case is this, that we see now suche a thyng doen, as the lyke hath not been reade ne herde of: for he hath the vncleane spirites vnder his rewle and obeysaunce, and commaundeth them. And his commaundementes are of suche mightie power and autorite: that they byandby, acknowleagyng hym more of power then themselues, dooe forsake a man in suche wyse, that after

they bee goen out of hym perfect healthe returneth in place of sickenesse.

Thus the sight of this so woondzefull a miracle, caused that the name and fame of Jesus dzuted and spzed abzode this acte, not onely in the citee of Capernaum, but also thzoughoute all that region, euen into the Synagogue of the Jewes, whiche lackyng the spirite of Christe, made an inzoze and a stere through the spirite of Satan, against the treuethy of the ghospell: thzoughe the instigacion of whiche Satan, the Nazareans attempted to murdze the saluetour as is afozesayde.

And the fame of him was spred abzode.

The texte. ¶ And when he was arysen vp and come out of the synagogue, he entred into Symons house. And Symons mother in lawe was taken with a great feure: and they made intercessiō to hym for her. And he stoode ouer her, and rebuked the feure, and the feure lefte her. And immediately she arose, and ministred vnto them.

Than departed he from the Synagogue, and entred into the house of Symon, to whom the name of Peter was afterward geuen: whose mother in lawe was holden with a bezay sharpe feure. This womans kinsfolke and alliaunce besought Jesus, that as he vndesired had expulsed and dzeuen out the deuill from the man, (as is afozesayed) in the Synagogue: he would bee so good, at the desire of a great manye frendes, as to heale this woman of her feure, and the rather, foz asmuche as she was of the allyaunce and affinitie of Peter, a disciple of his owne, whome he entierly fauoured. Than Jesus to shewe and declare hymselfe readye to dooe good bothe pziuatelye and openlye, aswell to his acquaintaunce, as to those that were straungiers vnto hym, yea and vnto all ages, young oz olde, to all seres, men oz women, and to all states and degrees, typhe oz pooze: he came nighe, and standyng harde by the woman, he thzeatned the feure, commaundyng it to departe.

And immediatlye she arose and ministred vnto them.

And foozthwith at the Lozdes comaundemente, the sickenesse wente quite awaye, and the strength and lustinesse of her bodye returned agayne, not by litell and litell, as it commonly dooeth in thole whiche are cured at the handes of physicians: but the sickenesse beeyng soodainelye dzeuen awaye, the whole strength and lustinesse of perfect healthe, with a cherefulnesse of moode, was in suche wyse restozed, that she arisyng out frō the bedde where she had lyen sicke, dzessed the supper foz Jesus, and his disciples, and serued them whyle they sate at the table.

The texte. ¶ When the sunne was downe, all they that had sycke, taken with diuerse diseases, broughte them vnto hym: and he layed his handes on euerye one of them, and healed them. And deuils also came out of many, cryeng and sayeng: thou arte Christe the sonne of god. And he rebuked them, and suffred them not to speake: foz they knewe that he was Christe.

And so readye was the Lozde to dooe good and to helpe all men, that he neuer did so muche as laye foz his excuse the impozcunitie oz vnseasonablenes of tyme, to any that of simple and mere fayth, and truste in hym, requyred his helpe and succour. Foz the matter beyng now openly blowen abzode thzoughout all the whole citie: as many as had any sicke folkes in theyz house, whiche were troubled with diseases of diuerse soztes, bzoughte their sicke folkes to the dooze of the house where Jesus lodged. And he beeyng a moofte tentell saluetour, neyther layed foz his excuse that he was nowe from the people within doozes where he oughte of reason to haue quiete repolyng of hymselfe from labours:

labour: ne that it was night and therfore an vnseasonable tyme for suche dyngers: but vpon all that euer were brought vnto him, he layed his hãdes that were euermore geuers of health and helpe. And all kyndes of diseases did he bothe easily and freely put awaye from all personnes, as one that myndeth by this example to teache all men, that suche as wyll be free from the diseases of the myndes, they must flee to none other but to Jesus onely, which is euermore readie freely to pardone and forgeue how grieuous soeuer the offense committed hath been: so that with sincere fayth they turne wholly vnto hym beeyng the onely auctour of true saluacion. For there is no kynde of sickenesse so incurable so rooted to sticke by a man, so deadly: but at his touche and commaundemente it maye bee healed. And here is by the waye, let foorth a paterne or example to bishops and pastoures, or curates that succede in Christes place, with what mylderesse they oughte to receyue synners that are desyrous to emende from theyr vyce and synfulnesse. For yf the Lorde Jesus, in whom there was not so muche as any one litle pytent or marke either of sickenesse or of vice, wouldoe neuer turne awaye his face from any disease, were it neuer so ougly or lothely to see: but that he would receiue them to him, but that he would touche and handle them, and also would heale them, how muche more than dooeth it beseme those persones the same to do, whom the benignitie of Jesus hath to forgyue pourged from the sickenesse of the myndes, and who yet neuerthelesse in the meane tyme are not all free from all faultes: especially forasmuche as it is not they that take awaye the sickenesse: but they are only ministers of the gifte that commeth from heauen, and haue nothyng but the office of exortyng and stiryng others to aske and desyre health, and of bringyng them vnto that myghtye Physician, and mouyng the same to mercie by theyr intercession, that he will vouchesalue to touche theyr hertes and myndes with his handes, and so to heale them.

And he layed hys handes on euery one of them.

And not onely sickenesse fledde at the commaundement of his voyce, and at the touchyng of his handes: but also the deuils not beeyng able to abyde the godly power of Jesus, byandby ere he commaunded them, wyllyngly fled out of the bodyes of those myserable creatures whom they had long tyme before possessed. So great a piece of felicitie and blisse it is to come nere vnto Jesus. And nere towardes hym dooeth that persone drawe and come, who myslikyng hymself, is desyrous and fayn to be made better, and the whyche conceyueth an assured confidence and feyth, that all his synnes, be they neuer so haynous and grieuous, yet by the vnspeakeable mercie of Jesus are freely and clerely forgeuen. There bee in the bodyes diuerse kyendes of sickenesse: and neuer a whit fewer diseases of the soule, yea and these of the bothe the more perillous: except perchaunce ye will thynke that there are fewer kyndes of intemperancie and mysgouernaunce, then there are kyndes of feuers: or to bee a thyng of more ieopardie and daungier that the bodye doyle in a feuer, then it is perillous for the soule to rage or renne mad in lecherous lustes.

And deuils also come out of many

And emong the diseases of the bodye, some are so foule and lothely to see, that a mans nere frendes cannot abyde to come nere hym. as for exaumple, to bee eaten with lyce: some agayn are so contagious & infective, that a man shal bee in ieopardye to come nere vnto suche as haue them. as the leprie in especial, and the pestilence: albeit, (the trueth to speake) fewe sickenesses or diseases

there bee, but that one waye or other they are infectiue. Agayne some diseases there are, either so strong and sore vpon a bodye, or els of suche long continuaunce, that they ouercome and passe all cunnyng and cure of the physicians. But the power of oure physician is so great, that there is no sickenesse whose greatnesse is aboue it, or to bee compared vnto it: more is his pureneſſe, then that it maye bee stayned with any sinnes or cleuls of anye mortall creatures: greater is his mercie, then that it can lothe or abhorre any mannes ougliye fylthynesse. He receiueth all men to hym, as one of moste singulare goodnesse: he toucheth all men hymselfe beeyng moste pureste: he healeth all menne as one moste mightyest.

But on no diseases of the bodye are the physicians lesse hable to Doce any cure then vpon those sicknesses whyche corrupte the tabernacle of the mynde and reason, as for ensample, the frantse, the forgetful syckenesse called of the physicians lethargie, albeeit in dede men possessed with deuils are more incurable then either of bothe these, because the wicked spirites beeyng more stronger then mannes nature, Doce tosse and turmoyle bothe theyr soules and bodyes, and vexe them at theyr pleasures. Neyther is it the custome to bryng suche vnto physicians that are but men: but they are lefte to the heauenly helpe of God.

For so greate is the strength and power of this cleuil, that euen to beholde the is a pietcous matter. But peraduenture they seme not miserable, (although in dede they are more wretched caitifes) that through the desyre of reignyng or beatyng a rewle ouer others, are drawen to poisonyng or to witchecraftes and nigromancie, to sleaghing, yea the nereſt of theyr kynne, to sacrilege, and other mo dedes of mischief, more hainous then these: and suche persones also whom wrathe carryeth violently out of the right waye, to the spoylyng of inculpable poore men, to the murdre of innocentes, whiche haue nothyng deserued, to makyng of warre, to burnyng, to settyng the whole worlde in a roze, howe lytle a portion is that cleuil that the partie aboue sayed (whose bodye the deuill had possessed) dooeth, or suffreth, if it be compared, with how great furies suche an one is vexed, or how great confusion a prince bryngeth to the whole worlde, if he be sette in a rage through the spirite of tyrannie. The violent force of this sickneſſe and mischiefe ouercommeth mannes power to cure it. But the spirite of Christe is stronger then it, which, if the mynde of man haue once concepued, it cannot bee chosen but that all the vncleane spirites that would possesse him, (bee they neuer so manye,) muste auoide and bee goen. When this shall so bee brought to passe, then shall he sodaynly be made of a tyraunt, a father: of a cruell man a moste mercifull gouernour: of a poller of the people, a reliefer and succourer of the oppressed: of a furious warriour, an enlewer of peace: of a byter and extortioner, a liberall doner and a geuer of benefites: of a glorious crayng Tyrant, a sobre and prudente prynce of great experience. Onely leat him bee brought to Jesus, and bee ledde awaye from the worlde. For euen than aboute the goyng downe of the sunne, no small noumbre came vnto Symons house, (that is to saye) vnto the Churche or congregacion of Christe where the gospell is preached, and by the power of Christes spirite the vnclene spirites came out of them all openly protesting that there was one come, whose goodnesse was mightier than their malice.

When the sunne was downe, all they had

For when they departed out of menne, they cryed and sayed: Thou arte that same verape sonne of God. But as yet the tyme was not come, whan the Lorde would woulde be knowen vnto all menne that he was that same Messias the verye sonne of God: and thoughe he had been so mynded, yet woulde he not that the vnclene spirites should bee the troumpettes of his glorye: eyther for that theyr confession was not simple and of good purpose, but subtile and craftie: or because there was iopardie in it, lest yf theyr witnesse shoulde haue been of anye weyght or estimacion in this so great a matter, they shoulde haue been credited or beleued in other thynges, wherin they woulde (as theyr delyte and felicitie was) beguile men with theyr falsse lyes. For Satan in verye dede, for aslmuche as he is of nature a lying marchaunte, althoughe sometyme he speaketh the truthe, yet dooeth he it onely to this ende, to deceyue men thereby, another time and waye. And doubteleslie this craft haue some men learned of hym, who intermiengle godly thynges emong vngodly: true thynges with falsse: puttyng as it were, deadlye poyson into holsome meates, that they maye allure the mo men to damnacion.

Wherfore Jesus teachyng vs that it becommeth not suche menne as haue once consecrated themselues vnto the holy ghoste, to haue any thyng at all to doo with wicked spirites: he rebuked theyr clamouryng and cryeng, and sore threatnynges added he with all, to put them to silence. For they felte a woonderfull strength and vertue to proceede from him, and therof suspected that he was Messias the sonne of God: euen the same that was promised.

AS soone as it was daye, he departed and went into a deserte place, and the people sought him, and came to hym, and kept hym that he should not departe from them. And he sayed vnto them: I must preache the kyngdome of God to other cities also. For therfore am I sent. And he preached in the Synagogues of Galilee. The texte.

But Jesus truely, who was not come of moste speciall pourpose to heale the bodyes, but to cure the soules: nor to one citie onelye, but to all countreyes of the worlde: whan he had by shewyng many soondrye myracles, and with the holsome doctrine of life well begon the callyng abrode of the sede of the euangelicall philosophie: verye erely euen at the breake of daye, before that the multitude shoulde eftsons flocke thither to hym, as people whiche came more to gase and woondre at his myracles, and to seke bodely healthe then to seke the saluacion of theyr soules: he leaft Capernaum, and withdrewe hymselfe departyng into wyldernesse or places solitarie, as one that woulde fayne bee awaye from the great prease and thyrong of people bayning reloztyng vnto hym, teachyng vs a lesson by the waye, that miracles are not to bee wrought to a vayne ostentacion or braggue of our selues, nor yet at the will and pleasure of the people for theyr fansies and appetites: but so ferre onelye, as they maye auayle and growe to mennes saluacion, and to Goddes glorye: but the suspicion of vayneglorye euermore at all tymes to bee vtterly abopded. That he healed al men, it was an example of goodnesse beeyng prompt and readye to be shewed vnto al men: & he priuely withdrewe himselfe, it was an example of humilitee & meekenesse, fleeyng vayn prayses & hauntyng of hymself. And whā it was now broade daye light, there reloyed thither agayne, as they had dooen, great noumbre of all sortes of people, allured by the greatnesse of thynges dooen on the daye before. But whan they knewe that Jesus was goen, many hyanby folowed after hym. And whan they had found hym, they entreacted hym to tarye with them, and not to leaue theyr citie, but there with them to take an house, to thentente

he might bee a continuall dweller emongest them. This mynde and affection of theirs towardes Jesus, was in dede not vngodly: but yet muche more blissed are they, whiche suffre not the Lorde Jesus to departe from the litle house of their hertes, but whan he addresseth to be gone, doe with muche prayers cal him backe agayne. Notwithstanding at that present season, the dispensation and state of the flesshe whiche Jesus had taken, did require, that he often and manye tymes chaungeyng places, might by that occasion from daye to daie spreade further and further abrode the preachyng of the ghospell, keeping as yet but a newe doctrine and but of late cummen vp. For he was the sedelower sente into the worlde, to sowe and caste abrode in all places the doctrine of the ghospell, although it should not in al places like prosperously come vp and prowe in growyng. Wherefore to them that willyngly desyred hym to returne againe to Capernaum, and there to enhabite himselfe, he gentilly and colorly made this aunswere. The benefite that hath been freely bestowed vpon you, take it well in worth. I doe not mislike your entretenement or hardynough, ne despise to be a sojourner emong you. But I must of necessitie preache the kyngdome of god to other cities to, as I haue doone to yours. For truely my father hath sent me for this ende and purpose, not to preache to one citie onely, but that I should call and bid all men to the felowshyp and brotherhood of the heauenlye kyngdome: And therfore that Jesus nowe did himselfe, he taught afterward his disciples also to doe, whiche was, that they shoulde trauaile ouer and ouer the whole yearth, and teache all nacions. And this iourneyng from place to place, was not the disease of ficklenesse or of vnstablenesse: but it was the earnest affection to do good vnto all men. So to flitte from place to place, is no poynte of lightnesse of man: but an euident signe of the charitee, that suche as folowe the steppes of the apostles ought to haue. Yea and in places where the doctrine of the ghospell is ryfe enough, yet a good watching shepehearde will not so leaue to walke to and fro round about his cure, as one that is carefull for his flocke committed to his charge and custodie: to the ende he maye call againe the shype whiche was goen astraye: heale that is scabbie and sicke: deliuer that is in daungier of the woulfe: see to the curyng of the eyne or woonded: coumfort and cherishe with good kepping, that is tendre and weake. For they are not made pastours or heardemen, to see to one or two householdes and no mo: but that they should continually watche for the behouffe of all. This execute thus made, and the Capernaites therewith satisfyed, Jesus went about from one to another of all the villages, cities, and townes of Galile, preachyng, as his accustomed woont was, in their Synagogues, and throughe the myracles whiche many tymes and often he wrought, purchasyng credite vnto his doctrine emong the Jewes, who were so harde herted, that without myracles they coulde beleue nothyng.

for therfore I am sent.

The fifth Chapiter.

It came to passe, that (when the people pressed vpon hym, to heare the woorde of god) he stoode by the lake of Genezareth, and sawe two shippes stand by the lakes side: but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washyng theyr nettes. And he entred into one of the shippes (whiche pertayned to Simon) and prayed hym, that he would thrust oute a litell from the lande. And he sate down and taught the people out of the shippe. AND now forasmuche as the fame of Jesus was daylye more and more bruited abrode emong all folkes: so great was the resorte of people settyng vnto hym, that to bee emongst them, or to leate them haue free accesse vnto hym in the Synagogues, in the stretes, & in the townes was not enoughe: but into whatsoeuer place the Lorde at any tyme withdrue hymselfe, thither would a greate multitude bothe of menne and women one emong an other, byandby come rennyng. A maigme of them the desier of bodely healthe had occasioned so to doe: a good noumbre, the straungenesse of miracles did moue: and verye manye did the vertue and power of the heauenly doctrine drawe vntohim. The desertnesse of the countrey lying waste and saluage, did nothyng feare them from commyng to hym, the peynefull climming of mountaynes did nothing discourage them, nor the shame of forceable breakyng into this or that mannes house, couldbe kepe them from hym, in case he had any where by occasiō kept hymselfe secrete within doores. Shorte tale to make, come they were at last to a great pooles syde: and yet whan Jesus there addressed hym to take bote, they coulde not fynde in theyr hertes to leaue hym so neither. They gathered to hym by flockes, thei letted for no shouldrying ne thrustyng to geate to him. They forbare not to breake in parforce to places where he was, they hāged styll on hym and wouldenot awaye, they spared not in maner to beare hym down afore them with importune pressyng to hym. And here now, o frende Theophilus, in any wyse open me the ies of thy mynde, to the ende that thou mayest in the recitynge of a thing dooen but after the fleashe, (that is to saye by them that did not yet perfectelye knowe what that spirite was) verye playnely see a liuely representacion of the churche, both as it fyrste sprong vp, and also as it growe in tyme to a passyng great noumbre: Jesus was standyng on the shore euen harde by the poole called Genezareth, whiche poole (because it slopeth foorth a great waye bothe in length and bredth, and by reason of muche wynde that ariseth of the poole selfe, it laboureth to and fro verye often, with many rough sourges) the Hebrues doe ofte tymes call by the name of a sea. It semed to theyr thought, that he mynded to take bote and to be goen. But the vnrewly multitude flockyng about hym, were euermore at the verye heles of hym with importune throng, and pressed still vpon hym. for eayrnesse to heare the woorde of God out of his mouth. For as for the Phariseis talke and preachyng, a great manye of them were euen than already cloyed withall, and werye of it, because it sauoured altogether carnallye and worldelye, and nothyng els. But this importune facion of the people didde nothyng displease the moste meke and patient lorde Jesus, but as one compelled and beyng at a narowe streyght, (because on the one syde the thicke presse of the people made importune thrustyng, and on the other syde the water was in treaunce of the people, cloustreyng and throngyng together at auenture:) he with draweth hymselfe into a place, somewhat more quiete. And euen as god would, there were lying at the same shore two fisherbotes. And the fyshermen selfes beeyng gone oute of their botes, were washyng of theyr nettes, to haue them in a readinesse against the nexte fishyng tyme. Jesus when he had espyed these fisher botes, he entred into the one of them (and that was Symon Peters bote) and prayed him to launche a litle from the lande. Which being doen, whan he was by that meanes somewhat removed from the pestrous throngyng of the multitude, he sate hym downe quietlye: and oute of the bote, as it had been out of a doctours chayre, taught the people stāding on the shore. lorde had afore called fishers to the office of preachyng the gholpell: and euen the same that Jesus nowe did oute of the bote was to fishe for men: the poole was the worlde, wauyng vp and downe with soondrye troublous motions of thynges: Simons shippe, was the churche beyng first gathered of Jewes: of whiche churche, Simon Peter should afterwarde be instituted the chiefe spirituall ministre, (and the worde Simon, is to sape in Englysshe, obedient,) for the Jewes, they required to haue woondres shewed them, and putte all their affiaunce and hope of saluacion in the workes of the lawe: the Philosophers on the other side, did with naturall reasons and argumentes of mannes brayne holde great disputacions about a thyng that they called in theyr terme, Summum bonum, (as yf ye shoulde sape in Englysshe, the highest, and moste perfecte good thyng, that could bee) and thereby did they measure and esteme the felicitie of man, (whiche we call heauens blisse:) whereas the doctrine of the gholpel pronuseth vnto al men saluacion, through feith. And feyth is a kinde of obedience: for an obedient persone he is that beyng bydden to beleue, doeth beleue without any stickyng, and without any reasonyng: and whiche beeyng bydde to hope, dooeth hope, dependyng altogether of his mere pleasure, to whole feyth he hath once yelded hymselfe.

The texte. ¶ Whan he had leafte speakyng, he sayed vnto Simon: launche out into the diepe, and lette slip your nettes to make a draught. And Symon answerd and sayed vnto hym: maister we haue labourd all nyght, and haue taken nothing, neuertheleste at thy commaundemente, I will loose fooryth the nette. And when they had this dooen, they inclosed a greate multitude of fishes. But theyr nette brake, and they beckened to their felowes (whiche were in the other shippe) that they should come and helpe them. And they came: and filled both the shippes, that they sounke agayne.

Thou hast heard, o Theophilus, the first foundacion and cummyng vp of the churche: heare nowe the growyng and encrease of the same, whiche shall consequently ensue of this euangelicall fishyng. Whan the Euangelicall sermon was ended, the Lorde Jesus spake vnto Simon that was maister of the bote sayeng: rowe the bote awaye further from the lande, and haue it fooryth into the depth, and there shoote ye fooryth your nettes abrode to take some fishe.

Here Simon, (accordyng to the terme or woorde of his name,) aunswereth in this wyse: Mayster all this nighte long haue we laboured in fyshyng, and

haue taken nothyng at all: and therfore beeing out of all hope to take any fiche at this tyme we haue washed our nette, and made it ready to lay vp: yet at thy bidding, I will once moze thoote it furth. I shall (as my parte is) be obediente to thy bidding: the prouffe and lucke therof shall reste in thy handes. The lozde Jelus commaundemente was obeyed: the bote was had awaye to the depthe of the poole: the nette was caste abzode of a greate compaſſe: within whiche there was euen by and by enwzapped and caught ſuche a greate multitude of fyche, that the diſciples nette being a great deale to ſlender for the burden of the fyche, dyd bzeake, and the one of the botes was not ſufficiente to holde the draught that they had taken. In ỹ other bote wer Simons felowes, to whom they made ſygnes, not in wozdes, (becauſe they wer ferre of) but by other meanes, that they ſhoulde come to theim in the other bote, and helpe theim in diſchargyng theyr nette of his great burden. They came, and they holpe theim, & there was founde ſuch a myghty great quantitie of fyche, that both the botes wer fylled beray full with the lucky ſpede of that one nette, inſomuch, that by reaſon of being ouer laden with the burden, they were within litle in daunger, of ſinkyng. Thou haſte here in Symon the fourme and Jmage of a preacher of the ghoſpell. The prozpe and moſte ſpeciall office of ſuche an one, is to caſte abzode the nette of euangelicall preachyng, not oute of the Phariſeis ſnares, not out of the Philoſophiers ſophiſticacions, but directlye oute of the rewles of holy ſcripture bokes, ſo knitte & made of the actes and ſaiynges of Chriſt; that it maye enwzappe beray many, and not let them eſcape oute againe after they are once in. This woꝛld alſo hath nettes of it own, & Sathan hath fiſchers of his owne too: who dooe with flatteryng enticementes allure the miſerable ſoules of men, and towe theim into the were and nette of damnacion, and foe dying thē at laſte to periſhing foz euer. But happy and bleſſed are thoſe ſoules whom the nette of the Apoſtles hath wounde in, & dzawen them vp from the deepe doungeon of ſynnes and of errours vnto a moze open aier, out of darkeneſſe, into lyght, out of fylthie mudde, to a moze purer lyfe, oute of wandzeryng affections to a conſtaunte zeale and endeuoure of continuall liuyng vpzyghtly without offence. Foz they are not dzawen to murdzemente, but to healthe and ſafety. They are ſo wound in, that they would not by theyr good willes eſcape out, and in caſe they doe eſcape out, they perysshe. They are on euery ſyde encoũpaſſed with the knottes of the trueth euangelical, they acknowlage their owne miſerable ſtate, and reioyce that they are dzawē to the ſhip of the churche. And foz becauſe that the nette of preachyng doeth at times dzawe and catche with in his coumpace fyches of ſoondzye kyndes out of al parties, it cannot be choſen, but that ſome euill are mingled emong the good. Therfore thzough the faulte of the euil, the nette doeth bzeake: but yet doe not the good fiches therfore ſlippe out. Heritiques doe attempte and laboure to cutte in ſunder the doctrine of the ghoſpel: but Chriſt on euery ſide kenſing thoſe that are his, turneth the deliueliche attemptates of the others, to the pzofityng and betteryng of the pozcion that is vncozrupted. Some lade and trouble the ſhyppe with theyr troubleous diſturbaunce, being burdenous and heauye with the affections of this woꝛld, and alſo couetyng to returne to the mudde that they had leaft, but the ſhyppe dzoweth not whiche Chriſte hathe once bouchſalued to loke vnto. And although there is no mo but onely one churche thzoughout all the woꝛld, yet doeth the figure therof foz this cauſe conteine two botes, that we ſhoulde vnderstande, that the churche is congregated of two peoples, the Jewes, and the gentiles. The beginning of our saluacion proceaded fyrst from the Jewes. And there emong them dyd Peter fyrst of all men, nexte after Christe, caste the nette of Apostolicall preaching, and at one draught plucked vnto Christ three thousand of menne and women together of al sortes, that was, whan he played the fyther to catche menne. And his tale to the people at that tyme, was not linked together with the art of Rhetorike, not intricate with the subtilties of the Philosophiers sophistications: but myghty and effectuall throughe the vertue and power of the holye ghoste. For he had not at that tyme caste out his nette abyde vpon any truste that he had in the strength of man, but at the biddyng of Christ onely, with whose spirite he was than led. Or els is the net cast out in vayne, onlesse Christe sende prosperous lucke to mannes castyng. But lyke as from the Jewes was the fyrst beginning of this growing vp: so from the Gentiles came ryght plentifull increace vnto it, insomuch that they which had fierse caste theyr nettes, were of force constreigned earnestly to require the helpe of theyr felowes: For afterward, by reason that the Gentiles did on every syde violentely breake into the brotherhood of saluacion that cummethe by the ghospell, Petur and James gaue theyr handes to Paule and Barnabas, in token of theyr equall felowshyp concernyng the affayres of the ghospell: and so bothe parties with as earnest endeuoure as they myght, did laboure to fill vp bothe shippes: and the matter so well succeded, as it was to be wondred at.

The texte.

¶ Whan Simon Peter sawe thys, he fell downe at Jesus knees, sayeng: Lorde goe from me, for I am a synfull man. For he was astouned, & all that were with him, at the draught of fishes whiche they had taken: and soe was also James and John the sonnes of zebedee, whiche were partners with Simon. And Jesus sayde vnto Simon: feare not, from hensforth thou shalte catche men. And they broughte the shippes to lande, and forsoke all, and folowed hym.

Whan Simon sawe this, he fell downe at Jesus knees.

Simon therfore, when he sawe the matter to goe not by mannes power or by casualty, but onely by the godly vertue of Jesus, dyd ettsons geue a lesson by exaumple of hymselfe, what ought to bee doen of hym, that is a preacher of the Apostles doctryne, yf his laboure of preaching doo at any time likely come to passe. For although the bote was hys owne, although it was his owne nette that he had caste, and although himselfe was the beste manne that had sette handes to drawyng of the draught, yet taketh he vnto himselfe no thanke at all therof, but by the greatnesse of his lucky spedyng, was stricken with the more humilitye. He falleth downe at the knees of Jesus, and putteth ouer vnto him the whole glory of al thissame acte. For his owne parte he confesseth hymselfe to be naught els, but a synner, and a persone vnworthye to bee any ministre or instrumente of his diuine power. Maister (sayeth he) now and neuer afore dooe I acknowelage mine owne vnworthinesse, whan I consider thy hygh maiestie. Goe thou hence awaye from me, for I am vnworthy of thy compaigny. Albeit it was not any desire or wyll of hym to departe oute of the lordes compaignye, that enforced Petur to speake these woordes (for he loued Jesus singularely aboue all others:) but a certayne earnest meruellyng of his power fierse surmountyng the power of the worldly meane.

Lorde goe from me: for I am a synful manne.

Neyther were Simons felowes of anye other mynde or affection, than Simon hymselfe was of. For a certayne vncredible wondryng at this dede had had possessed the hertes of them all full and whole: but not somuche as one of theim tooke to his owne prayse any parte at all of the doyng thereof. For they acknowlaged euerye one of them that the laboure in dede was theirs, but the lucky spede of takyng so muche fishe at a draught was his onely, who had bidden them caste their nette. And what manne would not bee astouned yf he consider how that through the preaching of a fewe men beeyng but poore creatures of byrth and degree, beyng also priuate persones, neither of any learning nor yet in any office, it was within a fewe yeres perswaded to so manye thousandes of people, that letteyng cleane aparte all affections of their kinsefolkes, letteyng at naughte all losse or decaye of their goodes and substaunce, nothyng regarding the threattenynges of princes, despisyng al punishementes and tormentyng, yea and finally deathe it selfe, they couldе fynde in their hertes to followe the playne homely doctrine of Christ, beleuing such thinges as by mans naturall reason cannot possibly bee proued, and hopyng on suche thynges as after the power and strength of nature, are playnely to bee despaired of? His hope therfore muste of duetye bee ready and therefull to caste the nette, that he may earnestely apply hymselfe to winne beray many vnto Christ: and he shal loose the nette abrode not to his owne glorye, not to bee a gayner thereby, not at the pleasure and appetite of princes, not for any worldly affeccion, but at the pleasure and bydding of Christe: who commaundeth not the net to be caste abrode, but to the healthe and saluacion of theim that are sicked for, and to the magnifying of Goddes goodnesse. For this and none other is the Apostles manner of fishyng. And such fishyng, although it be executed by the ministerie or seruice of mans voice, and of his diligente laboure, yet the whole summe of all the prayse is to bee referred vnto Christe onelye: whose luckye letteyng on at the fyrste, looseth the tongue to speake, whose spirite dooeth put in the herte of the speaker what to saye, and whose secrete power drawethe vnto hym the myndes of the hearers. And standyng the case, that it maye bee in the teacher, euen of his due right to take some piece of prayse vnto himselfe. in this behalf, yet is it a moze poynte of saletye, to referre all the whole vnto hym, without whose ayde and helpe, nothing that man attempterhe, dooeth succede or proue to folkes saluacion. He can no skill to take away, that himselfe hath geuen: he can no skylle to enbraied any man with that that he hath frankely sente of hys bounteous largesse. So muche the rather will he bee contented to leate any thyng bee thyne owne, yf what soeuer myght by any waye haue semed too bee thyne, thou bee of the mynde that the same shalbe his. He wyll be wel contented that the commoditye and profite redounde to the: but as for the glory and prayse he will not sufferr to be geuen to any other but to God onely. And in case we haue a lusse to glory, we shal moze safely glorie in him. But whan the mery napying at this acte of Jesus made all them stil to continue astouned, that had been associate with Petur at the takyng of the fyshe: (among which coumpaignie were James and John the sonnes of zebedee, and felowes with Symon in fishers crafte) and whereas, for meruey ling at the derrue and power of hys godhed, they durste not be so bolde as to approache any thing nere vnto Jesus: the Lorde gaue them woordes, of veray greate coumfort, and to Petur (in whome he was muche accustomed to set foorthe the paterne of anye thyng that he would haue to bee enpytented in the hertes of al the reste) thus he said: Simon, there is nothyng why thou shouldeste bee afeardе, Thou dooeste ac-

knowlage thyne owne weaknesse, and an experimente thou hast hadde of the power of god. And this power of god is to bee loued, not to bee dreded. For what it is hable to doo, it doeth shewe further, not to oppresse the weaknesse of synners, and to treade it vnder foote, but to lifte it vp and set it vpryght: there is nothyng els required, but that thou bee obedyente vnto my byddynges, and not to weigh what it is that thy strengthe is hable to doo: but what it is that I wyll haue doone. Nothyng shall come ill forwarde, if thou put thyne affiaunce in me. Thou dooste greatly mervaile, that the matter came so luckilye to passe in the takyng of fishe: but this is but a lyghte matter. A thyng of muche greater woondre shall prosperously goe forwarde with the, whan thou shalte bee sette to take men with thy fishing. And to such a kynd of fishyng, haue I specially chosen out bothe the and thy felowes. Enough now for thys tyme of thys fishyng that ye haue hytherto vsed. From henceforth thou shalt apply thyselfe, not to fyll thys bote of thyne with fyshes, but that thou maiste replenysshe my churche with preachers of the ghospell. And that, that the Lorde spake vnto Petur, the same did enerye one of them vnderstande to be spoken vnto them too. Therefore euen oute of hande they botes beeyng conueighed to lande and all thynges lefte euen there behynde them, they wente after Jesus, voide of all care concernyng thinges corporall, and with all they whole myndes bente to the purpose to bee fyshers of men.

From henceforth thou shalt catche men.

The texte. And it fortuned, as he was in a citie, beholde, there was a man ful of leprosie, and when he had spied Jesus, he fell flat on his face, and beseought him saying: Lorde if thou wilt, thou canste make me cleane. And he stretched furth his handc, & touched him, saying: I will, bee thou clene. And immediatlye the leprosie departed from him. And he charged him that he shoulde tell no man. But goe (saieth he) and shewe thy selfe to the priest, and offer for thy clensing according as Moses commaunded, for a witnesse vnto them.

Beholde there was a man ful of leprosie. &c.

To this noble office of fishyng for to catche menne, they were to be framed with instructyons and good lessons, they were to bee trayned with mistical exaumples. To the entente therefore that he wouldc declare no vice or faulte to be so abhominable ne so deadlye, that is not by and by forgeuen to anye that wyll acknowlage his disease, and will through the feyth of the gospel earnestly call for remedy at the hande of the heauenlye physician Jesus: it so fortuned, that in a certayne citie, a certayne man there was right greuously infected with the impediment of the leprosie, and al the whole bodye ouer berayde full of a foule and a lothely scourge to see. And this sorte of people was in suche wyse abhorred emong the Jewes, that all suche were cleane exiled from coumpaignyng with any others, and the lawe in expresse wordes did streightly forbidde and charge, that none suche shoulde bee so muche as touched, for the daungier of infection that wouldc immediatly folowe thereby. But a greate deale fouler, and muche more to bee abhorred is the leprosie of the mynde, then of the body. But the Jewes, whereas themselues swimmed as full as they skynnes myghte holde, of many great vices that lape inwardlye hydden within the skinne: yet dyd they so greatly detest and abhorre ethnikes, publicanes, and other persones knowne to be sinners, that in case it happened them at any time no more but to talke with any suche: as sone as they came home agayne to they owne houses, they would make a washyng of all they body from top to toe, as thoughe they had taken some berape sore infeccion. But Christes myndc was to haue his disciples ferre from this presumptous cleanesse of the Jewes.

To the manne therfore beeyng thus piteously arayed with the leprosie, it was a great good turne, that he sawe Jesus. He acknowleaged his vnclenes, and iudged hymselfe a man vnworthy to holde vp his face and looke on the Lorde, seeyng that it was to bee abhorred and lothed of all men for the foule pitches of the leprye: but beeyng muche ashamed of hymself fel down prostrate and grouelyng on his face, and spake out woordes bothe full of humility and also of assured truste in the Lorde. That he hydde his face, was a poynte of one that acknowleaged his owne euill: that he prayeth to bee made whole, was a poynte of one beeyng of vndoubted affiaunce in the goodnes of Jesus Christe, beeyng bothe of power to dooe all thynges, and readily offreyng it selfe vnto all creatures. Lorde (sayeth he) I knowe my sorye to bee vncurable by any phy- Lorde yf thou wilt, thou canst make me clene. sicke of man: & percase I am a man not worthye of suche benefite at thy hande: but yet neuertheleste this one poynte am I fully perswaded in, that thou arte able to make me clene of all my diseases, yf it were thy pleasure. Thou haste hearde the faythfull truste that I haue of thy power: there resteth no more, but that thy goodnes bee redye, whether it will vouchesalue to extende hys mercye to suche a poore felowe as I am, plagued with extreme affliction, and paste remedy of mans cure. There coulde not bee a fuller confidence towardes the Lorde, than whan the manne hadde already acknowleaged his power what he coulde doe, yet neuertheleste all the iudgemente whether he wouldoe doe the bestowe vpon hym, who knewe it to bee other whyles expediente for vs to bee plagued with the maladies and diseases of the bodye, and the prosperous successe of thynges temporall, to bee nothyng for oure behoufe. But Jesus beeyng delited with this so perfecte confidence and feyth of the man muche to bee prayed, dyd not onely not remoue hym awaye oute of his sight, but also stretcheth hym on his feete, whereas he lay prostrate, and stretchyng forth his hande, toucheth the lepers face, saiyng: I will, be thou requirelte my goodnes, I will it so to bee. And because thou confesse openlye protestle thy selfe to beleue my power, bee thou clene. And euen with the woorde speakyng, the leprye where with he hadde long tyme bene full al ouer and ouer, went clene away from al his body. And he stretched further hys hande.

The disciples in the meane whyle learne a lesson how that in no wise they ought to turne awaye theyr faces from any persone beeyng intangled with nesse so enormious and detestable synnes, so that the partye acknowleageyng his disease, earnestelye desyre remedye at the goodnesse of Christe with perfecte truste to receyue health. For yf the Lorde, (who onelye and none but he, was pure from all manier leprye of vicioulnesse,) vouchsalued with his owne hande to touche a creature that was to bee abhorred of all folkes: howe muche lesse ought we to feare to touche a creature that is made clene from all synne, and whiche neyther bee altogether clene from all offences, and not oute of possibilitie to fall into all enormities, shoulde thynke harde to bestowe theyr diligente cure in healing the diseases of others? Suche manner touchyng dooeth not defyle the toucher, but reioyceth and clenseth the partye that is touched. The partye that is touched is furthewith made pure, and he nothyng the lesse pure that toucheth hym, at lesteweyle yf by the instrument of a true Apostles handes, Jesus selfe dooeth vouchesalue to touche him.

And nowe, because the sawe remitteth the iudgement to discerne whether is

a lepre, and whiche not not vnto all persones at auenture, but to the priestes onely: the Lorde wouldе not haue this miracle bruited abrode by the tumoure of the vulgare people onelye: but to the entente that the truethe of the matter might the more certaynely be knowen, he gaue a streighte charge vnto the partie that was healed, not byandby to noyse abrode the benefite whiche he hadde receyued, but fyrste and formoste, according to the playne ordre of the lawe, to resort vnto the priest, by whose iudgemente he had afore be condemned of lepry, and dissevered from coumpanyng with other folkes, that yt he (saieth Jesus) whan he hathe vewed thy bodye, shall geue sentence and iudgemente that thou arte a clene manne m veray dede, than goe and offre the thyng that Moises law appoynteth to be offred of all suche as haue hadde the fortune to bee ridde from the lepzie. And so shall it all vnder one come to passe, that neyther the priestes may fynde faulte that their gaines dooeth decreace vnto them thzough me, nor the lawe to haue bene broken or contemned, whiche I am come not to abolishe but to make perfect: nor on the otherside slaundzeous thye reproue thys benefite of myne, eyther by demyng that euer thou were a lepze, or els by iudgeyng that thou hast not bene made whole. For the thyng self shal euen at the fyrste wooyd fully aunswere them: if it so be that he was not full of lepzie, why did ye, whiche take vpon you the skilfulnesse of determinyng which is a lepzie, geue sentence that he was a lepze, and therupon disseuer him from being conuersaunt with others? And on the otherside in case he bee not whole, why haue ye receyued the oblacion in the lawe appoynted and limited, as of one beeyng made clene from the lepzie? The Lorde Jesus dyd for this consideracion with so muche circumstaunces commaunde all thissame to bee doen, that it mpghte bee manifestelye apparente vnto all creatures, that there was one come greater then the lawe: who was hable without anye helpe of the lawe, by mere touchyng onlye, and by his only woyde, and with a becke of his head alone, at hys owne wyll and pleasure, to geue perfect cleanesse: and that dydde so take awaye the vncleanesse of all folkes whiche wouldе offer themselfes thzoughe feyth to bee healed, as himselfe was not stayned by the infection of any creature: and the whiche moreouer dyd freely helpe all folkes, whereas the priestes dyd not without a rewarde of a certayne offreng, somuche as pronounce theyr sentence concernyng purity or cleanesse of the bodye, restozed to anye persone. For the priestes of Moises institucion neyther dyddе sende the lepzye into anye bodye, nor take it awaye from anye bodye: but of the leppye eyther hzeded in a bodye, or is taken awaye thy dyd iudge onlye: but onely Jesus taketh awaye all kynde of diseases from all creatures, exactyng or requiryng none other sacrifice of them, but a playne and a pure truste in hym that we acknoweleage in him the vertue and power of the godhed, by whiche he is hable to dooe whatsoeuer his will is: and that we worshyp in hym his goodnes not possible to bee expressed in woozdes, and also hys mercye by whiche he wouldе fayne haue all sinners to bee saued, paying of his owne bodye all that euer was to bee offred in sacrifice for the synnes of them all. And that the Lorde Jesus gaue a great charge to the partye that was made clene, that he should make no woozdes nor no talkyng to anye bodye what had happened, whereas he knewe ỹ the felowe would not kepe it vnspoken, he dyd therein but ozdeyne an exaumple for his disciples, not to hunte or seke for anye blastes of vayneglozie for theyr well doynges emong menne. For it is none of ours that God wozkeyth by vs: nor it shall not bee conuenient that we require any prayse to bee as a rewarde for such thinges: but we shal with still mouth declare our selues to retayne in the behalfe of our neyghboure to whome the benefite hath happened: but all the glorie we shall referre and geue vnto God, and so litle will shall we haue to take any parte thereof vnto oure owne laude or glory, that as touching our owne behalfes we should bee muche desirous, that it might be to all men vtterly vnknowen, that any suche benefite of God hathe happened vnto our neighbour we keeping the instrumentes thereof. No nor the parte neither that hathe felte a benefitiall good turne, ought to referre the thanke and prayse therof vnto the man, by whom he hath receiued it: but ought to rendre the thankes vnto God the worker and sender of it, for that he vouchsaueth moste bountiously to geue vnto men suche highe and greate benefites through his seruauntes, yea and glorie doeth with better successe and lucke ensue to him, that remeth awaye from it seking to auoyde it: and much more also to a mannes honour dooeth it come, whan it is not desired nor hunted for. For in verye deede that same and none other is true glory & renoune, that verie welfe doeth purchase vnto a man keeping vtterly vnwilling to haue it, and seking by al meanes to auoid it, and such renoume as neyther the flattery of the people doeth geue, nor oure ambitious desire dooeth requite: but suche as the partye selfe who hath well deserued it doeth not acknowlage, but sincere truethe that can no skylle of flattering, dooeth of it owne mere motion lay in his lappe.

¶ But so much the more went there a fame abroade of hym, and much people came together to heare hym, and to be healed of hym, of their infirmities. And he kept hym out of the way in the wyldernesse, and gaue hymselfe to prayer. The texte.

Through suche maner wonderfull actes as this, the fame of Jesus was daily more and more renoumed and bruited abrode, while some reporte vnto others the thyng that they had seen and heard: and these againe (muche lyke, as when men deliuer thynges by hand from one to an other,) doe by talking spreade further and further abrode the same that they hadde receiued of them, whiche reported it fyrste to others. Therefore there came flocking thyther on euery syde greate coumpaignies of people, multiplying daylye more and more, partely to here that same pithythe doctrine, & healeth all diseases of the soules, and partely that they whiche wer likely to fall in this or that sickenesse of theyr bodyes, myght through the power of Jesus bee made whole. For the grosse carnall people doeth rather mercuail and take regarde at those thynges whiche are to bee seen with the ye, then at suche thynges as were not seene. They esteemed it a mighty great matter and more then a mannes acte, that a pure clene lepyne had been restored to a leprouse persone by the onely touchyng of Jesus, hande: whereas it is a greater and a more godlye benefyte by a greate oddes, that the same Jesus hath with ministring the phisicke of euangelicall doctryne, put clene away from mennes soules, the feure of lecherous concupiscence, the dropsye of couetise, the diuelysshe spirite of ambicion, with other deadlye pestilences of the mynde. But nowe Jesus mynding by this his dooyng to teache vs, that good woorkes are not to bee dooen neyther for braggyng or pompe of the worlde (as stage plaies and open sightes are shewed, nor yet for many at ons, or so long together, tyll menne be cloyed with them, withdrawe himselfe into a place of wildernes: and beeyng solytarie from all resorte of people, he gaue himselfe to prayer, wherein he rendred thankes vnto God the father for the benefites, whiche he dyd in moste large and aumple wise sende vnto manne thyough his sonne. For of suche chaungeyng nowe to coumpanye of menne and to preachyng, and nowe to solitarye contemplacion and to prayer. It foloweth that hyrst of one at certayne seasons pause from dooyng benefites, it auoideth cloyyng & wetines in the receyuers of them, and reneweth a freashe appetite to deserue moe: and secoundarily that whoso hath sequestred hymselfe from men to talkyng with God, returneth better, and also more hertye and therefull to hys office that he hath for a tyme rested from. And as for the Lorde Iesus, he dyd in suche wyle temper and ordre all his whole lyfe: that myndyng to shewe vs a patterne howe to liue, he wolde oftentymes shewe hymselfe to bee manne: and oftentimes agayne, he wolde shewe veray plaine tokens of his godhed. And truely nothyng dooeth better make a teacher of the ghospell hartye, quicke, and freashe to the office of preachyng, nothyng dooeth so well fence hym, and arme hym agaynste all corruption of this lyfe, as dooeth often goyng from al coumpany of men into places solitary, not to pleines, nor to gaimyng, or to other sensuall pleasures, (of whych sorte the repolyng of the riche cobbes of this worlde whan they sequestre themselfes from the resorte of men for the moste parte are:) but to the readyng of holy scripture bookes, to pure prayer, to thankes geuing to the contemplacion of thynges heauenly, and finally to the perfect clensyng of the soule, yf percase any spotte haue been caughte throughe liuyng in coumpany with the people. Of these thynges had Christ on his own behalf no maner nede at al, but his minde was to erpresse in hymselfe a patterne for vs to folowe. Daply conuersacion of a pastour or curate emong the people, dooth oftentimes breede contempt that he is not regarded: and on the otherside litle good it is that suche an one can doe, as continually absenteth hymselfe from all mennes coumpanies. A tryght teacher of the gospell therefore shall shewe his head abrode, as often as the people shall nede the koode of euangelicall doctryne, and as often as diseases of the soule growyng sore vpon them, doe require the helpe of one to cure them. Agayne as loone as they haue been well fedde, and after what helpe hath bene done to the cuils of a greate mayny, than, lest on the one side familyaritye maye engendre contempte, or on the other syde to muche presence may be a cloyyng to them: let him sequestre himself into his solitary closette, to the ende that, from his holy studye at his booke, (as from verape talkyng with God,) he may returne again to helping of his neighbours, at euery one time greater man then at an other, and all tymes better man, then he was afore.

¶ And it happened on a certain day, that he taught, and there sate the Pharisees and doctours of law, which were come out of al the townes of Galile, and Iewry, and Hierusalē. And the power of the Lord was present to heale them. And beholde, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a pauslesye: and they sought meanes to bryng hym in, and to lay him before him. And when they coulde not finde on what side to bring him in (because of the presse,) they went vp on the top of the house, and let him down through the tiling, bed and all, in the middes before Iesus. Whan he saw their fayth, he sayed vnto him: manne, thy sinnes are forgeuen thee.

After the lyke sorte veraplye as is afore erpressed, dyd the Lorde Iesus returne agayne from wildernesse to Capernaum, and restored hys presence to the desyres of all the people beyng nowe made sharpe and eager with sore longyng for him. And there, euen as he was sittyng in a certayn priuate house and teaching, (for wheresoeuer Christe teach, sittyng, there is the churche:) there had come swarmyng thither not nowe the baase and the inferiour sorte of people only, but also the Pharisees swellyng in pryde vnder pretence of a cloke of holinesse, and also the doctours of Moses lawe, who beeyng muche moued wyth the fame of Iesus, hadde purposely come thither from ferre places, not onely out of all the

townes of Galile where Capernaum stoode, & of Jewry whiche laye nexte adioynynge vnto thelame Galile: but also out of the verye citye of Hierusalem, whiche Hierusalem dyd presumptuously take vpon it selfe the highelle preemynence of all goddly perfection, and also of wisedome. But as for Jesus, for all mirthe as he was the fountayne of all helthe, dyd altogether from toppe to tooe, sende out from him nothyng, but a certayn effectuall godlye power for the healyng of man, which thyng to dooe was the onely cause of his comyng into thys worlde. And the moze principall parte of man, dyd of good congruence take the place to bee cured firste. With his woordes he healed diseases of theyr soules. And therfore firll he taught, and the same he dyd sittyng downe, lyke one that tooke vpon hym (as of right cause he myght) the full autozity of a doctour and teacher. The puttyng awaye of diseases of the bodye, was yet remaynyng nexte to bee doone, the whiche curyng of the bodye, (because it was a thyng open to the eyes of them all,) myghte frame in them a perfecte beliefe of suche thynges, as with moze frute and power also, (thoughe not althyng so apparente to the eye,) were wrought and doen in the soules. And beholde a matter euen there readye prepared, whereupon to exercise and shewe hys godlye power. There was euen presence & manne possessed with the diseale of the paulley lying bedded not able to sturre, and he was carped thyther of fower menne. So looze was thys diseale vpon hym, that all the senewes in euery o parte of the whole bodye were taken withall, and lo holden, that the pitcous creature couldde dooe nothyng but lye still in hys bed, and was nowe otherwyse carped aboute but as a corpse or a deade carkesse. Albeit the verye nature and kynde of thys diseale bespeth forth of it selfe is suche: that the Phisicians at moste tymes haue but homelye spede and lucke in wzastlyng with it. But they that carryed the sicke man hadde so greate beliefe & confidence in Jesus: that they put no manner doubt, but that the same Jesus to whom they knewe that there was no kind of diseale vncurable) as soone as he should beholde the pitcous syght & faction of thys straunge plague, would be moued with compassion and helpe immediatly. All the moste aboe was lyke to be, how the pitcous creature myght come to be in the light of Jesus. For suche an one is nowe already at a verye nygh poynte to be made perfectly whole, who hath once forsaken the lurckyng corners of vnnyng, and as a man in miserable state dooeth offre hymselfe to the syght of Jesus, acknowelagyng his own extreme distresse, & looking for Jesus moste mercifull goodnesse. But as touchyng thys diseased man, tholer why they brought him not in to laye him at Jesus feete, was the thicke preese of people, whiche is a common let to many, that would els make haste to saluacion: Neuertheleste that same poynt here in this matter, although it stopped and hyndzed the sicke mans getting into Jesus, yet dyd it make both the great distresulnes and also the truste and confidence, alwell of the parte that had the paulleye, as also of the others that carried hym, to be the moze famously knowen. For although God is of his nature propence and ready to shewe mercye vnto all creatures: yet doeth he many tymes make some delay of his beneficiall goodnesse, to the entent he maye the moze sharpen oure desyres, and also to teache vs, that we ought to leaue nothyng vnattempted, or vnassayed, that we maye bee deliuered from the diseases of the soule. He loueth in this behalfe to see vs impotunate: and by our impotunitye he is (as ye would saye) compelled of force vnto thelame thyng, which nevertheleste of his verye owne nature he is moste enclined to dooe. Therefore marke me nowe: what a bolde and auenturous parte these carriers of the sicke man playe:or rather what the partye that had the disease, with muche importunitie made them parforce to doo. Up they gotte theyr beaupe carriage to the house roufe in the out syde, and the tyling pulled awape, they let downe the sicke man with cordes. as it hadde beene in at a windooze, euen as he was lying vpon in his bed, emong the thickest of all the people, directelye before the feete of Jesus. What a moze shamelesse or sawcie prankse coulde there bee, then to take downe the tyling of an other mannes house, and to tumble in suche a lothelye sight before suche a presence to behold? And here the thicke presse, which at the dooze woulde not geue way to the pitteous booye to come in, coulde not choose but of force to make roume for him when he came sliding downe from the house toppe. And what dooeth the moste gentill and mylde phisician there whyle-he casteth not them in the teeth with theyr shamelesse facion and theyr importunitie, he maketh no railyng nor bitter chidyng that his preachyng was interrupted with a light mucke to be loked and abhorred. The bearers of the sicke bodye looking downe from the house toppe asked nothyng of hym, the wanne selfe that had the paulsey, asked nothyng neyther, from whome the great disease had taken awape the vse of his tounge: and yet all the moze dydde he speake to this mercifull phisician in that he coulde not speake at all, nor had no power thereto. Neither was there any nede of making petition, for the miserable sight it selfe dyd in moste earnestе wyse make requeste for mercy: and the thing that his bearers had doone, dyd euidently enoughe declare what theyr truste was to haue at the Lordes handes: Jesus therefore whan he hadde throughlye perceyued and seene their woondrefull affiaunce in hym, dyd accomplishe more vnto them, then they loked for. The summe of theyr hertes desire was no more but that the partye whiche had the paulsey, myght bee deliuered of the sickenes of his body. But Jesus declaring it to bee a moze godly thing for him to doo, and a thyng more to bee desired and sought for on oure behalfe, to bee deliuered from the diseases of the soule, turned hymselfe to the sicke man, and sayed. Thou man, thy sinnes are forgeuen thee.

And whan he sawe it happen.

The texte.

¶ And the Scribes and the pharisees began to thinke saiyng. What felow is this whiche speaketh blasphemye: who can forgeue sinnes but God onely? But whan Jesus perceiued their thoughtes he answered, and sayed vnto them: What thinke ye in your hertes? Whether is it easier to say, thy sinnes be forgeuen thee, or to say, arise vp, and walke? But that ye maye knowe that the sonne of man hath power to forgeue sinnes on yearth, he sayed to the sicke of the paulsey: I saye vnto the, arise, take vp thy bed, and goe vnto thy house. And immediatly he arose vp before them, and tooke vp his bed (whereon he lay) and departed to his owne house praising God. And they were all amased, and they gaue the glory vnto
God. And were fulled with feare, saiyng: We haue seen straunge thinges to daye.

This woord, because it plainely founed of a certayne power pertepnyng to the godhed, dyd throughlye moue the myndes of the Scribes, and Pharisees, beyng menne neuer vnreadye or vndisposed to forge matters of crime against him. For the priestes (whose office was to offre the sacrifices for sinnes, and not theyr owne selues remitte synnes, but onelye made intercession to God by meanes of prayer, that he would forgeue offences trespaced against him. But Jesus without vsynge sacrifices suche as the priestes vsedde offer, and without prayers, as it had bene of his owne proper autozitie, and an autozitie of perpetuall continuaūce, sayeth: Thy sinnes are forgeuen thee: comprehendyng vnder a generall name, the sume and the corpse of all sinnes together in general, wher-as the priestes dyd procure no moze but certayne offences to bee pourged by meane of sacrifice, and not all sinnes vniuersally.

Clap

Esay had thus muche taught them, that onelye God it was, who myghte geue remission of synnes vnto men. For in this manner speaketh he by the mouthe of his sayed prophete. I it is, euen I it is, that doo wype awaye thy iniquities for myne owne sake, and I shall nomore beare thy sinnes in remembraunce. But the Scribes and Pharisees, thoughe they espyed and sawe in hym playne tokens of the power of God, yet beyng offended with the infirmitye of his body whan they sawe it, and partely also beyng blinded with enuye, had more will to forge some slaundre agaynste him, then to beleue on hym. For with secrete thoughtes thus dyd they speake within themselues: and (as the propertye of Pharisaicall diuelysh slaundres is,) vnto theyr moste debilithe wekednesse, they pretende a cloke of hygh deuocion towardes God, and the earneste zele of tendrynge his glory. Stat. xlvii. & xlviii.

For there is not any more pernicious a synne of vngodlinesse, then so to doo. What felowe is this? What is this that he speaketh thus? He blasphemyth. &c.

conscience, were throughlye taken with a greate feare too, forasmuche as they dyd not yet vnderstande that Christe was come of verye purpose, not to take awaye ne to lese suche as hadde offended, but to make them pure and innocente. And they sayed emong themselfes: we haue thys daye seen thinges to be wondred at: and suche thynges as neyther we haue heard at any time to haue bene doen, nor yet haue read of. The people meruaileth and is in feare, (and euen that same is a good large steppe of forwardnesse towardes helth:) but the Phariseis, they grunte and murmour, and haue enuye at hym.

The texte. And after this he went forth, and sawe a publicane named Leuy, sitting at the receipte at custome. And he sayed vnto him: folowe me. And he leafte all, and rose vp, and followed him. And Leuy made hym a greate feaste in his owne house. And there was a great compaignie of publicanes and of other that sate at meate with them. And the Scribes and Phariseis murmured against his disciples saying: why do ye eate and drinke with publicanes, and sinners? And Jesus answered, and sayed vnto them: They that are whole nede not the physician, but they that are sicke. I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentaunce.

And Jesus whan he was gon out from thence, after that he had preached by the waters syde, teachyng vs thereby, that the seede of the euangelical doctryne is in all places without exception to bee sowed: as he was passyng by, he caste his eye vpon a certain publicane called Matthewe, and other wyle also called by the name of Leuy, the sonne of Alpheus: and this Leuy was sittyng at the receipte of custome. This was not a thyng vsed by blinde chaunce, but to haue caste his eye on him, was no lesse then to haue chosen hym to bee one of his. And a publicane he chose into the felowshyp or brotherhood of his Apostles of verye purpose, to reache his seruauntes, that no sorte of men is to be rejected from the profession of the ghospell, so that they forsake the trade of their former naughty lyfe, and prize themselues wholly to perfect godlinesse. Jesus sayed therfore vnto Leuy: Folowe me. And he at the voyce of Jesus, as thoughe it hadde bene one by some strong charmyng or enchauntemente clene chaunged into an other maner of man, arisith vp, and all thynges leafte alone behynde him, euen as he was, he folowed the Lorde: Now, to conuerte a manne wholye geuen afore to a slaunderous trade of getyng all his gaynes, and enwrapped with manifolde affaires suche as it is vnneath possible to get out of, to conuerte suche an one sodaynlye to a clene contrarye trade, this was a miracle muche more notable, then to restore the sinewes to a manne that hadde lyen sicke of the paulsey. And that verye poynte was euen nowe alreadye a great herte burnyng to the Phariseis, that Jesus vtterlye refusing theym, tooke vnto hym publicanes, by whose company or hauyng to doo with theym, the Jewes thought themselues to bee defyled and made vnclene. But there came an other thyng besides this, whiche caused theyr enuye and grutche to waxe further. For Matthewe beyng nowe become a disciple of Christes, or beyng for his maister a great feaste at home at his owne house. And thither dyd Christe vouchsaue to come accompanied with his disciples. At the same tyme were bydden & called also to the sayed feaste a great nomber of Publicanes, whom Matthewe emen as he had had them companions of his former trade: so was he now desirous and faine to haue had folowers of his new trade in cumnyng to Christe. The Scribes and the Phariseis this seyng, coulde nowe no longer kepe in the wicked mutmoure of theyr hertes, and yet durste they not presume to speake speake to the Lord: but they speake to the disciples, & to the disciples they finde matters of caullacio against their mayster, to the entent to turne theyr myndes from him that they myght forsake him. And this was theyr saying to the disciples: forasmuch as it becometh the holy to be conuersaunte and to kepe coumpaigny with the holy, wherefore doe ye bothe admitte Publicanes and sinners, which are in open slaudre and obloquie of the worlde, to haue talke with you: and also eate and drynke familiarely with the same in theyr houses, and doe not abhorre to haue theyr table and poutes al one, for a speciall token of right dere frendshyp with them? But Jesus well vnderstandyng what ende and purpose this diuelisshe murmouring of the Pharisees was spoken for, made answere vnto them in his disciples behalf. Wherefore doe ye falsely turne it to my slaudre (saieth Jesus) that I haue conuersacion with publicanes and sinners? Nate verily it becometh me with no persones sooner to kepe coumpaigny, then with sinners. For emong whom doet it more become a phisician to be conuersaunte, then emong the sicke? I am come for none other purpose, but to cure soules that are oppressed and bounde with the diseases of synne. And more apte to bee cured are such persones as these, beyng openly knowen sinners, acknowlagyng their disease, and therefore calling for the phisician: then others that thinke themselues whole men, shewyng a peruerted sheth to the eyes of the worlde, vnder the counterfeicte pretence of tyghteousnesse, whereas within foorth they are vexed with more grieuous euels, and haue diseases a great deale more vncurable then they, whole sickenesse is open to bee perceyued. Forasmuche therefore as I am a phisician: it is not mete, that menne beyng (as they thynke themselues) righteous, should take indignacio at me, if I kepe no coumpaigny with them, seeing that whole soules haue no nede of a leache. And truelye suche as are righteous in verai deede, ought not to haue enuy or grutch at sinners endeuouryng to remende to a better lyfe: That if they doe, than are they no lesse worthie to bee condemned & reproued therefore, then if one that is whole should take indignacion at a phisician visityng a sicke persone to helpe hym in his sickenesse. For as concerning the cause of the soule, he is no whole mā himself, ꝑ enuieth health vnto an other beeyng sicke: and himselfe is not vnholden with a disease, that whan he may, doeth not release his neyghbour of his sickenesse. With thilkame answere so gentle and so well to bee allowed, the Lorde Jesus bothe played the parte of an aduocate for his disciples, (who were not as yet sufficiently armed to dampe and choke the malicious capciousnes of the Pharisees and of ꝑ Scribes:) & also did plainly teache the said Pharisees, that his curteous demeaning of hymselfe towardes sinners, was mercy, and not fauouryng of vnrighteousnesse: and thirdelye he dyd with couerte woordes, but yet sharpely, rebuke theyr presumptcous takyng vpon them, in that they dyd with a great solemne countenance despyse other persones, whereas themselues were euen for this verye poynte vncurably wicked enemies of God, that they stoode in their owne conceiptes vpon a falce and a counterfaict title of holinesse.

They that are whole, nede not ꝑ physicia. ge.

¶ And they saied vnto him: why doe the disciples of Johā fast often, and praie, and the disciples of the Pharisees also: but thyne eate and drinke? He saied vnto them: Can ye make the children of the wedding falle, while the bridegrome is with them? The dayes will come when the bridegrome also shall bee taken awaie from them: then shall they faste in those daies. He spake also vnto them a similitude: No man puttyth a piece of a newe garmente into an olde vesture: For if he doe, then breaketh he the newe, and the piece that was taken out of the newe agreeth not with the olde. And no man poureth newe wine into olde bottels. For if he doe, the newe wine will burste the bottels, and renne oute it selfe, and

and the bottels shall perysshe. But newe wyne muste be putte into newe bottels, and both are preserued. No man also that drynketh old wyne, straygth waye can awaye with newe, for he saieth, the old is better.

But one slaunderous querell cometh on an others necke. And it fyxte arose partely of certain that had bene disciples of John. For John where he was as a marching bodder betwene the lawe that shoulde after warde cease, and the liberty of the ghospell shortely after to aryse, he gaue certaine traditions which dyd not vtterly disagree from the Phariseis ordeinaunces: whereas Christe, who was by the opinion of many, thoughte muche inferiour to John, did vse his disciples with more sufferaunce and tenderneffe, especially in such thinges as to bodily obseruaunces doe appertayne: of which sorte are fastes, and prayers: (for by these two thynges moste specially he did the Phariseis purchase to theimselfes a fame of holines emong the people.) But Christe, though in hys owne persone he prayed often, yet dyd he teache hys disciples, that prayng ought to be both in fewe woordes, and also priuely in places secrete: Neither did he precisely requite any fast, yea and at certain thinges would he winke, in whiche the prescriptions of the lawe did partely seeme to bee neglected, whan he dyd in the meane while after a nother facion fraime thē to higher stoute matters whiche dyd more specially appertayne to euangelicall stoutnesse. For a muche more higher poynte of stoutenesse it is, from the botome of the herte to forgeue a displeasure or a wrong dooen vnto vs, to doode good euen to herays those that haue harmed vs, and to sustayn the losse of our owne syde for sauyng of oure neyghbour: then to forbeare eatyng of a litle meate tyll it be towardes nyght, or to hummme out a fewe psalmes with the tounge. The Phariseis made woonderous muche hygh seruyce about that that might be outwardly seen, and that myght bee doen by hipocrisie: neglectyng in the meane while, and leatyng goe suche thynges, as are matters of true and perfect vertue in dede. But these Phariseis beyng felowes more shameleffe, then the Scribes, boldelye presumed to chop logike euen with the Lorde hymselfe, satyng vnto him: What is the cause, why Johns disciples dooe often times faste, and are a great long while together in their prayers: and thy disciples eate and drinke at their own lustes, ne are not after the syde sorte seen much in prayer. If thou constauntly allowe the holinesse of John, why dooeste thou barte from his institucion and ordeinaunce? Vnto this surmuised chalenge, the Lorde beeanse it touched himself and no man els, aunswered ciuilye and nothing impacientlye, satyng: I dooe not saye that prayyng and fasting are naught: but in these two thynges I dooe in the meane time suffer my disciples to doe as they lust themselues, that I may after an other facion bring them forwarde to more hygher matters of stoutenesse. In those thynges whiche concerne the bodye, and come somewhat nere to the ceremonies of the lawe, my traynyng of them is somewhat with fauour and tentinesse: but in such matters as perteine to the soule, it is a greate waye streighter and sharper. The thynges that ye esteme for the hygheft degree of holinesse, my seruauntes shall of theyr own voluntary willes readilye dooe yf the case shall at any tyme so require. Dooe not ye in the meane time enuy my disciples. The endes of thinges shal shewe whether institucion of John, or me, shall be of more efficacie & vertue. John in hys moste glorying profited hymself, to be a frende of the bridegroomes, & not the bridegroome

selfe. And verily it is not conuenient, that those which doe familiarly remain stil about the bridegrome, and bee conuersaunt with him in the spousal chamber (where reason would, that all thynges should be ful of mirth and iocundnesse) should be compelled to abstinence from eatyng and drinking. They are yet but tendre, and they depende altogether on the bridegrome. And hym shall they not haue anye long tyme emong them. But a tyme shall come, whan they shall be depriued of the spouse. And than beeyng made moze firme and stable, they shall not onely of their own accorde willingly faste: but also to death and into prison shall they be contente to goe, as often as charitie shall earnestelye require it. Fastyng of it selfe, is neyther good nor ill. Therfore they that faste, onely for to faste, doe no greate acte at all: but suche as can accordyng to mine ordinaunce, sette at naught the glory of this worlde, passe nothing on sensuall pleasures, despise eyches, esteme all affections as thynges of nothing, refreine wrath and enuy, beare true louing hertes to theyr yl willers, say well by them that speake euill of them, prayse for suche as doe persecute them, and finallye sette not a peype by theyr lyfe in respecte of sauyng theyr brother: suche will I acknowlage as disciples worthie and meete for me. The presence of my fleshly bodye dooeth for the season make them to bee weake: but whan thys bodye shal bee taken awaye in such wise as they may not haue me whan they would, and whan they shall haue diepely receyued the spirit of the ghospell: then shal they through theyr ygnye giftes of grace within them, bee strong and vnuanquishable. And suche persones as doe put all the prayse of eyghteousnesse in corporall obseruacions, because they truste in theyr owne workes, are founde weake to perceiue those thynges, whiche I prepayre my seruauntes vnto: but whoso mistrustyng theyr owne doinges, sette al theyr defence and sauegarde in the vertuous qualities of the mynd, which vertuous qualities they shal acknowlage to haue receyued of me and no man els, suche men shall no maner aduersitee cause for to quaile. Johns treatuing of his disciples, & my breaking of myne, are of twoo sundrye sortes, because the marke that we shoote at, is not all lyke. These twoo, hys and myne, cannot haue a full mixture made of theim. For he that is wyllyng to be my disciple, muste be altogether spirituall, puttyng no manyer truste at all in thinges corporall, in whiche the eyghteousnesse of the Pharisees dooeth altogether consiste. And therefore I entoyne my disciples not a whit of any such thinges, as haue any affinity with the carnall obseruation of the lawe, leste that, in case I shoulde admitte or suffre but euen neuer so litle, they woulde altogether slyde backe agayn to the same state, that I wil in any wyse haue them to be moste feerthest from. And the Lorde Jesus, to the entente that he would shewe howe greate diuersitye there was betwene John, who trayned hys disciples accordyng to the fyxte smatche of the olde lawe that he had bene nouzeled in from his infancye, and himselfe that by a muche other wate dyd breake his disciples to thynges of moze highet perfection, he put furth a similitude of thys sorte here folowyng.

The dayes will come whan the bridegrome also shall be take away. &c.

No man puttetth a piece of a newe garmente into an old.

There is no man (sayeth he) so folyshe that in case he were mynded to patche up a broken hole of hys olde cote, would bee soe mad to sette in a pece of newe clothe cut with a payer of shiers oute of a newe garmente: whiche thing yf he shoulde doe, there were in it a double incommodity. For fyrst and formost he renteth a newe vesture to patche up an olde: secondarilye the newe clothe standyng in the old garmente, because it agreeth not, wyll not leate eye sifauoured

syght of the patching be bydden. Agayne there is no man so folish, that he will put newe muste into olde bottels to bee kepte: or yf he doe, it will surelye soe come to passe, that the strengthe of the muste boylyng and werzkyng in theim, wil breake the olde bottels in soonder, and so that consequentely folowe a double losse. For bothe the bottels shall perishe, and also the wyne renne out. What is therfore to be doven? Leat there be no mixture made of such thinges as agree not the one with the other. Leat an olde garmente bee botched with olde clothe, and in a newe garmente, leate there not bee any pece of olde clothe put in. Leate also newe muste bee put in newe bottels to bee kepte: soe shall it come to passe, that the bottels shall be saued whole, and the wyne too. I know how heard a thyng it is, to make thissame new and ghostely doctrine of mine, acceptable vnto those, that haue nowe a long time bene enured with the olde. For vneath any thyng dooeth lyke any persone, yf it bee contrarye to that, that he hath long tyme bene accustomed vnto. For at once is he offended at the first tastyng of a thyng that hath not bene in vse with hym. Therfore like as he whiche hath long tyme bene accustomed to drynke olde wine, is not at the first assaiyng delited with new muste, (for he myslyketh the tast that he would haue, and saith that the olde was better, but he sayeth so for none other cause, sauing onely, that he hathe bene vsed to the other:) soe they that haue liued all theyr dayes alonge in the olde trade of the Iewes carnall constitutions, doue at the first tasting of this ghostly doctrine, sterte backe, and desyre to haue their other grosser thinges again, which they haue bene vsed vnto: that is to wete, circumcision, holy dayes, solemne rites of sabbothes, difference of meates, diuersitie of vestures, feastes, Hierusalem, the temple, slayne sacrifices or oblations, washynges, bowes, blinde constitutions of the Pharisies, with other thinges mo, not vnlike vnto these. And these premisses, thei not only requyre to haue again, but also doe preferre theisame, before such thynges as bee a greate deale better and more necessary to be had, which thynges are, an harte circucised from peruerse desyres: a mynde continually keping holy day from all worldly or vngodly applying it selfe: a bysie thoughly quieted from all troublous beraciones or assaultes of euill passions: a spirit abhorryng from the infection of al thinges, which stayneth or defoyleth the puritie of the mynd: a soule enuironed and beleete rounde aboute with feyth, charitye, humilitye, and pureness: an herte euermore temperate and refreinyng from all euilles: a mynde alwayes labourynge to come to his heauenly countrey: a soule euer being a temple and a place of sojournyng for the holy goste: a soule from tyme to tyme offreeryng it selfe an acceptable and a pure sacrifice to God: a soule beyng pure & cleane from al spot of synne through the feith of the ghospell: a soule clene mortified from all thinges that belong to thys worlde, and dedicatyng it selfe altogether vnto godly thynges: a mynde most ready and diligent to obserue such thinges as the doctryne of the ghospell doeth enioyne and require. And the thing that it requireth forsoothe is feithe, the thyng that it enioyneth and commaundeth, is charitie. And thissame is beraply the newe muste of my doctryne, which muste or new wyne, the besselis that haue been vsed to the olde soure turned wyne of Moses law, shall not wel abide: but it requireth new & pure besselis that are through the goostlye giftes of grace, strong inade to endure, & substaūciall sure to holde.

¶ The. vi. Chapter.

¶ It happened on an after principall Sabboth day, that he went through a corne fielde, and his disciples plucked the eares of corne, and did eate, and rubbed them in their hades. The texte.
And certaine of the Phariseis sayde vnto them: Why doe ye that, whiche is not lawefull to do on the sabboth dayes? And Jesus answered them and sayd: haue ye not read what Dauid did, what he himselfe was an hungred, and they which were with hym: how he went into the house of God, and did take, and eate the shewe bread, and gaue also to them that were with him: whiche are not lawful to eate but for the priestes onely? And he sayd vnto them: The sonne of man is Lorde also of the sabboth daie.

Nd beholde, there ensued immediatly, (as God woulde haue it) an occasion whereby it might be playnely made open, what thing was the newe wyne, and whiche were the olde bottels. The high and holy keping of the sabboth daye was olde wine, and charitie being euer ready by all occasions to helpe our neighboure, is newe wyne. So it happened therfore on a certayne Sabboth day, whiche the Jewes did call a sabboth secound first, or secounde principal (because that falling betwene two other sabbathes, it semed to haue a double holynesse, and solemnitie, the one because it was thede of the sabboth afore goyng, and the other because it was the begynnyng of the sabboth nexte to folowe) it happened that on such a sabboth day, Jesus goyng on hys waye, passed through a fielde of corne. And so his disciples beeing (as it fortuned) an houngred, had pulled a fewe eares of the corne and also rubbed them in their handes, and eate the grayne. This was a kinde of ealemente that euerye bodye might and woulde commonly take, if houngre were so sore vpon them, that they muste nedes eate somewhat. In whiche cale breatly whereas the charitie of the gospell woulde of it owne accorde haue geuen some lustenaunce vnto them beyng houngrie: the Phariseis beeyng olde bottels require in the the sower perdured wine of the olde superstiction, saying: Why doe ye this geare, whiche it is agaynst al gods forbode to do on the sabboth dayes? Here the Lord once agayn playing the aduocate for his disciples, answerred: Ye that profelle the high knowlage of the lawe, haue ye not at leste read that poynete, what Dauid did in a like cale, whan he & all hys coumpany were an houngrie, like as ye se my disciples here houngrie now? Dauid woulde not only haue auentured in the extremitie of hungre to haue done that my disciples now dor: but being a manne of the latter he entred into the temple of God, nor was any thing afeatde to eate the consecrate loaues, (whiche they called, panes propositionis, that is to saye, the loaues of proposicyon, or of shewyng foorthe,) whiche loaues to eate was by a playne ordynaunce leefull to the prielles onely, and to none other persone. And yet did he not onely auenture to eate that bread himselfe alone, but of the selselame loaues he fed al his coumpany too, nothing moued neither with the reuerence of the temple, ne with the streighte commaundement of the lawe, forbidding any persone to doe so muche as touche the same loaues, sauing onely the prieltes, yea, and that thing might the prieltes selues doe so long and no longer, as they remaynyng in the temple, did execute & minister the sacres there. No nor the prieste neither did any thing sauce or sticke to deliuer vnto Dauid those same holye loaues: as one verayly which well vnderstode, that suche streight obseruaunces were not first ordeyned for the destruction of men, but for theyr preseruacion: and therfore to ceasse and lese their force, as often as any certayne greatter cause of vrgente necessitie doeth so require. And whan the Lorde Jesus had at large declared manye thinges concerning this matter, at last he knit vp his talke with this sentence.

The sonne of man is lorde also of the sabboth daye.

Take ye this for a matter of certaintie, that the sonne of man, who is the lorde of all thinges, is lorde of the sabboth too. For he that was the first le maker of the sabboth, hath power to abrogate the same sabbothe. And he that is come to geue health vnto al creatures, is not letted from his office for the reuerence of the sabboth.

The texte.

¶ And it fortuned in an other sabboth also, that he entred into the synagogue and taught. And there was a man, whose right hand was dryed vp. And the Scribes & Pharises watched him whether he would heale on the sabboth daye, that they myghte fynde howe to accuse him. But he knew theyr thoughtes, and sayd to the man which had the withered handerise vp and stande forth in the middes. And he arose and stode forth. Then sayed Jesus vnto them: I will aske you a question, whether is it lawfull on the sabboth dayes to doe good, or to doe euill: to saue ones life or destroy it? And he beheld them all a compace, and sayd vnto the man: Stretche forth thy hande. And he did so: and his hand was restored againe as whole as the other. And they were filled with madnesse, and commoned together emong themselues, what they might doe to Jesus.

There ensued shortely after, an other exaumple also, howe greatlye olde bottels can not abyde it we muste of the libertie of the ghospell. For it happened, that on a certayne other sabboth day, he entred into the sinagogue, as his custome was to doe, and there taughte. And as for thys thyng, the Pharises could soso away withall, because it was a thyng both of the comon vsage, and also of the prescription of the law. But there was presente in the same place emong manye moe, a certayne miserable creature much to bee pitied, carrying about with him all dryed vp and cleane wasted, the same hande, with the helpe and labour wherof, he had bene wont to fynde both himselfe & his children in such wise as it had bene better not to haue had the hand, than to be loden with the bearing of it, whan it was dead. And al the while the Scribes and Pharises, whose parte and duetie it had bene to haue take compassyon on the man, and to haue spoken vnto Jesus for the healing of him, sayd neuer a word, but stode watching of him, whether he wolde restore the felowes hande, whole again vnto him: for they knewe the mercyfulnesse of the lorde euery where reside to helpe all creatures. And therfore sought they an occasion to surmuse some false matter against him of breaking the holy sabboth, if he had on such a day restored vnto this wofull creature hys hande againe, on whiche sabboth the lawe had forbidden to doe any worke or labour. But Jesus not vnknowyng what matter the Scribes and Pharisels dyd thynke and talke within themselues, speaketh vnto the man that had the dead lame hande, and to the entente that he might plainly bee seene of all the coumpaignye, he commaunded him to arise and to come forthe into the middes of all the people there. But the parte, that ye maye at the firste worde perceyue that he was one meanyng the benefite of Jesus dooyng, as an obediente persone arose: and in sighte of all the presence stode euen still, shewing out there before them all the syghte of his extreme misshap. Here Jesus turnyng hymselfe to the Scribes and Pharisers, did not discouer the malicious imaginations of the same vnto the people, but by demaunding a question touched and hit theyr conscience throughly home, saying: I would with all my hearte learne of you that professe the knowlage

knowlage of the lawe, whether it bee lefull to helpe the neighboure with dooyng him a good turne on the sabboth daye: or elles to leaue the neyghboure destitute of succour in his woe and distresse, whoe a man is able to helpe. And whether is it lawfull to saue a mans lyfe on the sabboth daye, or els to casle awaye the same? For he playnely casteth away an other mans lyfe, that whan it lyeth in his power to saue it, doeth not saue it. And when the lorde had caste his eyes rounde about, and no man there was, that would make any answere he sayd vnto the man, holde furth thy hand. And immediatly he stretched furth his hande at libertie, whiche afore was lame, and thei wonnen together, and in such case that it could not stiere a whit. So great was the vertue and power of Jesus bidding him to stretche it furth. What should the Scribes and Phariseis in this case doe? The miracle was more euident, then that it could bee denyed: and verey common reason did allow, that a godly thing it was at any manyer tyme to helpe to the preseruacion of men: but hauing been long accustomed to the olde soureswig of Moses lawe, they could not awaye with the muse of euangelicall charitie. Wheras of these actes they ought bee bounde to acknowlage the power of the Godhead, and to acknowlage the autour and sirste maker of the lawe: they are turned into starke staring madnesse. And now euen out of hande, they enter a counsayll emong themselues of commyttyng murder, what way they might destruie Jesus & bring him to his death. This was with those ioyly captaynes of religion a thing lawfull to dooe on the sabboth day, wheras to the same it was a mattier of conscience to geue helth to a man being in extreme miserie on the Sabboth daie.

And it fortuned in those daies, that he went out into a mountaine for to prayer, and continued all night in prayer to god. And assoone as it was daye, he called his disciples, and of them he chose twelue whome also he called Apostles. Simon whom he also named Peter, and Andrew his brother, James, and John, Philip and Bartholomewe, Matthewe and Thomas, James the sonne of Alpheus, and Simon whiche is called Zelotes, and Judas James sonne, and Judas Iscariorth, the same that was the traytour. The text.

The lorde Jesus ofte sons departing from the cities and from the greate resorte of people, sequestred himselfe, and went vnto a mountayne to pray and all the same night did he passe ouer in deuoutly praying vnto god: teaching vs a lesson thereby, in case we shall bee willyng to beginne any thyng, whiche we woulde fayne haue to be luckie and prosperouse in the proceding of it that we than beginne of making our earneste prayer, that it maye please God handesomelye and fauourably to sende the good ayde of his spirite vnto the thinges that we goe about to enter. And whan it was vpon day lighte, he called vnto him his disciples, whome he had now as perpetual companyons & witnesses of those thinges whiche he wrought. Out of them he picked out a certayne noũber of special persons, whome for this only cõsideracio he named apostles, because he entended to send them abrode hozelye after as ambassadoures of the gospel throughout all the worlde, and they: office to be nothing els to do, but what they had in commission frõ him. The names of the said Apostles are these, first Symon, who afterwarde had his name geuen him in the Sirians tongue, and was called Cephas, in Greke petros, in Latine saxum, in Englyth a stone: & for none other cause berayly, but for his sound & constant professiõ, by the which, whã the people were in a wauering & mãmering what he was, Peter being as the voyce of all thapostles together, pronoũced the sentence, that Jesus was ỹ sõne of the liuing god.) Vnto Peter was Andrew his own brother associate as a felowe. Then James and John: Philip and Bartholemewe: Hathewe and Thomas: James the sonne of Alpheꝰ, and Simon surnamed zelotes: Judas, the sonne of James, and Judas Iscariothe who afterward betrayed Jesus, whome Jesus chose not vnaduisedly, as one that wist not what he did, but by prouydence, to the entente that he woulde by example of this Judas, teache all creatures, what an horrible matter it is, to abuse the fauourable goodnesse of oure saluiour towarde vs. Yea, and in all the whole noumber of the Apostles was there not so muche as any one, that was a man eyther of power, or of rychesse, or of learnyng, not one that was eyther a Pharisee, or a Scribe, or a bishop. He picked them out vnlearned and rawe or grene in cunning euerye one of them, to the ende and purpose, that he might poure newe wyne into newe bottels

The texte. And he came downe with them, and stode in the plaine fielde, and the compaignye of his disciples, and a great multitude of people (out of all Jewrie and Hierusalem, and from the sea coaste of Tyre and Sydon) whiche came to heare hym and to bee healed of theyr diseases, and they that were vexed with foule spirites, and they were healed. And all the people preased to touche hym, for there went vertue out of hym, and healed them all.

These Apostles thus chosen vnto hym, he came downe from the mountayne vntil he were come into a certayn plaine that was able to receiue a great multitude of people. For suche thynges as requite puryte of moste perfection, are to be doone in the mountayne. Emong thynges of moste hyghe perfection, deuoute prayer hath the firste place: the next place hath the special chosing out of them, to whome the dispensacion and stewarding of goddes worde is to be committed. There were presente also the residue of his disciples, and a verye great noumber of all sortes of the people besides, which had come thither out of all Jewry, yea, and from Hierusalem selfe too, and also from the cities of Tyrus and Sydon lying on the sea coast: For the hounger of hearing the gospell preached, had drawen thither many folkes euen out of ferre parties, and many the hope to receiue bodely health had semblably allured. For euery one that came, Jesus deliuered from all kindes of diseases or impedymentes that they were holden with. Yea and they also whiche were vexed of vncleane spirites, were made whole. And all this geare was doen of hym so lightly and so easily, that some with a mere woorde of bidding were restored to theyr helth, and others he healed in a moment sodainly, with the onely touching of his garmente that he ware. For there was in him the fountayn and fulnesse of the effectual vertue and power of God, which proceded from hym, none otherwise then light doth from the sonne, or heate from the fyer: and so brought he health vnto all persones: for a saluiour he was, and was come into the worlde, for the perfecte healyng of all creatures.

Which came to heare hym.

The texte. And he lifted vp his eyes vpon the disciples, and sayde: blissed be ye poore, for youres is the kingdome of God.

Than immediatly vpon this he begoonne to shewe furth some new muste of the doctrine of the ghospell, wherunto he had specially chosen out a certayn number of a sumwhat more stedfast and sure sorte, as new bottels to receiue and holde it. Blissed are ye (sayeth Jesus) that haue no spice of proude hert, but rather do mislike your selfes. For although to the worldward ye seme to bee persons abiect and to be refused of all companies: yet is the kingdome of god youres, whiche is by a greate odde higher in honour and royaltie, than all the kingdomes of this worlde. Ye see diseases to be driuen away, deuils to flee out of men, sinnes to be clene abolished. What hath any regal estate of this worlde to be compared with this heauenly hypocrisie? Is it not a kyngdome of hygh regalitie, to be thrall to no vice, to bee cloggued with no inordinate desires, to haue troden vnder feete the deuill and all hys armie, to haue ouercomed the worlde withal the terrours, and also the flattering enticementes belonging to the same, to be men called and taken to the familiaritie, & very brotherhood of God, and to bee registred emong the inheritours of the kyngdome of heauen.

Blessed are ye that hounger now: for ye shal bee satisfyed.

The texte.

Blissed are ye, who being now men in powertie and penurie, doe liue in houngre and thirste, and being contented with spare repastes, doe despise the richesse and the excessiue fare of thys worlde, and the houngre that ye haue is for meate of the soule, whiche is the woorde of god, and your thirste is for the liuely water of the spirite of the ghospel: for ye shall be allured to be satyated and filled with these restoratiue delicates whiche ye are so faine to haue.

Blissed are ye that wepe now, for ye shall laugh.

The texte.

Blissed are ye, whiche haue of your owne myndes and willes exempted and depriued your selfes of all sensuall voluptuousnesse of this worlde, for the earnest readineg of euangelicall deuotion: and sette more by suche thinges as by meane of temporal affliccions endurying but a whyle, doe bryng men vnto the ioyes of life euerlastyng. For the tyme shal come, whan all thynges being clene chaunged to a contrarie course, your sorowe shal be turned into ioye, and your mournyng into laughter.

Blissed shall ye bee whan men hate you, and shunne you out of their coumpaignie, and cast you, and abhorre your name as an euill thyng, for the soonne of mannes sake. Reioyce ye in that daie, and bee glad: for beholde, your rewarde is great in heauen. For thus did their fathers vnto the prophetes.

The texte.

The moste parte of the people doe calle suche men happie and fortunate, vnto whome the people shewerth tokens of high fauour, and lykewyse them that are aduaunced to honours: and suche throughe glorious titles are muche renowned. But ye on my woorde and warrantyse, shall bee blissed, whan men shall haue you in derision: whan they shall cast you out of their coumpaignies as persones to bee detested and abhorred: whan they shall speake manye sore woordes of reproche and vilanie against you for my sake: whan they shal earnestly endeuour and labour either vttrely to abolishe your name and memorie for euer, or els to make it detestable vnto all that shal come after, and that not for any faulte of youres, but for the hatred of the soonne of man, whose doctrine and glorye ye shall be preachers of. But doe ye neuer the more therefore vnto you, and reioyce ye. For if the fauour of ciuill men shall not doe by you according to your deserres, yet a plentifouse rewarde for your well doynges abydeth you in heauen. It shall not lye in the power of men to abolishe the names of you, whiche bee written in heauen: it shall not lye in them with theyr woordes of reproche or despite, to appale or darken youre glorye, whiche shal for euermore be coupled with my glorye. Nate contrariewyse, the more that they shall persecute your name and fame, so muche the more shall they make it renowned. For to bee misliked of the vngodly, is the highest prayse and commendacion that may be. Nor ye shal not be the first that haue bene thus vsed. For excellent vertue hath euermore bene hated of ciuill persones. As that men of this present time shal now do against you, the selfesame thing haue their forefathers dooen in tymes paste agaynste the holy prophetes, for none other respecte, but because the same Prophetes accordyng to the will of God, dyd not holde theyr tongues from speakyng the trueth, which truerly hath to them disposed persons bene euermore odiouse. By example of the sayd prophetes shal ye comforte your selues. For whose names they attempted vtterly to abolish, the memory of the same is now high and holy with al creatures. Yet neuerthelesse ye beyng in assured counfortе through your innocencie and perfect good liuing, must haue no mynde ne thoughte to auenge your owne cause. For they shalbe assured not to estape without smarte in the ende, for that they shall doe vnto you, though for a season they seeme fortunate, and flourishyng rufflers in all pleasure and welth of thys worlde. For suche are differred and reserued to tormentes whiche neuer shall haue ende.

The texte. But woe vnto you that are riche: For ye haue your consolacion.

And therfore woe vnto you ryche cobbes, the whiche while ye may, doo solace & delite your mindes, with the treasoures, honoures, & delectable enticementes of this worlde, and doo not remember ne thynke, that it will erelong come to passe, that this vayne felicitie and pleasaunce shall be taken away from you, and after the same shall ensue woefulnesse and sorowe neuer to haue ende.

The texte. Woe vnto you that are full: for ye shall houngre.

Woe vnto you, whiche nowe in this worlde hauing mynde on nothing but your bealies, plaie the gluttons, and take excesse of all delicate meates and drinkes, more to pampre vp the bodie in lustе, then for the necessitie of nature, as though ye were borne to beastly feedyng onely, and to nothyng els, and as though ye rather mayntayned your lyfe of purpose to eate and drinke, then eate and drinke to mayntayne lyfe: and beyng full pounched with gorge vpon gorge, haue no mynde to relieue your poore brethren perishing for hunger, as though ye were borne to feede none but your own selues, and were not bounde to relieue the necessitie of your neighbour. Woe vnto you, for whan both these corporal meates and drinkes wherwith ye so delicately and voluptuously fede your selues, yea and the beaste too which gourmaudeth shalbe consumed, than shall ye be houngrie and fynde no relefe. Than shall ye wishe that ye might be so happie as to haue but one of the lytle crummes that falleth from the table of God: than shall ye wishe that ye might haue but one droppe of water caste vpon your tongue to coole your mouthe, whan ye shall lye in burning heate of fyer inquencheable. Then shall ye wyshe that ye had in this lyfe houngred the ryghteousenesse of God, whan ye shal se the litle poore ones plenteously saciate with the aboundaunce of al felicitie and glory in heauen, whome in this worlde ye accounted miserable: and so muche the more despised, because ye saw them in penurie and houngre destitute of al relefe and counfort, and lacking foode and sustenaunce necessarie for the bodye

The texte. Woe vnto you that nowe laugh: For ye shall waille and wepe.

Woe vnto you that doe now make much good mirth and laughing, as folkes pleased euen to youre owne mindes with the prosperous luckinesse of thinges transitorie, and as men made dronken with sweete fortune: for within a litle shorte space, all thinges turned contrarie: ye shall wayle and wepe, and youre pleasaunce that lasted but a moment, shalbe turned into peyne and torment for euer to endure.

Woe vnto you when all men prayse you: for so dyd their fathers to the false prophetes. The texte.

Take ye no high conceyte ne pryde in your selues, whan the world vpon a counterfeicte likenesse of being happie and fortunate, doe eyther in woordes or by any other tokens shewe themselues to reioyse on your behalfes, as persons not knowing what true felicitie and vnfelicitie is, whan they highly extolle and prayse the thinges, which are abominably and wickedly doe of you, geuyng vnto vnlawfull persecutyng of the truethe of the ghospell, the name of syre to warders the lawe, the affliccion also and slaughter of good men, they call deuout seruice doen vnto god. This same most false prayse shal not deliuer you from the vengeaunce of god, but shall make you worthie of double grieuous punishemente, for that ye haue not onely not bene ashamed of dooyng manye wicked dedes of mischiefe, but also haue sought laude and prayse for your euil doynges. And they that shall prayse your wicked doynges, the forefathers of the same persons did in lyke manier shewe muche tokens of hygh fauoure long agone to the false prophetes that rebelled agaynste the prophetes of the lorde, and vtterly stirred vp aswel the princes as the people to the sleaghing of the same. But the prophetes of the lorde did not seke to haue vengeaūce against their persecutours: and yet neyther haue the godlye lacked their condigne reward, nor the wicked shall lacke their punishmente according. And ouer late shall it than bee for suche to repent their extreme hainous offences, as at this present doe nothyng regarde the greet of better aduertisement. haue GOD a rewarder of the same. In hys handes leat the care of al bothe vemayne. Bee thou prompte and readye to geue, if any body shall desyre any thyng of thee: for by suche meanes is mutuall loue of one to an other purchased, and knitte together. That if any persone take awaye from thee any thyng of thyne eyther by fraude or by strong hande, leatte hym rather haue it, then thou to come to make brife or bulnesse for it. Better it is for one to lese his money, his house, or any piece of his lande: then for recouerynge of these thynges, wilfully to forsake better. And in any wise leat all false guile bee awaye from all youre lyfe: but what euerye one wouldе with hys good will haue doone of others towardes hymselfe, if the case shoulde so require, thesame leat hym doe towardes his neyghboure: and what he wouldе not with his good will haue doen to himselfe, the same leat hym not labour to doe agaynst another: For that is to loue the neighboure as one loueth himselfe.

Geue to euerye man that alketh of thee.

The texte. ¶ And if ye loue them that loue you, what thanke haue ye? for sinners also loue their louers. And yf ye doe good for them whiche dooe good for you, what thanke haue ye? for sinners also do euen thesame. And if ye lende to them of whome ye hope to receiue, what thanke haue ye? for sinners also lende to sinners, to receiue such like agayn. But loue youre enemies, and doe good, & lende, loking for nothing again, and youre rewarde shal be greate, and ye shall bee the children of the highest. For he is kynde to the unkynde and to the euil. Bee ye therefore mercifull, as youre father also is mercifull.

Euerie bodie is dere frende to himselfe, and doeth not require of himselfe any rewarde of his loue. Leat therfore the charitee and tendre loue towardes the neighbour also, be playnely without fraude or guile, and franke without hauing ye vnto mennes desertes: ready to dooe good as oft as nede shall bee, not for any respect of rewarde to growe or come vnto thee agayne therby: but for this only cause, that he is thy neighbour, although he bee one that will neuer make thee any emendes for it, nio not yet accordingly doe his parte in louing thee agayne as thou doest him. As for the rewarde both of youre loue and of youre benefite, truste for it at Goddes handes onely. For if ye loue no moe nor other but them that loue you, what piece of rewarde will ye require at Goddes hāde? youre loue is with ꝑ loue of others fully requited alreadie. Whoso loueth again, an other that loueth him, and would not loue the same onlesse he were loued of hym, suche an one is ferre from euangelycall charitie, the which embraceth as wel ꝑ enemies as the frendes. And suche an one as loueth again, an other that loueth hym, what great high acte doeth he, or what acte mete for the high dignitie of the gospel? dooe not they that are louers of this world, and others wyse also sinners, yet neuertheleste by the verai ledyng of nature make muche of one that maketh muche of theim, & turne their face from him, that dooeth not his parte agayn in mutuall loue towardes theim? And in case ye doo benefite vnto those that haue been beneficiall to you afore, what piece of rewarde shal bee due to you? This is no suche beneficiall dooyng as the ghospell requireth, but it is a choppyng and chaungeyng of benefites one for an other. For as well suche as bee sinners, as also ferre out of the waye from the high perfection of profeslyng the ghospell, dooe by the ledyng of nature, recompence a benefite that hath beene dooen them, and crye out vpon vnthankefulnesse as a thyng detestable. Not to dooe these thinges therefore, is the thankefullest thyng that may be: to dooe them is no matter at all of any greate prayse or thanke. Moreouer in case ye lende moneye to suche menne, of whome whome ye bertyly truste to receiue agayne al your owne pinch pall that ye lent, what acte doe ye wooꝛthie oꝛ leming foꝛ the lively herre of the ghospell: dooe not the eiuil persons enterchaungeably lende one to an other, and receiue theyꝛ due sumes agayne. It is but a common poynete of pleasure doying, that euery lacke bleth, to dooe an other mans commoditie at a time, to the ende that the like commoditie may be dooen to thee agayne. It is not a pleasure of the pure loꝛte, that is doen to an other vpon hope of theyꝛ like pleasure to come home a-gayn. If thy neyghbour lacke and desyze thy helpe, and requireth money in the waye of lone, deliuerit him, yea, although there be no hope at all that the money shall bee repayed thee: but deliuer it with suche a mynde, that in case he repaye it not, thou canste bee content he haue it of thy free gyfte, and not of lone. Let al well your loue as also your beneficialnesse bee bothe franke & free. Beare ye good herts euen to suche persons, also, as are ill willers to you, doe ye benefites vnto suche, as eyther will not dooe you benefite agayn, oꝛels will requite a benefite with a shrewed turne.

And if ye lende to them of whome ye hope to receiue. &c.

Lende also with suche a mynde, that although there shall neuer come any parte therof to thy handes agayne, yet thou haue a ioye and delyte to succoure thy neyghbour. Neyther is there any daungyer, lest ye foꝛ your parte shal lese your rewarde. Foꝛ how muche the lesser rewarde shall be eyther recompensed oꝛels hoped foꝛ at the handes of men, so much the moze plenteous and aboun-daunte rewarde will God repaye vnto you. And so doying the highest will ac-knowlage you as his chyldren of the right marke: yf ye shall to your powers folowe hys manier of goodnesse. Foꝛ he is of his nature so beneficial a Lorde, that like great liberalitie he bestoweth, not onely vpon the good, but also vpon the euill. Foꝛ vnto euery one dooeth he geue lyke: yea and besydes this, bothe heauen and yearthe hath he fournished with so manye ornamentes, so manye sundry kindes of richesse, with so many commodities foꝛ the vse and seruice of the wicked too: prouoking the euill by his fauourable mercifulnes, and also by his bountifull liberalitie, foꝛ to amende: and stering vp the good vn-to thankes geuing.

This large beneficialnesse of your father, and the same to all creatures at all times open, your duetie is lyke kindely children, so to resemble and shewe in your selues: that accoꝛding to his ensaumple, as muche as in you is, ye ee-uelleye studie by all meanes to dooe good vnto all persones, as well to the good, that they maye bee made better, as also to the euil, that by youre gentle meknesse they may be prouoked and stered to honester wayes. If God, who is priuie to all mennes hearres, yet neuertheless of the infinyte goodnesse of his nature, is so beneficiall to warde beraye manye vnwoꝛthye creatures, in whome he perfectly knoweth that his largesse shall bee loste and caste away: how muche moze is it requisite foꝛ you to dooe the same, foꝛ as muche as it is often seasons a thing to you vnknowen, whether the parties that are holpen with a beneficiall good turne, bee woꝛthye oꝛ vnwoꝛthye, and the ende what it maye come to vs vncertayne. Foꝛ many times it chanceth, that those whiche at the first apparence seme naughte, are good and honeste: and agayne that they whiche at this presente are very naughtie men in dede, dooe righte shoꝛtely after turne to a better mynde. And true it is that euery creature shall fynde God suche an one to wardes him, as he shall haue shewed and bred him-selfe to wardes his neighbour.

The texte. Judge not, and ye shal not bee iudged: condemne not, and ye shall not bee condemned: forgeue, and you shalbee forgeuen: geue and it shalbee geuen vnto you, good measure and pressed downe, and shaken together, and running ouer, shall men geue into your bosomes. For with the same measure that ye meate withall, shall other men meate to you agayne.

Thys also foloweth that folowith is a poynete of christian mylderesse, and also of plainnesse vncounterfeict, that ye enterprete and construe in the better parte, all the sayinges and dooynges of your neighboure, as many as maye bee doubtefull of what minde they are dooen. For an yrette that is pure from all corruption, is alwayes more enclined to thinke the best, then to mistrust or deme euill. If for in manifeste naughtye thynges (of which sorte are these, slaunderous backebiting, filthye talke of ribaudrie, open robberie, and aduoutrie it shalbe of youre goodnesse to remedie and cure the faultes as muche as in you doeth lye: but the mennes selfes neyther to hate, nor to take vengeaunce on them. Judge ye therefore no man: so shall it come to passe, that ye shall not agayne bee iudged youreselues. Condemne ye no man so shal it come to passe, that ye shall not agayne on youre owne partes bee condemned. Forgeue ye in case any offence or trespace hath bene doen agaynst you: and God shall again on hys partie forgeue your sinnes vnto you.

Geue and it shalbe geuen vnto you

Bee ye liberall and beneficiall towardes youre neyghbour, and the good turne that ye dooe, shall returne to you agayne with a baumtage and encrease. For there shal be poured in your lappes backe againe a good measure, a measure wrinkfull, a measure turned and shaken together curry where, that all the lappe maye be full, and no corner there of emptie or voyde, and a measure that shall runne ouer the sides for fulnesse, although no recompence at all of the good turne that ye haue doen, shal returne to you agayn at the handes of men.

For with the same measure, &c

For after the selfesame measure with the whiche ye shall haue measured your liberalitie towardes your neighboure, after the same measure shal the reward be returned home to you agayn at Goddes hande. If ye haue bene pynching & niggishe towardes your neighboure, of the same sorte shall ye feele yourereward agayn to bee.

The texte. And he putte foorth a similitude vnto them. Can the blinde lede the blynde? dooe they not bothe falle into the dieke? The disciple is not aboue hys master, euerie man shall be perfecte, euen as his master is. Why seest thou a mote in thy brothers eye, but considereth not the beame that is in thyne owne eye? Either how canst thou saie to thy brother: Brother let me pull out the mote that is in thyne eye, whan thou seest not the beame that is in thine owne eye? Thou hypocrite, caste out the beame that is in thyne owne eye first, then shalt thou see perfectly to pull out the mote that is in thy brothers eye.

And to the ende that the Lorde Jesus woulde the better empriente the premisses in the heartes of his disciples, he added moreouer this similitude or parable. Can a blynde manne bee guyde to an other that is blynde? That if he assaye the mattier, dooeth it not come to passe that bothe fall into the pitte? Requisyte it is that he bee pure hymselfe from all manyer cryme, whiche will take vpon hym to leade an other the righte waye of innocencie. How shall one teache an other man what is to bee dooen, if himselfe be faste entangled in errour, and bee clene out of the waye? But it is an harde thyng (ye will saye) thoughlye to endure the obstynate malice of some persones. Why are ye agrieued to endure, that I my selfe dooe endure? Is it reason that the disciples state or case bee better then the state of hys maister? He shall bee in perfeicte feicte good case enough, if he bee made felowe to hys maister. And why doest thou shew thy self an beaute iudge, not of indifferent equitie against thy neighbour, being thine owne selfe entangled with more grieuous ciuilis of vice and sinne: why dooe thyne iyes serue thee so well to see an other bodyes faultes, whan at thyne own manifolde naughtinesse thou art starke blinde: why doest thou espye a lytle mote in the iye of thy brother, and doest not consider a whole blocke that is in thyne owne iye: And with what face maiestie thou bee hable to saye to thy brother: brother suffer me to take out a mote out of youre iye, whan thou seest not a whole beame that is fast in thine owne: True goodnesse being a more merciful iudge vpō others, doeth of a more sharper sorte chastice it selfe: and contrariewise, counterfeict holinesse seketh to geat it selfe an opinion of perfection by this meanes: it winking at the great transgression of it owne selfe, it dooe with all extreme rigoure and sharpenesse, make an open rayling vpon the small lyght trippes of others committed onely of humayne frayltee. Doest thou condemne thy brother for his meate or drinke, and thine owne selfe with all thy power artes worckyng confusion and destruccyon to thy brother? heare thou, O false counterfaictour of righteousnesse. If thou wilt be truely righteouse in dede, first of al cast out the great beame out of thine own iye, and than if thou shalt to thinke good, thou shalte see all about how to take out the leaste mote out of thy brothers iye. Now after a peruerse kynde of iudgemente (as it were, setting the cart before the horses) thou flatterest & pleasest thy selfe in thyne owne good qualities, as though they were syngulat, and at an other mannes thou makeste muche tusshyng. and many exceptyons: at thyne owne ciuil propertyes thou arte fauourable and slacke of punyshmente, at an other mannes faultes all cruell and full of rigour.

Why seest thou a mote in thy brothers iye? &c.

Thou hypocrite, cast out the beame that is in thyne owne iye first, &c.

¶ For it is not a good tree that bringeth furth ciuill fruicte, neyther is that an ciuill tree, that bringeth furthe good fruicte. For euery tree is knowen by hys fruicte. For of thornes doe not men gather figges, nor of bushes gather they grapes. A good man out of the good treasure of his herte, bringeth furth that whiche is good. And an ciuil man, out of the ciuil treasoure of his hearte, bringeth foorth that whiche is ciuill. For of the aboundaunce of the herte his mouthe speaketh.

The texte.

Why doe ye presumptcously take vnto you a laude and prayse of suche thynges, as may bee indifferentely common as well to good menne as to ciuill? Neyther the habite or vesture, neyther meate, nor long beeyng in prayers, nor brode borders about the garmentes with holye scriptures in them, dooe declare a man to be good. For a tree is estemed, not of the leaues that it beareth, but of the fruicte, and the fruicte taketh his sape and iuice of the roote, whiche sape or iuice if it bee bitter, than cannot the tree bring foorthe fruicte of a sweete relice. And agayne if the sape bee good, than cannot the tree bryng furth fruicte of any other sorte, then agreable to his sape that it is fedde withall. The leaues and the ryndе are sensyble to the iye and beguyle a bodye: but the sape and the roote are not seene. If the hearte bee corrupte, ciuil it is whatsoeuer proceedeth out from the same: if it bee sincere and pure, than pure it is also whatsoeuer springeth therhens.

Euery tree hath fruicte cummyng of it, whiche fruicte it cannot hyde though it would. For neyther is the figge gathered of the hawethorne trees, nor of the bryere dooe folkes gather grapes. Good it is whatsoeuer a good man dooeth, whatsoeuer he eateth, whatsoeuer habite or vesture he goeeth in, or whatsoeuer he doeth of all such thynges as of them selues are neyther good nor euill, but haue rather a certain shewe and pretense of godlynes then true goodlynesse in verai dede. Eateth a good man wel he dooeth: eateth he not wel he dooeth: for bothe dooe proceede from a good affeccion of the herte. A gayne euill it is whatsoeuer an euill persone dooeth, because it proceedethe from a corrupt herte: Howsoeuer he bee clothed, whether he faste, or whether he eate, whether he pray, or whether he pray not. And will ye know the fruictes of an euangelical tree, whose roote the moste swete sape of fayethe and charitie hath filled and replenished? Such an one loueth all folkes: he hateth no creature: he willeth well euen to his veray enemies: so frre is he from dooyng wrong to any person, that he wisheth wel to them of whome he is accused and wisheth to the deuill: He prayeth for the long lyfe and healthe of them, by whome he is accused falsely: he earnestlye myndeth the preseruyng and sauing euen of those, by whome himselfe is killed: he earnestly bendeth and applieth himselfe to doe good to all menne, looking for rewarde at Gods hande onely: he demeth euill of no persone: whatsoeuer is indifferente to both partes, he enterpreteth and taketh to the better: he is a condemner of no man: but for his owne parte reserueth nothyng the iudgemente to God, he onelye setteth hys myndе to dooe all menne good.

The wicked he suffereth, to the entent that they may emende. The neighboure strayghte out of the right waye and dooyng amisse, he louingly warneth and teacheth of his faulte. If one trespasse againste him, he forgeueth with his hearte, and beareth not the offence in myndе. If thou shalte any where see suche fruictes as these: know thou it to be an euangelicall tree because it hath fruicte semyng for the ghospell. Now take also the markes whereby to knowe the fruictes of a tree whose roote is infected with the bitter sape of Pharisaicall pride, of enuie, and of couetise. Such an one willeth wel to no man, sauing to himselfe only: he loueth any frendes, but for his owne sake: his owne glory he setteth before the glory of God: of any displeasure or wrong he will be auenged: yea and will dooe wrong to other of hys owne offre: he taketh a conceyppe and a pryde in himselfe euen of hys naughtie dooynges too: the well dooynges of other men he will slaunderously reproue and tynde faulte withal: He taketh wayes for his owne singular commodities with the hurte and damage of his neighboures: his woordes are euermore disagreeable with hys herte: he neither trusteth god, ne loueth his neighboure: Of himselfe he maketh bauntes, others he condemneth and sayeth to bee naughte: he flattereth himselfe that he doeth well in all thynges, and vpon hys brother dooyng neuer so litle amisse, he is a iudge without mercye.

And whereas he produceth suche fruictes as these, yet in leaues and tynde he beareth a counterfayte lykenesse of a good tree. He goeth walking vp and down in his habite garded or hemmed with his brode phylacteries: he washeth euerie other while: he resteth on the sabboth daye: he busseyeth from talkyng with Publicans, but he geueth diligent attendaunce on great riche widowes: towardes the selie poore creature a fierce cruel tyrane, towardes the riche cobbes a plain flatterer. He fasteth ofte, but that is in the face of the world abrode: at home playeth he the glutton and onely seeketh his bealye. In his prayers he is long and long agayne: the lawe, the temple, and God, he hath alwayes in his his mouthe: but at any occasion out it brasteth that laie hidden in the herte, in whiche is layed vp the treasour of mennes good propecties, and of their euil also. So than as often as any case dooeth earne thye pricke hym, than dooeth that same outward shewe of cloked holynesse vanishe awaye, and than cometh it furth and sheweth it selfe that hath lyen diepely hidden in the botome of the heacte. A wrong or a displeasure is laied in his waye: he is grieuously reuiled without deserte: he is haled into the prieson: he is spoiled of all his goodes: in these cases, doeth the good man out of the good treasour of his heatte, shewe furth goodnesse. For he payeth not home one displeasure with an other lozer displeasure agayne: but eyther sufferreth it, or elles recompenseth a displeasure dooen vnto him, yea euen with a beneficiall good turne. To one that reuyleth him, he aunswereth with mylde and quyete woordes agayn: beyng haled into prieson he geueth thankes to God: the losse of dignitie or promocions he receiueth with ioye. But clene contrarie to all the premisses, the sayde Pharisaicall tree, at any occasion that is offered, sheweth furth fruictes of a ferre contrarie sorte to the others.

Why calle ye me Lorde, Lorde, and dooe not as I bidde you? The texte.

God cannot by any meanes bee decepued with one thing for an other, forasmuche as he throughly seeth the diepeste corners and the bottome of the herte within. Neyther is he any thing at all moued with the respect or regarde of bodelye and outwarde ceremonies, whiche dooe oftentimes deceiue menne through the counterfaict semblaunce of holinesse. They geue a man glozyous parnetred woordes, and secretlye doe theyr vttermoste power to bring him to open shame. For to what purpose seueth it, that ye speake to me in the waye of doing me honour, making at euerie other word a solemne repeating of this name lorde, lorde, or maister, maister: when ye nothyng regarde those thinges whiche I commaunde and enioyne vnto you. If ye acknowleage me for your lorde and maister, than see that ye bee obediente dooers of my biddinges: yf ye dooe not so acknowleage me, what meaneth that callyng of Lorde or maister: or what doeth it in me? Where the case requireth obedyente and readye seruice, honoure due to youre Lorde or maister muste bee shewed foorthe, not in woordes, but in dooynges. The dilygent keping of the Lordes commaundementes, dooe shewe who is a feithfull seruaunt, and not glozyouse speaking of woordes of honour.

Whosoeuer cometh to me, and heareth my sayinge, and dooeth the same: I will shewe you to whome he is lyke. He is lyke to a man, whiche builte an house, and dygged diepe and layed the foundacion on a rocke. When the waters arose, the fludde beat vpon that house, and could not mouue it. For it was grounded vpon a rocke. But he that heareth and dooeth not, is like a man that without foundacion built an house vpon the yearthe: against the whiche the fludde did beate, and it fell immediatly, and the fall of that house was great. The texte.

After this dooen, the same that the Lorde had taughte by the similitude of a good and an euill tree, whose fruytes are to bee esteemed of the roote selfe and none other: the same thyng doeth he still beate into theyr heades, by the similitude or comparison of a building, that eyther will geue ouer and falle, or will not geue ouer to stormes beatyng vpon it. For truely what thyng the roote is in a tree, the same thyng in comparison is the foundacion in a building: and what the leaues are in a tree, euen the lyke therof is the makyng of anye house, which yeldeth without furth a pleasaunt shewe to the beholders.

Whosoeuer

Who so ever commeth to me and heareth my sayinges, and doeth them, &c.

Whosoever commeth to me (sayeth Jesus) with a syncere hearte and myndе, and dooeth so heare my woordes, that whan the case requirethe, he will shewe further the euident tokens of perfecte vertue out of the treasour of hys sayde hearte: I will shewe you to whome he is lyke. He is lyke to a prouydent and circumspect buylder, that buildeth his house not for a vaine braggue or shewe onelye, not to serue hym for a shorte whyle and no longer: but for a firmenesse and stedfastenesse to stande and endure without perishyng agaynste any blousterous storme or tempeste to come. And therefore he diggeth downe of a great depth, and layeth a sounde and substauncial foundacion vpon a sure rocke. Thys dooen he maketh the vpper buyldyng. Than afterwarde whan any fluddes arise and beate agaynst it, or any mightie tempest of windes light vpon it: neyther with the swift rage of the flud extremely touching vpon it, nor yet with the forceable violence of the wyndes blousteryng agaynste it, can suche an house bee ouerthrowen or appayred, because it standeth sure vpon a strong foundacion. And contrary wyse, he that so cummeth to me, that suche thinges as I teache, in dede he heareth them, but he suffereth not my precepte and good lessons to sinke thyroughly downe euen to the bottom of his hearte, is like to a builder that hath but a slender forcast, who maketh his buildinges after suche a sort, as if there were no tempeste like at any time after to arise. And forasmuche as suche an one hath no care at all, ne passeth not on a substauncial foundacion, but goeth vp with his buildinges of a great height, for a braggue and a shew onely: as soone as eyther any renning ouer of the fluddes doth come, or any blustryng storme of wyndes doeth aryse, vp and by downe cummeth all that euer he hath buylded: and the more statelye or royallye that he hath made his building for a vayne shewe: with so muche the greatter ruyne dooeth all the house fall downe. And trueiye whatsoeuer standeth on the foundacion of ceremonies, pharisaicall constitucions, obseruacions of thinges outwardly belonging to the body, is an house or buildyng vndoubtedly to quaile and falle as often as there shall light vpon it wronges or displeasures, losse or damage of goodes, open shames or punysthementes of the worlde, deathes or any sore storme of vnluckie fortune otherwise.

But he that heareth and dooeth not is like &c.

The seuenth Chapter.

The texte.

Whan he had ended all his sayinges in the audience of the people, he entred into Capernaum. And a certaine centurions seruaunte whiche was dere vnto hym, laye sicke, and was in peril of death. And whan he heard of Jesus, he sent vnto him the elders of the Jewes, beseching him that he would come, and heale his seruaunt. And whan they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly, saying: Sir is worthie, that thou shouldest do this for him. For he loueth our nacion. And hath built vs a Synagogue. And Jesus went with them. And whan he was now not fer from the house, the Centurion sente frendes to hym saying vnto him: lord, trouble not thy selfe. For I am not worthie that thou shouldest enter vnder my roufe. Wherefore I thought not my selfe worthie to come vnto thee: But say thou the worde, and my seruaunt shalbe whole. For I also am a man set vnder power, and haue vnder me souldiers, & I saye vnto one: goe, and he goeth: and to an other, come, and he commeth: and to my seruaunt, doe this, and he doeth it. Whan Jesus heard this, he merueiled at him and turned him about, & sayde to the people that folowed hym: I say vnto you, I haue not found so greate feith, no, not in Israel. And they that were sent, turned backe home agayne, and founde the seruaunt whole that had bene sicke.

After

Fter that the Lorde Jesus had spoken many wooꝛdes of the muche lyke sorte, as is afoꝛe rehearsed, by the whiche he trayned his disceples and the people to sette them in a trade towardes the excellent high perfeccion of euangelical philolophie: he went again to the citie of Capernaum, in whiche citie he vsed muche and often to bee conuersaunte. And there chalonce befalleth many a loondrye occasyon to weorke and shewe miracles, to the ende that the autozitie of hys doctryne myghte bee confirmed and ratified with the most highe excellencie of his actes and dedes. There was in the same place a certain Centurion, who had at home in his house a seruaunt, whiche was in suche perill and daungier of his lyfe with the disease of the paulley, that he was euen nowe at deathes dooze. Thys matter did not a litle vexe the hearte of the Centurion, who esteemed his bondeseruaunte not by hys vile state of bondage, but by the fidelitie and trustinesse that he founde in him, and by the pure honestie of his behauiour, and by thesame his exaumple, did also repzoue the inhumanitie of certayne maisters, whiche doe commonlye esteme and vse theyr seruauntes in no better degree of regarde, then they dooe their horses, oꝛ their oxen. But to the purpose, whan this Centurion had gotte knowleage that Jesus was gone into Capernaum: he pzocured and made out certayn auncient head men of the Jewes to make instaunt request to the Lord in theyr owne names, that he wouldе vouchsaluе to go vnto his house to make his seruaunt whole agayn. It came of reuerence and shamefastnes, (not of mistruste) that the Centurion first beeyng a Gentile, and secoundly a man of armes, (whiche to bee was thought an vngodly thyng,) maketh suite to the Lord by meane of others, and not by himselfe. But they whan they were come vnto Jesus, suspecting and halfe deming it to be a thyng like enough, that so greate a benefit would not without much a doe bee obteyned, firste foꝛ a bondeman, secoundlye foꝛ an heathen, and thirdely foꝛ a Centurion, that is to saye, a pettcaptayne foꝛ a Crue of souldyers: they entreate hym with muche carefulnesse and earneste wooꝛdes, saying: Syꝛ haue no respecte that he is a Gentile, that he is a man of armes, ne foꝛ that thys benefyte is asked foꝛ one that is but a bondeseruaunt vnder him in his Crue. Foꝛ he is soondry wayes a man wozthye foꝛ whome to doe as good a pleasure as this cometh to.

Foꝛ he is right louing and frendly to oure nacion, and hath builded by a Synagogue. Than Jesus because he wouldе shewe that no persone is vyle afoꝛe hym, if the same bee commended and sette furthe to hym by feyth, wente to the same place that he was called vnto. And whan he was nowe come somewhat nere to the house, where the parties laye syckе in hys bedde, the Centurion perceiuyng that the Lorde approched, willed hys frendes to goe mete hym: and thus to saye vnto him: Maister, there is no cause why foꝛ thee, to take all thys labouꝛe of cumming hither. Thy bountcous goodnesse doeth moze now, then I durste haue pzesumed to desire. I knowe thy dygnitie well enoughe, and I knowe myne owne selfe. An heathen creature I am: a Centurion I am: and all this businesse that I make, is about no better a man but a bonde seruaunt. I am by myne owne iudgement, a felowe vnwoꝛthye, vnder whose house-rooфe thou shouldest put thy head, and foꝛ thys cause durste I not pzesume to come vnto thee my selfe:

For the Iewes thynke themselues by metyng or cummyng of any of vs emongest them, to bee defiled, because we are taken as men vtterly estraunged from all true seruing and worshyppyng of God, and enwrapped with manye foondysh sinnes. Neuertheleslle the great dolour of my herte, and mine exceding great trust in thee, hath caused that I haue presumed to desire and aske healthy for my seruaunt lyeng nowe in extremes: whiche healthy thou arte able with a woorde of thy mouthe to geue. But this is to symple and basse a mattier, yea and also to light a mattier for thee to come and dooe in thyne owne persone. I conieccture this by comparyson of myne owne selfe. For I am a man subiecte to the power of an other man, to whose commaundementes I am obedyente, and haue other Souldyers also vnder me, whiche dooe all thynges that I commaunde them: so that it is not necessarie for me to goe aboute the dooyng of all thinges in myne owne persone. But in case there bee anye homely or slendre mattyer to dooe, I saye to thys felowe: goe, and he goeth, and to an other: come hither, and he cumneth. I saye to anye of my seruauntes whome me lusteth: dooe thys, and he dooyng obedyente to my biddyng dooethe it. If the commaundemente of suche an one as I am, haue so great autoritie, that I speyng styll, the thyng that I woulde haue is neuertheleslle executed and dooen by men that are vnder my gouernaunce, how muche more, though thou there not at all shall it bee dooen, if thou with a woorde and nothyng els, shalt geue such commaundement, or committion to any of thy disciples Iesus, being delyted with thys talke, because it was full of herte good affeccyon towardes his seruaunte, and of a lowelye opinion of himselfe, and of woonderfull affyaunce towardes the Lorde, stayghed sodaynelye and stode styll: and shewed the verye tokens of one beeyng in a greate mervaile: not because the thing that he bearde was straunge vnto hym, (for as much as he knewe well enough the herte of the Centuryon before these woordes were spoken:) but the purpose that he wente aboute was, by making a countenaunce of mervailing, to commende vnto the Iewes the Centurions affiaunce and assured truste in god: and also to embrayde the with theyr vnbeliefe, by this craumple of a man being bothe an heathen, and a souldyer. Iesus therefore makyng delaye of an aunswere to the Centurion, turned to the multytude of the Iewes, that accompanyed hym, and saide: Thys one thing I affyrme vnto you of certaintie, that yet vnto this daye I haue not founde ne knowen so muche fayth in al the nation of Israell. For the seniours of the Iewes that had come vnto him did lesse beleue on him, in that they made suche earneste desire to haue the Lordes owne presence there, and in that they halke mystrusted that Iesus wouldе not haue healed the seruaunt of an heathen man, onlesse they had alleged his herte fauoure towardes the nacyon of the Israelites, as thoughe the Lorde were a geuer of his benefites for humain or worldly affections, or for the dignitie and woorthynesse of the persone: and not muche rather to the feithfull truste of the peticioner. Iesus therefore, (after that he had affirmed vnto them that a tyme shoulde come, whan suche as by the Iewes estimacion were reputed for heathe and for sinners, shoulde through the commendacion of fayth be receyued vnto the dignitie of the nacion of Israell, these persons reiected, who beeyng by natural delcent the children of Abraham, had through theyr vnbeliefe made themselues vnworthy suche a pateene or heade stocke and lynage,) sayde vnto the Centurion, (who at the laste was come hymselfe too:) goe thy wayes: for the

thyng that thou hast beleued maie be doen, is doen, thy seruaunte is perfitely whole. And as he was in returnyng homwarde, he had knowelage by hys seruauntes meting him on the waye, that his seruaunte was euen at the selfe same tyme sodainly deliuerred from his disease, in which the lord had said: thy seruaunt liueth. For so largely dooeth the vertue and efficacie of Jesu woorde extende, that it doth with no lesse fruite or benefite helpe persons absent, and ferre distaunt, then those that were presente within his sight or reache, if their faythfull beleefe and affiaunce in hym dyd hable theim as apte and woorthye to receiue their godly desire for theyr faythes sake, especially whan the exaumple was suche, as myghte eyther put the Gentyles in hope and cumfort of goddes grace towardes theim, or els bee a monicion to the Jewes, that for defaulte of the true fayth, they should lese the fauour of god, which they should wilfully and obstinately reiecte and cast of whan it were offered. For certes this presente exaumple was but an image or figure of the Gentiles afterward to cum into the felowshyp of the grace of the ghospel, through pure fayth, without the obseruacion of Moses lawe, and yet neuertheleese by the commendacion of the lawe after a sorte. For the lawe was as a nourysee or a first scholemaister and bringer vp of men vnto Christe, and from the Jewes did the originall preachyng of the ghospell first procede. And certes for a fy-gure of this matter and nothyng els it was, that the elders of the Jewes do commend the Centurious cause, and doe speake for him vnto Jesus: and the same Jewes dooe accumpany Jesus into the Centurions house, whom they would and did afterward driue out of their owne temple.

And it fortuned after this, that he went into a citie which is called Naim, and many of his disciples went with him, and muche people. When he came nigh to the gate of the citie, behold there was a dead man carried out, whiche was the onely soonne of his mother, and she was a wedowe, and muche people of the citie was with her. And when the lord sawe her he had compassion on her, and said vnto her: wepe not. And he came nigh and touched the coffin, and they that bare him stode still. And he said: young man, I say vnto the, arise. And he that was deade, sate vp, and began to speake. And he deliuered him to his mother. And there came a feare on them all. And they gaue the glory vnto god, saying: A great prophete is risen vp among vs, and god hath visited his people. And this rumour of hym went foorth throughout all Jewrye, and throughout all the regions whiche lye round about. The texte

And forsooth the Lorde, to the entent that the seede of euangelicall doctryne might ferther and ferther be spred abrode, did oftentimes remoue & departe from one place to an other. And so it befell, that leauing the citie of Capernaū he passed by the citie of Naim, whiche lieth frō the mountain Thabor muche about the distaunce of two myles, towardes the South coaste, not ferre frō Endor. And whan he thyther wente, his disciples folowed hym, of whome by this tyme there was a great nōbre: and besides thē there wēt also a great multitude of the common people of all sortes and degrees. And whā ỹ Lord was now not ferre from the gate of the citie, beholde an occasion of an other meruelous miracle. There came a dead corpse carried on mēnes backes towardes burieng with a great coumpanye of people. And a doulful matter it was, first because it was a very young man that was dead, and taken frō his lyfe euen in the very floure of his age: secondarily, because it was the onely sonne of a wedowe, who beeyng depriued of the coumfort of an housebande, had sette all the hope and staye of her lyfe in the same her soonne. This wedow therfore testified the woful tormenting of her hert both with weping teares, and also with many piteous woordes of lamentacion, suche as extreme ra-raging dolour doth commonly putte in folkes myndes to speake. The great wailyng of the wedowe, together with the vnripe death of the yong stripelyng, caused the reste of the coumpanye also to wepe, as many as for kyndenes and bonde of neighbourhode went folowyng the corpse. Whan þ Lorde Jesus beryng moste full of mercie and pitie had seen this sight, he toke compassion on the wedowe, and shewed himself an effectuall comforter vnto her, that had none els to her hir comforter, he holpe her bothe in wordes and also in dede. Womā, saith he, make no more weping. And whan he had so said, he came vnto the biere whereon the dead mā was carried, and put his hand to it.

Beholde there was a dead mannes carried out.

And immediatly they whiche carryed the corpse stayed. Here bothe coumpa-nies earnestly herkenyng, aswell they that accompanyed the wedowe, as also they that came with the Lord, Jesus curnyng to the yong mā that was dead: young man (q he) I saie vnto thee: Arise. At this worde immediatly þ yong mā, euen as it had been one newly awakened, & reysed out of his slepe, sate vpright on the biere, and to the entent that it should be the more euident a token that his life was restored hym, he begoonne to speake. And this speakyng dyd ferthermore also declare the lustye freatheneſſe and heartyneſſe of spirite in him.

Whan the Lorde sawe her, he had compassion on her.

And he that was deade, sate vp and begaune to speake.

And when he had now lept doun from the biere, and cleuyng faste vnto Jesus by whom he perceiued that his lyfe had been restored vnto him, was stil rendryng thankes for it: the Lorde deliuered hym vnto his mother, to haue him home with her, goyng now on his own feete, whom she had caused after he was dead, to be carryed towardes hurtyng on fower mennes shoulders.
And thus truely was the matier doen as touching the story, but not without a signification of ghostly doctrine. The wedow beyng a mother, repreſēteth the churche. For sooth euen this is the same wedow whō the prophete Esaye doeth cōforte, saiyng: Be glad thou barain that bringest not foorth chyldren, reioyce thou þ art nothyng towardes bearyng, for mo are the children of the forsaken, than of her that hath an husbande. The synagogue trusteth altogether in her spouse Moses: it maketh great bauntes of the children of Abrahā beyng equall in noumber to the sande that lieth on the sea shore. The churche after the estimacion of the worlde, semeth destitute of her spouse, who hath conueyed hymselfe vp into heauen: & at the first she semed barain, and without hope of any issue or succession, (the Jewes & also the prices of this world labouryng that al memorie of Jesus whom they supposed to be vtterly destroyed and dead, might vtterly be take away and abolished for euer.) This wedow doth daily bring forth, nor children of this world, but childre of the lyght: neyther dooeth she bryng them foorth to Moses, who taught thinges earthly, but vnto Christ, who teacheth and also promiseth thinges heauenly.
She bryngeth them foorth, not to death, but to immortalitie. She groweth daily in bringing forth childrē yet vnchapen & vnperfite, vntil thei haue recei-ued þ spirite of the gospel, and vntil Christ be brought to perfite shape in thē.
A true mother she is, & singularly doth she loue her childrē, whō w great carefulneſſe she frameth and trayneth vntill they may growe to full age, and may bee brought vp to the strength of perfite men. For loue and deuotion towar-des god also hath it infācie, & it hath it cumming forward in growthe of age.
That if at any tyme it fortune any of her chyldren to dye, she wepeth and can not be coumforted, nor wepeth any lesse for hym, then if she had had none but him

hym alone, whom she loste. Innocencie whiche is geuen through euangelical fayth is life, and synne is death. We see with howe great affection mothers do mourne for the bodily corpses of their children: but muche more tenderly doeth the churche wepe and waill for one that after baptisme is fallen again to any deadly synne, and more penitse she is for the death of one synner, thē ꝑ Synagogue is glad of foure score and nyneteene righteous. Well than, forth is the dead mā borne of foure carriers: that is to say, of the inordinate desires of this worlde, which hauing the dead corpse on theyr shoulders being now destitute of the holy ghost, lackyng now all feleyng of himself, beyng now dead aslepe in his ownnaughty vices, carrye hym down streighte to the graue of euerlastyng despaire. The church furthermore hath gates, by which she casteth out dead folkes, lest that with the stinkyng of the dead corpse, the others also that are yet whole, maye bee infected. She hathe other gates also, by whiche to receiue in suche as are called to life again of the Lorde. As she bringeth not forth into life, but by the spirite of Christe, so doeth she not receiue into life again, but whom Christ doeth call backe again. The porters that carry the dead, neuer stop ne stay vntill they cum euen to the graue. For whoso hath made al his restyng place here in this worlde, & whoso hath once let himself at large to be ledde with sinfull affections, ceaseth not with damnable proceding to fall cōtinually into wurse & wurse, vntill he cum to ꝑ mayne depth of euils, and is deliuered to his lustes abominable. And all the while, naught doeth the mother but wepe, yea and all the coumpanye of his coūtreimen do wepe, forowyng that the deade is cast out, whom they wishe to returne to life again. And these verilye are the prayers of our mother the churche, these been her reares, and these are the sighes and grouynges of the godly persones, makyng mone and forowe for the death of a synner. This young strieplyng was dead, not beeyng yet confirmed with the spirite of the ghospel, and so muche the more worthye of mercie, because that the same mā whō they had hoped & trusted should through ꝑ spirite of Christ haue prospered and growen forward vnto the highest degree of euangelical godlynesse, hym they see now past life, and void of any spirite, and by most merciles porters to be euen in carryng out toward the derke pitte of the graue. But yet neuertheleſſe the mother al the while foloweth: the folke of the toune also do folow (for charitte cā scarcely by any meane despaire) & with teres, with fetyng sighes, & with wofull lamētations they declare what thyng they wish. But ꝑ thyng that they wishe lyeth not in their power to geue, neither be they able to kepe him stil, whan lyfe was once departed, nor yet of power to reise hym vp again, after he was dead. To mans power he was dead, and past all possibilitie of callyng again to life. But al is welinough. At the weping teres of his churche Jesus cumeth, and meteth them: luckie and blessed at al tymes is ꝑ metyng of our sauiour with any body. He casteth an ye on his wedowe, luckye and blessed at all times is the merciful lordes beholdyng of any body. He casteth no ye on the dead bodye, who because he thought not hymselfe to be in any nede of mercy, did not yet seme woorthy the mercy of Jesus, but ꝑ earnest affection and zele of the churche dooeth that obteyne, whiche ꝑ synner beyng desperate and past all grace dooeth not so muche as wishe. The Lord biddeth the mourneyng to be crassed, bringyng them in hope of ioye to folowe after: he putteth his hande to the biere. The porters of the dead corpse dooe stand stil. The first poynt of hope, that one is in the way of amendyng again towardes innocencie, is, not to go any ferther in naughtines. He that ceasseth to be worse thē he was, geueth yet sum token of hope on himselfe, that he wil one day were better. And yet doeth this not so fortune, onlesse Jesus vouchsafe with his mightfull hande to touche the biere. The hande of Jesus secreteth an end vnto all wicked desires or appetites, that ỹ partie shal now ceasse from all naughtines, which was in carryng to the graue. The church in dede praieth, she maketh great intreatyng, she exhorteth, she chydeth suche persones as dooe offende, because she would haue them to amende and bee in perfite reste from their vicioulnesse. But all this in vayn, onlesse Jesus with his secrete vertue and power should touch the soule of the sinner being dead. For Jesus is the lyfe of euery man, yea, euen of ỹ dead too. And good hope there is that lyfe wil cum again, whan Jesus vouchesaueth to touch ỹ biere: but the hertines of lyfe doeth not yet retourne, onlesse the Lorde do speake vnto the dead. At the voice of whom only and none els the dead do reuiue agayn, yea, although they haue been laied in graue, yea and haue lien of fower daies continuaunce there: to the entent, that no man shoulde thynke any synners to bee so ferre past grace, of whose recouerye to grace again the charitye of the churche shoulde despaire. Lazarus was carryed oute, he was buryed, he laye stynkyng already in his graue, yet was there weepynge and waylynge made for hym all the whyle, and at the voice of Jesus callyng hym, he came forthe of hys sepulchre. And in dede Lazarus was with sum what more a doode reysed to lyfe. For Jesus at that present dyd (as it wer) roze out in his spirite, he wept, and was soze troubled in himselfe: not for that it was any harder for him to reise one that had lien fower daies buried, then one whose lyfe departed but euen nowe oute of his bodye: but to shewe howe hardely suche persones cum to amendemente, as haue of longe continuaunce accustomed themselfes vnto vicioulnes. Jesus caste an eye on the wedowe, & the leaft weepyng: he shall lyke wyse caste an eye on the dead persone, and he shall begynne to lyue. The moste mercifull Lorde therefore turned himselfe to the partie that laye there dead, thou young man (q he) I saye vnto thee: Aryse. He cannot choose, but reuiue againe, to whom any woordes shall bee spoken out of Jesus mouth: yea, although he were dead.

For the woordes he speaketh, are al spirit & life. What folowed of al this? he reuiued again to innocency, that was dead in sinnes: he setteth himself vpright who afore laie still hauyng no felyng of himselfe: and (the whiche is the moste euident token of a mynd conrected to goodnes) he beginneth to speake, cōfesslyng his own synnes, & geuyng thankes to the mercie of God. He is restored to his mother almes man again, and where he was afore in carryng to his graue with great mournyng of many people, he is nowe with muche greater ioye of them all brought home again. For this propertie hath true godlines, that it loueth suche men muche the better, whiche haue amended for greate enormities to the ernest endeuour of ledyng a better life. For in these dooeth the goodnesse of god more better appere, thē in suche as haue neuer fallē into any grenous crime or enormitie. The mother reioyceth ỹ she hathe receyued her sone again. And thei which afore did mourn for ỹ corpse, do now reioyce: and not only do thei reioyce, but also euery one of thē, as many as wee present at this sight, were taken with a certain feare. For suche as are so openly ciuill

a paterne of the Iewe, who throughe his pꝛesumpteous conceite of hymselfe, and his vnbeleefe, maketh hymselfe vnwoꝛthie the merciful goodnes of god, that is offred. The Pharisee which had deꝛyted Jesus to dyner, whā he saw this, whereas his part had been to fauour the woman of suche a feruēt good zeale pꝛesſyng in, with so great humilitie submitting herselfe to Jesus, & by so many tokens pꝛotestyng an earnest repentance of her former life: and whereas he should haue loued the mercifulnesse of Jesus, who putteth away no persō from him, he is moued to the slaunderous misiudgyng of them bothe. For this did he thinke within himselfe: This man if he were a pꝛophete suche an one as he is reputed to be, forsooth he could not be ignoraunt, what woman and of what sort she were, that thus toucheth him with her handes. For a cōmon harlot she is and a woman of notorious vnchaste liuyng, whiche thyng if the dyd know, he would not suffre himselfe to bee defiled with the touching of a body polluted and vncleane. For the Pharisee thoughte holy men to bee polluted if they did but so muche as once talke with a sinner. Such was the stately proude braggues of counterfayted ryghteousnesse, throughe whiche the Jewes stode highly in their owne conceites, incurryng the indignacion of God thereby. What the pharise which had bidde him. &c

Iud Jesus answered, and sayed vnto him: Symon I haue sumwhat to saye vnto the. And he sayed: maister saie on. ¶ There was a certain lender whiche had two debtours, the one ought fyue hundreth penie, and the other fiftie. Whan they had nothyng to paye, he forgaue them bothe. Tell me therfore, whether of them will loue hym moste? Symon answered & said: I suppose that he to whom he forgaue moste. And he sayed vnto hym: thou hast truely iudged. And he turned to the woman, and said vnto Symon: seest thou this woman? I entred into thy house, thou gauest me no water for my fete: but she hath washed my fete with teres, and wiped them with the heares of her head. Thou gauest me no kysse. But she sens the time I cāe in, hath not ceassed to kisse my fete. Thy head with oyle thou biddest not anoynte: but she hath anointed my fete with oyntment. Wherfore I say vnto the: many synnes are forgeuen her, for she loued muche. To whom lesse is forgeuen, the same doeth lesse loue. And he said vnto her, thy synnes are forgeuen thee. The texte.

But Jesus to the entente that he would so muche the moꝛe declare hymself to bee a pꝛophete, made answere vnto the secrete thought of the Pharisee: Symon (quod he) I haue a thing to tell thee. Than sayd the Pharisee: Maister, saye on, what is it? Than Jesus seyng the Pharisee to geue good eare vnto hym, because he wolde not beefoꝛe all the companye of the other geasles, openly detect the vngodly thoughte of the Pharisee (for the parte of a ryghte gospeller is also to see that he vse ciuilitie and good courtesy too) put forth vnto hym a parable of suche sorte as here followeth. Two certain persones ¶ Creditoꝛ were endebted vnto one dyuer, of whiche two debtours, the one ought fyue hundreth pieces of syluer coyne called denaries (whiche were muche about the estimacion or rate of fiue or sixe pense a piece of old sterling money, so that this summes whole debt amounted muche nere about þ̄ sume of twelue or fiftene poundes sterlynge or rather aboue: albeit sum wryters yea and moste wryters, doe value the olde denarie, muche aboute twelue pense sterlyng, and than was the debte twentye fyue poundes sterlyng:) and the other debtour ought but fiftye of suche syluer pieces (whiche was muche aboute the summe of fyue and twentye shyllynges, or thirtie shyllynges, or after the greatter estimacion it was fiftie shillinges sterlyng) ¶ for as muche as both of them were found vnhable to pay their dueties, he forgaue them all the whole summes euerye penye, that they were indebted in. Now There was a certayne lender which had two debtours.

whether of theſe two is bounde the more hertily ye alwayes both to loue ſo liberall a creditour. Symon not yet vnderſtandyng what ende thys parable was ment to cum to, aunſwered plainly without any ſubtilitie. In my mynde (ſaieth he) that partie is bound the more earneſtly to loue his creditour, to whom the more ſumme was forgeuen.

And ſaid vnto Symon: dooeſt thou ſee this woman?

Than Jeſus openyng for what purpoſe he had put forth this doubtfull queſtion, ſaied vnto Symon: Thou haſt iudged rightly: but thou applyeſt thy iudgement nothyng equally ne indifferently. And forthwith he tourned himſelf to the woman, and ſpake vnto Symon: dooeſt thou ſee this woman, whom thou calleſt a ſynner? dooeſt thou not ſee her all full of wepyng, with her heare lyig about her ſhoulders, makig lauaſſe of her precious perfumed ointemente, lyberall and more then liberall of her kiſſes geuyng to my feete, lyyng proſtrate afore me, & outwardly ſhewyng all the behauiour and dyyng of her body, a paterne and liuely exaumple of a repentant perſone? Theſe are manifeſt tokens of a certain exceedyng great loue towardes me. The more euidently that the hateth her ſelf, ſo muche the more frankely ſhe tendreth me and maketh of me. She came hither a ſiner: but ſhe was throughly made whole, aſſone as ſhe touched the phyſicion.

I entred in to thy houſe &c.

Thou deſpiſeſt this woman here as a ſynner, and of thyne owne ſelfe thou haſt a good opinio & coceit that thou art a righteous man: but ye godly zele & affection of this ſiner, is ferre odder about thy righteouſneſſe. I am cum into thy houſe a geaſt bidden to a repaſt and deſired to cum, & yet haſt thou not ſo muche as geuen me water for my feete, whiche neuertheleſſe had been but a lenele poynt of courteſie euery where cõmõly vſed: but this woma hath waſhed my fete with her owne teres, & hath wyped the with ye heare of her head. Thou haſt not geuen me a kyſſe ſens I came in, whiche euery cõmon frende dooeth of a cuſtomable vſage geue one to an other: this woman euer ſeee ſhe came firſt in at the dores, for the immoderate zele and affection of her heart hath not ceaſſed ſtill to be kiſſing of my fete. Thou haſt not anointed my head ſo much as with cõmon oyle, which point of lentleneſs is cõmonly ſhewed to any geaſtes whatſoeuer they be, that cum to a repaſte in any maimes houſe: this woman hath with a precious and a very coſtely ointment of perfume al ouer and ouer anoynted my fete, that is to ſay the moſt abiect and vyle parte of the bodye. Doe not thou weigh how muche the hath ſynned: but conſider thou how muche ſhe loueth. For dere loue coureth a multitude of ſinnes.

For this muche I plainly affirme vnto thee, that a great noumbre of ſynnes are forgeuen her, not becauſe ſhe hath muche faſted, not for that ſhe hath vſed muche prayer and cõtemplacion, not becauſe ſhe hath been a deuout obſeruer of many phariſaicall cõſtitucions: but becauſe ſhe hath muche loued, and becauſe ſhe hath with all her whole hert put her truſt and confidence in me. The more greuouſly that ſhe hath ſynned, ſo muche the more dooeth ſhe myſlyke her ſelfe, and ſo muche the more earneſtly doeth ſhe loue me: through whoſe free mercy ſhe hath been deliuered from her manyfold ſynnes. For hath the greatnes of ſinnes turned to a gracious and a bliſſed good end for her part. And on the other ſide, to whom leſſe is forgeuen: that partie doth not loue ſo greatly: as for exaumple, ye Phariſeis thinke your ſelues righteous for ye obſeruyng of the lawe, and not to haue any great thynges in you, that nedeth Gods pardone, and therfore your loue and affection is the colder towardes with grasshoppers to his meate, and with plaine water to his drinke, and whiche, whereas he sustenied his life with no fyner diete then this, did besides also fast very often. Who gorgeous arate doeth best please, who deliciousnesse of meates dooeth delite: suche dooe seke and make shift to be in kynges courtes. And on suche persones as haue a great desire to the thynges above said, the suspicion of a corrupt sentence and mynde, of inconstancie and wauering, or of plain flattery may perchaūce light. But John hath preferred wildernes before ꝑ courtes of princes: he hath preferred ꝑ hearie hide of camels before veluets and silkes, and before garmētes of cloth of golde, or set with precious stones: wilde honey and locustes, hath he preferred before ꝑ marchpaines and other swete delicates of kynges: a plain water before the swete hypocras of the riche mē. And how that John can in no wise flatter, the very prison that he is in, dooeth sufficiently trye. There is therefore no cause why any man should suspecte that John dyd afore for any mannes pleasure or fauour, geue so high and worthie testimony of me, and now to haue chaunged his mynde. But yet would I fain know, what thyng called you forth into wildernes, was it (trowe ye) to see a prophet? In dede he openly cōfessed that he was not the Messias, yet this one thing do I affirme vnto you, if ye came forth into wildernes for that cause, to see a prophete, ye are not frustrate ne deceiued of the thyng ye loked for. Ye haue in very true dede sene a prophet, yea and more then a prophet too. For this same is very he, of whom I saye long a manya day gone dyd prophecie, that he should bee the foregeer of Messias. Beholde (saieth he) I sende my messenger before thy face, whiche shall prepare thy way before thee. For the prophetes did by derke mysticall sayinges foresheew certain thinges long after to cum: but this John did with his fynger, point to Messias and shewe him, when he came. Therefore they that thinke highly of John, dooe thinke rightly and well. For thus muche I affirme vnto you all: Emong al the men that are now in this tyme or afore tymes hitherto haue been borne of women, there hath not any prophet arisen greatter or more excellent then John.

Neuertheles, he that is lesse in the kingdome of god, is greatter then he. And all the people, and ꝑ publicans that hard him, iustified god: and were baptised with the baptisme of Ihō. The texte. But the ꝑharisees and lawiers despised the counsail of god against theselfes, a were not baptised of him, and the lord sayd: Whereunto shal I lyken the men of this generacion? and what thyng are they like? They are lyke vnto children sitteyng in the mercate place, and crying one to an other, and saying: We haue ꝑpped vnto you, and ye haue not daunced, we haue mourned vnto you, and ye haue not wept. For John Baptist came, neyther eating bread nor drynking wine, and ye say: He hath the deuil. The sonne of man is cum, and eateth and drinketh, and ye say, behold a glutton ous man, and an bibmeasurable drinker of wine, a frende of ꝑpublicās and sinners. And wisdome is iustified of all her children.

It is great and great enough that I dooe now be witnesse of hym. But the thyng that sum assygne vnto him, he wyll not hymselfe acknowlage ne take as due vnto hym. For there is one greatter then he in vertue to dooe thynges, and also in dignitie, who neuertheles after the opinion and acceptacion of the people is inferiour to him in the kyngdom of heaue. The strayght liuyng of him, and his goyng into deserte oute of all companye, they dooe highly esteme, and the familiaritie of this other do they contemne. The dignitie of John they haue in reuerēce, at the glory of this other they haue enuy. The doctrine of hym they did enbrace, ꝑ doctrine of this other they slaūder a depryaue. He preached baptisme vnto repentaūce, for he affirmed the kingdōe of heauen to approche, and to the voice of hym herkened euery body, as wel the ignoraūt and inferiour people, as also Publicanes, souldiers, harlotes, making haste to the baptisme that Johns ministred vnto the, confessing theimselfes to be synners, and beyng desirous and fain to be washed from their sinnes. And so did they glorifie the righteousnesse of god, acknowlagyng theyr owne vnrighteousnesse, forasmuche as no creature is clene from great sinne sauyng onely God, and embracyng the goodnes of God, who hath made promisse that he will freely forgeue al the offences and transgressions of the former lyfe vnto all persones that with syncere trust and affiaūce, wil take their refuge vnto him. And cōtrariwise, the Pharises, the Scribes, & the lawiers, while they reken shame to acknowlage their owne iniquitie, they haue rather willed to make God a lier, the to embrace the trueth: & therfore thought they skorne to bee baptised of John, vnto their cōfusion and castyng away, despysyng the mercifull counsaill of God, who hath appoynted and determined to abolisshe the sinnes of all mortall people by this moste easy and iemle waye. For what is a more easy thyng, then to confesse, and so to be dieped in watermot for that innocencie was or might be geuen by John: but for that the baptisme and preachyng of John did make a preparatife to the same innocencie, to the end that the more noumbre of persones might be brought to saluacion through the preachyng of him, to whom John was as a forerenner and messenger, incase he should finde their hertes and myndes alredy prepared to receiue it. There was nothyng of all the premisses vnadui sedly doē, or wout a good grounde, but the prouidence of god disposed all thynges to ỹ healthy and saluacion of mankynde. And the poore commoners, the people of moste lowest sorte, and synners, who semed to be ferthest out of the way frō true godlynesse, and very farre shorte of the knowlage of the lawe: suche men embraced the beneficial and mercifull goodnes of god. And contrarye wyse they whom it behoued meste of all to vnderstand, that these thynges wer prōmysed by the holy saiynges of the prophetes, and who also semed to be ỹ very pillours of al deuout holines, haue vtterly refused the bounteous goodnes of God, beyng offred vnto them, and haue felt no maner compunccion, to repentaunce or amendment, neither at Johns preachyng, nor yet at mine. And Jesus saiyng this obstinate malice plain in their face, brought in a similitude of this sorte in his communicacion.

And all the people a publicans that hearo hym, iustified God.

We haue piped to you, and ye haue not daunced.

What shall I than say of the people of this peruerse generacion, or to what thyng shall I say them to be like? They may bee lykened vnto boyes, whom we see sitting together in ỹ open strete, which boies aunswering one another in their playyng, vse thus to saye: we haue plaied you merry songes vpon our pypes, and yet haue ye been therby nothing moued to daūce: we haue played you mourning songes, and yet haue ye not wept. This same prouerbe breyng taken of the common guise of children in the strete, did the Lord Jesus apply and compare vnto the obstinate Jewes, who neyther with the streight liuing of John were moued to any feare of gods vēgeaūce: nor yet wh ỹ courteous familiaritie, and beneficial doinges of Christ, wer any thing stirred vnto the loue of him. For there came John (saieth Jesus) with singular streightnes of liuyng, bothe preachyng repentaunce, and also geuing an exaumple of repentaūce, neither eating any breade, ne drinkyng any wine, but liuing in wildermesse, nelle, clothed in a pilche of a Camels hyde, & girte with a girdle of lether. But for all these thynges so ferre wer ye from all repentaunce, that the thyng which was doen for to emende you, ye turned into furmised slaundres and querels, saying. He lacketh common reason, he hath a deuill in hym. The sonne of man is come seking by the contrary waye, to bring you to saluacion: that is to wete, as a man familiar and readie to mete or speake with all persones that wolde, makyng no shew of any new streightnesse of liuyng, nor manacyng or threatenyng any punishement: but alluryng all persones with benefites vnto the loue of hym, eatyng and drynkyng as other folkes vse to do, beyng conuersaunte emong all sortes of men whatsoeuer they were, nor differyng from othet men either in his meate, or els in his arye. And this manes humanitie and curteous behaueour wherewith ye ought to haue been prouoked vnto better wayes, ye turne into an occasion of slaundrous reprochefulnesse, saying: Behold a glutonous felowe, a drynker of wyne, a frende of publicanes, and of synners. The sonne of manne is come and eateth and drynketh.

But yet nothyng preuayled the malice of men against the worlyng or purpose of the wysedome of God. For the righteousnesse of God was euen by that meanes glorified with all the childzen being geuen to euangelicall wysdome, after that it was well to be knowen that nothyng was leaft vndoen for the saluing of all creatures: but yet the euyll and the proude, refusyng the free gifte of God, by theyr owne iust and true desertes to be cast of and to bee condemned: and in theyr stede publicanes, harlottes, sinners, and heathen, to be rightfully admitted to the partakyng and felowshyp of saluacion. So was it prophecied afore that be it shoulde, and so did it proue: So was it reason that it should come to passe, & so came it to passe in dede. Thei that vaunted themselfes to bee godly men and righteous, were for theyr vnbeliefe reiected and put away from the free gifte of euangelicall saluacion: and contrary wise, suche men as through promptnesse of beleuyng, and through vncorrupt affeccio haue violently brast in for to come to the Lord, were they neuer so secular, wer they neuer so muche to be abhorred, wer they neuer so muche defoyled with synfulnes, haue been receyued to the felowshyp and brotherhood of the kyngdome of heauen. Wysedome is iustyfyed of all hir childzen.

And one of the Pharisees desyred hym that he woulde eate with hym. And he went into the Pharisees houle, & sate down to meate. And beholde, a woman in that citie (whiche was a synner,) as sone as she knewe that Jesus sate at meate in the Pharisees houle, she brought an Alablaster boxe of oyntement, and stood at his feete behynde hym weppyng, and beganne to washe his feete with teares, and dyd wype them with the heares of her head, and kyssed his feete, and enoynted them with the oyntemente. When the Pharisee (whiche had bidden him) sawe that, he spake within hymselfe, saying: If this man were a prophete, he woulde surely knowe who and what maner a woman this is that toucheth hym, for she is a synner. The texte.

And beholde, there folowed vpanby in the necke hereof a certayne matter, wherin the cale selfe should laye playnly before their ies, the same that the lord had taught in woordes, concernyng the puttyng awaye of suche as thoughte themselues righteous, and the receyuing of synners to grace and fauour. The Pharisees ferre aboue other men were puffed vp in pryde: by reason of knowlage of the lawe, and for the opinion that the people had of their holynelle. And so it befell that one of them prayed the Lorde to take a repaste at home at his houle. Neither did Jesus disdeigne the same to do, who denied no man to haue his presence that woulde. And whan he beyng entred into the Pharisees houle

was set down at the table: beholde a certain womanne, whiche within the same citie was knowen for a notorious synner, as soone as she knewe that the moste mercifull Lorde Jesus, (who would debarre no creature from commyng to hym, who also did moste promptely and readily helpe all the euils of all persones) was there presente: she altogether mistyking herselfe for her synneful nesse, but yet conceyuyng great truste and affiaunce of the mercifull goodnesse of Jesus, did (as ye would saye) breake in parforce into the Pharisees house. The ardent desyre of her herte had shaken of all shame from her, thoughe she knewe well enough with how great stately disdeygnefulnesse, a straunge countenaunce the pharisaicall sorte vsed to turne awaye their faces from synners, and not once to loke vpon them. whereas themselfe within sooth swimmed as full as they: of syn might hold, of muche more grieuous vices. And with her she brought the precious thinges of her moste chiefe pleasures and nicitie, that she had yet remaynyng with her, as monumentes and tokens of remembraunce of her former lyfe, (whiche lyfe she now abhorred,) and vpon Christ: in the beauely loue of whom she now burned) it was her intente without making any store therof, plenteously to poure it out, and in cherysyng of hym to bestowe all these precious and fyne thynges, wherwith she had afore tymes naughtely serued hir owne delicate pleasure, and had made herselfe amiable vnto the world. And the thing that she brought was a fyne delicate litle bore of swete ointment and sauours, whiche vessell they called Alablastre, of a Greke terme, because of the smothenesse of it (whiche letteth, that one maye vneath take it vp, and holde it in his handes for slippyng.) But the ointmente was specially good and fyne, and had coste a great summe of money, for so smale a thyng. And in olde tyme suche as were bondeseruauntes to the sensuall pleasures of the fleashe, did vecay greatly delyte in swete ointmentes and perfumes and especially in coumpaynye at any banquettynges. But see and note the holy importunitie of this woman beyng a synner. She dyd not onely leoperde as an vnbidden geaste boldely to entre into the house of a Pharisee: but also euen as she was decked and trimmed in her arape, came in boldly into the coumpanye as they satte at the bourde. And because the tables of the parlour stoode so, that they letted her to come and caste her selfe down prostrate on the fore syde, at the feete of Jesus: she stood behynd at his backe and (as well as she might do,) begonne to washe his feet with teares of weppyng, marryng for her soule healths the beautie of her yes, which of long tyme afore she was woont in the waye of abhominacion to pernte with Stubie: and the feet of Jesus beyng wel washed with teares tryclyng down from her yes lyke the droppes of rayne in a showre, she wyped drie again, not with any towell of lynnen, but with the heares of her own head, whiche she had vntyll that daye, customablye vsed for the delycate and sensuall pleasure of the fleashe, to enoynt with swete perfume, to dye with coloures, to kembe, and to bynde with wythes of golde enterlaced emong it. The woondierfull loue also of this woman beeyng a synner, was with all this not yet satisfyed: but after that Jesus feet were so washed and wyped, she leaft not kyssyng of them: But all the thynges which were once the instrumentes of her fylthye pleasures, she now turned to the obedient seruice of hym, who onely, and none but he, is to be loued. Thou hast now the plain facion of a synner, through vnfactable importunitie of ardent loue, and throughe stedfastnesse of feith, breakyng parforce into the kyngdome of heauen. Now on the other syde haue thou and vncurable, the churche casteth out of her felowshipp as dead corpses: to the ende that by the exaumple of one, many may be afrayd to sinne. But þ same cumpany doe prayse and magnify the mercye of God, by whose power the dead retourne to life again. For so notable a miracle seen, þ same people said: I great prophete is there sprong vp emongest vs, & god hath taken regard to his people. For the Jewes did as yet denye ne suppose no higher thynge of Christe, but that he was sum notable prophete. And of this act also did the fame of the Lord Jesus growe, the bruite of the matter being spred abrode not only throughout al Jewry, but also throughout all the coastes on euery side that lyeth about ſ sinne Jordane, where John had afore baptised as wel the other people, as also Jesus self.

I great prophete is there sprong vp emongest vs.

And the disciples of John shewed hym of all these thinges. And John called vnto him two of his disciples, and sent them to Jesus, saying: Art thou he that should cum: or shall we loke for another. When the men were come vnto him, they sayd: John Baptist hath sent vs vnto thee, saying: Art thou he that should cum, or shall we awaite for another. And in that same houre he cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of cruell spirites, and vnto many that were blind he gaue sight. And he answered and said vnto them: Goe your waies, and bring word again to John, what thynges ye haue seen and heard, how that the blynd see, the halt goe, the lepres are clensed, the deafe here, the dead rise again, to the poore is the glad tidynges preached, and happi is he, that is not offended at me.

Than certain of Johns disciples, halfe enuying at so great successe of the thinges that were wrought and doen by the handes of Jesus, and hauyng a certain spice of emulacion his name, warying euery one day more famous then other, and in maner derkenyng the glorye of John, of whō they had an hyghe opinion, make relacion vnto John, lyng fast bounde in the pryson, of all the thynges that Jesus spake and dyd.

John therfore of purpose to remedie and cure this affectyonate mynde of his disciples, called two of them apart vnto him, & sēt thē vnto Jesus, to demaund of him this question: Art thou he that was sayd should cum, or is he whose we loke for an other. John had so often alreadie geuen testimonie of Christe, and also poynting at him with his finger, had said of him: Behold the lambe of God, behold the hym that taketh away the sinnes of the worlde. And nothyng is there more contrary to all reason, then to thinke that so great a prophete as John, beyng now nere vnto his death, should begynne to doubte. For though his body were in prison, yet was not his testimonye of Christe bound in chaines: neither did the derkenes of the prison any thing dimme his iudgemente concernyng Christe. For whom he acknowlaged in his mothers wombe, hym dyd he no lesse acknowlage in the pryson. But the synguler goodman iudged it to be most expedient, that he might by this way, as it were, make deliuerie of his disciples vnto the handes of Jesus. So han Johns disciples therfore had doen their message to Christe after the same maner & course as their maister had geuen them in commission, the Lorde Jesus did at the first make them no aunswer: But many miracles doen in their presence, right many sundrie maladies driuen out from suche as were sicke, many vncurable euils put away frō men, vncleane spirites cast out of mē with a word, the sight restored vnto many that were blind, at last thus he aunswered the: To what purpose is it for me to geue sentence of my self, who I am. There is no testimonie more clere oute of doubte, then the testimonye of a mans aries. Goe your wayes and beare word vnto Iohn, what ye haue seene with youre eyes, and what ye haue heard with your eares. The blynde receiue their sight, they that were lame, are made able to walke: lepres are made clene: the deafe haue their hearyng restored: the dead are raysed vp again: the poore &lowe doo embrace the glad newes of saluation: according to the prophecy of Esaye, whiche sayeth: He hath sent me to preache the ghospell vnto the poore. Iohn preached the kyngdome of heauen to be at hande. Weigh ye with your selues whether these thynges whiche ye see, be thynges worthie and semyng for the kyngdom of heauē. And blessed is he, that shal not turne these thinges which I doe for the health of men, into occasion of slaundre to hymselfe warde.

For as the greatnesse of the thinges wrought by me, shall stere many persones to enuie agaynst me: so shall the weakenesse of this body, bee occasion of slaundre to a great many. With this saying Iesus did secretly checke the enuie of Iohns disciples, geuing also therwithall a bywoorde of knowledge that it would so cum to passe, that the worldly open shame of the crosse, (by whiche in any wyse the mystery of the kingdome of heauen was to bee executed and accomplished) would turne many mennes hertes away from the doctrine of the ghospell: and further, that blessed shoulde they bee, who neither woulde beare enuie ne grutche at his glory, ne as men dismaied or troubled with the reproche of open deathe, would sterte backe from his holsome doctrine.

And happy is he that is not offended in me.

The texte. ¶ And whan the messengers of Iohn were departed, he began to speake vnto the people concerning Iohn. What went ye out into the wildernesse for to see? A rede shaken with the winde?
But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in softe rayment? Behold, they which are gorgeously apparelled, and liue delicately, are in kynges courtes. But what went ye foorth to se?
A prophete? yea I say to you, and more then a prophete. This is he, of whom it is written: Behold, I send my aungell before thy face whiche shal prepare thy way before thee. For I say vnto you, among women childrē, is there not a greatter prophete then Iohn Baptiste.

And whan Iohns disciples were gon their way, to reporte vnto hym the answer of Iesus: the Lorde begonne largely to speake in the praise of Iohn, to the entent that none of them should by reason of demaundyng the former question by his disciples, mystrust or suspecte Iohn hymself to be any thyng wauering: or, concernyng his owne testimonie that he had afore geuen of Jesus, to haue now chaunged his mynde, and to be halfe in a doubte of blame.
Iesus therefore remoueth away from Iohn the suspicion of inconstauncie, and also maketh Iohns testimony concernyng hym, to be of the more credēce and weight, in such wise extollyng Iohns excellēt vertues, that yet neuerthelesse he geue hym not the tytle of Messias, whiche tytle certain persons for a good long space did labour to geue vnto him. And in this maner is was that Iesus spake. Yf ye suspecte (saieth he) the Iohn, who a good while seng, gaue testimonie of me, to be nowe of a wauerynge mynde, why than did ye a greate while ago leaue the tounes after that sorte, and renne full and whole into deserte places to see the man to see a rede (trowe ye) that is blowen to and fro with the winde and neuer long abideth stedfaste? But goe to yet, what went ye foorth at laste to see? A man (trowe ye) gaily apparelled in softe sylkes, yt he may with deliciousnes of fare or with ambicion of honour bee corrupted?
But this suspicio cannot light on a mā, which went clothed in a camels hide, whiche gyrte his loynes with a roughe thong of heary leather, whiche lyued

the geuer of remission. The Lord, whan he had spoken all this to the Pharisee, saied vnto the woman: Thy synnes are forgeuen thee. She had made no prayers in wordes, she had made no confession at all in wordes, but she dyd muche the more euidently confesse herselfe by her doinges, and muche the more effectually did she prayse with her teares. And this is to Christe the moste acceptable confession of all. And with this sorte of prayers is he moste soonest moued to shewe mercie. Happie are those teares, blissed is that waste & losse of swete ople, blessed are those kysses, which winne of Jesus to speake suche a worde, as this: Thy synnes are forgeuen thee. For Christ is not one that forgeueth some, and other some reserueth backe: but he doeth freely pardone all sinnes together, not imputyng any parte at all of the former naughtie liuing vnto any persone that is penitent from the botome of the herte. And he saied vnto her: thy sinnes are forgeuen thee.

¶ And they that sate at meate with hym, began to saye within themselues: who is this whiche forgeueth synnes also? And he saied to the woman: Thy fayth hath saued thee: Goe in peace. The texte.

And now marke me agayne the pharisaicall holynesse. True godlynesse doeth as verily reioyce at an other bodyes good chaunces, as at his owne. But the Pharisees that sate there altogether at the table, enuying the mercifulnesse of Jesus vnto the womanne beeyng oppressed with synne, begoonne with secrete thoughtes to murmoure agaynst hym in theyr hertes, saying: what felowe is this, whiche taketh so muche vpon hym, that hauyng none other authoritie but his owne, he remitteth sinnes too, whiche power not one of all the prophetes or patriarches hitherto hath vsurped? No nor the priestes neither do take any ferther thyng vnto them, then to prayse for the synnes of the people. But Jesus knowyng theyr secrete thoughtes, because he would the more confirme the womans herte, and sende her home agayne to her house a glad woman of a forowfull, saied vnto her: Thy feith and constaunt truste in me, hath saued thee: Goe thy wayes in peace. The Pharisees had perswaded themselues, that synnes were forgeuen through burnt sacrifices, and through washynges. And in dede those thynges had in them a certayne figure of thynges ghostly. But the lorde Jesus playnly shewed vnto them, that all synnes are through the feith of the ghospell, full and whole forgeuen for euer, to all suche as repente and emende. And thus in these thinges whiche we haue made reherssall of, hath as it were vnder a certayn shadowe, been sette forth a certayne representyng of both peoples, that is to wete, the Jewes, and the Gentyles: of whiche two peoples, the one, that is to saye, the Jewes, did with kynde and louyng pretense of wordes call and bydde Christe vnto them, crying by the space of many hundred yeres: Come thou o Lorde, and tarye not. But whan he was come, neyther did they on theyr owne parties receyue him as theyr bounden duetie was to haue doen, because they beare themselues bolde on a false perswasion of holynesse whiche they had conceyued in theyr hertes throughe the outewarde obseruyng of the lawe: and yet moreouer did they murmoure and whine agaynst others, that wer willyng to embrace saluacion whan it is offred. And he saied to the woman: thy feyth hath saued thee.

For while they attempte and laboure throughe the oblacion of outwarde bodily thynges, to establyshe their owne righteousnesse, they were not subiecte to the righteousnesse of God, which through feyth is freely geuen. But the people of the Gentiles, to whome Christe was not come (forasmuche as besides pooslattie which reigned in them, they wer moreouer altogether wedded to al kinde of vices, of vices, ne had any affiaunce in the wooꝛkes of the lawe, in whiche they were altogether ignoꝛaunte:) assoone as they had knowleage of Jesus, did (as ye might late) foꝛceably breake in to him where he was, and thꝛough the plaine simplicitie of feith, were made wooꝛthie to haue remission of their grieuous offences: and did withall possible earnest good myndes, embꝛace & kysse the fre gift of god, whiche the Jewes did either let at naught, oꝛ els at lesse wyse did coldely and faintlye embꝛace. Albeit there is in this woman an exaumple of repentaunce sette fooꝛth vnto all creatures in generall, whosoeuer shall begynne to lothe and hate synnefull doopnges, that he turne not hymselfe to Moses, oꝛ to the Pharisens, ne vnto the philosophiers: leat him make haste to Jesus onely and to none other. None there is moꝛe mercifull then he: none moꝛe enclined to pardone and to foꝛgeue. On Jesus leat hym poure oute that he hath tofoꝛe been accustomed wastefully to bestowe on his wicked sensualitee: vnto the oꝛbedient seruice of Jesus, leat hym consecrate al his membꝛes whiche tofoꝛe did serue his filthy & abhominable lustes. The touchyng of Jesus shal take awate all his synnes. If he cannot come to touche Jesus head, leat hym touche hym by the fete. There is no parte of Jesus so basse, but yt maye make hym whole from al his synnes. A woman there was perfectely cured and healed from a bloudy fluxe, whiche had no moꝛe but touched the skirtes of Jesus garmente. And Jesus is wel contented, that it bee imputed to himselfe, whatsoeuer tentilnesse oꝛ pleasure hath been bestowed on the neighbours, yea euē of the moste lowest degree. He will acknowelege any benefite, that is doen to any membꝛes of his. Leate not therefoꝛe all the consideracion of a sinner bee, howe muche he hath offended. Leat hym not kepe any audite oꝛ accompte of his well doinges, as though he would be at an euen poynte and rekonyng with Jesus, in suche soꝛte as the Pharisees did: But let him only with his berap herr thinke himselfe to bee naught, & with all his whole bꝛeste conceiue assured hope and truste on Jesus. Leat hym begyn to hate, that he did once after a naughtie facion loue, let hym begyn to loue that once he wickedly refused and cared not foꝛ. Farthe shal at the moste mercifull Loꝛdes handes obteigne, that merites coulde by no possibilitie hope foꝛ. And here emong al thynges, o moste honeste Theophylus, consider me thꝛee fold soonoꝛie persones, the firste of the woman beeyng a synner: the second of the Pharisee: and the third of the Judge. The Judge onely and none but he, is in berape true dede pure from all staynyng, oꝛ filthinesse of vice and synne, oꝛ rather is the berap true fountayne of al puritie. The woman a synner dooeth nothyng els but wepe, wasshe, wppe, kysse, and enoynte. Here haste thou the markes to knowe the duties of true loue and charitie towardes thy neighbour. The Pharisee beeyng puffed vp in pꝛide with the Judaicall righteousnelle, slaundꝛeously blameth and accuseth the gracious mercifulnesse of the saueour, he thynketh skoꝛne of the synner, and also enuieth her, himselfe beeyng clogged with muche moꝛe grieuous eiuill. And of suche soꝛte foꝛ the moste parte, is the persuasion of righteousnesse, that spꝛyngeth of the habite oꝛ clothyng, of the choyce of meates, of putting a diuersitie betwene one daye and an other, of washynges of the bodye, and the vesselles whiche serue to eate and dꝛinke in, of long beyng in pꝛayers and meditactions, and of other lyke thynges, whiche haue a countenaunce and shewe of godlye deuotion afoꝛe menne, whereas in none of all these thynges consisteth the godlynesse of the ghospell.

And all suche folkes as manye as put theyꝛ truste and confydence in thynges

in thynges of luche lorte as the aboue mencioned, bothe are wont folilhly to ſtande in high conceite of themſelfes, and to thynke vile of their neyghbours, and alſo to bee repiete with enuye, and ſlaunderouſlye to reproue the free goodneſſe of almightie God. For what if that ſame woman had touched the Phariſee, with what a ſkornful loke would he haue ſhake her of, with what waſhynges would he haue pourged hymſelfe from the infection of her? In luche lorte doe they deſpiſe the miſerable ſinning woman: who on their own partes are lore ſicke of enuie, of ſtately pride, and of the diſeaſe of burdening men with falſe crimes: and are ſo muche the more vncurable, for that in theyr owne conceytes and opinions they ſeme nothing ſicke at all. For many times it chaunceth, that menne ſoner amende from notorious and open vices, then from luche as kepe themſelfes hydden vnder the cloke of holines. An aduoutrer, a dronkard, a felowe dronned in riotte, and Idolatrie, a ſouldier that dooeth all as hym luſteth, a man maie ſooner conuerte to good wyndi, than a Phariſee, an enuious perſone, one that ſtandeth in his owne conceyt, a backebiter or a diſſembler.

The texte. And they that ſate at meate with him, beganne to ſaye within themſelfes: who is this whiche forgeueth ſinnes alſo? And he ſayed to the woman: Thy fayth hath ſaued thee: Goe in peace.

Nowe luche as the maiſter of the feaſte is, euen luche are his geaſtes alſo beyng Phariſeis. What a felowe is thiſſame (ſay they) that he remitteth ſynnes? But the iudge, who alone and none but he knewe all menes hertes, who alone of all men myghte haue loked alofte for his holyneſſe, dooeth mayerly and courteouſly correct the pride of the Phariſee: he playeth the aduocate and aduocate for the ſynner, and both aſſoyleth and alſo coumforteth her confeſſyng her ſinfulneſſe. It muſt therfore be the parte of an euangelical paſtour, to flee the craumpiſe of the Phariſee, and to folowe the tendre leuelines of Jeſus in receiuyng ſynners.

The texte. And it foortuned afterward, that he himſelfe alſo went throughout the cities & tounes, preaching and ſhewyng the kyngdome of god, and the twelue with him. And alſo certain weomen, whiche were healed of euill ſpirites and infirmities. Marie whiche is called Magdalene (out of whom went ſeuen deuils) and Joanna the wife of Chuſa Herodes ſtewarde, and Suſanna, and many other, whiche miniſtred vnto him of their ſubſtaunce.

Or ſo great was the gracious goodneſſe of Jeſus towarde ſynners, were they of neuer ſo base and lowe degree, that he did not onely admitte this woman alone vnto the touchyng of his feete, but he dyd alſo at ſum tymes permitte certayn women to goe all aboute with him from place to place as his Apoſtles did, ſuffering as well hymſelf as alſo his diſciples to be releued with the liberalitie & ſeruice of theſame. For where Jeſus (his twelue diſcyples at all aſſayes euerywhere folowyng hym, him, to the end that the fede of euangelicall doctrine might be ꝑ more largely ſpred abrode) did euer now and thā chaunge places, walking through euery citie and village: to the entēt that he and his ſaid diſciples cōtinually goyng about from place to place, and earneſtly attendyng to the onely buſyneſſe of preachyng the ghoſpell and ndthyng elſe, ſhould not bee deſtitute of thynges neceſſary: there were beſides foꝛth certaine holy women which folowed Ieſus wherſoeuer he wēt, & thei wer ſuche as either he had deliuered from vncleane ſpirites, oꝛ els he had healed frō diſeaſes. Emōg theſe was Marie called Magdalene, out of whō the Lord had caſt ſeuen deuils. Ioanna ꝑ wyfe of Chuſa, (who was Herodes ſteward) of a ladie of the courte becum a diſciplesſe vnto Chriſte: one Suſan alſo, and others not a fewe, who dearynge in mynd the beneſite that thei had receiued, did by ſuche meanes as thei conld helpe the buſineſſe of the goſpel foꝛward, miniſtring neceſſaries vnto Ieſus & to his diſciples with their own ꝓpoꝛe goodes. Foꝛ Chriſt beyng a poꝛe man hymſelf had choſen poꝛe men alſo to his Apoſtles: and they chaungyng their ſeates oꝛ reſtyng places, and goyng foꝛth cōtinually from one place to an other, ſo often as they did, coulde not euery where haue bytayles and all other neceſſaries ready foꝛ their ble ſ occupiyng. And as the time was than, it was mete and conuenient that the firſt foundacion of the doctryne of the ghoſpel, ſhould be laied by mē of lowe degree, of very ſlender ſubſtaunce, & alſo of no learnyng ne authoꝛitie. Howbeit Paul (whoſe diſciple I was and did longe tyme folowe and attende vpon hym,) had moꝛe mynde to labour with his owne handes, then to liue at the kindyng of other folkes. But much moꝛe are thei that haue enough of their own and are fitte to preach ꝑ goſpell bound freely to departe to theyꝛ brethren with ſum poꝛcion of that, ꝑ God hath ſent them. And yet this notwithſtandyng, he thought it to be a thing of reaſō and conſcience, that they which ſowed the ſpiritual foode ſhould be relieued and ſuſteined, as often as nede were, with aide and ſuccour of thiges neceſſary foꝛ the body, at the handes of ſuche perſonnes foꝛ whoſe behoufe they toke peynes. But Chriſte becauſe he would teache that this lyberalytie ought not to bee of any compulſion, but of eche folkes owne accoꝛd and voluntary will, he admitted in dede and receiued certain women into his cōpany and traine, but it were only ſuche as of their own accoꝛde dyd folowe: howbeit neither did he call oꝛ ſend foꝛ any vnto him, neyther do we read that euer he craued oꝛ required any thyng of any body, becauſe he would ꝑ more effectually make ſum aſhamed of their chameles faſhions, foꝛ as muche as where they take no peines at all foꝛ the ghoſpels behoufe, yet vnder pretēte of labouryng in the ghoſpell, they will by plain foꝛce and extoꝛcion loke and require to haue of the people againſt their willes, not only that may ſuffyſe foꝛ neceſſitie, but alſo that is moꝛe then enough, becauſe they wyll bee mayntcined in riot and exceſſe. But truely the free liberalitie of good people ſhall neuer fail that man whiche with a ſyncere mynde doeth altogether embuſye and occupie himſelf in preachyng the ghoſpell. Moꝛeouer Ieſus lyke as he did admit all perſons, what euer they were, to the helpyng foꝛwarde of the ghoſpell: ſo did he vſe not to admit eyther his mother oꝛ any of his brethren and kinſfolkes to hindꝛe the effectuall ꝓcedyng of the ghoſpell.

The texte. When muche people were gathered together, and were cum to hym oute of all cyties, he ſpake by a ſimilitude. The ſower weute out to ſowe his ſeede: and as he ſowed, ſum fell by the the waye lyde, and it was troden downe and the fowles of the ayre deuoured it vp. And some fell on stones, and as soone as it was sprong vp, it withered away, becau'e it lacked moysture. And some fell emong thornes, and the thornes sprang vp with it and choked it. And some fell on good ground, and sprang vp and bare fruite, an hundredth folde. And as he sayed these thinges he cryed: He that hath eares to heare let hym heare.

And on a certaine daye whan he was goen forth of the house vnto a lakes syde, by reason of the great multitude of people whiche resorted vnto him to heare hym, and there sytting on the shoore banke busely teaching the people, so great a multitude of bothe men & women out of the cities thereby, came renning to heare hym, that the people, gathering so thycke about hym, he was constreigned to go into a bote, and therehens as it had been out of a chayre or pulpite, he taught the multitude beyng assembled of all sortes of people, and spake many thynges vnto them vnder the misticall derke couert of similitudes & parables: partely that he might the more effectually stere vp in them an earneste desyre to learne: and partely that it might the more diepely settle and reste in their mindes, that had been enpatented by a mystical derke colour of speaking.

The sower went out to sow his seede

First therefore he putte forth a similitude or parable to aduertise them all with gredie myndes to receyue the preachyng of the gospell, and not to reakon it sufficient to haue heard it, onleste they bestowed it whan they had heard it to the vse and exercise of godlynesse. There went forth, (quod he,) a certayn housbandmanne to sowe his sede, and while he dooeth euerywhere caste his sede abroode leaupng no place voyde, as one that coueted as muche encreace as was possible: the sedes were receyued in diuerse and sondrye places of the ground, not beyng euery one of equall fruitfulnesse, to beare. For some of the sedes whan they were cast, fell by the high wayes syde, and these sedes partly wer troden on and all to bruised with the feet of suche as wente by the waye: the remnaunte, because it was not couered with earth, the birdes of the ayre dyd eate vp. Agayn some sedes fell in stonie places of the sayle, and beyng receyued with thynne couert of earth whiche scarcely hydde the stones, it sprong vp in dede a litle while: but because it had not earthe ynoughe vnderneathe it to geue it moysture to the full ryppenesse, anon after it was shot forth aboue grounde, it dryed vp and withered awaye as soone as any feruent heate of the sunne came to it, and so euen in the first bladyng it perished. Agayne some of the sedes fell emong thornes, and sprong vp in dede also, but the thornes that sprong vp with it because they quickely shoote vp and do commonly sprede themselues abroode of more thickenesse and heigth also then the corne dooeth, it came to passe that the blade that had come of good sede, was smouldred and stifled vp, so that it could not shoote vp so high to haue the open ayer at large. But yet did not all the sedes fall vnluckily. For some there was that fell vpon good earth, and whan it was sprong forth brought fruite an hundredfold double.

Sum fell by high wayes syde. &c.

And sum fell emog thornes.

Whan the Lorde had thus muche sayed, because he knewe that the woordes whiche he had spoken wer not perfectely vnderstanded of euery bodye: and yet willyng to haue them afterward beare wel in mynde the parable whiche diuerse ly concerned the welth of all creatures: he cryed with a loud voyce, saying: He that hath eares apte to heare the wysedome of the gholpel, leat him herken well to the woordes whiche I haue nowe spoken. For they requyre to haue an heater neyther grosse of capacitie and vnderstandyng, nor that wyl stande gaping and peanyng whan he should geue eare as though he were more then halfe in

The texte.

¶ And his disciples asked hym, saying: what manier of similitude is this? And he sayed: Vnto you it is geuen to knowe the kyngdome of God: but to other by parables, that when they see, they should not see, and when they heare, they should not vnderstande. The parable is this. The sede is the worde of God. Those that are beside the waye, are they that heare: than commeth the deuill and taketh away the worde out of their hertes, lest they should beleue and be saued. They on the stones, are they which when they heare receyue the worde with ioye, and these haue no rootes, which for a while beleue, and in tyme of temptacion goe awaye. And that which fell emong thornes are they which, when they haue hearde, go forth and are choked with cares, and ryches, and voluptuous living, and bring foorth no fruite. That which fell in the good ground: are they which with a pure and good herte, heare the worde, and kepe it, and bring foorth fruite through patience.

And the disciples which were nerest about Jesus, and moste familiar with hym, desired hym to declare the derke misterye of the parable. To whom thus he sayed: vnto you as vnto familiar frendes of houshold, it is geuen to know the mistical secretes of the kyngdome of God. The courtes of temporall kinges haue certain priuities belonging to the, and matiers of counsail which are kept priuate from the multitude of the common people, and from all suche others as haue nothyng to do in the courte: the kyngdome of the ghospell also hath in lyke manier secrete priuities belonging to it, whiche many not without consideracion and good cause why be vttered to euery body at all auentures: but must so be sette forth as they maye be seen onely of them which are of houshold belonging to God almightes court, and vnto others it must be enwrapped and shadowed in derke parables, to the entente that suche as are vnworthy persones, when they see it, maye not see it: and when they heare it, maye not vnderstande it. And as for the parable this is the secrete meuyng of it. The sower is the sonne of man, the grounde the herte of man, the seed is the worde of the ghospell. It is not yearthly seed but heauenly, ne proceded from man: and therfore called the worde of God. The sonne of man leaueth no place wherin, but casteth his sede abrode euery where, but partely through the malice of Satan, and partely through the defaulte of man it happeneth that the commyng vp and growyng of it proueth well but in fewe.

For the seed that fell by the waye syde betokeneth them whiche after a light sorte and negligently or slugishely do heare the worde of God: and byandby or euer it can any thing settle in theyr myndes, commeth the deuil, and putting into them contrarie thoughtes, taketh out of theyr mynde all that they heatde, as one enuying at theyr welth, and with wicked suggestions doyng all the let he can that they maye not attayne saluacion. For as the sonne of manne laboreth by all meanes possible to bring sinners to saluacion: so doeth the other leaue nothyng vnattempted to drawe as many as euer he maye to damnacion: he therefore immediately after the castyng forth of the seed of the worde declared euangelicall, flyghyng sodaynely to it, dooeth gather it vp ere it can cleue and sticke fast in the mynde: so that by this tyme it forceth nothyng at all to haue heard it. Furthermore the sede receyued in stone grounde dooeth sygnifye them, whiche hearyng the worde receiue it with ioye, and laye it vp in their mynde, so that lyke the freashe grene blades of late sowen corne newely shotte vp aboue grounde, they shewe some hope and tokens of godlynes of themselues selues in certain outward thinges. But forasmuch as the thing which they haue heard is not throughly implanted in them, nor hath not taken sure rooting (as it were) in the inmost affection of their hertes, they are for a litle time obediently reuiued after the worde of god, but whan any blousterynge storme of euils dooeth arise, they quaille and forsake their good beginnyng. For an easie tryng it is in prosperitie to kepe the doctrine of the ghospel, but if thou haue not throughly sucked and conceiued an earnest affection & zele towardes true godlynesse: than at whatsoeuer tyme aduersitye requireth that same stout strength of an euangelicall hert: that same face of holynesse shewed for a tyme, doeth vanishe away.

Now the sede that fell emong thornes dooeth sygnifie them whiche after that they haue receiued the sede of Goddes worde, beare away with them no frute of true godlynesse thereby, because that their affection towardes better liuyng is stifled and oppressed with cares of this worlde, with ryches, and with the sensuall pleasures of this preset life. But the sede that was cast vpon good yearth betokeneth them whiche with a sincere herte taking diligent hede, and being void from all vaine affeccions dooe receiue the holsome worde, and lay it vp in their memorie, and cause it throughly to synke downe into the bottome of their affeccions, so that by no assaulte of euils thei can be remoued from the earnest exercise of godlynesse ons entered and begonne. And that whiche fell emong thornes &c.

The texte.

No man whan he lighteth a candele, couereth it with a vessell, or putteth it vnder a table, but setteth it on a candelsticke, that they whiche entre in may se light. Nothyng is in secrete that shall not cum abrode. Neither any thyng hid that shall not be knowen, and cum to light. Take hede therefore howe ye heare. For whosoeuer hath, to hym shalbe geuen, and whosoeuer hath not from hym shalbe taken, euen that same whiche he supposeth that he hath.

No man whē he lighteth a candle &c.

This parable therfore did Iesus vouchesaue to expounde to his disciples seuerally by themselues: partely because they should learne in other parables after lyke maner with a godly curiositie to serche out the derke meanig of them: and partely that afterwarde whan due tyme and occasion should be, they myght preache openly to al creatures, the same thing whiche they had at that tyme heard in secrete. For the vnderstandyng of holy doctrine is a cleare lyghte. And be that geueth parte of this lighte abrode to others, dooeth not geue it to the entent to haue it kepte hidden, but that it maye shewe lyghte abrode to many. For no man (saieth he) doth light a candell, & keeping lighted dooeth couer the same with a vessell, ne setteth it vnder the table: but he fyxeth setteth it on a candelsticke to the ende that suche personnes as come into the house may se light. For there is nothing deliuered vnto you now priuately or enricked or wrapped in derke parables: but the same hereafter must be opened to the whole worlde, nor nothyng is now so derke or so closely hydden frō the vnderstandyng of the vnlearned: but the same in processe of tyme shall be brought out by you, and shal bre sette forth to the knowlage of al creatures. Wherefore ye muste take euen verye speciall good heede, that ye with great carefulnes imprint in your mindes the thinges that ye now heare, so that nothyng fall out of your remembraunce or perysshe. He that greedily receyueth the vnderstandyng of the mistical doctrine of god, & diligently laieth the same vp in his heart as a treasure, declareth hymselfe worthy to haue mo thinges committed vnto his credite, forasmuche as he diligently kepeth that whiche is geuen vnto hym. For he that hath, shall haue more geuen hym, but whoso throughe his owne negligence, leseth the thyng that he once had, suche an one shall not onely haue no more geuen vnto him, but also euen that same whiche he semed to haue, shalbe taken away from him, because he so vnchesely kepte the euangelicall treasour, where with all how much the rycher that one is, so muche the more doeth he couet to be still further and further enriched.

The text. Than came to him his mother, and his brethren: and they could not cum to him for preasse. And it was told hym, and said: Thy mother and thy brethren stand without and would se the. He aunswered and said vnto them: My mother and my brethren are these whiche heare the word of God, and doe it.

And concernyng suche lyke matters as these are, the lord Jesus put foorth many other parables vnto the people: all which euery one of them, he expounded seuerally vnto his disciples. And because the Lord would declare what a precious thyng the doctrine of the gospell is, and with how great diligence and carefulnesse it ought to be taughte and to be receiued: it happened on a certain day, that while Jesus was teaching the people, his mother & his brethren came to the place be yng very desirous and faine to haue spoke with him about sum matter (whatsoeuer it was) concernynge theyr familye and houshold. And thei could not cum to him for ꝑ thicke preasse of ꝑ multitude, wherfore there was word geue him by others, that his mother and his brethren stode at the dore, being desirous to speake with him. But Jesus to declare that the woorde of the ghospell is a more precious thyng, then that it ought to be broken of, or interrupted for any worldly affeccions, or for any care of houselholde busynesse and affayres: made this aunswer to them that had geuen hym word of the matter: My mother (ꝙ he) and my brethren are they whiche heare the woord of god, and dooe it, geuyng therby a lesson, that carnall kynred ought not to be regarded or acknowleaged, so long or as oft as any matters concernyng the soule health are in hand.

Than came to hym hys mother and his brethre.

My mother and brethre are these, which heare the word of God and do it.

The text. And it chaunced on a certain day, that he went into a ship, and his disciples also. And he said vnto them: let vs goe ouer vnto the other side of the lake. And they launched forth. But as they sailed, he fell asleepe. And there arose a storme of wind in the lake: and they were filled with water, and they were in ieopardy: And they came to him, and awoke him, saying: Master, master, we are lost. Then he arose, and rebuked the winde and the rempest of water, & they ceassed and it were calme. And he said vnto them: where is your faythe? They feared and wondred among them selues, saying: what (thinke ye) is this? For he commaundeth bothe the wyndes and the water, and they obey him.

In other thyng moreouer also it was the Lordes wyll and pleasure by very true matters in dede, to teache vnto his disceyples, howe that in al matters of trouble and busines by meanes wherof this world would in time to cum arise against the forewarde procedynges of the gospell, they ought not to falle in any despaire of mynde, nor any of them trust in his own strength, but to depende and rest all on his helpe, and further that his help shal not falle vs in any perilles or daungers, at leaste wyse, yf we want not faythfull trust in hym, and if we wyll with prayers procedyng from the botome of our heer, call for his aide and succour. It so befell therfore on a certain daye, that Jesus whan he had taught the people all the daie long, entred into a bote with his

his disciples, and bid them make passage ouer vnto the other side, the tyme now drawyng well toward nyghte. And as they were sailing, Jesus fell a slepe. And in the meane season there sodainly arose a pierce of wind, & so troubled the water, that by reason of the waues cumming fast ouer into the ship, the disciples were in ieopardye. And beyng sore afrayed, they went vnto Jesus, and reised him out of his slepe, saiyng: Maister thou slepest, and we perishe. But Jesus arisyng vp, rebuked the wynde, and the roughnesse of the water, and bid it to be still. And immediatelye bothe elementes, that is to wete, bothe the aier and the water acknowlaged their Lorde. And at his cõmaundement immediatly followed a great caulmnesse and stilnesse of theim bothe. And this beyng doen, he turned to his disciples, and chidyng them for that they had been so sore afrayed in his presẽce, seeing that thei had hard hym so often teach that nothing should hurt thẽ, at least waies, if thei would kepe a stedfast and a continuall faith and truste towarde him, thus he sayed: Where is now becũ that same faithfull truste of yours that ye shoulde haue in me? truely the defaulte therof was the thyng that reised vp all this troublous blousteryng. Upon this, all the companie that were carryed in the ship, whan they sawe the whole tempest so sodainly quieted in a momẽt at the onely voice of his rebukyng, and seing in him certain manifest tokens of sum thyng aboue the coumpace of mans reache: they were takẽ both with a feare and also with a great woundryng at hym, in so muche that they saied: what a man is thisselfsame? for he dooeth not onely commaunde and charge spyrites to goe out of men, but also hath rewle and commaundemente ouer the dead and deasse elementes, the sea, & the windes, and they obey his commaundemẽtes. So often therefore as it shall fortune vs also to bee in ieopardy, so often as Jesus sleperh in our mides, let vs with godly desires pluche him by ỹ sleue, let vs with our continual praiers awake him, and reise him: & immediately shall the tempeste bee tourned into caulmnesse. Ambicion is an euyll winde: wrathfulnesse and hatred are perillous wheorle wyndes: naughty & corrupt desires bee horrible waues and sourges: yea and readye to ouerwhelme the barge of our minde, and to turne it vpsidedoune. But the lord is to be reised out of his slepe, that he may commaunde and rewle these mocions, & streight waies shall all the tempeste ceasse.

And thei sailled to the region of the Gaderenites, whiche is ouer against Galilee. And whan he went out to lande, there mette him out of the citie a certain man, whiche had a deuill long tyme, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in graues. Whan he saw Jesus, and had creped: he fell doune before him, and with a loude voyce said: What haue I & to dooe with thee Jesus, thou sonne of the god most highest? I beseche thee torment me not: for he commaunded the foule spirite to cum out of the man. For oftetymes he had caught him, and he was bound with chaynes, and kept with fetters, and he brake the bandes, and was carryed of the fiend into wildernesse. And Jesus axed him, saiyng: what is thy name? And he said, Legio, because many deuils wer entered into him. And they besought him that he would not commaũd theim, to goe out into the diepe. And there was there an heard of swine, feduing on a hille, and they besought him, that he would suffer them to enter into them. And he suffered them. Than went the deuils out of the man, and entred into the swine. And the heard ranne headlõg with violence into the lake, and were choked. Whan the heardmen sawe what had chaunced, they fled, and tolde it in the citie, and in the villages. And they came out to see what was doen: and came to Jesus, and found the man (out of whom the deuils were departed) sittyng at the fete of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mynd, and they were afraied. They also whiche sawe it, tolde them by what meanes he that was possessed of the deuils was healed. And all the multytude of the Gaderenites besought him that he would departe from them: for they were taken with great feare. The texte.

So the water beeyng all made cauime and ſtill again, they ſayled into the lande of the Gaderenites, whiche is right ouer againſt Gallee, a part of the neather or lower Arabie. And whan he was cum foorth of the ſhippe to land, there mette him a certayn man, which had been now a great long ſeaſon poſſeſſed and vexed of an outragious cruell ſpirite: in ſo muche, that neyther he could be kept couered with any clothes, nor yet with any ropes or chaines be kept at home within doores: but he went wandryng about in the graues of dead folkes, and oftentymes would he out of them ſkye vpon ſuche as paſſed by on the way. This man comyng forth at the noiſe of ſtrangers arriuing there, ſawe Jeſus, not withoute a good turne and benefite for his part. For Jeſus takyng pitie and compaſſion on the manne, commaunded the wicked ſpirite to departe out of him. And the partie that was poſſeſſed of ỹ deuil fel downe at the knees of Jeſus. For a certain priuie power of the vertue of his godhed, had drawen the partie vnto him. But the vnclean ſpirite made an houge rorying out, through ỹ mouth of the miſerable ſelie creature, & ſayd: O Jeſus the ſonne of the moſt high god in heauē, what haue I to do with thee? I beſeche thee do not torment me. For the cōmaundement of ỹ lord wrought ſtrongly vpon hym to leaue the manne whom he had by a long ſpace vexed. Many tymes and ofte would this wicked ſpirite ceaſe on the man, & wounde after ſo manifold pieteous ſoztes moſte cruelly tormente, and vexe him, that brakyng all his fetters, his chaines, and al thinges that he was bound with all, he ſhould bee driuen and feaſed of the deuill into deſert places. Wherfore the ſayed ſpirite was yll wyllyng and loth to leaue his olde habitation. Yea and moreouer full ſore was he afeard leſte the day had beenn now cum, in whiche they ſhould bee adiudged to euerlaſtyng payne and torment of helle, there to be eternally punished for all the euil & woe which here in this world they torment and plague men withal. So than it was not repentaunce of his euill doynges that enforced him to theſe praiers, but feare of punishemente. But Jeſus to the ende that the greatnes of the miracle ſhould bee the better knowen to all folkes, demaunded of the wicked ſpirite what was his name. He aūſwered, a legiō (meaning by this ſouldierly word perteinig to warfare, that the manne was poſſeſſed not of one deuill alone, but of an innumerable multitude of deuils) for there is no one great ſinne without a great ambuſhmente of vyces together in a clouſter. But there is no ſickeneſſe of the mynde ſo greuous, there is none ſo great a multitude of great officers, but it geueth place and departeth at the commaundemente of Jeſus. And all theſe deuyls beyng now in feare therof, praied Jeſus that in caſe it could not bee auoyded but that thei muſt nedes be caſt out of that mā which thei were in, yet at leaſt wyſe they myght not be commaunded to go doune into the depe pitte of hell whiche place they know to be ordeined for them at the laſt day of iudgemēt.

And not ferre from the ſame place, vpon a certain hill whiche lay harde by, in maner directly aboue the ſame water, there was a greate heard of ſwyne feedyng at their paſture: ſo that euen by that very point we may perceyue that ỹ ſaid countrey was heathen, and wholy geuen to al vngodlines. For ỹ Jewes by their lawe did not, ne might eate no ſwynes fleſche.

And the deuils made requeſt that by the ſufferaunce of the lorde they myght haue libertie to flitte out of the man into the ſaid hogges: ſo great a deſyre & luſte had the wicked ſpirites to doe hurt and miſchiefe. And Jeſus to make ỹ

And immediately the deuils leaft the man, & wet into the hogges, and stregght waies was al the whole heard caried hedlong in a furious rage as fast as they might driue into the poole and were there dzowned (lone dead. As soone as the swyneheardes sawe this, they were soze afrayed, and went their waies thence as fast as thei might renne, into the townes and villages to beare tydynges al about what was happened. The inhabitauntes of the countreye scarcely beleuyng the tale that the swyneheardes tolde: went foozth to see the prouffe and tokens of that so uncredible a matter. And cumming to the place, they see the heard to be now perysshed and loste, whiche a litle before was an heard of a mighty great multitude. And the man also whiche tyll that tyme was possessed of many deuils, and for his notable mischiefe that he did in the countrey was well knowen vnto euery body: hym they fynde now all quiet and patient, and of whole mynde, wearyng clothes on his bodie, and sitting at the fete of Jesus. For of an harbourer of deiuils was he sodaynly made a disciple, and scholar of Jesus. And whereas to foze he was tumbled and dzuen by wicked spirites to all kyndes of mischief, now by the tentyll and meke spirite of the most merciful lozde, he is in framyng to all earnest and deuout exercise of godlynesse. Wherupon a certayne feare came vpon them all, where as they should rather haue glozified god, and louingly enbzaced the power of him who had restozed health to a most miserable creature, beyng otherwise past all hope of recouerie. They would fayne therfoze haue had Jesus goen, as people dzeding his power, but not knowyng his goodnesse: and they be moze moued with the losse of theyr cattel, then with the health of the man restozed again. Yet durste thei not be bolde to banishe oz dziue him out of their region: but the Gerasens tentilly desyze and prayde him in the name of all the whole countreye to departe out of theyr coastes, so great feare had taken and possessed them all. And Jesus, because he wouldе not caste an holy thing emong dogges, returned agayne to his shippe. But the partie whiche was deliuered from deuils, desyred Jesus that he might continue in his coumpaignye and awayte on hym, seeyng that he was bound vnto hym alone and to none other for receiuing his health. But Jesus wouldе not suffre it, but sayed vnto hym: returne to thine owne house, to the ende that by thyne owne relacion, and by sight of thee, all folkes maye certaynely knowe what thou were afore, and what thou arte now, throughout the benefite of God. Thy countreymen refuse to haue me come and be emong them: yet bee thou at the leaste wyse a wytnesse emong them what ill frendes they haue been to themselues in castyng me out of theyr region. thilsame was yet some maner of entreaunce, and fyrst settyng foorth of preachyng the gospel emong folkes beyng grosse and wicked and verye well to be resembled to those swyne, into whiche the deuils did flitte whan they lefte the man. Neyther was the open publyshyng of this man, whom the sayed deuils had to fore possessed, altogether in vayne. For many did beleue and meruayl at the thyng. And certes by this exaumple or figure, did the lorde Jesus geue a lesson to vs that the grace of the ghospell ought to be proferred to euery bodye, bee they neuer so wicked, but yet notwithstandyng that thesame is not to bee thrust in theyr lappes beeyng vnwillyng to receyue it, and also refusyng it. But agayne on the other syde they muste be so leafte and forsaken, that some sparke of true godlynesse be lefte emongst thē, whiche one daye in tyme to come maye by occasion appere and sparcle vp.

The texte. ¶ And it fortuned that whan Jesus was come agayne, the people receyued him. For they all awaited for hym: And beholde, there came a man named Jairus (and he was a rewter of the synagogue) and he fell downe at Jesus feete, praying hym, that he would come into his house, for he had but one daughter onely, vpon a twelue yeares of age, and she laye a dying.

Jesus therfore went backe agayne by shippe into Galilee, from whence he had come, where he was now greatly spoke of, and wonderful in euery mānes mouth, for at his returnyng a great multitude of men receiued him which with great mislyng of him did looke for his returne from þ Gerasenes. And beholde ekeions an occasion whiche might declare aswell howe readye Jesus was to helpe euery body, bothe tyche and poore, good and bad, as also howe muche behinde they were in beleuyng and trustyng of God, which emong the Jewes semed to be chiefe pillours of religion, then those whiche emong the inferiour people were accounpted moste vile and abiect. For one of the chiefe of the Synagogue called Jairus came to Jesus, for this Jairus had a daughter, within a litle ouer or vnder, about the age of twelue yeares, and she was euen nowe in dying. He fell downe therfore at the feete of Jesus, desyryng that he would vouchesalue to come home to his house and to helpe his daughter whiche euen at that present laye in dying. After suche a like sorte is the phisician wont to be called in a tyme of vrgēt nede: Come proue what thou canst doe: howe muche more full was the feithfull truste and beliefe of the Centurion, whiche sayed þ it was no nede of his bodely presence, but that Jesus was hable with a mere woorde of his mouthe, to helpe and to heale whom him lusteth. Jesus folowed the desire of Jairus and made haste towardes his house.

The texte. But as he went the people thronged hym. And a woman, hauyng an issue of blonde twelue yeares (whiche had spent all her substaunce vpon phisitians, neyther could be holpen of any) came behynde hym, and touched the hem of his rayment, and immediately her issue of blonde stanched. And Jesus sayed: who is it that hath touched me, whan euery man denyed, Master (and they that were with hym) sayed: thou seest, the people throuste the and bere the, and sayest, who hath touched me? And Jesus sayed, some body hath touched me. For I perceyue that vertue is gone out of me. Whan the woman sawe that she was not hid, she came trēbling, and fell at his feete, and tolde hym before all the people for what cause she had touched hym, and howe she was healed immediatly. And he sayed vnto her: daughter, be of good coumforte. Thy feyth hath saued thee, goe in peace.

And loe in his goyng on the waye thitherwarde, by reason that the throng of people were thicke about him on euery syde, so great was the desyre of euery bodye bothe to heare him and to see him) Jesus was in maner borne downe emong them. And euen emongst the thickest of the people, there habde wroong and thrust in emongst them a certain woman which had been sicke by the space of twelue yeares of the bloudy flixe, a disease lothely and muche to be abhorred. And for loue of health, she hadde bestowed all her substaunce vpon physicians: whiche from time to tyme fed her forth with fayre promises of easing her payne, howbeit they holpe her nothyng at all, but cast her into another disease of worse: uertie, more then she had afore. There this good wise womā beyng destitute of all mannes helpe, tooke her refuge vnto goddes helpe, conceyuyng a mercyaplous truste in Jesus, that if she might touche any parte of hym, or any thyng about him, she should be healed. Notwithstandyng muche ashamed she was to come forth before hym, and to discouer her foule disease that was to be a shamed of. But willing as it were by preuie stealth to geat from him the benefite of her health, she crepte and gotte to hym behynde his backe and touched the vtmoste skirt of his garment, whiche with the throng of the people was drawen this waye and that waye. And immediately she perceiued her disease to be gon, and the bloudie flixe to be clene stopped. And straight Jesus nothyng enuyed the sicke woman that had her health, but willyng to shewe vnto the rewler of the synagogue and to the other Iewes a paterne of perfect feyth, sayed: Who hath touched me? Whan others that went nerte vnto hym sayed that they had not touched hym: Peter and the other disciples whiche were nerte vnto Jesus neuer from his heles, sayed: Maister, a thicke preesse and throng of people doeth on euery side come vpon the, and thrust thee, and as thoughe there wer but two or three here, doest thou aske who hath touched thee? But Jesus geuyng a byword that his speakyng was of no common maner of touching, as his disciples did mene, aunswered: some bodie hath touched me, not afreet the common satisfaction of touchyng one another in goyng, but otherwyse. He knoweth it himselfe whosoeuer it be: for I at the touching felte a certayne bettle procede forth from me vnto the parte that touched me. Whan no bodie made aunswer, and Jesus cast his yes aboute all the coumpanie, as thoughe he soughte who it was, that would priuily haue stolen this benefite, the woman knowing that what she had doen halfe by stealth, was not vnknowen to Jesus, came forth before him with great feare: and fallyng down at his feete confessed before all the people, bothe for what cause she had touched hym, and also howe she was immediately healed of her disease, whereof she had been sore sicke whole twelue yeares space. the physicians taking great labour about her in vayne. The moste mercifull Lorde driue her parforce to this confession: not to shame the woman by detecting her, but to declare vnto the Iewes how muche and howe great a thyng it is, that an assured feith maye doe. But Jesus comforting the woman beyng now in feare, and looking for no lesse then a great rebuke for his presumption, sayed: daughter thy feith hath deserued to haue thy health geuen thee: goe in peace, and this my benefyte bee with the for euer: with this saying he touched and nipped the pharises and Scribes, who put more hope in their owne workes, then in the goodnesse of God.

I perceiue that vertue is gone out of me.

Thy feith hath saued thee.

¶ While he yet spake, there came one from the rewlers of the Synagogues house whiche sayed to him: thy daughter is dede, disease not the maister. But whan Jesus heard: that woord: he aunswered the father of the damosell: feare not, beleue onelye and she shall be made whole. And when he came to the house, he suffered no maune to go in with hym, saue Peter, James, and Johan, and the father and the mother of the mayden. Euery bodye wepte: and bewailed for her. And he sayed wepe not. The damosell is not dead: but sleepeth. And they laughed hym to skorne, knowyng that she was dede. And he thrust them all oute and caught her by the hande, and cryed, saying: mayde arise. And her spirite came agayne, and she arose streyghtwaye. And he commaunded to geue her meate. And the father and the mother of her were astouned. But he warned them, that they should tell no man what was doen.

The lorde Jesus had not yet ended speakyng these woordes, whan one of the maister of the Synagogues house came rennyng and sayed: Sir neuer trouble ne disease ye the Lorde any further, who is now lyke to come in vayne, for thy daughter is already dead: The felow that brought this worde thought ne had no greater ne higher opinion or beliefe of Jesus, then of some other especiall good phisician, who coulde haue holpen her beeyng sicke, and alyue: but to reyse her agayn beeyng dead, that were he by no meanes hable to doo. Whan Jesus sawe Jairus deadly astouned and amased at this newes, he conforted hym saying: be not afrayed: onely haue thou a feithfull beliefe, and the gierle shalbe safe.

Whan they were come to the Maister of the Synagogues house, Jesus woulde not suffre any moe of the multitude to go in at the doores with hym, but Peter, James, and John, and with them also the father and mother of the gierle. Whan he came in, he found the house all full of mourning. For the dead mayden was wept for, and bewayled of all her frendes and kinsfolkes: whiche dewtie and office of mournyng is commonlye dooen to the great ryche folkes at their deathes for a pryde and honour, more then for any sorowes. For they do make and appoynte certayne for the nonce to make lamentation, to syng doulfull songes of mourning, and to shewe an outwarde countenaunce of sorowe by wepyng and wryngyng of their handes, and beatyng or tearyng themselues. All this pompe and bayne shewe did Jesus refreigne and forbid, saying: make none of you no weppyng: for the mayden is not deade, but she sleepeth. And they had hym in derision for his so saying: because they knewe certaynely that she was dead in dede. Than Jesus entreyng with a verye fewe persones into the Inner chambre where the dead corpse of the mayden laye, he toke her by the hande, muche like as though he should but awake her out of her slepe, saying with a good loude voyce: mayden arise. And what followed? No creature a liue doeth more lightlier awake from slepe at the voyce of any that calleth hym vp, then this mayden arose agayne from death to lyfe as soone as Jesus spake vnto her. For not onely her soule and lyfe retourned agayne into the tabernacle of her body, from whens it had tofore departed: but also she arose vp, and walked about the house as merry and lustie as euer she was before. And Jesus to thentent that it shoulde bee a more certayne and euident declaration of life perfectely restored vnto hir, wylled meat to be geuen vnto hir, whiche thyng whan the father and mother of the gierle saw, they wer greatly astouned. And Jesus gaue them a great charge, that they shoulde make no wordes to no creature of the thyng that had happened, as though he had been verye fayne that this miracle shoulde bee knowen but to a fewe, partelye to teache vs, that we ought not to hunte for the glory and prayse of our well dooynges at the handes of men, and partely to signifie by this figure and exaumple, that in light faultes a rebuke secretely geuen may be sufficient. For the gierle beeing deade dooeth betoken a man throughe weakenesse and fraultie fallen into syn. The deathe was yet freshe, the corpse had not come abrode into open sight. Therfore the multitude beeing shut without doores, the matter was al ended, and but a fewe persons made priuie vnto it. But happie and blissed are they, whome Jesus dooeth so vouchesalue to take by the hande.

And Herode the Tetrarche heard of all that was doen by hym, and he doubted because that it was sayed of some, that Iohn was arisen agayn from death: and of some, that Helias had appered: and of some, that one of the olde Prophetes was arysen agayne. And Herode sayed: Iohn haue I beheaded, but who is this of whom I heare suche thynges? And he desired to see hym.

By reason of these thynges the name of Iesus was so bruited abrode and made so famous, that the reporte of all his woorkynges and doynges came eue to the eares of Herode the Tetrarche. For whereas he knewe not Iesus, and heard sate that a certain man there was who at the byddyng of his word could and did cast out deuils, did put awaye diseases, did restore the lame, and suche as were taken and had their sinowes shrounken, did make clene the lepres, did rayse vp the dead to life agayn: he was in great doubte and wonderously troubled in his mynde, what man this might be so sodaynly sprong vp.

Some boasted abrode that Iesus was Iohn, whom Herode a litle tofore had slayne, and the same Iohn to haue returned to lyfe agayne, and therefore beyng

now as it were made halfe a God, to bee wered mightye in dooyng of suche great miracles. Others said, that he was Helias, whom beeyng taken vp in a fiery charlot, the Jewes did loke for that he should cum agayn, accordyng to the prophecie of Malachias. Agayne sum supposed he was sum other of the olde Prophetes, the memorie of whiche Prophetes was high and holy, and was had in great reuerence among the Jewes. Howbeit Herode fearing on his owne behalfe yf John were reuiued again whom he had put to death, & reckening it a thing vncredible, ỳ a man once dead, should be returned again to life, saied: As for John I mine own self haue caused to be beheaded, who beyng dispatched & rid out of the worlde, I thought there had none been left a liue which would haue enterprised to do any suche great matters. And what felow is this of whō Jheare much greater thinges thē euer John wrought? And hereupō he earnestly sought sum occasiō to haue a sight of him, not to be made better thereby, but to satisfie his own curiositie to know all thynges, orels in case he should so thinke good, to do euen thatsame by him that he had doen by John afore. But Jesus forasmuche as he knew Herodes mynd wel inough, would not cum where to be seen of him. For he was not cum for any such purpose to fede or delite the eyes of wicked princes with his miracles, but to bring the simple poore folkes to helth: nor to be beheaded did not like him, who had predestinate vnto himselfe the high exalted standard of ỳ crosse. John haue I beheaded.

And the Apostles returned, and tolde him al that they had doen. And he toke them, and went aside into a solitary place, nigh vnto the citie called Bethsaida, whiche whan the people knew, they folowed him. And he receiued them, and spake vnto them of the kingdom of god, and healed them that had nede to be healed. The texte

After this the twelue returned home again vnto Jesus, with greate cherefulnes, declaring how the preaching of the gospell had very well prospered, and how great miracles euen thei also had doen in his name. But Jesus called them backe vnto sobrenesse and humilitie, teachyng that they shoulde not were any thyng the more haulte, ne take any thing the more highly vpō theim for the prosperous successe of any such maner thiges. For he enfourmed thē that miracles are wrought and doen through the power of god & not of men, and thesame oftentimes to be shewed for the profyt by other men, then suche as are predestinate to euerlastyng life: and that onely the godlynesse of mynd doeth make a man blessed, whether he haue ỳ power to worke miracles, accordyng as the tyme requireth, orels haue it not. Jesus therfore of purpose to teache them by the dede selfe, and by the liuely practysyng of the verye thyng, after what sort they ought to fede the multitude with the foode of Gods word & of the ghospell whiche they had learned of him, he went aside with them oute of the cumpany into a desert place, where thei might repose thēselfes a while after ỳ labour of their iourney. For in that place there was so great a resorte of people about them, that they could haue no maner tyme of respite, no not so muche as to eate their meate. He had them away therefore into a solitarye place hard by a citie of Galile called Bethsaida, whiche was the native countrey of Peter, Andrewe, and Philip all thre, and doubteles this departyng aside into a place solitary, was not bestowed vpon fond sensual pleasures or on slepe, but vpon a quietnes to pray and to geue thākes to God. For of such sorte ought the pastyme and relaxacion of suche men as are folowers of the Apostles to be. But assone as it was spred abrode by the bruite of ꝑ people, whither Jesus had conueyed hymselfe to be solitary: an innumerable multitude of people gatheryng together in clousters on euery side, went after him into wylderneesse. Than Jesus seeing the greedy desires of them, came out of the solitarie places that he had gon to for to repose hymselfe, and so littell mynde had he to putte them away from hym, that he went of his own accord to mete them, teachyng his disciples therby this lesson also that after a little shorte tyme of reposyng theselues they ought euen anon ekstones to returne from restyng, vnto the office of preachyng the ghospell. Whan Jesus was come foorth, and sawe the infinite multitude of menne, women and chyldren, that had cū so great a iourney on foote out of diuerse places into deserte, as they were wandryng hither and thyther, for lacke of a shepeheard, beeyng moued with pitie and compassion, he firste fed their soules speakyng vnto them many thinges of the kingdome of god: than did he heale them whiche were holden with great diseases and other maladies of the body.

Apostles

And he receiued thē.

And spake vnto thē of the kingdōe of god.

The texte. And whan the day began to were alway, than came the twelue, and said vnto him: send the people alway, that they may goe into the tounes and nere villages, and lodge and geat meate, for we are here in a place of wildernes: But he said vnto them: Geue ye them to eate. And they said: We haue no mo but fiue loaues and two fyshes, except we should goe and bye meate for all this people: And they were about fiue thousand men: And he said: Cause them to sitte doune by fyftes in a coumpany. And they did so, and made them all to sitte doune. And he toke the fiue loaues, and the two fyshes, and loked vp to heauen, and blessed them, and brake, & gaue to the disciples, to set before the people. And they all did eate, and were satisfied. And there was taken vp of that remained to them, twelue baskets full of broken meate.

While these thinges were in doyng, the daye began to drawe towardes an ende. And the apostles considryng the multitude to be infinite, & the euentide to drawe nere, the place to bee ferre from any towne or village, and that they had no victayles there: they put Jesus a litell in remembraunce, sayyng: Lest goe the people in season, that goyng into the nerte litell townes and villages here about, they may geat themselues meate: for this is a desert place where is no meate to be gotten. And Jesus to shewe that they whiche with all their harte applyed the doctrine of the gospel, should be so prouided for, that they should neuer lacke meate, and also minding that the miracle whiche he entended there and than to shewe, should be very euident, he aūswered his disciples: they nede not for this purpose to depart hens into any townes or villages: but rather geue ye them meate your selues: shewyng vnto theim by thesame by worde, that this thyng also dooeth other whyles appertaine to the duetie of one that supplieth an Apostles roume, to relieue the necessitye of their flocke with part of their owne substaunce, be it neuer so small. And the Apostles at this tyme lacked no good will, but sory men they were that they lacked habilitie. And therfore their aūswer in this maner: we haue not a byte of meate in the world, more thē fiue loaues and two fishes: And this prouision will scarcely be enough for vs, as fewe as we be for oure supper, excepte perase it bee thy pleasure that we shall goe into the nerte townes and villages here aboute to bye meate, aſmuche as may serue so great a multitude as here be. But therunto had we nede to haue a good summe of money, whereas we haue but right small store of money among vs all.

We haue no mo but fiue loaues and two fyshes.

For

For there wer almost the full noumbre of fyue thousand men. Then sayed Jesus: Cause ye them to sitte downe by compaynies, and so to deuide themselues that they sitte by fiftie and fiftie in a compaynye. For so doo they that make a feaste of a great noumbre, vse to appoynte a determinate noumbre of persones and messes to euery table, that the butlers and other seruitours maie knowe how muche to appoynte and prepare for the same. The Apostles although they sawe no prouision toward, yet at the lordes commaundement, thei bydde the people to sit down by compaynies as afore is sayed, euen as though meate shouide immediately be sette afore them. The people also on the other syde cuen with lyke playnesse doe as they are bidden. Jesus therfore a manne of a newe and a straunge facion to bee a feaster of geastes, toke the fyue loaues and twoo fishes, and lifting vp his yes streight to heauen, he firste halowed them with luckie woordes of multiplying, and than he brake thesame, and deliuered it by piece meale vnto his disciples, to set before the people. They were euery one refreashed with as muche as they wouide eate, and so ferre they wer from lacking any thyng, that whan euery body was satisfied with the largest, there were twelue baskettes ful of broken meate gathered by the handes of the disciples. And in this matter too, there lyeth hidden a figurate representacion of a more secrete doctrine. The Apostles had prouision of viaundre, but it is suche as belongeth to Jesus. This viaundre lyke as it is of lyght price and course geare for poore folkes eatyng, so is it but litle in quantitie. For the doctrine of Moses is manyfolde: and the philosophiers learnyng is of soondrie maner sortes of matters and ful of plenteous stuffe: but the worde of the ghospell is playne homely geare, and short, and yet suche as maie suffise for the soules of all nacions to be refreashed, in case it be deliuered and receyued as it ought to bee. To men of the apostles profession is the worde committed, wherewith soules are made fatte: but thesame woorde doe they not sette afore the people to fede on, except it be firste consecrated and broken of Christe. For than and neuer els is it the true fruite of preachyng the ghospell, if the teacher dooe not presumptcouslye vsurpe to hymselfe the gift of learnyng whiche he hath as a thyng committed to his credite, ne vndiscretely or misaduisedly shewe foorth the same as thoughe it were of his owne: but yelde it vnto Christe to bee made holy of him. Otherwyse all in vain shall the teachers labour bee when he preacheth, onlesse Jesus shall firste haue blessed the woorde, onlesse he shall haue broken it, onlesse he shal with his own handes deliuer it to be distributed to the people. For withthye and effectuall it is whatsoeuer procedeth out of hys holy handes, he only it is, that fedeth, that refresheth, that maketh full: bishops are nothing els but ministers and distributoures of an other mannes liberalitie. The people all the while sitteth down in coumpanies vpon the ground nothyng stickyng or doubtyng, nothyng murmuryng or repinyng, whereby is signified, that in the faithfull congregacion of Christes churche, there oughte to be sobre humilitie, and plain faithfull truste of the heart in god, without any doublenesse. and that all discorde and seditious byssoare ought to be away. Consider me ferthermore this mysterie too. The Lorde Jesus firste of all thynges taught and healed the people, and than fedde them afterward.

And they were about fiue thousand men.

And he toke the fiue loaues and diuided them.

The woorde of God also is the heauenly meate of the soule. But sum portion hereof is not denayed to the vngodly and to the newely entered or instructed in the faythe. For it is the medicine of mennes soules, and the refeccion of

the weake. For wholsome doctrine worketh the like effect in the soules of sinners that Jesus with his worde and his touchyng did in diseases of the body. But there is a mistical bread whiche is not geuen but to persones now already wel taught, and also throughly healed. The same fourth is that heauenly breade of the lordes body, which is not geue to those that are not yet through baptisme receyued into the body of the churche and congregacion: ne vnto suche, whose mynde and soule is holden with some grieuous crymne, as it wer with a mortall sickenesse. And that same meate of the priue hidden wysedome of God, (which Paule the Apostle dyd not shewe foorth but emong the perfect,) is not to be vttered vnto all persones at auenture.

The texte. ¶ And it fortuned, as he was alone prayeng, his disciples were with hym and he asked them, sayeng: Who saye the people that I am? They aunswered and sayed: Johan Baptiste, some saye Helias, and some saye that one of the olde prophetes is arisen. He sayed vnto them: But who saye ye, that I am? Simon Peter aunswered and sayed: thou art the Christe of god: and he warned and commaunded them that they should tell no man that thyng, sayeng: the sonne of man must suffre many thynges, and be reproued of the elders, and of the high priestes and Scribes, and bee slayne, and ryse agayn the thyrde daye.

Who saye the people that I am?

Now because the lorde had so tempered all his sayinges and doopynges, that some whiles he would shewe forth tokes of his godly power, and another tyme he would manifestely shew the veritie of his humayn nature: the opinios of men concernyng hym dyd muche varie. But because it was requisite that emong them, by whom he had appoynted to renewe the world, there should bee one vnifourme profession perfectly agreyng in itselfe concernyng hym: at a time whan he was in his prayer solitarie with his disciples, he demaunded of them what opinion the people had of hym, or whom they sayed that he was. The disciples aunswere: some suppose thee to bee John the Baptiste reuiued agayn: some saye that thou arte Helias, of whom the Jewes thynke that he shall come agayne before that Messias shall come: and some others beleue the to be some one man of the olde Prophetes called to lyfe agayn. Than sayed Jesus. As for the people, they are inconstaunt and wauerynge as they are woont to be. But ye that knowe me neuer and familiarly, who dooe ye saye that I am? There Peter beeyng more ardent and fyerie then the residue, made aunswere in the name of them al: we know thee to be Messias, whom God hath enoynted with all heauenly gyftes of grace: And this they right profession Jesus in dede alloweth well, but yet he geueth them a great charge, that they shoulde make no woordes to no creature, what opinion they were of. For he sayed the tyme of openyng that misterie in the open face of all the worlde was not yet come, and that the sacrifice of his death muste firste bee executed and accomplished, and that he was appoynted to come to the glorie of that name, by many kyndes of despite and reproche. For the sonne of man, sayeth he, muste abyde muche woe, and must bee reproued of thelders, and of the Scribes, and of the chiefe of the priestes, yea and at length bee slaine too, and ryse agayne from death to lyfe the thyrd date. Ye muste therfore beware, leste the glorye euen of this name if it should now at this present be preached, should not fynd feyth to be credited, because of the affliccion and death of the bodye, and so might be a let to my death.

Simon Peter aunswered and sayed: thou art the Christe of God.

The texte. ¶ And he sayed vnto them all: If any man wyll come after me, leat hym denye hymselfe, and take vp his crosse dayly, and folow me. For whosoeuer wyll saue his lyfe shall loose it.

But

But whosoeuer dooeth lose his life for my sake, the same shall saue it. For what auaunta-geth it a man, if he winne the whole worlde, and lose himselfe, or cumme in damage of him-selfe. For whoso is ashamed of me and of my woordes: of him shall the sonne of manne be ashamed, when he cometh in his maiestie, and in the maiestie of his father, and of the holye aungels. I tell you of a truethe: There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death; till they see the kyngdome of God.

Than where Petur at the mencionyng of deathe trembled and quaked for he-rare feare, and abused Christe to some other better waies then to, whan Jesus had putte hym to silence, he begoonne to exorte his other disciples also to the fo-lowyng of his deathe, saiyng: Thus hathe it pleased my father: by thys waye muste I come to glorye. And whoso wyll bee a disciple of myne, yf he gladly de-syre to bee partaker of my blissfulnesse, he muste of necessitye bee a folower of my deathe afore. It is not enoughe to goe folowyng me on fote at my heles where I goe: he muste folowe me in deedes, or els will I not acknowlege hym for a disciple. For whosoeuer shall come to the office of preachyng the ghospell, must denye hymselfe altogether, and muste renounce all the cares of this worlde for euer, tychesse, pleasures, promocions, kynsfolkes, affections, pes and lyfe it selfe also, and muste euery daye take his crosse on hys backe, hauing his myndc euer-more readye vnto all suche thynges, as ye lec that I abyde and endure. I wyll goe before you as the maister: leat hym come after whosoeuer shall bee myndcd to bee a disciple. Neyther is there anye cause why ye shoulde feare to bee slayne. For so to perysshe, is to bee preserued. For whosoeuer shall lose his lyfe for my sake, the same hath set his lyfe in perfecte safetye: and on the contrary side: who-soeuer sterteyng backe or shynking away from the busy charge of the ghospel, shall haue a mynde to saue the lyfe of hys bodye, the same shal lose the life of his soule, which alone and none but that is to bee reckened the true lyfe: and for the preseruyng of this lyfe, it is the parte of a wise man gladlye to take the losse of all other thynges in the worlde. For what shall it auayle a manne, yf he wynne all that euer this worlde hath wooythye to bee desired, whan he hath loste hys owne selfe? whan the mannes selfe dyeth those thynges also that he had gotten are perished and gone with hym. And he perisheth altogether in dede, whoso hath loste euerlastyng lyfe. Leate no disciple of myne thinke shame to suffre such thynges whiche I my selfe shall suffre. Leate hym not bee ashamed to profesle my doctryne afore all the worlde. For whosoeuer shall bee ashamed of me and my woordes before men as one offended and slaundred with the worldly shame of the crosse: of suche an one shall the sonne of man agayne bee ashamed, whan after the saiyng downe of the infirmitie of the fleashe, he shal come at the seconde time shewyng foorth vnto the whole vniuersall worlde the maiestye of hymselfe, of his father, and of hys holy aungelles. And doubte ye nothyng that the thing that I saye, shall one day come to passe. For this I affirme vnto you for a mat-ter of assured trueth. Some there bee here emong you standyng by, whiche shall not departe out of this life, but that they shal fyrst in some parte se the maiestye of the kyngdome of god. The thyng that nowe lyeth hidden, shall one daye in tyme to coome be made open and manifeste vnto all creatures.

¶ And it fortuned that aboute an eyght dayes after these saiynges, he tooke Petur and John and James, and wente vp into a mountayne to praye. And as he prayed, the facion of his countenaunce was chaunged, and his garmente was wypte, and shone. And beholde there talked with hym two men whiche were Moses and Helias, that appeered in the ma-iestye, and spake of his departyng, whiche he should ende at Hierusalem. But Petur & they The texte.

that wer with him, were heauy with slepe: And whan they awoke they sawe his maieste, and two men standing with him

Than Jesus to perfourme the promysse whiche he had nowe made, dyd about eyght day after these woordes speaking, choose out three of his .xii. Apostles, that is to wete, Petur, James, and John, and accordyng to his accustomed woont, he gotte hym vp to a mountaine, there to prayre. And as he was in prayeng, his face was sodaynly chaunged into an other lyknes replete with maiestie and glorye, and his garmentes shone as white as any snowe. There were seene also with him at the same instaunte two other men of lyke maiestie talking with him, of whome the one was Moses and the other Helias: For the lawe had by figures set out Christ derkely (as it were) in a shadowe, and the prophecies had directely poynted him oute what he was. Nowe the talkyng of these

And spake of this departyng. &c. twoo wyth Jesus, what other thing doeth it signifie, but the perfection agreyng of the olde and newe Testamente together? Their talkyng with him was concernyng the kynde of deathe, whiche the Lorde accordyng to ỹ tenour & fourme of the prophecie menn a dape afore written and set fooith by them, shoulde afterwarde accomplishe at Hierusalem: to thede that effsons the delectable swetenesse of the glorie, shoulde bee brought to a tempre with the mencion of deathe. But al this did not the Apostles euen verey wel see, because they had their eyes euen heauye with slepe. But as soone as they were awaked, they playnely sawe the maieste of the Lorde, and also the two men standyng harde by him.

The texte. ¶ And it chaunced as they departed from him, Petur saied vnto Jesus: maister, it is good beeyng here for vs, let vs make also three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Helias (and wist not what he saied.) While he thus spake, there came a cloude and ouer shadowed them, and they feared when they went come into the cloude. And there came a voice oute of the cloude, saiyng: This is my dere sonne, heare ye him: and as soone as the voice was paste, Jesus was founde alone, and they kept it close, and told no man in those daies any of those thinges whiche they had seen.

There came a cloude and ouer shadowed them. &c.

Whiche twoo men when they begun to departe from Jesus, Petur feating leste all that same delectable light shoulde also goe awaie, he saied vnto Jesus: Maister it is no goyng any whyther oute of suche a place as this. Fare well Hierusalem and leate it goe, which threateneth to put thee to death. Tushe let vs rather make three tabernacles here in this mountayne, one for thee, one for Moses, and one for Helias. Thus spake Petur as a man inebriate and made dronken with the swetenesse of this vision, not knowyng what he saied. For he requited to triumphe before he had woonne the battaile: and woulde haue had the dell game of rennyng, before he had rennen for it. Euen in the instaunte tyme while Petur was speakyng these woordes, there soodaynly arose a cloude and caste a shadowe ouer all the disciples, beeyng nowe not hable in theyr mortall bodie, to abide the beholding of so greate glorye. And while Moses and Helias wer entreyng into the cloude, and wer vanishing awaye from the eyes of ỹ disciples (for reason it was that the light of euangelicall trueth apperyng, all shadowes and mistical derkenesse of figures shoulde geue place and be gone) the voyce of his heauenly father sowned downe from the cloude saiyng: Moses and Helias, who prophecied of my sonne, the Jewes haue hitherto had in highe estimacion and reuerence. Great men were they in dede, yet wer they but my seruauntes. But this same is he that is my sonne, so dere beloued vnto my hert.

as none other is but he alone, therefore herken ye to hym. This voice thus sounyng in their eares, Jesus was founde alone, leste they mighte haue demed the testimonie of that voice to concerne any other person then euē hym only. Jesus was found alone

And the sayed thyse disciples vpght so as they were commaunded of the Lorde, kept the matter close, and reported not the priuity of that vision to any creature aliue, vntill Christ had arisen againe from death to lyfe after his passion. For it was not the Lordes pleasure to haue the maiestie of his Godhed published or openly spoken of before the tyme of his deathe, alwell because there shoulde bee nothyng that myght be a lette vnto that same sacrifice wherebi mankynde was to bee restored, as also because that thyng myght not bee openly talked of, whiche no man wouldе than beleue, yf it had bene reported. And all vnder cue, did he therin by an exaumple, that was a true matter in deede, geue a lesson to vs, that in case any excellent good thing be in vs, we ſhould rather kepe it close then make bauntes or braggues therof: and in case we haue any special vertue or good qualitye in vs by the free gyfte of God, then is to bee declared and shewed in deedes, rather then by makyng many gaie or high woordes of it. And they kept it close. &c.

¶ And it chaunced that on the nexte daye, as they came down from the hille, muche people met hym. And beholde, a man of the coumpaignie cried out, saiyng: maister, I beseche the beholde my sonne, for he is all that I haue, and see, a spirite taketh hym and soodaynely crieth, and he vnquietly and beateth hym that he foometh againe, and with muche peine departeth from him, whan he hath rent hym. I besought thy disciples to cast hym out, & they couide not. Jesus answered and saied: O feithlesse and crooked nacion, howe long shal I bee with you, and shall suffre you? Bryng thy sonne hither. As he was yet a comming, the fiende rent him and tare him. And Jesus rebuked the vncleane spirite, and healed y childe, and deliuered him to his father. And they were all amazed at the high power of God. The texte.

The nexte daye folowyng, Jesus came downe from the hyll with his laid thye disciples. And he foūd a mighty great multitude of people gathered about the residue of the disciples, whom he hadde leste there behynd hym whan he addressed hym to goe vp to the mountayne. But the people alloone as they espied Jesus returnyng agayn, went to mete hym. For they had found a great lacke & myſſe of his presence. And there had happened a freshe matter, why they should require to haue his presence. For one of ỹ coūpaignie cried out to hym saiyng: maister, I most humbly beseche thee, leat the extreme miserie of a sonne of mine moue the. For I haue no mo but him alone: and he is holden with an extreme tyrannous deuill, whiche dooeth euerye other whyle soodaynlye take hym, and vexeth hym sundry waies, that pitie it is to see, with much greate roaryng, slasshyng hym on the grounde, and so wrestyng his limmes as though he would teare them from the body of hym, and he fomyng at the mouthe for peine all the whyle. And as often as he taketh hym, he scracelye departeth from hym, vntyll all hys body be rent and torne. I prayed thy disciples to caste out this spirit. They did their best, but they haue not bene hable to dooe it. Than Jesus well perceiuyng that the thyng hadde so chaunced by reason of the fathers vnbeliefe that prayed for health to his sonne: and in consideracion of his disciples feithe beeyng yet hitherto but weake, he cryed with a loude voyce, saiyng: O nacion full of mistrustyng, and of an herte nothyng single, howe long tyme shall I bee conuersaunt emong you, and shall suffre these thynges? Can I not yet all thys whyle bring thus muche to passe, to make you haue a perfeicte feyth and truste in me? dooeth the weakenesse of thys bodye of myne so muche leate you? And turnyng hymselfe to the man, and requyring of hym afore hand to haue a more I besought thy disciples to caste him out and they couldе not.

sted fast feith, he saied: Bring thy sonne hither to me. And as soone as the young shyng the chylde on the grounde: and immediatelye Jesus restored hym to hys health, and gaue him to his father agayne made perfectely whole, where his father had brought him: thither vnpossible to be cured by any mannes helpe. The more miserable that the sight of this cruell had been, so muche the more did the people euery one of them mercuaill to see howe quickelye the childe was holpen out of handes, by the vertue and power of God.

But whyle they woondred euery one at all thynges which he dyd, he saied vnto hys disciples: Kepe these sayinges suche downe into youre eares. For it will come to passe that wourd ment, and it was hidden from them, that they vnderstoode it not. And they feared to aske of hym that saiyng.

But whan the fame of Jesus wexed euery daye more and more famous through suche actes as these: There tayne temptacion of worldly glory entred into the hertes of his disciples, by reason that they hadde suche a maister, in whose name, euen they also themselues dyd manye great actes to be woondred at. But Jesus calleth them home from this affeccion to the contemplacion of his lowe state of abiection in this worlde, at whiche the time was not long to come, when they wouldbe offended and slaundred. The glorie of dooeyng miracles (sayeth he) is now a matter of delectacion vnto you: but it is a thing much more materiall for you, depely to enprint in your hertes these sayinges of myne, from which your myndes dooe gretlye abhorre. For that thyng ought ye moste of all to haue in mynde, whiche it shall behoue euerye one of you to folowe. As for glorie leat me alone to see for that. For the thing muste nedes come to passe, that I haue already tolde you, and yet nowe agayne I saye vnto you, which is, that the sonne of man, whose glorie and fame dooeth nowe delite you, shall ere long be attached, and shall bee deliuered into the handes of menne, and shall sundrye wayes suffre much affliction, and shal lastely be put to death. This tale, though it had bene once or twise heard out of his mouth, yet had not it well settled in the myndes of the disciples. For they couldе not well beare in mynd the thing which they had no luste to heare. They abhorred the mencion of death: as men setting al their mindes on the glorie of Jesus, not hauing at the whyle any intelligence or vnderstanding that the glorie of the Lord was most chiefely to be renounced and made famous, through the open worldely shame of hangyng on the crosse.

And in dede they hearde a speakyng of death, but it was as it had been half in a dreme, nothyng well vnderstandyng what the thyng ment whiche was spoken, and yet durste they not demaunde anye questions of hym, what these woordes might mene, hauyng freally in theyr remembraunces, that Petur whan he was somewhat ouer bolde and busye with Jesus, had hearde Jesus saie vnto hym:

auaunt out of my sight thou Satan, thou haste no sauerynge of those thynges that appertein to God, but altogether of such thinges as appertein to the worlde.

And there entred a thought emong them, whiche of them should bee greatest: whan Jesus perceiued the thought of their hertes, he tooke a chylde, and set hym hard by him, soeuer receiueth me, receiueth hym that sent me. For he that is least emong you al, the same shalbee greatest.

After al this same, Jesus wente to Capernaum: And so it was, that for al-much muche as the disciples wer yet carnal, because they had seen the glory of working of many miracles, and because they had heard the maiestie of the kyngdome of God promysed, and because themselfes too, had doone many woon-derfull thynges aboue nature at ꝑ name of Jesus: a certayn worldly thought entred into them which at laste brast out thus farre, that as they were going on the way, they reasoned together one with an other, whiche of them shoulde sitte highest in the kyngdome of heauen. For they dreamed that such a like order shoulde bee in the kyngdome of heauen, as they had seen in the courtes of worldely princes, or in tyche folkes houses, in whiche he that is moze proude, and quicker or bolder spirited then an other is, he is the moze Jolier knowe.

Than Jesus, although he knewe well enoughe what it was, that they had emong themselfes kept disputacions of: yet as soone as he was come into ꝑ house, he demaunded of them what the matter was, that they had so hardely disputed and reasoned of by the ware. And they all playnly mum, and not ha-uyng a woorde to sate, because they wer halfe ashamed of the matter, Jesus to shewe that their thoughtes and their prius talkes beyond his backe wer not hydden ne vnknowen to hym, toke a litle innocent childe in his hand, and set hym hard by his syde, and callyng the twelue together vnto hym, he sayed: ye dispute of greatnesse, whyche of you shalbee greattiste. The greattest with me are thole that are moste inferiours.

What is moze playne without fraude or gyple, then this litle chylde, or what thyng moze lowe: Euen verily suche muste ye become, if ye will be chiefe in the kyngdome of the ghospell. The kyngdome of feith and charity, knoweth hath sent me. If I haue plated the Lorde towardes you, than reason you also who shalbe ꝑ chiefe emōg you: but if I haue rather vsed my self as a willing and a readye seruaunte to the commodities of all persones, knowe ye that he shalbee a great man emong you all, who in contemnyng of glory, in humilitie and submission, and in feruent affection to bee as a seruaunte to dooe all creatures good, shalbee the least and moste inferiour of all men.

Whosoeuer receiueth this chylde in my name

The texte.

We sawe one castyng out deuils in thy name

Than John answered, and sayed: maister, we sawe one castyng out deuils in thy name and we forbad hym, because he folowed not with vs. And Jesus sayed vnto him, forbid ye hym not. For he that is not against vs, is with vs.

And because they had heard hym saye, that litle ones are to bee receiued in the name of Jesus, it came into Johns mynde, that they had excluded and de-barred a certayne man from the fraternitie of ministring the ghospel. He there-fore is in a doubte, whether that lyke as all men were to bee receiued vnto the felowshyp of the saluacion of the ghospell, so in lyke maner all men wer to be admitted to the ministracion of preachyng the ghospell, and to the woorkyng of miracles. And in this poynete was hydden a litell spice of a certayne secret pangue of enuye. God had therefore geuen power vnto the twelue only, to caste out deuils: and to heale diseases. Thys dignitie they thoughte not mete to bee made common to any others. And therefore John sayed: maister at the tyme when beeyng sent foorth by thee, we executed the office of preachyng the ghos-pell abrode: we sawe a certaine man casting out deuils in thy name, though he bee none of the noumbre of vs twelue, no nor dooeth not soe muche as folowe thee neyther. This man, as one beyng a straunger to our brotherhood, we forbadde that he shoulde no more so doo. Than Jesus although he would in no place suffre hymselfe to be preached of by the wicked spirites, yet teacheth that men of what sorte soeuer they bee, are not to bee forbidden from hauyng to do in the ghospel, although they do thesame of no verye sincere hert, so that (saith he) the thyng that they doe, they doe it in the name of Jesus, and doe thesame thyng that ye doo. For wholoeuer is not an aduersarie vnto vs, doeth euen in that verye poynte make on our syde, that he doeth not against vs. To such a thyng as is straunge and by all possible waies to be enuye where published abrode, al fauour doeth auaile. The miracle is not his ỹ doeth it, but Goddes, who sheweth his power by man, as by his ministre and instrument. Therfore whatsoeuer persone sheweth any miracle by callyng vpon my name, doeth publish and spred abrode my glory, and debarreth himselfe of al title to speake ill of me from thenseforth, whose name he hath found so effectual & full of power.

For he that is not against vs, is with vs.

The texte. And it fortuned whan the tyme was come that he shoulde bee receiued vp, he sette his face to go to Hierusalem, and sent messagiers before him. And they went and entred into a city of the Samaritanes, to make ready for him. And they would not receiue him because his face was as though he would goe to Hierusalem. When hys disciples, James and John, sawe this, they saied: Lord, wilt thou that we commaund fyre to come down from heauen and consume them, euen as Helias dyd? Jesus turned about, and rebuked them, saiyng: ye wotte not what maner spirite ye are of. For the sonne of manne is not come to destroy mennes lyues, but to saue them. And they went to an other towne.

And so it befell, that the time beeyng nowe verye nere at hande, when Jesus leauyng the yearth, should be receiued vp into heauen, the Lorde had already entred his journey, and shewed euē plainly by his countenaunce, that he was bounde towardes Hierusalem, as one that purposly minded to be in the way agaynst the occasiō of his death should come. He therfore sent messagers afore hym two or three of the Apostles, to prepaire him some harbourgh and place of soiourneyng within a certaine citie of the Samaritanes, throughe whiche his journey laye. And when they came, the townesmen had shutte the gates of the citie against them, because they conceiued by the verye facyng and countenaunce of the Apostles, that they were gooyng towardes Hierusalem.

For the Samaritanes, in consideracyon that all theyr worshyppyng of God was in a mountaine of their owne, hated and abhorred all such as went to Hierusalē in the way of deuocion to worship God there. Upon this James and John who hadde been sente on the saied message, when they sawe the vncourteisie of the inhabitaūtes there, whiche would not suffre them so much as to come within the precincte of their towne walles: beeyng euen all out of pacience, saied to the Lord: Maister, is it thy pleasure that we bidde fier to come downe from heauen, as Helias ons dyd, whiche may consume these felowes? But Jesus because he wouldde shewe howe great the mildenes of a teacher of the ghospell ought to bee, bridled their wrathefulnesse with a sharpe rebuke, saiyng: Take ye not the dede of Helias for your exaumple. He beyng led with the spirite brought the wicked people of that tyme to confusion. But as for ye doe not yet vnderstand what spyrite ye ought to bee of. That same spirite of the ghospel is more meke then so. There shall hereafter come a time of redresse and vengeaunce. But vntill that daye the sonne of man is come, not to cast away mennes liues or soules, but to saue them. They ỹ do now at this present

kepe vs out of their towne, wil peraduẽture an other day hereafter take vs in. They are therefore to bee lamed, that they maie bee in case to repent & remẽde. And so leauyng the towne, they turned an other waye to an other litle towne. By these woordes Jesus toke out of theyr stomakes al desire fulnesse of doing vengeaunce, and taught vs to vse fauourable bearyng towardes suche as at the firste begynnyng wouilde exclude and kepe out the doctrine of the ghospel from theim, allegeyng that it was enough to leaue such for a season until they might at a tyme of occasion bee conuerted to a better mynde.

The texte. And it chaunced, that as they were walkyng in the waie, a certaine man saied vnto him: I will folowe the whither soeuer thou goe. Jesus saied vnto hym: Foxes haue holes, and birdes of the ayre haue nestes, but the sonne of man hath not where to laie his head.

Againe it foxtuned as they wente, that a certaine man of his own voluntarie mynde, sayed vnto Jesus: I will folowe the whithersoeuer thou shalt goe. And Jesus myndyng to shewe that suche as broughte not with them myndes meete for suche a weighty matter, were not to bee admitted to the fraternitie of preaching the ghospel, (for that better it were not to take the matter vpon thẽ then to geue it ouer again, after it were once taken in hande) sayed vnto him: Foxes haue holes of theyr owne in the earth, and birdes of the aier haue theyr nestes in the trees: but the sonne of man hath not anye place where to put hys head in. Suche an one therefore as hathe anye thyng in this woorlde, whereon to sette hys delite, or whereon to set his ful reste and quiet, is no meete folower of the sonne of man. He muste renounce all thynges, that will folowe me

The texte. And he saied vnto another, folowe me. And the same saied: Lord suffre me firste to go and burie my father. Jesus saied vnto hym: leat the dead burie their dead: But go thou and preache the kyngdom of God. An other saied: Good Jwil folowe the, but leaue me firste to go bid them farewel, which are at home at my house: Jesus saied vnto him, No man that putteth his handes to the plough and looketh backe, is apte to the kyngdome of God.

Leat the dead burye their dead.

Againe whan he had cast his eye on a certaine other man, he saied vnto hym: folowe me. But he made this aunswere: Maister geue me leaue fyrste to burie my father. But Jesus gruyng a bryworde that the cause of salvacion is to bee preferred before all poynctes of carnall duetye, sayed vnto hym: Leate the dead burye theyr deade: but gooe thou and shewe abroade the kyngdome of God. By thys exaumple dyd the Lorde forbende the excuses of suche men whiche vnder the colour of naturall affection and dutie, dooe putte of and delaye the care and earneste applyng of eternall salvacion. And yet a wurse sorte of menne then those, are they whiche vnder the colour of fyndyng stoppes and lettes about the affaires of theyr houshelde, do prolong & driue of fro mozowe to mozowe, the matter of salvacion, whiche oughte euen at the firste occasiõ streight way to be gone thzough withal. For there came an other man to hym, who beeyng commaunded to folowe him, aunswered: Maister Jwill come after thee, doe nomoze but suffre me to goe bidde my familiar frendes and my houshelde farewell. Than saied Jesus, whosoeuer hath ons put his hande to the plough and than afterwarde loketh backe again, is not apte for the kyngdome of God. This matter of the ghospell, is an high matter, and an hard to come to, whiche whoso hath ons enterpzised, the same must with a perpetuall applying of it, procede stil and goe forwarde to thynges of moze and moze perfection, and neuer turne his mynde alwaye to the vyle cares of transitorye thynges of this woorlde.

No man & putteth hys handes to & plough and looketh backe

The text. After these thinges, the Lorde appointed other seuenty also, and sent them two and two before him into euerie citie and place, whether he himself would come. Therefore he saied vnto them: the haruest is great, but the labourers are fewe. Praie ye therefore the lorde of the haruest, to send forth labourers into the haruest. Goe your waies: Behold I send you forth as lambes emong woulues. Beare ye no waller, neither scrip, nor shoes, and salute no man by the waie, into whatsoeuer house ye entre, first saie: Peace be to this house. And if the sonne of peace be there, your peace shall rest vpon hym: if not, it shall turne to you againe. And in the same house tarrye still, eating and drinking suche as they geue. For the labourer is worthye of his reward.

After these thinges the Lord chose and toke out of the noumbre of his disciples other seuētie also, as he had before chosen his twelue Apostles, and sent them two and two before hym into euerye citie & place whether he himself had determined to come: to the end that by theyr preaching & teaching before, they might prepare and make ready the myndes of the people against the cumming of the Lord. These dyd he euen so enstructe howe to preache and teache his ghospel, as he had before taught the twelue, and he shewed and opened the cause, why he had so encreased the noumbre of preachers, saiyng: The haruestle is greate, but the labourers are fewe, praye ye therfore the lorde of the haruestle, to sende forth labourers into his haruest. Ferre is the noumour and bruite of the gospel spred, and manye are sette on fier wyth the gredye desyre of the doctrine of heauen: they are wel willyng toward it, and wante, but onely such as should call and gather their myndes together, beeyng of themselues bothe ready and full of hast towardes the kyngdome of heauen. Goode ye therefore puttyng your wholle truste and confidence in the safegarde and maintenaunce of me alone. Suche as are great men and hath rewle of thynges, suche as are cruell, shall murmour and grutche against your doctrine. Against these men doe I send you forth naked, wythoute weapon or fense. For I sende you not, that you should hurte or grieue any man, but that ye, full of simplicitie and void of all hurte, should studye and endeuour your selfes to profite and do good to euery man. Seke ye not therefore help at mans hande, that ye may therewith arme and defende your selfe against the violence, and malicyousnes of the cruell, nor take you no care ne thought for your liuing, or thinges necessarie, but with al readinesse go ye to the bullinesse of ỳ gospel: neither carrying scrip nor wallet, nor yet shoes with you, for ye shal neuer want, that shalbee sufficient for nature. Salute no man, neither the welthy lest ye seme to flatter & seke vpon the for game, nor the indurate, lest ye seme to fauour theyr vngodlinesse. Nor take you no thought for house or lodgeyng: there shalbe those whiche shall receiue & take you in at theyr doores: only shewe your selfes pure and vncorrupt ministers of the ghospell. And what house soeuer ye shall entre into, first wish & praie for peace to the whole household. That if there be any there, ỳ is the sonne of peace, that is to say, a gentill & meke man and one that thirsteth the most mekest doctrine of the ghospell: your praier shall profite and dooe good, and he shall embrace and gladlye receiue so well wyshyng geastes: that yf they dooe not not so receiue and welcome you, yet leate it not repent you, so to haue prayed for them. For you shall not lese the rewarde of this your profered seruice, nor ye shall not with ouermuche entreatyng nor castyng your selues at the knees of any man require lodgeyng, nor shall not as men without shame presse into the house of any of them: for so great a thyng and so muche to bee esteemed is not to bee offred and thruste into the handes of suche, as will not gladlye receiue it, and yet ought it to bee profered to euerie man. And whosoeuer shall gladly and willyngly receiue you, see that you tarie with hym, not desiryng or looking for the pleasures of this life: but for so muche as shall bee necessarye for the sustenaunce of your bodyes, drinke, and fede on suche thinges as ye shal there finde emongest them, for it is good reason ye he which laboureth in preachyng and teaching the ghospell, shoulde liue and be sustened by their liberalitie, for whose behoufe he laboureth and taketh peine, in case he haue not sufficient of his owne wherof to fynde himselfe.

The texte. ¶ Eate not from house to house: and into whatsoeuer citie ye entre, and they receiue you, eate suche thinges as are set before you, and heale the sicke that are therein, and say vnto them: the kyngdome of God is come nigh vpon you. But into whatsoeuer citie ye entre & they receiue you not, go your waies out into the stretes of the same, and say: euen the verie dust of your citie (which cleueth vnto vs) do we wype of against you: notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kyngdome of God was come nigh vpon you. I saie vnto you: that it shalbe easier in that daye for sodome, than for that citie.

And of this thyng take ye diligent hede also, lest ye straighing from house to house, delpisyng and setting at naught the former hospitalitie & lodgeing, seeche and seke a more delicate lodgeyng and better furnished. Leate it suffice you, whatsoeuer cometh first to hande: that if it shal chaunce you to come into any cities, of the enhabitauntes willingly receiue and entreteine you, eate you and drinke you withoute anye choyce, and without lothyng or abhorring of any thyng whatsoeuer is sette before you, and to the ende ye maye be geasles the more acceptable and the better welcome, and also that ye maye with the better credence preache the kyngdome of heauen, heale you the sicke folkes of the same citie, restore ye the weake and impotente to theyr strengthe, delyuer ye suche as are possessed with ciuill spirites. And all these thynges doe ye freely without reward, and willyngly, refusing no creature neither pooze ne riche: and chan sate ye vnto them: ye see manifest tokens of the power of God, prepare your hertes and myndes to the earnestr exercise of innocente liuyng. For nowe draweth nere vnto you the kyngdome of God: the maladies and diseases of the bodye are nowe taken awaye, and ere long, shall the maladies of the soule bee driuen awaye also (whiche are sinnes.) That yf ye shall chaunce to come into any citie in the whiche there is none that wyl receiue you, make ye no kynde of humble suite vnto them for any intreteinmēt, but come you forth abrode into their stretes, and there openly and in the face of the whole citie, saie vnto them in this wyse: We haue freelye without any hope of rewarde at your handes, offred vnto you the glad tidynges of euerliastyng life. But forasmuche as ye haue despised and not regarded our office, we wil take no benefite at all by you.

And say vnto them: the kyngdome of God is come.

Beholde therefore, euen the verie dust whiche stucke vnto our feete, we shake and cast of against you, for a witnesse that we haue profered, and ye for-

taken that moſte happie tidynges, which ought not to bee layed in the lappes of ſuch as wil none of it. And yet this thing be you eyght ſure of, that whether ye receiue it or not receiue it, the kingdom of God is verie nere vpon you, that if ye wil receiue this tidynges, then ſhal it come to your greate profite & commoditee, yf not, to your great hurte and deſtruction. Be ye contente this waye onely to haue reuenged your ſelues.

If they ſhall any where deſpyſe you, vengeaunce ſhal light vpon them for it at the due tyme. For this thing verailye I ſhewe vnto you, that in the day of the laſt iudgement, it ſhalbe the better with the Sodomites and they ſhal fynde more grace at the Lordes hande, then that cite whiche hathe deſpyſed this ſo great gracious goodneſſe of God freely offred vnto theym. All menne dooe muche meruaile at the ſharpe and rigorous vengeaunce of God ſhewed vpon the Sodomites, but yet dooeth this poynete ſomewhat eaſe theym, that they were neuer ſo many wayes prouoked to emendemente of their liues. And the Iewes ſtandyng muche in their owne conceiptes doe vtterlye abhorre and deteſte the verie name and remembraunce of the ſayed Sodomites, whome the wrath of God by a terrible exaumple and preſidente for menne to beeware by, dyd vtterlye deſtroye, but a more horrible and dreadfull puniſhement abideth theſame Iewes, if they beeyng ſtirred and prouoked with ſo many benefites, and ſo many miracles, ſhall neglecte and deſpiſe the goodneſſe of God.

It ſhalbee eaſier in the daye for Sodome.

Woe vnto thee Corazym: woe vnto thee Bethſaida. For if the miracles had been doen in Tyre and Sidon, which haue been doen in you, they had (a great while agoe) repented of their ſinnes, ſitting in heaven cloth and aſhes: neuertheleſſe, it ſhalbee eaſier for Tyre and Sydon at the iudgment, then for you. And thou Capernaum (which are exalted to heauē) ſhalt be thruſt downe to hell. He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me: and he that deſpiſeth me, deſpiſeth hym that ſent me.

The texte.

Woe bee to thee Corazain, woe bee to the Bethſaida, cities of Iſraell. For if the miracles, whiche haue been ſhewed in you, had been ſhewed in the cities of the Gentiles Tyrus and Sidon, whiche ye crie eye vpon, accoumptyng theim abhominable: they would haue called themſelues home to emendement, yea and ſittyng in heareclothe and aſhes, they wouldе haue dooen penaunce for theyr ſynnes, whereas ye beeyng berape ſtyffe necked againſt God, dooe ſtand highly in your own conceiptes, and thinke your ſelfes faultleſſe. Woe bee to the Capernaum, whiche ſwellyng nowe in pride of richeſſe, and lyuyng in the delices of ſenſualitie, appeareſt to be exalted aboue the moone as high as heauen, on that daye ſhalte thou bee caſte downe euen vnto the dicpe pitte of helle.

And ſ Capernaum whych are exalted to heauen, &c.

For albeit ye be howelye and lowe meſſagters, yet for that you ſhall come vnto them in my name, and ſhal ſhew vnto them the vnеſtimable gift of God: the condemnation of ſuche as ſhall deſpiſe you, ſhall not bee ſmall. For he that heareth you, heareth me, whiche ſpeake vnto theim by the inſtrument of your mouthes: and contrarye wyſe, he that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth me, and he that deſpiſeth me, deſpiſeth hym that hathe ſente me. For I dooe not of myne owne head any thyng ſpeake, whiche I haue not receiued firſt of my father, nor ye ſhall ſpeake nothyng, whiche ye ſhall not firſt haue learned of me. Therfore as my doctrine is the doctrine of my father and not myne, ſo youre preachyng ſhall bee my preachyng and not yours,

And he that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth me.

The

The lorde Jesus whan he had with suche woordes as these, duelye instructed and armed the thyrtye and tenne disciples, he sent them forth to assaye and proue themselfes, how well they coulde dooe in preachyng of the ghospell.

And the seuentye returned again with ioye, saiyng: Lorde euen the deuyls are subdued to vs through thy name. And he saied vnto thē: I sawe Satan (as it had been lightenyng) falling downe from heauen. Beholde I geue you power to treadeon serpentes and scorpions, and ouer all maner power of the enemye: and nothyng shall hurte you. Neuertheleste, in this reioyce not, that the spirites are subdued vnto you: but reioyce that your names are written in heauen. The texte.

And whan the matter had woondrefullye well prospered in their handes, they returned home again with great mirth & ioye, saiyng: Maister not only diseases are driuen awaye by vs, but vncleane spirites also are subiect vnto vs in þ name of thee. Then Jesus to arme and fense theyr myndes agaynst the diseases of vainglorie (which vseth by stealth to crepe and enter, yea into holy mē also) vttereth foorth vnto them the exaumple of Lucifer, who for his pride was for dainly cast downe from so great felicitie. I sawe (quod he) Satan fall out from heauen euen like the lightening. Great was his dignitie in heauen, and yet for that he was puffed vp with pride, sodainly was he cast from the highest place in heauē, into the botome of helle pitte. How much more than ought you to beware of pride, whiche carrye aboute with you a mortall bodye subiecte to all perilles and daungiers here in yearth. Great is the power which I haue geuē you, but I haue geuen it you not to any such entent, þ ye should therby weare proude and high minded: but to the ende þ by your miracles men should geue and attribute greater fayth and beleefe to the ghospell. I dooe not require at your handes again, that which I haue ons geuen you, so that ye will not abuse it. For I geue you power, by the whiche you shall trede serpentes & scorpions vnder your foote: yea & if there bee any other thyng by meane wherof Satan your enemie maie be hable to hurt you. Not one of all suche thinges shal haue power to do you hurt: And yet is it not expediente for you to glorye or to vaunt your selfes concernyng any suche thyng, because spirites are subiecte to you. For these thinges shalbe dooen also by wicked and euil men: but reioyce ye in this thyng, that youre names are alreadye written in heauen: for thither shall your meke nelle and lowelinesse, thither shall your simplicitie bring you, from whens Lucifer through his pride and haultenesse of mynde fel, yf ye shal still perisshe and continue in this your entente and purpose. And he saith vnto them: I sawe Satan, as it had beene lightening fall downe from heauen, &c. Reioyce ye not that spirites are subdued vnto you, &c.

That same houre reioyced Jesus in the holy goste, and saied: I thanke the, O father, lorde of heauen and earth, that thou hast hid these thinges from the wise and prudent, and hast opened the vnto babes. Euen so father, for so pleased it the. All thinges are geuen me of my father. No man knoweth who the soonne is, but the father, and who the father is, but the soonne, and he, to whom the sonne wil shewe him. And he turned to his disciples and saied secretely: Happie are the eyes which see the thinges that ye see. For I tell you that many Prophetes and kinges haue desired to see those thinges whiche ye see, and haue not seen them, and to heare those thinges whiche ye heare, and haue not heard them. The texte.

And whan the lorde had saied these woordes, byandy he beganne to reioyce in the holye ghoste, and to geue thankes to his father for the prosperous successe of the ghospell: teachyng vs euen at the same tyme by exaumple of hymselfe, that in case any thyng come luckilye to passe through our handes whan we go about it, we should reioyce, not with any humaine affection, but

with spirituall and ghostely reioycing: not taking to our selfes any parte of ꝯ prayse or glory, but entierely reioycyng that the glory of god is so set foorthe and magnified: and reioycyng at the profyte of our neighbour. I rendre thankes (saieth he) vnto thee, o lord and father, the maker of heauen and yearth, for that these so hygh thynges, thou hast kepte secrete & hidden from such as after the worlde are reputed wyse and politique, & hast opened the same to the litell tender ones, to the inferiour meane sorte, to the ignorauntes, and to suche as after the iudgemente of the worlde, haue no great wytte nor experience. And thus verayly is it dooen, o father, for that it hath so pleased thy eternall prouidence and wysedome, that the proude men beyng reiected and cast down, thou might est by suche lowenesse exalt and lift vp men to the true heigth of heauely thynges. There is no power ne autozitee whiche my father hath not deliuered into my handes: and therefore feare ye not the worlde, beeyng ryght wel assured that ye haue a maister hable to defende you. For an equall felowschyp of all thynges is betwene my father and me: & truely no man knoweth the sonne, who he is, and howe great he is, sauyng onelye the father whiche begatte hym: nor no manne knoweth the father, who he is, and howe greate he is, but onely the sonne borne of hym, and suche as it male please the sonne to open it vnto. He openeth and sheweth hym to none but to suche as bee humble, meke spirited, & enclined or apte to beleue. Afterward turnyng hymselfe to his disciples, he declared hymselfe to be veray glad that thei had the blisfull happe, which had been denied to men euen of veray high dignitie, saiyng: Blessed are yes whiche see the thynges that ye see, for this I tell you for a thyng of certaintye: that many prophetes & kinges would faine haue seen, that ye poore and abiect persones doe see, and yet thei haue not seen it: and to heare these thinges which ye heare, and they heard them not. See ye acknowlage and take to you youre good happe, but flee ye the takyng of any pride or presumpcion therby. Take ye suche a pride as may stand with holinesse (that is to wete) a pride agaynste all thynges, whiche this worlde dooeth gase vpon for meruail, takyng them for high thynges, whereas they are but small trifles, and verape filthynesse in comparison of the thinges that are geuen vnto you.

Such so father. For so pleased it thee.

The texte. ¶ And beholde, a certayne lawier stoode vp, and tempted hym, saiyng: Maister, what shal I doo to inherite eternall lyfe? He saied vnto hym: what is written in the lawe? How readest thou? And he aunswered and saied: loue the lord thy God with al thy hert, and with al thy soule, and with al thy strength, and with al thy mind: and thy neighbour as thy self. And he saied vnto him: thou hast aunswered right. Thus do and thou shalte liue. But he willing to iustifie himself, saied vnto Jesus: and who is my neighbour? Jesus aunswered, and saied: A certayne man went downe from Jerusalem to Jherico, & fell among theues, which robbed him of his rayment and wounded him, and departed leauing him half dead. And it chaunced that there came downe a certayne priest that same way, & when he sawe him, he passed by. And likewyse a Leuite, when he went nigh to the place, came and looked on him, and passed by. But a certain Samaritane, as he iourneyed, came vnto hym: and when he sawe hym he had compassion on hym, and went to him and bound vp his woundes, and poured in oyle and wine, and set hym on his owne beast, and brought hym to a common inne, & made prouision for hym. And on the morow, when he departed, he tooke out two pens, and gaue them to the host, and saied vnto him: Take cure of him, and whatsoeuer thou spendest more, when I come again, I will recompence thee. Wot ye nowe of these three thinkest thou was neighbour vnto him that fel among the theues, and he saied: he that shewed mercie on hym. Than saied Jesus vnto hym: Goe, and doo thou likewyse.

And on a certaine day when Jesus disputing with the Jewes had put the Sadducees to silence, who in the wayes of prouyng hym, had putte foorthe a question of a woman hauyng been married to seuen soondrye housebandes, whiche

whiche of all these should haue her at the daye of the generall resurrectiō, there came vnto hym one of the Scribes well seene in the lawe, as one that woulde putte foorth a question out of the disciples and most profounde knowelage of the law, and saied: Maister whiche is the chiefeste commaundemente of God, by kepping wherof I maye atteigne euerlastyng lyfe? Jesus aunswered. That thyng which thou demaundeste of me, the same shoulde other men haue learned of thee. For thou dooest profesle the knowelage of the lawe. What is there writen? and how doest thou reade, that is there writen? Than made he aunswer: Thou shalt loue the lorde thy God with all thy herte, with all thy soule, with all thy power, with all thy mynde, because he cannot bee loued enough: and next after hym thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Jesus allowyng hys aunswer, saied in this wyse: Thou knoweste what is beste: there remaineth nothyng but that thou put in vre and daily practise that thou doeste vnderstande, whiche thyng yf thou so dooe in facte and dede, thou shalt liue. For it is not the knowelage that geuerthe lyfe, but the kepyng and dooyng of the lawe. The Pharisee beeyng somewhat touched with the aunswere of oure Lorde, for that he knewe the woordes of the lawe and dydde not kepe that whiche was the chiefeste poynte in the lawe: yet because he was puffed vp with vayne glorye he woulde not acknowelage hys owne faulte, but euen as though he hadde nowe alreadye at large fulfylled the commaundemente of louyng God, he moued a newe question of his neighboure, saiyng: Who is my neighbour? as though a man myght loue GOD, and yet neuertheleſſe bee cruell and hurtefull to hys neighbour. The Jewes dyd in maner interprete the name of neighboure to extende no further but to men of their owne nacīō, suppolyng that it was lawfull for them to hate aliens and forreinours, and to leate them alone without dooeyng them any benefite or good at all. Jesus therefore knowyng the Pharisees mynde aunswereth hym by a parable here ensuyng, paincteyng owt all the whole matter and settyng it before the ye by a certayne mysticall exaumple or representacion of the thyng, and teachyng that the precepte of louing the neighbour ought not to bee enclosed within so narowe and streighte boundes of kynred and countreye, but the same to enlarge and extende it selfe to a more ferther coumpace, that is to wete, vnto all menne, forasmuche as oftentimes it chanceth that he whiche is nighest to vs in byrth or countreye, is ferther from vs in affection and loue then our verye foe. A certayne man (sayeth Jesus) takyng hys iourney from Hierusalem to Hierico, chaunced to lyghte on a coumpaignie of theues, who not beeyng contented ne thinkyng it enoughe to spoyle the poore soule, and to turne hym out of his clothes, but moreouer geuyng him soundrye woundes, they lefte hym by the high wayes syde half for dead, & there to petishe out right, yf no man had holpen hym: and this doen themselues went their waies. And it chaunced that a certain priest was goyng a iourney whiche laye the veraye same waye, and whereas for the verraye ordre and profession of priesthoode, whiche he had taken hym vnto, he ought chiefelye aboue others to haue fulfylled the commaundemente of God: yet notwithstandyng hymselfe beyng a Jewe, sawe one that was a Jewe, and beeyng himself a man of Hierusalem, saw one of Hierusalem spoiled, wounded, and lyyng halfe for deade, and yet passed by no whyt moued with any droop of pietie or compassion.

What is written in the lawe? &c.

Who is my neighboure?

A certayne man telleth theues. &c.

After all this it chaunced a certaine Leuite to passe by the same way, at whose handes a man might iustelye haue looked for the due obseruyng and kepyng of goddes goddes commaundemente, for that he beyng a manne dedicated to the temple, was a manifestre of goddes holye seruice, and therefore oughte to haue beene a man of deuocion. And this man euen as the other hadde doorn, thoughe he sawe the wounded man well enough, yet passed forth on his waye, and dyd no helpe at all to his brother and countreyman of the same citie that himselfe was of.

After both these it happened that a certaine Samaritane passyng the same waye on a iourney that he had to goe, espied the man that had bene robbed, and laye halfe aliue, halfe deade: and meruailyng what the matter was, he drewe nere vnto him, and perceiuyng the extreme myserie in the man, was moued with pitye and compassion towarde this Iewe, whereas himselfe was a Samaritane, and yet the Iewes do berate loye abhorre and hate al Samaritanes. For he did not onelye take pitye on him, but also (the hindraunce of his iourney nothyng passed on) he wente vnto him, and poured wine and oyle into his woundes, and than bound them vp. And not thinkyng enoughe to haue played him suche a kinde parte, he tooke and sette him on the same beaste, that himselfe rode on, and carried him to an inne, and there made prouision that he shoulde bee diligentely attended and looked vnto, for that his iourneye required suche haste that he couldne no longer tarye, he drewe forth two pieces of siluer coyne whiche they called denaries, amountyng (as is afore saied) to a couple of shillynges sterlyng or theraboute, and deliuered them to his hoste the inne keper, that he shoulde see the wounded man well attended and kepte, vntil suche tyme as his iourney beeyng doorn, he shoulde returne the same waye backe agayne, saying: Wyne hoste ye haue money for the purpole, see to this man at my coste and charge. That yf ye shall bestow any thyng aboue this summe that I haue deliuered you, ye for your parte shall not be a loser of a mite by it, reckon it to me whan I returne again this way, and whatsoeuer ye laye oute vpon him I shall paie it you again. Whan our Lorde had all this spoken, he saied vnto the lawier: Whiche of these three seme vnto thee to bee neigh boure vnto the partye that had fallen into the handes of the theues? then aunswered the lawier. He whiche beeyng moued with pitye did coumforte and helpe him in his distresse.

Then saied Iesus further: and in this poynte also hast thou made a right aunswere and a true, see thy lyfe bee lyke 7 aunswerable vnto thy woordes, and bee thou willyng rather to bee lyke to the Samaritane, then to the prieste, or the Leuite. With this parable the lorde Jesus reproued and checked the pride of the Iewes, whiche thought themselues enoughe and enoughe agaame to loue God, because they wer good churche me and daily goers to his temple, because they killed beastes in sacrifice vnto hym, because they carried his commaundementes about with theym written in the skirtes of their garmentes, because they had God, and the lorde, euermore in theyr mouth, whereas God doeth nothyng passe on such worshippyng, but is more deluted with the secrete affection of the syncere and pure mynde. But towardes the neighbour they felte no motion at all of charitie, as men liuyng to the behoufe of theymselfes, and no moe, yea and also reioyning at the welfare of theym whome it had beene their parte to helpe: that if they dyd any good turne or pleasure, they dyd it not to any other persones, then of their owne secte, whereas euery one man ought to be neighbour to an other, yf the case at anye tyme require helpe or succour. The priest and the leuite by birth and nacion, were neighboure to the wounded man, but the Samaritane, where by birthe and kynde he was his enemie, in charitee and loue became his neighbour. The religion of the Iewes diuideth nacion from nacion:

But the ghospell knoweth not suche maner diuersytes ne difference, but is euer glad to profite and doe good to all men, without respecte or acception of the persone. As the lorde hymselfe came to saue all creatures beyng called of the Iewes a Samaritane in the waye of reprochе at a tyme when it was: but the villany of callyng hym by that woord, doeth not offende al the vniuersal nacions of the worlde, forasmuche as they fynde the thyng that is compriſed vnder that name to bee for theyr healthe and safegarde. For Samaritanus, emong the Syrians is as muche to saye as a keper. And verayly he was the true keper and shepeheарde, which dyd suffre nothyng of his to perishe, whether they were sicklye, hurted, or wandryng aboute as straighes, but wished all menne to bee partakers of the eternall lyfe at leaſte wise as muche as in him laye. All the vniuersall progenye of mankynde beyng throughe the malice of Satan spoiled out of the clothing of innocencye, lore wounded with all kynde of vyce, cast aside, destitute of healpe, halfe dead and euen at the nexte doore to desperacion, Jesus cummyng down from heauen, vouchesalued to visite and see them, and to the ende he myghte the better helpe them by takyng mannes nature on him, he came veray nere to manne, bothe seeyng, and heeryng seene, hearyng and beyng heard, helpyng and beeyng felt, and hauing pitie on our extreme distresse, he tooke vp our synnes and beare them on his owne bodye, he dyd in his owne proppe persone suffre that we had deserued, and thesame Jesus hath seene to the curyng of vs, who neuer turned his face from any synner were he neuer so vyle or abiecte, whereas the proude and disdeignefull pryeste passethe by hym euen then geuyng vp the ghoste: whereas the Leuite neglecteth hym, biddyng God haue mercye vpon him, and so goyng foorth on his ways as he hadde begonne, lesthe shoulde susteine some hindreaunce or damage in the thynges of the worlde, whyle he helpeth hys neyghboure. And this Samaritane Jesus too, hath his hostes and inneholders, to whom he leauing the yearth, and ascendyng into heauen dooethe committe the wounded man to bee well-looked vnto, promysyng a rewarde in heauen, yf throughe the aboundaunce of charitie they shal haue layed oute anye thyng more then was commaunded, for the healpyng of the pietcous bodye. And by these inneholders are to bee vnderstanded the Apostles, and theyr successours, by whome euen at this daye he dooth cure and healpe mankynde, and gathereth thesame from the violence of theues into the hostelye of the churche, where the woundes of synne are healed. Therfore where by the doctryne of the ghospell, euen our veray enemye also muste be loued, and whereas accordyng to the profession of the Pharisye, euen the Samaritane is to bee loued of the Jewe, yf he doo hym good: per the Jewes, who coulde perfectlye saye by rote at their fingers endes: Thou shalte loue thy God aboue all thynges, thou shalte loue thy neighbour as well as thine owneselfe, in the verave owne persone of Christe dyd breake both those commaundementes at ons, being on the one parte reprochefull of theyr woordes agaynste God, whose woordes they wouldе not beleue, whose miracles they slaundrously repyzed to bee doen by the power of Beelzebub (for the father beeing verave God, was in the sonne beeyng verave God,) and on the other parte they hated the neighbour which did them benefite: for that they wroughte alwayes to destrupe and putte hym to death, who freely broughte healthe and saluation vnto all creatures. And suche an one hathe fulfilled alwell the one as the other of the commaundementes aboue rehersed, which doeth in Christe, both loue god aboue all thinges, and man also hauyng moste brighy doen for hym as himselfe. For true it is that he is

loued in hys membres in whome sembleablye he is offended, whan their weake conscience is offended: and is putte to open shame of the worlde, whan they be putte to shame: and is putte to death, whan they be putte to death.

The texte. ¶ It fortuned that as they went, he entred into a certain toune. And a certain woman named Martha receiued him into her house. And this woman had a sister called Marie, whiche also sate at Jesus feete, and hearde his woorde. But Martha was combred about muche seruing, and stoode and saied: lorde doest thou not care that my sister hath lefte me to serue alone? Bidde her therefore, that she helpe me. And Jesus answered, and saied vnto her: Martha, Martha, thou arte carefull and troubled about manye thynges: veraylye one is nedefull: Marie hath chosen the good parte, whiche shall not be taken awaie from her.

With this Parable, whan Jesus had taughte howe muche they were to bee loued, who beliowyng theyr wholle tyme in thattendaunce of euangelicall doctryne, haue none other care ne entente, but to learne of Jesus the doctryne of lyfe, whereof they maye geue parte vnto all persones, and also how greately they are to bee loued, who forsakyng and leauyng all seruice that is to be doen with the bodye, doue altogether attende suche thynges as concerne the soule: there was a chaunce euen there to bee seene, by the whiche thys documente and lesson may be the better enprinted in our minde: for by suche plaine examples of experience, the hertes of the grosse and ignoraunt sort are the more pithyly and effectually framed. For whan Jesus hauing vpon time of laysure tō other businesse, was walkyng vp and downe with his disciples, who hauyng geuen ouer all care of worldely matters attended onely to the gospel and nothyng els: it fortuned that they entred into a certain litle toune. And there a certain womā called Martha, receiued and enterteined hym in her house. This woman had a sister called Marie. They had eyther of theym equall loue towardes the lorde, but theyr course of liuyng was of twoo soondrye sortes. The exercise also of theyr deuocion towardes God was of twoo soondrye sortes, lyke as in one bodye there bee soondrye vses of the lymmes, and in the bodye of Jesus (whyche is the churche) there bee soondrye gyftes of the spirite. For Marye as ye would sate makyng holy daye from all businesse that was to bee doen about the house, set herselfe downe at our lord Jesus feete listenyng to hys talke, wherewith she was so rauished, that forgettyng all other thynges, she couldе not be pluckеd awaye from hym. Contrariewyse, Martha beyng carefull about the prouydyng of the dyner, ranne vp and down, she was much buquiete, as one hauyng bothe her handes full and as busye as couldе be, that no maniet pointe myght bee wantyng of all suche thinges as belonged to the swete entreteinyng of the lorde and of his disciples. It was one loue towardes the lorde that possessed them both: but it would not suffre Mary to bee pulled awaie from his feete: and it made Martha to desire her vp and downe about the house, and suffred not her to stande still by the lorde. Thus dyd one and the same zele forze two sisters vnto doopynges of two soondrye sortes, whereas in louyng and making muche of Jesus they did throughly accorde. Notwythstandyng, Martha forasmuche as she was not hable, but to her great paines, to doe al thynges alone, whych appertained to the prepayryng of all thinges in ordre as it should be, and saw her sister lyke an holydaye woman sittyng at the feete of Jesus, she made no querele of vnkyndenesse to her sister, whom she knewe wel enough could not be pulled pulled away, but the halfe blamed Jesus, who wt suche wordes as he spake, kept her awaye from puttyng to her helpyng hande beeyng than requisite. Maister (saith she) doest thou nothyng care that my syster suffreth me to doe all the seruice my self alone? Commaund thou her therfore that she helpe me, ozels I know the wyll not be pluckt away from ther, except thou bidde her. So great is the sweteneſſe of thy talke. But yet in the meane time ꝑ diner muſt bee dressed, and I beeyng but one sole woman, am not able inough to dooe al that is to bee dooen. If these wordes our lorde being delited with ꝑ zele of both the women, dooeth not disallow the diligence of Martha, nor thydeth her, whan she murmured against her syster: but yet sumwhat taketh Maries parte, saiyng: O Martha, Martha, in dede thou art tormented with careful-neſſe of dressyng the diner, and art all vnquiet and drawen this way and that way about many thynges. But there is one thyng aboue all others necessary, whiche ought continually to be dooen, if it might bee: dooe thou make an ende of thy busynes that thou hast in hande, howsoeuer thy prouidyng & makyng ready for vs shall frame, we shall be contented with it. But Marie hath chose to her a great dele the better parte, who hauyng forgotten thynges requisite for the body, is altogether occupied in suche matters as do concerne ꝑ soule. Therfore it were not reason that she should be pluckt away from thynges of the principall best sorte whiche she hath specially chosen, and to be thrust oute to offices of baser seruice. I doe in deed good parte take this good loue and zele of thyne, whiche now at this tyme preparyth a repaste for me & my dyſciples: but I am more refreshed and better filled at their handes, which take into their soules my wordes, that they may haue saluacion therby. This is the meate whiche dooeth moste singularely fede me: & this is the drinke wher-with I am refreshed. Whoso is embusied with prouidyng for thynges pertei-nyng to the body, is drawen many wayes into soondrie cares, and an ende of all suche poyntes of takyng paynes shall at suche tyme cum, whē through the apperyng of immortalitie, all necessities shal ceasse, in whiche the weke-neſſe of mannes nature is now in this present world soondrie waies disquie-ted. But suche an one hath a great aduauntage and forsele, who hauyng caste of all suche maner cares, is altogether rauished to thynges heauenly, gathe-ryng hymself together and restyng vpon one thyng. But thesame one is a thyng of suche nature, that it surmounteth all other thynges in goodneſſe: the felicitie of whiche one thyng shall not be taken awaye, but shalbe augmented at the tyme, whan that whiche is imperfite shall bee abolyshed, and that that is perfite shall bee opened. Neither is there in the meane tyme any mour-mourryng to be made against suche persones, as though they were altogether idle, who sitting still from all bodily seruices, do for suche reſpecte and cōsi-deracion geue attendaunce to heauenly doctrine, cleuyng fast to my steppes, being long in learning the thyng that thei may afterward teache & thoroughly sendyng do wne into the bottome of the affections of theyr owne hearetes the thyng that they may afterward prescribe and enioyne vnto others: to the ende they may thereby dooe good vnto so muche the greatter noumbre towardes the achiuyng of eternall saluacion. And yet shall not suche persons lacke their due reward neyther, who according to the exaumple of thy dooyng vouche at this tyme, dooe of a godly zele, after the rate of ꝑ tyme, relieue the corporall necessitie of them that haue the cause of the ghospell in handelyng, and suche as fede the hungrie, as clothe the naked, as visite the sicke, as gooe to theim that lye in prison, as harbour straungers and them that lacke lodgyng. All these also shall bee partakers of the rewarde of the ghospell. But lyke as in the bodye the eye whiche semeth to be idle, dooeth more good seruice, then the hande beyng buisily occupied about soondry kyndes of seruice: euen so suche as do altogether geue hede vnto those thynges whiche do most nereste cõcerne and touche the life euerlastyng, although they seme as holidayemenne, to repose theymselfes from all corporall businesse: yet they dooe more good then the others, because they doe the thyng most chiefly requisite to be doen. For the one must gruthche not against the other, forasmuche as euery one of thẽ accordyng to his gyft which he hath receiued of god, serueth me in my mẽbres.

The. xi. Chapter.

The texte. And it fortuned as he was praiyng in a certain place, whã he ceassed, one of his disciples sayd vnto him: Lord teache vs to praye, as Iohn also taught his disciples. And he said vnto thẽ. Whã ye praye, say. Our father which art in heauen, halowed be thy name. Thy kingdome cum. Thy will be fulfilled, euen in earth also as it is in heauen. Our daily bread geue vs this daye. And forgeue vs our sinnes. For euen we forgeue euery man that trespasseth vs. And lede vs not into temptacion, but deliuer vs from euill.

When the Lorde Iesus had by this kynde of representyng the matter, and by the example afore goyng taught, that they did a great matter and a buisye, whoso dyd full and whole geue attendaunce to the doctrine of the ghospell, whiche doctrine no person can sincerely handle, onlesse he shake himself of from al desires and cares of this worlde: it remained that he should prescribe a apoint a tenour and fourme of praiyng also. For praier is (as ye would saye) the moste purest sacrifice of euangelicall deuocion, vnto the whiche prayer Iesus did oftentimes depart into places of solitary contemplacion, and enured his disciples also vnto the same. And prayer is that same secrete metyng, through whiche the mynd and soule of man, beyng (as ye would say) carryed vp to heauen, ioyneth in talke with god, (all cares and phantasticall imaginacions of earthly thinges set apart.) In dede the phariseis prayed both oftentimes and also long together: but it was with sadde droupyng countenaunces, and abrode where all folkes should see them. And Iohns disciples praied also. Yea and the Samaritans too prayed on their mountaine. The religion of the heathen folkes also had a maner of praiyng after their fashion.

For as muche therefore as neyther all sortes of menne had one maner of praiyng, nor one maner thynges were asked of god in all folkes prayers: the Apostles are very desirous and fain to haue a precise fourme and tenoure of praying appoynted vnto them of Christe, whiche they oughte to folowe. Whereupon whan Iesus according to his accustomed wont had withdrawẽ hymselfe with his disciples from the resorte of people into a solytary place for to for to praye: as soone as he had finished his praiers, one of the noumbre of his disciples, saied vnto hym: Maister, forasmuche as we are thy disciples, mete it is, that we should do all thynges by thyne appointment.

Teache vs therfore a fourme of prayng also, like as John, whan he lyued taught his disciples how they should pray. Then Jesus whereas he had in many woordes at sondrye tymes taughte his disceples, that the praiers of christians neither ought to bee long, nor made for ostentacion or vayneglory, ne for all maner thynges as well one as another, he appoynted vnto them a fourme of prayng, suche as hereunder folo weth: which although it be common vnto all persones, yet doeth it more iustely and directly appertain vnto the mynisters and teachers of the ghospell, who beyng, (as ye wonlde saye) persones exempted from this woorld, bestowe all their labour and trauail in this onely behalf, that the glory of god may be opened & renounced amenge the good, and his kyngdom from day to day may more and more flourishe in strength and force, the kyngdome of Satan vtterly suppressed, and brought vnder foote. And like as in heauen aboue, (from whence Lucifer with al his complyces and confederacie was toumbled doune headlong,) there is nowe no maner rebellion agaynst the wyll of God: so amenge the children of God beyng ordeyned to succede in the place of the aungels that wer cast out of heauen with Lucifer, all thynges may bee dooen after the will of their heauenly father. Also that he feede his chyldren with the breade of heauenlye doctrine and grace, whiche may make their soules iustie and full fedde vnto the lyfe euerlastyng. And in case any offence or trespace bee throughe humayne frailtie committed agaynste his wyll: that than he mercyfully forgeue hys chyldren lyke a tendre and frendely father, as they among themselfes forgeue one another, if one haue any thing offended or trespaced against ꝓ other.

Lord teache vs to pray, &c.

And because that durynge the tyme of their life here in this mortall bodye, lyke as they maye profyte and growe to better, so maye they contrarywyse fall vnto wurse, (especiallye the tyraunte Satan by all meanes prouokynge and stirrynge them so to dooe:) that they may vnder the tuicion and wardyng of their heauenly father, be safely defended against Satans engiens: and that eyther they may not fall into temptacion, or if they doe fall, than he beyng their defendour, whiche is the stronger of might and puissaunce, they may depart conquerours with the victory. As for the tenour of the woordes of prayng is this here folowyng. Our heauenly father, we beyng here set on earth who thy goodnesse hath vouchesalued to call by the name of childre, we pray the, that thyrough our doctrine and liuing, thy power, thy wisdom, and thy goodnesse, may still more and more cum to the knowlage of men, and that thei may haue vnderstanding, that all glorie is due vnto thy name, from whom proceedeth all thyng, whatsoeuer is goodlye and honozable eyther in heauen, or els in earth, to the ende that thoughe beeyng basse and slendre on our owne parties, yet in thee we maye glory and tryumphe: hytherto hath Satan reigned all the woorlde ouer throughe sinne: whervnto men haue been as bondseruauntes beyng therto allured & trayned with wicked lustes. Make thou, o father, that sinnes clene taken away, and thy holy spirite poured out vpon them, all creatures may be obedient to thy wyl, and that thou euery day bounteously geuyng vnto vs the heauenly foode of thy grace, we may from tyme to tyme growe forth to better and better, vntyll we maye cum to the full perfection

Our father whiche art in heaue. &c

of euangelical godlynes. Furthermore for as muche as men we are, made of fraile metall, in case through beeyng in a wrong way by ignorannce, or through weakenesse and frailtie, we shall any thyng trespasse against thee, o father, ceasse not thou to bee fauourable to thy children: but accordyng to thy mercifulnesse forgeue vs, for as muche as we do forgeue one an other, if the brother, through the same frailtie do offende against the brother, to the end that peace may bee firmely established amongest our selfes, and that we may haue peace with thee. And forbecause we know the malice of that same euill tirranne, from whence thy fatherly goodnesse hath redemed vs: suffre vs not to be ouercommed of hym: but and if thou suffre vs for a probacion of our pacience to be afflicted either by hym, or by his soudliers wicked men, leat vs through thy sure safegard haue the ouerhand of hym, and leat all his assaultes turne to our benefite in the ende.

The texte. And he said vnto them: If any of you shall haue a frende, and shall goe to hym at midnyght, and say vnto hym: Frende lend me thre loaues, for a frende of mine is cum out of the way to me, and I haue nothing to set before him: and he within answer and say: Trouble me not, the doze is now shut, and my children are with me in the chaumber I cannot rise and geue thee. I saye vnto you, though he will not arise, and geue him, because he is his frende, yet because of his importunitie he wyll rise, and geue hym, as many as he nedeth. And I say vnto you: aske & it shall be geuen you. Seke and ye shall fynd. Knocke, and it shalbe opened vnto you. For euery one that asketh, receiueth, and he that seketh, findeth, and to him that knocketh, shalbe opened.

But the better to stirre his seruauntes vnto the instauntnesse of prayinge, and beside to prouyde to putte in them an assured truste to obteine, he added to the premisses, a parable of suche sorte as followeth: how gentle (saith he) and how easie to be entreated, god is, beyng of nature beneficiall and full of lyberalytie towardes his children, cōiecture ye of your owne selfes. If any one of you be destitute of necessaries, and haue a frende, he will be bolde to goe vnto him in the middes of the night, and familiarly knockyng at his doores, he wyll bee bolde to saie: Frende, lend me thre loaues of bread. For so it is, that a certain frende of myne takyng my house in his waye, hath soodaynly cum vpon me vnawares, euen late in the euenyng to lodge with me all nighte, and I haue nothyng at home in myne owne howse to sette afore hym to eate. And peradventure that same frende wyll not euen byanby at the fyrst woorde geue the thyng that thou doest aske, but beyng vll willyng to open his doores, he wyll aunswer within his house: Trouble me not cummyng to craue thynges after this sorte in the nyghte tyme, my doores are now shut in for al nyght, and my children are with me in bedde, I cānot arise & geue that thou requirest. That if the partie whiche lacketh the loaues, goe not his waye byanby at this excuse makyng, but shall continue there still knockyng at his frendes dooze, as one that will haue no nay of the thing that he cūmeth for, this I affyrme vnto you although the respect of frendship do not moue him, yet beyng ouercomed with ꝑ importunitie of the partie that maketh suche praiyng vnto him, he wil arise out of his bed, and will geue him not only thre loaues, accordyng to the tenour of his petition and asking, but he will geue him howe many soeuer he shall haue nede of. If importunitie of praiyng bee of suche force and effect at one mortall mannes handes to the behoufe of an other man: howe muche more then shall it take place and effecte with God, who is muche delited with suche maner importunitie, and not offended? And in case he at any tyme make delaye

to geue that is aſked, niggardelhype is not the cauſe therof, no; yet his hardenelle that he wyll not be entreated: but therein he enkindleth our deſyre, that he maye the more plenteouſly geue that we aſke, and we on our parties, maye the more derely eſteme and loue the thyng that hath been obteyned by impoztune prayers. Theſame therfoze that a frende beeyng in nede would dooe with his frende beeyng a moztall man, theſame leat euerie one of you muche moze be bolde to do towarde God beyng a bounteous and liberall father, whome ſuche impoztunitie doeth well contente, and who can neuer be vndoen oz made poore by geuyng. Of hym therfoze aſke ye with hertie prayers from the botome of the herte, in caſe ye nede any thyng, and it ſhall be geuen you. If yee bee ignoz aunt in any thyng, make ye due inquiſition foz it, and though the ſecrete woykyng of your fathers ſpirite in you, ye ſhall fynde out the thyng, whiche by mannes witte coulde not poſſibly haue been perceyued. Knocke ye with prayer, ioynyng therunto almeſdedes towardes the neighbours, and it ſhall bee opened vnto you. This is the impoztunitie wherewithall god is (as ye might ſaye) ouercõmed, and euen by playn foze wonne to your petitions, that he cannot ſaye you naye, euen as a caſtell oz foztreſſe is woonne by foze of armes. Praying is with man oftentymes made all in vayne: either becauſe he can not perfourme that is aſked, oz els becauſe he will not. But at goddes hande whoſoeuer aſketh, doeth receiue: whoſoeuer ſeketh doeth fynde: and whoſoeuer knocketh, to him it is opened. And your father beſt knoweth what thynges are auaillable towardes eternall ſaluacion, and theſame thynges doeth he with glad will freely geue, if he bee prayed: inſomuche, that if though your beeyng in a wyong opinion, oz in an errour of iudgement he were aſked thynges hurtefull: he would reken it as a benefite towardes you, to denie vnto you that was naughtely ſued foz: but in ſtede of the thyng ye wyſhed, he would geue that might bee foz your welth. Seke, and ye ſhall fynde, &c.

If the ſonne ſhall aſke breade of any of you, that is a father, wyll he geue hym a ſtone? oz if he aſke fiſhe, wyll he foz fyſhe geue hym a ſerpent? oz if he aſke an egge, wyll he offre him a Scozpion? yf ye than beyng euill can geue good gifftes vnto your children, how muche more ſhall your father of heauen, geue the holy ſpirite to them that deſire it of hym. The texte.

The naturall affection of carnall parentes towardes their children, doeth ſo woze, that they cannot ſaye naye vnto them whome they haue begotten, yf theſame ſhoulde make petition foz a thyng pertaynyng to the health of the bodye. Make ye a coniecture by compariſon of your owne ſelues. For who is it of you all, that in caſe he ſhould aſke a piece of breade of his father, can ſuppoſe, that theſame would geue his ſonne a ſtone in ſtede of a piece of breade? oz in caſe he ſhoulde aſke fiſhe, can thynke that the father would offre his ſonne a ſerpent in ſtede of a fiſhe? oz, in caſe he ſhould deſire to haue an egge, can reken that the father in ſtede of an egge would geue hym a Scozpion hidden in an eggſhell? That if the tendze loue and affection of nature be of ſo great foze and ſtrength emong men, (beyng many other wayes naughtie perſones,) that towardes their chyldren aſkyng thynges profitable, they are frendly geuers: how much moze your heauenly father, who is the father of ſpirites, and who of nature is good, will geue vnto you from heauen, his ſpirite beyng good, whiche ſhall aboundauntely geue you all goodneſſe yf ye ſhall make petition to him foz it.

The texte. And he was casting out a deuill, and the same was dumme. And when he had cast out the deuill, the dumme spake, and the people wondred. But some of them sayed: he casteth out deuilles, through Beelzebub the chiefest of the deuils. And other tempted hym, and required of hym a signe from heauen. But he knowyng their thoughtes, sayed vnto them: Euery kyngdome deuided against it selfe, is desolate: and one house doeth fall vpon another. If Satan also, bee deuided against hymselfe, how shall his kyngdome endure? Because ye saye, that I cast out deuils through Beelzebub. If I by the helpe of Beelzebub caste out deuils, by whose helpe doe your children caste them out? Therefore shall they bee your iudges. But if I with the finger of God caste out deuils, no doubte the kyngdome of God is come vpon you. When a strong man armed watcheth his house, the thynges that he possesseth are in peace. But when a stronger then he commeth vpon hym and ouercommeth hym, he taketh from hym al his harnesse, wherin he trusted, and diuideth his goodes. He that is not with me, is against me. And he that gathereth not with me, scatereth abrode.

Satan also hath a spirite of his owne, whome he enspireth to all his seruauntes, to be a prouoker and a mouer of them to all naughtinesse. Yea and the worlde too, hath a spirite belongyng to it, whiche allureth men to the loue of thynges transitory. But with this spirite, your heauenly fathers spirite hath no maner entreme dyng at all. If therfore the spirite of your heauenly father shall dwell in you, the spirite of Satan must bee expoulsed: and the one spirite must nedes auoyd out, for to make roume that the other maie come and inhabite in your breastes. And behold a chaunce that might laye manifestlye before their eyes, what thyng the euill spirite wrought in the hertes of the Iewes, beyng euermore wrastlers against the holy spirite of God. There was broughte vnto Iesus a certayne man, possessed with a mischieuous deuill: and it was a deuill, not of one sorte onely, but both a dumme deuill, and also a blynde, so that he could neither loke vp vpon Iesus, nor yet speake vnto him. Thã Iesus of his owne accorde taking pitie on the man beeyng in suche affliction, commaunded the deuill to voyde out of him, and he voyded. And beholde there were certain Iewes presente standing by, whose soules the spirite of Satan did more daungerfully possesse, then that same vncleane spirite had possessed the body of this man. For some of them slaunderously sayed, that the miracle had been doen of the deuill, allegyng, that Iesus did suche thinges not by the power of God, but by the helpe of Beelzebub the prince of deuils. Some others agayne after seeyng so many miracles, yet still remaynyng in vnbeleefe, required of hym some notable token from heauen, whereby it might euidently appere that he had familiaritie with God, who dwelleth in heauen, and not with vncleane spirites, whose blindyng of mennes eyes, doeth commonly spryng from the yearth. And this did they speake temptyng the lorde, neuer awhitte the more myndyng to beleue on hym, although he had doen þ thyng that they requyred: but whether he had doen it or not doen it, they had surmised a matter of slaunder one or other readie to obiecte against hym. But Iesus, as soone as he sawe theyr vngodly thoughtes, made answer to their wicked surmises in suche sorte as followeth: How dooeth your slaunderous reprouyng of me stande together? Ye see that no kyngdome is liable to stande, if it bee at strife within it selfe by ciuill discorde of one of the same realme against another. Whiche thyng if it so bee, it cannot be chosen but that it muste come to desolacion, and one house to fall downe vpon another by an vniuersall ruine. That if the thyng bee true, whiche ye rehearse, that through the maintenaunce and ayde of Beelzebub prince of deuils, I doo cast out hurtefull spirites, who verily bee his felowes and souldiers: than it followeth as a true conclusion, that ciuill spirites

He casteth out deuils through Beelzebub.

Euery kyngdome deuided against it selfe. &c.

spirites beeyng at variaunce within theymselfes, dooe fyght together, and one of theim to bee chaced awaye by an other. Nowe if Satan fighte against Satan, how shall his kyngdome stande? ye see deuils to be cast oute, and ye graunt that euill they be whom I dooe cast out: on what grounde than dooe ye coniecture these thynges to bee dooen by the supportacion of Beelzebub, rather then of god? Is Beelzebub woont to doe for the healthe and safegarde of men, and to chace his souldiers out of their possessions, by whom he exercyseth his tirannie? And yet if this bee dooen, it argueth and prooueth that the kyngdome of Satan shall shortely bee destroyed, and the kyngdome of God to bee nowe at hande. I caste out deuils with a mere worde: I cast them oute freely: I vse thereunto no charmyng woordes of witchecrafte, ne of iugleyng or blyndyng mennes eyes. The acte ye cannot dispraue: why than haue ye mynde to referre the glorye of a good worke to Beelzebub, the god? Than yf the hatered, whiche ye beare vnto me dooeth perswade you, that I cast out deuils by the ayde of Beelzebub: these young men beeyng your owne soones whome ye haue seen dooyng the selfsame thyng, by whose helpe do they chase awaye deuils? Plain homely men they be, they are men of no knowlage ne authorytie, they cā no skill of the malicious sleightes or witches or Nygromancers: and yet do these caste out deuils in the name of me. What thig they doe, they doe it on a faithfull truste in God: therefore shall your vnbelefe be condēned by these iudges and none other. The plain simpleneſſe of these hath beleued, whereas your wisedom and expert knowelage of the world, striueth against the glorye of god. Whereupon seeyng there is neyther eyther reasō in saying that one euil spirite driueth out an other euil spirite, and forasmuche as your children do cast out deuils by the helpe of none other then by whose helpe I do cast thē out: it is clere that I doe cast out euil spirites by ỹ vertue and power of god, who is good. For the spirite of him is of more power and might thē al the whole packe of the wicked spirites ỹ are. Neither is there any agremēt betweene the spirite of god, and thē. For god loueth ỹ preseruacio of mankynde, and they seke the destruction of the same. Nowe than, if it bee thyng manifest that the thynges whiche ye see me doe, I doe by the power of god: than is there no doubte, but that the kingdome of god is cum vnto you, whiche Iohn did preache to bee at hande. Reason it is therfore that ye loyne your selfes with hym, and withdraw you from the reigne of Satan, which shall shortely haue an ende. Ye cannot be partakers of bothe kyngdomes at once: there is betweene god and Satan a batail that by no possibylitye maye be brought to attonemēt. The cause wil neuer by any condicions be brought to agrement. Satan shall either geat the victorye, or els by stronge hande beedryuen out, he shall not by yeldyng or submyttyng hymselfe continue in hys reigne, ne yet bee receiued vpon any condicions of agreement appoynted vnto him. He hath hitherto reigned without redresse: but nowe is there cum a power more puissaunt & mighty thē his tirannie. For one finger of God is more mightie to preserue & saue mankind, thā all ỹ hostes of Beelzebub to destroy the same. The same thyng therfore shall in this behalfe cum to passe whiche is comonly woont to chaūce betwene two head captayns, both being valyaunt, and strong, and both beyng fierce & couragious, and suchas al their affiaunce and trust resteth in their armour and weapon. For whan a man of great force and puissaunce beeyng in armour dooeth kepe his fortresse, the thynges that bee in his possession, are in peaceable reste and quiete. That if any other being of more power the he, do set vpon him, and do with plain force of armes conquere him that was in harnes wel armed, he wil entre no leage of felowship to bee as halfe partener with him in his castell, but dryuyng the other quite awaye, he wyll entre vpon full possession of the whollе house hymselfe. The weapon whe rin the other trusted, he will by plain force take away frō hym, all his richesse and substaunce he will rifle and spoile, and distribute it among his souldiers. Now doeth it behoue you to loke aboute you, and see of whether syde ye will bee, and with whether ye wyll take parte, with God beyng the mightier, or with Satan anon to bee dryuen oute. If ye haue peace with Satan, ye are out with God. If ye haue peace with god, than cannot ye and Satan agree. And in the one or the others campe must ye fight. The tyme ass it now chapeth, will not suffer any persons to sitte idle. And whoso is not on my syde, is an aduersarie vnto me, and euen in this verye poynte dooeth me hurte and scathe, because that where he ought of dutie to fauour my syde, he doeth not fauour me: and whoso doeth not gather with me, scattereth abrode.

The texte. Whan the vnclene spirite is gone out of a man, he walketh through drye places seekyng rest. And whan he findeth none, he sayeth: I will returne again vnto my house, whence I came out. And whan he cummeth, he findeth it swept and garnished. Then goeth he and taketh to hym seuen other spirites worse then himself: and they entre in and dwell there. And the ende of that man is worse then the beginnyng.

And because the Jewes toke vpon them an opinion of righteousenesse, and vpon boldenesse therof, did either negligently leat slippe the doctrine of the gospell, or els did vtterly refuse it, and would none of it, he put forth a derke parable wherby to signifie, that a more greuous damnation should lighte on such persones, as whan they haue gon a litel way forward towardes righteousnes, did fall backe agayne to their olde enormities, then on suche as neuer knowing ỹ light of euangelical trueth, had cōtinued still in the derkenesse of their sinneful liuing. For ỹ people of the Jewes was disseuered by meane of the lawe, from the Gentiles beyng Idolaters: but fallyng euery other day of freache to their former transgressions, they were cum at length to suche degree of vngodlynesse, that whatsoeuer offence their forefathers had doen in putting the prophetes to death, or in conspiryng against Moses, the same did they seuenfolde double more vngraciously renewe against the sonne of God, and against his disciples. Albeit this parable dooeth ferther also touch euery man, who beyng once washed frō his former synnes through baptisme, onte deliuered from the euill spirite of this worlde, by the worde of the ghospell, dooeth negligently vse the gyfte of god, nor taketh any care to proceede from tyme to time, to ferther degrees of perfection. Vnto suche an one beeyng wawed downe again to his former liuyng, baptisme, and ỹ knowlage of holy doctrine shall auaile to none other effecte or purpose, but ỹ he shal of his own frekyng haue the sorer damnation at the daie of iudgement, as one the whiche to his former swerueng out of the right waye, hath toyned vnthankefulnes, & malciousnesse also. Now of the parable this is the tenour here folowyng.

Whan an vnclene spyrite is once departed out of a man, beeyng putte away by the power of God, for as muche as he hath an obstinate will to doe hurte, he goeth walkyng vp and downe by places barain & waterlesse seeking rest. And whan he could no where fynde the same, he sayeth within hymselfe. I will returne backe into my house that I came out of. And returning vnto the same, he founde it in dede sweped cleane with brooms, but altogether emptie. Whā he espieth that, he goeth his waye and taketh vnto him seuen other spirites, more vngracious then himself euer was, and with suche a knotte of company goeth he again to his house, in dede made cleane, but leafe vnkept, nor armed with any defence of vertues semyng for the gospel. For the ornamentes and garnishyng of ceremonies, in dede make outwardlye a shewe or semblaunce of godlines: but because they are onely certain vain counterfaites of thynges, they kepe not away the assaultes of wicked spirites, but rather are an occasion of a ferther vngodlines. And euen so doeth it chaunce vnto that same man, who beyng clensed from one yll spirite, is made subiect vnto seuen that are euery one of them worse then he.

The texte. And it fortuned that as he spake these thinges, a certain woman of the cumpany lift vp her voice, and said vnto him: happy is the wombe that bare thee, and the pappes whiche gaue thee sucke. But he said, yea happy are they that heare the word of god and kepe it.

Whyle Jesus was speakyng this and a great deale more vnto the people of al sortes, a certain womā, mervailyng at his wordes beig so wise & so pithy as they were, lifteyng vp her voice amōgal the cūpany, said: blessed is the wōbe of that same woman which bare the, & blessed are ỹ pappes of thy nource which thou didst sucke. The voice of this womā was pronoūced against ỹ synagogue of the Jewes beyng euermore a slaunderous maligner against Christ, & the woman beareth the figure of the churche. Wherfore Jesus doeth not deny her testimony & preachig, but maketh it perfite, saiyng: Forsoth blessed thei are, whiche heare the word of god, and kepe the same in their hert, that it reme not out, but tary vntil it may one day bring forth frute of euerlastyng saluacion. That same is a muche more blessed thyng, than it was for the mother to haue borne his body in hers, or to haue nourced him wt milke. One woman myghte bee hable to beare so great an one, or to geue me sucke. But this blessednesse may be a thyng common to all creatures.

The texte. Whan the people were gathered thicke together, he began to say: This is an euill nacio, they seke a signe, and there shall no signe be geuen them: but the signe of Jonas the prophete. For as Jonas was a signe to the Niniuites, so shall the sonne of man be to this nacion. The quene of the South shal arise at the iudgement with the men of this nacion, and condemne them: for she came from the vttermost partes of the earth to heare the wisdom of Salomon. And beholde, a greatter then Salomon is here. The men of Niniue shall arise at the iudgement with this nacion, and shall condemne them: for they were brought to repentaunce by the preachyng of Jonas. And behold, a greatter then Jonas is here.

And whan at the speakyng of suche woordes as these, the multitude of people came still thicker and thicker rennyng thyther: Jesus began to make answere vnto theim that had tofore required to haue some notable sygne shewed vnto theim from heauen, as though the thynges whiche Jesus had hytherto doone, were but basse and lowe matters, nor dyd conteine in them any poynt at all semyng for a great prophet: and for that the same were doen for the common inferiour sorte: but they thoughte that vnto the Pharyseys for their parres, as meme of learnyng, and of an higher degree ferre aboue the rate of the common multitude, it were mete to shewe some special matter of woondre, euen purposely and specially for them. And this did they speake not of an vnfayned myndе, menyng any good faith therein: but to tempte and

proue him, to the entēt that if he shewed none, they might finde cauillacions, that al the rest of his miracles had been doen by the helpe and maintenaunce of Beelzebub, on the other side, if he shewed any, that than they might find sū other matter in hym, whereof falsely to accuse hym, and to lay to his charge. Jesus therefore saied: This same is an euill generacion, and of none vnderstonding plaine meaning, where they haue already seen so many miracles doē, thei require yet sum further straunge tokē, not whereunto to geue credite, but which they maye slaunderously repoze: but the thyng whiche they do aske in ỹ waye of fraude and guyle. they shal not obteyn, but they shal receiue a signe such an one as they are woozthye. They shall not haue geuen them, wherat to fynde surmised cauillacions, but they shall haue geuen them, that maye conuince their malice and infidelitie. For there shalbe geuen vnto them the signe of Jonas the prophet. It the preachyng of Jonas, the Niniuites did repēt and reforme their manifold vngraciousnesse, whan the same Jonas had shewed no miracle amongst them: but this nacion can by no miracles, ne by no benefites bee brought to soften their herres to repentaunce. And yet is there one preſēt among them greatter than euer was the prophet Jonas: which Jonas these folkes dooe highly estime, because the same beyng in a whales mouthe in the sea, liued there three daies and three nyghtes, and after all that, whan he was estemed and reputed for dead, so daintily appered aline. I lyke matter hereunto, but yet muche more wōderful, and more aboue the course of nature shal it be, that the soonne of man beeyng dead in dede, shall lye three daies buried in the herte of the yearth: and yet contrarye to the lokyng of all euill persones, the yearth shal yelde hym again a liuesmā on the third day, whom it receiued dead. Wherfore at the last iudgement, this nacion, who now despiseth all others in comparison of theymselfes, and who thinke theimselfes to sitte euen in the high topcastell of true seruyng of God, shall bee condemned of manye nacions, whiche were thought to bee tote ferre out of the waie frō all godly deuocion. The quene of Saba shal arise at the iudgement with the mē of this nacion, and shall condemne theym, because that she beeyng a woman, and hauyng nothyng to do with the doctrine of the lawe, yet came a great lōg iourney from the fertheſt partes of the worlde to Jerusalem, of purpose to heare the wysdome of Salomon. And yet euen now we here in this place there is a greatter matter than euer was Salomon: and yet is the thyng set at naughte that is now preſēt here. The Niniuites being folkes without any knowlage of the lawe, and wurchippers of Idolles, shall stande in tryall with this nacion at the iudgemente, and shall condemne them, because they did repent and amend their abominacions, at the preachyng of a man vnknowen vnto them and an alieye borne, and with no miracles, ne with no benefites shewyng any cause in hymselfe, why he should bee so muche regarded. And behold, here is now preſēte a greatter matter than euer was Jonas: and yet are they nothyng moued to amendment.

The texte. No man lighteth a candell, and putteth it in a priuie place, neither vnder a bushell: but on a candelstiche, that they whiche cum in, may see the light. The light of the body is the eye. Therfore whan thine eye is single, all thy body also shalbe full of light: but if thine eye be euill, thy body also shalbe full of derkenesse. Take hede therfore that the lighte whiche is in thee be not derkenesse. If all thy bodye therfore be cleere, hauyng no part derke: then shall it all be full of light, euen as whan a candell doeth light thee with his brightnesse.

Now although many there were emong the Iewes, whose hertes by reason of their owne wilfull and stubburne malicioulnesse, the light of the gholpel did make moze blynde then they were afoze: yet the trueth ought not from hens foozth to bee suppzessed, foz alsmuche as the knowlage therof should bzyng derate many to eternall saluacion. Foz the obstinate malice of vnbeleuers muste not be any lette oz hindzeaunce to the good. Wherfoze the trueth muste bee bzought to open lighte, to the moze horrible grieuous damnacion of the etuill persones and to the saluacion of the good sozte. No body lighteth a cadle (saith he) and hideth it in apztule derke cozner, oz coureth it by whelmyng a busshell ouer it: but setteth it in a candelsticke, that it maye geue light to suche as are wyllyng to enter into the house. Theslame that the house is without a candle, theslame that the body is without yes, euen theslame is ỳ soule without knowlage of the trueth, which commeth by mere vnfayned feith: If thyne ye be single, and nothyng perished ne infected with any other mozdinate desyres of this wozld: it will receiue the light of euerlastyng trueth, and al thy body shall haue the fruicion of this lyght, in suche wyse, as it shal no where stumble noz hurte agaynst any thyng. But in case the ye of thy bodye be cozrupted oz bleamished, then shal all the whole body be entrieked, and ready to take harme in the derke. Foz of feith commeth iudgement, and statutes oz ozdeinaunces of good liuing. This is the fountaine of all goodnesse, whiche if it be putrified, it cannot bee cholen, but that all the other thynges must be cozrupted also. Wee therfoze that this ye wherewith the trueth is seen, maie be pure in thee, and clere without any cozrupcion, leste that the selfe membze, which onely is apte to receiue light, and which onely must shewe light to al the whole bodye, be encoumbzed with derknesse. Foz theslame thyng beyng infected, which is the heade and ỳ roote of all good wozkes, euen those verai thynges whiche seme to bee good, are not good: And contrarywyse, the thynges whiche seme vnto the Phariſees to bee euill, shall not bee euill, if the fountaine wherhence they do spzyng foozth bee pure and clere from all infeccion. What thyng a candle is to an ye well clatified, euen the lyke thyng is the woozde of God to the soule beeyng well pourged thzough the singleneſſe of feith from naughtie affeccions. Wharsoeuer pzocedeth not of feith is synne. That if the ye of thy bodye shall be sincere and pure, as a thyng made all light with the candele of euangelicall trueth: then shal it geue parte of his light vnto all the membzes, so that there shall not bee any derkeneſſe at all in any parte of the body: by reason that the ye shal looke foozth to the behofe of all the membzes thereof. And so whatsoeuer thyng the hande shall doe, it shall not bee in any daungier of harme in the derke, but all the whole body shall bee lightsome, euen as the whole houſe is lightsome, whã the bzightneſſe of the candle geueth his light all about.

When the ye is single all the body also shal bee full of light

¶ And as he spake a certayne Phariſee besought hym to dyne with hym, and Iesus went in and sate downe to meate. When the Phariſee sawe it, he merualled, that he had not firste washed before dyner. And the Lord sayed vnto hym: Now do ye Phariſees, make cleane the outside of the cuppe and the platter, but your inwarde parte is full of rauenyng and wickednesse. Ye fooles: did not he that made that whiche is without, make that whiche is within also? Neuertheleſſe geue almes of that ye haue and beholde all thynges are cleane vnto you. But woe vnto you Phariſees, foz ye tythe mynte, and rue and all manner herbes and passe ouer iudgemente and the loue of God. These ought ye to haue done, and yet not to leaue the other vndone. The texte.

And euen immediately herupon there folowed a matter, whereby theſame that that the Lorde had taught,might as ye would saye)bee playnly declared. For the phariseis forasmuche as they had an eye foule blemished, & setting righteousnesse in ceremonies longyng to the body,they did wilfully leat slippe those thynges,whiche are not seen but with the pure clere eyes.vnto whom the candle of euangelicall trueth sheweth light: supposed the light to bee there, where derknesse was: and than did they stumble and renne agaynst thynges moste of all,whan they thought theimselues to goe gayly well vpright: and they iudged there to bee a grieuous enormitie, where none at all was:and contrariwise where a sore offense or transgression was,there wened thei to bee none at all. For they had they eyes sore blemished with the superstition of the lawe, with ignorraunce,with disdaineful pride,with enuie,with couetise,with hypocrisie,& with other naughtie vices. Than a certayne Pharisee prayed Iesus, to come & dyne with hym. Iesus made no refusall, as one that was euer readie to offre hymselfe vnto euery bodye,to the entente he might drawe all creatures vnto hym. And whan the lorde had sette him down at the table without washyng his handes afore,(and that,contrary to the guyse of the Pharisees: this fated Pharisee begoonne to mutuall with hymselfe secretely in his mynde, what the cause should bee, why the Lorde had not washed, before he satte down to his meate. And euen by and by of a thyng which neither maketh a man good nor ill, there spryngeth a thyng which is in verape dede euermore yll. And as for the Pharisaicall ceremonies,whiche consiste in thynges perteyning to the bodye, haue this propertie naturall to them,& cummyng euen of theyr verape kynde, that they bredelaunderous backebityng,euill suspicions,peruerse iudgementes, variaunce,hatred,& muche brallyng. Iesus therefore well knowyng thilsame to be the chiefest corruption of euangelicall godlynesse,did sharpely rebuke the Pharisaicall superstition,saying: Moses did in olde tyme appoynt certain ordinatie constitutions,& customes of purifying, which neuertheless did contayne a figure & representacion of pourgeyng & clensyng the soule. For to this ende it serueth al that euer that same lawe did derkely set foorth in shadowes. But as the tyme now is, where in consideracion of the trueth clerely apperyng foorth,it is mete for those shadowes of the olde lawe by litle and litle to vanish awaie,ye Phariseis,whiche professe the perfect knowlage of the lawe, do embrace that same parte of the lawe onely, whiche is of least weyght of all towardes true godlynesse. And ye do not onely offend in this behalfe,that ye embrace the carnalitie of the lawe not passyng on the spiritte of the lawe, but also by reason of carnall ceremonies added to the lawe, and constitutions of your owne making,ye wyll in any wyse be reputed to be of more holynesse, then the verap cōmaundementes of God. The puritie consisteth in the inculpablenesse and innocencie of the herte. But as for ye do euery other whyle make muche washyng of your bodye,ye washe the pottes and cuppes that ye drynke of, ye washe the platers & dishes that your meate is serued in, beyng but outwarde thynges,and nothyng at al makyng to the true godlynesse of the mynde: and in the meane tyme the innermore,and chiefest parte of you beyng still vnwashed is all full of filthynesse detestable afore god, that is to wete,rauine and iniquitie. Ye beleue your selues to be defopled yf ye drynke of an vnwashed cuppe, or if ye eat out of an vnwashed dishe:& yet ye thynke your selfe pure and clene, yf both your cuppe and your dishe to,yea and al that is in them conteyned, haue been gotten with rauine and with fraude. O fooles and mē of a peruerse iudge-

mente, did not he that made the bodye, make also the soule? Than if purenes dooe so highly please you, it had been mete to make all the whole man pure in euery parte of hym. But it had been mete, to haue prouided firste for that, that is the chiefter parte. But al this while ye flattre your selues as though ye were pure euen in the best sorte, if on the one syde ye dooe euerie other while walse your bodyes and your vessels, that ye eate and dyncke in, with a litle water: & on the other syde of your herte beyng polluted with manyfold guyles, rauines hatred, enuie, desire of worldly promocion, and with other pestilent vices bee purged with almesdedes, whiche almes though ye doe it but for a bainglorye and a shewe onely, yet ye thinke it to bee sufficient for the vttermoste and highest clensyng of the soule that can bee. But woe vnto you Pharisees, who vnder a pretexte and colour of seruyng God, woorke your owne commoditie, tithing euen the vilest and moste common herbes. Myntes, and Rue, as though God cared for no mo but pristes and Leuites onely. And in the meane tyme contrarye to the myndе of God, ye deale guilefully with your neyghbour, and relieue not the nedie, but enuie & grutche at them, which haue more wealth then your selues, and the weake ye oppresse. O a iudgement in verie deede ouerthwarte and peruerse. The thynges whiche the lawe hath appoynted for a season to be kept after the flesshe, in dede it had bene your partes not to leaue vndoen: but tho thynges whiche God would moste chiefly of all to be doen, which are euermore good, and acceptable vnto hym, ought first and most principally to haue been doen. Suche thynges as concerne your owne commoditie, ye dooe euen scrupulously looke vnto: but the thynges that concerne helpyng of the neyghbour, ye passe nothyng on.

Did not he that made the outwarde man make also the inwarde?

Ye geue almes, and beholde all thynges are clene vnto you.

¶ Woe bee to you Pharisees, for ye loue the vppermoste seates in the Synagogues, and greetynges in the market. Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, ye hypocrites, for ye are as graues whiche appere not, and the men that walke ouer them, are not ware of them. Than aunswered one of the lawiers, and sayed vnto hym: Master, thus sayng thou puttest vs to rebuke also. And he sayed: Woe vnto you also ye lawiers: for ye lade men with burdens which they bee not able to beare: and ye your selues touche not the packe with one of your fingers.

The texte.

Woe vnto you Pharisees, who though ye outwardely beare a shewe of holynesse, yet neuertheles within ye are full of wyll in ambicion, seking to haue the higher seates in the synagogues, and ye reioyce to heare suche honourable titles as maister, and maisters of such as bidde you good morowe, and good euen, in the stretes abrode. nothyng els entendyng ne seking, but that ye maye please the eyes of me, & estemyng it as a thyng of nothyng to displease the eyes of god with the filthinesse of the soule. Therfore woe vnto you with your hypocrisie, which are lyke vnto dead mennes toumbes, whiche shyne & loke smothe without foorth by reason of whyte worke, with titles, and many soondrye pictures, whereas within foorth they are full stuffed with all vnclenesse. But in the meane tyme the thyng that outwardly appeareth, sheweth faire to the eyes of suche as passe by, but the thyng that they hide within them, is vnseen. Neuertheles men maye be beguiled, but God can loke into the moste priuiest corners of the herte. Whan the Lord with great sharpenesse spake this and other thynges against the cloked holynesse of ye Pharisees, one of the lawiers beyng desirous to bridle the playn speakyng of Iesus, sayed vnto hym. Whyle thou speakest this on ye Pharisees, thou doest also reproche vs. In herte ye knoweth

Woe vnto you ye lawyers. ple of playn speakyng against others maye at last light vpon hymselfe.
But Jesus beeyng the euerlastyng trueth, whiche can no skill of flatterying ye lade meune with burdens. (because the sayed trueth, onely is faultlesse and vnculpable, and yet neuer chydeth but to emende that is a misse,)aunswered vnto the lawier: Jf the woordes whiche J speake touche you too, as thou acknowlegest: woe shalbe vnto you lawiers also, who beyng not contente to exacte euerie triflyng obseruaunce of the lawe, at the handes of the poore ignoraunces, do moreouer beslydes the authoritie of the lawe, adde many poyntes of your owne, and heapyng burden vpon burden, ye laye vpon the shoulders of the simple people a whole fardel vnpossible to be borne, and in the meane whyle ye take your owne pleasures to the vttermoste, beyng so ferre from touchyng the thynges whiche ye laie on other folkes shoulders, that ye do not so muche as kepe those chiefe poyntes neither without whiche the reste do nothyng.

The ferre. ¶ Woe vnto you, ye buylde the sepulchres of the Prophetes, and your fathers killed them. Truely ye beare witnesse that ye allowe the dedes of your fathers: for they killed them, and ye buylde the sepulchres Therfore sayed the wysedome of God. J will sende them Prophetes and Apostles, and some of them they shall sleagth and persecute: that the bloud of all the Prophetes, whiche is shed from the beginnyng of the worlde) maye bee required of this generacion, from the bloude of Abell vnto the bloude of Zacharie, which perished betweene the aultare and the temple. Verayly J say vnto you, it shalbe required of this nacion.

Woe vnto you, who for vaingloious bosting of your perfeccion, do buylde vp the toombes of the Prophetes where the moste parte of the same wer slayne of your forefathers. For therby cōmeth it to passe, that euen by the verye same thyng, where with ye would moste fainest cloke your maliciousnesse, ye do moste of all bewraye the same. For whyle ye garnysshe the sepulchres of the prophetes, ye graunt that they were persons detestable, whiche were the killers of suche men, whose memorie is high and holy emong you that are they offspring. And forasmuche as your owne selues dooe towardes the Prophetes of this tyme, Ye beare witnesse ye allow the dedes of your fathers. beyng ferre superiours to the Prophetes of times past, attempt worse harmes, then your auncetours committed against the Prophetes of olde time, do ye not playnly declare, that beeyng blynded with lucre, ambicion, enuie and hatred, ye doe wetingly allowe the wicked actes of your forefathers, whiche actes of theyrs ye doe not onely folowe, but also earnestly labour to passe and to go beyond them. So often hath the goodnesse of God called you backe to emendment: and at all tymes haue ye wickedly shewed more extreme crueltie against them that layed the trueth euen in your lappes: whiche trueth was vnto you for none other cause odious sauing that it contrarieth your naughtie lustes and delyres. Wherfore the wysedome of God, whiche foreseeth all thynges by suche prouidence as cannot in woordes be expressed, before it wil punisshe the obstinate malyce of this nacion, hath determined to leaue nothyng vnassayed, whereby they maye bee conuerted to better wayes. But after that aswell the bottomelesse goodnesse of God, as also the peruersenesse of them not possible to be wonne to goodnesse, shall once bee declared to all creatures: so muche the more greuous tormentes shall they endure, howe muche the longer space they haue been suffred, and with how muche greater benefites they haue been prouoked and occasioned to repentaunce. Wherfore thus spake the wysedome of God within it selfe: what shall J doe more then J haue dooen to this vnreuly

nacion: I sent Moses vnto them. I sent many prophetes of olde tyme. I sent John the Baptiste. Against Moses there was conspiracie wrought: the prophetes euery one, they either slewe ozels plagued with affliccion: no noz Jhō neither would they not heare though he were moze then a prophet: neither did he escape scotfree foz geuing good aduertisement. The somme of matis come: and to hym do they woozke destruccion and death. I shall hereafter sende vnto them the last prophets of all, who shall ghostely expound the lawe vnto them: I shall sende the apostles, that shall haue great vertue in wozkyng miracles, that shal freely doe good to all people, that shall bzyng vnto al folkes saluacio, with exceding smal charge to be bought, that is to wete, with faith. And yet will they not heare these neither, but will persecute them, to mēt thē, dziue them awaie, yea and sum of them will they slea: so farre shal their malice excede the goodnes of god. It laste, whā their malice shalbe so ferre growen, that they shall not onely matche, but also excede and passe the abominacions of all ages past, than shall the vengeaunce of God fall sodaynely vpon them, and than shall bee required at their handes the bloud of all the prophetes, which hath been shed sens the first creacio of the wozlde, that is to wete, from ꝑ bloud of Abell, (who was firste of all men slaine by his brother Cain beyng enuious against him) vnto the bloud of Zacharie, the prieste, sonne of Joas, who callyng backe the people to better aduised wayes, was stoned to death by sedition of the people, betwene the temple and the aultare. And the sayd zacharie euen at the momente whan he departed from this life, bothe testifiyng his own innocencie, and theyr wickednesse, sayed: The Lord see this and require it. And euen now approcheth the tyme of this vengeaunce. One nacion shall, as ye would say, bee punished foz al the hainous dedes of their fozefathers, because it hath gone beyond all the malice that euer hath reigned in them all. It shall cum to passe vndoubtedly, that the wisdome of god hath sayd afoze shall cum to passe. The Iewes of these daies, because they excede the rebellion, the peruersenesse, and the cruelties of all that in olde tyme haue been, shall in suche greuous sozte bee punished, as thoughthey alone had accomplyshed and dooen all the yll partes that euer their auncestours haue in soondzie ages wickedly played.

Gene. iiii. ii. Paralip. xxiii.

Woe vnto you lawiers: foz ye haue taken away the key of knowlage, ye entre not in your selues, and them that came in, ye forbad. Whan he thus spake vnto them, the lawiers and the phariseis began to wexe busy about him, and capciously to aske him many thinges laying wait foz hym, and seking to catche sum thyng out of his mouth wherby they might accuse hym.

The texte.

Woe vnto you lawiers, and woe again, who openly professyng the knowelage of the lawe whiche is ghostly, and taking into your handes, as due vnto you the keies of science and cuning, whiche ought to haue opened a way into the kyngdome of heauen: yet neither haue ye intred in thither your selfes, but others ꝑ wer willing to haue gon in, ye haue kept out. Foz while ye peruerslye expoimd the lawe, ye do (as one might say) lay battrey against that whiche is the principall cheke foundacion of al the lawe. At these maner woozdes of Jesus, (beyng in dede halfe bitter by reason of so plain speakyng of ꝑ trueth, but yet wozkers of health, if suche as thei wer spoken to had been willing to receiue the medicine:) wer both the Phariseis and also the lawiers sozte offended: but because they knew priuely in their owne consciences that the thinges whiche wer spoken, wer euen very true, they would make no countrenaūce at it

Ye entre not in your selues, and them that came in, ye forbad.

it before the people, but yet in the meane tyme they lay sure awayt to all the sayinges of Jesus, hunting and serching if any thyng might proceede forth of his mouthe, wherupon they might grounde or make a foundacion of sum surmised matter against him, to the end they might seme to persecute him, not of a certain priuate hatred, but of zele to religiō and of a loue towardes god. For this propertie also hath pharisaical hypocrisie, that it worketh ne attepteth none so wicked an acte, whereon it layeth not a fayre glose of loue and duetie towardes God.

The .xii. Chapter.

The texte. As there gathered togethere an innumerable multitude of people, in so muche that they trode one an other. Yhe began to say vnto his disciples: first of all beware of the leauen of the Pharisees, whiche is hypocrisy. For there is nothyng couered, that shal not be uncouered: neither hid, that shal not be knowen. For what thynges ye haue spoken in derkenes, shall be heard in the light. And that whiche ye haue spoken in the eare, euen in secrete places, shalbe preached on the top of the houses. I say vnto you my frendes: Be not afrayed of them that kyll the bodye, and after that, haue no more that they can do. But I wyll shewe you, whom you shall feare. Feare him whiche after he hath kylled, hath power to cast into hell. Yea, I say vnto you: feare hym. Se not fiue sparowes bought for two farthinges? And not one of them is forgotten of god. Also euen the very heares of your head are all noumbred. Feare not therfore: ye are more of value than many sparowes.

And because the Lorde Jesus knewe the malice of the Pharyseis, the Scribes, and the lawiers to be uncurable: it was his pleasure openly to notifie and publiche their hypocrisye, to the ende no creature mighte bnawares be deceiued by their cloked counterfaityng: and so many coumpanyes of people euen than standyng round about in so thicke presse, that they trode one bpon an others heles, he began to say vnto his disciples.

Beware ye of the leaue of the phariseis which is hypocrisie. Endeuour yourselfes earnestly to be suche, as ye would be taken for. Nothyng that is cloked shall frō henceforth be hable long to be hidden. There shall a tyme come whiche shall vttre and make manifeste vnto the worlde aswell your innocencie, as also their malice: Neither is there any thyng now at this present so close vnder couerte, whiche shall not shortly bee uncouered, ne any thyng so secretely hidden, the whiche shall not cum to the open knowlage of men. Wherefore beware ye that all your life be void of all cloking or counterfayte glose, and that ye neither speake ne do, no nor yet thinke any thyng alone by yourselfes, which ye would not by your good willes haue to be knowē of al creatures, for whatsoeuer ye shall now speake priuely in the derke, shal one day in time to cum bee reported agayne in the clere light: and whatsoeuer ye shall nowe saie to folkes in their eares within your bedchaumbers, shall one day bee openly talked in the house toppes. The trueth shall offende the wycked sorte beeyng peinted with a counterfait semblaunce of godlynes: But leat not the feare of any euil person lede you away from the sincere preachyng of ỹ trueth of the gospel. The vttermost extremitie of all the mischiefe that they can doe to you to you, is but to kylle, yea and the bodie onelye can they kille. But thus muche doe I say vnto you my frendes, forasmuche as ye maye boldely truste on my sure defence, leatte not the crueltie of theſe felowes anye thyng at all feate you, who though they attempte all that euer may bee dooen, may sleagh the poore carkeſſe, and that doen, they haue nothing beſides to dooe any ferther harme vnto. But he byeth not that is slayne for my cauſe. That if your fantaſie be to take feare for to bee one of counsayle in thys caſe, it is good reason, that the leſſer feare geue place to the greatter, and that he rather bee hadin feare, who hath power with a becke to deſtroye the whole man altogether. And if ye will nedes haue it ſhewed vnto you who is he, euen God it is, who onelye hathe power whan he hath kylled the bodye, to caſte the ſoule into hell too. Leat not the cruelneſſe of wicked perſones make you anye thyng afrayde, who can dooe you no more but lyghte harme. nay can not dooe you any harme at al, no and not that neyther, but by the ſuffreaunce of God. That yf ye ſhall vpon the dredyng of man, growe cleane out of kynde from the ſinceritie of preaching the ghoſpell: while ye laboure to eſchue lyghte and tranſytory myſaduentures, ye ſhall fall into harmes for euer to endure. Leat there fore one nayle dryue out an other nayle: and leat the feare of God dryue out the feare of menne. And feare ye not leſte ye ſhall perythe before your day. All men muſt without choice ones come to death: neyther dooeth it fore howe long a man hath lyued, but howe well he hath liued. And bliſſedly dooeth he departe hens, whoſoeuer dieth for my names ſake. And yet ſhall no ſuche thyng chaunce before the tyme prefixed vnto you by youre heauenlye father, that ye ſhoulde not lyue a whit the longer, though the feare of death ſhould neuer ſo much bere your mindes. Yea and that poynete alſo will youre father prouyde for, that euerye one ſhall dye at hys due tyme. Although theſe thynges ſeme in apparence to bee dooen by chaunce and at all aduentures, yet ſhall there nothyng chaunce vnto you, but by the permiſſion of youre father who careth for all thynges belongyng vnto you. What is of a lower pryce or a thyng more contemned then a ſelye ſparow? May not a man bye fyue of them for two ferthinges? And yet doth not God leaue them vncared for, and not ſo muche as anye one, no not euen of the vileſte vermine liuing, doeth perithe without the knowelage of the heauenlye father. But as for you whome he hath ſpecially pycked and choſen a berayle we in number out of all the reſte to ſette furth the glory of hys name, he dooeth ſo greatelye not leaue vncared for, that he hath euen the verye heares of youre heades numbred out by tale. Agaynſte the will of hym it were a wicke dreſſe to ſtriue, for nothing will he deſyre, but what he ſhall know to be beſte. Therefore all youre carefulneſſe concernyng youre lyfe, caſte ye full and whole vpon hym. He that taketh care for the ſelye ſparowes will not leaue you vncared for, being ſo ferre better then all the ſparowes in the worlde. The verye heares of youre heades are all numbred.

I saye vnto you euery one, whoſoeuer confeſſeth me before men, him ſhall the ſonne of man knowlage alſo before the Aungells of God. And he that denieth me before men, ſhall be denied before the Aungels of god. And whoſoeuer ſpeketh a worde againſte the ſonne of man, it ſhall be forgeuen him. But vnto him that blaſphemeth the holy goſte, it ſhal not be forgeuen. When they bring you vnto the ſynagoges, and vnto the rulers and officers take ye no thought, how or what thyng ye ſhall anſwer, or what ye ſhall ſpeake. For the holy ghoſte ſhall teache you in the ſame houre what ye ought to ſaie. The texte.

Wherefore bee not ye of the will for feare of any euilles or miſchieſes whiche men may bee hable to dooe vnto men, to fall from the profession of my name, as menne remembryng that by these afflictyons lasting but a shorte while, lyeth the waye to euerlastyng blisse. For he shall not bee a partaker of the ioye, who shall refuse to bee partaker of the worldely reproche. Albeit this open shame here emong men, is the true glorye before god. For this one thing I say to you of assurance: whosoeuer shall professe my name here in presence of menne, whiche to dooe shall aforne the worlde bee a thyng odyous and detestable, I also shall professe hym at what tyme the maiestie of the sonne of God shall bee opened and shewed foorthe in the face of the Aungels of God,

Whosoeuer confesseth me before men. &c.

And contrarie wise, whoso shall not acknowleage me here in the face of men, shall not bee knowen of me before the Aungels of God. I knowe that the infirmitie of this humayne bodye of myne shall bee a flaunder vnto mayne: but a faulte, whiche eyther proceedeth from a man beeyng deceyued by a wrong opinion, or elles cummeth of the weakenesse of nature, although it be greuous, shall neuertheless bee easilye forgeuen. Therefore that they call me Samaritane, a drinker of wyne, a frende of the publycanes, and Jesus the carpenters sonne, shall soone bee releassed yf they amende. For it is a reproche whereunto the weakenesse of thys bodye hathe opened an entreaunce and occasion. But whoso shall speake raylling woordes agaynste the holye ghoste, through whome God woorketh these miracles: because suche an one doothe of a sette and prepensed malice wetingly and willingly resiste agaynst the glory of god, he shall not fynde any pardone, neyther in this preset world, nor in the worlde to come. Lyke as to the wicked Aungels there is no waye leafte to come agayne vnto repentaunce, (because they resisted God not of any infirmitie or weakenesse, but of an obstinate malice) nor the same wicked Aungels shall euer amende ne haue anye hope of forgenenesse: euen in the same state shall men bee sure to bee, if they folowe the peruerse faction of the others. They see me a manne, taking reste and slepe, suffering hoongre, yea and they shall see me dying, therefore it maye bee pardoned if they speake any thyng of me, that may truely bee sayde of a mortall man: But that beyng corrupted with enuie, they imputte those actes to the spirite of Beelzebub, whiche they knowe to bee of the power of God, forasmuche as on the one syde they defraude god of his glory, and on the other syde they put ouer vnto wicked spirites, that cometh of god and is due to him: they so doyng veraylyis of deuilishe malice, whiche for the same cause shall not obteine pardon of god, though beeyng most singularely enclyned to the we mercye, because he can no skille to repente himselfe of his goodnesse. Many wayes than shall there be murmouring agaynste youre preaching, For some persones shall persecute you eyther straygiyng out of the right way of mere simplicitie, or elis of a malicyousnesse mingled with theyr errour. Other some agaynst the conscience of theyr owne harte, shall labour to destroye the veritie whiche they euidently see, & trie, and knowe, and that shal they doe for none other respect, but because it contrarieth theyr naughtie affections. By meanes of suche persones shall the ciuill spirite of Satan rebell against the good spirite of god, & by helpe of his garde ỹ wicked men, he shall inuade you with all kyndes of ingiens. And although ye be ignoraunces of the worlde, poore men, and of lowe degree, there is no cause why for you to bee afearde of the vproare and sedicion of the world agaynste you. The spirite of god being gracious & playne without any guile or deceite, is sufficient against all aswell fraude as violence of this worlde. Therefore when ye shall bee haled into theyr synagogues, appeached of greate crymes,

when ye shall bee drawen to come beefore magistrates or rewlers, and pryn-ces, doe not ye as the common sorte of people doe, whan they are brought before a iudge: to theyr aunswere, who are muche carefull what aunswere they maye make, or what they maye speake, to ridde theyr handes of the mattyer.
Thus muche shall bee geuen to the puplique autozitie of a magistrate, that beying called ye shall appere. But cause is there none why ye shoulde bee afearde of the sighte of them, or why ye shoulde bee carefull, howe to defende youre selues with an oration prepared for afore: The playne tale of the trueth, shall continually from tyme to tyme bee ready and freshe in memozy vnto you. And suche kindde of woordes to speake, the holye ghoste shall sufficiently lye minister vnto you as often as nede shall require: of suche sorte as your life is, such shal your woordes also bee. And nothing there is moze pithie or effectuall, then the playne trueth without any coloures.

Take ye no thought how or what ye shall aunswere.

¶ One of the coumpany sayde vnto hym: Maister, speake to my brother, that he deuyde the enheritaunce with me: And he sayd vnto hym: Man, who made me a iudge or a deuider ouer you? And he sayde vnto them: Take hede, and beware of couetousenesse. For no mans life standeth in the aboundaunce of the thynges which he possesseth. And he put forth a similitude vnto them saying: The ground of a certain riche man brought forth plentifull fruictes, & he thought within himselfe saying: What shal I doe, because I haue no roume where to bestow my fruictes. And he sayde: This will I doe. I will destroy my barnes & builde greater, & therein will I gather all my goodes that are growen vnto me, and I will say to my soule: Soule thou hast much goodes layed vp in store for manye yeres, take thyne ease, eate, drinke, and be merye. But god sayd vnto him: Thou foole, this nyghte will they fetche away thy soule again from the. Then whose shal those thinges be which thou hast provided? So is it with him that gathereth richesse to himselfe, & is not riche toward god. The tearte.

And as the feare of iudgemente maketh many goe a crosseway from the sinceritie of professing the gospel: so doth the greedy desires of money corrupt a great manye. To the ende therfore that the Lorde might vtterly plucke that affection also out of his disciples herres, as a thyng basse or vyle, and vnmeete for suche as haue entred the charge of heauenly affayres, there was a matter euen there offered vnto him wherebye the thing might bee doen. For where there was a very great multytude of people about Jesus, and yet no manne that had before that daye beene so bolde to aske so lowe and so basse a mattyer of him, one sayed vnto him: Maister, so it is that a brother of myne bsurpeth my parte of the enheritaunce whiche shoulde serue vs bothe, and fyndyng manye euasyons and sleyyng holes, he delayeth from daye to daye to make partition therof: here I fear the autozitie of thy woorde bee a succoure and ayde vnto me. Say vnto him, and bidde him, to deuide the enheritaunce with me.
Than Jesus (as ye woulde saye) taking skorne and indignation, so to bee interupted from his heauenly busynesse of preaching, vnto carnall and filthye affayres: in the meane while all vnder one, geuing a lesson to his seruauntes that eche an one as beareth the office of an Apostle, ought not to bee enwrapped in secular and filthye affayres of the world, answered: Thou felow, with what face dooest thou in the myddes of my preaching interrupte me agaynste thy brother in diuiding youre enheritaunce? who hath made me a iudge bet weene you two being at variaunce about a lighte tryflyng mattier and shortely to decaye?
Or who hath geuen me vnto you to bee a diuider of enheritaunces? Hath not this woorlde iudges enough to ende suche lowe matters of trauerse? I haue no suche commission, that this or that partie shall growe in richesse by cuming to tempotall goodes or landes by ſucceſſion: but that all creatures may come to the enheritaunce of the lyfe immortall in heauen. And than turning to his diſciples and to the reſt that were there preſent, he begoon euen by the exaumple of the partye that had interrupted hym afore in hys ſermon, to exhorte them from the earneſte deſyre of geatting worldely ryches: not that richeſſe are of themſelues ciuil, but becauſe that to put the chiefe ſtaygh of a mans life in the, and for the deſyre of them to be called away from the thinges whiche doe earneſtly concerne euerlaſting bliſſe, is a deary folye. Beware ye (ſayeth Jeſus) in any wiſe from all thinges belonging vnto auarice. For oftentimes vnder the colour of neceſſitie of making prouiſyon afore hande for ones liuyng, there commeth ſtealing and creeping on a man, a vice neuer voide of penſifenelle and care, which being once ſuffered to enter into the minde, leadeth him out of the right way vnto all kinde of diſhoneſtie. Yea and breath may it poſſibly be eſchewed, except that euen thoſe very thinges whiche we doe poſſeſſe of our owne good right, be poſſeſſed of vs after an vnearneſt ſorte, and with ſuche contempt, that we can ſet them at naught when it is expedient ſo to doe. But ſuche people as doe in ſuche ſorte put theyr truſt and affiaunce in theyr richeſſe, that they ſette a certain great ſtaygh and aſſuraunce of mans felicitie in the ſame, doe betraye ſore deceiue themſelues. For aboūdaunce maketh not to felicitie, but rather to penſife carefulneſſe: yea and on the other ſide to the contempte of the thynges, whiche onely and none other are to be ſought, and acquired. For the neceſſitie of nature is appeaced and ſatiſfied with a litle. And becauſe he wouldē more diepely empriente theſame in the hertes of the groſſe people: the Lorde added therto a parable, by the whiche euery manne myghte trye and examyne hys owne affeccion. There was (ſayeth he) a certayne ryche felowe, whoſe lande had brought exceding aboundaunce of fruictes and profytes, (as the fruitefulneſſe of the yeres are not all lyke, but ſome yeres better then ſome.) The manne hauyng all the whyle no mynde at all of relieuyng the extreme powertie of the neighboures, but in ſorte as though that that had growen, hadde bene brought furth to the behoofe of himſelfe and no moe, toke care for laying it vp in ſtore, and not for beſtowyng anye parte thereof to the nedye in the waye of almes or liberalitie. For he ſayd within himſelfe in his hearte. What may I beſte doe? The plenteouſe aboundaunce of my corne and other fruictes is ouer greate for all the barnes I haue, to laye vp in ſtore the thynges that haue come of this yeres groweth. If he hadde taken charitie to bee of counſayle with him whan his herte thus boyled, charitie woulde haue ſayde vnto hym, looke well aboute howe manye there bee that lacke the thynges whiche thou haſte ſuperfluitee of. Acknowelage and remember to whome thou arte beholdyng, and whome thou arte bounde to thanke for thys fortunate luckineſſe of this yere of thine: God hath of a ſpeciall greate tenderneſſe towardes thee, geuē thee a ſtocke of goodes, wherof thou maieſt gather great increaſe and gayne of godlye werckes. Make thou an exchaunge of Goodes crāſitorye, for goodes that ſhall euermore kepe at a ſtaygh: of yearthly goodes for heauenlye: of humayne goodes for dyuyne: ſo ſhall thy lyberalitie bee a gayne vnto thee. But becauſe he had more mynde to take folye and vnbethinking to bee of his counſayle, he did by the inſtinct and mocion thereof, ſay within himſelfe: I will bowne with myne olde barnes, and I will make larger, and in them will I lay vp in ſtore, all the whole increaſe of thys yeres growyng and the reſte of my goodes, that nothyng maye decaye or miſcarrie.

Take hede & beware of couetouſeneſſe.

No mans life ſtaieth in the aboundaunce of the thinges that he hath.

Soule. Ar take thine eaſe, eate & drinke and be merye.

And

And whan all thinges are fully stablyshed, and all thing sette in good suretie, ¶ taking thoughte ne care for nothing I will say to myne own soule. Soule, great abound aunce it is that thou hast of thynges layed vp in store for thee, euen enoughte to serue thee for a greate maynye of yeres: take thyne ease, take thy fil of eating and drinking, and make as merry as thou canst. This dreame of most fortunate state long to endure, whan the sayde riche manne did thus caste in hys mynde, there came sodaynely vnto hym the voyce of God, saying: Thou foolish man, where thy herap life is vncertayn to thee, why dooeste thou hoorde vp thynges in store for manye yeres to come, seeing thou canste take no fruition of the thinges whiche thou layest vp, any longer, then while thou arte in thys lyfe, whiche lyfe no man is assured of, so muche as for one dayes space. Why dooeste thou promise thyselfe many and many yeres: This same herape nyghte shall they require to haue thy lyfe and soule awaye. And these thynges whiche thou haste prouided, whose shall they than bee? Certes they shall bee none of thyne. Thou muste of force leue them vnto an heyre of thyne owne, or to an other if any will enter to take possession of them. But ghostlye eyeheede, whiche by bestowyng thy richesse in almes thou myghteste haue gotten, would haue gone with thee whan thou haddest bene dead too: Thou hast nowe heard the exaumple and state of a man whiche hoordeth vp the richesse of this worlde to his owne vse, and is ryche to his owne behalfe onely, & is not ryche to wardes god: who would fayn be refreshed and cherished in his members, by suche persones as haue moze then will serue them, and muche moze diffull are they ryche, that after suche sorte dooe growe to pouertie.

¶ And he spake vnto his disciples: Therefore I say vnto you. Take no thought for your life what ye shall eate: neyther for the bodye what ye shall put on. The lyfe is moze then meate, and the body is more then rayment. Consider the rauens, for they neither sowe ne reape, which neyther haue storehouse nor barne, and god feedeth them. Howe much moze are ye better then feathered foules? The texte.

When the lorde had thus muche sayde to the multitude of al sorters & degrees, anon turning to his disciples, whome it was requisite not only to be fer from alauarice, but also to bee voyde of al carefulnesse of thys lyfe, to thentent that nothing might hinder or put backe theyr myndes from the charge of teaching the ghospell: for this cause (quod he) as I haue already afore thys time sayde vnto you, euen so repeyng the same agayn and agayn I shall warne you, Be ye nothing carefull concerning the lyfe of your bodies, as folkes in perplexitie and feare lest ye shoulde want meate & drinke, no nor yet about the vncommoditie of youre bodye, lest it shoulde wante clothes. For youre heauenly father, who hathe geuen you that is the better, will also geue you that is lesse of labour. The soule & life is better then meate, although in the mean time without meat it endureth not in the tabernacle of the body, and the body is moze precious then the garmente: dooe ye thynke, that your father being no lesse bountifull then riche will suffer, that seeing he hath of his bountefous liberalitie geuē lyfe, there shall lacke meate wherewith the life muste be continued? Seing he hath geuen the body, he will so doe, that the body shall want wherewith to be couered: where the prouidence of god dooeth not slacke that thing in beastes which are brute and of no price, will it (trowe ye) bee slacke in you whome he hath specially chosen and deputed to so high a matier? Consider ye the rauēs & crowes: they neyther sowe corne, ne reape, they neyther haue storehouse ne barne, Considre the rauens that neyther sowe nor reape.

harme, and yet god dooeth prouyde also for them concernyng theyr foode, as one that neglecteth none of the thinges whiche he hath created. Howe muche more than will he beeyng youre father prouyde for you, whome he so muche more derely loueth above all crowes and rauens.

The texte. ¶ Which of you (with his taking thought) can adde to his stature one cubite: if ye than bee not able to doe that thing whiche is leaste, why take ye thought for the remnaunte? Consider the lilies how they growe. They labour not, they spinne not: and yet I say vnto you: that Salomon in all his royaltie was not clothed like one of these. If god so cloth the grasse (which is to day in the fielde and to morowe is cast into the fornace) how much more will he cloth you, O ye of litle faythe? And ashe not ye, what ye shall eate, or what ye shall drinke, neither clime ye vp on hyghe: for all such thinges do the heathen people of the world seke. For your father knoweth, that ye haue nede of such thinges. Wherefore seke ye after the kingdome of god, and all these thinges shalbee ministred vnto you.

And what, that to be troubleously vexed with the care of suche thinges is a poynete not onelye of mistrustefulnesse towardes God, but also of folye. For it is a playne folye to bee vexed with carefulnesse of myndе whiche shall nothyng auayle. No manne is able with all hys carefulnesse to make hys Whiche of you. &c. can adde to his stature one cubite. ipse one day longer then it shoulde bee. What that not so muche as the quantitie or stature of youre bodye, no nor the shape therof is in your handе. God geueth it suche shape as himselfe beste pleaseth, he geueth it suche stature as hys will is, and euen so dooeth he geue it lyke too, as long as hym lyketh. And who of you (I praye you) is able throughe hys carefulnesse to adde one cubite more of heighe vnto the stature of his bodye: or what man is able by his carefull thoughte taking, to make one whyte heare of his head Considre the lilies howe they grow. blacke, or one blacke heare whyte? If than in thynges whiche are in maunyer of no weighte at all, your carefulnesse can nothyng auayle: to what purpose is it to bee carefull concernyng lyfe? Howe to the entente ye maye not bee troubled with care about clothyng of youre body, considre me the lilies whiche growe in the fieldes without anye mannes laboure, howe they shoote vp to theyr full heighe and quantitie, no manne dressyng them, or bestowyng anye laboure about them. The lilies dooe neyther labour, ne spynne, ne weaue: and yet the prouydence of youre father dooeth insomuche not suffer them to lacke clothyng, that the moste ryche kyng Salomon, whan he moste of all shewed the princely porte of hys regall estate, was not at anye suche tyme so well arayed as anye one, whiche soeuer it bee, of the fyelde lilyes, whiche shall last but for a shoote tyme. That if god dooe with so greate prouidence cloth a blade euen commonly growing euery where, and anone after to bade and perishe away, and suche a blade as this daye is freshe and greene in the fielde, and the nexte morowe whan it is dryed vp, is caste into the fournace mouthe to be burned, howe muche more will he not suffer you to bee vnclothed, o ye of litle feythe? For thys carefulnesse of youres commeth of none other thyng but onely of a mystrustfulnesse towardes youre father beeyng as well moste mightyfull, as also moste prouydeall, yea and also moste prouydente. If he feedeth, if he clotheth, if he gouerneth all thynges whiche he hath created: than dooe ye also caste away all care concernyng thynges of the basheste sorte, that is to wete, meate, drynke, and clothyng, lette neyther penurye of suche thynges as these lyke youre beastes, nor more then sufficiaunce serue you in pryde. Neyther as yll folkes hange ye all together of the weather, obseruyng and markyng all lykelyhoodes and fore geallynges of tempestes, wearing wearing pale foz woe as often as the planeers ſhall threaten penurie oz derth of Corne. Foz concerning ſuche thynges as theſe to make great inquiſicion and ſerche afore a long tyme to come, is the condicyon of the Gentiles, who beeyng wholly wedded vnto the world, doe not knowe God. But ye that knowe howe gracious and bountyfull a father ye haue in heauen, why dooe ye with payne carefulneſſe torment youre owne heartes? Foz youre father knoweth well enough, that ye haue nede of ſuche thynges as appertayne to the neceſſitie of nourſhyng and coueryng the bodye. Neyther is he ſo harde, that he will ſuffer you to peryſhe foz defaulte of ſuche thynges, foraſmuche as ye are earneſtly occupied about his buſineſſe. But rather leat youre chiefe and prynſipall care bee, to ſette foorth the kyngdome of god, whereof I haue ſpecially choſen and appoyncted you to bee publiſchers, and alſo the mynyſters. Eſpecially afore al other thynges, ſeke ye the ryghteouſneſſe therof, not conſiſtyng in Iudaicall ceremonyes, but in thoſe thynges whiche I haue afore taughte you: and with whole hearte and mynde bee ye earneſt in thys thyng whiche is of all the moſte greateſt. The other ſmaller thynges, god himſelfe will of hys owne accorde and moeyon geue vnto you euerye one of them, and will not ſuffer any thyng to be wanting.

Seke ye afterſ kyngdom of god. &c.

¶ Feare not litle flocke, for it is your fathers pleaſure, to geue you the kingdome. Sell that ye haue, and geue almes. And prepare you bagges, whiche were not olde, euen a treaſure that fayleth not in heauen, where no theefe cometh, neither mothe corrupteth. For where your treaſure is, there will youre heearte bee alſo.

The texte.

Leat nothyng make you afearde, o litle litle flocke, ye are but afewe, ye are of meane and lowe degree, ignoraunt perſons ye are of learning oz worldly knowelage: ye are not wth anye richeſſe, with anye power, with any weapon, oz with any bendes of harneſſed men, armed agynſt thys worlde beeyng full of wickedneſſe, and readye to aryſe agaynſte you with all kynde of engyens. Yet is there no cauſe why ye ſhoulde bee afearde. So hath it lyked youre father, to reiecte men of power, men of learnyng, and the proude hearted, and vnto you being in worldely acceptacyon, perſones moſte abiecte, to geue thys kingdome, whiche throughe pryde richeſſe of the ſoule, and whiche by reaſon of celeſtiall foztreſſes, is vnpaſſyble to bee ſubdued. Wherefoze beeyng ſpecially choſen out to ſo highe a dignitie of the kingdome celeſtyall, contemne ye theſe baſſe and vile thinges: and being marked to goodes that ſhall euermoze contynue in theyz perfeccyon, take ye no regarde of thynges that ſhall in thoze ſpace decaye and come to naughte. That yf yearthlye poſſeſſyons dooe hynder you oz pulle you backe from thinges beeyng ſo feree better then they, ſell ye that ye haue in your poſſeſſion, and deale the money that is made therefof about foz relieuing the nede of the poore. Richeſſe cannot be layed vp in more ſafe cuſtodie, they can not be put to the banke of exchaunge with greatter and more aſſured encreaſe oz intereſte. Whoſo geueth an almes, layeth out hys goodes to receiue intereſte at goddes handē, who can not vſe anye deceipte oz fraude, and who (as heis both riche & bountiful) will foz vile thinges repaye moſt precious, foz earthly thinges, celeſtial, foz thinges tranſitozy, and ſhortly to bee taken awaye, thynges eternally foz euer and euer to endure. Endeuour your ſelues therefoze to bee grounded eyche menne in ſuche goodes as theſe: geat you treaſour bagges, that dooe neuer weaxe olde, and laye vp treaſour foz youre vſe in heauen, whiche ſhall neuer fayle, and whiche ſhall bee ſafe foz

For it is your fathers pleaſure to geue you the kingdome.

Sell that ye haue and geue almes.

you aswell from theues as from mothes. For this thing we see commonlye to chaunce, that in what place euery manne hath hys treasoure, there hath he his heart also. For what thing a man dooeth earnestlye loue, the same can he not forgeat: lyke vnto a rychе manne that hath great goodes eyther layed vp at home in hys cofers or dygged in the grounde, thoughe he bee abrode from home, yet he hath hys heart at home, full of care and feare leste some priuye theefe shoulde robbe them, leste any other casuall chaunce may eyther bewray or perishe hys treasour. Agayne they that be in loue, haue theyr myndes euermore earnestly fixed and set on the thyng that they loue. But your herte muste euermore be in heauen. And in heauen will it euermore bee, if ye shall haue nothing on the earthe, whiche ye dooe eyther highly esteme, or loue, but shall haue all your treasour safely layed vp in heauen.

where your treasoure is there will your hearte be also.

The texte. ¶ Let your loynes bee girt about, and your lightes burning, and ye your selues like vnto men that awayte for theyr lorde, when he will returne from the wedding: that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open vnto him immediatly. Happie are those seruauntes whome the Lorde when he cometh shall fynde wakyng. Verely I say vnto you, that he shall girde himselfe about, and make them to sit downe to meate, and he walkyng by shall ministre vnto them. And if he come in the seconde watche, yea if he come in the third watche, and fynde them so, happie are those seruauntes. This vnderstande ye, that if the good man of the house knewe, at what houre the theefe would come, he woulde surelye watche, and not suffer his house to bee broken vp. Be ye therfore ready also: for the sonne of manne will come at an houre whan ye rekenne not.

The tyme is shorte: with all earneste endeuour ye must attende, that ye hoorde vp in heauen a great heape of good workes. The daye approcheth euen at hande, in whiche euerye one of you shall for the seede that you haue sowed of temporall thynges, reape an harueste euerlastyng. But because thys date is to you vncertaine, ye muste continually frō time to time bee prepayred and readie against it come. And that shall ye bee, if ye shall not bee stopped ne staighed with any letters or impedimentes of worldely thinges, if ye shall not haue leat slippe any occasion of doing good. Agaynst the cumming of thys day than, eat your loignes from time to time be wel girt about, leat light burning candels be in your handes, that ye may be like vnto wise and faithful seruauntes who because they are vncertayne what houre their lorde will returne frō the wedding, they stande continually in a redinesse watching with torche light, to the ende that assone as he beyng come home agayne shall knocke, they may byaudby open the doores vnto hym. Thys diligence of seruauntes shall not be displeasaunte to the lorde or maister, but happy may they bee yf the maister sodaynly cumminge shall see theym watching. For this I saye vnto you for a certayntie, that the maister shall geue agayne to theym an exceding large rewarde for that pleasure and seruice, whiche neuertheleste it was their bounden dutie to doe. For he agayne on hys partie shall girde hymselfe, and diligently watching what euery one requireth to haue, he shall as a seruitoure geue it theym hys owne handes. Neyther dooeth it make any force in what parte of the night he cometh (for it was his pleasure to haue that thyng vncertayne) but at whatsoeuer watche of the night he cometh, whether in the seconde or in the thirde, or in the very dead of the night: happy shall the seruauntes bee, yf the lorde shal finde them in a due readinesse. There is therfore no slackenesse to be vsed in this life, but so muste men liue as though that day shoulde come euen at this present houre. For it shall sodainly and vnwares steale vpon the worlde: therfore muste men alwaies prouyde that it maye

Let your loignes bee girt about.

And yf he come in the seconde watche. &c.

not come vpon theim beyng vnready. For after that he shall be ons already come, it will by that time be ouerlate to amende the slepinesse afore paste. There is none so sluggysshe a mayster of an house, that wolde suffer to haue an hole dygged throughe into hys house by anyghte theefe, if he knewe afore hande what houre the theefe wolde come. That if suche an one dooeth kepe continuall watche that he maye not bee spoyled of hys worldelye goodes, howe muche more is it youre parte to watche that ye maye not leese the blisse euerlastynge? Is the nyghte theefe comethe stealyng at suche an houre whan the folkes of the house are moste hardest and dead in slepe, and leaste looking of all is for any body to vnderminne it: so shall the sonne of man so dayneley come at suche an houre, whan ye shall leaste of all mystruste or thynke that he will come. Therefore in asmuche as that same tyme is to you vnknowen, and yet vndoubted it is that come he will, bee ye contynually readye, well armed and furnysshed with good weorkes, and lyghte, as menne clene vdde and voyde from all lettes or encoumbraunces of thinges worldely.

Be ye therefore readye also, for the sonne of man will come.etc.

¶ Petur sayed vnto him: Mayster tellest thou thys similitude vnto vs, or to all men? And the lorde sayed: Who is a feithfull and wise stewarde, whome hys lorde shall make rewler ouer his householde to geue them their duerte of meat in due season: happie is that seruaunte, whome his lorde whan he comeyth shall finde so doyng. Of a trueth I say vnto you, that he shall make him rewler ouer al that he hath. But and if the seruaunt say in his herte, my lorde will differre his cummynge, and shall begynne to smyte the seruauntes and maydens, and to eate and drinke, and bee dronken: the lorde of that seruaunte wil come in a day whan he thynketh not, and at an houre whan he is not ware, and will geue him in peces, and geue him his rewarde with the vnbeleuers.

The texte:

Who is a feithfull stewarde, whome his lorde shall make rewler ouer his householde:

Petur whan he had hearde these woordes, sayde vnto the Lorde: maister, whether is it thy pleasure that thys parable shall appertayne properlye and directely to vs alone that are thy disciples, or els dooeth it indifferentlye concerne and touche all people? Than the lorde in suche sorte attempereth hys aunswere, that he denyeth it not in some behalfe to perteyne to all menne that coueteth to atteyne euerlastyng saluacyon: but specially he signyfyeth it to concerne suche, as haue the dispensation and disbursing of gods woorde committed vnto them. And he added an other parable to that that went afore, to the ende he wolde the better enkendle his disciples perpetually to bee intendent vpon theyr office, and he also propounded and set before them a rewarde whan they had duely executed theyr office, as also a punishmente to any suche as were slacke in his office. For rare thing it is (saieth he) emong men to finde an expert and a feithfull stewarde to haue the dysposicyon of ones goodes: who whan hys maister is from home in a straunge countrey, will see well to hys householde, of whiche he is made ouerseer and deputye, not to vse himselfe as a Lorde or a tyranne ouer it, but oute of the tresoures of hys Lorde, to bring furth a pay vnto euery body his due allowaunce as much as conuenieth is, and at suche times as is requisite. Blessed shall that seruaunt be whome hys lorde so dayntly returnyng home, shall finde attendaunt vpon his office. For hauing approued and tryed hys vprighte trueth and diligence in the proporcions assigned out vnto him, he will make him rewler of all his goodes, and will bouchesaue to vse hym in maner as halfe a partener with hymselfe of all his goodes and substaunce. ¶ In the contrary parte, in case the said seruaunt be neither one of honestye to truste vnto, nor yet wyse and expert in hys office,

But if the seruaunt take in his herte: my Lorde will differ his cummyng.

but taking a pryde through the absence of his lorde and by reason of the office of stewarde or deputie committed vnto hym, shall saye in hys owne mynde: my maister doothe nowe sette a long daye of cummyng home agayne, and peraduenture he will neuer come agayne: in the meane tyme I will doo all as myne owne fansie shruethe me: and thus shall beegynne to vse cruelties ouer hys felowe seruauntes bothe men and weomen, not onely not feedyng them of his wheate that is theyr mayster alwell as hys, but also pumbleyng and deuryng them, and vsurpyng a certayne tyrannye ouer hys other felowes, he doo for hys owne parte all the whyle eate, and drynke, and banckette, and vse to drinke himselfe dronke, wastfully consuming his maisters goodes in filthye sensuall pleasures and in ryottous excesse: what iudge ye that suche a stewarde shall haue for hys laboure? Forsouth hys lorde shall returne home agayne at suche a daye whan he was not looked for, and at suche an houre as he was not knowen of: and the seruaunte doeynge whatsoeuer hymselfe lusteth without feare or care, hys lorde shall separate and cutte of from hys houshold, nor shal vouchsalue to suffer hym to bee one of hys house, but shall reken hym in the noumber of the other vnfaithfull persones, assured to suffre condygne punyshemente, forasmuche as he wouldе not bee myndefull of hys office. In euangelicall stewarde and dispenser of Goddes woorde, can not by any thyng better winne his lorde and maisters herte vnto hym, then whan his lorde is absent, to represente the gracious bountie of him, towardes the neighbourе, and not to thynke himselfe a lorde ouer the neighbeure, but remembre that he is a felowe seruaunte with him.

The Lorde of that seruaunte will come.

The terre.

¶ The seruaunte that knewe his maisters will, and prepared not himselfe, neyther did according to his will, shall bee beaten with many stripes. But he that knewe not, and did commit thinges worthy of stripes, shal be beaten with fewe stripes. For vnto whomesoeuer much is geuen, of hym much shalbe required. And to whome men haue committed muche, of him will they aske the more.

And certes the more perfect knowlage that a man hath or shall haue of the veritie euangelicall, so muche the more grieuous shall hys condemnacion be, if he be negligente or slacke to folowe that he hath learned to be the righte way. For þ Gentiles, to whome the trueth hath neither by meane of the lawe, ne by meane of the gospell bene shewed, shall be nothing so sore punished, as the Iewes, whome the law of Moses did instruct to some forwardnes in godly exercise. And emong these againe the Pharisees, a suche as are experte in all the poyntes of the lawe, shall be more sharpelye punished, then the symple ignorauntes. But moste grieuous punyshemente of all others shall they haue, whome the trueth, being wel knowen, whom so many miracles, a whome my liuely exaumple hath not moued to the zele and earneste exercyse of theyr duetie towarde God. I haue hydden nothyng from you. Whatsoeuer thyng my heauenly father will hath bene that ye shoulde knowe by meane of me, I haue opened and declared it vnto you. Beware ye therefore by the exaumple afore goyng of the negligent seruaunt, that regardeth not hys maysters commaundemente. For suche a seruaunte, as hys maister hathe had and vsed in higher degree aboue the rest, as one to whome he hathe committed the disbursing and bestowing of hys goodes, to whome he hathe opened the priuetics of his counsayle, whome he hath put his truste in whan he went into ferr parties from home: excepte he shall doo that he is commaunded to doo, and shall prepayre hymselfe to the executyng and dooyng of suche martyers as he knewe that hys maister woulde with all his hearte haue to bee dooen, he shall abye with manye a soze strype. But whoso shall bee of the noumber of the seruauntes, to whome the lozde hath not opened the will of hys hearte, yf suche an one shall dooe any offence woorthye punishmente, he shall drinke but with a fewe stripes. Than is there no cause, why the despensation of Goddes woozde and of the ghospell breyng commyttedto youre charge, shoulde make you any thyng the moze haulte in takyng vpon you, but rather the moze carefull to discharge youre duetie well. He dooeth moze veraply take vpon hym a charge then an honoure, whoso taketh in hande any office oz ministration in the churche. It is a thyng of free gratuitee, that is so commytted vnto anye man, and it is committed vnto euerye man of veray purpose to bee broughte furth, and vsed to the common vtilitie of all the whole houlsholde indifferently. And lyke as maisters doe require a moze streight and precise accoumpte at the handes of suche an one, whome they haue put in trust with moe thinges then an other, so at the handes of such an one to whome a larger gifte oz ministracion of knowlage and of autozitie hath bene geuen of God, there shall moze be required, then at the handes of the others: and to whose credyte a larger and greater ministery hath bene deputed, the moe persones that he oughte to haue dooen good vnto, so muche the moze shall there at hys hande bee required. The moze learning that thou hast, with so muche the better will teache thou: the richer that thou arte, so muche the moze gladly relieue thou the poore: the moze that thy power is, so manye the moe persones leat thyne auctozitie draw and bryng vnto the ghospell. It is an other mannes that thou haste, and not thyne owne, and the true owners will is, to haue lyberally bestowed vpon others that he hath lent to thee.

For vnto whome soeuer much is geuen of him shalbee much required, &c.

¶ I am come to sende fyer on the earth: and what is my desyre, but that it weare alreadye kindled? Notwithstanding I muste bee baptised with a baptisme: and howe am I payned tyll it bee ended? Suppose ye that I am come to sende peace on earth? I tell you nay but rather debate. For from henceforthe there shall bee fyue in one house deuided, three against two, and two against three. The father shall bee deuided against the sonne, and the sonne against the father: the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother. And the mother in law against her daughter in lawe, and the daughter in lawe against the mother in lawe.

The texte.

But I must be baptised with a baptisme, &c.

I thirst the saluation of man, and for the cause therof am I come into the worlde, and to the earnest desire of my hearte all tarying oz delay seemeth long. It is no waishe doctryne, ne worldely, that I haue brought downe from heauen. It is mere and pure fyer, whiche will surelye eyther cleanse and purifye a man, oz els burne hym. And I am euen of purpose come, that this same fyer maye bee kiendled on yearthe. For what other thyng els dooe I desyre oz wainte? Seeyng once kiendled it will ferre and wyde sodaynelye take all the buiuersall worlde with the flame. But thys fyer shall not leape ne sparcle foorth, onleese thys fleshe stone of my body bee first stricken on the crosse. That same baptisme is yet behynde to come, whiche my father hathe precisely appoynted vnto me, to be dieped in myne owen blond, to the end I shal through my death suffer paynes and tozmentes for the sinnes of all the whole worlde. It that houre and neuer afore, shall that same sparcle of euangelicall charitie, appere vp and shewe furth it selfe emong men, whan they shall see an innocent giltelesse man to haue willingly suffered a vyle & shamefull death for malefactoures, that haue transgressed. For this is a sparke of perfecte charitie & loue.

And

And from this baptisme doe I not onely not abhorre: but for the loue that I beare to the saluation of mankinde, I am in a great agonye, to haue it accomplished with all expedition. The nature of my body abhorreth the matter: but the entier loue of my soule greatelye longeth for it. But thys fyer being kendled shall stirre vp great vproares in the worlde. For it shall bee a vehemente fyer and an heauenlye, aswell disclussyng as also stirkyng foorthe all naturall affections of men. For doe ye beleue that I am come to bring suche peace into the earthe, as thys worlde loueth, with whome it is than altogether quietenesse and tranquilitie, whā the lustes and appetites of the herte bee all pleased and satisfied, and whan the ciuill persones doee agree with the ciuill? No verayly: I am not come to set suche concordes at one, but to sende debate and variaunce. People will not euery one obey the ghospell, and for the ghospels sake, all other thynges are to bee contemned. Wherevpon it shall so come to passe, that in one house, in whiche there was a naughtie peace afore, there shall aryse an holesome variaunce. For fyue sortes of persons being of nature most nere ioyned together, shall for my cause bee at dyuision emong themselues, thzee agaynst two, and eft two agaynst thzee. For what is more nere coupled together by nature then the sonne to the father? And yet shall the father for the ghospels cause, fall out and bee at distaunce with the sonne: and the sonne shall for the ghospels sake despise the father. In lyke maniier shall the mother bee at variaunce with the daughter, but the charytie of the ghospell shall bee of more force in the daughters mynde, then naturall affection towardes hyr parentes. The mother in lawe also shall bee at playne defyaunce and warre agaynste hir owne daughter in lawe: but the loue of eternall saluacyon shall with the other in her mynde ouerweighe the respecte of alyaunce of the flesshe. For the bandes of the spirite doee muche more streygne the hearte, then the bandes of nature doee.

The texte. ¶ Be sayde also to the people: whan ye see a cloude aryse out of the weste, straight waye ye saye: we shall haue a shoure, and so it is. And whan ye see the southe winde blowe, ye say: we shall haue heate, and it commeth to passe. Hypocrites, ye can skill of the facyon of the earth, and of the skie: but what is the cause that ye cannot skill of this time? yea and why iudge ye not of your selues what is right? While thou goest with thine aduersarie to the rewer, as thou arte in the way, geue diligence that thou mayeste bee deliuered from him, lest he bring thee to the iudge, and the iudge deliuer thee to the sayler, and the sayler cast thee into prison. I tell thee, thou departest not thence till thou hast made good the vttermost mite.

After these woordes, Iesus turning to the people, sayde: Be herefore than dooe not pyepaire your hertes to the kingdome of God, whiche is euen veray nighe at hande. Doe ye not perceiue? I see it to approche, so many tokens of thinges as ye haue. Why are ye in this behalfe nothing good cōfecturers, seeing that in matters of so muche lesse weight and importaunce, ye haue so quicke a sinelle to caste and grasse at thynges to come? For whan ye see any cloude aryssing out of the west, ye streyghte waye tell afore hande that there is a shower toward, and the thing commeth to passe which ye doe so prophecie. And agayne whan ye perceiue the winde to blowe from the sourh, ye tell afore hande that a greate heate will folowe, and youre grasse dooeth northyng beguile you. Neuertheless it tell it forceth, whether it rayne or rayne not: but it maketh veray great force, that thzough euangelical feithy ye procure attrayne attayne euerlastinge saluacyon. O ye hypocrites after what sorte all youre doynges are cloked and counterfaicte. And euen suche as youre holinesse is, euen suche lyke is youre wisedome also. In thynges pertenynge to thys presente lyfe ye haue a witte and a forecaste: but in thynges belongyng to immortalitie ye haue no syghte at all. Ye marke the parte of the skye and of the yearth, that is nexte to you, and therof ye gather coniectures and likelihoodes of thynges to ensue. But howe happenethe, that of so manye tokens as haue bene shewed vnto you, ye doe not marke nor espie the time to be now at hande, whiche shall dyyng to all creatures, eyther healthe if it bee duely accepted, or eternall damnacyon in case it bee neglected? Ye knowe what the Prophetes haue promised: ye heare so manye thynges, whiche are sayde and wroughte emong you: ye see the worlde to bee chaunged to a newe state: and can ye not yet of all these thinges caste ne coniecture the tyme to bee at hande, that hath bene promised? This onely thyng was with all youre earnest endeuoures to be attended vnto: neyther thoulde anye thing bee of so greate weyghte or regarde with you, for respecte or cause wherof ye shoulde suffeyne anye losse or hindraunce of good proceedyng in the ghospell. If thou haue good or chaunce, and the same bee a leatre vnto thee, selle it: If anye bodye haue dooen thee anye offence or displeasure, forgeue it rather then to take the vttermoste of thy righte at the lawe. That if the mattier come so ferre, that ye bee goyng to the iudges, euen as thou goeste thitherwarde on the waye, take thou suche wayes, as thou mayeste bee ryddde of thyne aduersarie. It is better to ende the variaūce betweene you euen with condicions to fare worse then equitie would thou shouldeste dooe, then to abyde the vncertayne ende of the iudgementes of the lawe, in whiche iudgementes the better cause dooeth not alwayes preuaile and geatte the ouer hande. Otherwyse thou puttest thy selfe in hasarde and auenture, leste the iudge shall delyuer thee to the gayloure that taketh charge of persones condemned, and he to caste thee in prisone: whiche thyng if it so chaunce, this I tell thee for a mattier of certaynetye, thou shalte not get out from thence, vntyll thou paye that is demaunded, euen to the vttermoste ferthing. A busy mattier it is to trauerse the lawe: and whoso maketh hast to the marke or gole of euangelicall perfection, hath no hacaunt tyme to be long letted with suche coumberouse tariers. Firste and formoste therefore weigh it well with thy selfe, howe muche more gaynes thereis in forgeuing a wrong or displeasure doen vnto thee, then in extreme folowyng the suyte of the lawe for it: in geuing ouer or leattyng goe of a thyng, then in recouerying it by the lawe. Firde thou arte sure to gayne frendeshippe of the other partie, which by entreyng trauerse of the lawe is in hasarde of lesing: secoundlye thou winneste the aduauntage of a great deale of tyme, whiche by folowing the suit thou mustenedes haue loste: besides all this thou gayneste tranquilitie and perfect quiete of mynde, which quiet the troubleouse suites of the lawe are wont to take away from a man: finally thou doeste escape whatsoeuer misshappes or harmes the vnluckie ende of trauersyng the lawe may be hable to cause vnto thee.

But how happeneth it? ye can not skill of this tyme?

Whan? goeste with thine aduersarie to? receyue.

Thou shalte not departe thence. &c.

¶ The xiii. Chapter.

¶ There were present at that same season, certayne men that shewed him of the Galileans, whose bloud Pilate had mingled with their owne sacrifice. And Jesus answered, and sayde vnto them: Suppose ye that these Galileans were greater sinners than all the other Galileans, because they suffered suche punishemente? I tell you nay: but except ye repente, ye shall likewise perishe: Or those .xviii. vpon which the toure in Siloe fell, and slew them: thinke ye, that they were sinners above all men that dwelte in Hierusalem? I tell you nay: but except ye repente, ye shall lykewise perishe.

The texte.

VHyle Jesus speaketh the premisses and many thynges moe to the multytude of all sortes of people there assembled, partelye prouoking and iuryng them to theyr duetie towardes God with promise of rewardes, and partlye makyng them afearde with the terroure of punyshementes if they woulde bee negligente in that behalfe, and vsing all meanes possible howe to enkendle the myndes of the audience vnto the earneste endeuoure and exercyse of a better lyfe: there came, euen as happe was, certayne persones, whiche brought hym newes of a straunge matter and horryble to heare, concernyng certayne men of Galile, being haynouse offenders, vpon whome Pylate the lieutenaunte of Jewrie, had caused execucyon to bee doone of a straunge example, and the firste that euer was of that sorte, whiche was, that whan the parties aforesayde were founde guiltie and were condemned for theyr offence, he mengled theyr bloud with the bloud of beastes which the same Galileans sleyne in sacrifice after the ordinary faction of the Jewes. And because it was an offence of great enormitie that they had doen, they were punished with an horrible kynde of death, to the terroure and feare of all others. Nowe the bulgare people vseth commonly to detest persons so condemned, and to crye out on them, and to reioyce in theyr owne behalfes, that they haue not committed any suche acte, when one that maketh suche reioysyng is manye tymes guilty in a higher degree of vngracyousnesse and myschiefe, then they whose manyfeste and openlye knowen cryme hath beene satisfied and pourged by open execution of deathe. But Jesus beyng myndeth that the terroure of thys example shoulde come vnto all persones, whereas they that made relacyon thereof, supposed it not to touche anye others sauyng onelye suche partye as had dooen the same transgressions: made answere vnto them in thys wyse. Dooe ye beleue that these Galileans onely and no moe, were haynous transgressoures among all the people of Galile, because the rigourous sharpenesse of the iudge hath shewed thys vttermoste extremytie of punyshemente vpon them alone? It is not enoughe for you to kepe youre selues from dooyng the lyke of theyr highe offence: but ye muste amende from all sinnes.

Certain men that shewed him of the Galileans &c.

Except ye repente, ye shall all lykewise perishe.

Whiche thing onlesse ye doe, though the mercifull fauoure of God suffer you for the tyme, of purpose to haue you conuerted yet shall ye all at laste perysshe by the semblеable vengeaunce of GOD. And because the vengeaunce being for a tyme delayed shall not put you in hope to escape vnpunyshed, except ye amende in season he shall come sodaynelye and take you ere ye bee aware, lyke as these same eyghteene persones were of late dayes sodaynely taken and oppressed with falling of the toure vpon them in Siloe.

Although ye escape the vengeaunce of menne, yet the vengeaunce of God can by no meanes bee auoyded. The exaumple of those fe we toucheth you all. Doe ye beleue that whan the falling of the sayde toure oppressed those same menne, there were not many in Hierusalem euen more vngracious and more mischieuous than they were? But the mercifulnesse of God differeth them vpon hope of repentaunce. The crymes of some persones are manyfeste and open, and some menne are vnknowen: and euerye bodye laugheth on theyr owne ciuill properties: but emong you all there is not one good, neyther shall any manescape with his naughtinesse vnpunished. Yea and thus muche I boldely assure you of, except ye amende from your former naughtinesse, the vengeaunce of God shall in lyke manier lighte vpon you euerye one. See ye therefore that ye doe not abuse the fauourable sufferaunce of God to sinne the more at your libertie (as it were) out of the checke, remembring well that the later the vengeaunce of God doorthe come, so muche the sorer it will lyghte, whan it fallerh. God doeth manye soundrye wayes prouoke to repentaunce: now speakyng fayre, an other tyme putting in feare. If the last whan he seeth the obstinate malice of men by no meanes to be brought to amendement, he vtterely destruieth all the whole man at once, to the ende the parte which would not bee good to himselfe warde, may bee a profitable exaumple to others.

The terte.

He tolde also this similitude: a certain man had a figtree planted in his vineyarde, and he came and sought fruicte thereon, and found none. Then said he to the dresser of his vineyarde: beholde, this three yere haue I come and sought fruicte in this figtree, and finde none. Cut it downe, why coumbreth it the grounde? he answered and sayde vnto him: Lorde, let it alone this yere also, till I digge rounde about it, and dounge it, to see whether it will beare fruicte, and if it beare not than, after that thalte thou cut it downe.

A certayne man had a figtree planted in his vineyard.

And because Iesus woulde the more diepely imprinte this sentence in the herers of the grosse multitude, he added to the premisses a similytude apte to bee applyed to the case afore goyng. A certayne man (sayeth he) had a figtree planted within his vineyarde. The partie that had sette it, came vnto it at the due tyme, seekyng to haue the fruicte whiche nowe in the begynnyng by cummyng foorthe of the leaues, it semed lykely to yelde, and founde thereon nothyng at all sauyng onelye leaues. Than callyng hym that had the charge of diessyng and housbandyng the vineyarde, he sayde: Beholde, the thyrde yere is nowe paste, that I come to this figtree, seking to haue fruicte there of and yet can I none fynde, therefore cut it downe. To what purpose doeth it occupie and coumber a roume in the grounde, bothe hurtyng the vyne with the shadowe, and also drawyng vnto itselfe the sappe and moysture wherewith more profitable and fruictfull trees myghte haue beene nourished? But the bayliffe of the vineyarde sayde vnto hys maister: Maister, thou haste sufferd it to stande nowe three yeres, leatte it alone yet thys one yere more, vntill I may trie euen the vttermoste of my cure to bee doone vpon it. For it maye so bee, that it is barayne through the defaulte of the soyle. I shall therefore digge rounde about it, and caste doung about the roote. If throughe suche cherishing the tree bee reuiued and stered vp, and booe bring foorthe fruicte, thou shalte preserue the tree: but in case thou shalte afterwarde see it to bee of desperate barayneste, than shalte thou come to that that is the vttermoste extremitie, and shalte cutte it downe, that at leaste wyse it may dooe no harme to thy vineyarde. By this present parable did the lorde in generall warne and admertise all persones, not to make lighte of god prouoking them to repentaunce. But particularely and most directly he noted: signified, that the nacio of the

The partie that had sette it, came vnto it at the due tyme, seekyng to haue the fruicte whiche nowe in the begynnyng by cummyng foorthe of the leaues, it semed lykely to yelde, and founde thereon nothyng at all sauyng onelye leaues.

Than callyng hym that had the charge of diessyng and housbandyng the vineyarde, he sayde:

Beholde, the thyrde yere is nowe paste, that I come to this figtree, seking to haue fruicte there of and yet can I none fynde, therefore cut it downe.

To what purpose doeth it occupie and coumber a roume in the grounde, bothe hurtyng the vyne with the shadowe, and also drawyng vnto itselfe the sappe and moysture wherewith more profitable and fruictfull trees myghte haue beene nourished?

But the bayliffe of the vineyarde sayde vnto hys maister:

Maister, thou haste suffred it to stande nowe three yeres, leatte it alone yet thys one yere more, vntill I may trie euen the vttermoste of my cure to bee doone vpon it.

For it maye so bee, that it is barayne through the defaulte of the soyle.

I shall therefore digge rounde about it, and caste doung about the roote.

If throughe suche cherishing the tree bee reuiued and stered vp, and booe bring foorthe fruicte, thou shalte preserue the tree:

but in case thou shalte afterwarde see it to bee of desperate barayneste, than shalte thou come to that that is the vttermoste extremitie, and shalte cutte it downe, that at leaste wyse it may dooe no harme to thy vineyarde.

By this present parable did the lorde in generall warne and admertise all persones, not to make lighte of god prouoking them to repentaunce.

But particularely and most directly he noted: signified, that the nacio of the

Iewes,

Iewes, whiche hauyng so manye tymes beene prouoked and moued to take better wayes, aswell by the patriarkes, by Moyses, and by the lawe, as also by the prophetes, by Iohn the baptyste, and lastelye by so manye miracles, and by euangelicall preaching: yet, because they dyd stubbernelye persiste and continue in theyr obstinate malice, shoulde of the remaynes bee vtterly cutte vp by the roote.

The texte. And he taught in one of theyr Synagogues on the Sabboth daies. And beholde, there was a woman, whiche had a spirite of infirmitie. xviii. yeres: and was bowed together, & couldne in no wise lifte vp hir head: whan Iesus sawe hir, he called hir to him, and sayed vnto hir: woman, thou art deliuered from thy disease. And he layed his handes on hir, and immediately she was made streight, and glorified God. And the ruler of the Synagogue answered with indignation (because that Iesus had healed on the Sabboth daie,) and sayed vnto the people: There are sixe daies in whiche men ought to worcke, in them come, that ye may be healed, and not on the Sabboth daie. But the Lorde answered him & sayd: Thou Ipocrite, doth not eche one of you on the Sabboth day loose his oxe or his asse, frō the stall, and leade him to the watere? and ought not this daughter of Abraham, whome Satan hath bound (lo. xviii. yeres) be loosed from this bonde on the Sabboth daie? And whan he thus sayed, all his aduersaries were ashamed, and all the people reioyced on all the excellent dedes that were doone by hym.

And beholde immediately an exaumple of the barrayn figtree, in suche wise as the very presente case myght laye playne before the yes of menne the same thyng, whiche the figure of the parable afore goyng had but (as ye woulde say) tricked and drawen out in grosse. The obseruacions of the ceremonies of the lawe, were (as one might saye) the leaues of the Synagogue, which in outward apparence semed to promise most sweete fruicte and vnto god most pleasaunt, of true godlinesse, and of charitie & loue towardes the neyghbour, where it hath not onely brought foorthe no suche lyke thyng, but also hathe brought furthe bitter fruictes of enuie, hatred, backebyting, blasphemie, and murder. Nowe Iesus whan accoyding to hys accustomed wount, he was teaching on the Sabbothe dayes, there was presente there in the Synagogue a certayn woman, who had continually by the space of eighteene yeres beene arayed with a disease both incurable & pitteouse to se. For she was in her body so shrounken and clonged together, that she couldne not lyfte hir heade vp-

There was a woman whiche had a spirite of infirmitie eighteene yeres. &c. right, ne looke vpwarde. Loe therefore a matter and occasyon of thewyng foorthe good fruictes, if the figtree had not been vtterlye baraine. Thys woman did represente a figure of the Gentiles, and of suche as beeyng openlye wicked and full of mischiefe, did nothing lyke, but rather shewe foorthe theyr extreme cruill case, altogether fixed downewarde vpon earthely thynges, and not so muche as once thynkyng on thynges eternall and heauenlye. Contrariewise the Iewe stode bolte vprygthe in the vineyarde of the Lord, which is the Synagogue, well decked and garnished with the woordes of the lawe and with corpotall ceremonyes, as it were with leaues, which Iewe couldne nothing els doe, but enuie and surmuise false matiers of accusation. But the Lorde Iesus firste of all with these same moste mercifull iyes of hys, be-

When Iesus sawe hir, he called hir vnto hym. &c. helde the woomanne. And that same verye pointe was euen already a lucky token of health wanby to folowe. And not so contented, he of hys owne mere motion called hir vnto hym. Happie and blessed is he that euer he was borne, whom soeuer Iesus calleth vnto hym, and fortunate that heareth hym whan he calleth. The woman cometh to hym beyng full of good hope. The disease was was of long continuaunce, and vncurable: but there is none so great vngodlines or vnrighteousnesse, that is not through euangelicall fayth clerely abolished and put away for euer. Lest vs then see the fruite of the good tree, which Jesus would fain haue had, & could not find in the Synagogue. Woman (saieth he) thou arte riddle from thy great disease and sickenesse. He taketh no disdaine to touche her with his holy body. He laieth his hande vpon her, & immediatly was she able to stand bolt vpright with her bodye, and knowelagyng the celestial benefite, she glorified god: So sodainly was the congregacion of the Gentiles chaunged: and forsakyng all idols, forsaking the earnest desire and gredines of money, forsakyng the moste fylthye and abominable lustes, with which it was a long time in suche wise bound, that it could not haue any desyre to cum to the knowlage of thynges heauenlye: it begoon to geue laude and praise to the mercifulnesse of god, through whose fre benefite and goodnesse it hathe clerelye been delyuered from all her synnes, vnto the whiche beyng a long tyme captiue and thrall, she had in moste piteous wyse liued as a bondseruaunt vnto Satan. Now on the contrary part consider me the euyll frute of an euill tree. Whan the reweler of the Synagogue had seen this matter, (beyng in dede the sayed figtree it selfe barrain, but yet settyng out it selfe to the eyes of menne, as it were to sale, onely by reason of the leaues of the lawe,) takyng indignacion that Jesus had healed the woman on the Sabboth daye, turned hymselfe to the people there congregated, as though he would haue taught them sum great matter. Nowe heare thena beryeyghte boyce of a Pharisee, and by the same boice of this one manne, esteme thou all the whollе doctrine of that secte. This deuout godly man fearyng leste the people should through the craumple of Jesus fall vnto all vngodlines, prouideth to take a good way for their preseruacio, sayig yt great auroritie: There be sixe dates in ꝑ weke, in which it is leful to worke. Therfore if any body be desirous to be made whole, let him cu in one of these worcking dayes: but to violate ꝑ sabboth day, is a thyng not standing with gods pleasure. This so foliche a saiyng could not ꝑ most merciful lord abide, who had made ꝑ sabboth day, not for any such purpose, ꝑ men should rest or ceasse frō helping the neibour, but had made the sabboth to the end there should be frō al euil doynges a perpetual resting, which rest & same outward rest of the Jewes sabbothes did figurate. And because this voice of ꝑ ruler of the Synagogue was spokē by ꝑ mindes of al the Phariseis, the Scribes, & the lawiers, vnder the person of him alone, Jesus made aunswer to them all, saying: ye hypocrytes, which not passyng on the very pith of the lawe, lye altogether on the rynde or barke therof only, and make a glorious paynted shewe of righteousnes without fayth, where in dede ye are fer frō al true godlines, see ye how wicked Judges ye are in this matter. Who is it of all you, whom the reuerence of the Sabboth should let, but that he would vnteye an Oxe or an asse of his owne from the stalle to haue the same to water? If ye iudge the sabboth daye not to be violated for a commoditie whiche is bestowed oua bruite beast that doth you seruice, doe ye lay vnto my charge, as such a perillous acte, that I haue on the sabboth day healed this same doughter of Abraham rightly borne, as one, who in synceritie and pureness of faith doth perfitelye resemble her sayed parente Abraham that she came of? Is youre owne priuate commoditie of so great estimacion among you, that ye haue no scrupulositie at all to vntye the haulter vnto an Asse on the sabboth day, that he may not perishe for default of drinke, and haue ye indignacio that I haue on the sabboth daye loosed and deliuered this woman here, beyng one of your owne nation, whom Satan hath by the space of eyghtene yeres kepte fast tyed and bounde? If worckyng and labouryng on the Sabboth daye be forbidden, whether of the two doeth more bodily labour, he that vnlieth an Asse, and ledeth hym to the water, or els I, who with a mere worde, and only touchyng haue made whole al this whole woman bothe bodye and soule too? Are ye in suche sore more mercifull and fauourable to an ore or an asse, then to your syster or brother? And do ye in suche wyse obserue the law, that for superstition therof, ye neglecte that whiche is the highest and chefeste poynte of all the whole lawe? These woordes of Jesus, because they cõpriseth a veritie both clere and manifest, and also agreable to the common reaso of mannes owne nature, made these slaunderous raillers full euill ashamed. For it was no small grefe vnto them, whan any parte of their glorye was abated in the face of the multitude, before whõ thei had alwaies set out themselfes as muche as they could to their owne glory.

The texte. Than said he, what is the kyngdõ of god like? or wherto shal I compare it? It is like a grayne of mustard seed, which a man toke & sowed in his garden: and it grewe and wered a great tree, and the fowles of the ayre made nestes in the braunches of it: And again he said: wherunto shal I lyken the kyngdome of god? It is like leauen, which a woman toke and hid in three peckes of meale, till it was leauened.

Jesus hereupõ, minding to open, that al that same vainglorious boostyng of the Pharisees whiche conteyned an high poynt of holy conuersation, should shortely vanishe awaie: and contrariwise, that the vertue of the ghospel should from most lowe beginninges grow vp to so high state of dignitie, that it should drawe all the whole vniuersall worlde vnto it, and that ꝑsame should be by meane of death, and by meane of Apostles beyng poore meane men and ignorauntes, put foorth two sundrye parables at once of one meanyng. Ye see (sayd he) that the kyngdome of the Synagogue fighteth against the kyngdome of god. Notwithstanding, the same that is more of puissaũce and might, shall in the ende haue the victory. Therfore the lord as it had been one enspired with a newe spirite, to the entent he would make the multytude of the people geue the better eare vnto hym, sayed: to what thyng shall I say ꝑ kyngdom of god to be like, or to what thyng shal I compare it, to make you vnderstande what maner a thyng it is, by comparison of some thyng that is to no creature of yours all not exceedingly well knowen? And whan the people euery one of them looked to heare sum royall hygh symilitude taken of sum comparison of the same, or of lightenyng, or of some other such lyke matter: Jesus thought better to take a parable out of a litle sede ꝑ no body esteemeth or setteth by. It is lyke (sayd he) to a litle grayne or corne of mustardsede, which for a time that it is whole, like as it is one of the least thiges possible, so is it a thyng of the least value that can bee in the worlde, and a thyng, that neyther with the colour, ne with the sauour is pleasaunte to the iye: and yf it haue any strength or vertue, it hath it within forth, and not without. A certain wyse felowe whan he had gotten one of the sayed litle sedes, he did not set it at naught, ne cast it away, but sowed it in his garde. And this same sede of lest value and regarde spronge vp, and grewe to a mightie great tree, in so muche that euen the birdes made themselfes nestes in the braunches therof, and for one litle litle grayne that was sowed, it bryought forth many thousandes. And right so the kyngdome of God, whan it shall nosse of all seme to bee extincte, and vtterly abolyshed for euer, euen than shall it spreade furthe it selfe abrode in nosse largest compace of all. And agayne, to what thyng may I saye the kyngdome of God to bee like? It is lyke vnto a litle lumpe of leauen, which a wife housewyfe did hide in three bushels of mele poured together, and there leafte it (as ye would saye) burried vntill the strength of the leauen by litle and litle turned all the sayed mele, though there were a great quantitie of it: so in lyke manier the lowe and humble doctrine of the gospel shal one day throughly possesse all the vnuersall nations of the worlde.

And he went throughe all cities and townes, teachyng, and iourneying towardes Hierusalem. Than sayed one vnto hym: Lorde are there fewe that be sauced? And he sayed vnto them: Endeuor to enter in at the streight gate, for many, I saye vnto you, wyl seke to enter in, and shall not be able. When the good maister of the house is risen vp, and hath shut to the doore, and ye begynne to stande without, and to knocke at the doore saying: Lorde, Lorde open vnto vs, and he answere and saye vnto you: I know you not, whence ye are, than shall ye begynne to saye: We haue eaten and dronken in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our stretes. And he shall saye: I tell you I know you not whence ye are, departe from me all ye that worke iniquitie. There shall be weping and gnashyng of tethe, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Iacob, and all the prophetes in the kyngdome of God, and ye your selues thrust out. And they shall come from the east and from the weste, and from the north: and from the south, and shall sette downe in the kyngdome of God. And beholde, there are last, which shall be first. And there are first, whiche shalbe laste. The tenth.

Jesus after that he had thus muche spoken, made haste to the place, where the grayne of the sayed mustarde seede was to bee dygged into the yearthe, and where the leauen was to be hydden in the meale. For he was on his iourney towardes Hierusalem, where he knewe that he should bee slayne. But by the wape as he went throughe euery citie, and strete or village, he taught all creatures, because there should be no piece of tyme be lofte to the ghospelwarde. And because he had tofore taught certayne high matters concernyng that menne should sell all the substaunce that they had, concernyng howe men should liue from hande to mouthe after the manier of the rauens and the lilies, and concernyng howe one ought not to continue in strife and contencion with the aduersary: a certaine persone cometh vnto him and sayed: Master, is it true, that there are but fewe, whiche atteigne to saluacion? For I iudge that there is not so great a multitude that wyll enbrace these thynges whiche thou teachest. And yet on the other syde, the parable of the grayne of mustardseede, and of the lumpe of leauen, appereth to promise the contrarye, that is to wete, that the effectuall power of the kyngdome of God shall come to many. When sayed one vnto hym: Lorde are there fewe that be sauced:

Than Jesus willyng to shewe, that in dede the same and the knoweleage of the doctryne euangelicall, yea and also the wozking of miracles should come vnto verye many, but yet that no man should come to saluacion, which would not lay clene awape from him all lustes and desires of this worlde, and bee a folower of poore Christe, sayed: Endeuor all the earnest endeuoure and labour that ye can, to entre by the narowe gate. That thing maye not suche persones atteygne, as lye slugging full of slouthfulnesse. Wenne muste putte their good willes and labour therto: the entreyng is narowe, but it leadeth to the wyde waye of the kyngdome of heauen. This gate can not receyue suche as are burdoned with rychesse, suche as haue an heape of honours and promocions vpon them: backes, suche as are full paunched with excessiue delicate fare, suche as are heauie laden with couetise, suche as are puffed vp and swollen with pryde.

They that are of suche sortes, do choose the brode and the wyde roumed waye, and at the first vieu delectable and flatterynge, but ledynge the streight pathe to death. And therefore make ye greate shifte to entre now whyle the waye thereto lyeth open: shake of and caste from you all your packes and fardels, that the narowe entreaunce maye be hable to receyue you. For this I playnly saye Many will seke to entre in. &c. vnto you: There shalbe one daye many whiche shall bee desirous and faine to enter, and shall not be suffred to enter, by reason that the commyng thereto shal nowe be stopped vp. For whan the good man of the house shall be gon in, and shall haue shutte the doore after him, which dooeth now stande wyde open for all persones that will doe they true endeuour to goe in: than beeyng ouerlate to emende, ye will acknowleage your errour, and haupng enuie at suche as are entred, ye shall begynne to stande watchyng at the doore, and to knocke at the gates, saying: Lorde and Maister open the doore vnto vs. Than the good mā who could not be heard afore whan he desyred you to come in, shall agayne not heare you, but shall aunswere in this manier: I heare the name of Maister, but I knowe none of you for my seruauntes: goe ye, and seke hym, whome ye haue serued. Than shall ye begynne to saye: Maister, how happeneth, that thou wilt not nowe knowe vs: Thou were borne emong vs: we haue eaten and dronken with thee in coumpany: and in our stretes hast thou taught many a lesson:
and we are thy disciples: yea and moreouer in thy name we haue healed sicke folkes, and haue cast out deuils. Here at these wordes shall the good man aunswere: These thynges that ye reherse do not make vnto me disciples of the true right sorte. Him that foloweth the same steppes that I haue goen, hym will I

There shal an other thing more ouer be added vnto ỹ premisses, which shal yet more bitterly cause your hertes to burne. You beeyng putte of, who beleued your selfes alone and no moe to be receyued in: there shall come out of euery nacion of all the whole world, out of all coastes and quarters of the world, mẽgled one with an other, of al ages and degrees without any choice or accepcion of persones, many whiche neuer had any kinred with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, no kno welage at all of the lawe, ne any familiaritie of conuersacio with me, and all these beyng sodainly through fayth made the childrẽ of Abrahã, by adopcion, shall sytte at the feaste in the kyngdome of God. Thus shall the matter, muche other wyse then ye looked for, be turned to the contrary. Thei that semed to be nerest to saluacion, shall bee relected and cast ferre from saluacion: and they that by your iudgement were reputed to bee fertheste out of fauour frõ god (as Idolaters, captains of garrisõs, publicanes, souldiers, harlottes) shall haue the cheefe ỹ principall honour in the kyngdome of God.

And they shal cõme from the east and frõ the west

There are last whiche shalbe first.

The same day came there certayne of the Pharisels, and said vnto him: geat thee oute of this way and depart hens: for Herode will kyl thee. And he said vnto them: Goe ye and tel that fore: behold I cast out deuils, and heale the people to day and to morowe, and the third day I make an end. Neuertheles I must walke to day and to morow, and the day folowyng: for it cannot be that a prophet perish any other where, sauc at Ierusalẽ. Ierusalem, Ierusalem, whiche kyllest ỹ prophetes, and stonest them that are sent vnto thee. How oft would I haue gathered thy children togeither, as a hyrd doeth gather her young vnder her wynges, and ye would not? Behold, your habitacion is leaft vnto you desolate. I tell you, ye shall not see me, vntyll the tyme come that ye shall say, blessed is he that commeth in the name of the Lorde. The texte.

Now because Iesus did here and there abrode with great playnnesse and without sparyng of any body, teache suche thinges as I haue afore rehersed the Pharisels, of a purpose to stoppe the mouthe of the ghospell by castyng hym in a feare, came to Iesus, and sayed vnto hym: Take a wyse way for sauynge and sparyng of thy lyfe, and forsake Galile. For Herode the king of this prouince beareth the malice, and seeketh an occasion to slea thee. That excepte thou Iohn the baptiste. But Iesus declaryng that there couldbe bee no daungyer towardes hym at the handes of any mortall man, onlesse hymself wer eotendecreed by his heauenly father, neither by any kynd of death, nor in any other place thã was appoynted and determined, sayed vnto them: Go ye, and thus say vnto thatsame fore, who verily thinketh himself by his worldly subtylte and wylinesse, hable to doe feates againste the wisdome and worckyng of God: Behold: de it is no workes of mayne that I dooe, nor I may not leaue of before the time prefixed by god: Herode hath no maner power ne medling at all in this busynesse. For lyke as his auctoritie or woorde cannot geue vnto any man the gyft to dooe the lyke of these thynges whiche I dooe: so hath not he any power to lette any man, to goe thorough with that he hath begoonne, till he hath ended it. And why should he lette me, if the thynges be good that I doe? I caste deuils out of men, I put away diseases, and all this I dooe freely, and shal not long doe them. The time is but short, which many people would full fain that it wer longer: but so is it determined by me & my father, that I shall for the health of man continue doyng suche lyke actes, this daye and to morowe, and the third day I make a finall accomplishemente and full ende of al this kynd of my doinges. Wherefore duryng this so little and short tyme I must not ceasse from the offyce appoynted vnto me: but the shorter space of time that I haue to worke in, with so muche the more earnest endeavour must I doe that is by commission deputed vnto me. I therfore must not ge from Herode, but to Jerusalem muste I goe, where it is decreed that I must dye, to the ende the vngodlynesse of that citie maye bee made open to all creatures, where it daunteth it selfe in the name and behalfe of denoute worshippyng and seruyng of God. For Jerusalem is thatsame auncyente sleaer and murderer of the prophetes. Neither is it conuenient that any prophete perisshe by suche death, in any other place then at Jerusalem. And yet in the meane tyme the mercifull Lord, who for his goodnesse was desirous & faine to haue all people saued, because he forsaw an vtter destruccio and ruine to hang ouer the said vncurable citie of Jerusalem, bewaileth thesame, for that by reason of so often tymes setting at naught and despising the goodnesse of god, calling it to better wayes, it had worthyly deserued to haue extreme vengeaunce of god to light vpon it. Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thatsame auncyent murderer of prophetes, and stoner of suche men to death as are sent vnto thee, how many a time and oft haue I assayed to gather thy children together, and to ioyne them vnto my selfe, none otherwise then the hen gathereth in her chickens vnder her winges, that thei may not miscarry. But thy stubbornes hath gon beyond my goodnes: and as though thou haddest euen vowed and beheasted thy selfe to vtter ruine, so dooest thou refuse all thynges whereby thou mightest bee recouered and made whole. Therfore sence thou makest no measure ne ende of thy wickednesse, there hangeth ouer thee a mercyelesse destruccion. For your house shall bee leaft vnto you deserte and waste, in suche sorte as there shall scarcely remayn any marke or token that euer there was any suche citie as this, which now at this day bauneth it selfe to be the head of all holinesse and religion. All your glory shall be transposed from you, and shal go from you vnto the Gentiles. And your own selfes shal geue sentence and iudgement against your selfes. And as for me, in dede ye shall put me to death: but this I playnly affirme vnto you, ye shall not see me, before that ye shall saye: Blessed is he, that cummeth in the name of the Lorde. This shall be your open protestacion, whiche the trueth shall enforce you to vtter: but yet this notwithstandyng, ye shortely returnyng at once to the naturall inclinacion of your forefathers, shall put him to death, whom ye magnified afore with suche high wordes.

For it cannot be that a prophete perisshe any other where saue at Jerusalem.

The. xiiii. Chapter.

The texte.

And it chaunced, that he went into the house of one of the chiefe Pharisees to eate bread on the sabboth day, and they watched him. And behold, there was a certain man before him, which had the dropsie. And Jesus answered, and spake vnto the lawyers and Pharisees, saying: Is it lawfull to heale on the sabboth day? And they held their peace. And he toke him, and healed him, and let him goe: and answered them, saying: whiche of you shall haue an asse, or an oxe fallen into a pitte, and will not straight way pull him out on the Sabboth day? And they could not answere him again to these thynges.

And

AND so it befell afterwarde, that beyng desyred to dyner by a certayne manne that was one of the chyefe among the Pharyseis, he weute to the mannes house, and there toke his repaste with hym. And it was a sabboth daye. And there sate at thesame table also many Pharisseis, who according to their accustomed woont, watched Jesus, yf he shoulde speake or doe any thyng whiche thei might slaunderously reprioue in him. And loe euen ready for them an occassiō of a false accusacion againste hym. For there was there in presence a certayne manne possessed with the dropsie, a disease for the moste parte vncurable by any Physike, talowe coloured, and swollen all his body ouer. But a blessed turne it was for this pierrous creature, that he came in Jesus sight. For vnfortunate is suche a sinner as withdraweth or hydeth himself frō the sight of him, who would faine haue all people to be saued. Nowe Jesus knowyng well enough what thought the pharisseis and lawiers had in their myndes, demaunded of them wher, yer it were a thyng standyng with Gods pleasure to geue health on the sabboth daye vnto a man beyng otherwyse ready to perishe and dye. Whan they held their peace and would make none aunswer, Jesus calleth vnto him the partie whiche had the dropsye, and by touchyng him with his handes he healed the man, and bidde him goe his waies. Immediatly the mannes colour was chaunged, and the swelling of his fleshe abated to the due course again. And although this dede was woonderfull, yet the solemnitie of ỹ sabboth day beyng broken (as they interpreted it) did highly offende the Pharisseis. But Jesus shewyng their religion to be of a peruerse contrary sorte, in that they would be offended in the preseruyng of a mannes life, and in sauing of an asse were not offended, made aunswer to their secrete thoughtes, & said: If an ore or an Asse of any of youres had fallen downe in a diepe pitte on the sabboth daye, whether would the partie tarie vntil the sabboth day were al past, or els makyng no taryaunce at all would he straightwaye euen thesame daye geat out his beaste, that it might not miscarry? If the preseruyng of an ore or an asse doeth weigh so muche with you, that ye thinke not the sabboth daye to bee broken, why is your herte offended, for that I haue on ỹ sabboth day geuen healthe to this man, who was in ieoperdy to haue died out of hand of the disease of the dropsie? In case it bee the bodily worke and labour that is weighed, there is more bodily labour in halyng an ore or an asse oute of a great depe pit, thē in makyng this man whole of his disease. I haue no more but seen him, touched hym, and bidden hym goe his way. If it be the persone that ye esteme, then ought ye more to tender the preseruyng of one sole māne, then of a right great noumbre of oxen or asses. At all these woordes the Pharisseis plaied mum. For their hertes were so corrupt & so peruerse, that whan thei had no aunswer to make against the plain and clere trueth, yet could thei not mollifie thēselues to allowe that they sawe doen of Jesus. That in case thēselues had been hable to haue doen any suche lyke thyng, they would in al the trompettes in a countreye haue blowen abrode their own glory. But because the lord Jesus would that the glory of all his doynges should redoūd to his father, which was god of heauen: he euerywhere discouered the peruerted holyneslle of the pharisseis, who had ouerlōg already mocked and seduced

And behold there was a certaine man before hym which hadde the dropsy.

And they could not aunswer hym again to these thinges.

the plain simple people with their cloked hipocrisie. For they hated for their own glory among men: and therfore they enuied at ꝑ glory of god. And this was a true dropsie of the soule, growing first of a corrupt iudgemēt of the mind, as the dropsie cumeth of the liuer being corrupted or perished. For the said phariseis setting al their glory in such thiges, wherin there was no glorying to be made, were swolle w outforth and puffed vp in haultnes & pride, where al their entrailes within forth wer miserably corrupted and putrified.

The texte. He put forth also a similitude vnto the geastes, whan he marked how they pressed to the highest roumes, and said vnto them: whan thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest roume, leste a more honorable man than thou be bidden of him, and he (that bid him and thee) come, and say to thee: geue this man roume, and thou then begin with shame to take the lowest roume. But rather whan thou arte bidden, goe and sitte in the lowest roume, that whan he that bidde thee cummeth, he may say vnto thee: frende sitte vp higher. Then shalt thou haue worship in the presence of them that sitte at meate with thee. For whosoeuer exalteth himselfe, shalbee brought lowe: and he that humbleth himselfe, shalbee exalted.

The Lorde therefore, who had with onely touchyng healed the man that had the dropsie, was very desyrous to cure these mens diseases also, with the medicine of holsome woordes and doctryne. For whatsoeuer the Phariseis did, they did it for pride and for vainglorious bosting. For they would goe walkyng vp and downe in their phylacteries: they would stand praying in ꝑ open stretes where soondrie waies meete, & much people passe by: thei would haue a trompet to blowe afore thē whan they gaue almes. Whan they fasted thei had a feate to discolour their faces that thei might loke pale: thei would goe huming about to haue glorious salutacions and greetinges in ꝑ stretes: and where they came to diner or supper, they lyked and sought to sit vpper-moste at mens tables. So great was their desyre of moste foolishe vainglorie, and so great was their swellyng in pryde: but within forth there was nothing syncere & void of corruption. But the partie that was diseased with the dropsie, was easily and soone healed, because he acknowlaged his infirmitie, and desired to be made whole. The disease of ꝑ soule cānot possibly be cured if one will not acknowelage it. Jesus therefore mynded to reproue the hault myndes of the other cumpanye of Pharyseis, whom the same head Pharisey had at that tyme not for hospitalitie, but for a vain bosting of hymselfe bidden to that diner, for that thesame Phariseis, whan they were desired to take any repastes in mens houses, they looked & made meanes for to haue the vpermoste seate, thinking themselfes holy felowes if it happened them to haue a place of preeminence at the table, & contrariwise all sad without any mirth if it had cum to their lotte to be placed at the lower end, euen much of a sorte, as we do now in these our dates see the solemne pompes for the moste parte to be of our graunde seniours, and mayster doctours, as often as at any acte or commencemente in any vniuersitie, they come with great solemnitie from the Synagogue to their feast. Within the Synagogue they haue their seates made on high, where they sitte (as it were) loking doune vpon the reste from aboue, more likely and ready soner with their eyes bowe to lastle and roumble their nerte felowe downe from his place, then to let any man haue their roumes. Whan they muste cum in, a bedle cumeth before them, and maketh way for them, repeatyng at euery other woord their honourable title of Mayster doctour, Mayster doctour. They are offended yf any man arise not to do them

And he put forth also a simylytude to the geastes, whan he marked howe they pressed to the highest roumes. &c.

o; a ſupper, call not thy frendes no; thy bretheren, neyther thy kynſmen, no; thy ry;che neygh-

bours: leste they also bidde thee agayne, and a recompence to bee made thee. But whan thou makest a feast, call the poore, the feble, the lame, and the blinde, and thou shalt be happye, for they cannot recompense thee. But thou shalt bee recompensed at the resurrection of the iuste men.

And this parable forsouth afore gopng, concerned the prvnde Pharisees. The Lord added therto another parable, whiche directely concerned the principall head man of the Pharisens, whiche was the maker of this dyner. For the ryche cobbes, whyle they would seme to be men of good hospitalitie, they call not to dyner & supper whom they maye refreshe: but suche persones, of whom they maye be bidden to as good a feaste agayne, or where hence they maye seke for: glory to themselues ward. And in dede suche makyng of feastes is not hospitalitie, but ambicion, or auarice, or els both together in one. For that is to be called liberalitie, which with ready wyll doeth a benefite to any man without any respect, and without hope of any thanke or recompense to returne to hymselfe agayne therby. The tenour of the parable was this here folowyng. If thou be disposed well to bestowe a feast or repaste of thy makyng, or yf thou at any tyme haue a mynde to gyue a dyner or a supper, call thou not thy frendes, whiche haue no nede of thy liberalitie, or suche as haue doen thee some great good turne afore, leste thou maiest seme either to make a recompense for a benefite receyued, or els to seke to haue some benefite by them whome thou doest call, or els to call them for very shame that thou mayest not seme vnthankfull: neyther call thou thy brethren, that is to saye, menne of thyne owne bloud and kinred, or els thy neyghbours whiche dwell about thee, leste thy benefite maye seme to be a thyng dooen for the onely respect of kynred, and not for any good herte and zele to doo a good deede: me call thou not thy riche and welthie neighbours, leste the thanke of the feast that thou hast made, maye perishe and be vtterly loste. For truly it wyll perishe and be loste in dede, if they bidde thee agayne, and a diner either as good as thyne was, or els a kyner and deintier be geuen thee again. For thy benefite beeyng so recompensed or payed for, they shall ough thee no thanke at all. When Jesus had spoken the premisses as well concerning the wedding feast, as also concerning the resurreccion of the iuste, one of the geastes at the table being as it wer half in a dreame, touched with the desire of the celestiall feast whiche Jesus had made mēcion of, said: blessed is that man whiche shal haue the happe to eate bread in the kingdome of god, whiche he spake (as ye would say) geuing halfa watche woord, that fewe there should bee to whose lotte that same felicitie should cum, and as though not euery bodye without exception should be receiued to the feast, but the Jewes onely, or the head mē of the Jewes. But Jesus by meane of a parable whiche he propounded vnto them, taughte them that in dede the Jewes were called in the first place, to the ende they might not complayne or fynde faulte that they were naught set by: but for as muche as they beeyng wedded to the affayres of the worlde, refused to cum when they were called, as meynt that lette moze by goodes whiche should afterward perishe, then by the lyfe euerlastyng: all nations indifferently should be called, to the ende that the noumbre of Christes church and congregacion myght be made complete: the parable was this here folowyng. A certayne oute ryche manne had appoynted to make a sumptuous greate supper. And to this supper had he bidden a righte greate coumpanye. And whan the tyme of supper was euen at the verye poynte of the houre, he sente a seruaunte of his to geue knowelage vnto all the bidden geastes, that the supper tyme was nowe verye nere towarde, and that they should therefore cum with spede. He had bydden theym long afore by the Prophetes, he efftsones geueth theim woorde thereof by John, and by the soonne of manne, cum your wayes (sayeth he) for nowe are all thynges in a readinesse. In this case whereas they myghte at their pleasure haue had full fruicion of the supper long tyme looked for, they begynne euerye one to make theyr excuses together, one by one coulour, and an other by an other. For the fyrst of theym breyng a manne wholly bente to entreacyng of his substaunce, and ettyng more by the gaining of worldly possessions, then of euerlasting blisse, made this answere to the seruaunte beeyng earnestly with hym to haue hym excused. I haue boughte a piece of lande in the fielde here, and I muste nedelesse goe thyther, to see that I haue boughte: I praye thee lette thy maister hold me excused. Then went he to the second. An other sai ed: I haue bought fiue yoke of oxen &c. them, or not. I praye thee cause thy maister to haue me excused. For I would with all my very herte come if I might. Than wente he vnto the thyrde. And he also made an excuse, saiyng: I haue maryed a wyfe, & thou knowest what a busie matter that is, how many cares it bringeth with it at his tayle: therfore though I wer neuer so wel willing, yet I maye not nowe come. Thus whan they had euery one of them made their excuses one by one colouure, and an other by an other: to the ende they myghte bee wurse pynched at the herte roote in time commyng whan they shoulde haue perfite intelligence as well howe great a thyng they had despysed, as also what maner personnes hadde now succeded them vnto the felowship of the blisseful state so refused, he said vnto his seruaunte that was the bidder of the geastes: goe thy waies quickly into all the stretes and lanes of this citie, and whatsoeuer personnes thou shalt mete, impotent, blynde, and lame, bryng them to my feaste. I called the others first in the way of theyr honestie and preferrement, thei haue no cause
Go quickly vnto the stretes. &c. to fynde any faulte. Though they lothe my feaste, yet shall it not therfore bee lost. There be that shal haue the ful pleasure therof, though they set not by þ honour that is offred them. I shall make that they whiche thinke themselfes great estates, shall haue enuy and despite in their very hertes to see themselfes ferre wurse then the blynde, the impotente, the lame, and others the moste abiectes of all creatures. The seruaunte came againe: and all thinges accomplished whiche the good manne of the house had geuen hym in commaundement, he saied vnto him: Maister, I haue brought all that I coulde geat at auenture whatsoeuer they were, euen out of the middes of the stretes and the wayes, and yet shall some piece of thy feaste bee vacaunte, and shal lacke geastes. For thou hast purueied and dyssed an exceadyng plenifull feast, & place, to receiue an innumerable couinpany of geastes. Upon this the Lorde beyng very desirous, that the feaste which was prepared shoulde serue to the commoditie of very many, sayeth vnto the seruaunte: Go thy waies once againe, go thou, euen without the precinct of the citie too, into the waies and hedges Go out vnto the highe waues and hedges. and compell thy to cum in. and gather folkes together from whēce soeuer thou can geat them, beggars and straungiers, be they neuer so vnacquainted. Whom, yf they bee lothe to come, compell them euen by importunitie, to come vnto me, that my house may at last be furnished euen full.

And this I affirme vnto you, that not one of all those menne, who had so muche honour shewed them, as to be firste called, and nowe haue dysdayned and lothed my feaste, not one of them shal taste a bitte of this supper of mine. It will one day peraduenture repent them, whan they shall see the delicates,
For I saye vnto you. &c with the goodly furniture and seruice of the feast, and they shall haue enuy at suche personnes, to whom theyr skornefull lothing of it, hath made roume to sitte in their stedes. But they shall than in vaine desire to enter, forasmuch as whan they might haue so doen, they made their excuses, and would not cum.

fourmeth: leſte after he hath layed the foundacion, and is not hable to perfourme it, all that beholde it begyn to mocke hym, ſaying: this man began to buylde, and was not hable to make an ende. Or what kyng goyng to make battayl againſt an other kyng, ſitteth not down firſt, and calleth in his mynde whether he be hable with reuue thouſand, to mete hym that cõmeth againſt hym with twentie thouſande? Or elſ while the other is yet a great waye of, he ſendeth ambaſſadoures and deſyreth peace. So likewyſe who oeuer he bee of you that forſaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my diſciple.

After that Jeſus had hearde al theſe wordes at the feaſte of the Phariſees, he went furth ſtill on his waye towarde Hieruſalem. And there folowed hym in coumpanie, a mighty great multitude of people. There folowed hym with they feete a great mayny whiche had not been hable to folowe hym in the exaumple of his lyfe. For he went towardes his croſſe, whereunto he muſt be readie whoſoeuer is willyng to be a diſciple of his: Turnyng hymſelfe therfore to them that folowed hym, he ſayed: Not euery one that followeth me with the feete of his body, is my diſciple in verayе dede. Let none ioyne hymſelfe to me as my diſciple, excepte he be readye to ſuffre the lyke, that I dooe nowe make halſe vnto: he muſt vtterly renounce all worldly affeccion, whoſoeuer is diſpoſed to bee a perpetuall diſciple of myne. For yf any perſone come vnto me for ſuche a purpoſe, and dooeth not yet hate his father, his mother, his wyfe, his children, his bretheren, and his ſiſters, yea and moreouer his verayе lyfe too, he cannot bee a diſciple of myne. And he that is lothe or vnwilling to beare his owne croſſe, and ſo to folow me, cannot be my diſciple. Or any maniер wayes, yf one come to me beyng entangled with the worldly affeccions of tychelſe, of promocions, of ſenſuall pleaſures, of parentes, of kynſfolkes, of alyaunce, or clogged with deſyre to lyue ſtyll in this worlde, with feare of death: whanſoeuer any occaſion is layed afore him, he wyll be readie to ſterte backe from his purpoſe and profeſſion that he hath taken vpon hym. Therfore before thou enter the matter, prepare thou a mynde nothyng nyce, ne cope, ne delicate, to endure to the vttermoſte all thynges of hardneſſe and of aduerſitte. Otherwiſe it is more pardonable not to haue entred a matter, then afterward to fal from the thyng that thou haſt begoonne.

There is at leaſt wiſe in this caſe ſo muche prouidence and circumſpeccion to be perfourmed and made good, as men commonly ſhewe and perfourme in affayres muche more lighter then this. For who is there among you all of ſo litle forecaſt and circumſpeccion, that beyng purpoſed in his mynde to buylde a toure, he wyll euen at the fyrſte chop and vnaduiſedly without any conſyderacion ſet vpon the doyng of that he hath in his head? For he dooeth not onely thynke this in his mynde, I wyll haue a toure: but before he caſt any foundacion, he wyll with good layſure at a vacaunt tyme ſitte downe, & caſt his penywoorthes in his mynde, what charges will bee requiſite for the finiſhyng of ſuche a toure. That yf he ſhall fynde his ſubſtaunce to be ſo litle, yͤ he cannot be hable to beare the neceſſarie charges therof, he holdeth his handes, and letteth it alone, leſte that if the foundacion being once layed, he ſhould afterward leaue of, in conſideracion that he is not of habilitie to perfourme it: all folkes whiche paſſyng by the waye ſhould ſee the worke begoonne, and leaſte of in the middes ere it were all finiſhed, would begynne to mocke hym ſaying: This felowe here hath begoonne to make buyldynges, whiche he hath not been hable to byng to a perfection. Therefore yf ſhame bee a thyng of the plain simple people with their cloked hipocrisie. For they hũted for their own glory among men: and therfore they enuied at ỹ glory of god. And this was a true dropsie of the soule, growing first of a corrupt iudgemẽt of the mind, as the dropsie cũmeth of the liuer being corrupted or perished. For the said phariseis setting al their glory in such thinges, wherin there was no glorying to be made, were swollẽ wt outforth and puffed vp in haultnes & pride, where al their entrailes withinforth wer miserably corrupted and putrified.

The texte. He put forth also a similitude vnto the geastes, whan he marked how they prossed to the highest roumes: and said vnto them: whan thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest roume, lest a more honorable man than thou be bidden of him, and he (that bid him and thee) come, and say to thee: geue this man roume, and thou then begin with shame to take the lowest roume. But rather whan thou arte bidden, goe and sitte in the lowest roume, that whan he that bidde thee cummeth, he may say vnto thee: frende sitte vp higher. Then shalt thou haue worship in the presence of them that sitte at meate with thee. For whosoeuer exalteth himselfe, shalbee brought lowe: and he that humbleth himselfe, shalbee exalted.

The Lorde therefore, who had with onely touchyng healed the man that had the dropsie, was very desyrous to cure these mens disease also, with the medicine of holsome woordes and doctryne. For whatsoeuer the Phariseis did, they did it for pride and for vainglorious bosting. For they would goe walkyng vp and downe in their phylacteries: they would stand prayyng in ỹ open stretes where soondrie waies mete, & much people passe by: thei would haue a tromper to blowe afore thẽ whan they gaue almes. Whan they fasted thei had a feate to discolour their faces that thei might loke pale: thei would goe hunting about to haue glorious salutations and greetinges in ỹ stretes: and where they came to diner or supper, they lyked and sought to sit vppermoste at mens tables. So great was their desyre of moste fooliche vainglorie, and so great was their swellyng in pryde: but withinforth there was nothing syncere & void of corrupcion. But the partie that was diseased with the dropsie, was easily and soone healed, because he acknowlaged his infirmitie, and desired to be made whole. The disease of ỹ soule cãnot possibly be cured if one will not acknowelage it. Jesus therefore mynded to reproue the hault myndes of the other cumpanye of Pharyseis, whom thesame head Phariley had at that tyme not for hospitalitie, but for a vain bosting of hymselfe bidden to that diner, for that thesame Phariseis, whan they were desired to take any repastes in mens houses, they looked & made meanes for to haue the vppermoste seate, thinking themselfes ioly felowes if it happened them to haue a place of preeminence at the table, & contrariwise all sad without any mirth if it had cum to their lotte to be placed at the lower end, euen much of a sorte, as we do now in these our daies for the solemne pompes for the moste parte to be of our graunde seniours, and mayster doctours, as often as at any acte or commencemẽte in any vniuersitie, they come with great solemnitie from the Synagogue to their feast. Within the Synagogue they haue their seates made on high, where they sitte (as it were) loking doune vpon the reste from aboue, more likely and ready soner with their elbowe to iustle and toumble their nerte felowe downe from his place, then to let any man haue their roumes. Whan they muste cum in, a bedle cũmeth before them, and maketh way for them, repeatyng at euery other woord their honourable title of Mayster doctour, Mayster doctour. They are offended yf any man arise not to do them honour as they passe by,yf one do not put of his cap,if any presume to sit down before the sayed Maister inceptour doctour is come in,and sette in his place. And with these fonde ceremonies,is the tyme consumed awaye therewhyle, so that there is no tyme to learne any thing at al. For the sayed Maister doctours come not for any suche purpose,as eyther to learne,or to teache:but to hunt for vayne glory emong the people by shewyng themselues in theyr degree. And with a great pompe come they first in,but with a greater pompe do they goe forth agayne. One that knew it not, would saye, that it were some solemne stage playes in playing,or els the corpse of some great ryche cobbe, that were goyng to buryeing. And here eftsones is no small a do for places in what order and how to go. Not one of them,but he thynketh hymself to haue had a great iniurie doen vnto hym,yf he go on the left hande of an other that semeth to be his iuniour or inferiour. Agayne at the sitting downe to the feast,meruaylous strivyng there is for placyng of euery manne in his degree and order. What nedeth many woordes? It is the disease of the disciple all that euer they doe, and an hunteyng for vayneglory it is,whereas all the whyle they would emong the people be reputed and vsed as God almightyes felowes. Jesus therfore couetyng to minister a lesson of good doctrine to them that were sicke of suche a disease,(that is to wete,how that it is not true glory which is sued and sought for,but which thou eschewest as muche as thou mayest,euen whan thou moste deseruest to haue it:) propounded a parable as here foloweth, in suche wise after a ciuile & curteous sorte touching the conscience of euerie one,that neuertheles he vttered ne bewrayed none of them by name. Whan thou shalt be desired (saieth he) or bidden to a weddyng feast,beware ye thou do not in thine own persone present and take the chiefe place to begin the table:leste percase after thou be set,there come in sodaynly some other manne of higher degree and better reputacion than thou arte: and nowe the partie which desyred both thee and him to the feaste,come and byd thee to aryse and to let a better man haue thy roume. And than for the glory which thou soughtest to haue,thou shalt wynne shame, and shalt bee constreyned with read chekes to be content with the lowest place of all. Therfore rather, whan thou shalt be desyred to any worshypfull table, choose and take vnto thy selfe,the neythermoste place of all to sit in,that whan the maker of the feaste shall come,he maye saye vnto thee: Frende go vp to a place of more honour. Than shall thy humilitie turne to thy glory and worship emong the reste of the geastes. Thy humilitie shall they perceyue well enough by that that thou choosest out the lowest roume of all to place thy selfe in: and thy dignitie shall they knowe by the maker of the feast. Euen lykewyse it is in the lyfe of man. The greater mā of dignitie that one is, somuche the more must he humble hymselfe, vntyll he come, who doeth with true and perpetuall glory exalte suche as are of lowe degree to the worldewarde, and the proude and high he casteth downe. And so lykewyse in the kyngdome of God, the inferiour people hath been receyued euen vnto the high degree of Apostolicall dignitie: and the priestes, the Pharisees, the Scribes, and the lawiers haue been reiected. The Gentiles acknowleagyng theyr baseneſſe, haue been lyfted vp to the brotherhood of eternall glory: and the Jewes, who wouldе alone haue reygned at the feaste, nowe eyther haue no place at all, or els haue the laste place.

And thou than with shame begyn to take the lowest roume. But rather whan thou art bidden, goe and sytte in the lowest roume.

For whosoeuer exalteth himself &c.

¶ Than sayed he also to hym that had desyred hym to dyner. Whan thou makest a dyner or a supper, call not thy frendes nor thy brethren, neyther thy kynsmen, nor thy riche neyghbours;

bours: leste they also bidde thee agayne, and a recompence to bee made thee. But whan thou makest a feast, call thy poore, the feble, the lame, and the blinde, and thou shalt be happye, for they cannot recompense thee. But thou shalt bee recompensed at the resurrection of the iuste men.

And this parable for south afore gooyng, concerned the proude Pharisees. The Lorde added therto another parable, whiche directely concerned the principall head man of the Pharisees, whiche was the maker of this dyner. For the tyche cobbes, whyle they would seme to be men of good hospitalitie, they call not to dyner a supper whom they maye refreshe: but suche persones, of whom they maye be bidden to as good a feaste agayne, or where hence they maye seke for glory to themselues ward. And in dede suche makyng of feastes is not hospitalitie, but ambicion, or auarice, or els both together in one. For that is to be called liberalitie, which with ready wyll doeth a benefite to any man without any respect, and without hope of any thanke or recompense to returne to hymselfe agayne therby. The tenour of the parable was this here folowyng. If thou be disposed well to bestowe a feast or repaste of thy makyng, or yf thou at any tyme haue a mynde to gyue a dyner or a supper, call thou not thy frendes, whiche haue no nede of thy liberalitie, or suche as haue doen thee some great good turne afore, leste thou maiest seme either to make a recompense for a benefite receyued, or els to seke to haue some benefite by them whome thou doest call, or els to call them for very shame that thou mayest not seme vnthankfull: neyther call thou thy brethren, that is to saye, menne of thyne owne bloud and kinred, or els thy neighbours whiche dwell about thee, leste thy benefite maye seme to be a thyng dooen for the onely respect of kynred, and not for any good herte and zele to dooe a good dede: ne call thou not thy riche and welthie neighbours, leste the thanke of the feast that thou hast made, maye perishe and be vtterly loste. For truly it wyll perishe and be loste in dede, if they bidde thee agayne, and a diner either as good as thyne was, or els a fyner and deintier be geuen thee again. For thy benefite beeyng so recompensed or payed for, they shall ought thee no thanke at all. But in case thou be mynded well to bestowe a diner or supper, wherby there may come backe agayne to thee, a verye large rewarde not from men, but from God: call thou the poore, the weake, and the feble, the blynde, and the lame. In refreshyng of these, doe thou refreshe God. Thou wilt peraduenture saye: In suche ones shal both my labour and my cost be lost. For they haue nothyng to recompense me agayn, and they be alwaies in nede of another, whan one is paste. Euen in this verye poynte shalte thou bee blissed, that they haue nothyng to geue thee agayne. But they haue an incomparable riche patrone, who will suffre all to bee imputed as doen to hymselfe, whatsoeuer shall be bestowed on them. He wyll for these transitory thynges repaie euerlastyng. I praye thee cause thy maister to haue me excused. For I would with all my very herte come if I might. Than wente he vnto the thyrde. And he also made an excuse, saiyng: I haue maryed a wyfe, & thou knowest what a busshe matter that is, how many cares it bringeth with it at his tayle: therfore though I wer neuer so wel willing, yet I maye not nowe come. Thus whan they had euery one of them made their excuses one by one colloure, and an other by an other: to the ende they myghte bee wurse pynched at the herte roote in time commyng whan they shoulde haue perfite intelligence as well howe great a thyng they had despysed, as also what maner personnes hadde now succeded them vnto the felowship of the blissefull state so refused, he saith vnto his seruaunte that was the bidder of the geastes: goe thy waies quickly into all the stretes and lanes of this citie, and whatsoeuer personnes thou shalt mete, impotent, blynde, and lame, bryng them to my feaste. I called the others first in the way of theyr honestie and preferrement, thei haue no cause to fynde any faulte. Though they lothe my feaste, yet shall it not therfore bee lost. There be that shal haue the ful pleasure therof, though they set not by þ honour that is offred them. I shall make that they whiche thinke themselfes great states, shall haue enuy and despite in their very hertes to see themselfes ferre wurse then the blynde, the impotente, the lame, and others the moste abiectes of all creatures. The seruaunte came againe: and all thinges accomplished whiche the good manne of the house had geuen hym in commaundement, he saied vnto him: Maister, I haue brought all that I coulde geat at aduenture whatsoeuer they were, euen out of the middes of the stretes and the wayes, and yet shall some piece of thy feaste bee vacaunte, and shal lacke geastes. For thou hast purueied and dressed an exceedyng plenteifull feast, & place, to receiue an innumerable couinpany of geastes. Upon this the Lorde beyng very desirous, that the feaste which was prepared shoulde serue to the commoditie of very many, sayeth vnto the seruaunte: Go thy waies once againe, go thou, euen without the precinct of the citie too, into the waies and hedges and gather folkes together from whēce soeuer thou can geat them, beggars and straungiers, be they neuer so vnacquainted. Whom, yf they bee lothe to come, compell them euen by importunitie, to come vnto me, that my house may at last be furnished euen full.

And this I affirme vnto you, that not one of all those menne, who had so muche honour shewed them, as to be firste called, and nowe haue dysdayned and lothed my feaste, not one of them shal taste a bitte of this supper of mine. It will one day peraduenture repent them, whan they shall see the delicates, with the goodly furniture and seruice of the feast, and they shall haue enuy at suche personez, to whom theyr shamefull lothing of it, hath made roume to sitte in their stedes. But they shall than in vaine desire to enter, forasmuch as whan they might haue so doen, they made their excuses, and would not com.

An other said: I haue bought fiue yoke of oxen &c.

So out vnto the highe wayes and hedges, and compell thē to cum in.

The texte. There wente a greate coumpanye with hym, and he turned, and sayd vnto theym. If a manne come to me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife, and children, and brethē, and sisters, yea and his owne lyke also, he cannot be my disciple. And whosoeuer dooeth not beare his crosse and come after me, cannot be my disciple. Whiche of you disposed to buylde a toure, sytteth not downe before, and coumpteth the coste, whether he haue sufficient to perfourme it: leste after he hath layed the foundacion, and is not hable to perfourme it, all that beholde it begyn to mocke hym, saying: this man began to buylde, and was not hable to make an ende. Or what kyng going to make warre agaynst an other kyng, sitteth not downe fyrst, and casteth in his mynde: whether he be hable with xx. thousande, to mete hym that cometh agaynst hym with twentie thousande? Or els while the other is yet a great waye of, he sendeth ambassadoures and desyreth peace. So likewyse who ouer he bee of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple.

After that Jesus had heard al these wordes at the feaste of the Pharisees, he went furth still on his waye towarde Hierusalem. And there folowed hym in coumpanie, a mightie great multitude of people. There folowed hym with they feete a great mayne whiche had not bren hable to folowe hym in the ex-aumple of his lyfe. For he went towardes his crosse, whereunto he must be ready wholoeuer is willyng to be a disciple of his: Turnyng hymselfe therfore to them that folowed hym, he sayed: Not euery one that foloweth me with the feete of his body, is my disciple in verayе dede. Let none ioyne hymselfe to me as my disciple, excepte he be readye to suffre the lyke, that I dooe nowe make halte vnto: he must vtterly renounce all worldly affeccion, whosoeuer is disposed to bee a perpetuall disciple of myne. For yf any persone come vnto me for suche a purpose, and dooeth not yet hate his father, his mother, his wyfe, his children, his brethren, and his sisters, yea and moreouer his veray lyfe too, he cannot bee a disciple of myne. And he that is lothe or vnwilling to beare his owne crosse, and so to folow me, cannot be my disciple. Or any maner waycs, yf one come to me beyng entangled with the worldly affeccions of rychesse, of promocions, of sensuall pleasures, of parentes, of kynsfolkes, of alyaunce, or clogged with delyre to lyue styll in this worlde, with feare of death: whansoeuer any occasion is layed afore hym, he wyll be readie to sterte backe from his purpose and profession that he hath taken vpon hym. Therfore before thou enter the matter, prepare thou a mynde nothyng nyce, ne cope, ne delicate, to endure to the vttermoste all thynges of hardnesse and of aduersitie. Otherwise it is more pardonable not to haue entred a matter, then afterward to fal from the thyng that thou hast begoonne.

There is at leastwise in this case so muche prouidence and circumspeccion to be perfourmed and made good, as men commonly shewe and perfourme in affayres muche more lighter then this. For who is there among you all of so little forecast and circumspeccion, that beyng purposed in his mynde to buylde a toure, he wyll euen at the fyrste chop and vnaduisedly without any consyderacion set vpon the doyng of that he hath in his head? For he dooeth not onely thynke this in his mynde, I wyll haue a toure: but before he cast any foundacion, he wyll with good laysure at a vacaunt tyme sitte downe, & cast his penywoorthes in his mynde, what charges will bee requisite for the finishyng of suche a toure. That yf he shall fynde his substaunce to be so litle, yͤ he cannot be hable to beare the necessarie charges thereof, he holdeth his handes, and letteth it alone, leste that if the foundacion being once layed, he should afterward leaue of, in consideracion that he is not of habilitie to perfourme it: all folkes whiche passyng by the waye should see the worke begoonne, and leafte of in the middes ere it were all finished, would begynne to mocke hym saying: This felowe here hath begoonne to make buildynges, whiche he hath not been hable to bryng to a perfeccion. Therefore yf shame bee a thyng

of so great weight among menne, that none dareth be so bolde as to begynne a buildyng, but he will aske counsayle of his substaunce & habilitie afore hande: howe muche more is it expedient to weigh the strength of your herte before ye profesſe that ye wyll be my followers? from whome yf ye shall once begynne to steppe backe agayne, it shoulde bee a foule shame vnto you before the Aungels of God. It is no matter of nice delicatenesſe to followe me. Neither is it enough to sette a face or a braggue on the matter with high woordes, onles your strēgth be sufficient and hable for the same. And what kyng hath so litle remembraunce or consideracion with himselfe, that in case he entende to furnisshe a voiage of warfare agaynste an other kyng, wyll not ere he make any steryng towardes warre, sitte downe leasurely, and firste weigh and ponder diligently in his minde the puissaunce of his royalme, whether it bee expedient to goe with a power of ten thousande menne, and mete his enemy cumming agaynst him with twentye thousande menne? That in case he perfectly knowe his power to be ouerweake to bicker with him, he wyll, before that the other bryng his armie any thyng nere, sende ambassadours to treacte vpō articles of peace. For truely so to do is better to bee suffered, then to trye the hasarde of battayle with powers and strengthes vnequally matched. For it is more honeste for suche an one, before battayle be ioyned, to make treactie of atonement, then after the receiuing of a great plague to bee glad to take peace, yea and the same vpon condicions more to his dishonour. That yf menne can skyll in suche affaires to make their accoumpte what they are hable to doe before they beginne: howe muche more mete is it the same to dooe in this businesſe, then whiche there is none other more greater or more requiryng a stoute courage?

So likewise whosoeuer be of you that forsaketh not all &c.

Wholsoeuer therfore of you all there bee that followeth me, and hath not with the verray affectiō of the herte renounced al thinges that he hath in his possession, he may not be a disciple of myne. He must bee a lentilmanly disciple of the ryght makyng, or els none at all. For there is nothyng more abiecte or vile then suche an one as beeyng ouercummed with the desires and lustes of the fleashe, hath stepped backe and gon awaye from the profession of euangelicall perfection once taken in hande.

Therefore.

¶ Salte is good, but yf salte hath loste his saltenesſe, what shal be seasoned therewithe? It is neyther good for the lande, nor yet for the dounghill, but men caste it out of the dooores. He that hath eares to heare, let hym heare.

And a disciple of myne ought to bee lyke vnto salte. Salte yf it haue quicke strength, is of good effecte for preseruyng and seasonyng of all meates. That if it ceasse any longer to bee salte, (that same natiue strength banished away, in sorte that the salte selfe haue nede of other salte to make it sauery:) than can it by no meanes be brought to any suche passe, that it wyll be good to serue for any vse or occupation. For neyther can it serue to poudre or season any thyng, ne yet be seasoned and made sauoury of other salte. Other thynges although they be corrupted, yet they serue for some occupation or other. As (for exaūple) wine, after it hath loste the verdure, is turned into vyneager. But salte being a thing made in dede to a great effecte, (albeit to no moe effectes but the same one only, that is to wete, for seasonyng of meates,) yf it bee once weared vnsauerye, than than is it mete for no bodyes vse, insomuche that it is not good to be caste on the dounghill neither, on whiche are all suche other thynges caste, whiche are moste full of corruption. For yf it should so be mingled with the ranke dounge, it would cause barayneſſe: and so ferre is it from seruyng to any vse, that it also hurteth whatsoeuer it toucheth. By theſe woordes did the Lorde Jesus geue halfe a rebuke to the vnaduiſed rathenesse of some, who wouldde nedes appere to bee disciples of Christe, whan he wyght well knewe, that euen theſe, whom he had specially picked out and cholen but a verye fewe out of all the whole numbre, would afterwarde shrynke awaye and fall from hym, at the terrible sighte of the crosse. But to the ende theſe sayinges might be direply enprinted in their hertes, to be better vnderstanded afterwardes, he sayed moreouer: let suche an one heare theſe my sayinges, as hath eares apt to receyue suche thynges. For not the eares of euery body can abyde suche manier talke.

He that hath eares to heare, let hym heare.

The. xv. Chapter.

The. xv. parte.

Than resorted vnto hym all the Publicanes and synners, for to heare hym. And the Pharisees and Scribes murmoured, saying: He receiueth synners and eateth with them. But he put furth this parable vnto them, saying: What man emong you hauing an hundred shepe, if he lose one of them, dooeth he not leaue the foure score and nyntene in the wyldernesse, and goeth after that whiche is lost, vntyll he fynde it? And whan he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders with ioye. And as soone as he commeth home, he calleth togither his louers and neyghbours, saying vnto them: Reioyce with me, for I haue founde my shepe, whiche was lost. I saye vnto you, that lykewyse ioye shall bee in heauen ouer one synner that repenteth, more then ouer foure score and nintene iuſt persones, whiche nede no repentaunce.

When the whole multitude of the people drewe nere vnto Christe, and came thicke about him on euery side, and he neyther putte any one from him, nor despised or sette at naughte any of them: certayne of the Publicanes and certayne notable synners were so boldened with it, that they feared not to approche nere vnto him, whiche kynde of people the Pharisees did much abhorre and accounpte abhominable, because they woulde haueit to appere that themselues were holy menne in dede, whereas the moste vndoubted token of holynesse is, not to contemne ne disdeyne a synner, but by all manier meanes to labour that thesame maye amende, and to reioyce whan he dooeth amende.

Therfore whereas the Pharisees were withinfurth full of disdeyne, enuye, hatred, couetise, and pryde, yet in theyr owne sight and iudgement they semed righteouse: whan they sawe Jesus willyngly to suffre the Publicanes to approche his presence, as ofte as they would, and not the Publicanes onelye, but others also whiche lyued in slaundre and obloquite, for theyr transgressiõs notorioussye knowen to the worlde, (as for exaumple) bawdes, and harlottes, with suche others: they murmured agaynst his mercifull dealyng, and sayed: This manne whiche dooeth profesſe a certayne newe and vncouthe trade of holynesse, yet dooeth nothyng eschewe the coumpanye of naughtie persones, but receyueth euen knowen synners to talke with hym, and dooeth in so muche not flee ne abhorre to haue them come and bee with hym in coumpanye, that he euen eateth also with theim, nothyng remembryng hows

howe that the good men are defoiled by the coumpany and conuersacion of the euill emong them. Than Jesus to the entente he wouldе vttrely wede out of hys disciples hertes this mercyles disdeyne, putte forthe thyee parables of soondrie tenours, but yet cumming all to one poynt and conclusion in the effect of theyr exhortacion: that is to wete, to all possible mercifulnes towardes a sinner reformyng hys naughtye lyfe. For suche an one is not onely not to bee cast of and reiected whan he returneth agayne to better grace, but also by all manner wayes to bee exhorted that he will amende. The firste parable reneth thus: How greatly God tendreth a sinner (sayeth Jesus) and turneth not a waye his face from thesame synner turnyng agayne to grace, and amending: euery man maye conjecture by his owne herte and affeccion. Is there any man of you, whiche hath an hundred shepe of his owne (for in dede euery man dereely loueth any thyng that is his owne, nor would not haue any parte therof perishe or miscarrye.) And what would he do, if it should chaunce that one of the hundred should breake of and straygh from the flocke: would he not with the losse of thatsame one bee so greatly moued, that the nyntie nyne residue leafte in the wielde field, he would carefully go rennyng about to the other that were loste, and would not be in quiet vntill he had founde hym? And what yf he chaunce to fynde agayne the litle selye shepe whiche to fore was loste? Forsooth as a man muche reioycyng, he wyll laye him on his shoulder and putte hym among the residue of the flocke, a gladder man of that one shepe recepued agayne whiche he feared had been loste, then of the safetie of all the rest of his flocke, for whiche he hadde taken no feare of miscaryng. And so great is his gladnesse, that it cannot straigh ne refreyne it selfe, but it must breake out in the presence of others. For so soone as he commeth home, euen as one that had gotten some notable great gaines, he calleth his frendes & neighboures together, saying vnto them: Declare and shewe your selues glad on my behalfe, reioyce ye lyke true frendes at my ioye: (for among frendes it becommeth that all thynges bee in common) because that I haue founde my shepe whiche I had loste. If this bee the affeccion of a good shepeherde towarde his flocke, of what affeccion doe ye thynke God to be towardes mankynde whom he created, who he nourisheth, whom he hath for the glorye of his owne name predestinate to euerlastyng blysse? will he (trowe ye) despise the sinner whom Satan hath seduced and led a contrary waye from the flocke? or els (as he is al mercifull and tendre louyng ouer all thynges whiche hymselfe hath made) will he not rather doe all that maye bee doen to recouer and wynne suche an one into his owne handes and possession agayne, and with great ioye receyue the synner agayne, when he repenteth, for whom he tooke great griefe and thoughte that he was loste? Be ye on my woorde right well assured, that as the sayed shepeherde for the recepuyng of thesame one litle selye shepe maketh muche reioycyng with his frendes and neyghbours: euen so there shall be greater ioye to all the aungels in heauen for one synner repenting and amendyng his naughtye lyfe, then of nyntie and nyne iust menne the which haue no nede of repentaunce.

I saie vnto you, lykewyse ioye shall bee in heauen.

This image or parable did in dede moste directly and properly signifie and represent the Lorde Jesus, who onely is that same shepeherde of goodnesse incomparable, who whan mankynde had fallen and trespaced, dyd reconcile thesame agayne to his father, paying of his owne body that whyche we had deserued, and carrying in his owne boyye all our transgressions. And albeit he

he found neuer a nacion that was not muche burdened and endaungered with synne, yet the Iewes, if they were compared to the other heathen nacions, semed to haue a lykelyhood and a shewe of righteousnesse for that they worshipped one God alone, and for that they obserued and kept a lawe geuen by god. And some there wer emõg the Iewes, who, because they dyd after a more streighter sorte cleue to the outwarde preceptes of the lawe, thought themselues in their owne opinions to nede no repentaunce. But the righteousnesse of these brought lesse loue vnto the tender louyng shepeheard, then did the heathen nacions turnyng from great and manifest synnes, as from idolatries, from adulteries, frõ straunge and vnnatural misusages of the body. And emong the Iewes Paule did more sette forth the mercie of god in that he chaunged from a persecutour, and became an Apostle, then if he had secretely miengled Christe with ỳ lawes and superstitious customes of the Iewishe profession, whiche thyng was at that tyme doen of no small noumbre. As for the parable dooeth generally concerne the apostles and their successours the bishops. For these ought to beare the affeccions of Christ their guyde and captayne towardes his flocke, at leastwyse if they be not hyrelynges but true shepeheardes. For oftentimes it cõmeth in vre, that suche as dee once reclaymed and throughly conuerted from manyfest synnes of great enormitie vnto true godlinesse, doee in the enlarging of godly conuersacion, outrenne and passe those, whiche neuer fell into the lyke haynous enormities. Suche persones will not the euangelical shepeheard despise or disdeyne, but rather seke alwayes possible vntill he shal eftsõs haue brought them home agayne, and restored them to the shepecotes of the churche. The repentaunt synner endeauouryng to walke a newe life, he will take to hym again with great gladnesse, and with a common reioycyng of all the feythfull consteyng to their deceiptfull and false righteousnesse, doe not perceyue nor vnderstande how muche more acceptable mercie is vnto the lorde, then any kynde of sacrifice dooen vnto hym. Suche as are righteous in verye dede, suche as are vnfeigned frendes and fauourers of that good shepeheard, will shewe themselues more gladder for the receiuyng again of the recouerying of one lost shepe, then for many suche as doe put their trust and confidence in their owne colde and naked righteousnesse. For they doe not any ferther charge or burden hym with his old faultes and misdoopynges, whiche God of his mercie hath freely remitted and forgotten: but with muche reioycyng they shewe forth their gladnesse whiche they conceyue for the returnyng of a synner vnto a newe life. He could not haue returned, except the shepeheard laying hym on his shoulders, had brought hym home againe: and therefore the whole compaynye of sayntes rendreth thankes and reioyceth at the goodnesse of God, not enuying thesame benefite vnto another, of the whiche benefite euery one of them haue had experience and proufe in themselues before: estemyng and reputyng it common to them all, whatsoeuer hath chaunced to euerie particular membre, whether it were good or euill. And good reason it is, that the reioycyng and gladnesse of ỳ churche should bee cõmon to them al, seeing ỳ the griefe & sorowe was common to them all. And this was the firste parable whereby our lorde checketh and reproueth the proude and arrogant righteousnesse of the Pharisees, whiche did nothyng but onely hate synners, and eschewe their coumpaynie: whereas it is the duetie of true holinesse to procure and studie for the health and emende-mente of all creatures, and suche as are guiltie and faultie toward God, to call home agayne by tentilnesse to better wayes: and with all possible affeccion of loue and charitie, tendresly to receyue suche as repente and emende their liues. If Christe, who neuer knewe sinne did vse this mercifulnesse toward sinners: how muche more doeth it beseme a man beyng his owne self subiect to vice and synne, to shewe and vse the same mercie towardes his neyghboure

The texte. Either what woman hauyng tenne grotes (if she lose one) doeth not light a candle, and sweepe the house, and seke diligently till she fynde it? And when she hath found it, she calleth her louers and neighbours together, saying: Reioyce with me, for I haue found the grote whiche I had lost. Euerylyke I saye vnto you, shall there be ioye in the presence of the Aungels of God, ouer one synner that repenteth.

Either what woman hauyng tenne grotes, yf she lose one? The secound parable renneth thus. What woman (saith Christe) is there emong you, whiche yf she had tenne grotes, and should lese one of them, would neglecte the losse of one grote, because she had the other nyne safe enough and sure in her custodie? And what than will she do? truely she will light a candle, turne and tosse vp the rushes, serche euery corner of the house, she will remoue al thing out of his place, and shorte tale to make, she will neuer make an ende of seekyng vntyll suche time as she hath found her grote that was lost. That if it chaunce her to fynde it, than is there so muche reioycyng made of the woman for that one grote recepued agayn, that she can not temper or stayth her selfe, but euen emong her frendes and gossops she must declare and tell it out. And her sayed gossops beeyng called together, she will saye vnto them in this wyse: Reioyce ye, and shewe your selues glad for my cause, that I haue found again my grote whiche I had lost. She maketh no boste at all of the other nyne whiche were not lost: she gloryeth of that one grote and no mo, whiche she hath founde and gotte agyne, and thinketh herselfe a richer woman with that same one grote, then with the other nine. If a woman be so affectionately set toward her money that she is muche grieued with the losse of any parte therof, and greatly reioyceth for the fyndyng of the same agayn, be it neuer so litle a portion: how muche more will God bee of the mynde, that no parte shoulde bee loste of men, for the redempng and sauyng of whom he hath willyngly geuen hymselfe to be hanged on the crosse, because he fourmed and made manne after the paterne of his owne lyknesse

The texte. And he sayed: A certayne man had two sonnes, and the younger of them sayed vnto the father. Father geue me the portion of the goodes, that to me belongeth: and he deuided vnto them his substaunce. And not long after, whan the younger sonne had gathered all that he had together, he toke his iourney into a ferre countrey, and there he wasted his goodes with riotteous liuyng. And whan he had spent all, there arose a great derth in all that lande, and he began to lacke and wante, and came to a citezen of that same countreye: and he sent hym to his ferme, to kepe swyne. And he would fayne haue fylled his beaipe with the coddes that the swyne dyd eate: and no man gaue it vnto hym.

Than added he further more the third parable, whiche albeit it generally appertaineth to all synners, arysyng from theyr synnes and trespaces, yet for the rate of the tyme in whiche it was spoken, it dooeth more directly touche the Gentiles called and recepued to the grace of the ghospell, and the Iewes (who semed to themselues alreadie iust) enuying the felicitie of the same Gentiles. The discourse and processe of the parables is this that foloweth. A certaine man (sayeth Christe) had twoo soonnes, of whiche the younger folowyng the instinct and leding of youth and folye, went vnto his father and saied vnto him: father geue me my childes part of your goodes, and I wil after myne owne fachió affay what profite & gaines I can lieue therof. The father being redie ouer him, and leeryng him folow his own bridle and course, deuided his substaunce betwene his two sonnes, and either of them had his own pozcion deliuered him, and free libertie withall, to put it to suche vse as he would himself, but yet not without hope that they would thriue and do good therwith. The elder planted himself not ferre from his fathers house: but the younger within fewe daies solde al his substaunce that he had, and whan he had turned it into ready money, he strayed from his fathers, and went into a ferre countrey. What should he dooe beeyng a young man, beeyng at his owne libertye and mayster of hymselfe, and liuing ferre from his father, in a straunge countreye? he vtterly diuozceth and disseuereth hymself from god his most tendell father, who maketh himself a straungier and a pilgrime of this worlde. This disseuerynge and sundering is not of place, but of affeccion & herte. Euill tales doeeth corrupt and marre good maners. The Jewes had receiued a lawe by the instruccion and guydyng whereof, they did knowe what was to bee folowed, and what to bee eschewed: and the Gentiles also had their giftes, as quicknesse of witte, the knowlage and vnderstanding of the thinges created, and made of goddes handy woozke, by the whiche they might haue knowen the maker (as in very dede a knowlage of him they had.) yea and they wrote and setfozth bokes very absolute and perfite, of the manier and fourme how to liue wel: but not hauing in their mind that they ought to referre & attribute these very same tyrelesse vnto God as the autour of them, whiche he did tenderly geue, not to any suche ende oz purpose, that they should folishely abuse them, but that with thesame they should wurchip and honour their most beneficiall father, and by this wurchippyng, prouoke him to a ferther lyberalitie to geue them more. But how ferre had they strayed and gone wanderyng awaye from god, in that they did wurchip wood, stones, dogges, oxe, apes, serpētes, oynions and lekes, as yf these thynges had been Goddes? And how ferre were they gon frō god in that they fell into suche filthines, as the very perceiuing and reason of nature hath euermore remoued and kepte the bruite and saluage beastes from? Unhappy is that libertie, whiche the fathers prefence dooeth not goueme and stay. Foz what chaunce at length befell ỹ young man now se: at his owne free libertie out of his fathers tuicion: he spēte and wastefully consumed among straungiers all the substaunce, not of his owne, (foz nothing it was that he had of his owne) but of his fathers. And he spent it out rioteously at dyce, on harlottes, and in feastyng and banquettyng. Foz plaine it is, whatsoeuer is spent about the inozdinate lustes of ỹ body without necessitie. Verily the saied inozdinate lustes and desires do corrupte and marre euen the right precious giftes of nature. And whā he had wasted all his substaunce, folowyng in all behalfes his owne sensuall mynde & pleasure: there arose a great famine in the said countrey where the yōg mā kept himself as a straūgier and pylgrime. For this worlde hath nothyng in it that may fully satisfie the soule of man, but onely that whiche is the chiefest and moste best thing of all, whiche thyng is no where els but only in the fathers house. Well what should the young man do beyng a straungier among suche as he knewe not, beyng naked without clothyng, and beeing in the daungyer of death throughe great houngre: wheras before it was grieuous vnto hym to obey the commaundemente of his moste gentle father, he was now of force constreyned to bee as a bonde seruaunte to a forayne & vncurteous citezen of a straunge toune. Whan men refuse to receiue the swete yoke of the Lorde, than are they compelled to beare the moste hard and heauye yoke of Satan. Wilt thou heare how miserable a bynde of bondage it is to serue the desires of the worlde? The citezen that was his maister sent hym to his mainour in þ countrey, there to kepe and fede his hogges. Frō how great dignitie into how great reprochefulnesse was the miserable young man brought throughe hys owne folye? Of a ryche inheritour of an exceadyng ryche house, he was nowe made a bonde manand a swyneheard: and yet not withstanding dyd not that same his cruell maister so muche as geue hym meate to eate. What needeth many wordes? so greate was the famine and houngre of the trueth & grace of god (whiche trueth onely and none but it is hable to fede and satisfy þ soul of man) that he desyred to fill his bealye he cared not wherewithal, no not yf it had been with the very huskes & coddes, wherewith the hogges wer fedde: and yet was there no man whiche would geue him the same, in so muche that he was in worse case then the very swine, to whome he rather was a bonde seruaunte, then a rewler or a maister ouer them. The verye gyftes of nature wer now defaced in him, and had clene forsaken the young man: and the freedome of his owne will (as poore as it was) yet lost and gon it was: and yet the stomake and appetite of his soule beyng extremely corrupt, was eagre to haue suin meate to appeace his houngre. Euery payne & boyd pleasure of þ worlde which dooeth but for a shorte space pacifie, neither satisfyyng þ soule, nor makyng it fatte, be as huskes and coddes that the swyne feede of: with these are the yl spirites delited: and suche as are their swyne seruauntes, they doe rather rolle and traine with those baites then fill them. And yet haue they not alwaies plentie or aboundaunce of these readye at hand neyther at all in case they haue, yet is it marred and distrealised with muche galle of griefes and sorowes.

And cam to a citezen of that same countrey.

The texte. Than he came to himself, and said: how many hyred seruauntes at my fathers haue bread enough, and I perishe with houngre? I will arise, and go to my father, and I will saye vnto him: father I haue sinned against heauen, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy sonne, make me as one of thy hired seruauntes.

Well than he was now come to the poynte of extreme calamitye and dystresse. But happy is that distresse whiche constrayneth a man to amende his ill liuyng. For the first degree and steppe toward saluacion is this: to call to remembraunce from whence a man is fallen, and to acknowelage howe ferre he hath swerued and growen out of kynde. And this was the fathers owne drawyng vnto him. For he had gon away and leaft his father: but the father is euerywhere present. In tymes past he had been a young man past himselfe, and out of his right mynd, he was a mā distraughte with deceytefull snares of thys worlde, fleeyng all suche thynges as were onely to bee desyred, and desiring those thinges whiche only were to bee eschewed and auoyded. But the matter is than in good state whan the symer and myslooer throughe the secrete inspiracion of his moste gentle father, cūmeth to his herte agayn. The young man therefore breyng at length cum well to himselfe agayne, spake to hymself

Than he came to himself.

And he said

himſelfe in this maner: from what degree to what condicion and state am I come wretched creature that I am? Out of mine owne countrey into exile & banishement: out of a rich & welthy house, into a countrey of famine: from libertie, into seruitude: from a moste louyng father, to a moste cruell Maister: from the dignitie of beeyng a soonne in my fathers howse, to the most vilest condicion of bondage that may bee, and from the felowshyp of my brethren and of the other seruauntes, to lyuyng among swyne. How many hyred seruauntes are there in my fathers house, whiche through the bountie of my father, haue plentiful stooze of breade at will as much as they will eate: and I beyng the soonne of suche a good householder, dye here for hungre. Many of the Iewes are hirelinges whiche do after a sorte obserue the cõmãdemẽtes of the law, not of any godly affeccion, but eyther of a seruile feare, ojels for the reward of thynges tempozal: and yet a matter of lõwhat it is, to lyue as a couenaunt seruaunt with so ryche and so bounteous an houlholder, and not to be disseuered oz put asunder from so foztunate and happy a house. For one shall of an hired seruaunt be made as his soonne, if he haue thaffeccion that a soonne ought to haue. And a godly kinde of emule it is, which prouoketh the young manne to the hope of forgeuenesse. For after that he had with himselfe bewayled his estate of extreme myserye, wherein he than laye altogether walowyng, he begoonne somewhat to lift and set hymselfe vpright, and to take some herte vnto him, saiyng: I will arise, and I will go vnto my father. And yet alas (sayeth he to himself) how dareſt thou be so bold-hast thou any thyng whereby to make thyne excuse oz pourgacion vnto hym: thou foudeste hym euermoze a moste tendze louyng father, to leat thee haue all thyne owne will: thou diddest eagrely require thy childes part of his goodes, he gaue it thee without once saiyng nay vnto thee: and of thyne owne mocion & dooyng it was, that thou leaftest thy father beeyng to thee bothe louyng and fauourable: thou hast shamefully wasted thy fathers substaunce, not geuen thee for any suche purpose: Thou canst impute this thy calamitie to none other persone but vnto thyne owne selfe. To stand in defense of this my dede should litle helpe oz preuail, this is my only hope: forasmuch as I know my father to bee a right father in very dede, that is to saie, of his owne nature a man mercyfull and easye to be entreated: it maye so bee, that some part of his old loue & charitie remaineth still in his hert, though I haue vtterly cast of al ỹ whole nature and duetie of a true soonne. I wil not goe about to make my fault and trespace lyght, noz I will not denye it. Plain and simple confession of all the matter shall moze weigh with him, and a myndeinvery true dede misslyking it selfe for his naughtinesse: then the best excuse oz pourgacion ỹ may be made with studie. The moze verily that I shall hate my selfe, so muche the moze easily shal I stirre vp and kendle his loue toward me again: and last of all in this my extreme desperaciõ, to whom should I rather committe my self then vnto myne own father-he only & none but he is able to restoze the trespacer that hath had suche a foulle fall: yea and also if there be any in the woꝛld that will bee willyng to do suche a good dede, it is he that wil be willing. I will not tary till he shall knowe my fault, till he shalbe aduertised and enfourmed of my wzetched state and woefull distresse by other men then my selfe, who peradueneure will of their instigacion rather incense and prouoke hym to punishe this my wickednesse, then to pardon me. The readiest way to appeare

And am no more worthy to be called thy sonne. the plain case vnto him euen as it stādeth. Leat him take suche waies & ordre therin as shall please him. For he is my father, and I am his sonne: & whatsoeuer I haue faulted, I haue faulted against him alone. And therfore I will say vnto hym: father I haue faulted greatly before thaungels of god and before thee, neither do I iudge my selfe woorthy from henceforth any more to be called by the name of thy sōne, I shal thinke it enough if thou takyng pitye and cōpassion on me, shalt leat me be in like place and fauour with thee, as euery one of thy common hyred seruauntes be. Leat me no more but bee as an hanger on in any one corner of thy household: there can bee no fitter wordes framed to stirre vp and to enkindle my moste singuler good fathers mercy & compassion towardes me. How or muche the plainlyer he confesseth his fault, (whiche faulte coulde neyther be hidde, nor yet bee excused) the more that he dooeth mislike hymself, the more that he declareth hiself to haue no hope ne trust remainyng or leafte vnto hym, but onely in his fathers grace and mercie: so muche the more shal he drawe his fathers mynde to dooe euen as he would haue him to doe. And this tenour and fourme of speakyng vnto his father, no art of rhethorike had put in the young mannes mynde: but his owne conscience beeyng grieued and displeased with it selfe, and yet not vtterly conceyuyng anexttreme yll opinio (that is to say) not despairyng of his fathers goodnesse.

The xxvi. And he arose, & came to his father. But whan he was yet a great way of, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ranne and fell on his necke, and kissed him. And the sonne said vnto him: father I haue sinned against heauen, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy sonne. But the father said to his seruauntes: bryng forth the best garmente & put it on him, & put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feete. And bryng hither the farre calfe, and kyll it, and leat us eate and be merye: for this my sonne was dead, and is alyue again: he was lost, and is founde. And they began to be merye.

This hope therefore and truste conceyued, the young man ariseth, and to arise (as I saied before) is the first step and degree towardes saluation. Backe goeth he therefore home against al the way that he had cum, weping & sighyng all the way, wheras he had to fore departed from his father as perte & fierce and as rashe and wilful as could be. Thus hast thou a plain paterne & exaūple declared vnto thee, of a man returnyng from extreme naughtinesse: nowe beholden paterne of the gracious mercifulnesse of god. The young man was not yet full come to his fathers house, whan his father espyed him cummyng

Father I haue sinned against heauen, &c. angrye, this sight turned his angre into pitie and cōpassion. He reneth forth to mete the young man, as the same was cummyng towardes hym, and not lookyng to bee praised of his sonne, but beyng ouercūmed with natural loue, caught his sonne about the necke & kissed him. And albeit these thinges were ꝑ sufficient tokens of a mynde ready of it self to forgeue: yet the yōg mā beyng angrye angrie with himselfe, sayed: father I haue doen amisse and that greatly, bothe before the Aungels of God and before thee, and yet haue I been so bolde as to aucnture to come into thy sight. whereas I am vnworthie any more to be called thy sonne, for asmuche as all the bandes of naturall loue and duetie on my behalfe haue been broken. Here in this man by the only instincte and moeion of nature beyng thus affected toward his sonne, vnderstande thou the goodnesse of God, who is muche more gracious and mercifull towardes a man that hath been a synner, if he truely and vnfeignedly repente and mislike himselfe, then any father can possibly bee towardes any sonne, though he neuer so tenderly loue thesame. His sonne had not yet spoken all that he had conceyued and reorded in his mynde before, by reason that wepyng and sobbing did breake his tale. But his teares declared and spake more then his wordes could haue doen. And what doeth his father there whyle, trowe ye? dooeth he speake any thoundreyng woordes of cruelties doeth he threaten to beate hym? dooeth he threaten to cast hym of, and neuer to take hym any more for his sonne? doeth he cast hym in the teeth with his bounteous goodnesse shewed vnto hym? dooeth he laye to hym his goyng awaye? dooeth he burden hym with his gluttonie, or other abhominable poyntes of lyuyng? he remembreth none of all this geare, he doeth so greatly reioyce that he hath got his sonne agayne. The sonne thought hymselfe vnworthie the title or name of his sonne: yet the father restoreth hym to his old state and degree agayn. The sonne doeth vttrely condemne hymselfe: & the father doeth absolue and quitte hym. The sonne did cast himselfe downe to bee a seruaunte: the father setteth hym perfectly agayn in his olde state and dignitie. For the father turneyng hymselfe to his seruauntes, sayed: bryng ye foorth quickely his former robe and apparell that he was woont to weare, and put it on hym, and sette also a ryng on his fynger, and put on a payre of shoores on his fete. And this doen, fette ye also out of my pastures thatsame beste and fattest calfe that is there, and kyll it. Let vs prepare a feast, and let vs reioyce, for that this my sonne was once dead, and is now come to lyfe: and for that he was once perished and vttrely lost, and is now found agayne. So great a matter it is that a true penitent herte maye dooe with God. There is no punishement minystred vnto hym: onely to be of a penitente and contrite herte, sufferd his moste louyng father. He whiche by his yll demeanour had made himselfe vnworthy to come in his fathers sight or presence, thesame did the father espie and cast a mercifull eye vpon, cummyng towardes hym a great waye of. He that hath deserued for euer to be thrust out of his fathers house, whiche beyng an vnthankefull persone he had tofore wilfully and vnhonestly forsake: to him returnyng and cuming home agayne, the father in his own persone came forth of the doores, & mette hym, for he hath none in all his whole house more mercifull then he hymselfe is. Hym that had cast hymself into the bondeseruice of abhominable maisters, that is to wete, the filthie pleasures of the bodye: hym did his father voucheſafe to embrace in his armes. To hym that had deserued to be scourged with many a sore stripe, is geuen a kysse, for a token of perfeicte loue and attonement. Happie is that synner, whom the Lord voucheſaleth to embrace and kysse. Because he confessed his offences, and refused the name of a sonne, for that in his conscience he knewe himselfe faultie, there was brought foorth and restored vnto hym all the tokens of his old dignitie. He had losse all his apparell that was mete for suche a mannes sonne to weare: but there was brought vnto hym, the principall best robe and vesture of his former innocēcie whiche he had lost. He had lost all the worthynesse and dignitie of a soonne of the house, by his owne wilfull seruitude: and yet is the kyng deliuered him a gayn. And because he should lacke nothyng that might serue for the decking and trymmyng of hym to the vttermoste, he hath shoes put on his feete. The young man hymselfe durst not hope to haue any suche thyng: and how muche the lesse he hopeth or looketh for it, so muche the sooner dooeth he obteyne and geat it. And to thentente that none in the house should the lesse esteme hym or set by hym for his lyght and homely pranke of youth, his father as soone as þ calfe was killed, moueth and prouoketh al his whole householde to reioyce altogether, and allegeth good causes vnto them why they should be glad. Howsoeuer he hath behaued hymselfe (sayeth he) my sonne he was, he hath been dead, and now is he called to life agayne. For synne is the death of the soule. And he renneth towarde death, which leaueth and forsaketh the autour of life. He leaueth and forsaketh the autour of lyfe, whosoeuer is in loue with the thynges of this worlde, for the worldly pleasures are ferre wyde from god almightes schoolyng. And suche an one is reuiued agayne, as dooeth repente and resourme his synnefull lyfe. He was lost without any hope euer to bee recouered agayne as concernyng hymselfe: howbeit he was found and gotten agayn. To departe away frō the fathers house, is to perishe: for out of the same house there is no health. Neither is there any waye to returne, excepte his father selfe putte it into his sonnes mynde beeyng now brought to extremities. That the father putteth the remembraunce of hymselfe in the sonnes mynde, is of his owne beneficiall goodnesse towardes the sonne: but in that the sonne dooeth not neglecte it whan it is so putte vnto him, this is imputed to hym, as a thyng meritorious: and the verayе confessyng of the fault, is receyued and accounpted for satisfaccion. He was loste through his owne folye: And was founde agayne by his fathers loue. And because he repented and emended euen from the botome of the herte, for asmuche as he did vtterly mysliꝑke hymselfe: his fathers mercifulnesse did not onely restore hym to his old dignitie but made also a feaste, that he might commende and setteforth his sonne to the hertie loue of all that were belongyng vnto hym.

The tcrte. The elder brother was in the fielde, and whan he came and drewe nighe to the house he heard instrelsie and daunceyng, and called one of his seruaunters, and asked what those thynges ment. And he sayed vnto hym: thy brother is come, and thy father hath killed the fatte calfe, because he hath receyued hym safe and sounde. And he was angrye, and would not goe in. Than came his father out and entreated hym. He answered and sayed to his father: loe these many yeares haue I dooen thee seruice, neither brake at any tyme thy commaundement, and yet gauest thou me neuer a kidde to make merye with my frendes: but as soone as this thy sonne was come (which hath deuoured al thy goodes with harlottes) thou hast for his pleasure killed the fatte calfe. And he sayed vnto hym: sonne thou arte euer with me, and all that I haue is thyne: It was mete that we should make merie and bee glad: for this thy brother was dead, and is alyue agayn, and was lost, and is found.

And suche maner an one as the father here, beeyng expressed by the similitude of a parable, shewed hymselfe towarde his sonne: euen suche ones ought curates and bishops to shewe themselues towardes the penitent synner. But the proude Pharisey (who fauouryng their owne faultes, dooe nothyng but shewe moste cruell tyrannie vpon other mennes faultes) are ferre wyde frō this exaumple. And beholde whyle al the wholle house of the father, that is to saye,

the wholle congregacion of deuout and godly persones, was altogether merie and full of all reioycyng, onely the brother beeyng well resembled to the Pharisees, doeth enuie and grutche at it. For whyle these thynges were in doyng, the elder sonne was not at home, but was buisily occupied in the fielde of Moyses lawe, labouryng till he sweate agayne with carryyng the burdens of the commaundementes, and moste peinefullye wadyng and grougleyng to beare the heauye wooркes of the lawe, whereas the younger brother dyddc in the meane tyme, receyue and take the moste tenpyll yoke of his father.

The elder sonne was in the field.

And whan the sated elder sonne drewe nere vnto his fathers house, he heard the straunge noyse of them that songe and daunced for ioye. For sticklyng wholy to the vnlauoury letter of the lawe, he did not knowe howe great ioye it is that the spirite of the ghospell hath. Whyle the Iewes neglecteth all the premisses dooyng nothyng but digge and beare burdens in the fielde of the lawe: in the meane tyme is the people of the Gentiles with great ioye receyued and taken into the house of the father, who nothyng els desireth but the saluacion of his. Than the folower of the olde lawe meruaylyng muche at the straungenesse of this newe matter, and woondreyng what should bee the cause of suche vnwoont mirth, would not vouchesalue to entre in where he might bee partaker of the common gladnesse emong all the rest, whiche thyng his father dyd earnestelie wishe. For the Gentiles were not so receyued in, that the Israelites should bee excluded and shutte out. But euen yet styll they stande without the dooyres, fumpyng and freating for that the churche reioyceth for the Gentiles receiued to the saluacion of the ghospell.

The elder sonne therfore called out one of his fathers seruauntes, and demaunded of hym what newe ioye and gladnesse all thissame was. He made answer, your brother is come: whome, whan your father had gotten agayne, he was beraye glad, and kylled thatsame principall best calfe which he had so lōg fatted, because he had him safe and sound again, whom he thought to had been vtterly loste for euer. Here beholde a Iudaicall herte a stomake: which whereas it ought to haue reioyced for the receyuing of his brother, which ought to haue prayfed the mercifulnesse of his father: yet had rather to enuie his brother, and to take indignacion agaynst his father. He taried still therfore without the dooyres, murmouryng and full of chafyng. And whan his moste louyng father had perceyued hym, who desyred the ioye to bee in common to all that were of his house: he went vnto hym and begon courteously to prayse hym, that casting all enuie and grutche out of his stomake, he would come in and make one at the feast emong all the reste, and would bee partaker of his fathers ioye.

And called one of the seruauntes, and demaunded what these thynges ment.

Yet would not the elder sonne any thyng bough or relente with this his fathers courteous entreatyng, but proudely quereled and reasoned the mattier with his father, and vnnaturally accuseth his brother. Beholde (sayeth he) so many yeres am I as a bondeseruaunte to you within your house, nor neuer brake or transgressed any commaundement of yours, and yet this my godly obedience hath neuer been regarded. For ye neuer gaue me so muche as a young kidde wher with I might make merie emong my frendes. But now that thissame sonne of yours, who hath wasted and spent your substaunce on whoores and harlottes, is come home again: ye haue killed for hym thatsame your principall best and fattest calfe.

Lo, these many yeres haue I done ther seruice &c.

Doest thou not, Theophilus, thinke thy selfe to see this elder sonne to entre in fumyng and chafyng, and thus murmouring against his father, whan thou readest of the Pharisees backebityng Christe because he did eate with Publicanes and synners: whan thou readest of the Iewes repinyng agaynste the Grekes for that the same Grekes were admitted to the ministerie and office of Apostles: whan thou readest the same Iewes scoldyng and raylyng without ende, that the gentyles leauyng theyr ydolatry, without the burden of the law, by fayth only should bee admitted to the grace of the gholpell, and thoulde bee baptysed, and so conformed with the holy ghoste: whan thou readest of them hauing enuie, that they abstenyng from the feast, the congregacion & churche of the Gentiles with an vnspeakeable ioye of the spirite, dooeth eate thatsame specially goodly calfe, whom the father commaunded to be slayne for the redepcion of the whole worlde: And yet this man also beyng a murmourer, as he is, the gracious goodnesse of his moste good father goeth aboute to appeace.

Sonne (saieth he) thou shalt fare neuer a whit the worse for that, though I vse tentilnesse and mercie towardes thy brother. For thou art continually with me, and all that is myne is thyne. For continuall felicitie neuer interrupted or broken of, hath not so muche pleasure or delectacion in it. But lyke as a disease or sickenesse afore goyng dooeth commende health vnto vs, and make it seme the sweter vnto vs after we bee restored to it agayne: euen so the misfortune which I haue had afore for my sonne, maketh our mirth now the more, for that he is gotten agayne.

It was meet that we should make merry &c.

And thou oughtest to reioyse in thy brothers behalfe, and not to be awaye from the mirth of this feaste, for because thilsame thy brother was once dead, & is returned to lyfe againe, he was once lofte, and is now founde againe. Therefore dooe not thou thynke that he is returned home to thee thesame man that he was: but thynke hym of an vnthrifte to bee newe borne an honeste and well disposed manne. Thou must not remembre what he hath been: but bee glad that he is nowe become suche an one, as we wishe and desire to haue him.

With these three parables the Lorde dyd exhorte all his disciples to mercie and tentilnesse in receiuing of synners. For the glorie of God is neuer more shewed or better sette forth, then whan he whiche was erst notoriously ciuil, is sodaynly by the grace of God made a newe manne: of an ydolatre, made the seruaunt of Jesus Christe: of a rauiner, and extorcioner, made a defendour and helper of the poore: of an vnchaste liuer, made chaste: of an ambicious persone, brought to humilitie: of a reuenger, chaunged into a beater and long sufferer. Furthermore the younger sonne found his fathers mynde so muche the more redier to forgeue hym, for that the Gentiles whiche did not knowe God, faulted agaynst hym more through ignorannce, then of any stubberne or indurate pretensed malice. For ignorannce and lacke of thynkyng and casting afore what wil come after, is alwayes for the moste parte ioyned and coupled with youth. And therfore so muche the more willingly we dooe forgeue youth, and beate the more with this age whan it dooeth offende. But the Iewe, whiche to hymselfe semeth iust, and standeth muche in his owne conceypte for fulfillyng of the lawe, dooeth twespace more grieuously with enuying against his brother, then the other had synned by swerupng and strayghyng out of the right waye.

The. xvi. Chapter.

¶ And he sayed also vnto his disciples. There was also a certayne ryche man which had a stewarde, and the same was accused vnto hym, that he had wasted his gooddes. And he called hym, and sayed vnto hym: how is it, that I heare this of thee? Geue accomptes of thy stewardshyp. For thou maiest bee no longer stewarde. The stewarde sayed within hymselfe: what shall I doo: For my maister taketh awaye from me the stewardshyp: I cannot digge, and to begge I am ashamed. I wote what to doo, that when I am put out of the stewardeshyp, then maie receiue me into theyr houses. So what he had called all his maysters debtours together, he sayed vnto the first: how muche owest thou vnto my maister? And he sayed, an hun-dreth tunnes of oyle. And he sayed vnto hym: take thy bylle, and syt te downe quickely, and wryte fyftie. Then sayed he to another, how muche owest thou? And he sayed, an hundreth quarters of wheate. He sayed vnto hym, take thy bylle and wryte foure score. And the Lorde commended the vniust steward, because he had doen wysely. For the children of this worlde are in theyr nacion, wyser then the children of lyght. And I saye vnto you: make your frendes of the vnrighteous Mammon, that when ye shall haue nede, they maye receyue you into euer-lastyng habitacions.

The text.

And all thyllame that hath hytherto been sayed, did moste specially, and moste directely touche the Pharisees, ta-kyng muche indignacion, that the Lorde Jesus, as one that remembred not his owne highe dignitie, dyd receyue Publicanes and knowen synners to the familiar cõuer-sacion of lyuing with him in coumpanye. But anon after, he returning to his disciples, aduised and exhorted theim to a more larger fauourableneselle, that they should not onely not murmour agaynst the goodnesse of God: but also they should by all meanes and wayes possible, folowe the same goodnesse of God on theyr owne behalfes: earnestly applying themselues to doo theyr neyghbour good by euery occasion: releuyng the same with succoure of thynges necessarie for the body: easyng theyr hertes with wordes of coumfort: exhortyng them to goodnesse: teachyng them what they ought to doo: admonishyng them when they dyd amisse: and forgeuyng theim when they trespased agaynst theim. And where he would teache vs that our tender goodnesse in thus dooyng shall not perishe to vs warde, but that contrariwyse, it is layed vp in store for vs agaynst the lyfe to come, whatsoeuer thyng is here bestowed on our neyghbour: he propounded forth this sentence by a parable of suche sorte as followeth. A certayn great ryche man there was, who had committed the bestowyng and housebandyng of all his goodes and thynges vnto a steward of his. This steward was complayned on to his Lorde, that beeyng more prodigall then reason was, he wasted and consumed his gooddes awaye. The Lord therefore callyng for his steward, sayed vnto hym: why doe I heare this bruite a fame of thee? Come on, make thyne audyte and accoumpt of thy stewardshyp: For I am not mynded ne wyllyng, that thou shalt any longer haue the ordre-yng or disposicion of any more gooddes of myne. But the stewarde as soone as he vnderstoode that it was lyke within a litell shorte tyme to come to passe, that he should be put out of his office of stewarde, did in ỹ same litell shorte time subtilly and craftily prouyde for hymselfe. Some men haue rychelle, some men haue learnyng, others haue experience of the worlde, and so one man hath one

qualitie, and another man another. And what thyng euery persone hath wherby he maye be hable to do his nepghbour good, it is the substaunce of our riche Lorde and Master: whiche substaunce it is our office vountifully to bestowe on our neighbour. For no mortall man is hymselfe the lorde of suche qualittes and gifres as he hath, but a stewarde and a dispensour onely. This office of dispensyng is soone taken awaye. For all the life here in this worlde is but shorte, and after this lyfe there is no longer power ne libertie to do good. And a plain waster is that manne of the lordes substaunce, whosoeuer bestoweth after his owne affection that that he hath, and doeth not with parte therof relieue his nepghbour. The stewarde therefore beyng sure within a litle tyme to be remoued from his stewardeshyp: consulteth with his owne minde, and aduiseth himselfe, saying: what shall I now best do, keeping that my lorde and Mayster taketh awaye from me the power and office any longer to haue the dispensyng of his gooddes? And wherein to lyue I haue not. For I gathered nothyng together for myne owne behoufe whyle I might haue doen. There is nothyng lefte nowe for me to do, but either to digge in the fielde for hire wages from daye to daye, or els to go about euery where on begging. But to digge and delue I lacke strength, and to begge I am ashamed. But (as happe is) I haue euen now fordayly deuised in my brayne, how to make a holy prouision for my selfe. I will procure and geat my selfe some frendes with my maisters gooddes. And the saued frendes bearyng wel in mynde my beneficiall goodnesse towardes them, wil receiue me into theyr houses, whan I am put out of myne office of stewardshyp. Hereupon he calleth together all his maisters debtours, one by one, and saeyth vnto the first: how muche arte thou behinde with my mayster endebted vnto him? the partie aunswered: An hundred bates of oyle, (and a bate as some wryters do accoumpte, was a kynde of measure emong the Hebrewes, conteynyng seuen gallons of liquour, or theraboute.) Than (quod the stewarde) haue here, take thyne obligacion, and sitting down quickly, wryte thou fifte in stede of an hundred. My mayster is ryche enoughe, I wyll haue thee saue the one moytie clere to thyne owne auauntage by my good helpe. This doen, he saued to the secounde: and howe much oughest thou? who aunswered: an hundred quarters of wheate. Than (quod the stewarde): take the bille of thy hande, and wryte foure score. Is for twentie quarters, whan it is abated, my mayster will neuer perceyue: and to thee beyng a poore man, twentie quarters saued will do good seruice at stede. And after the same sorte plated he with the other debtours also. In case this fraude had been espyed or knowen to the forsayd ryche man: his steward had neuer escaped vnpunished for it: But yet the lord Iesus for an exaumple of beneficial liberalitie, praised vnto his disciples, that deuise of the said stewarde, though guylefull, yet wyse and politike: and exhorted al his to the folowyng of hym: geuing a sharpe checke to our sluggishnesse, in that, that men seruyng this world, are more prouident and forecastyng, and also more diligent and industrious in prouydyng for theyr bodily sustenaunce and liuyng, then suche persones (who hauyng clerely renounced the worlde, do ensue thynges eternall) are in making prouision for themselues towardes the euerlasting life in heauen. And a foule shame it is for vs that they in theyr kynde are so wyse and so full of good prouision, all the businesse beyng onely for lighte trifyng matters, and thynges that shall anon after come to nothyng: whan we are slacke

by dooyng good turnes and pleasures to our neighbour, to purchace a geat sure stayes of the lyfe immortal: seeyng that by reason of the uncertain terme of this present life, euery of vs ought to loke for no lesse to cum, but that we must heare spoken to vs by our maister, the wordes which the said stewarde heard spoken unto him: Thou maiest no more from this time forwarde exercise or occupy thy roume of steward.

And this tyme for as muche as it is bothe to euerye man uncertaine when it shall come, and also other wyse to no man any better then a tyng of decaye thoze continuance, we must make hast, that al our worldly goodes bestowed on the poore in the way of almes, we maye prepare and geat our selues possessiō to serue and bring vs to the life euerlasting. For by that meanes shall it come to passe, that we also shalbe made partakers of the good deedes which other men haue doen, for as muche as we haue with our temporall goodes holpen them. For whoso dooeth with part of his substaunce help to aide and maynteyn any man beeyng busily occupied about the cause or affaires of the ghospell to bee settefoorth: the same shall again in the kyngdome of heauen be relieued and made partaker of the well dooynges of an Euangelist, that is to say, a writer or a preacher of the ghospell. Make you frendes of the unrighteous mamon.

Therfore saieth the lorde: And take ye good wayes for your selues in season while time is, after the exaumple of the sayd worldely wyse and politike steward. Procure unto your selues good frendes of an euil thyng, to thend that at suche tyme when ye shall at the commaundement of the lord be compelled to depart out of the tabernacle of this mortal body, thei may receiue you into tabernacles euerlasting. In happy permutation it is, when transitory thinges make chaūge with thinges eternal. And what is more vile, or ferther frō bertue, then the ryches of this worlde? They are bneath at any tyme gotten without guile a falshode. And other wayes or meanes, either to saue them, or els to encrease them, there is none, but the same that they are gotten by. It is a possession of much busines and encombraunce, and yet is it neither out of daungier of miscarryng there whyle, ne any waye a thyng of long contynuance. For they folowe not their maister when he departeth hens, yet notwithstandyng with the same a man may bye that is euerlastyng, and whiche may do hym good stede and seruice in the life to cum. So it shall cum to passe, that the thing whiche in case it be hoorded vp and hidde, maketh a mame unrighteous and thrall to many cares: the same, if it bee layed out and bestowed in dooyng charitie, shalbee an instrument of euāgelical righteousnesse, while bothe he that is a minister of the ghospell, is relieued with necessaries, and a reward cummeth to the geuer with a large encrease of entresse. That when ye shalhaue nede, they mai receiue you into euerlastynge habitacions.

The texte. He that is faithful in that whiche is leaste, is faithful also in muche. And he that is unrighteous in the leaste, is unrighteous also in muche. So than if ye haue not been faithful in the unrighteous mamon, who wil beleue you in that which is true? And if ye haue not been faithful in an other mans busines, who shall geue you that which is your owne? No seruaunt can serue two maisters: for either he shall hate the one, and loue the other: or els he shall leane to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serue god and mamon.

Whoso, as a steward, hath the disposyng and bestowyng of a mortall mannes gooddes, by suche meanes and none els is founde to be faithful and trustie, if he after a verye pynchyng sort bestow that he is put in trustie with all. But contrarie wyse God, who is ryche for and towardes all creatures, woulde would fain haue it moste bountifully laied out, that he hath purposely deliuered out of his handes to be euerywhere distributed: and taketh him for an vntrustie seruaunte, whosoeuer keepeth to himselfe as his owne proper goodes, that the lordes will and mynde was to be made common to al people as often as the necessitie of the neighbour doeth so require.

He that is faithefull in that whiche is leaste is faithfull also in much.

Therfore, whoso in disposing of a thing of the least value possible, behaueth hymself otherwise then his moste liberal master would haue him, shal be not seme a person vnworthy, to whose honestie his maister should committe the dispensation of higher thinges. All that euer we haue, is the lordes and not ours: corporall rychesse, and whatsoeuer this worlde produceth, is the only bounteous goodnesse of God. The doctrine of the gospel, & the other ghostly giftes, are the goodes of almightie god, not for any suche purpose geuen vnto vs, that our selfes and no mo should haue the fruicio of the same: but to bestow them lyke good stewardes to the vtilitie & profite of our neighbour. But thus muche oddes there is betwene those two sortes of goodes or treasours, that suche thinges as pertein to comfortyng or cherishyng of the bodie (because they be without vs and not in vs) they neyther be our proper owne, nor continuall vnto vs. They are the goodes of the worlde rather then ours. Moreouer because thei haue an outward likenesse of felicitie after ỳ worlde, (whereas in very dede, they are a lette and hinderaunce to the happye or blissefull state of man,) they bee not the thyng neither, that they are named to bee. For they are named goodes, whereas in very dede they are the thynges whiche bryng a man to the state of extreme miserie and wretchednesse. The rychesse therefore of the mynd and soule are the true richesse in dede, & riches that maye bee called our owne: not as though we were not bounde to God for them, but because they leaue not their possessour in the life to come, at leswise if a man vse them now in this present life as he ought to doo: And lyke as in a comon weale no mā is anaunced to the head office of gouernoure, as maiouraltie or suche others, excepte he haue firste in the rounde of Counstable, and in suche other inferiour offyces shewed an ensaumple of his perfyte honestie and vprightnesse: and as in a priuate familie the distributynge of precious thinges is not committed, but to such an one as hath euidētly shewed himself faithfull to fore in matters of lesse weight: so doeth the lord teach vs, that the dispensation & bestowing of the rychesse euangelicall (whiche onelye and none elis are true rychesse in dede, and our proper owne) is not to bee put to the credite and truste of suche an one, as hath nothyng faithfully distributed money, beyng a thyng, as moste vilest of all, euen so beyng an other mās and none of his owne. For whoso cannot sette worldly rychesse at naughte, will not syncerely distribute the richesse of the soule. And the lord stil beating suche thynges into the myndes of his disciples, saied: whoso is faithful in a thing of leaste value, it is a very great likelihode, that the same will be faythful in a great matter too. And again he that is vniuste in a litle thyng, wyll bee vniuste in a great matter also. For that man, whose herte the care of a thyng nothyng worth in the worlde may bee hable to moue to dooe amysse: wyll muche sooner with a greatter occasion bee drawen to dooe amysse. That if in the wicked Mammon, that is to saye, in false riches and goodes gotten with falsehood (as commonly in very true dede it is) ye shal not shewe yourselfes faithfull to the Lorde who hath deliuered you the same to be disbursed and distributed diſtributed abrode: what manne wyll committe vnto you the beſtowyng of the true ryches ſe of the mynde? And if in a thyng of an other mannes, whiche canne not perpetually continue with any man, ye haue been nothyng truſtie, who will putte in your handes ſuche a thyng as might perpetually in tyme to come bee your owne? And a lighter offence and treſpace dooeth he, whiche vnkeythfully handleth the ryches ſe of this worlde, then he whiche vnkeythfully diſpeſeth the treaſoures of the goſpell. The kyngdome of god requireth to haue all the whole mā. And the mynde it requireth to haue free from the loue of all worldly thynges. Neyther is it for any man to attempte or goe about to make a medley of the worlde and the gholpell together, whiche gholpell is the kyngdome of heauen. For if noman can bee a ſeruaunte common and indifferente vnto two maiſters at once, (becauſe that ſcarcely any two men dooe ſo well agree within themſelues, that one ſeruaunt is hable with his due attendaunce to ſatiſfye them bothe at once, but that, the one or the other ſette at naught, he muſte of force be compelled to ſticke to the one of them alone:) howe muche leſſe can ye be hable to ſerue God and Mammon bothe at once, beeyng maſters ſo ferre diſcordyng together, that there is not ſo muche as any one poynct wherin they agree? And ſeruaunt vnto Mammon is that man, what euer he be, that ſetteth a great piece of his heauen in ryches ſe, and for that cauſe laboureth with al earneſt applying of his mynde to geat herap great aboundaunce, and the ſame to bpholde, maynteine, and encreace, whan it is gotten. And ſuche an one leapeth for ioy, whan his ſubſtaunce multiplieth, and is ſore vexed in his herte, if it be taken awaye from hym by any miſfortune. And ſeruaunte to God is he, who either ſhakyng of from hym the goodes of this worlde, or elſ poſſeſſyng them, as though he poſſeſſed them not, dooeth with all earneſt applying of hymſelf, go about the prouiſion of the thynges, whiche make to euerlaſtyng ſaluacion.

No ſeruaunt can ſerue two maſters. &c.

And thoſe thynges heard the pharyſeis alſo, whiche were couetous, and they mocked hym. And he ſayed vnto them. Ye are they whiche iuſtifie your ſelues before men: but God knoweth your herres. For that whiche is highly eſteemed emong men, is abhommable in the ſighte of God.

The texte.

All the woordes and talke afore goyng, (though it wer ſpecially and purpoſely ſpoken to ſuche, as beleued themſelues poſſible enough to bee Chriſtes diſciples, though they wer charged and loden with the carefulneſſe of ryches ſe) the Pharyſeis alſo did heare, whoſe hertes beyng as it were olde bottels, could not hold ne receyue this newe muſte of the doctrine euangelicall. For they wer couetous and gredie not onely of money, but alſo of glorie. They wer haulte mynded, fierce, and men that would be auenged of euery matter. Therfore they ſkorned the doctryne of Jeſus, who moued me to charitable liberalitie, to not caryng for to be auenged, to the not paſſyng on glorie, ne on theyr lyke neyther. And certes this worlde alſo hath and euermore ſhall haue, his Pharyſeis, who truſtyng to theyr owne force, will haue in derriſion the doctrine of humilitie, of fauour in pardonyng offences, of tractablenelle, and of liberalitie. A mouth enured and accuſtomed to ſoure turned wyne of worldly wyſedome & policie, abhorreth frō this heauēly muſte. Mate it alſo pleaſe God to vouchſaluo one daye, to dampe the tauntyng mockes of ſuche perſones, lykewyſe as he did at this preſent ſharpely reproue theſe Pharyſeis beeyng ſcorners, whan he ſaied:

he sayed: Ye swell in pryde with the vayn countrefaictes of goodnesse, settyng fooyth your peynted sheathe in the face of men, who esteme a man of his ryches, Ye are they which iustifie your selues afore men. of his gaye apparell, of the obseruacion of ceremonies: and of those thynges do ye purchase vnto your selues also a laude and prayse of holynesse, where in ve-ray dede ye are neither ryche, nor holy, nor in happie or blissefull state, nor yet great men. For god, who onely seeth and beholdeth your hertes, esteemeth a mā by the veray goodes of the soule. And suche a man and none other is ryche, who But God knoweth your hertes is rych before God: he is iust, that is iust in the sight of God: that man is great, who beyng litle in his owne estimacion, is great by the iudgement of God.
For moste commonly it chaunceth, that suche a thyng as to men semeth some high matter, and to bee had in high veneracion, is with God reputed a thyng abominable.

Therefore. ¶ The lawe and prophetes reygned vntyll Johan, and sence that tyme, the kyngdome of God is preached, and euerie man sturieth to goe in. Easier is it for heauen and yearth to perishe, then one title of the lawe to fayle. Whosoeuer forsaketh his wife, and marryeth an other committeth aduourtrie. And he whiche marieth hir that is diuorced from her housebande, com-mitteth aduourtrie also.

Ye dooe yet still hold the tynde of the lawe fast in your teeth, and ye glorye in the shadowes of thynges: whereas now the kernell within is to bee opened, that the lighte of euangelicall trueth arisyng, maye on euery syde dryue awaye all shadowes. Ye must now disacquainte yourselues from the soure old wyne of Moses lawe, and drynke in the newe muste of more sober doctryne.
The figures of the lawe had their time: what the holy sayinges of the prophetes did promise, was looked for. But figures cease nowe that the trueth hath appered fooyth: neither is prophetical promisyng any longer looked for, nowe that the thyng whiche they had promised, is in veray facte performed and geuen. From shadowes ye must goe forward and growe to the veritie. And from the feith of the promises, ye must grow vp to the loue of the thyng beyng now sent and geuen in dede. John was (as ye would saye) a marchyng bore, or a particion deuidyng and seuerying the lawe with his figures, and the prophetes with their promises, from the ghospell: which ghospell doeth in veray facte and dede geue, as well that the lawe had with his figures signified and ap-poynted, as also that the prophetes beyng enspired with God had promised should come. John preached that the kyngdome of God was already come.
And that veray thyng forsouthe it is which the lawe had in shadowes marked out: and that veray thyng it is, that the prophetes solemnely spoke of afore.
And ye see the thyng self to be agreable to Johns preachyng. For euer sence his tyme the kyngdome of God is continually preached vnto al people, and many dooe with glad hertes gredely take the blissefull and heauenly newes. They
And euerye man sturieth him. drynke newe muste, they take the doctrine of God: they contemne yearthly thin-ges, and growe ryche with goodes and treasoures heauenly. They cast money awaye from them, but they worke miracles: they haue no armour ne weapō, but they cast out deuils. They are not men of wealth, or rychesse, of power, al glorye and renoume in worldely estimacion. But in humilitie, in tractablenesse, in patient sufferaunce, in charitable geuyng, and in the other goodes of the mynde, they are in verayre true dede, bothe ryche, and men of power, and also full of glorye in the sight of God. And the high pathwaye vnto this felicitie is shutte vp to no man. That if ye Phariseis will not vouchesalue to entre, others will preuente

preuent you, and take vp your roumes: the Gentiles will entre in, and all the nations of the worlde will entre in. They cannot bee kept out nowe that the doore is sette open: they breake in by plain force and violence, if thei be not receiued in. Ye fee publicanes, souldiers, sumners, & harlotes how thei coume renning thither. These sortes of people delpising all that euer they are owencers of, contemnyng all voluptuous pleasures of this worlde, trustyng to the promisses of the gholpell, dooe with all their herte applye themselfes to the true gooddes of the mynde: and whereas pe stande without doores (whose partes it had been firste of all others to enter, yea and also to bring in others whiche would enter:) they whome I haue reherled, dooe through the feruentenelle of feith, through their promptenelle of mynde, breake in whether we wyll or will not. And luche kinde of violence dooeth the kingdome of heauen loue. Neither is there any cause why for the affectionate louers of the law, to make luche a great crying out, that the lawe is nowe abrogate, that the prophetes are nowe abolished. Nay thilfame is not an abolilhyng of the lawe, but an accōplilding and perfectyng therof. For mothers dooe not vse to make weping and wailing that their loonne is loste, whan he is of a boye weaxed and growen vp to bee a man. Now a berap great poynte of folpe it were, for one to enbzace in his armes the counterfaicte portraiture of a man, whan he may enbzace the verai mannes selfe who was so portured out: and no lelle poynete of folp to speake to ỹ maker of a promille, whan one maie be sure (yf he will) to haue presently in his handes, the verap thyngselfe that was promised. The thyng than must be compared with the image, and in case thei doe agree the one with the other, than acknowlage thou the thing that hath beene set out in shadowes, and enbzace thou, that is perfourmed and geuen in facte. If the prouse of ỹ thinges dooe agree with the promilles of the prophetes, discharge thelm as true men of theyr promille, and enbzace thou that is truely perfourmed and brought to effect. And furthermoze if thou se with thine yes right many thinges to haue come to palle, whiche were marked oute by the shadowes of the lawe, (for the law is spirituall and ghostly) if in a great maignie caules, the end and prouse of the matter be aunswerable to the olde and auncient forelaipnges of the prophetes: than beleue thou that all the other thyngs also shall with semblable assuraunce bee perfourmed in time to come, whatsoeuer the lawe and the prophetes haue sated shall hereafter come to palle. What in the lawe was carnal and grosse, thelame geuethe place to thynges of moze perfection: but what in thelawe is spirituall, thatlame not onely is not abrogate or forsoen: but also is brought to his tull and full perfection. For the law permitteth ỹ wedded houseband vpon geuyng his wyfe a testimonial of her diuozcement, that he maie putte his wyfe awaye from hym, and bring an other newe wyfe home in her stede: but by the lawe of the gholpell, whosoeuer refusyng his true wedded wyfe, marpeth an other, dooeth committe aduouttre. And he that marpeth the woman diuozced committeth aduouttre. For neither of the men hath his own wyfe, nor neither of the weomen her owne houselande. And alwell the comon reason of nature, as also euangelicall sinceritye dooeth in all earnest wyfe require perpetual amitie without anye breache, and an vnion not possible to be dissolued or plucked in sondze, not only in marrimonie, but also in al fredship. Neither is there any occasion or grounde why any should finde cauillations that the doctrine of the gospel is repugnaūt to the thinges prescribed by Moses. For Moses in consideration of your hardenes of hert, durst not precisely require of you the thyng that he rather wished, then conceiued anye hope of, and sore against his mynde did he leat you haue diuorcement at your willes, lest if it had been denied, your hatred against your wiues would haue braste out into some more furious and cruel dedes of mischief towardes the. He therfore whiche requireth that is of more perfection, dooeth make vp the lawe, and not abrogate ỹ law: as a father is not contrary to himself, if the same hauing a great whyle afore been somewhat with the tendrest ouer his sonne to leat him haue his own bridle while he was of tender age, do require more of hym when he is come to ful age, the he did require of him before. And as for this I assure you of, (and sate I told it you:) that both ỹ skie and the yearth (and yet is there nothing that shal longer endure then those two.) shal yet both of them sooner passe, then any one litle tote or title of the lawe shal perishe, but that al be performed whatsoeuer hath beene foresaied or prophecied: to verape true it is, that I am not come to bee an abolisher of the lawe.

Whosoeuer forsaketh his wyfe & marpeth an other committeth aduouttre.

Easier it is for heauen & yearth to pe vtter. &c.

The texte. There was a certaine riche man, whiche was clothed in purple and fine white, and fared deliciously euerie day. And there was a certain begger named Lazarus, which laie at his gate full of sores, desiring to be refreashed with the crummes whiche fell from the riche mannes board, and no man gaue vnto him. The dogges came also & licked his sores. And it fortuned that the begger died, and was carried by the Aungels into Abrahams bosome. The riche man also died, and was buried. And beeing in hell in tormentes, he lifte vp his eyes, and sawe Abraham a ferre of, & Lazarus in his bosome, and he cried and said: father Abraham haue mercie on me, & sende Lazarus, that he maie dippe the tieppe of his finger in water, and cople my tongue, for I am tormented in this flame. But Abraha saied: sone remembre that ỹ in thy life time, receiuedst thy pleasure, and contrarie wise, Lazarus receiued peine. But now is he confoxted, and thou art punished. Beyond al this, betwen vs and you there is a great space feere, so that they which would goe from hence to you, cannot, neither come from thens to vs. Then he saied: I praie thee therefore father, sende him to my fathers house (for I haue fiue brethren) for to warne them lest they come also into this place of torment. Abraham saied vnto him: they haue Moses and the prophetes, leat them heare them. And he said: Nay father Abraham, but if one come vnto them, from the dead, they will repent. He saide vnto him: If they heare not Moses and the prophetes, neither will they believe though one arose from death againe.

Nowe because the Lorde Jesus vnder a parable of a wilye stewardes ipteli afore by him propounded, had exhorted menne to exercise charitable liberalitie towardes the nedye, to the ende the same parties might after this life receiue vs into euerlasting habitacions, at what time they by a contrarie chaūg and course of thinges shalbee plenteously endewed with all good thynges: and the riche, who had their heauen afore here in this world, shal lye in peines and bee tormented with all extremities of woe and distresse: he here (as it were in a plain picture) setteth out an exaumple of the thyng, to the entēt it should cleue and sticke the faster in menes mindes. There was once (saieth he) a great riche man, who semed to lacke no manier thyng to the highest degree of foxtunate & happie state of this woxlde, a manne of great name & muche spoken of emong men, but of no name at al ne acquaintaunce with God. This man wente apparelled in his purple and his veluettes, no lesse nicely then gorgeously. And because he would lacke nothing for the delectacion of his body, he would day by day haue his delicate fare, and his banquettinges, and would be serued after a poxtely sorte & princely, as a man which al in one was a bondeseruaunt aswell to ambicion, as also to gluttonous excesse, & to voluptuousnes. There was also at the same tyme, a certain begger much vnlyke vnto this man, that is to say, a felow of low birth, a felow destitute of any acquaintaunce emong men, but famous and noble afore God. For he had his name cue of the state & case ỳ he was in, called Lazarus, because he was a man destitute of al worldly staigh or maintenaunce, and rested onely on the helpe of God alone. This Lazarus had neither house nor apparell, ne meate, no nor yet prosperous healthe of his boope. For he was al full of sores and botches in his bodie, euen liche an other in maner, as it is read in scripture, of Job was. This Lazarus was lyng at the saied riche mannes gate, loking that some relefe should haue bee sent him of the crummes and scrappes, which fel from the riche mannes table, wherwith to swage the greedinesse of his stomake, now fretting & gnawyng, and as ye might saye, euen barkyng for hunger. The Lazare man beeyng ful of botches and blaines, might not bee suffred to come in, lest with the syghte of hym beyng deadly to beholde, he myght haue bene an yll sore to all the couraigne, and myghte turne the merye there of al the whole feaste into sadnesse, whereas in all other behalfes it was all meate and finely appointed. Thou hearelle nowe the pompous pride of welthynesse: but emong all this excellent fare, and wastefull prodigalitie otherwyse, yet was there so much pinchyng & nuggardship toward the neighbour being at the verap poynct to dye for hongre: that there might not so muche as the crummes & scrappes be geuen hym, whan he made earnestie petition for them, whereas the dogges wer fed there cue panch full, with greate lumpes and whole loaues of good bread. Yea and the dogges do euen in the verap terth laye inhumanitie and vncurtesie to the syche man, twymmyng about the cares in his delicatousnesse. For the dogges came and licked the sores of Lazarus. Who would not haue iudged that same syche man to haue been a perfecte exaumple and paterne of moll welthie and happy state: and this poore Lazare man to be a patterne of vtter miserie? But felicitie is in dede to be measured by such thynges as fortune geueth to men in this lyfe. But in the matter that we nowe speake of, altogether was sodainly turned in and out clene at lie wise. For death hanging euer the head of euery creature, lyke as it is vnto riche folkes an end of al sensual pleasures, so vnto them whiche liue in care & woe it is an ende of all sorowes. For so it fortuned, that the begger dyed: and where he was nothing passed on ne regarded emong men duryng his life tyme: as soone as he was deade, he was of the Aungelles carped into the lappe of Abraham. God vouchsalued to shew him thus much honour, whom the riche manne would not vouchesalue to leate be within hys house. And euen at the verap self same time dyed the same syche man too. For death alone beeyng equally indifferente vnto al folkes, teacheth the riche sort this lesson, that they are men too, alwel as others. And as for the Lazare man had not so muche as the honestee of burial, to be laied in a graue: but the riche man was carped to hys burial with as great solemnitie as myght be about a cyple. But whan they were bothe departed oute of this worlde, and the riche man in hel, lyeng there in greuous tormentes, and was no lesse hardely hadled as well with the lacke of thynges delectable, as also with the aboundaunce of all kyndes of euyls, then he had duryng his life time cherished hymselfe nicely and deintilye: at laste lifteyng vp his yes, he sawe Abraham a great waye of: he also espied Lazarus and knewe hym of olde whom he had suffred afore to lye as an abiect at his gate, and sawe him in Abrahams lappe taksyng the full fruition of mosse perfecte quiete and consolacion, in the most swete and tendre come a faire mouthed craucr & a begger, cried with a pitecous noise: O good father Abrahã, haue thou pitie and compassion vpon me, and send Lazarus to dippe but euen the tippe of his finger in the water, that he maye but cuen lo much as ones coole my tounsue with one litel droppe and no more, for for3 am I tormented in this burnyng fyer. To whom Abraham aunswered. Sonne the coolyng and refreashyng whiche thou desirest now ourelate make petition for, thou shouldest with refreashyng of thy poore neighbour haue purchased for thy selfe whan thou were liuyng. But at that time thou thinkyng thy selfe wel, with the pleasent thinges of the world which thou haddest thã, wouldest not vouchsalue so much as with the crummes of thy table to relieue Lazarus beyng ready to dye for hounger, knowe thou nowe the course of thynges to bee rightefully chaunged. This muste thou know, (if thou bee disposed to call it to thy remembraunce,) that in thy lyfe time thou hast receiued thy goodes: & Lazarus contrarywise passed ouer al his euils, and wisse happes in his life time. Now altogether turned vpsyde down, he here, after many feloe afflictiõs patiently suffred, is refreashed: and thou after al delicious sensualitye wherewithy thou hast naughtily taken thyne own pleasure, art worthyly tormented. Thou turnedst thy face from the Lazare beyng ful of sores, & biddedst away with hym out of thy syght, whereas to; thyne owne parte thou were all in thy swete sauoures and perfumes: and nowe is he in mine armes, smooth and clere skynned from top to toe. Thou wouldeste not vouchsalue to leate hym come within thy house: and I am content to haue hym syttc in my lappe. Thou diddest neither with meate ne drinke refreash hym beyng in extreme penury, and nowe is he refreashed with eternall rest, whiche knoweth no deration of hounger ne thirste. And with what face doorst thou at his hande alse refreashment of coolyng thy mouth: seyng that he not berayse long sens, could obteine no refreashyng at all of thee? In case thou haddest cladde him whan he was naked, if thou haddest fedde hym whan he was houngrie, if thou haddest geuen him drynke in his thirst, if, when he laye without thy gates, thou haddest gathered hym into thy house, if thou haddest doen some cure on hym keeping all full of sores: he would nowe agaīn obtein some coumfoyte for thee, and some release of thy tormentes, and would receiue the again on his partie, into his brotherhoode and coumpaignie. Thou wreatched miser, where is nowe thy fine silkes and thy purple? where bee thy perfumes? where be thy feastinges and bāqueteynges? where is thy pipping and daunceyng? where bee so many thy pleasures mixt with ambition and vain glorye? Whyle thou wer aliue, no kynde of wyne could please thee for beeping cloged with theim, so great was the delicioustnesse of thy mouth, neither wouldeste thou all the wyde so muche as geue a litell water to Lazarus beyng thirstie: and nowe thou canst not obteine, no not so muche as a poore droppe of water to refreashe the scaldyng heate of thy tõgue. In stede of thy galaunte manours whiche thou haddeste than, thou hast nowe the derke doungeon of hell: for thy delicate pastimes, euerlasting peine, for thy iestynges and songes, continuall wepping and owlyng. And so much more past remedye is your extreme distresse, that an huige great gapping hole

Betwene vs and you there is a great space sette:

dooeth kepe vs and you in soondze, in soze, that if any would gooe from hens thether where ye are, and helpe you, thei cannot: noz if any of you would assay to come vp from thens hither he cannot, nowe that by the iudgemente of God (which cannot be chaunged.) there is vnto al sozes their due place limited foz theim to remayne in. In the life season, there was a tyme to relreasse ẏ neighbour by dooing good turnes and pleasures one man to an other, and to be relieued the one of the other agayn: now is it ouer late here to wyl oz desire, that cannot possibly bee doen. In thy delicate pleasaunt pastimes thou wouldeste nedes bee alone with suche as thou wer thy selfe: but Lazarus, and such other as Lazarus was, thou wouldest not suffre to come ons in thy coumpaignie. And nowe art thou agam serued of theiame sauce foz thy labour. Whã Abraham had this spoken, the riche man beeyng put of from all hope that himselfe should obteine any relieefe, is delirous at leastwise to prouide some good waies foz certain brethren of his, whiche he had yet aliue, lest that if they ledyng their liues after the same faction, should come into the same place, the keiyng of his paine and woe. should by suche coumpaignie being ioyned vnto hym, increace vnto hym, whereas he was in mysery and extremitie enough al ready. But he dooeth nowe in vain become an humble suiter, whiche sozoe vsed to putte of from hym the lazare man, when theiame made muche crouchyng and kneiyng vnto him foz succour. If the great derke doungeon (saieth he) bee a let, ẏ there can no helpe be minystred oz dooen to my selfe, yet thus much I praie thee, that thou wilt send Lazarus to my fathers house: (Foz I haue fiue brethren aliue) that he may geue warnyng and admonicemente vnto theim, lest that, in case they kolowe my steppes, they shall come hither to bee kelowes and partakers here with me of theie wokull kozowes and peines that I am in. But rather leat theim relieue the necessitie of the pooze with suche goodes as they haue, and leate them not vse their rychesse to the sensualitie of the fleash, but to the godly diuotion of the mynde, ne leate theim not sette their fantye and loue on suche thynges as foz a season are swete and delectable in the wozldly life: but on such thynges as maye purchase rest foz euer to endure. Thus saied the riche man, whom the extreme tormentes whiche he nowe hadde experience of, made bothe an humble suppliaunte, and also a teacher of other, though it were nowe ouer late. But after death there is no prayers that wil serue: ne yet mate a man haue licence to geue any warnynge oz counsaill. Foz nothyng haue the deade to dooe with the liuyng. Abraham therefoze made him this answere. It is nothyng requisite that Lazarus bee foz anye suche cause as this called awaye frõ his quiete reste. Thy brethren, (if they bee disposed to bee honeste men and to do wel, haue Moses and the prophetes, leat them herken to them. Foz they in theyr bookes speake vnto al creatures. Than the riche man beyng an hard suiter, and a petitioner that would not be satisfied, (yet neuertheleese ouerlate) saied to Abraham: O father Abraham, as foz Moses they will not heare no: the prophetes neither: but yf one of the dead might come to theym, to bring theim sure and perfecte woozde, howe soze and grieuous tormentes tho persones doe here suffre, whiche dooe there passe their liues after myne exaumple, whiche all ryche folkes foz the moste parte doe, they will amend and frame theimselfes to better rewle and gouernaunce: Hereunto Abraham said: yea, that thou speakeste, is the colourable laiyng of excuses of suche persones as are disposed neuer to leaue, ne foxsake that they doe naughtily and viciously loue. The autozitie of Moles and of the prophetes is greater with them, then the autozitie of Lazarus a poore begger shoulde bee. That yf they geue no care ne regarde to them: truely if one should arise again from death to life, they would not heare him neither. Than would they fynde sloppes and cauillacions, that it were the walkyng of some ghoste, oz to bee some euill spirite. By these wordes dyd the Lord Jesus couertely geue a nippe to the vnbeliefe of the Jewishe nation, who because they did not in verie true dede beleue Moses and the prophetes, doe euen yet still at this present erie out against Christ also beeyng restozed alyue oute of his sepulchre, and nowe sitting on the right hande of his father, whereas in verye dede they wouldo beleue that hath bee doen, yf they had truely beleued Moses and the prophetes tellyng & shewyng long afoze, that it should so bee. By this parable dyd Christe counfoze hys disciples, who shoulde afterwarde foz the loue of the kyngdome of heauen, endure and abyde many afflictions in this worlde: and by the selfesame parable dooeth he feare the pharisees, the Scribes, the expert lawyers, the princes, the headmen, the eyche folkes, the proude sorte, the fierce perilous men, and such as liue to the behoufe & commoditie of themselues and no more to the ende they myght at leastwyse foz feare of punishemente (if they would none otherwyse) reformme their vngodly lyfe. Foz otherwyse it shoulde come to passe, that they should there an other daye bee mocked again, whiche here in this worlde were mockers and skozners of Christe, whan he called them to better waies.

The xvii. Chapter.

He saied vnto his disciples: It cannot bee, but offences will come. Neuertheless woe vnto him through whom they come. It were better for him that a millestone were hanged about his neche: and he cast into the sea, then that he should offende one of these litell ones. Take hede to your selues. If thy brother trespace against thee, rebuke him, & if he repent, forgeue him. And though he sinne against thee seuē times in a daye, and seuen tymes in a daie turne again to the, saiyng: it repenteth me, then shalte forgeue him. The xvii.

NOw, so was it decreed by the heauenlye father & so was it expedient foz ꝑ saluacion of mankynde, ꝑ the proud Phariseis should bee offended with the weakenesse of ꝑ humain bodye & nature, whiche the Lozde had taken: and that the same Phariseis shoulde punishe hym with affliction, yea and also should putte hym to deathe beeyng in fourme of pouerty & of low degree, & brought in fourme of meekenes & humilitie: & ꝑ they should also be in mind to shew neuer a whit moze of mercy oz fauour to his disciples neither, if they folowed the steppes of their maister. But as the vnbeliefe of the euill disposed & vngracious sozt, doeth wrappe the godly in afflictions: so is ꝑ pacient suffreing which the good men haue in them, an occasion of the greater damnacion to ꝑ euill. But yet neuertheles, God vseth the malice of suche, ferre otherwyse then they meant it, to ꝑ benefite of ꝑ whole worlde. Jesus therfoze saieth vnto his disciples, emong whō was Judas, who was afterwarde to bee the cauler & fyrste beginner of offence (that is to say of slaundre & grutche of conscience) & an occasioner to betray Jesus vnto death, being a man after the worldly estimacion selie & of lowe degree. Albeit ꝑ wickednesse of the saied Judas made ꝑ redēpcion of the worlde the sooner to come

¶ his dānable ende was an holsome enſaumple to all creatures. It cannot bee auoided ne chosen (ſaieth Jesus) but ỹ offences muſt ¶ ſhall happen: but yet is ỹ none excuſe to him through whoſe default ſuch offence of conſcience ſhal ariſe. For it were a great dele more expedient for ſuch an one, to be caſt headlōg into the ſea with a great ſtōne mill ſtone tied about his necke, then to be an occaſion of ſuche ſlaundre or offence to one of theſe that are ſuch litle tendre ones to the worldeward. For they haue God to be an auenger of their cauſe: who thinketh hymſelfe to bee hurted in theſame litell ones, whan they are hurted. And a leſſe puniſhemente it is for a man to endure puniſhement here in this worlde, (bee it neuer ſo ſharp,) then by offending the conſcience of litle ones, whō God loueth, wilfully to lose & procure euerlaſting tormentes in helle. Beware ye therefore. It lieth not in you to auoide, but ỹ ſuch ſlaundres of conſcience ſhal ariſe: but it is your parte to beware that none ſuche ariſe through your faulte or occaſion. And the beſt way or meane howe for you to auoide that no ſuch offence of conſcience maye bee imputed to you, is, if not onelye ye ſhall not geue anye occaſion of ſlaundre or offence of conſcience to anye body through your fault, but alſo ye anye ſuche thyng bee manifeſted vnto you by others, ye eyther wype it cleane awaye through your mildeneſſe, or elles ſuffre it with your good exaumple of patience, and in no wyſe dooe the like to any of them again. For ye ſhall haue veracion and vproares ariſe againſt you, not at the handes of the wicked ſorte onely, but alſo beeing, as ye are, mortal menne made of frail metalle, there ſhall euen emong youre ſelues manye times ariſe offences and treſpaces, whiche ye muſte remedye with brotherlye and charitable admonicion, whole propertye and condicion is, neyther to bewraye or diſcloſe the offendour, if there maye be anye reformacion in him: and yet to haue pardone readye for hym, in caſe he repente and bee willing to emende. If thereforе it ſhall by anye chaunce happen, that thy brother haue committed any treſpaſſe againſt thee, doe not vpbraide at the fault as though thou kneweſt it not, leſte ỹ reattyng it to eſcape vnſpoken of, maye bee to the other an occaſion of more boldenes eftſoons to do the lyke: but playe thou the faithfull phiſician, that is to ſaye, ſhewe thou him his diſeaſe with a lighte chydyng in ſecrete, to the ende he maye bee reformed with keeping aſhamed of that he hath doone. He will ſoonest heare a frendely man that ſhall tell hym of hys faulte, then a troubleous or brabbyng accuſer whome he muſt repute and take for an open enemie. For ſuche is the nature of manne, for the moſte parte, that he will with a better will ſette himſelfe in a ſtraigh and quiette by good aduiſe and counſaile, then he will yelde to be ouercroden with wrong. It cannot but appere to bee a great poynete of tenderneſſe, whan one ſecretely telleth a bodye of his faulte. But he that openlie deteeteth a manne, and requireth to haue hym puniſhed, ſemethe not to bee of anye ſuche minde, or will, to cure his brothers ſore, but rather to notifie and publiſhe the ſame to his diſhonеſtee and open confuſion.

That in caſe thy brother beeyng tolde of his faulte by the, ſhall emende and acknowlage his offence: leat forgeuenеſſe bee ready, whiche maye familiarly and louingly receiue him again, as ſoone as he is reformed: and ſo ferre bee thou frō ons thinkyng howe to redreſſe it by auengement, that thou faue the parties honeſtee alſo, as muche as in thy power lyeth. That if the ſame partye geue hym, through humain fraiſtie thal eftſones be falle in relapſe of theſame or an other ſuche lyke offence: pen although he treſpace againſt the ſeuen tymes in a date,

It cannot be but offences will come.

If thy brother treſpace againſt thee rebuke hym,

And if he re geue hym.

and that doe leuen tymes in a daye repente agayne, and earnestlye applyng himselfe to pacifye thee, shall saye: I haue doone amysse, I am sorye for it, forgeue me: forgeue thou him the faulte from the botome of thy herte. This tenderlynesse of forgeuyng and releasyng one an others offences and trespaces, shal after a muche better sorte maintayne peace and concorde emong you, then mutual requityng of one shrewde turne or displeasure for an other.

The texte. ¶ And the Apostles sayed vnto the Lorde: increase our faith. And the Lord sayed: if ye had faith like a grain of mustard sede, ye shoulde saye vnto this Sycamine tree: plucke thy selfe vp by the rootes, and plant thy selfe in the sea, and it shoulde obeye you.

The Apostles, because they well perceyued by these sayenges of Jesus, that faithe is the fountaine of all euangelicall vertues, whiche sayth the Lord did so diligentely require in them as a thyng necessarye yf they should bee hable to worke miracles, whiche faith he dyd so many times allow and cõmend, yea euen in many aliens too that were not borne in Jewry, which faithe could obteine any manner thyng what euer it were, and throughe whiche sayth euen theyr owne selfes also had putte awaye soondry diseases from men, and hadde cast out deuils: and because they knewe and remembred well, ỹ onely throughe defaulte and wante of faithe in theim, it hadde happened, that they coulde not deliuer a certaine persone afore, beeyng possessed with a dumme deuill. Albeit one shall not be a fitte man for the other necessarie preceptes of the ghospell neither, onlesse he haue conceiued an vndoubted faith and truste in hys herte. For whan will he despise the sensuall pleasures of this worlde, whan will he poure oute his goodes to bestowe theim on the poore, whan wyll he releasse and clerelye forgeue a displeasure or a wrong doone vnto hym by his brother, whan will he doo suche persones good, as haue dooen hym the contrarye, whan will he meekely and patientelye take emptelesomnesse, scourgeyng with roddes, and the peines of death: which is not fully and throughly perswaded, that he hathe an vnestimable large rewarde prepared for hym in heauen.

Lorde encrease our faith. Thys thyng (I saye) because the Apostles well vnderstoode, they saye vnto the lorde: Maister, forasmuche as we haue no goodnesse at all but of thee, we prayre thee that thou wilte encreace our fayethe in vs. The Lorde hereupon, as one that well knewe the Apostles to bee as yet grosse and vnperfecte, and to make requeste to haue their fayth encreace chiefly for such a purpose, that they myghte haue the more power to shewe myracles: dooethe in dede allowe and ratifye the strength and power of fayth, yf it bee syncere and pure in a body as it ought to bee: but he opened vnto theim, that thesame ought to bee coupled with humilitie and sobernesse of the moste perfecte degree, and that it ought not to bee shewed foorth for vainglorious boostyng, but at suche times alwaies as either the preseruation of the neighbour, or els the glorye of God dooeth at the poynte of some extremitie necessarily require it. And hereupon sayeth he by a similitude or comparison: If ye haue fayth as a graine or corne of mustarde sede, whiche is litell in quantye, and lowe by the grounde, ne putteth not foorth his vertue of bityng the tounge excepte it be bruised in some thyng or broken betwene the teeth, ye shall saye to this Sycamine tree, whiche by reason that the rootes are taken of a great wyde coumpace within ỹ grounde, semeth vnpossible by any strength or power to be plucked vp out of his place, bee thou plucked vp by the roote, and bee thou remoued into the sea, there to stande as fast rooted as thou standest here nowe, & it shal obey your bidding.

If ye had faith lyke a grain of mustarde sede.

Certes

Tertes by the graine of mustardsede, ꝑ Lorde signifyed himselfe, who whereas he shewed and vsed hymselfe the moste lowest and meanest of al creatures, yet dyd he hyde within hym a secrete power of the nature of the godhed, which yͭ neuer afore vttered it selfe, whan the grayne of his bodye was dyuided on the crosse: ꝙ was in deathe (as it were) buryed within the grounde. The effectuall strengthe of this grayne wrought in the disciples, whereof they oughte not to haue blurped any porcion to theyr owne selfes, as the which were not the principall autours ne heade dooers of the thynges that they wroughte, but onelye ministers and seruauntes, allured to be punished if they had lingred or slacked to goe throughe with executyng that was geuen theim in charge & commission to dooe: and bounde to paste ouer all the laude & prayse vnto god, if any thing had or shoulde by meane of theim bee tolply or ropally wel doen.

The texte.

¶ Who is it of you, if he had a seruaunte ploughing or feding cattalle, that wil say vnto him whan he cometh from the fielde: Goe quickely and sitte downe to meate, & saieth not rather vnto him: dresse whereof I maie sup, and girde vp thy selfe and serue me, til I haue eaten and dronken, & after ward eate thou and drinke thou: dooeth he thanke the seruaunte because he did the thinges, that were commaunded vnto him? I trowe not. So likewise ye, whan ye haue dooen all those thinges whiche are commaunded you, saye: we are vnprofitable seruauntes, we haue dooen that, whiche was our duetie to dooe.

Whiche of you it the haue a seruaunte ploughinge &c.

Dooeth he thanke ꝑ seruaunte because he did the thinges &c.

We are vnprofitable seruauntes

This good lesson afore goyng the lorde dyd by addyng thereunto an other parable, engraue in the hertes of his disciples. Whiche of you (sayed he) is a maister so muche for a seruauntes sake or commoditie to dwelle withall, that in case he haue a seruaunte that is a tiller of hys grounde, or his hearde to kepe hys cattall, wyll saye to hym byandby as soone as he is come home from hys worke out of the fielde: Goe thee ponder, & goe litte the downe to meate: and wel not rather thus speake: come on, make readye somewhat for me to haue to my supper: and girde thy clothes to thee, and come & awaite vpon me vntill I shall haue taken my repaste of meate and drinke, and than shalte thou take ther some meate and drinke afterwarde. And yet this not withstandyng that the sated seruaunte dyd vprightly and faythfully that his duetye was to do in the fielde, dooeth his maister vse to geue hym thankes because he hath dooen all that was geuen hym in commaundemente to bee dooen? I thynke not: but he would haue punished hym well and truelye in case he had not dooen it. And why for verayly for none other respecte or consideracion, but because they are seruauntes, and euen of duetye oughe all theyr seruyce to theyr maysters, to whom theimselfes and all are due as to the true owners. And as for the thanke and prayse of all that euer is dooen, the maister taketh to hymselfe, who is accounpted for the dooer of ꝑ thynges, whatsoeuer he dooeth by meane of theim, who without hym can vtterly dooe no maner good thyng at all. And in lyke maner euen ye too, take not vnto youre selfes the glorye of youre well doopynges: but onely do ye your faithfull labour as your duetie is. And whan ye shall haue dooen all thynges, whiche been enioyned or commaunded you, yet saye ye: Vnprofitable seruauntes we are, what our duetye was to dooe, we haue dooen, and no more. For this humilitie shal conserue and kepe the Jewel of feyth perfecte in you. Al the rest of thynges leaue ye vnto your Lord. Leat none of you take into his owne handes as due vnto hym, any honour, ne preuent he not the iudgement of the Lorde. He best knoweth hys owne tyme: and he wil not kepe backe no man of his reward. Ye in the meane whyle remembre youre poure selfes to bee none other but seruauntes oughyng all your woorke and labour of a bounden dutie.

The xvii. And it chaunced, as he went to Hierusalem, that he passed through Samaria and Galile. And as he entred into a certaine towne, there mette him tenne men that were lepres. Which stood a ferre of, and putte forth their voices, and sayed: Iesu maister haue mercye on vs. Whan he sawe them, he sayed vnto them: Goe, shewe your selfes vnto the priestes. And it came to passe, that as they went, they were clensed. And one of them, when he sawe that he was clensed, turned backe againe, and with a loude voice praised God and fell downe on his face at his fete and gaue him thankes. And the same was a Samaritane. And Iesus answered, and sayd: Are there not tenne clensed? but where are those nine? There are not founde that returned again to geue God praise, saue only this straungier. And he sayed vnto him: Arise, goe thy waie, thy faithe hath made the whole.

And so it befell that as the Lorde was goyng towardes Hierusalem, he made his waye lye throughe the countreyes of Samaria and Galilee. For he had ofte entrunces a kanse, whē he myght haue anye occasion, to take Samaria and Galile in his waye, ỹ he myght enbraide the inhabitauntes of Hierusalem with their hardenesse of beleuyng, whereas they abhorred the Samaritanes worse then the heathen, and reputed ỹ Galileans for more then half Pagans & miscreauntes. And as he was entreing into a litle village, there met him tēne men beyng lepres euerye one of them. Ye maie wel thinke ỹ by these lepres are signified heretical persones, beeyng withm foorth altogether deformed and corrupted with euil affeccions, the skinne withoutfoorth sported & speckled, (as by this reseblaunce to vnderstand,) that in heretical persones vnpure doctrine altogether entermedleth false thynges with the true. An infectious kynde of people and sore to bee abhorred: and therefore be they streightly kepte from coumpaignyng emong men: yet no kinde of sore there is, which Iesus dooeth not heale, so that the diseased come in his sight, and so that the disease be vttred vnto hym, and perfecte affiaunce rette in the parties.

Goe, shewe your selfes vnto the priestes, &c.

These lepres agnised and knowlaged their disease, and therefore thei approche not nere to the persone of Iesus, but standyng a ferre of, they lifte vp their voice on high, and crie aloud vnto the Lorde. O Iesus our maister haue thou mercie and pitie vpon vs. Iesus heardе their crye (whiche was a good witnesse of their affiaunce in hym) and turned his ies towardes them. Blissed is suche a crieng, as maketh the Lorde earnestе to geue care: and blissed is that castyng of the ye on them, whiche moueth hym to shewe mercie. But none other aunswere made Iesus vnto them, saueng that they shoulde goe their waies, and shewe themselfes to the priestes. For in the priestes rested the auctoritie to discerne the lepre from a clene manne. They dooe as he bidpeth them, and departe their waies replenished with kaythe and assured trusте in god for their health. And euen in their goyng they were made all clene. They hadde euerye one of them equall kayth and affiaunce, but they hadde not euerye one equall thankefulnesse of herte for the benefite receyued. The Samaritane onelye and no mo of them, whan he perceyued and felte himselfe plainly in veray dede deliuered from his disease, he made no counsell of the beneficial goodnesse of God towardes him, but returned immediately vnto Iesus, glorifyeng god with a loude voyce: and fallyng downe prostrate on his face, he layed hymselfe at the fete of Iesus, worshippyng hym, & geuyng hym thankes. But Iesus knowing well enough, that the benefite of health hadde come vnto all the tenne, but myndyng to checke the vnthankefulnesse of them, who did as much as they could in theyr mynde by prayer stealth to enioye so great a benefite, saied: were there not tenne lepres made whole, and nine of them where are they become? For the Lorde knoweth none vnthankefull people, and theiwerth suche ones to bee vnworthye a benefite receyued, as doe not geue thankes to hym that hath dooen theim good. For god cannot abyde to haue his benefites kepte secrete in hugger mugger. When the Samaritane kept silence being a man not onely thankefull, but also full of humilitie & sobrietie, as one þ was come thyther to dooe his owne duetye, and not to accuse anye others: Jesus turnyng to the coumpaignie whiche stood round about, saied: of all the tenne hath there not one beene founde, that would returne backe again, and glorifye God, but this one straunger beeyng a forener borne in an other countreye. But it had moze become the others thus to dooe, who because thei be Jewes, haunte themselues to bee true seruers and worshippers of God. And yet in the veray thyng leike this Samaritane passeth their deuoute holinesse. And wha the Lorde had thus muche saied, he spake to the Samaritane lyng prostrate on the ground. Arise vp (saied he) and goe thy wayes, allured that thyne benefite shall continue with thee for euer, whiche benefite thy faithfull affiaunce in me hath purchased and obteined vnto thee.

There are not founde that returned.

Why saythe he hath made the whole.

¶ When he was demaunded of the phariseis, whan the kingdome of God should come, he answered them, and saied: The kingdome of God shall not come with waiting for, neither shal they saie: loe here, or loe there. For beholde the kingdome of God is within you.

Nowe forbecause Jesus hadde the kyngdome of god oftentimes in hys mouth, the Phariseis, (who dyd not yet vnderstande the kingdome euangelicall to bee a ghostelye kyngdome, but dreamed that it was some other kyngdome, wherein the nation of the Jewes should haue dominion ouer other nations,) came vnto hym, & demaunded wha the kyngdome of god should come. But Jesus, who at all times whan anye mention was made of the laste daye, bled euen of a custome to aunswer doubtefully, saied: The kyngdome of God will not come after the maner of a worldlye kyngdome, in soze that either they syme therof, or the place mate bee watched for and espied. For it is not a kyngdome of the bodies but of the soules, neither dooeth it stande by vysible maynteaunce, but inuisible. Therefore it shal not bee saied vnto you: loe here, or loe there. For what nedeth it to awaite for any place, seyng the kyngdome of God is within you: why dooe ye looke without fooyth, for the thyng whiche ye haue within you, and is carried aboute with you wherener ye goe, yf ye bee so disposed youre selues? Why dooe ye looke for the thyng, as thoughe it were yet hereafter to come, whiche is already present? Wherefoeuer is a mynde or here beeing maister ouer riches, sensual pleasures, disguitte and promotions of this world, yea and finally a contemner of death: wherfoeuer is a mind strong and stout in feith, burnyng in charitie, enspired with the holye ghoste: in thatsame place is þ kingdom of God. There is nowe no moze to do, but that ye embrace the thing which is present, lest when that same day shal sodainly come, whiche shal make perfect and shall shewe this kyngdome, it fynde you vnready.

The kyngdome of god shall not be with wayting.

¶ And he saied vnto his disciples: the daies will come, when ye shall desire to see one daie of the soonne of man, and ye shall not see it. And they shal saie to you: see here,

And as it happened in the dates of Noe: ſo ſhall it bee alſo in the dates of the ſonne of man. They did eate and drinke: they maried wiues and wer maried, euen vnto that ſame Date that Noe went vnto the arke: the floud came and deſtroied them al. Likewiſe alſo as it chaunced in the dates of Lot. They did eate, they did drinke, they bought, they ſolde, they planted, they builded. But euen the ſame date that Lot went out of Sodome, it rained with fier and brimſtone from heauen, and deſtroied them al. Euen thus ſhal it bee in the date when the ſonne of man ſhal appere. At that date, he that is on the houſe roppe a his ſtuffe in the houſe, leat him not come downe to take it out. And leate not him that is in the field turne backe again to the thinges that he leafte behinde. Remembre Lottes wyfe.

But that the saied day may not take a man tardie, the remedie and prouision is easie, if euery one so prepaire hymselfe to be in a readinesse, as though thesame day wer euen nowe euerie moments cumming at hande. But men be- ping wedded vnto the worlde, will promysse and warraunt themselues of a lon- ger daye ere it come, yea or that suche a day will neuer come at all, and beyng careleesse by reason of suche hope, they will idlely geue themselues to their own lustes and appetites. Therefore thesame chaunce shal come in the daies of the soonne of man, whiche happened in the dayes of Noe. They toke wyues and they gaue out their daughters to marriage, as though the flouddes, which was differred for a time, would not haue come at al. But the euil misauenture came sodainlye vpon theim & tooke them tardy. Onely Noe with a fewe mo was saued by meane of the Arke. The residue perished euery one of them. And euē a muche like sighte also there was to bee seene in the time of Lot: for because there was some delay made of goddes vengeaunce, they conceiued an opinion, that it should be vnpunyshed, whatsoeuer synne they committed. And therupō beyng voide of al care, they eate and dranke, they bought and sold, they plāted & set trees, they made buildinges. But the stroke & vengeaunce of god lighted sodainly vpon theim also, whan they wer al voide of care, & thought nothing vpon it. For the selfe same daye, whan Lot forsooke the citie of Sodome, and departed his waie thens, it rained down fier and brymstone from heauen, and sodainly destroied them al. And euen the verye same thing to see to, shal there bee in the worlde, whan the sonne of man shal sodainly shewe forth his maiestee. Whansoeuer that daye shal growe & come fast vpon the worlde, leat al care of worldly thynges be shaken of. Leat euery man in the present perill, no more but looke for sauing himselfe to escape as he may. Therfore whosoeuer thatsame day shall find in ỳ house toppe, al his gooddes leaft beneath in his house, leate him not go down to take away with him such gooddes as he hath there: but leat him onely thynke vpō sauyng of himselfe. Semblably if ỳ saied daye shal by chaunce sodainly finde any man abrode in the field, leat him not flee home to escape it: for ỳ peril shal come ouer fast vpō him, to leat him haue any time of laisure at all. Euery bodye as he shall bee found, euen so leate him with renning away as faste as he can, saue his life. Call ye to remembyraunce what chaūced vnto Lottes wife. She did no more but turne her to loke backe, and perished immediatly, for all dooeth the swift stroke of the saied ctuil suffre any more delay or tariaunce at all. Suche an one what euer he bee, shalbe the more safe from the perill, as shalbee lighter burdened then al other to flee.

Two shal bee a grinding together, the one shall bee receiued, and the other forsaken. Two in the field: the one shalbe receiued, and the other forsaken. And they answered, and said to him: where Lord? He said vnto them, wheresoeuer the bodye shall be, thither will also the eagles bee gathered together.

And at that houre or day, to goe seke or prouide suche thynges, wherewith we commonly vse to setre a sure staigh for our life to come, as (for exaumple,) apparel, money, dwelling places or suche other thynges, shalbe none other, but casting awaie & leing of the life. And he putte forth a parable vnto them, signifying that men oughte alwaie to praie and not to be werie, saiyng: There was in a certaine citee a iudge, whiche feared not god, neither regarded man. And ther was a certain widowe in the same citee, & she came vnto him, saiyng: auenge me of myne aduersarie. And he would not for a while. But afterward he saied within hymselfe: Though I feare not God, not care for mā, yet because this widowe is importune vpon me, I will auenge hir, leste she come at the last & raill on me. And the Lord saied, heare what the vnrighteous iudge saieth. And shal not god auenge his elect whiche cri to day & night vnto hym, yea though he differre theim? I tell you that he will auenge theim, and that quickely. Neuertheleste, whan the sonne of man cometh shal ye fynde feith on the yearth?

That men ought alwaie to praie &c

And forasmuche as the last ende of the worlde, beeyng at hande, there shall aryse moste grieuous persecutiōs against the godlye, in somuche that if it were possible they wrought, euen the verye elect and chosen persones shalbe seduced, (albeit in verye deede the infallible preuersnes of the eiuil doeth neuer at any time surceasse to be cruell & full of trānye against the goode:) the Lord Jesus teacheth his disciples & seruauntes, that maie their aduersaries ther shal from none other place aske helpe or succour, but at the handes of God: neither goyng about any auengemente in the meane whyle, nor defendyng one displeasure receiued, with dooyng an other for it. That if God doore not at the first houre deliuer theim from affliction: per must they not therfore surceasse from praiyng. For he will vndoubtedly heare the prayers of his seruauntes, when opportunities of tyme shal be shal bee, and the delayng therof shall turne to the benefite of the Godly: yea, and so muche the more gricuously shal the ungodly bee oppressed, as they had perswaded themselues, that whatsoeuer they dyd therin, they shoulde dooe it, and no man to say blacke theyr ye. This lesson did the Lord Jesus with such a parable as here ensueth emprinte in the hertes of his disciples & seruauntes. There was (saieth he) in a certayne citee, a certain iudge or gouernour, beyng bothe a wicked man, and also void of al shame & honestee, as one that neither stood in any feare of God, ne had any reuerence towardes any mortal man. His wickednesse made hym in case that he feared not God: & his great power brought hym to the poynct that he wouldc shewe no reuerence to manne. And so it was, that in the same citie there was a certaine widowe, who beyng sore oppressed of her aduersarie, went vnto the sayd high iudge, in whose handes rested the highest power, and she prayed him of his helpe and ayd against the violent oppression of her aduersarye. Syr, (sayeth she) my matter is veray good and true, and yet am I ouertroden throughe the rychesse and frendshyp that myne aduersarie hathe in your courte. I am a poore widowe and alone woman destitute of frendes. I praye you see a redresse in the cause of my ryght against ỳ violence of mine aduersary. Where he was oftentimes thus spoken to by the widowe, yet neuertheless a longe tyme he wouldc not bee acknowen of the matter, nor wouldc not helpe the widowe, whereas suche greate power is geuen to certaine men euen for such a purpose onely, that they should be helpers and succouers of orphanes, of wardes beeyng in nonage, of widowes, & of poore folkes, againste the riche men & maynteners of byablevng matters. At the last whan she wouldc make none ende of crying vpon hym, the iudge begonne thus to thinke within hymselfe. Although I neither stand in feare of God, ne beare any reuerence to any man alive, yet because this widowe is importune vpon me with her vnfaciablenesse in that she will not bee answered, I wyll help to rid her from the oppression of her aduersarie, not for any good myndc that I beare her, but leste she wil els at length come againe, and beeing so many times shaken of, will with her raillyng sette a greate blurre on myne honestee and good name, in that I occupying the roume of the chiefe iustice & iudge in this citee, haue yet neuertheless wilfullye and stiffely leate a widowe bee without helpe or redresse, whan she was wrongfullye ouertroden. Whan Jesus had thus tolde out all this parable, he sayed by and by after it: Doe ye heare what this iudge saieth, beeing both an ungodly man, and an il disposed: Beeyng ouercomed with the importunitie of prayeng and entreatyng, he holpe the widowe: and God who is moste iuste, and mercifull towardes hys elected beeyng called vpon with nightly and also daily prayers and cryinges, wyll he weare deaffer and deaffer, and not deliuer his seruauntes from the violence of such as oppresse them, but wyll with a slowe and a patient myndc suffre theim to bee oppressed with afflictions and neuer see anye auengemente ne redresse therof: Nay, this I saie vnto you to bee bold on: he wil not suffre it to bee so: but eyther he wyll conuerte theyr hertes, in sort that their wyll being chaunged, they shall ceasse to dooe you any more affliction, or els he wil take awaie from theim habylitie and power to dooe harme, or els suche as bee hys elected, he wyl for altogether quickely deliuer from all euil, and remoue them to a place of rest euerlastyng. Iwys whan that same laste daye of iudgemente shall bee ons come, nowe shal neither Satan, nor his worzking tooles the yll

For whan the wickednelle of the ciuill sorte shall bee weaxen so high, that it can growe no higher: than shal the sonne of manne, sodainly come: and in verai dede sooner shal he come, than the ciuill menne thynketh for. But at the tyme whan the sonne of manne shall come, shall he (trowe ye) fynd feith vpon the yearthe? The texte.

And he tolde this parable vnto certaine whiche trusted in theimselfes that they were perfect, and despised other. Two men went vp into the temple to praie: the one a pharisee, and the other a publicane. The pharisee stoode and praied thus with hymselfe: God I thanke thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, vniuſt, aduoutrers, or as this publicane. I fast twyſe in the weeke. I geue tithe of al that I poſſeſſe. And the publicane standing a terre of, would not lift vp his eyes to heauen, but smote vpon his breſt, saying: God be thou merciſull to me a ſinner. I tel you this man departed home to his houſe iuſtified more then the other. For euery one that exalteth hymſelfe, shall be brought lower: And he that humbleth hymſelfe, shal bee exalted.

So with the parable afore goyng he putte ſuche people in a feare, as beeyng openly wicked, were daily ſcourges vnto the godlye. But there was a pharisaicall ſorte of righteous men, puttyng their trust in their owne woorkes, and preſumpteouſly taking vnto themſelfes the laude and title of righteouſneſſe by the ſame woorkes, whereas no creature is iuſt afore God: and ſuch dyd not onely ſtande in their owne conceiptes like fooles, but alſo in comparſon of theim ſelfes deſpiſed others, as ſinners, whereas the humilitie of the others is more acceptable before God, then the woorkes of anye ſuche. The Lorde Jeſus alwell againſt perſones of ſuche pharisaicall righteouſneſſe, as alſo to the coumforte of ſynners from the botome of theyr hertes miſliking themſelfes, putte foorth ſuche a parable as here enſueth.

Two men went vp into the temple to praie.

So it befel that twoo certaine perſones went vp into the temple for to praie, of whiche perſones the one was a Pharisee, and the other a Publicane. The Pharisee ſtāding nigh to the propiciatorie or mercieſeate, as it ye ſhould ſaie in Engliſhe, the high aulter, like one that was wooxthye to talke with God euē at his verye elbowe, praied in this ſorte within hymſelfe. I thanke the o God, for that I am not lyke vnto other menne, whiche liue by robbyng and ſtealyng, whiche encreaſe their ſubſtaunce by fraude and guyle, whiche pollute other marryed mennes beddes with aduoutrye, or finallye, whyche bearyng offices of inkampe and ſlaundre, dooe pieke the people of God for their princes pleaſure of whiche ſorte thys publicane here is one. I dooe not geue my ſelfe to exceſſiue eating and drinking, as the moſt parte of people dooe, but I faſt twyſe in the Sabboth, that is to ſaie, twyſe every weke, and ſo farre am I from defrauding of any bodye, that I geue cōtinually the tenth part of al my goodes in almes to the poore. This was the maner of prayeng of this the ſwellyng proude pharisee, who although he recited thynges that wer true, and gaue thankes to God: yet euen in this verai pointe he diſpleaſed the eyes of God, that he liked hymſelfe well, plaiyng the flaterer towarde hym ſelf, and full of deſpiteful woordes againſte the neighbour. The Publicane contrarie wiſe altogether miſliking hymſelf, becauſe hys conſcience pelded

hym gyltie of many sinnes, stode a farre of from the holy thynges, so muche ashamed and repentaunt in hymselfe, that he durst not so much as lyft vp his yes to heauen: but he knocked his brest, saiyng: O God be thou mercifull vnto me a synner. The pharisey did no more but geue thankes, as one y thought hymselfe to want nothyng vnto perfite godlynesse: neither dooeth he confesse any offences, whereas euē in this very prayeng he did most grieuous sye synne, makyng bauntes of his owne doynges, and despising one that was penitent, a proud presumptuous prayser of hymselfe, and a rathe accuser of the neighbour. The Publicane on the other parte maketh no rehersall ne mencyon at all of his well dooynges. He onely acknowlegyng his euils, knocketh his brest, that knewe what state it stode in, and lamentably calleth for the lordes mercie. Wyll ye knowe the ende of these contrarye maners of prayeng? The said Publicane who had cum a synner into the temple, wente his waye home more eightwous in the sighte of God, then that same Pharisee who thought hymselfe a man of moste perfite iustice. For whosoeuer magnifyeth hymselfe in his owne mynde, shalbe cast downe in the syghte of god. And whoso casteth hymselfe doune in his owne herte, shalbe exalted on high in the sight of God.

I saie vnto you: this man trusted in his prayer more than the other.

They brought vnto him also young children, that he should touche thē. When his disciples sawe it, they rebuked them. But Jesus (whan he had called them vnto him) said. Suffer children to cum vnto me, and forbid them not. For of suche is the kyngdom of god. Verilye I saye vnto you: Whosoeuer receyueth not the kingdom of god as a child, shall not enter therein.

The texte.

And beholde, an other occasion, whereby for the Lorde to commende vnto vs humilitie and softenes, coupled with simplicitie and plainesse. Mothers brought their young babes vnto Jesus, to the entente he should touche them and blesse them: thinkyng that it shoulde come to passe that thesame chyldren should by that meanes be in the more saferie frō suche chaunces and diseases as that age is commonly wonte to bee in daungier of. The disciples, whan they saw the thyng, rebuked the women, because thei did with suche crystyng matters trouble the lorde, hauyng otherwyse (as they thoughte) his handes ful enough of busynesse already. But Jesus, although he knewe al thissame to bee dooen by his said disciples of a certayn good diligence, declaring their readinesse, to dooe their duetie towardes hym, yet to exployte vnto vs an exaumple of simplicitie, of humilitie, and of innocencie, and al vnder one togeue a lesso vnto pastours, that they ought not to despise any body, be he neuer so meane or so weake, he called his disciples together vnto him, & saied: Suffre ye the children to cum vnto me, nor be not against it, that thei may be brought vnto me, for vnto suche belongeth the kyngdom of god. Leat an exaumple be shewed foorth vnto all creatures, that they may vnderstande to what degree of perfeccion they ought to grow. These litle ones knowe no falshons of eloquyng ne counterfaityng, they are not acquaynted with prydene haultnesse of spirite, they knowe not the way to strike against whan they are steiken, they can no skill to geue reuiling wordes again, thei knowe not what auarice meaneth, they can no skill of ambicio, it is mere innocency that is in them, it is mere simplicitie without any fraude or guile. This woorde I saye vnto you to truste vnto: the kyngdome of God receyueth none, but suche as bee reformed and chaunged accordyng to this paterne. Therfore onlesse a man cum to the doc-reine of the gospell with the lyke simplicitie that these children are of, he shal not enter into the kingdome of God.

The texte. And a certain rewler asked him, saying: Good maister, what ought I to do to obteine eternall life? Jesus said vnto him, why callest thou me good? None is good saue god onely. Thou knowest the cõmaundementes: Thou shalt not committe aduoutry: thou shalt not kill: thou shalt not steale: thou shalt not beare false witnesse: honour thy father and thy mother. And he said: all these haue I kept frõ my youth vp. When Jesus heard that, he said vnto him: yet lackest thou one thyng. Sell al that thou hast, and distribute vnto the poore, & thou shalte haue treasure in heauen, and cum folowe me. When he heard this, he was sorye, for he was very ryche. When Jesus sawe that he was sorye, he said: With what difficultie shal they that haue money, entre into the kingdom of god? It is easier for a camel to go through a needles eye, then for a riche man to enter into the kingdome of god. And they that heard it, said: And who than can be saued? And he said. The thynges which are impossible with men, are possible with God.

Good maister what oughte I to doe?

Than agayne came there vnto Jesus one of the great states and the heade men, as one that shoulde bee euen in verye facte a plain declaracion, what it ment that Jesus had saied concernyng the state of chyldren: And thus sayed the great man: Good maister what maye I dooe to atteyne euerlastyng lyfe? Than Jesus willyng to notifie that this surname, good, serueth to none, but to god onely, who of his very propre nature is good, aunswered hym thus:

Why callest thou me good? &c.

Why dooest thou cal me good? None is good, sauyng god only: not for that the lorde dooeth not acknowlage the surname of good, as due vnto hym, as touchyng that he was God: but because the sayed ryche man attributed the woorde good vnto Jesus, as beeyng a man, yea and woulde peraduenture haue taken it to himself too, if any such occasion had cum in place: therefore did not after a right sorte call Jesus good, whom he did not yet beleue to bee god. And for this cause did the lord at that time refuse the honour of this title, because he wel vnderstode the demaunder of the question not to be vtterly voyde of swellyng pryde, as one that thought himself to abounde in many good woorkes. And Jesus because he would shewe foorth the mannes sore,

Thou knowest the cõmaundements.

saied: Thou knowest the preceptes of Moses lawe, that is to wete: Thou shalt not kyll: thou shalt not committe aduoutrye: Thou shalt not doe theft: Thou shalt not beare false witnesse: Honour thy father and thy mother. To these woordes sayed the other, as one myndyng to beare away a prayse and commendacion of perfite righte ousnesse: All these poyntes euery one of them, haue I duely kept euen from the beginnyng of my youth.

This saiyng was not verye from that saiyng of the Pharisee aboue specified: but it was a great dele short of the symplicitie of the young chyldren last afore declared. One faulte therfore there was opened hereby, but there was an other priuie faulte hidden besides also, whiche made him vnapte for the kyngdome of God. Jesus therefore because he would discouer ỹ other fault too, said. Thou lackest one pointe yet. That if thou wylt enter the kingdome of the gospell, goe thy waies, sell all that euer thou hast in thy possession, and by distributyng it abrode in almes to the poore, laye vp a treasure for thy selfe in heauen. That dooen, beeyng free, and rydde from all lette and encombraunce, come than, and folowe me. The sayed demaunder when he had heard these woordes, was striken with great sorow, for he was exceeding of the kyngdome of heauen, that neuertheleſſe he could not contemne the ryches of this worlde: turned to his diſciples, and as one beyng in a great meruail, he ſaied: How hardely ſhall thoſe whiche are heauy laden with the burden of rycheſſe, enter into the kyngdome of God through the narowe gate? For an easier thing it is for a camell to perce through the eye of a nedle, then for a riche man to entre the kingdō of god. The diſciples heeryng with theſe woordes ſore troubled in their myndes, ſaied: If no ryche mā do entre thyther, who than can be ſaued? for one ſhall fynd but a fewe perſons, but either they haue ryches or couet to haue. But he recomforted the diſmaiyng of his diſciples again, ſaiyng: The thing whiche with men is vnpoſſible, is poſſible enough with god. It is not of mannes power to deſpyſe rycheſſe, and ſuche other commodities as followe at the taile of ricbeſſe. But this ſtrength and ſtoutenes of hert dooeth god geue vnto ſuche as through ſimple and vnfeyned beleeuyng, dooe chewe themſelues apte for to receyue his gyftes. And he is with god no longer taken for worldely ryche, whoſoeuer hath laied away from hym the loue of money, and in ſuche wyſe poſſeſſeth his money, that he wil with all his herte leaue the ſame, as often as reſpecte of health and ſaluacion euerlaſtyng ſhall require it.

It is eaſier for a camell to goe through a nedles eye. &c.

The thynges whiche are vnpoſſible. &c.

Than Peter ſaid: Loe we haue forſaken all and folowed thee. He ſaid vnto them. Verelye I ſay vnto you, there is no man that hath forſaken houſe, either father or mother, either bretheren, or wife, or children (for the kyngdome of gods ſake) whiche ſhall not receiue much more in this worlde, and in the world to cum, life euerlaſtyng.

The texte.

Of theſe woordes the Apoſtles conceyue a good hope, the more parte of whom had left altogether whatſoeuer it was that thei were owners of to fore. Therfore in the behalf of thē al ſpeaketh Peter, ſaiyng: loe we haue left al, and haue folowed thee, we haue perfourmed euē ſame point alſo, which thou diddeſt earneſtly require of the ryche man. Than although it was but a very ſmall portion that Peter and Andrewe had left (albeeit if they had had more, more would they haue forſaken:) The Lorde commeth them thanke for their readineſſe in that they had doen, and becauſe they ſhould not nede to repente them of that they had dooen, ſheweth that great gain it is, to haue loſt worldely rycheſſe for the kyngdome of God. For in lieu and place of tranſitory and vyle thynges by thē conteined, bothe here in this worlde the mynd and ſoule is enryched with goodes heauenly, and alſo in the worlde to come endleſſe felicitie is repaied for them. Than furthermore hereupon thus ſayd the Lorde. This I auouche vnto you for a matter not to be doubted of: not to you onely ſhall it turne to great gaines in the ende, to haue left for my ſake the litle ſlender poſſeſſions that ye had: but alſo, whatſoeuer perſon ſhall for the reſpect of the kingdom of god forſake either houſe, or father, or mother, or bretheren, or wife, or children: he ſhall bothe in this preſēt life receiue much mo thynges and alſo better then he lefte: and moreouer in the world to cum, he ſhall receiue life euerlaſtyng.

Jeſus toke vnto him the twelue, and ſaid vnto them: Behold we goe vp to Jeruſalem, and al thalbe fulfilled, that are written by the prophetes of the ſonne of man. For he ſhalbe deliuered vnto the Gentiles, and ſhalbe mocked, and deſpitefully entreated & ſpetted on: & when they haue ſcourged him, they will put him to death. And the third day he ſhal ariſe again. And they vnderſtode none of theſe thinges. And this ſaiyng was hid from them, ſoo that they perceyued not the thynges whiche are ſpoken.

The texte.

After that he had with these sayinges somewhat lifted vp and cheered the herres of his disciples agayn: he tooke with him the twelue apostles, whō it was not behoueable to be ignorannt of any thyng which were wrought and doen for the redēption of mākind. And now beginneth he euen sūwhat openly and plainly to beate the matter into their heades concerning ꝑ death which he should at Ierusalem wittingly & willingly dye, accordig to the forsesayinges of the prophetes. For he knew very wel that they should be very sore dismaied and discūforted with the death of their maister, and for that consideracō he doeth often beate this tale into their heades, to the ende that at the laste it may be engrauen in their hertes, and that by a litle and a litle, they myght bee enured to abide the matter, which as yet their eares abhorred to heare mēcōned or spoken of. And verily this was none vnbeleefe in theym, but a certain earnest loue strōgly working in thē towardes their maister. Generally therfore from the cumpany, he begoonne to open vnto them, that the tyme of hys death did now approch. Behold (saieth he) we are now goyng vp towardes Ierusalem, and there shal all thinges be accomplished that haue been writtē by the prophetes concernyng the soone of man. For he must be deliuered into the handes of the Gentiles, and of them shall he be scorned and scourged, and spetted on. And after that they shall haue scourged him, and shall haue myni-stred vnto hym all kyndes of reprooche and vilanie in wordes, thei shal in fine put hym to death: but he shal aryse agayne the third day from death to lyfe.
But this talke, because it was nothyng swete ne pleasaunt, could in no wise sinke in to the Apostles stomakes: (as commōly we are harde of beleefe in such matters as we would not with our good willes haue to bee true.) And they coulde in no wyse perceiue the mysterie of the crosse, whereby hence redēpcīō and saluacion should by a newe found conueighaunce of god, cum forth and issue vnto the worlde. They had no luste ne fansy to beleue that a man whom they loued so entierly should dye of suche a violent kynde of death: neyther coulde they possibly beleue it likely, that suche an one should be put to deathe by the handes of the wicked, as was hable to do such wonderfull actes, and which had so many tymes escaped oute of the handes of suche as had attempted to assail him & fasten vpon him: and finally they doubted not, but that it myghte be afterwarde an easier thyng for hym to bryng to passe, not to dye at al, thā to reuiue again from death, as he said he would, yea and they thought it better not to dye at all, then after death to bee restored to life again.

And althoughe they coulde not doubte of their maisters trueth in hys wordes: yet did they in this maner flatter their owne affections: & they enter-preted that in these wordes of Iesus there lay priuily hidden some figurate & mistical maner of speakyng, suche as the lord did of a special property that was in him very muche and often vse to bryng in, begilyng by meanes of that same colourable speakig, not only the people, but also the very apostles sel-ues: as (for exaūple) whā he willed thē to beware frō ꝑ leauē of ꝑ pharisees:
whā he aūswered that he had an other kind of meate whiche he hougred for:
whā he taught thē for a lessō, that a camel might soner passe through a nedles eye, then a riche man entre into the kingdome of heauen: whan (signifiyng that his doctrine must be receiued and conueyed throughly into the very bowels of the soule,) he saied that no man shoulde haue lyfe in tyme to come, onlesse the same shoulde first eate his flesshe, and dryncke his blonde: And finally whā

he promysed that hymselfe would within thzee dayes space reedifie the temple, after it were destroyed by the Jewes: with suche suspicions and conjecturers as these, did the Apostles flatter their affeccion, and in dede hearde the woordes of Jesus, but they hearde them as it had been halfe in their slepe, but as for the pith and effectuall meanyng of the woordes, they did vttrely not vnderstande. And this was doen as the state of the tyme than required, by the Lordes permission and sufferaunce, to thend, partely that they might by a litle at once better and better bee enured to the thyng, whiche shoulde afterwarde bee incomparably bitter vnto them, and partely because they shoulde not before the tyme scatter themselues abroade by fleyng from their mayster, by whose communication they were yet in many matters to be schooled. They could not yet throughlye see ne perceyue the pzuyties of Goddes worshyng and conueighaunce, because they had the yes of theyr mynde in maner sterke blinde with muche foggie derkenesse.

The texte. And it came to passe, that as he was come nigh vnto Hiericho, a certayne blynde man sate by the wayes syde beggyng. And whan he hearde the people passe by, he asked what it meuet. And they sayed vnto hym, that Jesus of Nazareth passed by. And he cryed, saying: Jesu thou sonne of Dauid, haue mercie on me. And they which went before, rebuked hym, that he should holde his peace. But he cryed so muche the more, thou sonne of Dauid, haue mercie on me. And Jesus stoode still, and commaunded hym to be brought vnto hym. And when he was come nere, he asked hym, saying: what wilt thou that I doe vnto thee? And he sayed: Lorde, that I maye receyue my sight. And Jesus sayed vnto hym, receyue thy sight, thy fayth hath saued thee. And immediately he receyued his sight, and folowed hym praysyng God. And all the people, whan they sawe it, gaue prayse vnto God.

But yet muche more wer the others dymme of sight, which were of lesse familiaritie with the Lorde. For the fountayne of healthis the knowyng of Jesus. For to know him is to haue perfect sight. Feith is bright light, the earthly desires and lustes of this world are darknesse. And beholde a casuall chaunce, which mate laye playn before your yes, how we maye see Jesus: in one blind man is set foorth an exaumple, how the blindnesse of the soule maye bee taken awaye from many. There sate one in his waye, a man depryued of the sighte of his bodily yes. But (Lorde) how many were here folowyng the trayne of Jesus, which sawe a great deale worse in theyr soules, whan euen the verye twelue Apostles had theyr yes yet styll ouergon with the derke slyme of ignorannce, that they couldenot vnderstande the Lordes manifest sayinges. Than so it befell, that when Jesus beeyng on his waye towardes Hierusalem, was nowe not farre from Hierico, there sate a certayne blynde manne by the highe wayes syde beggyng. This blynde creature, whan alwell by the noyse of hearyng folkes speake, as also by trampleyng of feete, he perceyued verye well that a great multitude of people passed by, demaunded what the mattier was (as in dede suche kynde of people are so muche the more curious and inquisitiue of suche thynges, because they lacke theyr yes.) Answere was made vnto him, that Jesus of Nazareth was passyng by that same waye.

The partie immediately hauyng conceyued in his herte a feythful trust by reason of suche thynges as he had hearde of Jesus: cryed out aloude, saying: Thou Jesus the sonne of Dauid, haue pitie and compassion vpon me. Vnto his importunitie he added also swete woordes of flatterye, and that was euen metely well accordyng to the faction and guyse of beggers. But the companye that went afore Jesus, rebuked him, and bidde him to holde his peace, suspectyng that he would haue craued an almes of the common rate, and also featyng leste beyng a slouenly felowe and vnsightly in his geare, and a common begger by the high wayes syde, he should haue been somewhat noysfull or troublesome vnto the Lorde.

But the blynde manne the more that the people clattered agaynst hym, so muche the more earnestly dyd he crye, repeatyng styll the same wordes whiche he had spoken afore: Thou Jesus, sonne of Dauid, haue mercie vpon me. Because he could not see Jesus, he did so muche the more strayne his voyce, as a man beyng ignorannt how ferre Jesus whom he called vnto, was from him. Than Jesus who had made as though he heard hym not, though he had cried out with a loude voyce once or twyse or thryse afore, of purpose to make the faithfull truste of the parte the more euident to all the cumpanye, at the laste stayghed on his waye, and commaunded the blynde man to be brought vnto hym, of purpose to occasion the eyes of all the whole cumpanye to the diligente beholdyng of the myracle.

What will thou that I do vnto thee?

And whan he was come to Jesus, the lorde asked this question of him: what is thy will that I should doe vnto thee? It was not ignorannte to him what thyng the blynde man wished to haue: but he woulde haue the confession of the euill vttered in wordes, to thende the myracle might bee the more euident. For some are wont to feigne a blyndnesse in themselues, that they maye thereby receyue the larger almes: yea, and some there were peraducture in the company, which if they had been in the blynde mannes case, would not haue been bolde to hope for any further thyng, then some almes or rewarde in money. For the Lorde also, though after the estimacion of the worlde, he was but poore, yet did he vse to geue vnto the poore, some portion of suche thyngs as were geuen hym by his frendes for his sustentacion. But the blynde man with a great assiaunce and faith, sayed: lorde make thou, that I maye haue my sight agayne.

In these wordes did he craue the thyng, whiche by any that was no more but a mere man, could not bee assured vnto hym, castyng no doubtes but that Jesus sooth with, bothe could do it, as one moste mightiest, and also woulde, as one moste mercifull. Jesus therfore makyng a lyke quicke aunswere to this quicke and ready fayth, restored hym his eyes with a worde agayn, saying: receiue thou thy sight agayn. Thy faith hath saued thee. He had seen Christ with his faith ere he sawe hym with the eyes of his body. This fayth verily is that thyng whiche obteyneth all without exception of the moste merciful lorde: this fayth it is whiche in the thickest derknesse of synne, yet calleth a ferre of to Jesus, that he maye shewe mercie. The conscience and priuie knowelage of his naughty synnefull actes paste, doeth tangle agaynst him whan he cryeth: but feruentnesse of fayth doeth so muche the more eagrely strayne the voyce.

Thy fayth hath saued thee.

Suche manner beggers doeth the Lorde Jesus loue: and for none other consideracion doeth he many tymes make delaye of that that is asked, sauing that the parties whiche is the begger maye be worthie to haue the more benefite. And in moste diepe derknesse do suche people lye, which worshipp stockes and stones in stede of God: to whome they: moneye, to whome their bealye is their god: who are bondeseruauntes to ambicion, to leacherie, and suche as set the world in an vproare throughout furious rageyng warres. Suche persones if they cannot yet come, to approche nere vnto Jesus, because they cannot see: yet at leste wise at the nopse of suche as doe throughoute the whole worlde preache the glorie of Jesus, lear them alike: what matter is this? And whan they shall

knowe that Jesus is passyng by, leat them not suffre the preseme occasion to slippe away, but leat them with pietcous cryng wery his eares: And in case the priuie conscience of their naughty and euil dedes afore past, counsail the to kepe silence: leat the clamoure of the faythfull beleuyng herte so muche the more lustaunt ly knocke at the dores of his eares. Jesus is not deafe ne harde of hearyng to any body that alkerly with faithful trust in hi: & he is of power hable to gene that is alked. He cries passeth by, but he wil not go very ferre paste, if one strayne his voyce. And happy is ỳ begger that euer he was born, at whose voice Jesus stayeth on his way. And what mervaill, if he stayed at the voice of one speakyng vnto him, sence he vouchsaued to cũ so ferre a iourney, vnto a thepe that was lost? But more happy is the blind man, after he is brought vnto Jesus. For now is he very nere to his health. Neither cã he lõg be blind, whoso hath approched to ỳ fountain of al light. That same lord being the fountain of all glory doeth not put away the begger from him, a man being a sinner dispaineth the neighbour. After that thou art cum in presẽce afore Jesus, after that thou art gon away frõ thy selfe, there is no nede of any long prayyng: no more but speake the word what thou wouldest haue, (but speake it with a perfite faith and affiaũce cõceiued not on thine own merites, but on his great power, and no lesse goodnes.) And immediatly that thy sight cum again and saluaciõ both together. For at once, assone as Jesus had said: Loke thou vp, he had his sight, and of a beggar, became a folower of Jesus traine, and an open declarer of gods goodnesse. Yea, and moreouer the people also whan thei had seen so notable a miracle, gaue laude and prayse vnto god.

The. xix. Chapter.

The texte. And he entered in, and went through Hiericho: and behold, there was a mã named Zacheus, whiche was a rewler among the publicanes, and was riche also. And he sought meanes to see Jesus, what he should be, and could not for the presse, because he was lytle of stature. And he ranne before, and clymed vp into a wild figgetree, to see him: for he was to cum that way. And whẽ Jesus came to the place, he loked vp, and saw him, and said vnto him: Zachee, cum doune at once, for to day I must abide at thy house. And he came doune hastily, and receiued him ioyfully. And whan they sawe it, they all grutched, saying: he is gon to tarry with a man that is a sinner. And Zacheus stode forth, and said vnto the Lord: behold Lord, the half of my goodes I gene to the poore. And if I haue done any man wrong, I restore him fower folde. Jesus sayed vnto him, this day is healthy happened vnto this house, because that he also is becum the chylde of Abraham. For the sonne of man is cum to seke, and to saue that whiche was lost.

And this same blynde man to whome the Lord restored the vse of the light, doth in a figure not vnaptly signyfie the people of the Gentiles. For as for the Jewes, ỳ lawe gaue sum piece of lyghte vnto them. But the Gentiles laye in moste diepe derknesse of ignorauince, in so muche, that among the same a greate manye there were whiche verily beleued, that there was no God at all, and some others beleued that there were Goddes innumerable, but the same more full of mischiefe and abomination, then the very men selfe. Againe sum thought, that God tooke no care for the gouernaunce of worldly thinges. Yea and sum also there were, which reputed and vsed the cõne, the moone, oxen, dogges, apes, yea and lekes and opniõs for Gods. Among the Gentiles there were, that knewe no lawe fulne determinate bandes of matrimony, but fulfilled the lust of the body in going together one with another after the maner of bruit beastes. Sum there were also with whom it was accounted a naturall thyng to haue killed their parentes whã they were aged. Others again there were, among whom it was a thyng lawful and vsuall to eate mans fleathe. Sum there were with whom it was an highe poynte of deuocion and of seruyng God, to kyll their moste derely beloued children for a sacrifice to this or that deuil. What cã there be more lamentable then this blyndnesse? And yet this blynd man beeyng poore and destitute of all vertues, perceiued Jesus whan he passed by (whõ the nacion of the Jewes put away whan he came to them) he stroyned his voyce of fayth, cryyng aloude. Thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpon me. He costrained Jesus to stay in his goyng: he deserued to be asked what he would haue doen to hym: he confessed his blindnesse: he wed the desire of his herte: loid that I may haue my syght: he receiued that he plainely in fewe woordes craued. Of a wurthipper of monstreous thynges he was made a wurthipper of Jesus: of a bondseruaunt to deuils and to all maner vices, he was made a disciple and a folower of Jesus: of a common beggar and crauer of a miserable almes, he was made a publisher of the power of god. And many a tyme more then once or twise are exãples of this kinde laied in the lappes of the Jewes, to the end that either they should amẽd frõ their vnbeleefe, or els they should make it open & manifest for the time to cum, that they were worthily cast of, as me that would not be made whol. And this figure certes was shewed at the enteraũce of the citie of Hiericho: but an other more euident exãple sheweth it self anon after within the citie selfe. For as the loid beig entred into Hiericho, was goyng along through the middes of the citie encõpaced on euery side with an exceadyng thicke prẽsse of the multitude of all sortes: there was a certain man zacheus, hauyng his name of the thing and propertie that was in him (that is to were, a man feruent in the earnest loue and desyre of righteousnesse) whereas in dede he was an head man among the publicans, yea and riche withall, and whereas neither the kynde or trade of his liuyng, ne the pãpering of fortune, did very well agree with suche an hert. And holde he was with a great desire to see Jesus, to the entent he might know hym by sight also, of whõ the bruite and fame had spred abrode thinges so worthye to be marualled at. He beleued and also loued that he had heard, and for that cause muche accordyng to the exaumple of the inward desire of Simeõ, and of the Patriarches, he did with an holy desirefulnes couet to satisfie his eyes too, with the blissefull and happye sighte of hym, as one that would haue attempted greatter thynges then that too, sauyng that softenesse and humilitie was a let therof, and euen for that very pointe the worthier to haue the more fruicion of the presẽce and cumpany of Jesus. I desire to haue a sight of Jesus had a long tyme holde Herode too, he saw him at last, and did away with him in despite, for in vain doth he see Jesus, who is not seen again of Jesus. But Jesus had seen zacheus, before that zacheus euer sette eye on hym. Herode would fain haue seen him that he might haue delyted his curyous eyes beyng a kyng as he was, by shewyng of sum myracle afore hym. But zacheus beyng desirous to see him what he should bee, because he woulde knowe

There was a man named Zacheus.

what man he was, and as he was, that is to wete, thatsame onelye soonne of God the authour and worker of all saluacion vnto all creatures, beeleuyng and trustyng in hym. It is no greate matter to see Jesus after the flesh with suche lyke yes as the Pharisees sawe him withall euery day, & yet had hym in derision. But the yes of the disciples are eatnestly reported to be blissed, who had deserued to se, that was to many princes of the earth denied. Simó the sone of Jonas is by ỹ mouth of Jesus pronounced blessed, in that he sawe who Jesus was, whan he gaue this testimony of him: Thou arte that same Christe, the sone of ỹ liuing God: but the Jewes sawe not who he was in that they sayed: Is not this Joseph the Carpentars sonne? but vnto the godly desire of zacheus shame fastnesse was a lette, that he did not breake into Jesus perforce through the cumpany, and the great multitude of people stãdyng so thicke round about Jesus on euery side, was an other let. The shorte stature of his bodye was also the third lette. For he was a verye lowe man of stature. And lowe menne spiritually are suche, as are incumbente and doo rest on filthy or vile and transitory thynges. For lowe and basse it is, whatsoeuer this worlde hath, if it be compared with the maiestie of the gospel. And of such persons cannot Jesus be seen, except they conueigh themselues into some high place: Jesus beeyng aboue of a great heigth will not bee seen but of the lowe. Jesus beeyng in the middes among the lowe and vulgar presse of the people, is not seen, but of suche as haue troden the highestе toppe of al worldly thynges vnder their feete. And therfore to the ende that he might bee seen of all the litle lowe persones on euery side throughout all nations of the worlde, hymself afterward climed vp to the wood of the crosse standing aloft of a great heigth. Zacheus than beyng litle and lowe, not onely of stature of his bodye, but also in humblenesse of hert: to the entent he would stand aloft and see Jesus beyng alowe on the grounde, ranne afore, and toke vp an high place in ỹ way there as Jesus was to passe by. And an high stãding as good as it had been in a pulpit, he got ready for hym in a wylde figetree, whiche is there called a Sycomore (because it bringeth forth figges of the owne right kynde that other figtrees be of, and by reason therof is also called a figge of Egypt, and yet in leafe it resembleth the mulbery tree.) A great presse of the Jewes enuironed Jesus round about on euery side. The law had gon afore, the propheres also had gon afore, & that present age did both on the one side and the other close him in round about. Yea & yet at this day the nacio of the Jewes do se come behind after him: they learne what thynges Jesus dyd, & what thynges he taught: and yet can they not see who thatsame is of whom & by whom they ought to hope for saluacion. Zacheus renning afore, preuerteth this felicitie, bearing verily a figure of ỹ gentiles. What is the cause therof? forsoth because the Jewe remaineth yet still alowe on the grounde, & cleueth to the carnalitie of the lawe. And Jesus is not seen, but onely of suche as frõ the lowe and basse lettre of the lawe do auaūce vp theselues to ỹ lofty sence of the spirite. Doune out of this high standyng one may well see Jesus, who he is, and where he is. Otherwise in case a man remain still beneath amongest ỹ throng, that is to say, if thou haue no smatche at all ne sauouring of any excellent good thyng aboue the cõmon sorte: thou shalt oftentimes heare fame deceitfull saying: loe here is Christ, and loe yonder he is. The pharisei they crie: loe here is Jesꝰ. The sadducees, they cry, behold, here he is. The Ebeonites nites, they crye: behold, he is here. In other poynteth to ſum one of the Phariſaicall ſorte, clad in a blacke frocke or cope, and ſaieth: loke this way, here is Chriſt. In other again, sheweth towardes an other of the Phariſaicall ſorte goyng in a whyte wede, and ſayeth: beholde, here is Chriſt: an other ſelowe shewyng many ſondry colours and shapes of veſtures, crieth here is Chriſte, here, here, here. In other sheweth to one that eateth nothig but fiche, & ſaieth: here is Chriſt. In other sheweth the gelded ſort that are forbidden to mary, and ſaieth: here is Chriſte. O Jewiſche and vnbeleuyng nacio. Art thou mynded or willing to ſe Chriſt? Clymme vp to the tree on high, and take vnto thee the iyes of Zacheus. He is not fain to ſee the robe of Jeſ⁹, but he coueteth to ſee and know his face. And the face of Jeſus is couered in ꝑ holy ſcriptures. Drawe aſide the vaile, lift vp thine vnderſtandyng to tho thinges whiche are within: & thou ſhalt ſee Jeſus, thou ſhalt ſee from whence true healthe and redēpciō iſſueth forth vnto vs. The phariſee, he goeth ſettyng bolt vpryghte, beyng in an high conceipte of hymſelf, and takyng vnto himſelfe as his owne due right, the praiſe of righteouſnes, and takyng vnto hymſelf the knowlage of the lawe: and whilehe thinketh hymſelfe as great a man as nedeth to bee euen with the largeſt, and nigh enough vnto Chriſt euen harde at his elbow: he will not vouchefaſe but thinketh skorne to vſe the ſure helpe of the tree: but Zacheus beyng lowe in his owne iyes, both climmed vp to the tree, and ſeeth that he wicheth to ſee. yea & peraduēture this figtree too was like vnto that ſame other figtree, whiche the lord accurſed, becauſe that by the freſche greneſſe of the leaues, it made one that were hungrie beleue that he ſhould fynd fruite vpon it, where as in dede it had none: yet it was nowe tyme that after the figures of the law, and after the holy ſaiynges of the prophetes, it ſhould bring forth the fruite of euangelical godlines. This was that ſame figtree, which the Lord commaunded to be cutte vp by the roote, onleſſe, vnto whō doūg wer laid about the rote therof, it would leaue to be ſtill baraīn, and it was nigh barain in dede, had not zacheus climmed vp & ſtand vpon it. That ſame ſtemme of the Judaical figtree, brought forth groſſe, vnſauery, and vnrype people: but after that zacheus had climed vp the tree, that is to ſay, aſſoone as the people of the Gentiles was graffed in: now begonne it to bring forth fruite, ſuch as the Lord Jeſus loueth. Of the Jewes he was many hundred yeres loked for: at laſt he came vnto thē, he walked to and fro dayly in coumpany with them, and yet was not knowen among theym. The people of the Gentiles had no more but heard of the fame and report of Jeſus: and beyng enkiendled with loue to know the ſame Jeſus, whō the Jewes hanged vpon the tree, they came before the Jewes in feruentnes of faith: and acknowelagyng their own vnrighteouſnes, lowe as they wer, contemned the lettre of ꝑ lawe, conſēned the ceremonies and figures (which the Jewes euē yet at this day enbrace for the very true ſubſtaūce of the thynges ſelfes,) and thorough euangelicall faith they ſee Jeſus paſſing by in his Apoſtles, and acknowlage hym, and therby deſerue to haue Jeſus cum to them to be their geaſte, and of his owne offre to ſoiourne in their houſe, foraſmuche as the vnbeleſe of the Jewes had erpulſed and banished hym away frō them. All this while dooeth litle zacheus ſitte ſtill in the tree with ready iyes lokyng for Jeſus that was yet cummyng a good preatie way of, and was not yet throughly taughte by what marke he mighte knowe Jeſus, ſauyng onely that he was in a perfite hope and trust of the thyng whiche he earnestly wished and desired. But whan the people came to the sycomore tree, zacheus peraduenture was a matter of laughter, and a good sporte to a great many, forasmuche as beyng a welthie ryche man, and in the office of customer, he stoode alofte in a tree to bee a gazer vpon one man and no mo. For he coueted not to know any other man saueng onely Iesus. Than Iesus beyng delited with the notable fatnesse of the man, whiche fatnesse he shewed by his verye facte, by his countenaunce, and by his earnest lookyng with his yes: albeit Iesus had espyed hym alofte too, yet to shewe vnto the Iewes an exsaumple of prompt beleuyng, he cast vp his yes on high, and sawe zacheus. And looke for no lesse at all tymes then some notable benefite of saluacion, as often as Iesus doeth vouchesafe to looke vpon anye persone. For his yes haue a medicinable kinde of charming. The other sought no more but onely to see hym: but in vayne doeth suche a partie see Iesus, whō Iesus doeth not agayne vouchesalue to behold with his yes. Iuaunce thyselfe vp from lowe and vile thynges: and Iesus will loke vp vnto thee. The loking of Iesus vpon anye man hath a porcion of good lykelyhood to come: but a matter and token of greater blysse it is to heare Iesus voyce. For where zacheus did nomore ne none other but beholde Iesus, the Lorde of his owne mere motion, sayed vnto hym, callyng hym euen by his name too, as a manne knowen vnto hym: zacheus come thou down quickely, for this daye muste I soiourne in thy houle. We haue heard how the Lorde hath oftentymes goen to dyners to menes houles whā he hath been desyred: but we haue not at anye tyme heard that euer he dyd of his owne mynde come in and make hymselfe a geaste with any man whan he was not bydden. Yea and so to do is of all men for the moste parte, taken for a poynte of homely curtesie, but the Lorde had beholden the affeccion and herte of the man within, who sette so muche by hauyng a sighte of hym, as he passed by. He would haue assayed somewhat ferther hadde not his owne priute knowelage of his vnwoorthinesse been a lette therof. Thus dyd he thinke in his owne minde: Blessed are these that haue had the happe to cleue vnto suche an one, and whose happe it is to beholde his face daylye in presence with hym, and whose chaunce it is to heare his voyce standyng harde by hym. The Iewes and none others haue so muche good happe. I am a Publicane. It is euen with the largest for suche an one as I am, to haue hadde a syghte of hym as he passed by. There had come no woorde oute of his mouthe to bydde Iesus to his house, but suche an herte was an exceadyng courteous bidder of a geaste: and the Lord Iesus loueth well to be bidden after suche a sorte. Suche an one, as vpon acknowelageyng of his owne weakenesse in his conscience, dareth not bee so bolde as to craue the thyng which he wisheth, and in his herte would fayn haue, suche an one doeth obteyne more, then another that biddeth Iesus to his house, as though he would bynde Iesus vnto hym, for dooyng hym suche a pleasure. Peter neuer came nerer vnto Christ, then whan he sayed: Goe out awaye from me mayster, for I am a felowe that am a synner. That other man also was a pithythie and an earnest bidder of Iesus, which sayed vnto hym: Maister, I am not a manne worthie that thou shouldeste entre vnder the roufe of my house: For Iesus was now alreadie in the sayed parties house (whiche was a certayn Centurion) whan his young felowe was made whole, though Iesus bodye came not there. For there is Iesus, where soeuer is health and recouerie. And here Iesus thirsted the redemption of mankinde, and therefore whan Iesus came to the place he looked vp.

Zacheus come downe at once.

Luke. b. Luke. bii. Math. bviii.

fore he biddeth Zacheus to come down quickely. For nowe was it time that redemption whiche was to passe awaye from the Iewes, shoulde bee transposed and putte ouer to the congregacion of the Gentiles: for there muste Iesus sojourne and abyde vntil the consummacion and verye last ende or closing vp of all tymes to come, because he might not be suffred to abyde emong the Iewes.

And he came downe haste ly.

From an high he had stand watchyng for Iesus thoughe feithe he came downe to the office and duetie of godly deuocion: for it is not enough to vieu Iesus ✠ to gase vpon hym, as often as he nedeth a place of sojournyng: and therof hath Iesus nede, as ofte as ꝑ neighbour hath nede. And what doeth Zacheus hereupon not a woorde doeth he geue to aunswere (for earnest affeccion of the herte doeth often vse to take awaye a mannes speakyng but he doeth as he is bidden without making any tarrianuce, down cometh he quickely. For it is not conuenient to tarrie, whansoeuer Iesus calleth vs. The Iewes were called, and they make theyr excuses: but Zacheus beyng verye forward and full of reioycyng, entertayned Iesus in his house. O raiserable synagogue that it was, whiche laste a geaste of Iesus: and O happie house of the churche that it is, which thoughe hir good prompticnesse did prouoke Iesus the authour and geuer of all heauenly blisse to come vnto it. Well thus nowe thou seest the original begynnyng of the churche beeyng gathered together of the gentiles. Nowe consider well a saumple and paterne of the Iewishe enuie. The people, whan they sawe Iesus so muche enclined towardes the fauour of the Publicane, that of his owne voluntarie motion he had bid hymselfe as a geaste into his house:

He is gone to tarrye with a man that is a sinner.

made a murmouryng because he had gon to sojourne with a felowe that was a synner. O righteousnesse foule stayned and odious before god, whiche coulde rather mynde to disdeigne, then to bee healed: ✠ could rather mynde to grutche at the neighbour, then to leat the same haue any parte with it. To a felowe (q they) that is a synner: and as though it wer not the principal sinne of al other, to haue enuie at the neyghbour, and as though suche an one maye bee an honest man, which grutcheth that his brother should bee in the state of grace.

Why stādest thou without the doores of the congregatiō, thou enuious Iewe? It is open for the to entre in also, if thou wilt. That in case thou refuse so to do, yet hath Iesus determined to abide in zacheus house. The Gentiles are not a litle proude of suche a geaste, whom they had neuer looked for. And so muche the better welcome it is, because it hath so happened, not onelye without any theyr deserupng, but also contrary to theire expectacion. And euen as murmouryng was made nowe at this presente agaynste Iesus: so was there a great murmouryng made afterwarde agaynst Peter, for Cornelius the Centurion, Actes. 11. whan it was sayed vnto hym: wherfore hast thou gon in vnto men vncircumcised? but what is here doen all this while? Zacheus contemnyng the murmouryng of the people Iudaicall, standeth before Iesus, maketh suit also to bee taken into the noumbre of his disciples, shewyng thereby how ferre he had growen and proceded forwarde. For he sayeth vnto Iesus: behold O Lorde, behold lord halfe of my goodes I geue to the poore.

I geue awaye halfe of my gooddes emong the poore, and in case I haue defrauded any man of a ferthyng, I here promise to geue hym fower tymes as muche agayn for it. Hearest thou this thou Pharisee? Zacheus maketh no rehearsall of his oblacions or sleaghyng of beastes in sacrifice, not choyse of meates, not he b:yngeth with hym the wo:kes of charitie. In these poyntes, the synner is better then the iust persons, and the Publicane passeth suche as glo:ye of their owne holynesse. Fo: the sayde Pharisee beeyng a setter fo:th of his owne manyfold good dedes, he gaue but only the tenth parte of his gooddes to the poo:e: this man gaue the one halfe, and gaue it not of his pollyng gaynes: but if any peny hath been gotten with falsehood, he reste:ed thesame with thencreace of fower tymes double so muche again. And mo:eouer of his gooddes that he had iustely and truely come by, he gaue the one moite in charitie vnto the nedie. ¶ Luke. xi. ¶ Mat. xxiii. the course of thinges meruailously turned in and out. ¶ What was withinfo:th in the Pharisees, thesame was replete with rauine and guyle: and of Zacheus we haue an by:tight true dealyng man and a liberall, whereas he is a man not onely tyche but also a Publicane, yea and an head manne of this trade, wherby he was so muche the mo:e abho:red emong the Iewes. But the Lo:de passeth not of mennes titles o: styles: he beholdeth the mynde of the manne and esteemeth hym by his dedes, yea of suche dedes (I saye) as dooe p:ocede fo:th of feith and charitie. Neither did Zacheus speake the p:emisses on hymselfe in the waye of makyng any bauntⁿ o: boste, in so:te as the fo:sayde Pharisee did, beyng as a trumpe of his owne righteousnesse. and a scoy:ner of the Publicane. Zacheus doeth not sette his own righteousnesse before another parties righteousnesse: but as a man bothe a synner and a Publicane he openeth in playne woo:des without dissimulacion, that he had an earnest mynde and desire to the exercise of righteousnesse, yea euen before he had any sight of Iesus, of whome he is desy:ous to bee enstructed whether he did well, o: no: and what was fe:ther to bee dooen fo: the geattyng of euerlastyng lyfe. Fo: so was it expediente that these woo:des of Zacheus shoulde bee hearde of the enuious Iewes, and should bee allowed of Christ in the hearyng of thesame Iewes. Fo: it was not possible fo: hym mo:e piththily and effectuallye to laye vnto the Iewes they: pollyng facions, they: auaryce, and they: catchyng of other mennes gooddes: who did not only geue out nothyng of they: owne vnto the neyghboure beyng in nede, but also vnder the colour of godlynesse defrauded the parentes of the succour due vnto them at they: childrens handes. Iesus therfo:e turnyng to the murmo:uryng Iewes, sayed: This I playnly affirme vnto you, that healthis come to this house this p:esent daye, fo: aslmuche as thesame also perteyneth to Abraham, as beeyng father vnto it, in whome is all your glo:ying that he is the fy:st founder of your generacion. Fo: whatsoeuer persone doeth in feith, in sinceritie of lyfe, and in godly deuocion resemble Abraham, thesame is the sone of Abraham and free partaker of the blessing in old tyme p:omised vnto Abraham. The stocke of this man beeyng of an other bloud from the stocke of Abraham, is no lette vnto hym, no: his so:te and trade of lyfe haupng heretofo:e been passed ouer in sinfulnesse, but whatsoeuer persone conuertyng and emendyng from his fo:mer lyfe doeth embrace the doctryne of the gospell, wholsoeuer folowyng the steppes of Abraham, doeth ensue true righteousnesse, thesame is the chylde and true heyre vnto Abraham. Fo: of suche wyll not the soonne of manne thynke disdeigne, who came into the wo:lde fo: the bery purpose, to seke that was goen a straygh, and to saue that was lost. Suche synners as this, are mo:e acceptable vnto God, then these that swell in a false persuasion of righteousnesse.

This daye is healthy happened vnto this house.

As they heard these thynges, he added therto a parable, because he was nigh to Hierusalem The texte.

salem, and because they thought that the kyngdome of God should shortelye appeare. He sayed therfore: A certayne noble man went into a ferre countrey to receyue hym a kyngdom and to come agayne. And he called his tenne seruauntes and deliuered them tenne pounde saying vnto them: Occupye ye tyll I come. But his citezens hated hym, and sente a message after hym saying: We will not haue this man to reygne ouer vs. And it came to passe, that when he had receyued his kyngdome, he returned, and commaunded these seruauntes to be called vnto hym (to whome he had geuen the money) to wete how muche euery manne had dooen. Than came ye first, saying: Lord, thy pounde hath gayned tenne pounde. And he sayed vnto hym: well, thou good seruaunte, because thou hast been feythfull in a very lytle thyng, haue thou autorite ouer tenne cities. And another came saying: Lord, thy pound hath made fyue pound. And to the same he sayed: be thou rewler also ouer fiue cyties. And another came, saying: Lorde, beholde here is thy pounde, which I haue kept in a napkyn. For I feared thee, because thou arte a streight man, thou takest vp, that thou laydest not down, and reapest that thou biddest not sowe. He sayeth vnto hym: Of thyne owne mouthe will I iudge thee, thou euell seruaunte. Knowest thou that I am a streight man, taking vp that I layed not downe, and reapyng that I dyd not sowe? And wherfore gauest not thou my money into the banke, and at my cummyng I might haue requyred myne owne with vauntage? And he sayed vnto them that stoode by: take from hym that pounde, and geue it to hym that hath tenne pounde. And they sayed vnto hym: Lorde he hath tenne pounde. For I saye vnto you, that vnto euery one whiche hath, shalbe geuen, and he shall haue aboundaunce: and from hym that hath not, shalbe taken awaye euen that whiche he hath. Moreouer those myne enemies, (which would not that I shoulde reigne ouer them) bryng hither, and sleagh them before me.

By this talke Jesus did declare that from henceforth none ought to glory in the obseruyng of the lawe, but whatsoeuer good qualitie or gyfte of grace had happened vnto any man by the bounteous liberalitie of god, yͤ same should bee wholy employed to suche ende, yͤ we maye drawe therby many men to grace and saluacion thereby. For with suche kinde of gaynes is God moste specially delited, who had sent his owne sonne for this purpose, that freely forgeuyng they synnes he might ioyne all the nacions of the world vnto him. And in dede some there were emong the disciples which thought, that as soone as he were once come to Jerusalem, whiche he begoonne nowe to drawe somewhat nere vnto, the kyngdome of heauen wold immediately appere, of whiche he had so many tymes made mencion: wherin their imagination ranne vpon some kingdome lyke to a worldely reygne, whereas Christ ment of a reigne of the spirite euangelicall, by meane wherof, the tyrannie of synnes is oppressed and troden vnder foote. And that kyngdome certes consisteth not in puissaunce of armed souldiers, in weapon, or in force of handes, but in feith and truste in god, but in benefitiall goodnesse towardes the neighbour, but in mercifulnesse towardes offendours, but in sincere and liberall dispensyng of the worde of God. But as for the maieste of this kyngdome, whiche shall honourablye rewarde the godly with immortall glorye, and shall adiudge the wickedde vnto endlesse tormentes, he declared that it should not streightwayes bee shewed foorth, but shoulde bee made open and manifest at the due tyme beeyng to vs vnknowen. And ferther that we shoulde in the meane season by all meanes and wayes employe our earnest diligence, that the good gyfte or qualitie that euerye bodye hath, he should first remembre to bee the lordes moneye, to whome we are debtours for al that we haue: and that the money whiche we haue so receyued, oughte bryghtly and feythfully to bee destributed abrode to the gaynes and profite of the same Lorde: not that he hath nede of any manier thyng, but because that of his charitie and loue towardes mankynde, he thirsteth the redempng & saluacion of all creatures, and thynketh himselfe encreaced with a great auauntage and gayne, yf one man emende by another from vicyousnesse, and bee conuerted from vice to the earnest exercise of godly deuocion, whereby he maye haue what to re-to rewarde in both parties, aswel the one that helpeth with doyng benefite, as also the other which hath been holpen. For there is nothyng that we maye in this behalfe take into our own possession eyther of prayse ozels of thanke. We are seruaunes euery one of vs, and of bounden dutie owe our beste labour and seruice.

All the stocke of the money is his euery whyt of it, yea and owener he is of vs ourselfes too: we must no more but labour euery man to the best of his power, to encrease the Lordes substaunce. As touchyng the reward, leat vs leaue the ascertaynement thereof to the Lorde, who will at his conuenient tyme moste largely rewarde our prompte will, and our faithful endeuouring. The discourse of the parable is this hereensuing.

A certain man of nobilitie and great power, tooke a voyage into a ferre countrey to recouer the possessiō of a realme into his hādes again, which an other had throughe tiranny vsurped and precuered the possessiō of afore, and that doe to returne home again. But this great man before he entred his iourney, called together certain of his seruaunes whieh he had, to the numbre of tenne, and deliuered tēne poundes vnto them, in sort, that there was an equal diuisiō of this stocke of money indifferently among them al: and therwithal gaue them in commission. This money (saieth he) I deliuer vnto you, not to cōsume it wastfully ozto kepe it idle in your hādes, but that it may encreace by ȳ trade of occupying, and to the ende that beyng returned home againe, I may lyuke my substaunce well encreased at home. And all thinges thus sette in ozdre at home, he went forth on his voyage.

A certaine noble man went into a farr countrey.

And so it was that the inhabitaunts of the citie whiche he was rewler and gouernour of, hated hym. Wherupon as soone as he was gon forth on his iourneye, they begoone to treacte of a chaunge, attemptyng suche a matter, that while he wer in recouerynge his other kyngdome, he should be expulsed out of that that he had than already in possession. Upon this they sent ambassadours vnto hym beeyng now a good waye onwarde on his iourney, to make relacion vnto hym, that his subiectes were of suche mynde, that from henceforth they wouldе no longer haue hym to their kyng, and that therfore he should not make the labour any more to returne home again to theim from whence he had taken that present voiage. But so it befell that whē he had recouered into his possession the other kyngdome, for whiche he had taken the saied voiage, he returned home againe to his owne realme: and commaūded his seruaunes to bee called before him, to whom he had before deliuered the stocke of tenne poundes, that the audite and accouptes duely made, he myght know how muche euerye of them had gotten of cleere gaynes. The first came forth, who beyng demaunded of his accountpt, saied: My lord, thy pounde is emproued to the summe of tenne poundes.

We will not haue this manne too reigne ouer vs.

So hose industry and fidelitie his lord muche prayseing, answered: well saied my good seruaunte, forasmuche as whan my substaunce was suche as might haue lien in a narow rowme, thou hast in a litle summe of money declared thy selfe faythfull, trustie and louyng toward thy maister: now we that my substaunce is enlarged, it is reason and conscience, that thou bee partakee of my welthyer state.

Lorde thy pound hath gained ten poundes.

Take thou vnto thee the rule of tenne cities. After this seruaunt, cameth the seconde, who beyng required his accountpt, sayed: My Lorde, thy pounde which thou deliueredst me for a stocke to occupy, hath encreased fiue poundes to thy behouffe. This mannes industrie also, though inferiour to the other, yet his lord did very well commende: and according to the rate of thine industrye (sayeth he) bee thou also a rewler ouer fiue cities. Who also vpon their accompte and reckenyng made and geuen vp, had bene rewarded with some dignitie euery one according to their rate more or lesse: at last came a seruaunt euen one alone the moste slouthfull lucke of all that euer were, and of the wurste honestie to bee put in truste or credite. Who, whan his mayster required his streight accoumpte, made him this aun were. My lord, behold here I bryng you againe the pounde whiche ye put me in truste withall. I haue kepte it euer sence that tyme hitherto safely layed vp in a cloute, because ye should haue it agayn safe and sound as it was. I haue so well auoided to be a wastfull spender of it, that I haue not so muche as once touched it with my handes. And so thought I better to doe, then to come in hasarde or perill, lest if mine occupying had ill framed, I should haue had buisines with you. For I was afrayed of you, as one not ignorant what a rigorous cruell man ye are, and couetous of lucre, in so muche that ye will not onely geue nothing of your owne: but also will take away from thence where ye layed nothing at all, and will gather in harueste, frō suche places, where ye neuer sowed grain. Than the lorde not onely offended with the slouthfulnesse of his seruaunt, but also for that he laied his owne faulte on the conditions of his mayster: beyng throughly out of patience, he sayed: Thou slouthfull seruaunt, and vntrustie fellowe, yea and moreouer a false accuser of thy maister, thou hast geuen sentence against thine owne heade. Thou knowest (thou sayest,) that I am a rygorous cruel man, and couetous of lucre, taking vp money frō thence where I layed do nowe none, and reaping there where I sowed nothyng at all. And yet that same very pounde ought to haue quickened the to some actiuitie in dryuyng thee to haue delyuered forthwith my money to the kepers of the banke. For I would doubteleesse haue comen, and would haue streightly required it together with the encrease of entresse, because I had for suche a purpose put it into thy handes, that it should encrease through thee. At these wordes of the lord, whan the vnprofitable seruaunte helde his peace and had not a woord to speake, the lord said to the others that stode by. Take ye away the pound from hym, and geue it vnto hym that hath the tenne poundes. The other seruauntes merualyng therat, sayed: my lorde, what nedeth to geue hym here any more, he is ryche and welthy enough. For he hath tenne pounde. Than sayed the Lord: It forceth not to you what he hath: So haue I thoughte it good: and so doeeth it stande with reason and equitie in this rekenyng, that whoso hath with his faithful industrie encreased his maisters substaunce, my bountcous goodnesse muste vnto suche an one geue some ferther surplusage, to the ende he maie styll haue more and more aboundaunce. Contrariewise, whoso hath by reason of his slouthfulnesse gotten hymselfeno gaynes at all, suche an ones nede shal my liberalitie so litle helpe, that euen the very same that he hath too, shalbe taken away from him. The stocke was mine, and the gaines and encrease therof due to me: your partes it was, to performe your due labour. Now I bountifully geue vnto you bothe the stocke, and also the encrease of the same. Thus farre the Lord Jesus did by a derke and mystical fourme of speakyng teache his disciples: that in the busy trade of preachyng

the ghospell, euery man oughte to shewe hymselfe faythfull and industrious euen to the vttermoste, and as for theyr rewarde to looke for, at the secounde coming of the lorde, at what time he shal nowe appere mighty and high after that the kingdome of the church shalbe recouered into his handes and deliuered vp to his father. For at the first, Iesus was knowen but in Iewry onely, he semed to be but a litle king or duke of one citie and no more, whan the deuyll reygned without redresse throughout all the vniuersall nacyons of the worlde, as in a royalme that was an other mannes and none of hys. And the same Iesus couetyng to recouer into hys owne possessyon agayne throughe preachyng the ghospell, that Satan had by tyrannye entred vpon, leafte the lande of the Iewes, and tooke a voyage into heauen: but not till he had firste diligently instructed hys dyscyples to the trade of occupying in the affayres of the ghospell, whiche hys dyscyples he put in truste with the dyspensacyon of the woorde of God conteyned in the ghospell, as a certayne stocke to playe the occupiers withall, wherof great gaynes might growe vnto the lorde beyng righte couetous of suche manner encrease: and he put them in truste that they should draw vnto the kingdome of the gospel whomesoeuer they might, Publicanes, harlottes, souldiers, Grekes, Romaynes, Scythians, Frenchemen, Sothians, Sarmatians, and all others. And that thys they shoulde doe vntill the lordes returne, who will come againe in the ende of this worlde, to distribute vnto euery one euerlastyng rewardes for theyr dedes. And come agayne will he not, onlesse he shall firste haue subdued the worlde to the domynyon and empire of the ghospell, and all the nacyons of the whole worlde to ioyne together into one churche and congregacion. But whyle he earnestely goeth about thys by meane of hys disciples: the Iewes, (emong whome alone and no moe, God hitherto seemed for to reigne, by reason of theyr knowlage of the lawe and of the autozitie of beeing in the right trade of religyon:) beeing his subiectes, of whome and emong whome he was borne, whereas they oughte specially aboue all others to haue loued him, and by all manner meanes to sticke to hym in recouerying hys kingdome: dyd not onely doe hym no helpe at all, but also were a lette agaynste hym, crying beefore the chyefe Iustice and iudge: We haue no kyng but Ceasar. And the selfe same chyng dydde they agayne afterwarde, playnelye denouncyng vnto the Apostles and commaundyng them to make no mozemencion from that tyme furthewarde of the name of Iesus. Moyses they were willyng to haue to theyr kyng: Chriſte wouldе they none of. For they hated him, because he contraryed theyr naughtie lustes and appetites. Ye see euen yet till at this day too, after what sorte the nacyon of the Iewes haue withdrawen themselues from the kyngdome of the gospell, and with howe stiffe and stubberne hatefulnes they haue conspired agaynst hym, vnto whome is geuen by his father all power in heauen and in earth. We will not haue thys manne (say they) to reygne ouer vs: and while they will in no wise serue Chriſte, they are as bonde slaues vnto all the tirannes of thys worlde: they are bonde seruaunts to Satan a moste merciles tirannes: and where they se here a there in euery place throughout the whole worlde, the Christians to reioyce in the freedome of the spirytes: they doce yet styll holde faste with theyr teeth the vnsauerye lettre, to whome they are bounde, lyke vnto men assigned and appoynted to the glebe or turfe.

But (the sayde Iewes in vayne crying agaynste hym,) the kyngdome of the churche is recouered and established: in geatting and establishyng wherof, as many as shall haue doen theyr frythfull trauayle, shall bee crouned with glory and honour in the kyngdome of heauen, accordyng to the quantitee or rate of the fruicte, whiche they haue brought in the lordes vineyarde. But nowe the Iewes beeyng obstinatelye vnbeleuyng, what rewarde shall they haue? Euen that thyng also dyd the Lorde declare in the residue of the same parable at the latter ende. For after that he had punished the vntrustie seruaunte, he sayde moreouer: yea and those subiectes of myne, in nacion my countreymen, but in hearte enemies, whiche by a seditious ambassade sente vnto me, prated me that I shoulde no more come to bee theyr kynge, ne to reygne ouer them, byyng ye them hyther that they may bee put to deathe euen here in my syghte, and bee punyshed of me for theyr rebellyon. Thys punyshmente is deathe euerlastyng, whiche abydethe all suche as obey not the ghospell and glad tydynges of the sonne of God. For at that tyme shall they worthylye fynde hym vnpossible to bee appeased, forasmuche as they nowe obstinately contemned hym beeyng mylde and full of mercie.

The texte. ¶ And whan he had thus spoken, he proceded furth taking his iourney, to goe vp to Hierusalem. And it fortuned when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethanie, beside the mounte whiche is called Oliuete, he sent two of his disciples, saying: goe ye into the towne whiche is ouer agaynste you: into the whiche as soone as ye are come, ye shall finde an Asses colte tyed, whereon yet neuer man sate, loose him, and bring him hyther. And yf any man aske you, why doe ye loose hym? Thus shall ye saye vnto him: the Lorde hath nede thereof. ¶ they that were sent, went their waye, and founde euen as he had sayed vnto them: And as they were a loosing the colte, the owners therof sayde vnto them: Why loose ye the colte? And they sayde: for the lorde hath nede of him: and they brought hym to Iesus, and cast theyr rayment on the colte, and set Iesus theron. And as he went, they spred theyr clothes on the way. And whan he was nowe come nigh to the going downe of the mounte Oliuete, the whole multitude of the disciples began to reioyce, and to prayse God with a loude voice, for all the miracles that they had sene, saying: blessed be the kyng that cometh in the name of the Lorde, peace in heauen, and glory in the highest.

The lorde whan he had spoken the premisses, went foorth on towardes Hierusalem, where he shoulde afterwarde accomplyshe that same excellent sacrifice for the redempcyon of mankynde, and oute of the beakon place of the crosse, he should (like a courtous & an ambicious kyng) plucke al thinges vnto hymselfe. For although there haue euery where bene many in tymes paste, and many hereafter shall bee, whiche will crye by theyr beray deles, we will not haue thys man to bee kyng ouer vs: yet is there no nacion so ferre distaunt or out of the waye from the Iewes, from whence he shall not plucke a beray great noumber vnto hym. Wherfore he doth ofte sones beate into their heades in facte, that he had afore representedin zacheus: whiche thyng he dydde anon after in a longer parable expresse more at large. For the lorde dooeth in the meane while procure the same thyng, whiche he procured many tymes afore also: whiche was, that it might bee clere and euident vnto all creatures, that whatsoeuer he shoulde afterwarde suffer, he did of hys owne accorde willingly & wettingly suffer it, & otherwise that he was of power to dooe whatsoeuer his will was to doe. And now forasmuch as he had determined by the meane of the moste extreme worldely shame & fall that might bee, to recouer into his possession the highest glorye possible emong men, and the disciples beeing not yet fullye apte ne hable to receiue the vnderstandyng of thys mystery, bidde looke for some matier (whatsoeuer it was) of greate royaltie, and a thyng

of some high enterprise to the estymacion of the worlde at the lordes handes: It pleased hym afore hys death for a litle season, to flatter or rather to mocke theyr affections, and also to mocke the glorye of thys worlde, shewyng howe vayne it is and howe slippie to truste to, seeyng that after so greate tokens of ioyfull receyuyng of hym, after so manye cryinges and shoutes made in hys honour, after so muche earnestie fauour of the people, death on the crosse dyd immediatelye folowe in the necke therof. When Iesus therfore was come to the mounte whiche is called Oliuete, nere vnto twoo lytle townes situate in the syde of the same mounte, from whence Hierusalem was nowe afore them within sighte: he sente out two of hys disciples on an erand. Goe your wayes (sayeth he) to the litle towne that ye see yonder foreryght agaynste you, at the entreyng whereof ye shall see a yonng colte of an Asse standyng tyed without the doores, vnbroken as yet for any manne to ryde on, on whome hathe neuer any man sitten: vntie hym and bryng hym to me. That if anye bodye shall bee agaynst it, and demaunde: wherefore doe ye vntie the colte: Ye shall thus aunswere hym: the lorde hath nede of hym. The dysceyples departed, they founde the colte tyed, they addressed to loose hym. And in the whyle were there certayn persones presente who asked, as ye wouldesaye, beyng against their dooyng, why doe ye loose the colte? They (as they had tofore bene commaunded) made aunswere: The Lord hath nede of him. The name of the lord being ons heard, they suffered the colte to beled awaye. Than brought they hym vnto Iesus. And whan they sawe that the lorde was mynded to mounte vpon hym, (the lyke whereof for all that he had neuer tofore that tyme vsed to doo:) the dysceyples because he shoulde not vpon the bare rydge of the colte sitte to muche vneasily, cast their robes abrode vpon the beastes backe. And now Iesus sitting on the coltes backe, a goyng on ward, some spred abrode their garmentes euen on the bereay way, partly for to doe him honour, and partly lest the colte being vnbroken, and also vnshod, should hurt his hookes with stubbyng at the stones. And whan they were nowe come to the foote of the hyll, a were goyng directly towardes the citie of Hierusalem, a certayn woonderfull affection sodaynly toke the hertes of al the people, of whome some had come in the traine of Iesus, and some had come foorthe of Hierusalem to mete hym. For euerye body who coulde doo best strawed the way that the lorde went on, with the braunches of trees euery where broken of, a both with great ioye a also with loude voyces they begoon to laude god for al his benefites a miracles which they had sene a heard wrought by Iesus. There sowned on euery side the voices of people reioycing at his cummyng, as it had bene to God cummyng in triumph, and of men crying in honour of hym: Osanna in the hyghest: Blessed bee he that cummeth in the name of the Lorde, peace in heauen, and glorye in the highest. This was the voyce of the multytude of al sortes, and especially of yonng folkes, who as it had bene by a certayne inspiracion of God, the enuie and grutchyng of the Phariseis contemned, dyd in the open face of the worlde geue testimonie vnto the lorde Iesus.

And as he wente, they spred theyr clothes on the waye.

Blessed bee the king that cometh in the name of the lorde.

¶ And some of the Phariseis of the coumpanye saied vnto him: Maister, rebuke thy disciples. He saied vnto them: I tell you, that if these holde theyr peace, than shall the stones crye. The texte.

But there were in the same multytude certayne Phariseis, whome thyssame crying out to Christe in welcummynge hym, dyd muche agrieue: because the same did ourwardelye shewe as thoughe they wouldehaue all the worlde to knowe, that some thyng there was in Jesus (whatsoeuer it was,) aboue the rate of a man. And emonge these Pharisees some there were that warned Jesus, that himselfe with his owne mouth by his autoritie, should restreigne these same vngodlye shoutes of the multytude, procedynge of a certayne vnmeasurable fauour of the people towardes theyr maister, and therefore vnpleasaunte euen to the lorde selfe, who did not vse to acknowlage suche hyghe prayses. Maister (saye the Pharisees) rebuke thy dysceples. But Jesus neuer went about to stylle the deuout profession of the playne meanyng people, but by a bywoord checked the blindenes of the Pharisees, who were not ashamed to attribute vnto Beelzebub the prince of deuylles suche thynges as Jesus hyghlye well dyd and wroughte. But he made aunswere agayne. Wyth what face shoulde I suppresse them that woorthily syng glorye vnto god, and with deuout voyces nowe synging the same which wer many a long day sens spoken by the prophetes. Thus muche I saye vnto you for a certayntie: God so muche willeth thys hys laude not to be vndeclared, that in case men wouldе altogether holde theyr peace, the beraye stones here woulde crye it oute. And cruely harder then the stones be those, whiche being with so many benefytes, with so manye miracles prouoked, can not yet bee meued in theyr hearies to speake in the aduauncemente of Goddes glorye. Than with suche pompe as this, triumphaunt lyke, and with suche a trayne about hym, dyd the lorde Jesus goe vnto Hierusalem. For suche a litle rest of thys worldes glory it lyked hym to take, before he would take the crosse vpon hym: and this professing of his godhed did he parforce wring out of the same nacion, by which he should anon after bee moste cruelly dooen to death, to thende the Jewes might bee condemned by their owne sentence: for that they had crucifyed theyr Messias and saueour. But nowe in thys story of these gestes, there is hidden and comprised no small poynte of mistery. The the Asse that was the dame, was standing, the colte also was standyng whiche was the Asses sole. The dame had already bene woonte to bee ryden on, as beyng of long continuaunce enured to weare the yoke of the lawe, sygnifying doubtelesse the nacion of the Jewes. The colte beeyng the sole of thys the Asse, (for redempcion tоke the fyrste beginning of the Jewes,) the colte (I saye) betokenyng the people of the Gentiles, was yet vnbroken, neyther at anye tyme charged with the yoke of the lawe, nor yet throughe euangelicall obedyence carrying Jesus as a sitter on his backe. Both beastes were tyed: for on the one syde the Synagogue tyed in bondage vnder the carnalitie of the lawe, not atteygnynge to the freedome of the spirite: and the Gentiles on the other syde were entangled with the decrees of the philosophiers, a subiecte to the worshippyng of Idolles and deuilles. They had at that season owners indifferente aswell of the one as of the other: yea a suche maisters not a fewe. For in the peoples aswell of the Jewes as also of the Gentiles, a great mayny were bounde to couetise, to Lecherry, to ambition, to enuie, and to manye other both filthie and also mercilesse maysters. Than twoo Apostles door at the lordes commaundement vnbye them, that is to wete, Peter the teacher of circumcision, that is to say, of the Jewes, and Paule the teacher of the Gentiles, whan through euangelicall fayth, and baptisme they forgeue both the one and the other all the transgressions of their former life, so that being nowe loosed they may from henceforth be woorthy to haue Jesus a sitter on them. For thys power gaue he vnto hys dysciples, not onely emong the Jewes but also emong the Gentiles, that whatsoeuer they loosed

If theyе holde theyr peace, than wyll the stones cry.

looced in yearthe, the same shoulde bee looced in heauen too. And what mer-uayl if the other former owners can not lette the vntying of them: seeyng that they whiche doe vnlie them, doe vnbye them by the commaundemente of that same newer maister, whose will no creature can resiste? Thys newe maister hath nede of suche manier beastes, and on the backe of suche ones dooeth he reioyce to sitte as dooe simplye obey without anye fraude, or drawing backe: suche as with good hearte and mynde dooe take vpon them the sweete yoke of euangelicall doctryne: suche as will not bee skittishe ne prauenynge agaynste the syster on them: suche as with a quiete and iemle soste pace dooe beare and glorifye the Lorde Jesus in theyr bodyes, vntyll they come euen full into the holy citie a temple of the lorde: I meane not that same citie the common murderer of prophetes: but that other heauenlye citie, whiche knoweth not what rebellion doeth meane. Worldely princes louefyerce stieryng courseres, foled euen purposely for warres, and well broken and taughte thereafter: the lorde Jesus loueth suche manier Asses, as will meekelye and stilly carry theyr meke maister, and will not caste hym whan he sitteth on them. Thys facyon of carying, doe the haulte princes of this world laughe at: the Philosophiers with theyr disdaynfull lookes dooe laugh at: the Pharisees swellyng in pryde dooe laughe at: and thynke themselues fortunate that they carry the deiuill on theyr backes, the roughesste syster possyble and the moste vnfauourable: that they lyue in bondage of so many moste mercilesse maisters, whereas to serue thys one maister Christe is an heauen. There is nothynge in moze happie and blissed case then these litle and simple ones, after they be once looced from bondage, and after they haue once receiued Jesus vpon theyr backe. After worldely estimacion, the ignozauntes, the symple sozte, and suche as can no skyll of fraude or falsehoode, appeare to bee of the Asselie kinde: but they haue the lorde to theyr directour, who will not leat them straygh out of the way: who not onelye bouchesalueth to syster on theyr backes, but also to haue hys habytacion in theyr heartes, whiche he gouerneth with hys owne spirite. And the beastes were bare vntil than: but the Apostles dde couer the al ouer with their robes, that is, with theyr doctrine, and with exaumples of holy conuersacion preparing them for Jesus to geatte vp vpon, whiche Jesus what he once dyd after the fleathe, the same he neuer ceassethe to dode after the spirytuall sence. The way was rough: but the same way dooe the disciples make sure enough to goe vpon by spreadyng theyr garmentes abrode vpon it: that is, the wyng the way of godly conuersacion to be eathe, in case a man goyng by the exaumples of the holy, submit hymselfe to be vnder the lorde Jesus. Than goe they vpon braunches of palmes, and vpon greene leaues of trees, that is, by the memorye of the martirs, the virgins, and the confessoures, continuallye bearyng flowres, and keping theyr freathe greenesse. For what a great nomber of good exaumples doeth on euery syde offer themselues vnto such as are entred in the way of godly deuocion? Great store of such exaumples doe the very bokes of the Jewes minister euē to the Gētiles also. And these shew tokens of gladnesse in thys coltes behalfe, whosoeuer they bee that acknowleage Christe for theyr lorde and owner. Neyther doe there want Pharisees at thys day too, neuer shall want or fayle, in whome the glorye of Christe shall cause herte burning and enuie. For they had lieffer haue it cryed vnto themselues: Osanna in the highest, lauded be he, which cometh in ꝑ name of ꝑ lorde: whereas they come not in the lordes name, but in theyr owne. But the Jewes euen at thys daye be-pyng ſylence of the glory of Chriſt whiche they haue enuye at, the ſtones in-ceaſſauntly crye it out being nowe become the children of Abraham. Here doe the people of Hieruſalem crye, awaye with hym, awaye with hym, doo hym on the croſſe: Iriſhe men, Scoters, Engliſhe men, Frenche menne, Sarmacians, Germaines crie: lauded be he that cometh in the name of the lorde. Such people as whyle they ſette theyr heartes on aduauncyng theyr owne glory, doe labour to derken the glory of Chriſte, and thoſe whiche for the reſpect of theyr owne priuate commodytye dooe ſuppreſſe and depraue or corrupte the ſinceritie of holy Scripture: whyle they deſyre to haue theyr owne greatneſſe ſet out in mens talke, and the glorye of Chriſte to be leaſt vnſpoken: all ſuche verayly playe the partes of thoſe Phariſeis whiche attempted to ſtoppe the mouthes of the chyldren of the Hebrues, whiche chyldren God had enſpyred to ſing foorthe the glorye of hys name and of hys ſonne, whome he had geuen a ſaluetour vnto the worlde. Yea, and thys poynete alſo hathe ſome holeſome ſignification in it, that there is firſte a ſtiepe cumming downe from the mount of Oliuete, and than afterwarde an euen and ſmoothe waye ouer a playne, and anon agayne an other goyng vp vnto the mounte of Sion, (for vpon thys mounte of Sion was the temple of the Lorde builded.) Except the former mount had oyle wherbythe light of feyth might be nouriſhed and mayntryned, there coulde bee no cummyng downe from the aſſyaunce of the lawe, by which the Iewes ſwel in pride, nor from truſtyng in philoſophie, by which the Gentiles thinke themſelues holy felowes. For the firſte ſtepe and degree of growing forwarde in goodneſſe, is through feyth. But than muſte we approche the houſe of the chefe (for Bethphage is ſo muche to ſay in the Syrians tounge.) For thys is the chefe, not that puffethe vp in haultyneſſe of mynde or looke, but that is ready to come forth with the confeſſion of our offences committed agaynſte God. Neyther muſte we bee ferre from Bethanie, whiche is called the houſe of obedience. For all creatures are not obediente vnto the ghoſpell. But yet herebence cometh the begynning of healthy. After the downe hyll, the waye lieth ouer a playne, being on euery ſyde ſtrawen with the braunches of good traumpies, vntyll we ariſe vnto the rylyng vp of the hyll towardes the mounte of Sion, whiche is called the tootyng hylle, or peake, or hygh beacon place, or watchyng toure from whence to ſee a ferre of. For thys is verayly that ſame hygh toppe of vertue, out of whiche, as it were out of an hygh peake or beakon place, al the thynges are a great waye beneath locked downe vpon, and contemned, of whiche thys worlde maketh greate mouſtre and chefe, as if they were hyghe thynges aboue the moone. And the mynde beeyng nowe drawyng well towardes heauen, beholdeth ſuche thynges as are euerlaſting, and the which doe ſurmounte the compaſſe of al mans reaſon.

¶ And whan he was come nere, he beheldethe citie, and wept on it, ſaying: If thou haddeſte knowen thoſe thinges whiche belonge vnto thy peace, euen in this thy day thou wouldeſt take hede. But nowe are they hidde from thyne yes. For the dayes ſhall come to thee, that thy enemies alſo ſhall caſt a banke about thee, and compace thee rounde, and kepe thee on euery ſide, and make thee euen with the grounde, and thy children which are in thee. And they ſhall not leaue in thee one ſtone vpon an other, becauſe thou knoweſt not the tyme of thy viſitacion.

And whan the lorde Jeſus was nowe come ſo ferre onward, that Hieruſalem was ſomewhat nere, and was fulfyn ſighte afore him: he wept and be-

holdyng the same cytye, poxtely and gozgeous of buildinges, flourishing in meane, in richesse, and in opinion of holinesse and deuocion towardes God, pxoude of their state that the woxld was in at that psesente day, and voyde of all thought and care, by reason they knewe not of theyrtreme distresse and myserie that was to come vpon them: he being earnestly moued with compassion wept, and with woxdes sodaynly bxaklyng out without any suche talke afoxe goyng, as it were one sighing and sobbing foz sozow, he muche lamented the destruccyon of the same citie, and spake to thys effecte ensuyng. If thou also hyddest nowe, as well as I doe, knowe thys day of thyne, in whiche is offred vnto thee peace and remission of thy great synnes past: thou wouldeste earnestlye sette thy minde to embzace that is offered.

But nowe are they hidden frō thine yes &c.

Foxlooth thys is thy day, in whiche thou art occasioned to emendemente, and in whiche the goodnesse of God pxouoketh thee to xepentaunce: and doeth pxouoke thee with the hyghesse and vttermosse degree of bounteous goodnesse, and with so hygh a degree of goodnesse, that there can be no moxe doone to it. The mercifulnesse of God so often tymes despyled of thee, vouchsaluedly after a certayne newe manner to visite thee, to the ende thou mayeste at leste wise by thys meane weaxe mylde and reformable. There will come an other day, not of thyne, but of the Romaines, and of goddes vengeaunce, at whiche thou wilt be plagued foz all thy greate tranigressyons, whiche thou hast had moxe mynde to heape moxe vpon moxe, then to lamente oz bee sozy foz that is paste. But nowe thou neyther knoweste thyne owne daye, ne foxesee'st that other day to come whiche shall not bee thyne: because bothe the one and the other is hydden from thyne iyes, whiche are in thee almoste vtxerly blynded with the dxunkennesse of thy flourythynge welthye state that thou art in at this presente. Thou neyther hast any remembxaunce of the euils past, whiche thou hast doone: ne foxesee'st thynges to come, which hang ouer thy head, noz acknowlage'st the pxest goodnesse of God towardes thee, whiche goodnesse of god because thou doest yet styll most obstinately sette at naught, O thou citie vnpossible to bee xecured, and a common murderer of all suche as bxyng vnto thee any woxde of thy saluacion oz xedempcyon, there shall come straungyers of an other lande agaynste thee whiche shall bxynge vtter destruccion and ruine vpon ther. It will be thy lot to refuse and put from the thy Messias, and in his stede to chose Cesar vnto thy king. Thou shalt therefoxe lynde and fele thy kynges cummyng vnto thee with a ferre other furnyture and pxouision, then thy king doeth nowe come vnto thee, being a bxinger of healthy, and a peaceable quiete king. Thou wilt not nowe xeceyue hym that cummeth to geue healthe and safegarde: and ere longe shalte thou of foxce bee compelled to xeceiue that shall come to geue the vtter confusion. Foz the pxinces of Rome, whome thou haddest pxeferred beefoxe thyne owne kyng, shall come as enemies in stede of kynges with bendes of men well armed and appoynted foz warre: and firste of all they shall enuiron thee rounde a bout with trenches, so that there shall bee no way open to escape out, than shall they on euery side encompasse thee with men and artillery, and shall with a most streight siege oppresse thee, and fynally, all thyssame thy gave burlydynge with temple and all, they shall cast downe as lowe as the grounde. And not satisfied withal thyssame, they shal with an vniuersal slaughter destruie thy childxē, of whome thou art now pxoud, and doest semblably set them in a pxide and a pompe by thy gozgeous royaltie, and all thyssame glozy of thyne they shall in suche sozte

Thy enemies shal cast a banke about thee, & coumpare the roūde.

And they shall not leaue in the one stone vpō ano.&c.

wipe away from the roote and foundacion, that they shall not leaue so muche as one stone standynge faste mortised on an other, to the ende there shall no sygne of thee remayne, ne yet any hope of reedyfyinge thee agayne in tyme to come. These thynges in dede shall bee miserable to beeholde, but they shall chaunce by thyne owne desert, because that being so often times occasioned, long & many yeres gon by sundry prophetes, and now also by Iohn, & by thy Messias, thou dorst obstinately despyse the mercie of God. Thou shalt therefore fele the tyme of bengraunce, whiche wouldest not knowe the tyme of thy visitacion. Euen thou too aswell as others (if thou haddest wouldest) mightest haue embraced thy redemption being offered. Nowe at leastwise thou shalt by thy confusion, bee an holesome exaumple vnto others, that they maye not in lyke manier despise the goodnesse of God, whan it pronoketh them to take better wayes.

Because ye knowe not tyme of thy visitacion.

The texte. ¶ And he went into the temple, and beganne to cast out them that solde therin, and them that bought, saying vnto them: It is written: My house is the house of prayer, but ye haue made it a denne of theues.

Jesus after he had spoken the premisses, came to Hierusalem, and entred into the temple, and droue out therhence such as were bying and selling there, saying: God sayeth in the scryptures: This same my house hath bene dedicated not for the trade of bying and sellyng, but for prayng: but ye haue turned it into a denne of theues, spoyling all straungiers that come, and by your wicked lying in awayte, procuring your owne lucre, with the losse & damage of others. By thys fact the lorde Jesus declared, how great destruccion those persones dooe bryng into the churche, who vnder the pretence and coulour of godly deuocyon applye theyr myndes altogether to filthye lucre: who vnder the tytle of deuout worshipping of God, doe attende theyr owne profit, not feding theyr flocke, but taking away al the swete from them, and with their vnpure doctrine sleaghing the soules, whome theyr dueties were with pure doctrine to bryng vnto lyfe.

And he cast out them that solde therin, & the y bought: Esay. lvi.

The texte. ¶ And he taught daily in the temple. But the priestes and the scribes and the chiefe of the people went about to destroy hym, and couldе not fynde what to doe. For all the people stacke by hym whan they hearde him.

Thys dooen, the Lorde, as one beyng nowe fully possessed in hys owne kingdome, taughte daye by daye in the temple, the vncurable malyce of the Pharisies openly despysed. But those whiche were hyghest in dignitie emong the priestes, and also the scribes, and the ringleders of the people, being nerled therwithall and stiered to wrathe, sought some occasyon to caste away our saluetour. They lacked no maliciouse myndes, but there appered no hope of bringyng their will to effecte: They had heardе the thouraynes of the people in the honour of Jesus, they saw in the temple also the whole vniuersall multitude of the people to depende altogether of hys sayinges: so greate was aswell the effectuall pith, as also the grace of goddes woorde. Theyr colde and feble doctrine concerning wathynges, concernyng the corbone, that is, theyr treasoury of the churche, concernynge the true tythynge of myntes and rue, stoode agaynste mens stomakes euen lyke sourе wyne after that the people had once tasted the newe must of euangelicall hertinesse. On thys behalfe they were afeerde lest theyr autozitie shoulde abate, they feared decaying of theyr

gaynes, they feared leste they⁹ kyngdome ſhoulde haue a fall. And as for the tyme whiche at that tyme befell accozding to the litterall diſcourſe of the ſtorie, the ſame doeth often tymes happen after the mozall ſence alſo, whanſoeuer, and as often as they which ſitte in the topcaſtel oz high chayze of religion, and which be perſones notozious in the profeſſion of teaching the doctrine of holy ſcripture, doe fall in conſpiracie with the ſecular pzynces againſt Jeſus. It ſuche a tyme great is the deſtruccyon that hangeth ouer the people. And thys thing ſo cummeth to paſſe, as often as the autozitie of the prieſtes and of the doctoures oz open profeſſours of diuinitie, dooeth flatter the kynges and monarches of this woꝛld, & as often as the ſame doctours ſay, Amen, to the wilful affections and appetites of the ſayde woꝛldely pzynces with their autozitie, wheras they⁹ partes had bene with wholſome and frankemoneyons to tell the pzynces of they⁹ faultes, to reſtreygne and bꝛydle the power of the ſame, and whan the monarches agayne on they⁹ parties dooe with they⁹ treaſoures and poſſeſſyons vnderpzoppe the others, and make themſelues as buckelers foꝛ the peruerſe deſires of the biſhops and the diuynes, that is to were, foꝛ they⁹ couetiſe, they⁹ ambicion, and they⁹ tirannie. And albeit neyther of theſe both dooeth commonly loue the others: yet by wicked colluſyon they diligentlye ayde, and maynteyne eyther others foꝛwarde to the ſuppreſſyng and deſtruyng of the trueth of Goddes woozde. And truely the pernicyons conſpiryng of ſuche, cauſeth moze miſchiefe and caſtyng away of men in the woꝛlde now, then the conſpiracie of the biſſhopes, ſcrybes, phariſeys, and headmen of the people, did at thoſe dayes emong the Jewes.

¶ The. xx. Chapter.

¶ And it foꝛtuned in one of thoſe daies, as he taught the people in the temple and preached the goſpell: the high prieſtes and the ſcribes came together with the elders, & ſpake vnto him, ſaying: Tell vs by what autozitie dooeſt thou theſe thynges? Eyther who is he that gaue thee this autozitie? Jeſus anſwered and ſayd vnto them: I alſo will aſke you one thyng, and anſwere me. The baptiſme of Johñ, was it from heauen, oz of men? And they thought within themſelues, ſaying: If we ſaye from heauen, he will ſay: Why than beleue ye him not? But if we ſay, of men, all the people will ſtone vs. Foꝛ they be perſuaded that Johñ is a prophete. And they anſwered, that they could not tell whens it was. And Jeſus ſayed vnto them: neyther tell I you by what autozitie I dooe theſe thynges. The texte.

No occaſyon therfoꝛe is ſought, that although they⁹ fayneſſe to putte Chriſte to death was vngodly, yet they might afoze men ſeme to dooe it of an earneſt zele and fauour to rightouſneſſe. It befell therefoꝛe vpon a certayne daye, that as Jeſus was teaching the people in the temple, and was ſtyll dylygently repeating vnto them the newes gladſome, & to bee wiſhed foꝛ, of euerlaſtyng ſaluacyon, the ſayde hygh pzyeſtes together with the ſcribes, the phariſeis and the chiefe men of the latter being in a confederacie, did aſſemble together in a cluſtre, to the ende they might at leaſtwiſe by they⁹ autozitie bꝛidle Jeſus from the teachyng of his holy doctryne. They could not condẽne his wondꝛefull actes to be naught, whiche he had in ſo great a noumber wzought in pzeſence and ſighte of the people. They were not hable to confounde his doctrine, foꝛaſmuch as it was altogether conſonaunt and agreable with the law, and with the will of God. Upon thys ground therfoꝛe dooe they deuyſe they⁹ ſlaun-slaunderous querell agaynste hym, that thys autoritie to bee a teacher of the people, he had taken vpon hym of hymselfe, where he ought to haue receiued it a: their handes: wherein they dyd it was none other, but either to take ouer vnto themselues the glory whiche was due vnto God, or elles therevpon to fraame some surmuised querelle of mouyng a sedicion to charge Christe with all, in that he called the people together, and kepte them about hym without the publique autoritie of the princes. They goe therfore altogether into the temple to Iesus, saying: If thy will bee that we also shoulde beleue in thee, tell vs by what autoryte thou doeest all thyllame that thou doeeste. Thou doest baptise, thou doest preache, thou healest folkes on the Sabboth dayes, thou teachest in the temple, thou gatherest disciples about thee, thou callest people from theyr home and businesse and kepest them with thee. Thou arte a manne to vs vnknowen: and as for publique autoritie or power haste thou none at all. Therefore who is it that hath geuen thee thys autoritie? But Iesus beraye well perceyuyng thys questyon to haue proceded from a wicked thoughte in them, that is to wete, of a purpose to laye some surmuised matier vnto hym, and not to learne: went not about to teache them, but damped theyr malice with an other question agayne, as if a bodye shoulde driue out one nayle with an other out of a bourde. For they had had Iohn the Baptiste in beraye great estimation, and had come very thicke vnto hym, whan he baptised. And he sayde: John also had gathered disciples vnto hym, and he also preached to great multitudes of people in soundrye places of the wildernesse, and about fluime Iordane, the kingdom of god to approche, he boldly and frankely declared the damnable vices of all persones indifferently, and prouoked them to repentaunce. And yet had not Iohn neyther anye autoryte geuen hym of the priestes, the Pharisees and the chyefe men of the laytie: but he had come furth out of the wildernesse as a manne but newly come vp of late, being enspired and sente of God accordyng to the Prophecye of Esaie. But the question of these headmen beyng put forth as a bayte to take hym in a trippe, ment none other conclusyon ne purpose, but thys. In case Christe had aunswered that same autoritie to had bene geuen hym of God, they would haue accused hym of blasphemie, in that he beeyng but a manne, tooke vpon hym that he had familiare talke or conuersacyon with God. And as for the byshoppes, the Pharisees, and the scribes, he had had no suche autoritie geuen hym by them. It remayned than by the conclusyon of theyr argumente, that the power whiche he tooke vpon hym was seditious, and comen of the instincte of Satan. For they were beraye stiffe in thys poynte, that all power & autoritie of God was by due succession come vnto them, and none others, and that nothyng was deuourly or godly executed, whiche were not executed and doon by autoritie of them. And yet all the while beyng blynded with hatred, they had no remembraunce how they had highly regarded John to foze doing thynges semblcable without any autoritie at all of men, yea in so muche that they would in anye wyse holde an argumente that John was the Messyas, sauing that John wrought no miracles. And yet for thys behalfe of working miracles, they ought so much the lesse to haue iangled or murmoured against Christe. No nor thys poynte neyther came not to theyr mynde, that God of long continuaunce afore tymes hadde geuen thys kynde of power, whan he spake by hys propheres: The autoritie of the Prophetes, they receyued and alowed: but the thing foreshewed by the propheres, they wouldo not receiue.

Tell vs by what autoritie thou doest thou these thynges?

The texte. ¶ Than began he to put forthe to the people this parable: A certain man planted a vineyard and let it forth to husbandmen, and went himſelfe into a straunge countrey for a greate ſeaſon. And whan the tyme was come, he ſente a ſeruaunte to the husbandmen that they ſhoulde geue hym of the fruicte of the vineyard. And they beate hym and ſent hym away emptie. And againe he ſent yet an other ſeruaunte, and hym they did beate and entreacted him ſhamfully, and ſent him away emptie. And againe he ſent the third also, & hym they wounded, and caſte hym out. Then ſayed the Lorde of the vineyarde: What ſhall I doe? I will ſende my derre ſonne, peraduenture they will haue in awe of hym, when they ſee hym. But whan the husbandmen ſawe him, they thought within themſelues, ſaying: this is the heyre: come lete vs kill him, that the enheritaunce maye be ours. And they caſt him out of the vineyarde, and killed him. What ſhall the Lorde of the vineyarde therefore doe vnto them? he ſhall come and deſtroye theſe husbandmen, and ſhall lete out his vineyarde to other.

The prieſtes, the Phariſeis, the Scribes, and the headmen of the laitie beyng thus confuted, the Lorde by an by brought in a parable, whiche might laye playnely before theyr iyes theyr vncurable malice wooxthie of damnacio, who hauing bene ſo many wayes prouoked of god to amendement, had ſtyll growen euermore to wurſe and wurſe, rennyng in contempte of the lawe, ſtriekyng the Propheters, and puttyng them to deathe, and entendyng no leſſe then afterwardes to put to deathe the ſonne of god alſo, beeyng the extreme remedie of al euils, yea and to put him afterward agayne to more afflictio in the Apoſtles and martirs. The tenour of the paraple is thys. A certayne man (by Jeſus) planted a vineyard, which he was ſingularly in loue withall, doing all that mighte poſſibly bee doen, that he might at length haue ſome fruict of the ſame. For he hedged it diligently rounde about, & builded a towre within it, for watching and keeping of it, he dygged out a gutter to receyue the wyne when it were preſſed, and he ſette feerthermore a wyne preſſe in it. And whan it was thus well furniſhed with all thynges appertenyng, he putte it foorthe to the handes of houſebandemen, that they ſhoulde dooe all requiſite houſebandry vnto it, and gather the fruicte therof at tyme conueniente. Thys doen, he taketh a voyage into a ferre countrey, & continued a greate long ſeaſon abſent from home. This ſame veraply is the vineyarde of the Lorde Sabaoth, whiche the ſame lorde tranſpoſed & remoued out of Egipt, and ſet in the lande of beheeſte: he hedged it aboute with the precincte of the lawe: he protected it with watching and keping of it his owne ſelfe in proper perſone: he beautified it with a goodly temple: he added moreouer in it prieſtes, iudges, capitaynes, and teachers: he omitted nothing that to the ordreing or dreſſing therof might appertayne. And thys vineyarde beeyng thus furniſhed to the poynte deuyſe, whā it had bene a long ſeaſon loked for, yt ſhould bring furth good grapes, did yet neuertheleſſe through the defaulte of the houſebandemen bryng furth wylde grapes. The lorde all this while, who in dede is no where not preſent, yet ſemed vnto them to bee abſente feere of, becauſe hys conuerſacyon was in heauen. Therfore whan it was a time due and ſeaſonable for the people of Iſrael at laſt to bring furth fruicte according for ſuch the bountiful goodneſſe of God towardes them: the maiſter of the vineyarde ſent a ſeruaunt of hys, that is to ſay one prophet or an other, vnto the houſbandmen, that is, to the princes, to the prieſtes, & to the Scribes, (who wer the bearers of all the ſwaigh and ſtroke,) that they ſhoulde rendre and yelde vnto hym, parte of ſuche fruicte as had growen by in the vineyarde. The houſbandemenne, who had filled and vſed the vineyard to the behouſe of themſelfes, and not of the Lord, fiercle pumbled the ſeruaunte about the eares, and beate him, and than thruſt him out by the ſhoulders, and ſent him home agayne emptie. For to whome of the Prophetes hath not crueltie bene ſhewed? But ſo great was the Lordes lenitenelle and pacience, that although he were with an acte of greate deſpyte prouoked to indignacyon, yet did he ſhewe none extremitie ne rigour towardes the houſbandmenne: but he ſente an other ſeruaunte to aſſaye whether he couldе call them home agayne to dooe theyr duetie as beecomed them. But they handled the ſecounde meſſagyer with no moze lenitenelle ne fauouure then they hadde vſed the other afoze. For whan they hadde ſore copyed hym, and had reuyled hym with muche deſpytcous language, they ſent hym alſo emptie home to hys Lorde: emptie (I ſay) of the fruicte whiche he looked for, but loden with his backe burden of wrong & of ill handleing. For whither ſhoulde they goe, but to the Lorde, who ſayed? The redreſſe be left to me, and I ſhall acquite it. The pacience of the Lorde, though it were after thys extreme ſorte eſſones enenſed to wrath: yet did he not for all thys ſteppe further to dooe vengeaunce neither, but ſent yet the thyrde ſeruaunte. And him too did the houſbandemen ſore wounde, & ſo ſend him home againe to hys maiſter emptie. For the goodneſſe of their Lorde, which prouoked them to repentaunce, did encrece theyr malice, yea worſe then it was afoze. And though al ỹ deſpite wherwith they had grieuouſly handled the ſeruaunnes that were ſente, did of good cauſe touche the maiſter that had ſente them, & thoughe they oughte nowe of good right to haue bene punished, which being ſo often occaſioned to goodneſſe had euermoze growē forward to haynous dedes of miſchiefe, curry one act worſe then an other: yet did the Lorde of his exceding great mercifulnes, make yet a further delay of his ſtroke and vengeaunce therfoze, as one that was moze deſyzous to trye the vttermoſte remedie poſſible, then to ſhewe or executе any rigour vpon the houſbandmen. And thus he caſte with hymſelfe in hys mynde. What may I dooe to bryng theſe wicked houſbandemen of myne, to a better minde agayne, thzough whoſe default the fruicte of my vineyarde doeth now of a long continuaunce perithe vnto me? I haue ſent ſo many ſeruaunnes, it is not one whit the better emended. The thing whiche onely is yet behynde, that will I dooe.

They whiche ſette my ſeruaunnes at naughte, yet peraduenture whan they ſhall ſee my ſonne, though they will not loue him, yet certes they will beare ſome reuerence vnto him, and will worſhippe me my ſelfe in hym. Naughtie perſones are woonte now & than at leaſt wiſe for very ſhame, to be bydded from a dede of miſchiefe whiche they woulde els dor. This deuiſe therfoze, that is, with the haſarding of his owne ſonne to ſeke the ſauing and recouery of his houſbandemen, lyked the moſte mercifull Lorde, as a Lorde being righte deſyzous to ſaue men, and moſt ſlowe to ſtrieke. The ſonne being obedient to hys father, wente.

I will ſend my deere ſonne, &c.

The houſbandmen, whan they ſawe the ſonne, they did not onely not reuerence hym, but alſo with wicked ſtomakes turned themſelues full and whole to the deuiſes, and purpoſes of moſte extreme madneſſe, ſaying emong themſelues: Hitherto haue we ſhaken of the ſeruaunnes that haue come to vs, this ſame is the ſonne and the heyre who entendeth one daye to auenge the deſpyte doorn by vs vnto hys father. the enheritaunce of this vineyarde for our owne behoufes, ſlouthely ſetting the Lorde at naughte. Thys deuelyſhe deuyſe was well lyked emonge them being confederate altogether, and ſo they caſt the ſonne out of the vineyarde, and ſlewe hym. Whan the Lorde Jeſus had with thys proteſte playnely shewed to the pryeſtes, to the Scribes, and to the chiefe rewlers, theyr bewray owne conſcience, who euen at that preſente houre with all theyr endeuour attempted the ſame that with out a lytle whyle afterwarde they committed in facte and dede, (leadyng Jeſus foorthe, and crucifying hym without the citie:) turnyng hymſelfe vnto them aſked thys queſtyon of them. The matter goyng thus, what ſhall the Lorde of the vineyarde doo vnto ſuche houſebandemenne? Whan they ettefones bee theyr euaſions to auoyde makyng of an anſwere, the Lorde ſayed moreouer. The Lorde hymſelfe will come, and will ſende a ſhamefull ende to thoſe houſebandemenne, who coulde not bee woonne with any gentle fauour, and thoſe ſame perſones bytterly deſtruied by death, he will lette foorth his vineyarde to other houſebandemen. By this ſaying dyd the Lord ſygnyfie, that the religion of the Jewes, ſhould euen by the roote bee aboliſhed, and the fruicte of the ghoſpell bee tranſpoſed and remoued vnto the Gentiles by the miniſtery of the Apoſtles.

The texte. Whan they heard this, they ſayed: God forbidde. And he beheld them, and ſaid: what is this than that is written? The ſtone that the builders refuſed, the ſame is become the head of the corner, whoſoeuer dooeth ſtumble vpon that ſtone, ſhalbe broken: but on whomeſoeuer it fallech, it will grinde him to poudre. And the hygh prieſtes and the Scribes the ſame houre went about to lay handes on him, and they feared the people, for they perceiued that he had ſpoken this ſimilitude againſt them.

But the Phariſeis (as men that couldе in no wyſe away with the hearing of this) anſwered: God forbydde, it ſhall not bee ſo. For they well perceyued all thys parable to had bene tolde agaynſte them: and where they couldе bewray with any deuiliſhe purpoſe and deuyſe to kyll Jeſus, yet doe they vtterlye deteſte and abhorre the iuſte vengeaunce of God due for ſuche a wyrked purpoſe. But Jeſus purpoſelye to ſhewe that the bewraye ſame thyng which they denyed had bene forſayed of the Prophetes, that it would ſo fortune, caſt an earneſt eye vpon them, and (as ye would ſay) ſpeaking vnto their conſcience, ſayed: If ye geue not credite to my parable, what is it than that ye reade in the Pſalmes? That ſame ſtone whiche the builders caſt aſide and woulde none of, is become the head ſtone of the corner: whoſoeuer ſhall light on that ſtone to ſtumble on it, ſhall be all to cruſhed, and agayn on whome the ſame ſtone ſhall fall hym ſhall it grynde to poudre. Chriſte ſygnifyethe hymſelfe to be the celeſtiall ſtone, ſent of god, whome the Jewes refuſed, building vp theyr Synagogue without Chriſte: but God made hym the cozner ſtone whiche knitteth together and cloſeth vp bothe the walles into one, and coupleth twoo ſoondrye peoples into one churche and congregacion throughe euangelicall fayth without the ceremonies of the lawe. And thys ſtone is a moſte ſure buckeler and defence agaynſte all the aſſaultes of the worlde and of Satan vnto all ſuche, as beleuyng on hym, doe cleue faſt vnto hym, and doe reſt or ſtaygh on hym.

Nowe on the other ſyde, dzieuen to poulder ſhall that perſone bee, on whome that ſtone ſhall lyghte in hys fallyng. And certes on ſuche dooeth it lyghte, whome after they haue bene a great long time ſuffred, the ſtroke of God at laſte falleth ſodaynlye vpon, ere they bee aware oz thinke on it. Foz one and the ſame ſtone, is lyke to thoſe that reſte thereon, and damnacion to ſuche as are enemyes vnto it. These parables of the Lordes declaring, ſette the heartes of the headmen, of the prieſtes, and of the Scribes in ſuche an eagre rage, that they were mynded euen there pzeſentelye to haue layed handes on hym, but the dzede of the people dyd at that tyme ſtreygne them from that wicked vilannie, emong whome they ſawe Jeſus to be had in verye great pryce. Foz knowing themſelues naughte in theyz owne conſcience, they had ſmelled the parable whiche was tolde, to touche and hitte them as righte as anye thyng, and yet had the parable bene tolde to ſuche intente as they might by the vnderſtanding therof be called backe agayne from theyz moſte deuiliſhe purpoſe whiche they had entended. But nowe are they made the more crabbed and fierce vnto dooing of miſchiefe, by the ſelfeſame thyng, where by they ought to haue bene clene diſcouraged and dzieuen from theyz malice.

¶ And they watched him, and ſent furth ſpyes which ſhould fayne themſelues righteous men, to take him in hys woordes, and to delyuer hym vnto the power & auctorite of the deputie. And they aſked him ſaying: Maiſter, we knowe that thou ſayeſt and teacheſt right, neither conſidereſt thou the outward appearaunce of any man, but teacheſt the way of God truely. Is it lawful foz vs to geue tribute vnto Ceaſar, oz no? He pzeuented their craftineſſe, & ſayde vnto them: why tempte ye me? Shewe me a penye. Whoſe image and ſuperſcripcion hath it? They aunſwered and ſaide, Ceaſars. And he ſayde vnto them: geue than vnto Ceaſar, the thynges whiche belong vnto Ceaſar, and to God the thynges that pertcine vnto God. And they couldo not repzoue his ſaying before the people: and they meruayled at his aunſwere, and helde theyz peace. The texte reason was the hygh rewlrr in Jewry in Ceasars behalfe: and thys dyd they, to thentent and purpose that all the grutche, and querele of thys facte myghte bee layed ouer from themselues to the others, as though he had beene putte to death by the sentence and iudgemente of Ceasars officers, and that they on theyr parties as men inculpable mighte appere to haue kept theyr handes from effusion of bloude. But the more they goe about by worldelye subtilte to hyde it, so muche doe they more and more notoriously bewray theyr incomparable malice. The sayde disguising masking esquiers therefore of the byshope dooe set vpon Jesus, & assayle hym with suche kinde of wordes as here ensue. Maister we haue thys ughlye scene thy perfecte byrighteuelle: thou teleste thy mynde playnely without any feare or dissimulacyon, and teacheste euery thyng after the right soure, neyther is there with thee any suche respecte or acception of persones, that thou wilte tell me a lye for the fauoure of any man, bee he of neuer so muche power and autorite: but thou hast euermore oneiye God and none elles before thyne eyes. What is acceptable to hym and standing with hys pleasure, the same dooest thou playnely and without any feare teache. Tell thou vnto vs therefore what thy beray opinyon and mynde is in a mattier about whiche there is muche controuersie and bariaunce emong no smalle noumber of vs: whether is it a thyng standyng with goddes pleasure and contentacion, that we geue tribute vnto Ceasar, or is it not? Jesus than who had a perfecte vnderstanding of these smoothe and swete hony woordes mening fraude and deceipte towardes hym, and knowyng beraye well to what ende thys snareful bayted question was ment, whiche was, that in case he had answerred according as theyr beray hope was he wouldr, that it were not standing with Goddes contentacyon that a people beeyng consecrated vnto God, shoulde bee in subiiecyon, and shoulde paye tribute to an vngodlye prynce and an ydolatre, (whiche opinyon the Phariseis allowed, though they durste not openlye speake it:) they woulde ethe selues haue procured and addressed out some counterfricte persones, whiche shoulde haue detected him of highe treason before Pilate (beeyng the emperours lieutenaunte:) he dyd by euangelycall policye in suche wyse defeate theyr malicious deceipte fulnesse, that he dyd bothe take awaye from them the occasyon whiche was sought to doe him harme, and also put them in remembraunce what their durtie was to doe, whiche thyng vndoubtedly no man shoulde leaue vndoen without assured peril & icopardye of his life. For Christ was not come for any such purpose, as to teache howe much was to be payed vnto Emperours, or to Emperours deputies: but what was due of the spirituall substaunce to bee payed vnto god, who is the Lorde of all thynges. Why come ye to tempt me (sayeth he) Shewe me a piece of youre syluer coyne. For he knoweth not the image of Ceasar, for as muche as he had nothyng in earthe. Whan the piece of coyne was shewed hym in hys hande, he demaunded whose physyonomye it was, and whose ryte or poyse was written about it. For thys is a thyng too, that a true Christian dooeth not knowe. But they who knewe it (that is men wedded to the worlde) sayed: Ceasars physionomye and pyrcnee it is.

Than ꝓ Jesus byandy: than render and paye ye vnto Ceasar, yf anye thyng belongeth to his righte. For I force nothyng what the pynces of thys worlde dooe require by theyr exaccions. But thys is yet a greater poynete of youre charge, and more requisite to the purpose, that ye rendre vnto God, that ye Maister we knowe that thou sayest and teachest right. &c.

Is it lawefull for vs to geue tribute vnto Ceasar?

Geue vnto Ceasar the thinges whiche belong vnto Ceasar.

peoughe vnto hym: know ye therfore the image of hym stricken and coined in youre herres, acknowlage ye his title and pollee. All the soule is due to hym euery whit of it, and oughte not to bee in bondage to any other persone, then to hym, who created bothe the bodye and ỹ soule too. And bearing (as it doeth) the image of God, where fore is it paied for tribute to the deuill? The subtyll awaiters to haue taken hym in a trippe, mervayle at so warie and circumspect an answer. For the euangelical simplicitie hath a politique cast of it own too.
yet this notwithstandyng, they wouldde not acknowlage the heauenlye wysedome of God in him, but forowed because there was nothing which they could reppoue in all his talke.

The texte

Then came to him certaine of the Sadducees which deny that there is any resurrection, and they asked him, saiyng: Master, Moses wrote vnto vs, if any mannes brother dye hauing a wife, and he dye without children, that then his brother should take his wyfe, a reise vp sede vnto his brother. There were therfore seuen brethren, & the first take a wife, and dyed without children. And the seconde tooke her, and he died childelesse. And the thirde tooke her, and likewise the residue of the seuen, and leaft no children behind them, and died. Last of all the woman died also. Howe in the resurrection, whose wife of them shall she be? For seuen had her to wife. Jesus answered and saied vnto them: The children of this worlde marye wiues, and are maried, but they whiche shalbe coumpted worthy e of that worlde and the resurrection from the dead, doe not marie wiues neither are maried nor yet cannot dye anye more. For they are equall vnto the aungels, and are the sonnes of God, in somuch as they are children of the resurrection. And that the dead shal rise again, Moses also shewed besides the bushe, when he calleth the lorde the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of liuing. For al liue vnto him. Then certain of the Pharisees answered and saied: Master, thou hast well saied. And after that durste they not aske him any question at all.

The Sadducees, denye ỹ there is any resurrection

Whan the saied parties were departed from hym, there came vnto him of the secte of the Sadducees, who vnder a false title of righteousnesse made much high solemnitie of theimselfes, in like maner as the Pharisees had their name of excellencie in outward appearence to the sighte of menne, wherein they thought theimselfes seere to surmounte and passe the other sectes.
And the secte of the Sadducees hathe this one propertie by theimselfes, that they doue not beleue anye arisyng again of the bodyes to bee after this lyfe, neither anye parte of man to remayne after death, ne that there be anye Aungels.
These Sadducees propoune to the Lorde suche a question as foloweth. Master, such maner a law hath there been geue to vs by Moses, that in case anye man, after he hath maried a wyfe, shalbee deceassed without chyldren: the brother of the parte so deceassed, shall marye the wedowe leaft by hym: and succedyng in the place of his brother, shal reise succession and issue vnto his brother of the same womans bodye. So than it foxtuned, that there were seuen brethē of whome the fyrst maried a wife, and died without issue. The nexte eldest brother tooke her that was leaft to wyfe, and dyed hymselfe lykewyse hauing had no chyldren by her. Nexte after hym succeded the thirde brother into wedlocke, accordyng to the course of his age, who on his parte also dyed withoute chyldren. And thoze tale to make, in semblable maniet was this womā maried vnto eueryne one of them vntill the seuenth, and al had her, and yet made she neuer an one of theim a father, ne brought hym forth any chyld. In proceise of tyme dyed the woman too. Now than at the general resurrection, which of the seuen

Fr.i. brethren

brethren shall recouer the possession of this woman to his wyfe? For ons maried she was to euery one of them, and she can not bee common to them al, ne to any mo housebandes then one. By this toye hauing in it neither time nor reason, the Sadducees supposed that the opinion of the Pharisies myght bee wyped clene awaye, whiche Pharisies dyd stiffely holde argumente, that the soules doe remayne after the bodyes be dead, yea and furthermore that the bodyes of the dead shall one daye returne to lyfe againe.

Now because these mennes appofyng of hym contained in it more foolishenesse, the malice, Jesus vouchesaued to enstructe the, sayinge: ye are in a wyg opinion in that ye imagyne the like state of thynges to bee in the lyfe to come, as ye see in this present worlde here. The children of this worlde, which worlde is neuer without successiue alteracion of some dyeng euery day, and othersome daily cummyng into the worlde, dooe remediesse seke out and procure wiues for their sonnes, and doe sette out theyr daughters in mariage to housebandes, for mankynde cannot by any other possible meanes bee continued in progeneracion of issue. And therefore mattrimonie emong them is not a thyng of slesfulnesse, but of necessitie. But those persones to whose lotte suche dignitie shall falle, that they maye be reputed woorthie the resurrection of the iust, and worthye thatsame worlde, whiche knoweth no mortalitie, suche neyther shall procure wyues for theyr soonnes, nor shall geue theyr daughters to housebandes in mariage. For what nede shall there bee of mariage or carnall copulacion, whan no bodye shall nowe dye? For they haue nowe alreadye succeaded any longer to bee carnall, and to bee subiecte to the incommodityes of this worlde, but haue nowe receiued a bodye that shall neuer dye, and shall nowe from henceforth none otherwyse liue then the Angels dooe liue, emong whome there is no mariage ne vse of wedlocke because there is no necessitie of dying.

Here in this worlde they that of mortall parentes are borne mortall, dooe by the vse of mattrimonye, make prouision and meanes for continuing the succession of mankynde: But those others beeyng nowe by the vertue of the spyrite newe borne againe, and made the sonnes of God liuyng for euer without ende, shall fele no nulle of mattrimonie, because they shall not knowe death, as beeyng nowe through resurrection restored vnto lyfe immortall. And because thilsame doubtefull question hadde bene propounded of the Sadducees purposely to mocke the arisyng again of the deade, because they beleued not that the soules doee remayne alyue after the death of the bodye: Jesus vouchesalued to enstructe their ignorant hertes concernyng this cafe too, by autozitye of holy scripture, whiche holy scripture in dede they dyd not disalowe, but yet they dydde reade the same not hauyng theyr myndes on it to marke it as they should doe. Verily (saieth he) to be a thyng possible enough, that ? dead may arise agayn, and that the soules doee not dye together with the bodyes, euen Moses hymselfe dooeth teache you to bee true, whole autozitie, forasmuche as ye dooe in other matters acknowlage, ye ought not in this cafe to refeete. For Moses hath written, that God spake vnto hym after this maner oute of the bushe, whiche he had seen in redde flamyng fyer to burne without anye consumyng or wastyng. I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, the God of Jacob. &c. Now were Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,

at that tyme alreadye buried in grauc: That if according to your opinion, e-uery one which dyeth, dyeth for altogether, and dyeth neuer to be recouered a-gayn: how doeth god call hymselfe god of theim that be none suche? For seing that God is ỹ verey true liuing god himself, or rather (more truely to speake) is verey lyfe selfe: it is a thyng vnconuenyente, that he should call hym self the God of suche as by meane of deathe are vtterly perished and gonne for euer.
But they are not so gon, forasmuch as the chieffer parte of theim remaineth aliue, that is to wete, the soule, being the parte whereby our life is in vs. In other liuyng creatures beſydes man, death is an vtter perishyng for euer: for in theim al wel the bodye falleth altogether downe as soone as it is destitute of lyfe, as also the soule, which in theim is naught els but a certayne harmonye, and proporcionate agreeyng together of the qualites and humours of the bo-dye, whiche as soone as that same temperature is dissolued, banisheth away immediately as a thyng of nothyng. But in man deathe is nothyng els, but a pluckyng of the soule in soondre from the bodye, so that the better parte of the two that are in vs remayneth styll vncorrupted, and the bodye only is for a season not vtterly perished neyther, but as ye would say, putrified. And the same body to be restored agayn by the power of god at the resurrection, ought not to seme any meruaill vnto you, forasmuche as ye daily see of a dry graine of sede caste a waye into the earth, and there putrified, a newe and a liue tree to spryng vp, whiche late hydden in a litle smale and deade selfe grayne now buried in the grounde. Therefore such as are dead, to youward are dead in dede, forasmuche as ye are not able to reuiue them agayne: but euerie one of them, yea euen they that are deade also vnto lyue to godwarde, in whose hande it is, whansoeuer his wyll shall bee, to restore the soules that haue beene plucked awaye, euerie one to theyr owne bodies agayn. When the Sadducees at these sayinges helde theyr peace not hauyng a worde to speake: certayne Scribes allowed the talke of Iesus, because that concernyng this case, the Pharyseis and the Scribes did consente in opinion agaynste the sects of the Sadducees.
Notwithstandyng lyke as the opinion of the Phariseis and Scribes was in this behalfe righter then the opinion of the Sadducees: so were their hertes more replete with mischiefe and vngratefulnesse. For in suche a place dooeth there lesse parte of malice remayn, where there resteth more of grosse ignorãce and defaulte of learnyng. Thus after that Iesus had in dayne beene tempted and proued of soondrye sectes of the Iewes, (for he had afore this tyme answered the Pharyseis to their question concernyng the greatest precepte of the law,) and not one of them al had had suche spede as he wouldbe in that ỹ he had attempted: no man durst auenture any more to be busie or to beginne with him in demaundyng of any questions.

For he is not a god of dead but of liuing.

And after ỹ durste they not aske hi any questiõ at all.

Cand he saied vnto theim: Howe saie they that Christe is Dauids soonne? And Dauid himselfe saieth in the booke of the Psalmes: The Lorde saied vnto my Lord, sitte thou on my right hande, till I make thine enemies thy foote stoole. Dauid therefore calleth hym Lorde, and howe is he than his sonne?

The texte.

Iesus therefore of his own motion whan thei wer gathered togethee in a plãpe, did bid theim aunswere him who would, to a question that he would demaunde, not beeyng a question full of baites to take theim in trippes, but a ſtruccion that concerned their ſoules health. He demaũded whoſe ſonne the ſcripture dyd pronounce that Meſſias ſhould be. They beyng not ignorant that it had by prophecie bene forſeiated, that Meſſias ſhould in tyme cummyng bee borne of the linage of Dauid, made anſwere without any ſtoppes or ſtaighes: Dauids ſonne. To this Jeſus ſaid: But Dauid beyng enſpired with the holy ghoſte, ſpeaketh of Meſſias after this maner in the Pſalmes: The Lord ſaid vnto my Lord, ſitte thou on my righte hande, vntil I make thyne enemies thy foote ſtoole. Howe agreeth it, that Dauid ſhoulde calle him Lorde whome he acknowlegeth and taketh for his ſonne? For the ſonne is inferiour to the father: and more reaſon it wer, that the ſoonne ſhould in the wape of honour and reuerence call the father Lorde, then contrarie wiſe. This queſtion coulde not one of them all ſette, and for that preſente Jeſus thoughte it ſufficiente (as ye would ſaye) by a miſticall riddell to haue geuen them a litle intimation or inclyng of his nature of Godhed, by the whiche nature of his Godhed he was ſuperiour vnto all the Patriarkes, foraſmuch as he was equal vnto God the father, albeit euen after his humain nature alſo he excelled all creatures. And they reputed the memorie of Dauid to bee holy and precious: but hym whome Dauid acknowlaged bothe for his ſoonne, and alſo for his Lorde: hym they caſte of, not through ignorance of the lawe, but of a iudgemente beyng blinded with peruerſe and corrupte affections.

The texte. Than in the audience of al the people, he ſaied vnto his diſciples. Beware of the Scribes, whiche will goe in long clothyng, and loue greetinges in the marketes, and the highe ſeates in the Synagogues and the chiefe roumes at feaſtes, whiche deuoure widowes houſes feigning long prayers: the ſame ſhall receiue great damnation.

Foraſmuche therfore as the malice of this generation was paſt al hope of grace, and not curable by any ſalues that could be: it remained, that the ſimple and vnlettred multitude of the people ſhould haue good warning geuen them that they might not bee trained in and deceiued by coulouring and craftie conueighaunce of the others, who whereas they were voyde of al religion or true deuotion, yet dyd they counterfeicte the higheſt godlineſſe poſſible, hauyng eye to none other marke, but only to their own glory and lucre, and for that ſame onely cauſe murmouryng and prayeng all maner wayes poſſible, againſt the glory of God, and againſt the health of their neighbours. For there be none more deadlye enemies of true godlineſſe, then ſuche as by counterfaictyng of holy conuerſacion purchaſe vnto themſelfes autozitie, and bearing themſelfes bolde on the ſame, do withdrawe the ſimple people from true godlineſſe. This kynde of maiſters are lore taken with twoo diſeaſes in especiall, that is, with ambition which altogether enclineth to tyrannye, and with couetiſe inſaciable. And ſuche men dyd Jeſus (as it were) plainly peince out vnto his diſciples, ſ that did he all the people beyng within audience of it, to the ende the ſaid Phariſeis and Scribes myght bee ſhunned, foraſmuche as they would not be reformed: ſ that they myght haue no longer tyme to deceiue, ſeyng they would in no wyſe amend. And this was not any ſuche poynct as to backebite or take awaie any mennes good name and fame, but to make a good ſure waie for the ſafegarde and preſeruyng of the ſimple innocẽt people. Now liſten thou ſweete Theophilus, to what coulours the Lorde peincteth them out, ſ thou mayeſt eſchewe them, whan they bee knowen vnto thee. Beware ye of the Scribes (ſaieth he) ſuche as ye dooe nowe often tymes ſee to aſſayle me with guyle and ſubtiltye,

The ſaid vnto his diſciples

subtilitie. They profesſe the perfect knowlage of the lawe, & doo obſtinately reſiſte the mynde of the law. They haue God in theyr mouth, but thei are open aduerſaries to the glorie of God. They proteſte in woordes, to be earneſte trauailers for the peoples behoufe and profite, whereas they counterfaict al thinges that euer they doe for reſpecte of theyr owne cõmodities. Thei make great ſtepyng outwardly from the coumpaignie of ſinners, yea, and in caſe thei light on the coumpaignie of ſuche by anye caſuall chaunce, they purge theimſelues by much waſhynges: but themſelues on their owne parties dooe withinfoorth altogether lyymme in vyces much more deteſtable, that is to wete, in deſire of vaingloorye, in high ſolemnitie of looke and countenaunce & in enuy, but moſte ſpecially of all in auarice, whiche to doe is no leſſe then plain worſhypping of idolles. And becauſe they vnderſtãd and perceiue the people to be moſt chiefly moued with ſuche thinges as maye bee ſeen with the bodily ies: they doe with ſuche kyndes of iuglepynges, hunt and ſeke to geat autoritie emong the ſimple ſoules. They doe (as ye would ſaye) ſette out themſelues to ſale, by their newe-found diſguiſed veſture, hauyng a great pride and feluctie to be ieityng vp & downe where thei maye be ſeen in their autentical robes of auncyentneſſe reachyng down to the hard grounde: and with theire countenaunces framed to a grauitie, they are often & much preſent in ỹ high ſtretes and in places of great reſorte of people, to the entent they maie there haue much crouchyng and bouwyng made vnto them, & that they maye bee hailled and greted by the name of worſhypfull maiſters. In the ſinagoges alſo and in places where much coumpaignie is ſitting together, thei looke and ſeke to haue the higheſt ſeates, and at ſeaſtes whan they ſhall ſitte downe to meate, they haue a great appetite to beginne the table, becauſe they would ſeme great and wyſe felowes in the eyes of men, whereas before the face of God they are accurſed and deteſtable. And yet might they ſeme to bee nomore but vaingloyous and foolyſhe, if they made no further ſchyng nor ſuyng but for the ſwifte blaſtes of bruit and fame of ỹ people, and the vaniſhing ſmoke of hailinges and greetynges. Nay, there is nothyng more full of catchyng and pollyng then thei are. Thei occupie not the trade of vſurpe, lending out their money for encreſſe or gaines: thei are not collectours ne receiuers of tribute wherby to polle and pieie the cõmon people, but they haue caſtes and ſleightes more vngracious then the craftye trade of ſuche is. The ſimpler ſorte of people whiche maye eaſily be begupled, doe they hunt to take for a pzale: they ſeke to catche wedowes ſuche as are welthye and ryche, and deſtitute of the aide of houſebandes, which might defend them. The ſere of womankynde is apte to be deceyued by fraude, and a godly acte it is in apparence, to bee helpers of ſuche as are deſtitute. Suche ſimple wedowes therfore doe they eaſily flocke and loute, through counterfaictyng of holines. Verye muche grauitie doe they pretende in their countenaunce, they bee honoured of euerye bodye, they beraie habyte dooeth on euerye ſyde crie them to bee men of holy converſacion, and thei diſe belydes this to bee a long whyle together in prayers, yea and that ſhall bee doen in the open ſtretes where euerye bodye maye beare recorde. The ſame thing was dooen of Iohn alſo and of the olde auncient prophetes, but it was dooen in ſecrete, where none might behold it but God. But theſe felowes doee not praye, but hunte. What meruayl thã, if ſelle wedowes bee deceiued by ſo manye waies of coulourable delyng? But whan they haue ons creept in, to geate theyr heades withyn the ſaied wedowes dooꝛes, they deuoure their houses, and picle and polle the selp wꝛemen whom their partes had bꝛen to defende and saue, and what ought to haue bꝛen gꝛeuꝛ out in almes to the behouk of the pooze, that doe they wholly conuerte to their owne lucre. Such manner men were the Scribes at thole dates and the Phariseis, who without ende bothe in wooꝛd and dede made reſiſtẽce agaynſte the gholpell. Albeit there bee euen at this pꝛeſent date too, and euer wyl be Scribes: who whyle they ſette al their mynde and ſtudie vpon their owne pꝛofites, dooe not onely bothe ſpeake and wooꝛke agaynſt the commodities of the pꝛople, but alſo do reſiſte the glozie of Jeſus, and that they dooe vnder a falſe pꝛetence of religion, by theyꝛ wedes, by their tules, and by their long pꝛayers, huntyng foꝛ to geat an opinion of holineſſe in the ſyght of the common people: whiche common people dooeth not yet well vnderſtande in what thynges true religion dooeth conſiſte. But nowe, what ſhall the diſciples of Chriſte dooe agaynſt ſuche Scribes and Phariſeis, foꝛaſmuche as ꝑ true diſciples of Chriſt can no maner ſkyl of harmyng any bodie as mẽ endeuꝛed with the ſimpleneſſe of bexap dooꝛs. Foꝛſooth they ſhall in this caſe vſe alſo the ſubtiltie of the ſexpent. If beeyng duely tolde of their ill doynges they do not emend, their coumpaignie muſte be ſhunned, ſeeyng they are vncurable, and the ſimple are to bee warned that they beware of the ſame ſecte lyyng in awaite foꝛ theim. And as foꝛ the ſaide Scribes and Phariſeis, theyꝛ due puniſhemente abideth theym. Foꝛ whan they ſhall come to the ſeate of iudgemente, befoꝛe that ſame iudge, who iudgeth not by ſuche thynges as are ſeen with the yes of the bodye, but by the pꝛiuye affections of the hertes: at that houre ſhal ſuche be adiudged to moꝛe grieuous toꝛmentes, then thoſe, whiche are to ꝑ open ſight of the woꝛlde and vnfeignedly full of hainous enoꝛmities beyng perſones ſo much the leſſe culpable, becauſe they ſhewe their diſeaſe openlye and hide it not.

The ſame that receiue greater damnation

The.xxi. Chapter.

The texte. As he beheld, he ſawe the riche menne, which caſte in their offreinges into the treaſourie. He ſawe alſo a certain pooze wedowe, whiche caſt in thither two mytes. And he ſaied: of a treuth I ſeie vnto you: that this pooze wedowe hath putte in moze then they al. Foꝛ they all haue of their ſuꝛpertiuite added vnto the offreinges of God: but ſhe of her penurie hath caſt in all the ſubſtaunce that ſhe had.

And to the entente the Lord Jeſus would the moze diſeꝛpe enpziente the foꝛeſaied matter in the hertes of the people, whiche was, that men are not eſtemed in ꝑ ſight of God by thynges viſible but by ſincerite of ꝑ herte, and alſo mighte checke the couetiſe of the Scribes, of ꝑ Phariſeis, and of the pꝛieſtes, who bzoughte the people in an earneſte beliefe, and in eſpecial ſelte fond wꝛemen that were wedowes, (if they were welthie & riche, ceis not,) that it was the highelte poynete of holineſſe that coulde be, if they dyd contribute a beraj great pozcion of their ball ſubſtaunce into the cozbone, that is, their churche treaſurie of Jewels and offreynges, the pouerte in the meane whyle ouerpaſſed, yea and many tymes their children & pꝛentes too: as he was ſitting in the temple, he caſt vp his yes vnto that ſame place, whiche is called Gazophilacium (that is to ſay) the Jewelhouſe oꝛ ſeꝛtry, ſtrtye, or treaſourie, in the whiche the Jewels of the temple were kepte. The prieſtes would in any wiſe haue this moneye reputed ſo holye, that where the lawe had ſpecially commaunded that the parentes ſhould be honoured, theyr doctryne was, that the father ought rather to bee leaft vnholpen, thē ꝑ corbon not to bee encreaſed, wherasy that money yet neuertheleſſe thzough the deſault and abuſion of the prieſtes, was now alreadye a great parte of it turned to the maintenaunce of the ſenſuall exceſſiue liuyng of theſame prieſtes onely. So whan manie ryche and welthie perſones had caſt many thyng es into the treaſourie, and had muche countenaunce and ſygnes of allowing them for caſting in ſuche money made vnto theim by the prieſtes and Phariſeis, as Goddes creatures for theyr ſo dooyng: there came thither a certain ſelie pooze widowe who caſt in two mytes or litteli bzaſſe pens of money, as muche as came to a ferthyng. And when no yerthly creature at all would once make any ſigne of commendyng her, becauſe ſhe gaue but a litte: yet was it Jeſus pleaſure that the godly deuotion of this woman ſhould bee knowen to the people. For he ſaied: This widowe ſemeth by the iudgemente of men to haue putte a verye ſmal portiō into the treaſourie, but theſame woman by ꝑ iudgemente of God, hath caſt in moze then thoſe other riche perſones, whiche haue verye largelye dooen. For they are liberall of the ſuperfluitie whiche they haue at home: but this pooze widowe vpon an earneſte zele and deuocion of dooyng her duetye vnto God, hath geuen of her penurie, whereas ſhe had full great nede to haue kepte it ſtill, and all the ſubſtaunce whiche ſhe had at home, ſhe hath nowe caſt into the treaſourie. In the ſighte of God therefore, who hathe not an eye to the quantitie of the thing, but to the herte of the geuer, ſhe gaue a moze boũteous offreyng, then the others whiche gaue a greate dele moze in quantitie. Thus Jeſus by euerye occaſion withdzewe his diſciples from puttyng affiaunce or truſte in thynges that maie bee ſeene (wherunto the Jewes dyd attribute ouer muche) vnto ꝑ earneſt exercyſe of euangelicall deuocion and godlineſſe, which conſiſteth in the ſyncere affeccion of the herte.

The ſame al ſo a certain pooze wee dow, which caſte in this ther two mites.

This pooze widowe hath put in moze then they all.

The texte.

¶ And vnto ſome that ſpake of the temple, how it was garniſhed with goodly ſtones and Jewels, he ſaied: The daies will come, in the whiche (of thoſe thinges which ye ſe) there ſhal not be leaft one ſtone vpon an other, that ſhal not be throwen downe. And they aſked him, ſaiyng: Maiſter, whan ſhal theſe thinges be, and what ſigne wil there be, whan ſuch thinges come to paſſe? And he ſaied take hede that ye bee not deceyued. For manye ſhall come in my name, and ſaie that they are Chriſte, and the tyme draweth nere. Folowe ye not them therfore. But whan ye heare of warres and ſedicions, be not afeaied. For thoſe thinges muſt firſt come to paſſe, but the ende folowethy not ſtraightwy. Than ſaied he vnto them: Nacion ſhall ariſe againſt nacion and kingdome againſt kingdome, & great yearth quakes ſhalbe in al places, and hungre, & peſtilēce and feareful thinges. And great ſignes ſhall there bee from heauen.

Now ſo it was, that the Jewes had an eſpecial glozie in their temple of Hieruſalem, the whiche becauſe it was ereedyng curiouſly builded, and alſo enriched with many high and precious Jewels, was viſited with great religion, not onely of al the Jewes, but alſo of aliens & men of other ſtraunge nacios. And nowe was the tyme come, that the religion of theſame materiall temple with the ſacrifices and oblacions to theſame belongyng ſhould ceaſſe, and the temple of maunes herte beeyng conſecrated with the holy ghoſt ſhould be prepared for God, in which there ſhould moſt acceptable ſacrifices be daily offred vnto hym, not of bzuite beaſtes, but of godly pzaiers, and thākes geuyng. For the pure herte, yea euen of euery pooze body, is a moze poztelye and gorgeous temple to God, then was the fated most sumpteous temple of Jerusalem, whiche had been so many yeres in edifying. Chastitie, humilitie, & charitye or perfecte loue towardes al men, been ornamentes a great dele more precious in ỹ syghte of God, then that other marble pillours, & the garnishing of purpre, the tymbre worke of cedretre, the golde, the siluer, and the precious stones, wherof the priestes and Pharisees made so muche greate pryde and shewe. And so, when certaine persones made a poynctyng and a shewyng to Jesus, towardes the woondrefull buildyng of the temple, whiche was edified with the moste pure stone that coulde bee, and thesame stone bothe poolished & beturn with greate wourkmanship of masonrie, and was ferther more with many Jewels gate & richely beseen, he aunswered: prepaire ye vnto God a ghostlye temple, whyche neither oldnesse mate eate vp ẅ rottyng, neither any tẽpeste mate ouerthrowe, nor fier mate burne vp, ne any power of man mate destrute or caste downe: For the time shall shortely come whan all these thynges whiche ye doue now make so muche meruailyng and gazyng at, as thynges woorthie and mete for God, shal bee throwen downe euen to the foundacion, yea in so much, that there shal not so muche as one stone be left standyng vpon an other, but that it shall bee destrued. The disciples this hearyng, & cõiectureyng euen of those verye woordes, that the kyngdome of heauen was now not ferre of, whiche kingdõe they suppoled and imagined should come with a greate chaunge & turning vpside down of the world: beeyng gredye men to knowe the tyme whan these thinges should come, dooe saie vnto the Lorde: Maister, al thillame that thou speakest of eatyng downe of the temple, and of the vtter destruyng of the cytye of Hierusalem, what date or whan shall it cumme to passe, or by what signe mate we bee hable to knowe the saied tyme to be alreadye come? But Jesus whole wyll is to haue his disciples euermore in a readinesse against all assaultes of euyll myschauentures, dyd by his doubtfull and entricked communicacion, sette theyr myndes in suspence & perplexitie, makyng a medley of many soondrye matters together, concernyng afflictions which they should after warde abide for preachyng the ghospel, concernyng the beatyng down and the miserable plague of the citie of Hierusalem, and concernyng the ende of the worlde, the houre and tyme whereof it was his pleasure to haue vnknowen to all creatures, to the entent they should continually euermore be in a readinesse. The disciples minded nanne altogether vpon a kyngdome: But the Lorde was more willyng to haue them knowe the thyng that did more nerelye touche them, and to knowe those other matters the verye speakyng and mencioning whereof, their hertes vtterly abhorred, because they wer as yet but weake and fraill menne. For they had better fansie and will to heare woordes pleasaunt to the eare of worldelye coumforte and solace, then to heare thynges concernyng the coumforte of the soule health. The foresaied blessed reigne will one daye surely come, and at his due tyme wil it come, but the care and charge thereof, it is moste expediente to put in the handes of God, and to leat hym alone withall, our partes it is in the meane tyme so to behaue our selues, that we maye not seme vnworthye of that kyngdome. For there is no cummyng to the glorye of thelame reigne, but by meane of soondrye afflictions. Against such afflictions it behoueth our hertes to be well armed: Jesus therefore saied: Oute of all doubtes come I will, and displeigh the maiestie of the reigne Euangelicall. But see ye ỹ ye bee not seduced, enbracing an other Christe in stede of me: For before the prefixed tyme at whiche I wyll come, there will come many whiche wyll vsurpe my name vnto them, and will boldely auouche of themselues and saie: I am Christ. The time is at hande: Be not ye any thyng moued with the wordes of such: & in case they shall call you any whether, goe not ye after them. Certaily when ye shall heare al the worlde to be in a garboile of seditiõs & of warres, many persones shall plate the prophetes, and shall allege the ende of the world to approche. But be not ye any thyng feared with suche rumours, as though the last date be euen than hyandy at hande. For in dede suche thynges as these shal fortune, but the ende of the worlde commeth not euen streight waie in the necke thereof. For these shall bee nothyng els but certain preaubles of the said extreme distresse which shall bee to the eiuil sorte an vtter eastyng awaie, and to the good it shalbee an examinacion or triall, & a purifiyng of them. Ys whan the bodye is towardes the poynete of dieyng the signes & tokens therof be strõg diseases hauing come vp & growen in the same bodyes, through an vnnaturall distẽperature of the humours, so shall these terrible cõmotiõs and hurleyburley forthewe ỳ end of ỳ world, which hurleyburley mãs self doeth procure vnto hymselfe by reason that he is infected wt inordinate lustes & affections. Through mans peruerteines shal ỳ verap nature of thynges be shaken out of al due ordre & course, destroying (as it were) the malice of man, & strongly endourgeyng for the redresse & amẽdement of their vngracyousnesse. With greate vproares & garboile shal there be artillynges of nacion against nacion & royalme against royalme. And whereas there is nothyng more distressful the warre, yet doeth man purchace & wilfully procure this pernicious confusion vnto hymselfe through ambicion, through kolpe, through couetise, through hatred, and throughe other lyke corrupt affections. Yea & verat nature selfe shal ouer & besides ỳ premisses, cause many sore yearthquakes in many soondrye places, in sorte as though ỳ world tooke high skorne & disdeigne, for that it was forced to beare men beeing suche bagodly & wicked creatures. There shal moreouer cum great pestilẽces which by their infeccion shal waste awaie & cõsume a mighte great noũbre of people in sorte as though the aire were armed & weaponed to doe vengeaunce vpõ the eiuil sorte, whereas it was for this purpose first ordeined & sette for mãnes vse, that with it holsome breath it should bothe geue & nourish life vnto al creatures. Ferthermore throughe penurie of the fruites of ỳ yearth there shall come famine, in case as ỳ the yearth should say that she would not geue foode vnto her children being so wicked against God, to whom euẽ the dumme elementes also doe their bounden seruice & duetie. The sea also shalbee throughly moued with straũge & vnwont rages of tumbleyng and tossing wheras the same too had afore times been accustomed to serue to the vse of man. Yea & besides all ỳ premisses, she verap skye and heauen shal shewe woondrefull signes testifiying the wrathe of God. For the sunne shalbee turned to derkenesse, the moone into bloud, blasying sterres shal in straunge likenesse shewe themselues & other vnnaturall woonders shall appere breyng uncouth & worthie to bee meruayled at. But lyke as a mannes bodye doeth not streight waie passe out of the world whan it is stricken wt extreme great sickenesses, and yet neuertheles the same or other lyke diseases euer now & than cummyng vnto him & taking him agayn, doe declare that the tyme of his death is not verie ofright so whan the world shal wt such manier eruils, as afore sayed, be rayled an shaken together, ỳ same euils shal geue a great signification & tokening of the world drouping now

For many shall come in my name, and saie that they are christe.

Nacion shal arise against nacion, and kingdom against kingdome.

And greate signes shall there be seẽ in heauen.

The texte, But before all these thinges, they shall laie handes on you, and persecute you: deliuryng you vp to the Synagogues and into prisons, and shall bring you vnto kinges & rewlers for my names sake. And this shal chaunce you for a testimoniall. Wee at a sure poynete therefore in your hertes, not to studie before what ye shal answere: For I wil geue you a mouth and wisedome, where against all your aduersaries shal not be able to speake or to resiste.

But ere thillame wocfull distresse shall thus cease vpon all the world at once, there shal excedyng great persecucnesse of men come afore, which shal prouoke the goodnesse of god to wrathe. For whan ye shall preache my name throughe whiche they maye be saued, they shal laie handes vpon you, and shal persecute you with al kynde of dooyng yll or mischefe vnto you, they shal hale you and put you vnto their counsaile houses of assemblie, as though ye wer culpable & malefactours. Then shal ferthermore cast you in prison: then shal arraine, and condemne you at the benches of kinges and rewlers, not for anye youre trangression, but for your great and high well dooyng, that is to wete, for the professing of my name, whiche name of myne they shal laboure by all meanes and waies to abolisshe, where they myghte by thesame freely atteigne euerlastyng saluacion. And this shal chaunce vnto you, that your conscience maie be appro-ued, and also that their malice maie well be perceiued to bee iustly condemned.

For a testimoniall. But as for you boldly trustyng on my sure defence, and your own innocencie, there is no cause why ye shoulde feare the iudgement seates, nor yet why ye should carefully deuise of recorde w your selues, how ye beeyng as ye are, men of no knowlage shall pleade your own cause in? consistorie or court of estates and princes. Neither is there any cause why for you to bryng in anye rhetorician, patron, or man of lawe, to bee your attourney. I myne owne selfe will as an inuincible patrone and aduocate stande by you throughe my spirite, who shal ministre vnto you, bothe tounglie & wisedome, suche as all your aduersaries shal not be of power to resiste ne to gaynsaye, be they neuer so cruell or eloquent and well spoken in worldely wisedome

The texte Moreouer ye shalbe betrayed of your fathers and mothers, and brethren, and kinsfolke, & frendes, and some of you shall they put to death. And hated shal ye be of all men for my names sake, & there shal not one heare of your head perishe. Possesse your soules by pacience.

And all thillame shal ye suffre not only at the handes of men vnknowen and of straungiers, but also at the handes of them whiche are knitte and ioyned vnto you in nerenesse of blonde, and with the streight bandes of frendeshippe. The father shal persecute the sonne: the brother shall wrappe the brother in accusion: the cousyn shall appeache and accuse the cousyn, one frende shal bring an other into the lawe. Yea and some there shall bee of you whome they shall for hatred of me pursue vnto death, and shal slea you. So eagre and greuous hatred shall all the whole world conceiue agaynst you for the profession of my name. And therfore whatsoeuer thyng they shal entreprise to doe agaynst you, thesame will I take as doone in despite of me: wherefore there is nothing for you to thynke or deuise of auengeyng your wronges.

It is I that shall haue displeasure doone me, it is I that shal be slaine in you. It shalbee my dede bothe to prouide wel enough for you, & also to take vengeaunce on theyr malice. And though that stormes of persecution ar the bendes of of men shall neuer somuche fede and satisfie their cruelnesse against you,there is no cause why for you to feare,the case so standyng, that I am youre protectour and defendour. For I will not so doe,that any one heare of your heade shall perishe,much lesse will I leue you in the myddes destitute of my succoure. Neyther haue ye any eye to worldelye assuraunce or defence,armyes,weapon, engines:by your onelye sufferaunce shall ye defende your liues. Mysecarrye he can not,that is slayn for the profession of my name.Ye shall not perysshe before your daye. For I will not geue vnto the violence of men so much of their own wyll. Yea and suche an one shal in verayе true dede haue saued his soule,who so shal constauntely take deathe for my cause. And there shal not one heare of your heade perishe.

And whan ye see Jerusalem besieged with an hoste,than be ye sure that the desolacion of the same is nigh. Than leat them which are in Jewrie fligh to the mountaines. And leat them whiche are in the middes of it,departe out. And leat not them that are in other countreies, entre therein. For these are the dayes of vengeaunce,that all thinges whiche are writen maie bee fulfilled. The texte.

As for this same riche and welthye citie,of whiche the Jewes at thys present take an high pride,and in whiche they thynke themselfes to bee kynges felowes:shall bee euen from the foundacion destruied by the Gentiles.

Therfore whan ye shal see Jerusalem to bee round about besette with siege,than vnderstande ye the playne destruccion thereof to bee at hande, and that there is no more to be doen, but for euerye bodye to saue themselues by spedie fleyng awaie. For euerie bodye moste comonly vseth in warres to flatte himselfe with the hope of victorie. But beware ye that this hope beguyle none of you: but whoso shall at that tyme bee in the marches of Jewrye:leate him priuely stealе awaye & conueigh him self into the mountaines and desert places where no wate ne path lyeth. And suche folkes as shall then bee enhabited in the veray herte of Jewrye,leate them remoue their dwellyng to some other place. And whomesoeuer of them,this extreme distresse shall soodaynlye take in anye forein countreyes or regions, leate not suche recule into Jewrye, leate them eftsone all thynges as clene forsaken, and no more a doe but euerye man saue his owne life. For these thynges shall not come to passe through casualcommocions of mortal men,but the vengeaunce of god hauing been now a long time prouoked through the obstinate malice of man,shal by the instrumente of other forein nacions,scourge and plague this nacion being now vnto a long day a continual rebeller agaynste God. And that all this shall come to passe, the prophetes haue manye hundred yeres sens prophecied, and especialye Daniell. And anoyded or chosen can it not bee but that it muste come to passe, what soeuer thyng þ scripture hath forethewed shal fortune. For Scripture neuer failleth,as beeyng a thing wrytten by the enstincte of the spirite of God. And yet shall not woefull extremitie therefore chaunce, because the prophetes haue prophecied that so it shall bee, but it hath therefore beene prophecied,because god forsawe the obstinate wickednesse of man, whiche would afterwarde prouoke the vengeaunce of god to light vpon it. And surely it shal bee no lesse than an huge stozme of euils because a long and an obstinate maliciousnesse of this nacion hath gon afore,whiche nacion hauyng been so many times prouoked to emendemente, hath neuertheless continuallye proceded forwarde to wurse and wurse. For these are dayes of vengeaunce.

Now this tempeste shall enwrap all sortes of people together, aswel the offendours as the innocentes. But somewhat the lesse vnhappie shall they bee whome the said storme of all these mysfauentures, when it groweth faste vpon the worlde, shall fynde prest and readye appoynted to flee. But woe vnto women with childe, and geuers of sucke: because these same beeyng charged with a burde which neither by their good willes they would, nor though they would, they shalbee hable to lay downe from them, shall not be lyght enough to renne awaye. ¶ And there shalbe signes in the sunne, & in the moone, and in the sterres, & in the earth. The people shalbe at their wittes ende through despaire, & the sea, & the waters shal roare, and mennes hertes shall faile them for feare, and for looking after those thinges which shall come on the earth. For the powers of heauen shall moue. And then shall they see the sonne of man come in a cloude with power and great glorie. When these thinges begynne to come to passe, than looke vp, and lift vp your heades, for your redemcion draweth nigh.

And as for the approchyng of thelame laste daye manye signes shall wonderfully declare it before it come. For a dreadfull date shal the said date be, especially to suche persones as despise my tyme beyng quiete, and with benefites prouoking them of myne owne offre to a better mynde. And therefore shall the verape elementes of the worlde, as ye would say, tremble & quake against the comyng of ỹ saied daye. That same bright shynyng Sunne beyng the fountaine of lyght, hauyng been accustomed to make all thynges looke vn a merie chere and countenaunce, shall with sodayne derkenesse couer his face. No moone neither shal not haue her entrechaungeable course of geuing light vnto you. The sterres beeyng redde with bloude shall descende down from the skye vpon the earth: also a sore perplexitie of mynde, & an earnest desperatio

of thynges shall soodaynly come vpon al nations, by reason that the sea shall boile and swell styll moze and moze, and the sourges thereof make a doulefull roaryng noyse after of. These monstreous tokens and suche others manye, whiche shall on euerye syde shewe fooz the theymselfes oute of all partyes of the woꝛld, shal declare the terrible stroke of god to growe fast on, & therefoze shall the people of the woꝛlde consume and pine away, and shalbee as people in an other woꝛld foꝛ the feare and continual expectation of the thynges which shall anon after come vpon the whole vniuersall woꝛld. Foꝛ the whole nature of thynges shalbe shaken together out of al ooꝛder: and not the earth only and the sea shalbee clene altred, but allo the sure and moste sounde and massie bodies of the woꝛlde aboue shalbee altogether moued, whereas theſame haue euermoze vntyll that tyme becue vntouched and free from the alteration of the elementes, and haue vsed only to geue theyr influence, and to bee woorkers vpon the thynges that lye vnder theim, and not to sele anye power of the interioure elementes entrechaungeably woꝛking oꝛ shewing any effectes vpon them again. Suche persones as haue nowe here in this woꝛlde, despised and bidden away with the sonne of man being patient, milde & beneficial, shal than at that houre see theſame commyng on high in a cloude with a great power, and with moste high glory. Now when ye shal see ỳ pzemisses come to passe, lift vp your eyes, and lift vp your heades vnto that same citie of the heauenly Ierusalem: foꝛ thã shall the kyngdome of God bee nigh at hande, in whiche there shall nowe bee none affliction of euils, but perpetual quietnesse, & endelesse felicitie. And the thynges afozesayed shalbe most vndoubted tokens of ỳ last day to be at hand.

And than that they see the sonne of man come in a cloude with power

And he shewed them a similitude: beholde the figtree, and all the trees when they shoote forth their buddes, ye se and know of your owne selues that summer is than nigh at hãde. So likewise ye also (when ye see these thynges come to passe) be sure that the kingdom of god is nigh. Verely & sale vnto you: this generation shall not passe, till all bee fulfilled. Heauen and earth shall passe: but my woꝛdes shall not passe. The texte.

And the Lord added a similitude thereto: Take ye an exaumple of the trees whiche doe by assured tokens geue men knowelage afoze hande of the fruicte to folowe. Foꝛ ye see the figtree and others when they shoote foozth their buddes & leaues, and by your owne reason ye vnderstande that summer is almoste come, and ye beginne to hope to haue fruict: Right so euen ye at what time ye shal see the foresayed signes & pzofres towardes ỳ chaunge of ỳ woꝛld, forthe ye an vndoubted hope of ỳ kingdome of god nowe to be shewed foozth, and that the euill shall no longer haue power to doe any care to the good. But the wicked foꝛe shal suffre endelesse tormentes: & the godly shal haue fruicion of ioyes eternall. If ye haue alreadie seen come to passe al ỳ euer hath hitherto bene foreshewed vnto you by the pzophetes and by me, beleue ye wythoute all doubtes ỳ these thynges also which I haue foresayed vnto you shal semblably ensue and come to effecte. This woꝛde I auouche vnto you on warauntise: ỳ the tyme of man here in this woꝛlde shal not passe awaie afoze ỳ these thynges euery one shal foꝛtune. There is nothing moze stable oꝛ moze likely to endure, then is the skye and the yearth, and yet shall both the skye and the yearthe sooner vanishe awaie, then my woꝛdes passe without taking due effecte.

For as a snare shal it come on al them that dwelle on the face of ỹ whole yearth. Watche ye therefore continually, and praie that ye maie escape all these thinges that shal come, & that ye maie stande before the sonne of man.

Seeyng therfore assertained that this dredfull tyme wyll come, prepare your selues against the cummyng of the same, that it come not vpon you sodaynly as ye lye sluggyng. And that shall ye easily dooe, yf ye shall beware that your hertes bee not ouercharged with excesse of meates and with dronkennesse, and with the other pensife cares of this present lyfe: but rather so liue ye, as though the said daye would come within an houre, and bee as men not louyng anye thyng in this worlde, but beeyng with youre wholle hertes and myndes bent vnto thynges heauenly. So shall it come to passe, that the said daye shall not vnawares take you ere it bee looked for. For vnto others, who dooe so lyue, as though the time that we speake of shoulde neuer come, the daye shall so come as a snare or a trappe lette by priuye stealth of some bodye lying in a wait to take an other: and shal catche al creatures, as many as haue not their hertes and eyes lift vp to heauen, but dwelle vpō the face of ỹ yearth, where we haue no permanent abiding, but are in haste on our wape towardes thelame eternall dwellyng place. And suche persones seemes whyle they are occupied about other matters, shall fele themselues taken, before that they shall foresee the snare. And to the entēt the lyke case may not chaunce vnto you, flee all sluggy thenesse, lye ye not slyll slepyng in the sensuall pleasures or cares of this worlde, but kepe your selfe stil wakyng and watchyng in the earnefte exercise of heauenly thynges: praying continually that God will vouchesaue to take you in the noumbre of theim, that maye escape these so great perils, and that ye maye stande vpright before the iudge that can not bee auoided, that is to wete, the sonne of man, who lyke as he doeth nowe with great fauour prouoke all people to repentaunce, so shall he at that tyme with greate seuerytye iudge both the quicke and the dead. Leate no man thynke hym sure enough by his owne aide. No creature shall bee hable to abide this iudgement, onlesse he bee kepte afore hande with the fauour of God. But thelame fauour shall bee with none saueng suche as dooe in the meane tyme with al possible zele and exercise, goe about to shewe themselues worthye to haue it. For it shall at that tyme be ouer late for suche persones with pitious mone and lamentacion to call for his mercie, as dooe nowe in this worlde abuse his patient forbearing.

For as a snare shall it come.

Watche ye therefore continually and praye.

The.xxii.Chapter.

¶ The feaſt of ſwete breade drewe nigh, which is called Eaſter, and the high prieſtes and ſcribes ſought how they myght kill hym, for they feared the people: Satan entred Iudas, whoſe ſurname was Iſcarioth, which was of the nombre of the twelue, & he went his way and cõmoned with the high prieſtes and officers, how he might betraye him to them. And they were glad, and promiſed to geue hym money. and he conſented, & ſought opportunitie to betraie him vnto them, when the people were away. The .xxii.

He more that the people depended of the Lozdes mouth and layinges, ſo much the more and more incenſed were the prieſtes, the ſcribes and the phariſeis, bying conſederate with the headmen of the lay fee, to putte Iheſus to death. And nowe dyd alſo the tyme drawe nere, in whyche it had bene forezte decreed, and was moſt expedyent that the ſame hoſte ſhould be killed in ſacrifice for the redemption of all mankynde. For vnto the conueighaunce of this determination, there was ſpecially cholen out and deputed a daye of the moſte highe ſolemnitie of all others, among the Iewes, whiche they call the feaſte of ſwete breade, (becauſe that as long as the dayes of thelame feaſte laſted, it was to the Iewes a thyng agaynſte all gods forbod to eate anye leauened breade,) & thelame daye was alſo called Phaſe, (whiche in the Syrians toungue is as muche to ſaye, as a paſſage, or paſſyng ouer, ſo named of a lambe of one yere olde, with whoſe bloude the higheſt parres of the poſtes were anopnted, becauſe the Aungell of the Lozde ſhoulde paſſe them ouer whan he ſhould be a deſtruper of all ſuch as had not this marke on their doozes.) And ſuche a daye was nothyng to the paye or to the mynde of the prieſtes and the ſcribes, who would muche lieffer haue had his death cloſely handled and halfe ſtollen without any ſuch high buſſineſſe or open a doe, and as lyke as myght bee to the common manier of doyng execution vpon other common malefactours. But Ieſus pleaſure was to haue his death openly knowen to the woꝛlde, and to bee ſolemnelye dooen, and in euerye behalfe to agree with the figures of the olde teſtamente, and with the holye ſayinges of the prophetes. For this was ý holy lambe not knowyng anye ſpotte of ſynne, with whoſe fleaſhe the true Iſraelites are daply refreaſhed throughout all the wholle woꝛlde, vniuerſall: with whoſe moſte holy bloude we beeyng throughly cleanſed, haue beene conueighed from daunnation, and haue beene deliuered from the tyranny of ſynne, and goyng daplye ferther and ferther awaye from Egipt, we dooe make haſte towardes thatſame heauenlye lande moſte pleaſauntlye flowyng with all kynde of bliſſe, abſteinyng in the meane tyme from the leauened breade, and liuyng in the ſimplicitie and ſincerite of the ſpirite euangelicall. So than ſuche a day was ſpecially cholen of God to that ſame true ſacrifice, where as it nothyng pleaſed the phariſeis that it ſhould ſo be. For he ſuffred death, not at the arbitrement or pleaſure of the Iewes, but at the pleasure of his father and hymselfe, at suche tyme as he wouldē, in suche place as he wouldē, and in suche maner as he wouldē hymselfe. For nothyng was there in this matter eyther doen vnaduisedly or els by casualtie. The malice of the Pharisies, almost euery other daie werkyng death vnto the Lord, had no power before this tyme agaynste hym, because ỹ although they lacked no peruerse will, yet there was not anye power geuen them from God to accomplishe the thyng whiche they had purposed. And yet neuertheless they doe in suche sorte conferre and wrangle theyr counsailles together, as though they had been able by their owne suppostacion and power to bryng theyr will to effecte. For the malice of the pharisies and the priestes beeyng incensed manye wayes, ticled and itched to laye handes on Jesus, & to bring him to his death. But the feare of the people was a lette thereunto: whome they sawe broughte in loue and fauour towardes hym through shewyng many myracles and benefites, and to depende altogether of his mouthe. In which behalfe great peril there was, lest yt they had attempted to laye handes on him in presence of the multitude, he should by some sedicion sodaynly arisyng, be taken by force and violence out of their handes, and al theyr labour proue to a matter in vain, for almuche as Jesus, whan he were once escaped their fyngers, would for the tyme to come see and prouide well enough for hymselfe. They dyd not all this whyle remembre, that he had so many times afore scapt and sound without any harme at all escaped out of the handes of the furious ragyng multitude. The daye also beeyng nothyng fitte for the purpose of dooyng suche a thyng, was not all of the moste to theyr contentacion, aswell for the high solemnitie of the feaste selfe, as also for the greate reloyze of people to thesame feaste. But yet a fitte occasion beeyng by an other meane offered, whan they hoped for nothyng lesse, and thesame occasion metyng euen tuste with theyr wicked will, dispeched the scruple of the festiuall daye. For Satan, who had tempted Jesus tofore by his verye owne selfe, persecutyng thesame Jesus yet stil by his ministers & instrumentes, hadde possessed the herte of Judas Iscarioth, who was one of those twelue specially cholen out of all the rest, whom Jesus had tofore named Apostles. And as for this Judas the onelye couetise of money whyche daylye came throughe his handes, perswaded hym to this furye, that of his own motion he wente to the heade priestes and rewlers (for the priestes also aswell as other rewlers, had men of armes aboute them, but not for anye suche purpose geuen theim) treactyng and commonyng with theim aboute the betrayng of Jesus vnto theyr handes. For he knewe theim to be busie in counsaile emong theimselfes aboute suche a matter. And no seruaunte there was a more mete man to betraye Jesus, then suche an one as in title and profession was moste familiar with hym, & in affection of herte an enemie. Judas had no ill opinion of the Lorde, nor had euer receiued any displeasure at his handes, wherefore he shoulde haue cause to beare hym anye malice or il wil. But the pestilent corruption of auarice had hym faste by the stomake. The priestes, they wer glad men, that they had suche a player come to play the first pageaunt of this plaie. The counsaile of Judas lyked theim, agreemente was made for the price which he of a lucrre required but euen veray slendre, because the case should be aunswerable to the prophecie. They promised him money, and he prompted theym his seruice the best ỹ he couldē do. In the meane time he sought an occasiō, whereby to deliuer Jesus vnto theym, whan he shoulde bee in some solitarye place sequestred than entred Satan into Judas.

And they wer glad.

ſequeſtred from cumpany (whiche was the thyng that they deſired) to the entent no ſedicion might arise thyrough the fauourers of hym. And Judas was well acquainted with all places where the lorde vſed to be solitary.

Than came the day of ſwete breade, whan of neceſſitie paſſeouer muſt be offered. And he ſent Peter and Johñ, ſaying: Goe and prepare vs the paſſeouer, that we may eate. They ſaid vnto him. Where wilt thou that we prepare? And he ſaid vnto them: Beholde, whan ye entre into the citie, there shal a man meete you, bearyng a pitcher of water, him folowe into the ſame house that he entreth in, and ye shal say vnto the good man of the house: The maiſter ſaieth vnto the: where is the geaſte chaumber, where I ſhall eate paſſeouer with my diſciples? And he ſhall ſhew you a great parlour paued. There make ready. And they went and found as he had ſaid vnto them, and they made ready the paſſeouer. The texte.

And now was the daye of ſwete breade come, the hyghest holy daye that the Jewes had, in whiche accordyng to the preſcripcion of the lawe, the lãbe was to bee ſlayne, whiche the Jewes call Phaſe, of paſſing ouer, (as I haue already ſayd.) But the true Phaſe was the lord Jeſu that lambe moſt pure, than to bee ſlayne in ſacrifice for redemption of the worlde, accordyng to the eternall determinacion of his father. Therfore because Jeſus would ẏ more diepely inprint in the hertes of his diſciples the memorie of his deathe, and would make it playne and open vnto them, that he ſuffered all theſe thynges bothe knowyng of it afore, and alſo willing: ye: his mynde was ſo, that in the laſt ſupper that euer he had to make with them, he would by myſtical tokens make among them a repreſentacion of the thyng, which he ſhould ẏ next day folowyng execute and accompliſhe vpon the croſſe, because he was not ignoraũt how greatly they would afterward be diſmayed by his death. Therfore preuẽteth the tyme, whyle their mindes were not yet paſt taking of good counſayll and aduertiſemente. The dooyng of this matter he committed to two of his chiefly beloued Apoſtles, Peter and John. Goe ye twaine (ſayeth he) and prepare for all vs the paſchal lambe, that we may eate it altogether. Thou hearest now in theſe wordes the begynnyng of the churche and the end of the Synagogue. Now forbecauſe Jeſus, though he were the Lord & creatour of all thynges, yet hadde no houſe of his proper owne, nor of any certaintie to point vpon, the ſaied two diſciples demaunded where his wyl and pleaſure was to haue ẏ paſchal ſupper made ready for him. So great ſtraũgers forſooth and ſo vnacquainted were the diſciples with the citie, that thei ſcarcely had any perfite knowlage of any house therin. For euen verye ſuche ought the true diſciples of Chriſte to bee in this worlde. Than Jeſus, to the entent he would ſhewe, that no part of all the thynges that wer foorthwith to folowe was to hym vnknowen, ſaied vnto them: Beholde as ſoone as ye shall bee entred into the citie, there ſhall a man come towardes you caryyng a pitcher full of water. Folowe theſame felowe euen to the house that he ſhall enter into. And there ſhal ye say to the good mã of the house: The maſter hath willed vs to ſay vnto thee in his behalfe, where is the parler, wherin I may eate the paſchall lambe with my diſciples? The partie ſhal byanby know the title of maiſter, euen as an other did one day acknowlage thee calling of me, Lorde, at what time ye vntyed the Aſſes colte. This partie ſhall without any delaye, ſhewe you a great wyde parlour with a bourde already couered and all thynges prepared for a repaſt there to be taken in it: and there make ye the paſcall lambe ready for me. Nowe conſider me this point, o frēde Theophilus, an hoſte of none acquaintaunce it is, that findeth Chriſte the parlour to ſuppe in: and a bearer of water is ỹ leder vnto the houſe where Chriſt kepeth the ſolemnitie of his paſche. For by meane of baptiſme, and by the doctrine of gods woꝛde, is the entering into the churche: the liuely water of gods woꝛd doeth clenſe, and the water alſo of the ſacrament doeth clenſe. The good mā of the houſe hath no name expreſſed, becauſe the churche of Chriſte is euerywhere, ſpringyng firſt vp of derke and lowe begiñynges, but ſpreadyng it ſelf forther & forther abꝛode frō day to day into the whole vniuerſal woꝛld. And becauſe the beginnyng of all health and ſaluacion is faith, the diſcyples beleue the loꝛd, and are obediently rewled by him. They departe into the citie, they fynde him that was carryng the pitcher of water, they folowe the ſame as he goeth before and leadeth the way. They declared to the good mā of the houſe ſuche meſſage as they had been cōmaunded. He sheweth them a great large dinyng parlour. For wyde & large it muſt nedes be which is able to receiue all the naciōs of the woꝛlde. For the Jewes Synagogue is but a place of narow roume. And ferre frō earthly thinges muſt ſuch people be ſequeſtred, as are diſpoſed to eate the meate celeſtiall. Here in this place than do the diſciples prepare the ſupper, verily executyng the office of paſtours.

And they went. &c.

The texte. And whan the houre was cum, he ſate downe, and the twelue Apoſtles with him. And he ſaid vnto them: I haue inwardly deſired to eate this paſſeouer with you, before that I ſuffre, for I ſay vnto you, henceforth I will not eate of it any more, vntill it bee fulfilled in the kyngdome of god. And he toke the cuppe, & gaue thankes, and ſaid: Take this and deuide it among you, for I ſay vnto you, I will not drinke of the fruite of the vyne, vntill the kyngdom of god be come. And he toke bread, & whan he had geuen thankes, he brake it, and gaue vnto them, ſaying: This is my body, which is geuen for you. This do in the remembraunce of me. Likewiſe alſo whan he had ſupped, he toke the cuppe, ſaying: This cuppe is the newe teſtament in my bloud, which is ſhed for you. Yet behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me, is with me on the table. And truely the ſoonne of man goeth, as it is appoynted. But woe vnto that man by whom he is betrayed. And they began to enquire among themſelues, whiche of them it was, that ſhoulde doo it.

And whan it was nowe ſupper tyme, Jeſus came thyther, and ſate downe to eate with his twelue ſpecially choſen diſciples, becauſe the reſidue were not yet able to receiue the depe hidde miſtery, whiche his pleaſure was that it ſhould by meane of his Apoſtles be made common vnto ſuch as were once already entred in the miſticall rules and profeſſion of the ghoſpell. Than as ſone as meate and dꝛynke was ſette before theim on the table, the loꝛd to the entent he might depely enpꝛient in the mindes of his Apoſtles, that he would ſuffre the death of the croſſe, not for any neceſſitie at all to himſelf warde, but onely for the loue of redemyng mankynde, ſayed vnto theym: With great and earneſt deſire haue I deſired to eat this paſcal lābe with you before my death, the time wherof I reioyce to be now come, becauſe I thirſt the redēpcion of man. For this woꝛde I aſſure you of, from this tyme forthward, I wyll not eate this paſche with you accoꝛding to the litterall oꝛdeinaunce and preſcripcion of the lawe: but an other paſche of moꝛe perfection ſhal after the ſpiritte bee accompliſhed in the kyngdome of god. This lambe here whiche is euery yere once ſolēnely killed of the Jewes, cōpriſed a figure of my death. Now is the true thyng ſelf come in place, and the ſhadow ſhall ceaſſe: ye ſhal from henſforth ſolemnlye vnto me a gholly and an effectuall paſſeouer, the eatyng whereof ſhall make you immortall. So after that they had euery one taſted of the lambes fleaſhe, Jeſus tooke the cuppe in his hande, and gaue thankes vnto his father: & than geuing the firſte aſſaye of the cuppe, and holdyng it forth vnto them, he ſayed vnto his diſciples: Take ye and deuide ye this emongſt you. And take ye this for a true woorde of my mouth: I wyll not from henſforth drynke of the fruite of the vynetree for the neceſſitie of the fleaſhe, but the kyngdome of God ſhall immediately bee preſent. Euery one of theſe thynges whiche the lawe hath had outward and carnall, ſhall be ſpiritually shewed and miniſtred. And thus ferre is an ende of the figures of the lawe. Immediatly hereupon the lorde Jeſus entendyng by a miſticall figure or token to conſecrate to his ſeruauntes a newe teſtament, tooke breade, and after thankes geuing to his father, he brake it with his owne handes, and deliuered it vnto the diſciples, ſayeng: This is my body, whiche is betrayed vnto death for you. My death ſhall not be doen any more then this once. For this onely one ſacrifice of my death, is ſufficient for the ſynnes of all ages and tymes, aſwell paſte as to come. But ye ſhall oftentymes renewe vnto your ſelues the memory of my tendre loue towardes you, dooyng the lyke emong your ſelues, that ye nowe ſee doen of me. For this ſhal be an high and holy ſigne of a bande and league made betwene me and you. Than as ſoone as ſupper was doen, he tooke the cuppe alſo, and reachyng it forth to them, he ſayed: This is the newe teſtament conſecrated not with the bloud of a calfe or a goat, but with mine owne bloude, whiche is powred forth for the redempcyon and ſauing of you: ye haue nowe the higheſt token and pledge that can be of myne entier loue towardes you.

And thē he toke the cuppe & gaue thankes.

This do in the remembraunce of me.

And in dede there ought to bee a like loue in you towardes me agayne: but yet there is one here at the table emongeſt you, who will betraye me into the handes of them whiche ſeke me vnto death. Neither is all this doen by caſualtie: but it is ſo prefixed by the determination of God, as it is ſo foreſhewed by the prophetes, that the ſonne of man ſhould by ſuche a proceſſe, redeme mankynde. In dede a good neceſſarie poynt of ſeruice it is, that he doeth herein towardes the vniuerſall redempcyon of man: but yet becauſe he doeth it of a wicked mynde, theſame thyng ſhall in concluſion turne to his damnacion, the whiche ſhal bee the inſtrumente of ſaluacion to others. The determination of god dooeth not drawe hym to this deueliſhe acte, but he is ledde thereunto of his owne inordinate couetiſe. This ſaying of Jeſus ſore diſmayed all theyr hertes, and caſte them in a great paſſion: and they begon to aſke and ſerche emong themſelues who it ſhoulde be of whome Jeſus had ſpoken. Not one of them knew hymſelf culpable in his conſcience beſydes Judas Iſcarioth onely: and yet durſte not one of them truſte his owne ſelfe in the matter. Notwithſtandyng Jeſus betrayed not his betraper, but oftentymes pricked his conſcience, to thentent he ſhoulde emende. And he knewe well enough that Judas would neuertheleſſe continue ſtil in his madneſſe, teachyng vs therewhyle, to vſe the moſte ſauoure poſſible towardes ſynners, for alſmuche as we cannot be ſure, whether theſame parties maye one daye come to themſelues agayne or not.

Woe vnto that man by whom he is betrayed.

And they began to enquire emong themſelues, &c.

And there was a ſtrife emong them, whiche of them ſhoulde ſeme to be the greateſt: And he ſayed vnto them: The kynges of nations reigne ouer them: and they that haue autorite vpon them, are called gracious Lordes. But ye ſhall not be ſo. But he that is greateſt emong you, ſhalbee as younger: and he that is chiefe ſhalbe as he that dooeth miniſtre. For whether is greater, he that ſitteth at meat, or he that ſerueth? Is it not he that ſitteth at meate?

But I am emong you as he that ministreth, ye are they whiche haue abidden with me in my temptacions. And I appoynt vnto you a kyngdome, as my father hath appoynted vnto me: that ye maye eate and drynke at my table in my kyngdome, and sitte on seates, iudgeyng the twelue tribes of Israell.

Nowe because the Lorde Jesus had in the supper tyme made mencion of the kyngdome of god, there ettelones befell a contencion emong the disciples beyng yet weake, and hauyng yet still in some behalfe a smatche of the fleashe, which of them should after the lordes death haue the primacie and supremitie in the kyngdome of God. For in boldyng forth the breade and the cup vnto thē, he semed to make them all eguall one with another, saying: deuide ye this emong you. But Jesus although he had at sondre tymes afore also called them backe from suche affeccion, yet beyng now verye nere towardes his death, he repeateth the same and beateth it into theyr heades, saying: Doe not ye imagine any suche like thing in the kyngdom of heauen, as ye see in worldly kingdomes. It is a ferre other sorte of reygnyng: for it standeth by benefites and not by force of armes: it is kept and defended by spirituall fence, and not by violence: it is dilated and enlarged in circuite by perswasion of wordes, and not by forceable compulsion. For the princes of this worlde doe exercise a lordelye power ouer suche people as they haue the gouernement and rewle of (for they doe not vse perswasion of woordes to make them loue honest wayes, but they feare them from euill doynges by terrour of punishemente:) and of their subiectes, they require to haue honour and reuerence doen vnto them, though they bee not worthie thereof. Yea and the nerer they drawe to the poynte of tyrannie, so muche the more obedience and subieccion doe they require to haue of theyr commons: and all the whyle are they honoured of thesame people with titles and styles of estate and royaltee. They haue names and styles geuen them to be called pyrnces, fathers to theyr countrey, sauers and defendours, and consuls, because by theyr power they kepe theyr inferiours vnder subieccion. Of this sorte forsothe is the reygnyng of the heathen nacions. But emong you, whom I frame and breake to the kyngdome of the ghospell, there shall bee a ferre other trade. The greater that euerie one shalbe emong you, so muche the lesse shall he take vnto hym of violent power, or of glorie. For he shall not haue an ipe to oppresse or ouertrede his inferiours with the good giftes and qualities whiche he hath receyued of god, but how to dooe his inferiours good therby, and how to relieue them: neyther shall he take the laude and prayse vnto hymselfe, but refer thesame entierly vnto god. And yet I speake not this, as though there shal not be any order in this kyndome, but because that he whiche is chosen to the preeminence of beyng a guide vnto others towardes godlynesse, shall so greatly serue the commodities of all persones, that he maie seme to be a minister and a seruaunt rather then an head. He shal make no sekyng ne sutte for fauour: but his good herte and mynde beyng moste quicke and readie to doe good vnto all persones, shall deserue iustely to haue it. And as for his auctoritie, his perfeccion of lyuyng shall maintaine it and not his proude disdeynefull looke, or stately porte and countenaunce.

The kinges of straciens reigne ouer them. &c.

But ye shal not so bee.

But he that is greatest emōg you. &c.

And let it not greue you truely to perfourme and shewe thesame humilitee emong your selues, whiche I haue throughly shewed vnto you, whereas of my due right I might haue taken vnto me the state of Lordely power and dominion. For consider and ponder ye this in your myndes, whether of the twoo seemeth

semeth the greatter man, he that seruethat the table, ozels he that sitteth at ꝯ table ꝙ is serued: doth not he that sitteth seme the greatter mā? Not so: for that whosoeuer sitteth doune, is in dede the greatter man: but he rather which entertaineth others with making them a feaste, is euen for this very respect the greater of dignitie, because he dooeth good to many. And yet suche an one for courtesy and good maners sake whan the others whom he hath called to his feaste dooe sitte at the table, goeth about the house frō place to place careful and diligent to see that no persone lacke any thing in the feaste, and so the carefulnesse of hym alone prouideth for the satisfying and well beeying of all the cumpanye. And haue not I vsed my self lyke suche an one among you? Haue not I in suche sort been conuersaunt among you, as though I wer the seruāt of you all, mynysstryng to you of that that was myne owne, and takyng care my selfe alone for you all? How muche more ought ye to bee ferre from al tirannye and ambition, which in condicion and state are all eguall one with an other, whiche ministre vnto others of my thynges, and not of your own, and whiche haue one maister egually indifferent vnto you all? ye haue receiued ꝯ same high and holy caution or token and pledge of euāgelical concorde, that with what entier loue I haue embraced you, with the same loue ye shoulde embrace one another, among your selues. And where reigneth ambicion, there cannot concorde bee at any sure staye. In the meane tyme honoure must bee willyngly deserued, but not vsurped or taken as a thyng of duetie and right. For the princes of this worlde, although they dooe their office rightlye, yet because thei require homage and fealtie of their subiectes therfore, they shal not haue any reward at all for it before god. But as for ye, puttyng away al care as touchyng your rewarde, leat your myndes be onely vpon your office and dutie, it shalbe mine office to prouide for you, as touchyng your dignitie. If ye shalbe true folowers of my humilitie, ye shall also be partakers of my glorie: if ye shalbe felowes with me in takyng suche part of afflictions as I do, thē shall ye also haue suche part of immortalitie in heauen as I haue. And hitherto haue ye persisted & continued with me in mine afflictyons, by which afflictions it hath pleased my heauēly father to haue mine obedience throughly tried and approued. Neither lowesse of degree, nor pouertie, not the trauailles of this life, not the obloquie of men, not the Phārisees laying awaite for you, not the threatenyng of men of power, hath discouered you frō companying and liuyng with me, wheras others haue fallen away frō me, wheras others haue not had the bold spirit to profesſe themselues disciples of mine. That yf ye shall still persist in the same mynde that ye haue hitherto had, and shall not irke in the meane tyme to folowe my humilitie, to theend ye may the better profit all persones: I againe on my parte shall bryng to passe, that ye shall an other day bee partakers of the glorye of my kyngdome. For it hath so pleased my father, that this shalbee the waie to the kyngdome of heauen. And the same haue I hereto fore opened vnto you, & will doe again throughout my death. By meane of lowenesse my father shall exalte me to the glorye of a kyngdome: & by temporall afflictions, to ioyes euerlasting. And like as there is a kyngdome prepared for me of my father, because I in the meane whyle accordyng to his will, doe behaue and vse my self as a minister, and not as a Lorde: euen so will I, after that I am exalted to the dignitie of my kyngdome, prepare the felowe shyppe of the same kingdome for you that folowe day shall the basenesse of suche people appere, as at this present seme to sitte on high benche in this worlde: so shall your highnes, who seme at this daye to be the outcastes of the worlde. Thus muche did the lord Jesus speake vnder a figure, qualifiyng and teperyng his wordes to the rawnesse of his disciples, whiche rawnesse he suffered for these causes to remaine a long season in them: partly because he would in vs the more effectually plucke out suche worldly affectiõs as the disciples wer at that time subiect vnto, & partly because we should learne with great patience & fauour to suffre the weakenes & frailtie of other folkes, vntil they may growe to thynges of more perfection.

And like as I haue not hitherto at any tyme forsaken thee, so will I not forsake thee at any tyme hereafter neither: insomuche that I am ready to put my self in extreme daūger of my life with thee, whether it be to go into prisō, yea or to death either. This saiyng of Peter proceadyng truely out of a good & a plain meanyng hert, but yet not euē throughly knowē vnto hiself: the lord immediatly repressed with this answer. what saiest thou Peter? Lacked ye any thyng?

After that he had plucked out of their hertes, the puttyng of their affiaunce and trust in themselfes: the eftsons beateth into their heades, the thynge that he had oftentimes to fore taught them, whiche was, that they should not defend theimselfes with worldely defence, against the violence of euil persōs, because that a minister of the heauenly doctrine of the gospel ought to be free from the vile cares of this life: ne ought not with any other armour or weapon to bee appoynted against all the assaultes of the wicked spyte, then with the sworde of the spirite, whiche is the woord of god. At what time I sent you (sayth he) for a prouse & assaie to preache among the Iewes how the kyngedome of god approched, and sent you so vnfurnished of all prouision, that ye had not so muche as purses about you to putte any money in, nor so muche as a poore scrippe to kepe any meate in against an other tyme of houngre, no nor yet hoors for sauyng of your fete: yet did ye want any thyng? They answered, that they had wanted nothyng. Than Iesus to the entente he would vtterly plucke vp by þ roote out of their stomakes all desire of auenging, beguileth them for a whyle with the derkenesse of his woordes: but he suffereth thē for this purpose to remoue a wrong opinion, because he would the more surely & the more effectually plucke out of their myndes al affection of auengyng any quarels. For he knew that they should be enfeebled to an earnest will of defendyng and reskewyng hym, whā they should see armed soldyers with such great stiere and ruffelyng to inuade and fall vpō their maister whō they very earnestly loued, though neuertheless it was as yet after the affectionate sorte of humain loue and worldely. Whiche humaine affection & loue if he had not euidently chastised, we would haue thought it to bee lawfull to defende our selfes with weapon against the violence of wicked persons, and to putte away force with force. But now seeyng that Peter was shent because that he drewe his sworde against a deuelishe and hainous coumpany for his maisters cause, beyng a man most innocent: what cause may there than bee from henseforth, why a Christian bodye should put away wrong with wrong. And thus sayed the Lorde: At the first preachyng of the ghospell ye went light & vnfurnished of any prouision for your liuyng. But yet thorough my supportacion & sure defense ye wanted nothyng. And that was enough, whan there was no sore storme nere towardes you. But frō hēceforth ye must prepare your hertes to hardier matters. For ỳ more extreme & sore ỳ storme of persecutiō shalbe, so muche the lighter is it mete that ye be frō al yearthely lettes and encombraunces. Nowe is there a great battayl towardes, and ye shall haue nede of a sworde. Wherfore if any man percase hath a pouche or a scrippe, let hym take it vp, that he maye bye hym a sworde. That in case he haue not these thynges the whiche in dede may wel cast away from you, and whiche ye haue lacked without any incommoditie vnto you: leat hym sell his coate and bye hym a sword. It is nedeful for a bodye to come to this batail, very lyght of carryage, nor armed with any other thyng thē with a sworde. The matter will sure come to extremes. For thei will not onely lay violēt hādes on me, but also it must nedes be perfourmed ỳ Esai long agon prophecied should become of me: And euen emong the wicked was he reputed. It is but a sore and a grieuous matter to be killed, how much sorer a thing is it to suffer such shamefull execucion and peines of death as all men speake cruel of, yea and the same to suffer emōg heinous malefactours. And yet this chaunce also is the doome of man sure to haue. For now the tyme is euen at hād, that whatsoeuer hath been foresaid by the prophetes concerning me, must be accōplished. The Apostles whereas thei vnderstode not the misterie of these sayinges, and deemed that the lorde had said it to put them in remembraunce to haue a sworde in readinesse to putte of from them yone violence be yng toward, answered plainly without mening any fraud: Maister behold, there bee two swordes here already: supposyng in very dede, that in any wise thei should nede swordes, but fearyng leste that two swordes would not bee enough for that fight. They shewed their good hert and affection to fight for the Lordes sake, whom they knewe was hable enough of his own power to suppply, if their defence and strength wanted any thyng, like as he had afore ỳ time multiplied the fine loaues & two fishes to make thē suffice manye thousandes of people. In this so grosse an affectiō, did Jesus at that preser ieaue his disciples, to the entent (as I haue said) that their weaknes might be an instrucciō for vs vnto perfite patience in suffering tribulation. He therefore answered: It is enough. This did they take as a thyng so spoke, as though the first fray might bee borne of with the two swordes, which thei had thē ready, whereas Christes meaning was of a ghostely fight against the worlde and the deuill: in whiche fighte, the victory cūmeth of an herte beyng lightened and discharged from al earthly desires, and armed with the only sworde of heauenly doctrine. And the said victory consisteth in the vndefeasable scripture of the olde and newe testamente, so that a man maye vnderstande two swordes, but thesame swordes, deliuered foorth by one spirite.

Esay. liii. Surnamed the wycked was he reputed.

Lorde, behold, here are two swordes.

The texte. And he came out, & went (as he was wont) to mount Oliuete. And the disciples folowed hym. And whā he came to the place, he said vnto thē: pray leste ye fall into temptacion. And he gatte himselfe frō them, about a stones cast, and kneled downe and prayed, saying: Father if thou wilt, remoue this cuppe from me. Neuertheles, not my will, but thine be fulfilled. And there appered an aungel vnto him from heauen, cōfortyng hym. And he was in an agony, & prayed the longer. And his sweate was lyke droppes of bloud, trickling downe to the ground.

And because men of armes whan they shall entre a fight, are woont against a bicke-

a bickering with their enemy approchyng nere thē, to refreashe their bodies, and to plucke vp their herres: the Lorde beyng mynded to shew vnto his seruauntes, what thyng it was that might moste principally strengthe them against suche tryuyng in battail whan it is towarde, wēt forth of Jerusalem, and accordyng to his accustomed vsage, wente to mounte Oliuete, his disciples accompanyeng hym. And whan they were cū to the same place where his woont was to praie, he said vnto them. To the entēt and purpose that ye may be rable manfully to stande against the tempest that hangeth ouer you, watche ye, and praie ye, leste yf the same come sodaynely vpon you as ye lye snuggyng and idle, it may take you in the trappe ere ye be aware, and so maye ouercome you. The Lorde whan he had thus muche spoken, withdrew hym self from their cumpany to the mountenaūce in maner of a stones cast, to praie solitarily for all creatures, like as he should afterward in his own sole persō suffre death for all creatures.

But lyke as his death did not profite idle persones, so must not his prayer neither be auailable, but vnto suche as haue diligente and earnest myndes to praie for themselfes too. And to geue vs a lesson that the herte is so bee submitted as often as we addresse to speake & talke with God: he praied his father on his knees bowed downe to the grounde, saying: Father if it bee thy will, remoue this same cuppe away from me. Ferie the humain nature which I haue taken, to abhorre from death: but in this behalfe leat the redemption of man ouercome: and leat that bee doen, whiche thy will beeyng immutable, hath determined, and not the thing whiche the weakenesse of this body doeth geue aduise or motion vnto. Our Lorde knewe what the wyll of his father was, and on his own party he coueted to drike the cuppe of death for the redemption of the worlde, and he laied vpon hymself the affection of his body, and studied to prescribe vnto his seruauntes a fourme and trade of praiyng. For this maner of praiyng were very fitte for a martir a litle before the time of his martyrdome: Thy wyll be dooen, and not myne. Whether thy wyll be to haue me line or to dye. And this feareful trembliyng of our nature, Christe toke vpon himself, because he would take it away from his. But to the entēt he would teache vs that at suche tymes we should haue pacē helpe readye at the lordes hand, whan we had wholly cōmitted our selfes to the wil of god, whether it be to lyfe or death, there appered vnto him an aungel downe from heauen strengthenyng him. As he was cast in great agonie & pangues for our behoufe, so was he for our behoufe cumforted and strengthened by ỳ aūgell.

Fier all this there toke him a certain extreme agonie and trouble of mynde, suche as for the moste parte is woont to chaunce vnto meune whan they haue death euen before their yes, and behold it in their myndes. And this passion is cōmenly woont to be more grieuous thē very death self. Neither did Jesu disdayne to take this tormente of mynde also for our cause, who refused not for our cause to hang on the crosse, teaching vs in the meane time, to what succours we ought to take our refuge, as often as thatsame quaking feare shall take our infirmitie and crase vpon it. For liyng doune prostrate vpon ỳ grould he praied yet more earnestly. For forth herof depēdeth the whole hope of our victory. And verily to the entēt we should be the more stedfaste in time of suffering panie and torment: so great trouble of mind toke Christe, that droppes of blonde trickled doune to the earth from all his body ouer.

Father yf thou wilte, &c.

He cared the lesse not my will but thyne be fulfilled.

And there appered vn to hym an angel from heauen cōforting him

And hys sweat was lyke droppes of blond.

And

The texte. And whan he arose vp from praier and was cum to his disciples, he found them slepyng for heauinesse, and saied vnto them: why sleape ye? aryse and praye, lest ye fall into temptation.

Alsoone as he arose again from praiyng & stode vpright, he retourned vnto his disciples, and found them slepyng for sorowe and heauinesse. That same was not any surfaict that had made them so heauye, but the weakenesse of nature: it was grieuous dolour of the mynde that had caused their slepe: but whoso will in suche a batail goe awaie a conquerour, muste fighte agaynste this weakenesse, with the lustie strēgth of the spirite. Jesus therfore chideth his disciples, and efsons calleth them vp to prayr, saiyng: why dooe ye in so great daungier and ieopardy geue your selfes to slepe? Arise ye and praye, lest the tempest growing fast towardes, dooe oppresse you and ouerwhelme you, euen as ye lye sluggyng: for the houre is euen now very nere at hande.

The texte. While he yet spake, behold, there came a cumpany, and he that was called Judas one of the twelue, went before them, and presed nigh vnto Jesus, to kysse him. But Jesus said vnto him. Judas, betraiest thou the sonne of man with a kisse? whan they whiche were about him, sawe what would folowe, they said vnto him: Lorde, shall we smite with the swoorde. And one of them smote a seruaunt of the high priest, and stroke of his right eare. Jesus answered & said: Suffre ye thus ferre forth. And whan he had touched his eare, he healed hym.

The Lorde Jesus had not yet ended these woordes, and euen now alreadye appered in sight a rable of vngracious souldiers, whom the priestes & Phariseis beryng more vngracious then they, had purposely sente for to attache Jesus. And that honest mā Judas, who had but euen a litle before been a folower of Christe, and a companion with hym at his table, and now become the gyde of a deueliche bande of souldiers, came afore them a good prearye waie before, but he had geuen them a token before, for so to doe is a thyng cōmōly vsed in warres) that to whōsoeuer he should geue a kisse, him should they well vnderstode to be Jesus. And whan he had cum sum what nere vnto Jesus eue ready now to kysse him as he had been wont to do, the lord accordyng to his accustomed mildnesse, refused not ꝑ traiters kisse neither, but yet efsons pricked his conscience, to therent that being moued at leastwise with so great pacience & fauour of the lord, he might haue amended. Judas (saieth he) arte thou a betrair of the sone of man with a kisse? Judas by that word well vnderstode that his herte was not hidden frō God: he knewe the inuocencye of the Lorde: he was so many tymes with suche myldenesse of the Lorde, as neuer thelyke was heard, so prouoked to chaunge from his wicked entente and purpose: euen a herte stinte stone myghte haue been suppled therewith, had not Satan altogether possessed his whole hert with the disease and corruption of couetise. And truely the deuelishnesse of Judas was cause of damnation to hymselfe alone and no mo. But suche personnes as dooe nowe in these tymes with sēblable guile betray the veritie euāgelical vnto ꝑ princes of this world, are causers of a more greuous cōfusion, & are worthy of greater punishement, then vnhappye Judas ouertake takyng repentaunce of hys facte, did execute vpon himselfe. Immediately vpon the kisse geuen, the cumpany of the harnessed menne came rennyng vnto Jesus to laye handes vpon hym, and they were suche as for none other purpose had a mynde and wyl to knowe Jesus, but that they myght take hym. But happye are those folkes who labour to knowe the euangelicall woorde of God, of a purpose to be folowers of Jesus. Than the other disciples seyng suche violence to be attēpted

ted & entended towardes their maister, loue ministred suche boldnesse of herte vnto theim, that they saied to the Lorde: Lorde wilte thou that we stricke with the swerde? They had fresshe in remembraunce, what the lorde had before saied vnto them of byinge of a swerde: but because they had seene in him perpetuall mylde nesse neuer faillynge, they doubted whether he wolde suffre theim to occupie any swerdes. Lord shal we smyte in the swerde

But Peter, who loued the lorde more feruentely then the others, and who had aboue all the reste made a voluntarie promise of hardie and stoute actes, neuer taried for the Lordes answere, but stroke with the swerde at one of the chief priestes seruauntes, whiche firste enterprised to laye hande on Iesus, as one that ensuelled or resembled the cruelte of his master. But the mildnesse of the lorde moderatyng the stroke, Peter no more but cutte of the felowes right eare. Happie are those persones that euer they wer borne, whose care that hath hitherto herkened to the wicked priestes and to the carnall lawe, is cutte of: and beyng restored and set on agayn of Christe, doeth now herken to suche thynges as are materiall to euerlastyng saluacion. The eare cutte of was a wounde more subiect to the obloquie and ill speakyng of the people, than it was daungerous for the life or bodie: but yet neuertheleese a wounde vncurable, because the gristle of the eare peice beyng once cut in twoo, cannot close ne growe together agayn. But Iesus to whome no wounde is vncurable, after he had chidden Peter, for that contrarie to the euangelicall mildenesse, but remembryng styll the olde lawe, he had begonne to fight with the swerde, restored vnto Malchus his eare, and sette it on againe so that there appered no signe of any wound that euer had been there. For the souldiers and seruauntes did leaste offence of all, whose mere folye serued the turne of the priestes, the Pharisees, and the Scribes malice. Peter should rather haue bestowed his fierce angre vpon the, had it not so pleased God, that euangelicall victorie shoulde consiste in patient suffreyng. And stroke of his right eare. Suffre ye thus farre, Gen. xxxi.

Than saied Iesus to the high priestes and rewlers of the temple and the elders whiche were come to hym: Ye bee come out as vnto a thief, with swerdes and staues. When I was dayly with you in the temple, you stretched forth no handes against me. But this is euen your vncurable houre, and the power of derkenesse. Than tooke they hym, and led hym, and brought him to the high priestes house. The texte

Than Iesus to declare that he willyngly suffred all thynges, turnyng hymselfe to the cumpaignye, whome the priestes and Scribes had sente, saied vnto them: what chaunce is befallen, that ye now armed and weaponed with swerdes and clubbes, haue issued forth of the citie by night, and do thus come rennyng hither as it were in fourme of open warre, to banquyshe a common robber defendyng himselfe with the swerde and makyng resistence? Whereas I haue been dayly with you in the temple, readie to come to for euerie bodye that woulde, and a naked man, without any weapon, no creature saied any handes vpon me. Truely ye had than euen the same wille that ye nowe haue: but his wylle was than a lette vnto you, whome no creature is hable to resiste. For the tyme in which I was determined to suffre, was not yet come. But this is your tyme, the night tyme: and thus is the power of darkenesse permitted of God. The Lord Iesus immediately whā he had thus saied, without makyng any strougleyng or resistence, willyngly offreed hymselfe to be bound with cordes. The cumpainye as soone as they had him fast, brought him But this is euen youre verie houre the power of derkenesse.

into the house of Cayphas, who at that time was the chiefe head of the priestes, that is to sate, of the moste naughtiest porcion of all the whole people of the Iewes. Into the inner courte of this Caiphas palaice, had gathered theselues together the conuocacion of the priestes, the Scribes, the pharisees, and the heade rewlers of the people, and also there hadde gathered into theisame place, the other multitude, whiche either of a feare or of affeccion, or of being deceiued with a wrong opinion, were as instrumentes of the forsayd companies malice.

The texte. But Peter folowed afterre of. And whan they had kendled a fyer in the myddes of the palaice, and were set down together, Peter also sate downe emong them. But whan one of the wenches beheld hym, as he sate by the fyer, (and looked vpon hym) she sayed: this same felowe also was with hym. And he denyed hym, saying: woman, I knowe hym not. And after a litle while, an other sawe hym, and sayed: thou arte also of them. And Peter sayed: man I am not. And about the space of an houre after another, affirmed, saying: Verayly this felowe was with hym also, for he is of Galile. And Peter sayed: o man I wote not what thou sayest. And immediatly while he yet spake, the cocke crewe. And the Lorde turned backe, and loked vpon Peter. And Peter remembred the woorde of the Lorde, how he had sayed vnto hym, before the cocke crowe, thou shalt denyre me thryse. And Peter went out and wept bitterly.

In the meane tyme the disciples beyng stricken with feare, had renne awaye one to one place and another to another place. But Peter, (who had nothyng prosperously played the man in his maisters behalfe in making a fraye with Malchus, but yet neuertheless had not vtterly putte awaye all hope that the matter should recouer and doe well enough) folowed after Jesus a good waye behynde. He also tooke a good herte to hym, and aduentured in the derke to entre into the hall of the bishops palaice, and to make one emong the presse of the other seruauntes, as a man vnknowe to any body there. And beyng a fyer made of coles in the myddes of the palaice courte, because the night time was colde, emongst the other seruauntes sittyng by the fyer to warme them, Peter also sate emongst the moe, and warmed himselfe by the coles, whome whan a certayne wenche of the house had espied sitting in suche facion, that his face was euen full in the light of the fyer, beholdyng hym somewhat steadily, she knewe him by sight of olde, and because she would declare herself to be of her maisters sorte she cryed out by an by in the heayryng of al the other coumpanyre: yea and this felowe too was with him that is taken. This was not a thyng doen by casuall chaunce: but so it pleased the dispensacion of God, to thentente the confidence whiche Peter had in hymselfe, might the better be caulmed and damped, who wheras he had forsoke made suche a royall promise vnto the lorde, that he would not shrynke to goe with hym euen to veray death too, did now at the worde of a petishe woman renegue his maister. For Petur being feared with this saying of a woman, aunswered desperately, as if his herte had been in his hele clene gone. Thou womā I haue none acquaintaunce with him. And by that meanes did Peter for the first plounge escape. But within a whyle cōmeth the lyke dauger agayn. For one of the seruauntes ettsons begonne to knowe hym metelye perfectly, and sayed vnto him: yea and thou too arte one of the nombre of them whose maister and Capitain we haue taken. Peter beyng ettsons by reason of these woordes as one halfe out of the worlde for feare, sayed. Thou man, I am none of them: and swore that he knewe not Jesus. Thus escaped he once more, by forswearyng hymselfe. And yet did it not all this whyle come in his mynde what the Lorde had tolde hym before, and what promyse hymselfe hadde made to the Lo;de. All this while was Jesus in examinacion a∫o;e the wicked counſaill, and was ſtrieke with buffettes contrarie to the manier and o;d;e of iudgementes, o; courtes of iuſtice. Peter beholdyng it a good waye of, and lookyng ſtyll what ende the matter was lyke to haue. But muche about the ſpace of an houre after, a certayne other felowe of the ſeruauntes, beeyng couſin to hym, whoſe eare Peter had ſtricken of, beholdyng Peter well knewe him and ſaied: Jo;omiſe you, this felowe alſo was with Jesus in the herbare. And whan he ſayed it was not ſo, the other ſayed mo;ouer: The thing to be true that I ſaye, euen his o;etay owne tounge doeth declare. Fo; he is one of Galile bo;nc. There Peter beyng altogether caſt in an extreme feare, begonne to ſweare naie to the mattier, and to bidde the diuell take him, if he did ſo muche as vnderſtād of what Jeſus, of what herbare, o; of what felowes of Galilee it was, that the ſeruaunt ſpake. So ferre had he vttrely fo;gotten himſelfe, who ſhould afterwarde be one of the chiefe of the congregacion. Jn the meane ſeaſon whyle Peter reneagueth, while he ſweareth naie, while he curſeth himſelfe, while he geueth hymſelfe bodye and ſoule to the deuill, the cocke crewe the ſeconde time, whiche was the token that the Lo;de had geuen hym: and yet did he not thereby neither come to himſelfe agayne.

Peter also sate downe emōg them:

And he denied himself saying: woma I knowe him not.

And Peter ſayed: man, I wote not what thou ſaieſt. &c.

Neither was he lyke to haue made any ende of ſtraying out of the righte waye, had not the Lo;de th;ough the middes of the wicked coumpaynye there, turned his iyes vpon Peter, and had earneſtly beheld hym. Peter beyng touched with the lo;yng of his maiſter vpon hym, remembred the wo;des whiche the lo;de had a little befo;e ſayed vnto hym: Befo;e the cocke crowe twiſe this night, thou ſhalt thr;ſe reneague and deny me: and beyng ſodaynlye touched with earneſt ſo;owe, he conueyed hymſelfe fo;th of the doo;es, and wepte bitterly. What thing Peter did, the ſame would the other diſciples alſo haue doen if the neceſſitie had come in vse: But in the only perſon of Peter it pleaſed Jeſus to teache all others, that no man truſte in himſelfe, nc that no man mingle o; aſſociate hymſelfe in the compaynye of euyll perſones: Jt was nighte. Loue was weared ſtone cold in hym: He was warmyng hymſelfe by the fyer of wicked folkes, he was ſittyng in coumpaynye emongeſt a deuliſhe ſo;te, in the houſe of Cayphas the biſhop, whereas hymſelfe ſhould after warde be a biſhop, but muche vnlyke to Cayphas. But there in biſhop Cayphas houſe what vngracious dedes of miſchiefe is there that are not doen? There was a conſpiracie made fo; the death of Jeſus, by the p;ieſtes, the phariſeis, the Scribes, and the elders of the people. From thence were ſent fo;th harnelled men agaynſte him: there is he bounde: there is he ſcourged: there hath he his face couered: there is he ſkorned: there is he accuſed. There doeth Peter committe periurie: there doeth he accurſe hymſelfe: a great and grieuous crime vnleſſe fraiſtie excuſed it. Fo; Peter offended not of a p;epenſed malice as Judas had doen, but th;ough heauineſſe of herte wherwith he was aſtouned. Fo; he hadde not come thither of a putpoſe to reneague Jeſus, but onely that he might behold thende of the iudgemente, whereas he was not yet ſufficientlye confirmed to die with Chriſt. Fo; the tyme was not yet come. Therfo;e how many ſoeuer haue fallen into any grieuous crime, leat them p;aye the lo;de Jeſus that he will vouchſafe to turne his iyes vpon them: and than ſhall they ſtrayght wayes acknowlage in themſelfes from what ſtate, into what eaſe they are fallen.

And the lord turned backe and loked vpon Peter.

Leat

Let them withdrawe themselues from vngracious compapny, and leat them washe awaye they? fault with teres, testifying their herte to be conuerted and chaunged.

The texte. And the men that tokе Jesus, mocked hym, and smote hym: and whan they had blynde-folded hym they stroke hym on the face, and asked hym, saying: arede, who is it that smote thee? And many other thynges dispitefully sayde they against hym.

In the meane season was all thatsame nighte passed ouer and spente in mockes and scornes against Jesus. For the felowes that had apprehended Jesus scorned hym, geuyng hym bothe reprochefull wordes and strokes therto. And because they had heard saye that the people had hym in reuerence as a prophete, they blyndefolde his yes, and so bucketed hym on the face, saying: Arede now and tell by the spirite of prophecie, what man hath geuen the any blowes. With many other wordes of mockage and reprochе dyd that wicked company continue raylyng on Jesus the fountaine of all glory, so that none of vs ought to take greuously to be reuiled or rapled at for: the worde of the ghospell, or to suffer affliction and euill turnes at the handes of suche persones, as serue the myndes of vnreligious bysshops, as doe thynges to fulfyll the appetite of cloked Pharisees, as doe thynges to satisfie the fansie of folysshe princes.

The texte. And as soone as it was daye, the elders of the people and the hye priestes and Scribes, came together, and led hym into they? counsayll, saying: arte thou they Christe? tell vs. And he sayed vnto them: If I tell you, ye wyll not beleue. And yf I aske you, ye wyll not aunswere me, nor let me goe: Hereafter shall the sonne of manne sytte on the ryght hande of the power of God. Then sayed they all: arte thou then the sonne of god? He sayed: ye saye that I am. And they sayed: what nede we any further witnes? For we ourē selues haue hearde of his owne mouth.

Now assone as the fayre daylyght was once come, the chiefe of the priestes, the Scribes, and the head rulers of the people, pretending now to sit and kepe courte in due fourme of iudgemente, assemble together to a great noumbre. And when they had summoned Jesus personally to appeare in they? courte, they demaunded many questions of hym, hunting for one poynte or other out of his wordes, whiche they might there openly laye to his charge. The crime wherwith to charge hym is but euen than in seekyng, whan they be alreadye set in iudgemente, and his death beeyng determinately appoynted vpon, they looke about and deuise by what title or coloure some cause of death maye be layed vnto hym. Wherupon thus speake they vnto hym: Jf thou be thatsame Christe whome accordyng to the godly sayinges of the prophetes we looke for, tell it vs playnly. But Jesus knowyng them to moue suche questions not of any purpose to learne the trueth, but to hunt for some matter of false accusacion agaynst hym, thus made answere vnto them: If I shall tell you what I am, ye wyll not geue credite vnto me: and in case I shoulde question with you by the testimonies of the scriptures, what maner of mā it was promised that Messias should be, and whether thesame tokens doe iustely agree in my persone, ye wyll not aunswere accordyng to your consciences, as men that haue not anye earnest desyre to learne that is true, nor yet to teache it. Neyther wyll ye vpon any suche cause or consideracion acquite and discharge me, if I shall declare myne innocencie vnto you. For ye doe not by youre oppolyng and examining me, meane eyther vpō knowlage of the trueth to discharge me if I be innocent, or to condēne me beyng found guiltie, (as in lawfull iudgementes is commonly vsed to bee doen) but for this entent that the thyng which ye haue determined to doe, ye maye seme to doe by some tytle and colour of iustice. Therfore wyll not I tell you the thyng whiche though ye knowe, yet ye wyll not knowe: but an other thing will I tell you, whiche ye shall one daye fynde to be true. The sonne of man, who at this present moment by reason of the weakenesse of his humayne nature, and of his humilitie, is not agnised and knowlaged of you beyng proud and hault mynded men, shall in tyme to come be aboue earth on hye, sittyng on the right hande of Gods Maiestie. These wordes did Iesus speake, to thentent that forasmuche as they had more mynde and wyll to putte Iesus to death because he was in fourme of humilitie, by whome they mighte haue been saued, then to embrace hym: they should haue knowledge that they should an other daye see hym a iudge & a punisher of their vngodlynesse, who being a saluiour promised and so many hundred yeres loked for, they would not now acknowlage. Suche a worde semed vnto them all a meete and sufficient occasion to laye some false accusacion agaynste him, in case he would eno more but openly take vpon hym that he was the sonne of god. Wherupon they saye: Why than arte thou thatsame sonne of God, of whome the foretellynges of the prophetes doe make mencion. To this question doeth Iesus in suche wise temper his aunswere, that he neither would deny hymselfe to be that he was, nor geue vnto them any occasion or matter falsely to laye to his charge, nor yet as touchyng hymselfe shewe any spyce or poynte of arrogancie. For the Lorde had more minde eche where by his actes and dedes to declare his diuine nature of godhead that was in him, then in woordes to professe it, or take it vpon him. He therfore in this wyse shaped his aunswere: Ye saye that I am: after an humble and lowly sorte geuing a byknowlage, that the thing whiche they demaunded in maner & fourme of a question, as a thyng doubtful, might with as fewe wordes as they vsed, by only alteryng the maner of pronunciacion, be spoken in a playne affirmacion that so it was. But they iudgeing thissame to be a cause sufficient enough wherefore to accuse hym of blasphemy, (then the which crime there was none other emong the Iewes more worthie death) saied: Why doe we yet styl require witnes, we oure owne selues haue heard a manifeste blasphemie out of his mouth. Vpō this verdite did all the whole coumpany quickely agree, as men that had afore decreed by any title (whatsoeuer it were) to put Iesus to death.

Hereafter shall the sonne of man sit. &c.

Arte thou then the sonne of god?

Ye saye I am.

What need we any further wytnes?

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon

The.xxiii. Chapter.

The texte. And the whole multitude of them arose, and led hym vnto Pylate. And they began to accuse hym, saying: We founde this felowe peruertyng the people, and forbidding to paye tribute to Cesar: and saying, that he is Christe and a kyng. And Pylate opposed hym, saying: Arte thou the kyng of Iewes? He aunswered hym and sayed: thou sayest it. Than sayed Pylate to the high priestes and the people: I fynde no faulte in this man. And they were the more fierce, saying: He mouyth the people, teachyng throughoute all Iewry and begonne at Galile euen to this place.

When they had found out a cause (as to theimselues appered) fit enough to put hym to death: it remayned that they might remoue also the enuie and displeasure of his death from themselues, and laye it on others. Wherupon they thought it best to shift him ouer from themselues into Pylate the lieutenauntes handes, to bee arayned before him, to the entent he might seme to had been putte to death, not by the Iewes but by the Gentiles.

Wherefore all the counsayle with the multitude also whom they had drawē to the partakyng of theyr wicked dede, aryse vp altogether and bring Iesus to Pylate the Lorde president and lieutenaunte of Iewry. For he, though he were no Iewe hymselfe, yet was an head officer there vnder the Emperour. And here first of all the Iewes doe deliuer to the Gentiles and alienate from themselues theyr Messias beyng sent of God to them. The Gentiles receiue him and worshyp him whan he was commended and betaken to them. The Lorde was already condemned by a forediudgement in the counsaile of the Iewes, with whō, any pretense or coloure were it neuer so slender did suffise, as with me that with rageyng madnesse thirsted the death of the innocent. But because at the benche of a Pagane and heathē iudge, there was more equitie in ministryng of iustice, then in the courte of the Iewes, it was necessarye to haue forged witnesses, whiche shoulde laye many and great crymes to his charge: who alone of all creatures was clere from all crime. The beginnyng of theyr accusacion was of this sorte. We founde and tooke this felowe with the manier, as he was subuertyng our nacion. For he forbade þ any tribute should bee payed to the Emperour: and in all his talke he hath auouched himselfe to be Messias the king. These two crimes they thought they had gaily well deuised, and that theselfame crimes should exceedyng greatly moue the mynde of the Lorde deputie, for that aswel the one as the other of them, comprised a spice of high treaso against Cesar. So naughtily do these moste shameleese craftie forgers of lyes assaulte the veritie euangelicall. For what can bee deuised more shameleese then suche lyes as these? Iesus afore that tyme, whan a piece of coyne was shewed vnto hym, had made aunswere in this manier. Geue and paye vnto Cesar, such thinges as belong vnto Cesar, and to god, such thinges as belong vnto god. And to be made a kyng, whereas it had afore been willyngly offered hym by the Iewes of their owne motion, he wolde none of it, but fled and ranne away from them to auoyde it. And as for beyng the Messias he had also in verye facte & dedes afore that tyme declared hymselfe to bee theselfame. Wherfore, if he had affirmed and auouched hymselfe to be the Messias, yet ought not they to haue laid that matter to his charge as a cryme, except they had firſt openly proued that ſuche thinges as the Prophetes had foreſayed concernyng Meſſias did not agree ne ſerue to be ſpoken of hym. The hope that they had to put him to a foile and an ouerthrowe, was in the greate noumbre of ſuche a multitude beeyng conſpyred together agaynſte hym, and in that Jeſus whom they had accuſed, was altogether deſtitute and freedeles, and finally the iudge being as they ſuppoſed a man of no godlines at all. Pilate, although he was a worſhipper of idolles, yet beeyng a man of muche more equitie and conſcience then the prieſtes of the Jewes, wynked at the fyrſte artycle of the accuſation, whiche concerned, that tribute ought not to be payed vnto Ceaſar, and made as though he herd it not: partely becauſe he ſmelled and well appercyued that it was but a forged matter, and partely becauſe it was no newe thyng for that poynte to bee reaſoned and diſputed of amonge the Jewes, for ſo muche as all the whole ſecte of the Phariſeis, thought that a people peculiarly and ſpecially choſen, and dedicated vnto God, ought not to pay any tribute to heathen nations. But of the artycle concernyng to bee a kyng, he queſtioned with Jeſus in whom he ſawe no ſygnes ne lykelyhode of any worldly reignyng or of beeyng a kyng: he was but one ſole perſone, his apparell, his countenaunce, all the behaueour of his body, ſhewed all tokens of humilitie and ſymplenelle. Wherfore the preſident, whan he had hearde the accuſers, tooke him aparte and aſked hym whether he were the kyng of Jewes. Than Jeſus aunſwered: ſo thou ſayeſt. For the lord did euermore ſo moderate his aunſweres, that bothe he myghte approue his innocencie, and yet not laboure to eſcape from condemnacion and iudgemente, forasmuche as he was determined to dye. He was the kyng of Jewes, and that poynte it was not congruente for hym to ſaye naye vnto: but an other kynde of reigne and kyngdome it was that he went about to recouer to hymſelfe and his father. After the diuine nature of his Godhead he was the kyng of al thynges, of whiche diuine nature Pilate ſuſpected ne thought no ſuche thynge at all in hym: and as touchyng the temporal reygne and kyngdome euangelicall, the ſayd Pilate had no vnderſtandyng forasmuche as he was a man ignorannte of the lawe and of the Prophetes, ſaueng that he had hearde, that there was looked for of the Jewes, one Meſſias their kyng whatſoeuer he was, he couldc not tell whom: the whiche rumour he beeyng a man nothyng at all ſuperſticious, paſſed not muche vpon. Therefore although he vnderſtoode not the aunſwere of Jeſus, yet beeyng not ignorannte of the Jewes malyce, and gatheryng the forwardneſſe and humilitie of Jeſus euen by his verye countenaunce: he came forth to the byſhops of the Jewes and the multitude beeyng there gathered in a clouſter together. I haue (ſayed he) examined this partie of ſuche faultes as haue been laied to his charge, and I fynde none offence in hym. But they as men knowyng in their owne conſcience what and how they had doen: where thei were not able with euident proofes to conuince him, and to get the ouerhande of hym, they ſet out the throte, and made an opē outcry againſt hym, linking together crimes vpon crimes, and lies vpō lies as thicke as could be. May further more ſay they (a ſeditious felowe he is, he thoroughly moueth and perſwadeth the people all Jewrye ouer with his doctrine, beginnyng at Galilee and ſo all the waye euen tyll he was come to this verye citye. of men that infourgeth and reyseth garboyle agaynst the veritie, whiche they deadly hate and cannot abyde. Suche tumultuous garboyle is not of right to be emputed to the true preachers of the ghospell, but to the vncurable malice of such persones as haue more desire to haue the holsom trueth vttrely oppressed and ouerwhelmed, then to laye apartte the disease of their malicious hertes. For none otherwise dooeth the doctrine of the ghospel trouble the people, but as a medicine of physycke dooeth grutche or stirre the body. For excepte there bee fyrste a stirryng and a roumbleyng in the body, it muste nedes wholly perysshe altogether.

The texte. Whan ye are heard mention of Galilee, he asked whether the man were of Galilee. And as sone as he knew that he belonged vnto Herodes iurisdiction, he sent him to Herode, which was also at Hierusalem at that tyme. And whan Herode sawe Jesus, he was exceedyng glad. For he was desyerous to see hym of a long season, because he had hearde many thynges of hym, and he trusted to haue seene some myracles dooen by hym. Than he questioned with hym many wordes. But he answered hym nothyng. The hygh Prestes and Scribes stoode foorth, and accused hym stregthly. And Herode with hys men of warre, despysed hym. And whan he had mocked hym, he arayed hym in white clothyng, and sente hym agayne to Pylate. And the same daye Pylate and Herode were made frendes together. For before they were at debate.

This accusation forasmuche as it moued Pylate but a litle or nothynge, for he sawe that the wholle mattier was dooen by a conspyracie of the chiefe rewlers and certayne others of the people, which were consenters and helpers forewarde to the malyce of the same head men to saye as they sayed, he was berayed desyrous and earneste to remoue both the prisoner and also his accusers, to the examination and trial of an other iudge, to the end that in case he might not bee hable to despuer Jesus, yet at leastwise himselfe, for hys parte, might be ridde and despeched of the cause. He quickely tooke an occasion of thys one lytell woorde, Galilee, of the whiche countrey Herode was Tetrarche or prynce. He therfore demaunded whether Jesus was one of Galilee, it was aunswered that he was a Galilean, because emongst the common people he was beleeued to bee a Nazarite, for he had been brought vp there in hys childehoode and had afterwarde led moste parte of hys yeres there. Therfore as soone as Pylate perceyued that to sitte in iudgement vpon the prisoner did belonge vnto Herode, he shiefted hym ouer to Herode, who at that tyme (as it chaunced) was at Hierusalem, howbeit al this whole matter too was wrought and doe by the dispensation of the wisedome and ordeinaunce of God, to thend that the Lorde Jesus might bryng wyth hym a testimonie of hys innocencie from all the benches, and courtes of iustice there: and that the malice of the bysshops, Scribes, and chiefe headmen might bee the better manifested vnto the worlde. Herode, whan he sawe that Jesus was brought vnto hym, was glad of that syght. For the man had of long tyme been wyth chylde to haue a syghte of Jesus, of whome he had hearde so many thynges. And he verayly trusted that it would nowe come to passe, that Jesus would before hys face shewe some myracle, suche as he had heard veray many to had been wrought in other places by hym. Wherfore he questioned with Jesus of many thynges, as one desierous to geat out many thynges out of Jesus: not to the ende hymselfe myghte bee made the better man therby, but to satisfie hys owne curious fansye that he had to knowe thynges. For none other thynges it were that he enquyred of Jesus, but suche as he wouldbe haue asked of some Magian, (that is to saye) some cunnyng man that had a syght in the pyiutties of Physlosophy, and in the mystically conclusions of nature: but Jesus, who was not come to serue the fleshe & lust of a wicked prince, but to procure healthe vnto al creatures, made him none answer at all, teachyng vs in the meane season, that some tyme the worde of god is not to bee vttered whan it is euident that the persones are vnworthy & vnmete to heare it. But the bishops all this whyle, and the scribes folowe their matter earnestly and call vpon it, and doue eagrely lay to his charge afore Herode, as me very sore fearing that Jesus, who was thā arrained, mighte by some meanes escape. But yet Herode although he wer a wicked king, yet was he nothing at al moued with these accusations, as one that well apperceiued all that euer was dooen or entended, to had arisen and proceded of enuie. But thinking it sufficient to despise hym of whom he was despised, he clothed Jesus in the way of mockage in a white garmente (for that was than the guise and maner of goyng of kynges and Emperoures) and so sent him backe again to Pilate. This reproche had the lord taken at Herodes handes beyng a prince of a grosse witte and brayne, and of his armed garde, beeyng lyke men, like maister, accordyng to the prouerbe. For amoug men of suche a sort, a felowe that can goe or daunce on a rope, or els one that hath the feate to playe a iuggelyng cast, shall sooner haue praise and thanke, thē a syncere preacher of the ghospell. For suche persones haue no mynde ne wyll, but eyther to haue pleasure and delectacion shewed theym, or els to learne suche thinges as maie serue to the maintenaunce of their tyranny. Yet notwithstanding in the meane time, Herodes cruelitie dyd condemne the wickednes of the bishops and the Scribes, and did quitte Jesus also, seeyng he condemned hym not to death beyng accused afore him, and making no answer to the offēces which wer layed to his charge. It was in the meane time a thing highly to the contentacō of Herode, that Pilate shewed hym so muche honour as to sende Jesus vnto him to haue a sight of: Whereupon from that time forewardes, amitie and frēdship grewe betwene Herode and Pilate, whereas before there had been variaunce betwene thē. But a wicked and vngodly frendship it is, that is made by the iniurie of the trueth euangelicall.

But he answered him nothyng.

And Herode with his mē of warre despised hī. &c

¶ And Pilate called together the high priestes and the rewlers, and the people, and said vnto them: ye haue brought this man vnto me, as one that peruerteth the people. And behold, I examine hym before you, and find no fault in this man of those thinges whereof ye accuse him: no not yet Herode. For I sent you vnto him, and loe, nothyng worthy of death is doen vnto him. I will therfore chasten him, and let him looce: For of necessitie, he must haue let one looce vnto them at the feast. And al the people cried at once, saiyng: away with him, and deliuer vs Barrabas: (which for a certain insurrection made in the citie, and for a murder, was cast in prisō.) Pilate spake again to them, willyng to leat Jesus looce. But they cried, saiyng: Crucifie him. Crucifie him: he said vnto them the third time: what euill hath he dooen? I fynde no cause of death in him. I will therfore chasten him and let him goe. And they cried with loude voyces: requiryng that he might be crucified. And the voices of them, and of the high priestes preuailed. And Pilate gaue sentence, that it should be as they required. And he let looce vnto them, him that for an insurrection and murder was casts into prison, whom they had desired, and he deliuered to them Jesus, to dooe with him what they would.

The texte.

Whan Pilate sawe that he prisoner was sent backe again from Herode, and that his purpose had not come to suche effecte as he had assayed to bring it, he begoon of a iudge to become a spokesman for Jesus: and call yng together the bishops, the Scribes, the chiefe men, and the commons that came at theyr tayles: he spake after this sorte to them . Ye haue here of youre owne myndes brought this man before me, as one that withdraweth your people from the obedience of the Emperour and of your lawes, and I here in youre presence haue doone what I can to boulte out the truethe of him with examining and asking dyuerse questions of hym: neyther doe I fynde hym culpable in any of these crimes which ye accuse him of. The selfsame thing hath come to passe with Herode the whiche can iudge better in these mattiers then I, forasmuche as he is a man skilled in your lawes. In consideracion wherof also I did put ouer this matter to be iudged and tried in his courte, who if he had founde him guiltie, would not haue let him escape. Now because he hath not founde in hym anye offence woorthie of deathe, he beeyng contented with a light punishment, hath no more but geuen the man a mocke, as one veraylye quitting him from all daungier of death. Wherefore it is best, that we also folowe the equitie of Herode. I will chastice the manne with some lesser punishment then death, and so lette hym goe. This did the lorde presidente, trusting that the furious rage of the Iewes would asswage whan they had seene Iesus put to so many reproches, and so scourged. Whan Pylate coulde doe no good thys way neyther, but sawe the madnesse of the Iewes to be the more lette on fyer therby: he deuised also an other caste howe to deliuer Iesus. It was a custome euery yere once emongest the Iewes, that the lorde Presidente (because of theyr highe solemnitie of that feastfull daye, whiche was than at hande) should leat goe by his pardon and releasse vnto the Iewes one of their offendours, whom they would aske. Therfore the president preuenting their askyng, putte it to their choise whether of the twoo they would haue pardoned and releassed vnto them, Iesus, or ells Barabas. This Barabas was a greate robber, and a notable felowe by reason of his mischeuous dedes, in that he had stiered vp a sedition in the citie, and had slain one of the tounsemē and had for that offence beene caste into prison. And because the lieutenaunte right well knewe him to be a felow, whom al the whole citie hated, he trusted that it would haue come to passe, that they would sooner haue suffred Iesus to bee lette goe, who had doen muche good to manye people, then this manne which was a disiourber of the publike peace and tranquillitie: But the bishops and theyr adherentes were in suche a rage that they desired to haue Barabas releassed vnto them, and Iesus to be hanged vpon the crosse, the which kynd of deathe, like as it was moste grieuous because of the long peine, so was it accumpted also moste shamefull at that tyme. So forthurthe dyd the Iewes leaue no kynd of cruelnesse vnministred to Iesus. But it pleased the wisedom of God, that Iesus the fountayne and autour of all glorye, should be had in so great contempte, that a seditious murderer should bee preferred before him, because we should not dispaire if we at any tyme for the name and doctrine of Christe, be despised of suche as loue this worlde. Whan Pylate perceyued he coulde doe no good this way neither, he moued them yet once againe proposing if he coulde by any meanes mytigate theyr stomakes and deliuer Iesus beeyng innocent. But they beyng effsones the more stiered to wrath, sing this furious song: Crucifie hym, Crucifie hym. yet did not Pilate so geue place to their clamour and crying neyther: but attempted the third tyme to pacifye them, saying: I am a iudge, I haue no tiele or affaye vnto innocentes neyther, can I putte a manne to death in whome I can fynde no cryme deathworthie.

Aware with hym, & deliuer vs Barrabas. &c.

But they cryed, saying: Crucifie hym. Crucifie hym.

And

And what harth this man committed or offended why he should dye? I haue I fynde in him no cause of death. streightly examined him, and no cause can I fynde in him to be punyshed with death. If there bee any small offence, I will thus muche doe for your mindes sakes: I will punyshe him, & geue him a sharpe rebuke, and so let him goe. But they forwardly still made a stryuyng agaynste this equitie of the iudge, not with prouffes, but with furious & mad outcries, requiryng that Jesus might be crucified, and Barrabas leat goe. And when the president had assayed all possible wayes and meanes, and perceiued that they cryed out styll more and more, he called for water to washe his handes, and testifiying the innocency of Jesus, and condemnyng the forwarde malicyousnesse of the Jewes, he gaue sentence of death against Jesus, not after his owne mynde, but after the wil-full arbitrement of the Jewes, who would nedes haue Jesus put to death, beyng the autour of life and health, and releassed vnto them Barrabas a se-dicious murderer, whom they preferred before Jesus. And as for Jesus, he deliuered vnto them to doe suche execution vpon hym, as themselfes would.

And they cryed with loud voices &c. that he myghte bee crucified.

And as they led him away, they caught one Simon of Cyrene cummyng out of the field and on hym layed they the crosse, that he might beare it after Jesus. And there folowed him a great cumpany of people, and of women whiche bewailed and lamented him. But Jesus turned backe vnto them, and said: Ye daughters of Jerusalem, wepe not for me, but wepe for your selues, and for your children. For, behold, the dayes will cum, in the whiche they shall say: happy are the barraine and the wombes that neuer bare, and the pappes that neuer gaue sucke. Than shall they begin to say to the mountains: fall on vs, and to the hilles, couer vs. For yf they doe this in a grene tree, what shalbe doone in the dryc?

The texte.

Ye daughters of Jerusalem wepe not for me but wepe for yourselfes.

After that they had vsed all kynd of opprobriousnes and villany against him, to satisfie their hatered, they clothed him again with his owne garmentes, to the entente he should the better be knowen of the people, and broughte hym forth towardes the place of execution, beating his own crosse himselfe as the maner there was. And as they were goyng thitherward they met by chaunce with one Simon a man of Cyrene as he was cumyng from his ferme. And vpon him, whether he would or would not, they layed the Lordes crosse, to the entent that Jesus might goe before, and he beare his crosse after him: not to the entent to spare Jesus, or to shewe him any fauour: but that they might with the more spedie dispeche accomplishe the thyng that they went about. But in the meane tyme by goddes prouidēce there was a figure procured of the churche to bee afterwardes gathered of the Gentiles, which did willingly embrace the crosse of Jesus, and folowed the steppes of his fete. There folowed Jesus also a great multitude of the people, both menne and women, which while the priestes & Scribes reioyced, did on their partes make much wailing and lamentacion for the death of the innocēt. For nothing els it was that they beyng poore folkes and men of peace could doe against the wycked conspiracie of the great mē. But Jesus, who would not haue his death to be a thyng of lamentacion, but of glory: neyther would haue it to be bewayled, but wurshypped, (as the whiche he tooke vpon him willingly for the redemption of all the whole worlde) willed them to refraine their vncomely lamentyng, although it proceded and came of a godly affection. Ye daughters of Jerusalem (saieth he) bewaile not me, but bewail your owne cause and your childrens, for the death of an innocent is not to be lamēted, but the confusion of thē is to be lamented, who for theyr hainous wicked actes shall both here be punished with piteous plagues & afflictions: and afterward also be adiudged to peines euerlasting. For so miserable distresse and extremitie doeth there hang ouer this region: that men shall call those wemen happie, whiche neuer bare any childrē, and the wombes happie which neuer brought forth fruite, & the pappes happie which neuer gaue sucke. For ỹ natural kindenesse of the mothers is more grieued with their childrēs troubles, thē with their owne. Now they reioyce as though they had doen some noble great act: but than, whā the time of goddes vengeaūce shall come, there shal so great feare of mischifes which be at hand, come in theyr mindes, that they shal say to the mountaines, ouerwhelme vs: & to the hilles, couer vs: for if they do this in a grene tree, what shall be doen in a dry and withered tree? By this derke sentence the Lord did testifie his incomparable innocencie, that he alone of all mē was not corrupt with any rottēnesse of vice or inordinate desires: but altogether flourishing & continually budding with al kind of vertues. That if theyr malice did shewe such exaūple of cruelnesse against a mā altogether faultlesse: what punishemēt ought they to haue which being wholly corrupted with naughty affectiōs, could by no meanes be brought to any honestie.

The texte. And there were two euill doers led with hym to be slaine. And after that they were come to the place which is called Caluarie: there they crucified him and the euill doers, one on the right hande and the other on the left. Than sayed Jesus: father forgeue them, for they wote not what they doo. And they parted his rayment, and cast lottes. And the people stode and beheld. And the rewlers mocked him with them, sayinge: he saued other men leate him saue himselfe, if he be veray Christe the chosen of God.

With this pompe did our prince & king goe furth towardes his triumphe. There were also led to execucion with him two other offendoures whiche were condemned with him, but not for the same matter. And this thyng was also a matter procured by the Jewes to the entente they might bryng him in the more slaundre and infamy emong the comme people, in that he was matched with suche companions. There was also picked out thereunto a place, which by reason of continuall execucion of offendours, was a place of slaūderous name, and of mortal bloud spilling, named of the thing selfe, Golgotha, because it was white with the skulles & bones of folkes that had been there put to death. In such a place thā was Jesus crucified in ỹ middes betwixt two theues as though he had been as diepe in as they, and partaker of theyr offence, for asmuche as he was partaker of theyr punishmēt. But whatsoeuer thyng the malice of the Jewes could deuise to the shame and reproche of the Lord Jesus, al that did he turne to his owne glory and to our health. For he that beyng innocent doeth of his owne will submitte hymselfe to saue men, vnto the more worldly shame he humbleth hymselfe, somuch the more glory doeth he deserue both afore God and afore man also. Thus did it please the wisedom of God, to thende he might by this so notable an exaumple, pluckе do wne our pryde which desire to haue laude and commendacion of men, yea for our euill dedes too. Nowe Jesus beeyng on heighth, and lifted vp into that watch tower or beakō place out of the which he would call all thynges home vnto himselfe, willing to shewe a moste perfecte exaumple of pacience incomparable, whereas beeyng innocente, and one that had so many wayes doen good, he had so many harmes & peines, so many kindes of open worldly shame, so many mockes & skornes ministred vnto him, where also hanging on the crosse (which thyng dooth make euen verye mourdeers to bee pitied) they gaue him suche bitter woordes of reuilyng, as it were more grieuous for a manne to abyde, then to suffre death, yet is he so ferre from auengeyng hymselfe, and so ferre from railyng on them agayne, that he prayed his father for thesame persons at whose handes he was vngoodly and shamefully handled: Father (sayeth he) forgeue them, for they knowe not what they doe. Thilkame verely was that holy prayer of our bishop on the aultare of the crosse, offeryng vp once for euer in sacrifice the paschall lambe for the redemption and healthy of the whole worlde. Neither was his prayer without condigne effecte. For many of thesame persons, whiche through ignorannces were doers in nailyng the Lorde on the crosse, whan they afterwarde knew the trueth by meane of the Apostles preachyng, professed the name of hym that had been crucified. Howbeit the malice of the Phariseis also was not altogether without ignorannce: but that was suche grosse ignorannce, as dooeth not deliuer ne discharge them from offence. For they might haue lacked that ignorannce and errour, if inordinate affections and desires, whiche they were led by as bondseruauntes, had not letted them. But euen emong these some there were, which did of a lyke myndе or zele persecute the Lord, as Paul dyd persecute the churche of God. Here yf thou consyder (moste gentill Theophilus) the moste perfite innocencie of Jesus, the moste great goodnesse of thesame Jesus, towardes all creatures, the moste high vertues of his minde, in which beyond comparisо he excelled all others: and agayne on the contrary parte, if thou sette before thyne yes and beholde, the hatred, the railyng, the reproches, the guiles, the traines, the accusations, and the kynde of death that the wickednesse of the Jewes put him vnto: and shouldest heare hym vpon the verye crosse in the middes of their reuilyng woordes prayeng his father not to take vengeaunce, but to forgeue the workers and doers of so hainous a dede: shall not suche an one seme vnto thee to be a verye shamelesse persone, whiche professing hymselfe a disciple of Christe, will goe aboute to bee auenged of a synner, seeyng he is a synner hymselfe, yea although he haue with a great iniurie and displeasure been occasioned and prouoked thereunto? Than how ferre do suche persones vnnaturally swerue from this exaumple of Christe, as for a lyght woord of reproche will drawe their sweordes, ready to thrust it in their neighbours herte: howe ferre also from this exaumple of Christe are suche persons as not digestyng a tauntyng woorde any thing stubbernely or proudely spoken against them, do shake whole cities, whole kyngdomes, with pestilente blouddie warres, and enforce whole nacions to the wilful effusion and spilling of one an others blоud? But let not vs once moue our yes from this exaumple: let vs beholde and folowe our king Christe, subduеyng vpon the crosse all the power of the tyranne Satan, and banquishing all the puissaunce of this worlde, and triumphing of all powers as manp as auaunce themselfes agaynste the trueth of the ghospell, whiche trueth it behoueth not any otherwyse to gette the victory, ne any otherwise to triumphe, then vnder the standarde of her owne prince which is Christ. Let vs beholde our bishop Christe with an effectuall sacrifice pourgeyng and puttyng awaye the sinnes of all the worlde, of all nacions and of all times both past and to come, and suffreing punishment in his owne body for all menne, so that the thyng whiche he freely offereth vnto vs, we will with sincere fayth receiue and accepte, as menne acknowlagyng our vnrighteousenesse and enbra-

ring his vnspeakeable goodnesse towardes vs. Whither doest thou turne thy face awaye thou vnhappie and miserable sinner? Our Lord crieth, father forgeue them, and thou being fallen in despayre of thy selfe, doest thou either addresse to hang thy selfe as Iudas did, or els art thou an heaper of sinnes vpon sinnes? There is no cause why thou shouldest from hencefurth feare the power of Satan: Christe hath gotten the victory of hym: and to thy behouse hath he gotten the victory. From on high vpon the tree of the crosse, where he maye beseme of all nations, he louingly biddeth vs come vnto hym. The three angles or armes of the crosse doe a ferre of cal louingly aswell vnto Asia, and Europe, as also to Affrike: and biddeth them come to the partaking of euerlasting welth. Iesus ferthermore hanged naked vpon the crosse, because he would not haue any thyng of this worldes, forasmuche as he was in executyng an heauenly sacrifice: teachyng vs by a verap right exaumple of a true matter in dede, howe pure affections, and howe clere from the desire of all worldly thynges, euangelicall bishops ought to haue. In the meane tyme the souldiers that crucified hym (as though he should not haue vsed agayne) castyng lottes, did parte and deuide the lordes clothes emongst themselues. For this was in maner of a rewarde for theyr wicked seruice. It was Iesus will and pleasure, that this beyng as a spoyle taken from hym, should remayne with the souldiers: but with vs, beyng professours of his name, he would no poynte of any carnalitie of his to remayne, to thentent we should now loue hym in spirite. So euen at this present daye also his clothes be with vs, lyke as he dooeth dayelye hang vpon the crosse to vs and for our behouse. For all thynges of his, are ours: but thesame must be according to the spirite. In this wise therfore the priestes, the Scribes, the Pharisees, and the chiefe of the people together with the souldiers whiche had doen the execution of crucifying Iesus, dooe skorne hym hanging on the crosse as one beyng brought to confusion, and as a man destitute of all hope, castyng hym in the teeth that wheras the reporte had goen that he had holpen many an one with his miracles, he was now not able to saue himselfe. He hath saued others (say they) now leat him be a saucour to himselfe, at leaste wisein case he be thatsame Christe, that he hath bosted hymselfe to be, and in case he be thatsame derely beloued and chosen sonne of God, whome he hath in his talke auouched that he is. Suche woordes as these, did the chiefe rewlers caste out against him in hearing of the people, that was wont to wonder at the myracles of Christe, to thentent they might turne the myndes of the saued people awaye from hym. Yea and ferthermore they do by theyr woordes disowne and vtterly wype away from hym all his autoritie euery whit of it, prouing and (as it wer) counting by the matter self and case as it stoode, that he was neyther the Messias, neyther the sonne of God, whom he had openly taken vpon himselfe to be, excepte he would come downe from the crosse. But the healthe and safegarde of the worlde did not consiste in cummyng downe: but in his continuyng and thoroughly enduryng to the ende. And thesame enduryng to the ende was of more weight and force with Iesus, then the opprobrious and reuilyng woordes of the chiefe headmen.

And they parted his rayment. &c.

He saued other men, letteth him saue hymselfe. &c.

The texte. ¶ The souldiers also mocked hym, and came and offred hym vineagre, and saied: yf thou be the kyng of the Iewes, saue thy selfe. And a superscripcion was written ouer hym with letters of Greke, and Latine, and Hebrue: this is the kynge of the Iewes. And one of the theuis doers whiche were hanged, raiyed on hym, saying: If thou bee Christe, saue thy selfe and vs. But the other answered and rebuked him, saying: Fearest thou not God, seeyng thou art in the same damnacion? We are righteously punished, for we receyue accordynge to our dedes, but this man hath doone nothynge amysse. And he sayde vnto Jesus: Lorde remembre me, whan thou comest into thy kyndome. And Jesus sayd vnto hym: Verely I saye vnto thee, to daye shalt thou bee with me in paradyse.

But the souldiers, a grosse kynde of men, and partly ignoraunt of the Jewishe religion, and partly despisers of it, skorned Jesus because it was reported that he had chalenged to be kyng ouer the Jewes: moued therto doubtelesse by the exaumple of the chiefe of the Jewes nacion. And the same souldiers reachyng vp vineagre vnto hym in the waye of mockage, sayed: If thou be that same kyng of the Jewes, shewe thy power quickely and deliuer thy selfe from this daungier. But Jesus in all the premisses shewed a moste perfecte exaumple of mylonesse and pacience, holding his peace at al their opprobrious woordes. There was also a superscripcion or poisee written on the top of the crosse directly ouer his head, in Greke, in Latine, and Hebrewe letters, that it might the better be reade of all nacions. This is the kyng of the Jewes. And this also was verely thought and beleued to haue been doen for a mocke. And yet was not all this enough neyther. The one of the malefactours that hanged hard by Jesus side, rayled against hym from the crosse that he hanged on, saying: If thou be that same Christe the saluour of the worlde, nowe saue thy selfe and vs also. But the other theefe hangyng likewyse on his crosse, consyderyng the meruaylous great meknesse of Jesus, blamed and rebuked his felow whiche suffred the same peynes of hangyng that hymselfe dyd (because they had both committed one offence,) saying: Thou, if thou haue in thee no reuerence towardes men, ne no shame of the worlde, at least wyse thou oughtest to feare god, for speakyng suche opprobrious woordes vpon one that muste here dye, especially seeyng that thyselfe doest suffre the same punishement. Euen thatsame one thyng alone ought to haue staighed and bridled ther from raylyng, although he were an equall offender with vs. Nowe a great diuersitie there is betwene his case and ours. We suffre punishement for our offences, he dyeth an innocente, and double inhumanitie it is, to rayle both vpon one that must dye, and also vpon an innocent. This testimonie did the theefe on the crosse geue vnto Jesus, that his innocencie might on euery syde be testified. And the same theefe immediately turnyng hymselfe to Jesus, sayed: Lorde remembre me whan thou comest to thy kyngdome. A meruailous sayth of this theefe, which whan he sawe Jesus hangyng on the crosse, and at the poynte of dying, himselfe also assured to dye on the same place, yet asked health of Jesus as of a kyng. Nowe Jesus who was both dumme and deafe at all reuilyng woordes, is not deafe nor dumme to a manne askyng helpe with assured sayth and trust in hym. I make thee sure of this (sayeth Christe) this present daye shalt thou be with me in paradise: doubtlesse promising hym to haue rest and refreashyng immediately as soone as this punishement that he was than suffrynge, were ouer past. Nowe happie a thyng it is to be euermore ioyned with Christe, who in al places and times saueth me, yf euangelicall sayth bee present.

And a superscripcion was written ouer hym.

But the other answered, and rebuked hym saying. &c.

And Jesus sayed: to daye shalt thou bee with me in paradise.

¶ And it was about the sixth houre. And there was darknesse ouer all the yearth, vntyll the ninth houre, and the sonne was darkened. And the vaile of the temple did rente, euen brough the middes. And whan Jesus had cried with a loude voice, he sayed: Father into thy handes I commende my spirite. And whan he thus had sayed: he gaue vp the ghoste.

Whan the Centurion sawe what had happened, he glorified God, saying: Verayly, this was a righteous man. And all the people that came together to that sighte, and sawe the thynges which had happened, smote their breastes and returned. And all his acquaintaunce, and the women that followed him from Galile, stood a ferre of beholdyng these thynges.

And nowe it was well nigh the sixte houre of the daye, that is to saye, euen muche aboute nooneтyde (for so doe the Iewes reken:) from this houre of nooneтyde, at whiche tyme of the daye the sunne is woonte to bee moste hotte and to shyne moste brightest of all: there came soodaynly a great derkenesse ouer all thatsame countrey aboute Hierusalem, and so continued till the nynth houre, that is to saye, till three of the clocke afternoone. For the sunne detesting and abhorryng suche great iniquitie of men, did hyde his face at suche time as he should be put to death, who was the light of the worlde. The yearth also dyd quake, stones brake a soondre, and euery parte of nature trembled at so horrible a deede of cruelтie. Furthermore the vaile of the temple, whiche parted the inner holy place (whiche they called Sanctum sanctorum) from the other parte of the temple, rented quite a soondre in twoo partes, no manne sterynge it, shewyng openly that the shadowes and ceremonies of the Iewes, should nowe ceasse, after that this sacrifice was once accomplished, whiche alone was sufficient to pourge and clense the sinnes of all tymes both past and to come. But Iesus, whan he had with a loude crye sayed: Father, I commende my spirite into thy handes: yelded vppe the ghoste. So that it myght bee euidente to all men, that he dyd not fainte as others are woonte to doe, the strength of theyr bodies by litle a litle consuming awaye, but that dyanby after a strong stretche of crye, and after woordes distinctely pronounced, he willingly, (as ye woulde saye,) and of his owne accorde gaue vp the ghoste. This thyng dyd the Centurion well apperceiue and marke, who purposely stode hard by the crosse, that no man should take them downe alyue from the tree. And of this man also had Iesus a testimonie of his innocencie, for he glorified God, that he had shewed so great power in him, and sayed: Verayly this man was righteous: openly condemning the vnrighteousnesse of the Iewes. For whosoeuer pronounceth hym an innocent that is condemned, maketh hym an offendour that hath condemned thesame. All the other coumpanie of them, who (as the common guise is) had come to see the execution (and in dede a great many moe then would els haue come, partely the fauour, and partely the hatred of Iesus, had drawen thither) whan they had seen the thynges whiche had fortuned, returned home knockyng they breastes, partely for sorowe that a man so innocente and a doer of suche good dedes had been so vngodly intreated: and partely for feare of the stroke and vengeaunce of God, whiche they knowing themselfes culpable in they owne conscience, did of the straunge tokens that they had seen, mistrust and deme to hang ouer them. For the same manne whom in his lyfe tyme they had seen of lowe and poore degree, and a man none other lyke but to be contemned: thesame doe they see euen at his dying houre, a manne of great power, insomuche that all the elementes of this worlde were shaken and disordred out of they course. Here ettsones, o Theophilus, marke thou one other poynt: that there was at all tymes more grace founde in the Gentiles, then in the Iewes, who tooke vnto them the laude of deuocion towardes God, and of holy conuersacion aboue all others. no more but feare his stroke, being made afeard̄e with thynges of woondre, whereas with so many benefites they could not possibly be wonne. Further more they that were of Jesus kynred, or familiare with him in his life time, stode a ferre of beholding what was doen, and durst not for feare come nerrer. Emongst there were also the wemen, which, for desire and good will to ministre thynges necessarie to him & to his disciples, had followed him from Galile, as witnesses and beholders of those thynges which were doen. And thesame being nowe destitute of all hope, dyd nothyng els but mourne and make lamentacion for hym.

And all his acquaintaunce and ꝓ women that folowed him frō Galile &c.

And beholde, there was a man named Ioseph, a counsaylour. And he was a good man and a iust, (the same had not consented to the counsaile and dede of them, which was of Aramathia a citie of the Iewes, which same also waited for the kingdome of God. He went unto Pilate and begged the body of Jesus, and toke it downe, and wrapped it in a lynnen cloth, and laied it in a sepulchre that was hewen in stone, wherein never manne before had been laied.

It beeyng therfore by many euident tokens assuredly well to be seen and knowen, that the lorde was undoubtedly dead, leste any man myght fynde some poynte of cauillacion, eyther that he was not a verey naturall manne in dede, or els that he was not verally dead: behold, there cometh in a man of his owne free offre, by whom the lordes buriall myght be executed and accomplished, which buriall Jesus pleasure was should be sleuly and honourable. His life had been milde and lowe without bearing any poze, his death had been a thyng of muche effecte, his buriall was magnificent; and his resurrection glorious. So than euen at the verey houre, euen as God would, cometh in willingly of his owne free offre, a certain mā named Joseph, borne in Aramathia a citie of Jewry, a good man and a iust, and one of the nounbre of them that loked for the kingdom of God. This mā, although he were one of the chiefe men of that nacion (for he was a noble senatour & a rewler) yet had he neuer consented to the coūsayle and dedes of the priestes, the scribes, and the head mē of the people, although for feare of their power which hated Jesus, he durst not openly profesfe or acknowlage the good will and zele of his herte towardes Jesus. For as yet they had not geuen unto them boldenesse, by the holy ghost, that all thynges despised, they might haue the power openly to profesfe the name of Jesus. The other disciples therfore being driuen away for feare, only Joseph together w̄ Nicodemus, dareth take in hande the office of burying the Lorde: whether it were because the fauour of meme to wardes them that be good, doeth after the death of the same encrease more & more: or els because the saied Joseph iudged ꝑ enuy of the Iewes against Jesus to be now saciate with his death. Wherfore he cometh unto Pilate to whom he was a man well knowē by reaſō of his nobilitie, & asked of him ꝑ body of Jesus. But Pilate would not geue it him before he had perfect knowlage by the Centuriō that he was throughly dead. Than Joseph toke the body, and after it was taken downe from the crosse, and enbaumed all ouer with swete odouriferous sauours, he wounde it up in a fyne sheete, hauing in the meane time no hope at all of his resurrection, of the whiche Jesus had briefly in fewe woordes, geuen knowlage but a litle afore unto his disciples: but in suche wyse had he doen it, that they thesame no more but feare his stroke, being made afeard with thynges of woonder. whereas with so many benefites they could not possibly be wonne. Forthermore they that were of Jesus kynred, or familiare with him in his life time, stode a ferre off beholding what was doen, and durst not for feare come nerer. Emongst these were also the women, which, for desire and good will to minister thynges necessarie to him & to his disciples, had followed him from Galile, as witnesses and beholders of those thynges which were doen. And these same being now destitute of all hope, dyd nothyng els but mourne and make lamentacion for hym.

And all his acquaintance and the women that followed him from Galile &c.

And beholde, there was a man named Joseph, a counsaylour. And he was a good man and a iust, (the same had not consented to the counsaile and dede of them) which was of Aramathia a citie of the Jewes, which same also waited for the kingdome of God. He went unto Pilate and begged the body of Jesus, and toke it downe, and wrapped it in a lynnen cloth, and laied it in a sepulchre that was hewen in stone, wherein never manne before had been laied.

It beeyng therfore by many euident tokens assuredly well to be seen and knowen, that the lorde was undoubtedly dead, leste any man myght fynde some poynte of cauillacion, eyther that he was not a very naturall manne in dede, or els that he was not verily dead: behold, there cometh in a man of his owne free offre, by whom the lordes buriall myght be executed and accomplished, which buriall Jesus pleasure was should be cleny and honourable. His life had been milde and lowe without bearing any port, his death had been a thyng of muche effecte, his buriall was magnificent; and his resurrection glorious. So than euen at the very houre, euen as God would, cometh in willingly of his owne free offre, a certain mā named Joseph, borne in Aramathia a citie of Jewry, a good man and a iust, and one of the nomber of them that loked for the kingdom of God. This mā, although he were one of the chiefe men of that nacion (for he was a noble senatour & a rewler) yet had he neuer consented to the coūsayle and dedes of the priestes, the scribes, and the head mē of the people, although for feare of their power which hated Jesus, he durst not openly profesfe or acknowlage the good will and zele of his herte towardes Jesus. For as yet they had not geuen unto them boldenesse, by the holy ghost, that all thynges despised, they might haue the power openly to profesfe the name of Jesus. The other disciples therfore being driuen away for feare, only Joseph together w Nicodemus, dareth take in hande the office of burying the Lorde: whether it were because the fauour of menne towardes them that be good, doeth after the death of the same encrease more & more: or els because the saied Joseph iudged ỹ enuy of the Jewes against Jesus to be now saciate with his death. Wherfore he cometh unto Pilate to whom he was a man well knowē by reasō of his nobilitie, & asked of him ỹ body of Jesus. But Pilate would not geue it him before he had perfect knowlage by the Centuriō that he was throughly dead. Than Joseph toke the body, and after it was taken downe from the crosse, and enbaumed all ouer with swete odoriferous sauours, he wounde it up in a fyne shete, hauing in the meane time no hope at all of his resurrection, of the whiche Jesus had briefly in fewe woordes, geuen knowlage but a litle afore unto his disciples: but in suche wyse had he doen it, that they the same disciples better remembred it, then beleued it. And because they had an opinion that Jesus was a good man, and putte to death without a cause: they thoughte to honour the remembraunce of him with a magnificente buriall. Wherupon they laied the corpse in a toumbe which stoode in a garden platte therby, hewē out of a whole piece of rockestone euē as it grew, in the whiche there had been neuer any body buryed before: These thinges, whereas at that present they semed to bee dooen by mere chaunce: were yet altogether dooen by the prouidence and ordeynaunce of God, that the Jewes might not quarel or make any cauillacions, that the toumbe hauing an hole made in it, the body had been taken away or chaunged.

The texte. And that day was the preparyng of the Sabboth, and the Sabboth drewe on. The wemē that folowed after, whiche had cum with him from Galilee, beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was layed. And they returned and prepared swete odours and oyntmentes: but rested on the Sabboth day, accordyng to the commaundement.

Whan these thinges were in doyng, it was the day of preparacion, that is to saye, the eaue of that high Sabboth: and it was called with them, parasceue, because that vpon that day they prepared al thinges which were necessary the to solemne kepyng of the Sabboth daye, that shoulde bee on the morowe, to the entent they might not bee compelled by doyng of any bodily labour, to breake the reste of the Sabboth daye. Now the women whiche had a farre of loked vpō Jesus on the crosse, folowed him to his buriall, because they would not be ignorāunt where the body of Jesus was layed, and in what place, or with what maner of orderyng it was layed: to the ende that they might knowe it whan they should come to it again. These thynges beeyng diligently bieued and marked, thei returne home again and prepared spices, odours, and oyntementes, wherewith they myght afterward dresse the bodye of the Lorde, although it had been nowe already soso, as it myght be, anoynted ouer with myrrhe by Nicodemus. But the Godly deuocion of the women minded to put some other more precious thyng to the lordes corpse. But the lorde therefore had before suffered an allabastre of precious oyntemente to bee powred vpon hym, because he wouldde not tary for these womens swete oyntementes now at this tyme, whose deuoute diligence neuertheles auayled to confirme the belefe of his resurrection. For whan they seke hym as dead to bee anoynted and spyced, they haue due knowelage that he is alyue. Nowe after the same sette of the same day vntill the eauenyng of the nexte day folowyng, they had rested accordyng to the prescripcion of the lawe, because it was not standyng with Goddes precepte that they shoulde doe any bodily labour on the Sabboth daie. Than after the same was sette, they finished that they had begoonne before in preparyng of the oyntementes and spices. At the selfsame tyme also the Lorde kepte his Sabboth, restyng in his graue, after that he had before on the sayd day of preparation executed and accomplished the woorke of our redemption: because we should vnderstande that mankynde was restored by the same manne, by whom it had been created. He finished the makyng of the worlde on the first daye, and on the seuenth day he rested from his woorke: the same lorde finished the redemption of the world on the first daie (which is the parasceue day:) & rested in the graue. He rested from worcking (as touchyng his humain body) vntill the eight day dyd shyne, the which eight daye the Jewes knowe not, but the Christians doe worshippe. The eight daye is the daye of immortalitie: in the which, reste and wernesse, worke and idelenesse shall not by course enterchaungeably the one succede the other, but they shalbe in euerlastynge gladnesse: neyther shall the daye folowe the night and the night the daye agayne by course, but continuall and euerlastyng light shall shine to the eyes of the godly.

The.xxiiii. Chapter.

But vpon the firste daye of the Sabbothes verye early in the morninge, they came vnto the sepulchre, and brought the sweete odours which they had prepared, and other women with them. And they founde the stone rolled awaye from the sepulchre: and they went in but they found not the body of the Lorde Jesus. And it happened as they were amased therat, behold two men stoode by them in shyning garmentes. And as they were afrayed, and bowed downe their faces to the yearth, they sayed vnto them. Why seke ye the liuing emong the dead: he is not here, but is risen. Remembre howe he spake vnto you, when he was yet in Galile: saying, that the sonne of man muste be deliuered into the handes of synnefull men, and be crucified, and the thyrde daye aryse agayne. The texte.

That the selie weomen rested from doyng any worke, was a thynge geuen to the solemnitie of the Sabbothe. But assoone as it was lawfull to returne agayne to worknge, the diligence of the weomen bestowed the tyme in watchyng after sunnesette aboute a deuoute piece of worke, but yet a worke that as than neded not. For on the daye, that was first a nerre of all folowyng after the Sabbothe, that is to saye, on the eight daye, whan all the Sabbothe daye was fully ended, euen verye early in the firste breake of daye, they make haste vnto the graue, carrying with them the spices and swete sauours whiche they hadde purposely prepared, certes, to bestowe this same as the laste poynte of honour that euer they shoulde shewe vnto hym beeyng now dead, whom they had tenderly loued whyle he was alyue, wherein yet neuertheless, they had no truste nor hope that euer he shoulde aryse agayne to life. Now was the mouth of the sepulchre stopped and shut fast vp with a mightie big stone, suche an one as might vneath be remoued awaye of a good many of men. There was also a seale set theron and that was a thyng pounded and doen by the Pharisees and the Scribes, leste some fellowe mighte priuely haue stolen awaye the dead body, and so spredе abrode an vntrue rumoure that he was arisen to life agayne, in that he coulde nowhere be found. There were keepers moreouer set there of the Lorde lieutenauntes men. Then the weomen whyle they carefully looke round about how the stone might be rolled aside, they see it soodainlye remoued awaye, and a way to come to the sepulchre lying wyde open for them. They tooke hertes to them to entre in, deuocion and loue towardes God had geuen them boldenesse euen weomen as they were. And they were entred in, they fynde not the bodie of the Lorde Jesus there. Whan this matter had sooze dismayed them, and in maner killed they bereaue hertes, because that whan the stone was remoued they had conceyued a bereaue good hope: and yet on the other syde againe they wer in a great meruayle, how it was possible that the graue should bee emptie, whiche they hadde but euen byanby

And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre.

And they went in.

brandy afore seen shutte and sealed vp: soodaynly there stande harde by them twoe Aungels in fourme and lykeneſſe of twoe young menne, with gladsome and frendely countenaunce, and theyr garmentes glitteryng in maner of clere brightneſſe or lightning. Thyſſame berap lightneſſe and sight of the Aungels had been an open semblaunt of the triumph of an aryſing agayne to lyfe. And whan the woomen beeyng throughly afrayed with this straunge syght, caſt their countenaunce, and eyes downe vpon the grounde, and durſt not loke streight vpon the maieſtie of the viſio, being a thing aboue the reache of mans nature: the sayed Aungels with mylde and amiable speakyng vnto them doe ealse and recounfoorte the hertes of them beeyng astouned with that soodayne feare. O ye woomen (saye the Aungels) why doe ye seke hym in the graues of the dead, which is a liueſman? In dede here was he layed whan he was dead: but nowe forasmuche as he is reuiued agayne, he is not in graue, where the dead doe reſte, but he is aryſen agayne from death to life, and walketh a liueſman emong the lyuing. He had by his owne woordes foreſhewed that dye he ſhould: he had foreſhewed the tyme & also the kynde of his death: but theſame had also foreſhewed, that he would on the third day returne to lyfe againe. Ye beleue hym to bee dead, because ye saw it: beleue ye also that he is aryſen againe to life. For he will not in this pointe deceyue you, whiche on the other parte tolde you trueth. Hath sorowe and trouble of mynde made you to forget all thynges that he tolde you of aforehande? Lette it come to your remembraunce againe howe that of all theſe thynges whiche haue nowe been dooen, he leafte not any one poynte vnſpoken of or vntolde aforehande whan he was yet in Galile. For he tolde you afore, that it was ſo decreed by the wyſedome and ordeynaunce of his father, that for the redempcion of mankynde the ſonne of man ſhould be deliuered into the handes of ſynners, and that he ſhould bee accuſed, ſhould be beaten, and ſhould be ſette furth to receyue al kyndes of mocking & ſkorning, and finally that beyng heighered vp vpon the croſſe, he ſhould be put to death: but yet that he theſame man ſhould on the thirde daye, returne to lyfe agayne. Call ye the tyme well vnto your knowlage. He was taken downe from the croſſe well towardes the euentyde of the preparacion daye, and layed here in thyſſame graue: that daye is reckoned for the firſte daye from his death. All the whole Sabboth day he reſted in his ſepulchre: Nowe is thys the daye ſpryng of the third day, which third day, himſelfe aryſing together with theſame, hath willed to be gladſome and proſperous to all the whole worlde. After theſe woordes ſpoken, the Aungels vaniſhed away from theyr ſight.

Two men clad: by the in ſhyning garmentes &c.

Remembre howe he ſpake vnto you. &c.

The texte. And they remembred his woordes, and returned from the ſepulchre, and tolde all theſe thynges vnto thoſe eleuen, and to all the remnaunt. It was Mary Magdalene, & Joanna, and Mary Jacobi, and other that were with them, which tolde theſe thynges vnto the Apoſtles. And theyr woordes ſemed vnto them feigned thinges, neyther beleued they them. Than aroſe Peter and ran vnto the ſepulchre, and loked in, & ſawe the linen clothes layed by themſelues, and departed woondryng in himſelfe at that whiche had happened.

Than the wemen thrugh the Aungels bringyng them in remembraunce, doe call to memorie the Lorde Jeſus woordes, by the whiche he had tolde aforehand vnto his diſciples, aſwell his death as alſo his reſurrection. Whereupon leaupng the monumente, they make haſt to the eleuen Apoſtles, and the other diſciples, who for feare of the Jewes lay in ſecrete places here ſome and there some gathered together, and had euen themselues too, forgotten in maner all thinges that Jesus had told them, and were now in maniere in despayre: and to them doe the women bring newes what they had seen and what they had heard of the Aungels. The first woman Eue, beeyng deceyued by the serpent, allured her housebande Adam to doe amysse: these deuoute women beeyng taught by the Aungels, doe moue and exhorte men to promptenesse of beleuing.

Therfore because the women kynde shoulde not euermore without any ende continue in slaunder and oblique for death that had issued out of them into men: the moste gladsome tidinges of lyfe restored agayne, doethe therehence proceede, from whence the occasion of death hath first issued. Now the women whiche brought the first newes of the premisses vnto the Apostles, were Marie Magdalene the systur of Lazarus, Joanna the wyfe of Chusa Herodes agent and factour, Mary the mother of James the younger, whiche was also called the systur of Mary the Lordes mother, and many other women whiche in coumpany of these were woont to goe with Jesus where euer he wente. And their woordes semed vnto them feigned thinges.

But for the vnbeleeble matter that they brought newes of, the women beyng estemed to bee beelels sumwhat fraile, founde no suche regarde as to bee credyted emong the Apostles, whom the Lorde for suche consideracion suffred to bee the slacker to beleue, that the allured truethe of hys resurrection myghte by the moe eutdente proufes and tokens bee confyrmed. Therfore what the sayed women reported of soodayne seeyng of the aungels, of the stone in a moomente remoued from the mouth of the sepulchre, semed to the Apostles and disciples to bee some poynte of dotage suche as reigneth in women, because that thys sexe of woman kynde (hauyng the conceipte of their imagination somewhat infected and corrupte through the weakenesse of reason and of good iudgemente in them) doe many times beleue themselfes to see that thei see not, and heare that they heare not. And although they did not beleue it to be a mattier of truethe, that the women reported, yet dyd they earnest affirmyng of it, and standynge therin, thus muche auayle, that Peter arysyng from the place where he sate, ran furth to the monument: and puttyng hys head in, and lokyng afore hym, he syndeth not the body, but the pieces of linnen in whiche the body of Jesus had been wound vp, he seeth lyyng there aside in a place by themselfes. And yet not so neyther dyd he beleue that the Lorde was arisen agayne from death to lyfe: (so dieps forgetfulnesse had there taken hym, of the thynges which Jesus had sayed) but awaye he went from the sepulchre meruaylyng with himselfe what had befallen, and doubtyng whether any body had taken awaye the bodye out of the monument, and castyng many soondry thynges in his minde, by whom, or of what entent and purpose thatsame poynte had been dooen, that the body taken awaye, he sawe the linen pieces leafte behynde, as thynges lapsurely taken of from the body, whiche could not without some businesse haue been plucked of: and for that he sawe thesame linen pieces not cast aboute at auenture here one and there one, but handesomely layed vp in theyr place and ordre, the kercheefe wherwith the head and face of Jesus had been couered, beyng layed by it selfe aparte from the rest. Than arose Peter. And departed wondrynge in himselfe. &c.

¶ And beholde, twoo of them went thatsame daye to a towne called Emaus, whiche was from Jerusalem aboute three score furlonges, and they talked together of all these thinges that had happened. And it chaunced, that while they commoned together, and reasoned, Jesus himselfe drewe nere and wente with them. But their eyes were holden, that they The texte.

they shoulde not knowe hym. And he sayed vnto them: what maner of communications are these that ye haue one to another, as ye walke, and are sad? And the one of them (whose name was Cleophas) aunswered and sayed vnto hym: Arte thou onely a straunger in Hierusalem, and hast not knowen the thynges whiche haue chaunced there in these dayes? He sayed vnto them: what thynges? And they sayed vnto hym: of Iesus of Nazareth whiche was a prophete: mighty in dede and woorde before God, and al the people: and howe the high prestes, and our rulers deliuered hym to be condemned to death: and haue crucified him. But we trusted that it had been he whiche should haue redemed Israel. And as touchyng all these thynges, to daye is euen the thirde daye, that they were done. Yea, and certaine women also of our company made vs astounded, whiche came early vnto the sepulchre, and founde not his bodye: and came sayeng, that they had seen a vision of Angels, whiche sayed that he was aliue. And certayne of them which were with vs, went to the sepulchre, and founde it euen so as the women had sayed, but hym they sawe not.

Two of them went that same daye to a towne called Emaus.

And so it befell, that euen the verye same daye, twoo of his disciples, vnto whom the newes had toforе been reported of the sepulchre of Iesu, how it was found voyde without the body in it, (although there had no credence been geuen to theyr woordes) the sayed two disciples leauyng the citie of Hierusalem wente vnto a towne called Emaus. This Emaus is distaunte from Hierusalem the mountenaunce of thre score furlonges (of whiche eight goe to a myle, so that it was from Hierusalem to Emaus, seuen myles and one halfe myle after that reckonyng.) And in theyr goyng on the waye they talked together of many sondrie matters, as men commonly vse to doe, namely whan any sorowe or pensiuenesse is in theyr hertes. For they were men greatly dismaied and caste in heauinesse with the Lordes death, and were euen nowe in a maner at the verye poynte of desperacion, and had cast awaye all hope. But as for theyr talkyng was altogether about Iesus, and about all the thynges whiche they had seen,

While they commoned together, &c.

and whiche they had heard in these latter dayes aforegoyng. For they hadde bene a great loue towardes hym, as one that was a notable man and full of beneficiall goodnesse. And albeit that same gaye royall hope of restoryng the kyngdom of Israel was out of theyr myndes, almoste cleane forgotten: yet had they a delite with mutuall talking the one with the other, to renewe the memorie of hym euen dead as he was. For theyr myndes beyng altogether vnquiete and troubled, a certayn kynde of slumbre (as ye would saye) had creped vpon them, so that (as it were in a slepe) they beare a loue towardes hym, whom they could not forget. At last as they were druisling and tellyng betwene themselues many thynges of Iesus, and talkyng many matters of him to and fro, the one to the other: behold he was euen personallye presente there with them that they talked of. For Iesus who toforе had promised that he would bee in the myddes betwene them, wheresoeuer he should fynde any two persones talking together of hym, did at that tyme euen after the corporall presence of his body also, shew

the thing whiche in spirite he neuer ceaseth to doe. So that he ioyned himselfe in coumpanye with them as a waikarying manne, and offred hymselfe to kepe them company on the waye, but it was in a likenesse to them vnknowen: not that he had any other body then the verai same whiche he had before his death, but for that (because it pleased Iesus so to haue it,) theyr eye sight had such an impediment, that they could not knowe him, though they sawe hym corporally. Happie is that coumpanye and blysse of Goddes hande, as often as twoo persons haue none other talke, ne make none other serchyng out but of Iesus. Happie are they that euer they were borne, to whome Iesus vouchesaueth to ioyne hymselfe as a mate or a coumpanion. And as the Lorde Iesus hath

a good fauste to bee present with suche as talke of hym: so doeth Satan reioyce to bee present emong them which vse suche communications together emong them, as may corrupt honest behaueour, as for exaumple, of leachetrie, of falsehood, of auengeyng, of pryde, of gaynes, and lucre, of the slaudre of the neighboure. But forbecause these two men dyd so burne in the loue of Jesus, that by reason of humaine frailtie they doubted of his promisses, the Lorde for a litle season bereuyng theyr eyesyght sercheth out what opinion they had of him: not for that any thing was to him vnknowen, but because he would remedie their vnbeliefe, for the better confirming of our feith. He therfore sayeth: what talke is all thisame that ye two haue betweté you, on the waye as ye goe, your countenaunce and moode shewyng all the whyle a sorowe and heauinesse of herte? For euen this thyng also doeth commonly aswage sorowe, yf we may fortune to haue any body into whose lap we may poure out the thyng that grieueth vs. yea and this one propertie forthermore hath mans affection, that yf a thyng be to ons veray high contentacion and delite, he thynketh the same to be vnknowen to no mā, and that euery body hath a speciall care and regarde therof. Muche after the rate of this affection doeth the one of þ disciples aunswer, whose name was Cleophas: It is (sayeth he) a thyng veray well knowen to all mē as many as enhabite or liue at Hierusalē: and seeing that thou comest out of that citie as well as we, how canst be possible, that thou alone (as it were sum newcome straunger,) shouldest be ignorannt of these thynges which haue been doen there now in these last dayes, and which no man alyue but he knoweth them? Than Jesus, as one couetyng to learne, where in veray dede he was come to teache, aunswered: What thynges are these ye speake of? They playnly mening good feith, vp a declare at large vnto Jesus the summe of all the whole matter, as to a straunger, and one that was ignorannte of all that had been doen: frankely makyng open confession, how we for they wer from hauyng as yet any opinion of Jesus, worthy for his worthinesse: and how they had clene cast away all hope in a maner, of his arisyng again from death to life. We were talking (say they) & telling the story of one Jesus of Nazareth which was an excellent man, and a Prophete, mightie both in woorde and dede, not onely afore God, to whom he was veray dere beloued, but also emōg all the people vniuersall, with whom he had by his miracles and doctrine, and benefites, purchaced and gotten most high autozitie. The high prestes and the rewlers of our people pursued him to death, before the lieutenaunt, & in conclusion nailed him on the crosse. Now we had conceyued a certayne marueylous hope of hym, that he should haue redemed the people of Israel, as men beyng vtterly in beliefe that he had been the Messias which was long agon promised by the Prophetes. But his death which was bothe vndoubtedly true, & also full of open worldely shame, hath taken away this hope from vs. Ye & there had no smal hope been put in our heades, that it would so come to passe, that he would after the dayes haue returned again to life: but whereas he was condemned, crucified, and buried, this veray present daye, is the thirde daye sence all these thinges for tuned to be doen, and yet doe not we see any whitte the more of assured hope, sauyng that certayn wemē of the fraternitie of his disciples, haue by the reporting of certayn straunge newes, suche as neuer was heard of, made vs yea more astouned then we were afore.

What maner of communications be these þ ye haue one to an other, &c.

Art thou only a straunger in Jerusalem, &c.

But we trusted that it had been he which should haue redemed Israel.

Yea and certayne wemen also of our cõpany made vs asto-nied. &c.

For where these same wemen went furth before sunrisyng to the Sepulchre, they say playnly they founde not the body there, and affirme moreouer that certayne Angels appered vnto them, & sayed that he is aliue. And whā no man gaue credite to theyr reporte, certayne of our company went also to the graue to proue whether the fond womens tale had any trueth in it. And as concerning the graue selfe they found the matter to goe euen so as the wemen had made relation. For they found it open and emptie: the pieces of lynnen also, and the other thynges which the corpse had cast of, they found within the graue layed vp together in one of the corners. But as for hymselfe they found hym not any where at all.

The texte.

And he sayed vnto them: o fooles and slowe of herte to beleue all that the Prophetes haue spoken. Ought not Christe to haue suffred these thynges, & to entre into his glorie? And he began at Moses, and all the Prophetes, and expounded vnto them in all scriptures which were wrytten of him. And they drewe nigh vnto the toune, whyther they wente vnto. And he made as though he would haue gon further. And they constrayned him saynge: abyde with vs, for it draweth towardes nyght, and the daye is farre passed. And he went in to tary with them.

O fooles and slowe of herte to beleue all that the Prophetes haue spoken.

When these two disciples had by this tale tellyng, simply declared howe greatly they wauered in theyr myndes, & howe lytle hope they were in of the Lordes promises: than Jesus in dede doeth not yet suffre hymselfe to bee knowen, but like some one of Jesus disciples better enfourmed & enstructed in the matter, chydeth their dulnesse of capacitie, & rebuketh their vnbeliefe. O ye hard witted felowes (sayeth he) vnapte to bee taught to the vnderstanding of scriptures, and of an hard herte & slowe to beleue so many holy sayinges of the Prophetes, which they haue wrytten of Christ. Why doe these thynges nowe appere straunge vnto you, when they bee wrought and doen already, seeyng that the prophecies of the Prophetes dyd so many hundred yeres past tell afore hande, that they should afterwarde bee doen? why doe ye not conferre and compare theyr foretellynges with the thinges that haue nowe been wrought and executed? doe not the scriptures, which haue by the inspiracio of God been written, teache howe that it so pleased the prouidēce of God, that Christ should suffre these thynges whiche he hath suffred, and should after such sorte by an vncouthe conueighaūce restore lyfe by meane of death, & should by meane of the crosse recouer his kyngdom, & thrugh open shame of the worlde should enter into his glorye? This world hath it glory, but it is neither true glory in dede, nor yet perpetual to endure for euer. And suche persons as acquire and get the same, they get it by vaine petigrewes, tytles, rychesse, bounteous geuyng, stately porte, ruffleyng in the worlde, yea and many tymes they get it from men whether they will or no by ertorte power. But Christ shall by ferre vnlyke waies and meanes recouer & wynne vnto him emong men, his owne glory that he had before the creacion of the worlde: because he will shewe vnto all mortall men, by what pathway they ought stoutely to breake a passage vnto true glory that shall neuer dye.

And he began at Moses.

Where Moses hath of this matter taught so many lessons, where the Prophetes haue foretold so many thinges, are ye yet stil of so grosse a minde and vnderstanding, that ye looke for your Messias to be some captaiñ which shall vsurpe vnto himselfe the kingdom of the worlde, and entre the possessiō therof with charyottes, horses, elephauntes, wilde asses, armed hostes of men, with gunnes, crossebowes, ingiens, fyer, swearde, and bloud? Doe ye not yet fele the scripture to be spirituall, and the power of Messias not to consiste in garrisons or fortresses, by meanes of whiche the princes of this worlde doe either get into theyr handes, or els enlarge their temporall kyngdomes, but contrariwyse to consiste in vertue and power celestiall?

Why doe ye not rather serche and try out the scriptures, which haue already forshewed many thynges of Christe, and conferre the same with those thynges which Christe forshewed of hymselfe vnto his disciples, and the which haue come to effect accordyng as he had forshewed them? By that meanes it shall come to passe, that neither any thyng of all these matters which haue of late befallen, shall seme vncouthe or straunge: and of the thinges, which he promised should afterwarde come, there shall be no matter that ye will conceyue mystrust of. After that the Lorde had with this lytle fitte of chidyng made them more earnest to geue better hede & eare to the matter, he declared vnto them all the scriptures, which openly forshewed that the thing should so come to passe in Christe, which had nowe of late fortuned: shewyng that there did so many prophecies, figures, & effectes of thinges in facte cumyng to passe, so iustely accorde in tume together, that it must nedes bee on the one syde a token of a certaine exceding great dulnesse, not to espie and marke the same, and on the other syde of notable mystrustfulnesse not to believe it.

And all his processe he begonne out of Moses and out of the Prophetes: and after that, gatherynge out of euery booke of holy scripture some one poynte or other, which might both enforce the credite of the thinges, that had to fore already happened, and also purchace credite afore hand to the thinges which were afterward to come. And all these places of scripture did he in such sorte conferre one with an other, that the matter appered clere and euident. Happy were they that euer they were borne, who were thought worthy to heare that heauenly teacher with liuely voice expounyng the same thinges at large, which he had afore caused to be writte by the Prophetes hauyng the instinct of his owne holy spirite. I (because I am not sufficient to recite all) will make relation but of a certaine noumbre of places gathered out of that same blissed talkyng of Christe with the sayed two disciples.

And entreated in all the scriptures whiche were witnesses of hym.

Whiche places would God that the Iewes would at leastewyse euen now at last geue eare vnto: and would leaue looking for any other Messias, and would with earnest zele and affeccion embrace this man Iesus who is geuen to the worlde an onely saueour and redemer: whereby they myght be saued, and myght be made free, yf not from the empire of Cesar, yet at leastewyse (which is a more blissefull thyng) from the tyrannie of the deuill: & that they myght with theyr captaine Christe atteyne the kyngdome, not of this worlde whiche is fraile and transitorie, but of heauen, whiche knoweth none ende. As for Moses (saied he) the Iewes doe in maner no lesse then worshipp as a certain God, because he cõducted and brought the people of Israel out of Egypte, and deliuered vnto them in deserte a lawe through the obseruing and kepyng wherof they should atteyne deliueraunce & safegard, and should come to a lande flowing w honey & mylke. But this same Moses, what other thing was he, but a certain shadowe of Christe to come? For he was not the sonne of God, but the seruaunt: nor he did not in veray true dede deliuer the people, seeyng that they were afterward in bondage vnder the king of Babilon: nor he was not vtterly without fynne: no nor neuer entred in his owne persone into the lande, vnto the whiche he was a guide and captayne to the people. And in case he had entred, it had ben no great matter, seeyng ꝑ there be idolatres enhabiting in the selfe same lande euen at this present daye. All these thynges beeyng vnderstanded after the flesche, doe conteyne no great matter in them.

But Christe is that same true and right Moses, who by his owne propre power doth deliuer, not the Hebrewes onely, but also all the vniuersall nacions of the worlde, as many as doe put theyr affiaunce in him: all suche doeth he deliuer from the vengeaunce and stroke of God: he deliuereth them from the tyranny of the deuill: he deliuereth them from the derkenesse of errours: he deliuereth them from the abhominable bondage of fynnes: and whan he hath first clensed them with his owne bloud, he bryngeth them forth into the fredome of the spirite, beyng to them a perpetuall guyde and companion also, vntill he bryng them through and past all the daūgiers of this presente lyfe, vnto that same heauenly lande aboue, plenteously flowyng and rennyng ouer with all kindes of blisse and felicitie. He is the true Moses, who made a lawe ghostely and euangelicall: whiche lawe should not teache a corporall rightcousnesse through ceremonies & sacrifices of beastes, but should geue true and perfeite rightcousnesse through feith and charitie. And that suche an one should spring vp, Moses himselfe foresayed. For thus speaketh he in the Deuteronomie. The Lorde thy God shall reise vp vnto thee a Prophete of Dedt. xviii. c. thyne owne nacion, and of thine owne brethren, as he hath doen me: him shalt thou heare. And forthwith euen in the same Deuteronomie, the Lord confirmeth thy promisse of Moses, saying.

Deut. xviii. d. I shall reise vp vnto them a Prophete out of the myddes of their brethre, lyke vnto thee, and I shall put my woordes in his mouth, and he shall speake vnto them all the woordes that I shall cōmaunde & enioyne him to speake. Ye haue here the prophecie of Moses: now compare the thing with the prophecie. There sprang vp none after Moses, which hath by any meanes eaguallymatched him in authoritie, sauing only Iesus Christ, who hath in suche wise resembled Moses, that he euery waye ferre passed Moses.

He was the maker of a newe testament, but the same testamente for euer to endure. And this testamente hath he confecrated, not with the bloud of a calfe, but with his owne bloud. He was ꝑ maker of a newe lawe, but it was such a lawe, as should bryng present helth. Moses was but the ministre and seruaunt of God: but this Christ was his sonne, and came downe from heauen, and taught those thynges whiche he sawe aboue with his father, as one hauing within himselfe a perpetuall vnceassaunte power to doe whatsoeuer his wyll is. Moses vpon the mountayne talked with God in a cloude: Christ hath proceded and come forth from the brightenesse of his father. Moses taught and deliuered the shadowes of thynges: Christ taught and gaue the trueth. Moses did in such sort make intercession for the sinnes of the people, that hymselfe hathnede of an other mediatour for his owne offences: Christ beyng clere from all fynne, pourged and clensed the sinnes of al ages & times aswell past as to come. Moses fasted fowertie daies: Christ dyd the same, so that one might at leaste wyse by that token know him to be the seconde Moses.

ses. Moses brought the lawe firste downe from the mountayne: Christe on the mountayne taught the perfeccion ynge of the lawe, whan he pronounced those straunge beatitudes neuer afore heard of. He taught often tymes also in the temple, whiche is sette in the mounte Sion, whiche thing was doen according to the prophecie of Esai, that sayeth: mat. v. and Luke.vi.

The lawe shall come out of Sion, & the woorde of the Lorde from Hierusalem. But at what tyme the lawe of Moses was made and geuen, all thynges wer wholly replete with terrours, for to snibbe & hamper the hardenesse of herte that reigned in the people: Christe came milde & amiable rather then terrible, conuincing them with reason, prouokyng them with benefites, alluryng them with meknesse, offreyng himselfe to all menne, and readie for euery manne to geue them health, and ouercummyng them with patiente sufferaunce. And suche maner an one, had the holy sayinges of the Prophetes afore promised that he should be. For ye haue read what Esai hath wrytten. Esai.ii. a

I haue geuen hym my spirite, that he may shewe foorth iudgemente and equitie emong the Gentiles. He shall not be an out cryer, nor lifte vppe hys voice, his voice shall not be heard in the stretes. And a bruised rede shal he not breake, & the smokyng flaxe shall he not quenche: but faithfully and truly shal he geue iudgement, not be pensife nor carefull, that he may restore righteousnesse vnto the earth, and the Gentiles also shall kepe his lawes. Againe, the same Esai in a certain other place maketh Messias speakyng in this maner: Esai.xlii.

The spirite of the Lord God is vpon me, for the Lord hath enoynted me, and hath sent me to preache good tydynges vnto the poore: that I myght bynde vp the wounded hertes: that I might preache deliueraunce vnto the captiue, and open the prison to them that are bounde: that I myght declare the acceptable yere of the Lorde, and the daye of vengeaunce of our God: that I myght coumforte all them that are in heauinesse: that I myght geue strength of herte vnto them that mourne in Sion: that I myght geue, I say, beautie in the stede of ashes, foyfull oynctement for syghyng, pleasaunt rayment for an heauy mynde: ye haue heard what maner one the prophecie promised that he shoulde be, nowe reken in your myndes whether he came not euen suche an one as he was promised. What sere, what age, what state high or lowe, did he remoue or putte of from his beneficiall goodnesse not children, not wemen, not Publicanes, not synners, not harlottes. Esai.lxi.

What kinde of disease did he cry fie vpon or turne his face from: not lepres, not men possessed with deuils, not persones possessed with bloudie fixes, not folkes diseased with the palsie. What coulde bee more meke or ientyll then this saying whiche ye haue heard spoken of his owne mouth? Come vnto me all ye that laboure and are loden, and I shall refreshe you: for my yoke is swete and my burden is light: learne ye of me, that I am meke and lowe in herte, and ye shall fynde reaste vnto your soules. What mother hath euer so loued, so suffred, and so cherished hir childe as he did his disciples? Beside all this, the lawe of Moses neyther was geuen to all peoples, nor to al ages: Christes lawe like as it is geuē vnto al nacions, so shal it in no age ne time be chaūged vntill thende of the worlde. And cōsidre ye in this behalfe also howe all poyntes doe iustely agree one with an other. in theyr hertes will I wryte the same. And forthwith teacheth he that the shadowes also of the lawe shall cease as soone as the lyght of the trueth is shewed forth.

And from thenceforth shall no man teache his neighbour, nor his brother, saying: Knowe thou the Lorde. For all people shall knowe me from the leaste Daniell the Prophete doeth wryte?

That preuaricacion (sayeth he) may be at the vttermoste, and that synne Daniel. ix. c may haue an ende, and iniquitie may be wyped cleane awaye, and euerlasting righteousnesse may be brought in, and that the vision and the prophecie may be fulfilled, and the holy of holyes may be enoynted. Whan ye heare that the prophecies are consummate and brought to theyr perfeite effect: verayly ye doe nowe vnderstande, that suche thynges as are alreadie past and doen, ought not any longer to be looked for, as if they were still to come: and whē ye heare eternall righteousnesse, ye vnderstande that the righteousnesse of the lawe, whiche was to endure but for a whyle, is nowe abolished.

Whan ye heare that Messias is to be enoynted, who is the holy of all ho-lyes, and he alone that maketh all thynges holy, forsoth ye vnderstand, that forporalle enoynting must ceasse, & the priesthood of the lawe togethes with the oblacions and sacrifices of the same to be abrogated. For Jesus was neuer enoynted with that same holy oyntement, which the lawe did veray scrupulously teache for to make, threatenyng death vnto those persones, whosoeuer had counterfeited or practised the lyke confectiō, or had applied the same vnto any seculer vses. For the enoynting of the body maketh nothyng at all to the effecte or purpose of the priestes, but that it was a signe of the spiritu-

Luke. xix. f Daniel, did he not manifestly fozeshewe the destruction & throwyng downe of the citie of Hierusalem together with the Temple therof? And dyd not Christe prophecie the same vnto his disciples, with weypng eyes, lamenting and bewailyng the wofull case and extremitie of the same citie & people? Foz it grieued God already beeyng as he is spirituall, and made him wery to enhabite a temple made and built vp with the handes of man: He was nothyng delited with the offreynges of beastes slain in sacrifice: He founde a misse and a lacke of an other citie, on whiche that same name Hierusalem myght truely light: he missed and wanted an other temple mete foz hym to dwell in, builded of himselfe, consecrated and hallowed with his owne spirite: other sacrifices & oblacions, an other nacion circumcised in herte, on whom the name of Israel might truly agree. Nowe is there nothing of perpetual cõtinuance, that may be seen with bodily eyes: thynges that are not seen are euerlasting, and therfoze mete & semely foz God, who is eternitie selfe neuer to haue end. But yet these shadowes of thinges visible were geuē foz a time to the grosse and vntrained people, to the ende they might one daye in pzocesse of tyme by these fyrste introduccions, growe and pzocede foz warde to thynges of the minde. Sur Jesus whose stomake stode muche against al wel the citie, as also the temple, and the nacion, and the sacrifices of the olde lawe, doeth by the Pzophetes declare euidently enough what maner thynges he wished from thenceforth to haue in stede of these others nowe rehersed. Haue ye not read what Esai wrote of the heauenly Hierusalem?

Esai. i. g Thou shalt (sayth he) from henceforth be called the citie of the righteous man, the feithfull citie. Sion shall be redemed in iudgemente, and they shall bryng hir home again, in righteousnesse. Ye heare a new buildyng of the citie, whiche is the churche oz congregacion built vp of liuyng stones, the cozner stone wherof, and the foundacion wherof is veray Christe himselfe.

And this is the stone whom the prophecie of ỹ misticall Psalme did signifie, where it sayeth: The stone whiche the builders refused and cast a lyde, the psal. cxviii. c mat. xxi. a & mar. xii. a & Luke. xx. c same is made to be the head stone of the cozner. And ye haue heard Christ himselfe obiecting the testimonie of this scripture vnto the Pharisens, who attempted and did the best they could to cast aside the stone which God had chosē. Yea and of thissame stone an other Pzophete also maketh mencion: I shall lay in the foundacion of Sion a stone, approued and tryed, a cozner stone, a stone of pzice founded in the foundacion. And

Esai. xxviii. d. and 1. Pet. ii. b did not the tune of Christes woozdes whē he liued, agree vỹ the woozdes of thys prophecie, at what tyme he propouned a parable of an house builded vpō a founde rocke of stone, which house no violent blaste oz rage of wyndes

Salomō builded a tẽple at Hierusalē, according to the appoyntement and ordeinaunce of Moses. But lyke as he beeyng a peacefull kyng did beare the image and figure of Messias, who restozed a perpetuall peace and gtonemente for euer betwene God and man: so the sayed Temple being built by with mannes labour, conteined the figure of the Temple, wherof Chriſte himſelfe was the builder, & chiefe workeman, as the Lord many yeres agon ſpake by his Prophete Nathan vnto Dauid, as ye reade in the ſecound boke of the kinges: Thou ſhalt not be he, that ſhalt builde me an houſe to dwell in, but I ſhall reiſe thy ſede after the, whiche ſhall come forth of thy wombe, he ſhall builde vp an houſe to my name, and I ſhall eſtablish his throne euen for euer and euer. And berayly that the woordes whiche were ſpoken by the sayed Prophete, doe not agree to be ſpoken of Salomon: euen this poynte (though there were nothyng els) doeth plainly proue and conuince, because in Salomons throne euen now at this preſent daie there ſit ſtraunge borne aliens, and all the whole people of the Iewes ſhall shortely be diſperſed and ſcattred abrode into all nacions of the worlde. ii. kynges. vii. b.

The ſaied houſe which Salomon built in Hierusalem, was a buiſſe thyng, with ſlaughter of beaſtes, with fumigacions, with weschynges, and berey troubleous with perfumes. But this houſe whiche Chriſte hath builded, is made acceptable through faith inuiſible, & this houſe knoweth no ende. For the Prophete in the ſame place afore alleged ſpeaketh in this maner: And faithfull ſhall thy houſe be, and thy kyngdome euen for euer, before my face, and thy throne or ſeate ſhalbe firmely eſtablished for euer.

Theſe promiſſes are the baineſt of the worlde, and the moſte full of lyes, yf they be taken (accordyng as the lettre remeth) to concerne Salomon, or Dauid eyther. For Dauid, he deadly foiled his kyngdome with aduoutrie coupled with murdre: and Salomon was through the carnall loue of weomen plucked awaye from God, and drawen euen vnto idolatrie. ii. kyng. vii. c.

Conſider ye nowe, in what ſorte the woordes of Nathan doe agree with the woordes of Eſai: Thou ſhalt (ſaieth Eſai) be called ỹ citie of the ryghteous man, and the faithfull citie. And of all mē that euer were, there hath been none beſides only Chriſte alone, who myght be called purely righteous, not only free from all corruption or infection of ſynne, but alſo ſuche an one, that by and through him, all men are iuſtified and made righteous. And what doeth Chriſte require of his ſeruauntes, but fayth. Eſai. i. a

And for the ſame conſideracion did he call his churche, which cānot ſtand of the workes of the lawe, the faithfull citie, wholly altogether ſtaighyng and truſting on him alone. When ye heare that this citie ſhalbe redemed in iudgement, ye ſee the confidence and truſting on the ceremonies of the lawe to bee taken awaie. For God iudgeth not man of his workes, but of his fayth, not of meate or drinke, not of the garment, or of ſolitarie quiete liuing, but of the godlyneſſe of mynde. And the iudgement is this: that ſuche perſones as ſhal beleue in Chriſte, ſhall through the death of the ſame Chriſte, who ſuffred peines and tormentes for all creatures, be redemed from theyr ſynnes, and ſhalbe iuſtified through his righteouſneſſe, yf they folowe & goe the ſteppes of their head and captaine. Ye heare nowe and knowe the ſpirituall citie and triple, which cānot be ſhewed ne pointed vnto with mens fyngers, as neither the kyng and workemanſelfe can be pointed vnto, according to the leſſon here folowing which himſelfe taught, whā he was heare liuing: whan they ſhall ſaye: Beholde here is Chriſte, beholde yonder he is: beleue ye them not. Eſai. xxix. a This people honoureth me with their lippes, but their herte is ferre from me. And as foꝛ a newe people he promiſeth vnto hymſelfe by the Prophete Oſeas, a people not makyng bauntes and braggues of theyr woꝛkes, but acknowlageyng the mercy of God. And it ſhall be in a place, where it ſhall be ſaied vnto thē: Ye are none of my people: it ſhalbe ſaied vnto thē, the children of the liuing God: And again: And I ſhall haue mercy on ỹ ſame people, whiche was deſtitute of mercy: ſignifying the people of the Gentiles, who whereas it hath hitherto ſerued idolles ſhal ſhoꝛtly receiue the doctrine of ỹ not of this folde, euen them also must I nedes bryng home. For south the priesthood and the kyngdome restored and made newe again, dooeth make all thinges newe. And as for a newe priest the holy writte of the Prophetes had promised aforehande. For the mistically psalme renneth in manner and forme folowyng: The Lorde hath swore and it shall not forthynke hym: thou art a priest for euermore after the ordre of Melchisedec. Melchisedec beeyng bothe a priest and a kyng, the priest of the highest god (for he was not instituted by the lawe,) and the kyng of Salem, (that is to saye, the kyng of peace) signified Christe, who neither hath had begynning, ne neuer shal haue endyng. Thilkame Christ, not through the bloud of calfes or of goates, but through his owne bloude entreth into the high holy place, to make intercessiō for the synnes of all the whole worlde. And this sacrifice he executed in the altare of the crosse offreyng himselfe a moste pure sacrifice vnto God the father. Suche a priest certes had god long agon promised vnto Helias whan he was readie to dye: I shall (sayeth he) reise vp vnto my selfe a feithfull priest, who shall doe after myne owne herte, and after myne owne mynde, and I shall builde vp vnto him a feithfull house, and he shall walke before myne enoynted people al dayes for euer. And verily this is euen the verai same thing whiche Christ himselfe hath promised vnto you: I am with you euen vntyll the consummacion of the worlde. Nowe in stede of the bloudie slaughter of beastes whiche the priestes of Moses lawe did vse, what kynde of sacrifice shall succede, the prophete hath not leaft vnspoken. For the psalmiste by inspiracion sayeth thus: Sacrifice thou vnto God, the sacrifice of laude, and paie thy vowes vnto the highest: call on me in the daye of tribulacion, and I will deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. And agayne in thesame place. Whoso offreeth me thankes and prayse, honoureth me, and to hym that ordreeth his conuersacion right, wyll I shewe the saluacion of God. And in another place: Sacrifice ye the sacrifice of righteousnelle, and truste ye in the Lorde. Ye haue here nowe heard a threfold manier of sacrifice, that is to wete, the sacrifice of prayers or vowes, (whereof Christe hath thus taughte you: Whatsoeuer ye shall aske my father in my name, he wyll geue it vnto you:) the sacrifice of laude and prayse, (whiche it is euidente enoughe that he solemnely executed and accomplished, many tymes rendryng thankes vnto his father:) and the sacrifice of righteousnesse, whiche geueth and perfourmeth the strength and power of lyfe to the innocente, and the scruiceable attendaunce of charitie towardes the nedie. And of this righteousnesse dyd he in prayre persone shewe vnto you a perfecte exaumple, spendyng his own soule and lyfe for his shepe, beeyng founde onely and alone emong men, in whome no fraude ne guyle was. He taught this thing also out of ỹ prophetes wordes, saying thus: Goe ye, and learne what these woordes of the Prophete dooe meane. Mercye wyll I haue, and not sacrifice: In the spirituall temple than, vnder the moste highest prieste Christe, there shall not nowe bee geuen distribution of rawe meate out of the fleashe of calfes, of goates, or of shepe: but of the precious bodye and bloud of Jesus Christe, whiche he hath once for all offred, to thende that it maye al tymes bee spiritually taken of his enoynted, renewyng vnto themselues after a certaine manier, the death of their head & king by that thankefull commemoracion. For south this is the hoste, whiche shall shortely be offred all the worlde ouer by the priestes, whom God hath enoynted: of whiche

Malach. i.c. sacrifice Malachias spoke afore in the spirite of Prophecie: I haue no wyll in you (saieth the Lorde of hostes,) and gyfte wyll I none take of your hande. For from the ariſyng of the sunne, vnto the goyng downe, my name is greate in all nacions, and in euery place there is sacrificed and offreed vnto me a clene oblacion. And this was it, whiche was foretolde to Ely the prieste also, that it should come to passe, that whosoeuer should come into the newe temple, should saye: Leat me goe, I beseche thee, to one syde of the priesthode, that I mate eate a morsell. This is thesame sacrifice whiche Christe in Estur supper gaue vnto his disciples, puttyng foorth breade vnto them, whiche he sayed to be his body, and geuyng them the cuppe, whiche he sayed to bee the cuppe of his bloude, by whiche his bloud he consecrated vnto them a newe testamente, that is to saye, a bande and leage of frendeshyp neuer to dye ne decaye. All these thynges ye twoo haue not sene on your owne parties, yet at leaſtewyse ye mighte haue hearde it of his twelue speciall Apostles, by meane of whom he hath wylled all that hath been wrought and doone, to come to the knowlage of all creatures.

mat. xxvi.c and marke xiiii.c, and Luke xxii. b, and 1. Corinth. xi.c, Lyke as Christe cummyng from heauen, hath turned all carnall thynges into ghostly, the citie, the temple, the priesthode, the sacrifices: so woulde he also his kyngdome to bee newe. And for thesame cause did he muche vse to call it the kyngdome of heauen, because ye should not looke for any suche manier thyng as ye see many in the kyngdome of the worlde. For although he were the Lorde of all, yea euen before he came downe into the yearth: yet was there a ghostlye kyngdome, whiche because he would recouer vnto his father, he became obedient to thesame, vnto the death of the crosse. For by that meanes hath he ouercomed and vanquished his aduersarie: that waie hath he deliuered his people and made them free: by that meanes hath he recouered, enlarged, and establisshed his kyngdome vnto his father. And in dede the Prophete promised Messias by the title of a kyng and a captaine: but he assigneth a double cummyng of hym: the former (whiche your selues haue seen) humble and peaceable. For he came to heale, and not to strieke in the waye of vengeaunce. But he shall come in the ende of the worlde with maiestie, garded and encompaced round about with many thousandes of Aungels to iudge the quicke and deade.

And now in this tyme, because he hath come lowe and mylde, many haue taken slaunder of conscience, insomuche that euen those same twelue also, (whome he had out of all the coumpanie specially chosen out as moste feithfull and trustie vnto hym,) beeyng strieken in a dede, haue fled cuttie man his waye for feare, yea and one hath reneagued hym too, saying that he neuer knewe hym. But if ye woulde diligentlye compare the writing of the Prophetes with the thynges whiche ye haue seen wrought and doen, there should be no cause why ye should bee offended or slaundred: but there is cause why ye should acknowlage hym, who came suche an one as he was promised to come. Consider ye what Zacharie sayeth: Beholde, thy kyng shall come vnto the righteous, and a sauioure, beeyng hymselfe in fourme of a poore man, mountyng vpon an asse, and vpon a colte the foale of a shee asse. He that so came, came not to make battaile, but to destrute the battayles of the worlde whiche are made and kepte vnder Satans banners. For the Prophete byrngeth in vpanby after: And I shall scattre soonde the bowes of battayle shall be destruied, and he shall speake peace to the nacions and his power shall bee from sea to sea.

Zacha. ix. b,

Ye saw

ye sawe him entre the citie of Hierusalem with this pompe, partly to mocke the kyngdomes of this worlde, and partly because he would putte you in good remembraunce of the prophecie; And now marke ye well this poynte, whether Esai did promise hym of any other sorte. For euery violent takyng of booties wt forceable ruffleyng, and garment embrewed with bloud, shall be for burnyng, & the meate of fyer. For a lytle one is borne to vs, & a sonne is geuen to vs, & princely power is set vpon his shoulder, and his name shall be called the meruaylous, a Counsaillour, the God of strength, the father of the worlde to come, the Prince of peace: his empier shalbe multiplied, & there shalbe no ende of peace: he shall sitte vpon the seate of Dauid, and vpon his kingdome that he may conserue the same, and make it strong in iudgement and righteousnesse. When ye heare a kyngdome and princely power set vpon his shoulder: doe ye not manifestly heare the kyngdom of the crosse, which crosse Christ did beare to banquithe the powers of the aier? when ye heare, þ prince of peace, forsoth, ye vnderstandeu kyng allurynge with benefites and not cõpelling with violence ne with feare; when ye heare þ father of the worlde to come, ye see euen much vnlyke to the princes of this worlde. Neither doeth he describe hym a man of any other sorte, where he speaketh of hym in a certaine other place. And he shal strike with the rodde of his mouth, and with the spi- Esai. xi. c rite of his lippes shall he sleagh the wicked: & righteousnesse, shalbe þ girdle of his loignes, & feith the belt of his reines. The woulfe shal dwell with the lambe, the leoparde shall lie downe hard by wt the goate, & all the reste that foloweth much dessonaunt and contrarious from the armour and battayles of worldely princes. Nowe herken ye, what himselfe saieth of himselfe in the mysticall psalme of Dauid. As for I, am constituted of him a kyng vpõ Sion his holy hill, preachyng the precepte of him: did he not in these woordes ma- nifestely expresse the kyngdome of the woorde euangelicall? Certes this is þ sworde, whereof an other psalme maketh mencion. See thou girt with thy sworde vpon thy thigh, o thou moste mightiest: with thy beautie & fairnesse entẽde thou, prosperously procede & reigne thou, for thy veritie, & mekenesse, and righteousnesse. And who hath heard that a king hath in the beautie of his body prosperously gon forward, or els to haue gotten himselfe a kingdome with mekenesse? But this was the grace of the woorde of God, by which ye haue seen Jesus allure and draw vnto him great multitudes of people: this was the truely against which þ Pharisees did so many times in vaine attẽpt to wraste and striue. This maner a sworde it was, whiche he at the tyme whan he should die, aduertised his Apostles to gette them, of whiche he had afore also spoken, alleging that he was not come into þ yearth to send peace, but the sworde. Suche lyke ones also are the arrowes of the mighty beyng sharp, with which he gozeth the inordinate lustes & desires of men, with the which he killeth the couetous mã, and reiseth the beneficiall bounteous man, with the which he sleagheth the idolatre, & reiseth vp the professour of euã- gelicall godlinesse, with which he killeth the fierce man, and the man of vn- gentle mynde, and reiseth vp the meke and merciful, with which he ouerthroweth the proude man, & setteth vp the humble. Will ye vnderstand the kyngdome, what sorte and nature it is of? See ye what maner ministers and enlargers of his dominion and iurisdiccio he chose out for the nonce: poore felowes, mẽ of lowe degree, mẽ of no learnyng ne knowlage, but euen of the bare mother witte, wytte, and toungue, ne with any treasour, ne weapon, nor victayles, ne with any strength or maintenaunce of this worlde, furnished or armed against the capcious malice of the Pharisens, against the power of princes, against the pryde of the Philosophiers, that is to say, of ỹ great scholemē. And by these captaines shall he ourwarre and subdue all the vniuersall kyngdomes of the worlde, with none other cōplete harnesse, then with the helmet of saluacion, which is the right vnderstanding of holy scripture: with the buckler of feith, by vertue wherof (God beyng their protectour) they shalbe in perfeite safegard against al assaultes of the wicked people: with the Jacke or habercon made of the righteousnesse of al the vertues euāgelicall: with the belt of chastitie, & with shoes of the ghospels making, which is an herte pure from all yearthly affections: but moste specially above al thinges, with the sweorde of the spirite, which is the woorde of God. So was it thought good vnto God, that by meane of his semes weakenesse he would shewe his power: by preaching which should be accoūpted worldly folicheues, he would declare his wisedom: & through the worldly shame of the crosse, he would renoume his glory. In these thinges consisteth the kingdome euāgelicall, in the meane whyle vntill the maiestie of Christ shall in the ende of the world shewe forth it selfe, his low degree laied away: & the blissefull state of the godly sort shal also shewe it selfe not stained or defoiled with any afflictions. And yet this outward bassenesse conteineth a ghostly strength of the spirite both effectuall & apt to cast downe al buildinges, that lift vp themselfes to stand against the glory of God. Haue ye euer seen any thing more gentill or patient then Christ was? haue ye seen any thing more low or basse in worldly acceptation, any thing more poore, more meke, more felowlike with the people, & more ferther remoued from all lykenesse of a kyngdome? And yet what thyng couldbe there be more regall or kinglike, then with a woorde to cast out wicked spirites, with a woorde speaking to caulme the wyndes & the sourges of ỹ seas, with touching to heale folkes that were infecte with lepry, & with mere bidding to put away al kindes of diseases? How many times escaped he harmelesse through the thickest of the Jewes working death vnto him? He suffred himselfe to be taken: but at the voice of him the armed soldiers fell down flat on the ground. He dyed on the crosse, but what thing could be of more power then this death, which made all the elementes of the worlde to shake, whiche caused the sunne to lese his light, and to be full of derkenesse, which cure stones in soondre, which opened graues, which reysed the dead bodyes out of theſame? There could be nothing more lowe or basse to the worldeward thē was his natiuitie: but yet euen in his natiuitie also there did streight way at the first houre appere tokens more thē one of his high maiestie, which he than did & would not be acknowē of. He is borne of a tendre young virgin, but it is by the operatiō of Gods holy spirite. He was laied downe in an oremanger: but the Jungels syng glory to God in the highest. He lieth crying being an infaunte in the cradle place, but Herode being a kyng trembleth for feare, and the Magians wurship him on their knees. These thynges being as yet knowen not to verey many, shall in time to come be preached throughout all the vniuersall worlde. And with suche lyke sure fenses shall he appoynte and furnishe his Apostles also. That if ye shal here after reade the scriptures and marke them well, & shall conferre them with the thynges which ye haue seen

and heard: ye cannot doubt but that he is the same Christ, which was promised, the priest, the king, and the saluceur of all the worlde, after whom there is none other to be looked for. Reken, I pray you, and consider in your myndes all his whole age, which ye haue partely with your owne eyes seen, and partely ye might haue knowen of his kynsfolkes and familiars: and ye shall not fynde any one poynte, that hath not been bothe signified and marked out by figures, & also foretolde by the Prophetes. He was promised out of the stocke of David, and out of the tribe of Juda, and out of the toune of Bethleē. As touching the place where he should be borne, se ye whether Micheas did derkely prophecie, or els plainly. And thou Bethleem Effrata, a litle one thou art in the thousandes of Juda. Out of the shall one come forthe whiche shall be vnto me a rewler in Israel: and his cummyng forth is without beginning from the dates of eternitie. And that this should so come to passe, the Scribes & the Pharisees understode before they were doen, who whan he rode demaunded the question of them, made aunswere at once, that Messias should be borne in the citie of Bethleem. And euidente it is, that Jesus was borne in this citie through the occasion of the furneigh and tare which Cesar caused to be made. The cause & matter selfe was through Herodes cruelte made knowen to the worlde. And once ye knowe, that he was cōmonly reputed not for a Bethleemite, but for a Nazarēā and a man of Galile, because he was brought vp in Nazareth vntyll the tyme of full mannes state, and lyued there a good nombre of yeres with his fosterfather Joseph, & his mother Mary: in so muche that the poisee of his crosse had the intitulacion of Jesus the Nazarean. Neither was this poynte vnspoken of by the Prophetes neither, who no we and than note hym and call hym by the name of holy, and of the holy of holyes, because he was singularly consecrated to the Lorde, not only after the lawe, whiche indifferently appertcined to the firste borne of mā kere (according wherunto Jesus also was brought by his parētes vnto the temple, and there cōsecrated vnto the Lord: but also aboue all mortal creatures by a certain speciall prerogatiue, whiche no man had but he. This Nazarean did Jacob see, beeyng a man in maner altogether blynd in the yes of the body, but verey sharp and quicke of sight in the yes of his feith, at what tyme he blessed Joseph, who bare the figure of Christe.

And they shall be (sayeth he) in the head of Joseph, and in the toppe of the croune of the Nazarean that was separate from his brethren. For whatsoeuer thyng the lawe of Moses doeth after the fleshe appoynte or enioyne for consecratyng of the Nazareans, the same is after a spirituall understanding fulfilled in Christe. And God to David thus speaketh in the psalmes:

And well knowen it is ỹ Mary was of the tribe of Juda, & of the house of David neither was that thyng hidden or vnknowen to the Pharisees, who, whā Jesus himselfe before he suffered death asked of thē, whose sonne Messias should bee, made aunswere without any studye or tarying: the sonne of David. The Prophete had foresayed that he should be borne of a virgin. For thus did Esai prophecie. For this cause shall the Lord himselfe geue vnto you a signe. Daniel. ii. a forth a stone: and his name shall bee called Emanuell. Daniel foretolde the selfesame thyng more couertely, whan he expouned what was ment by the stone that was cut of from the hill without hãdes, which brake al to pieces and into powder, that same prodigious image made of golde, siluer, brasse, iron, & clay: and within a short while it grew into a great mountaine, which with his largenesse fylled and possessed all the kingdomes of the world. For Christe being without mannes helpe borne of the virgin Mary, shal grynde, and crushe to powder all the kyngdomes of the worlde, and shall with hys doctrine possesse all the worlde. Verayly Ezechiell beyng enspired dyd perceyue the same afore, at what time he described the Este gate of the temple, through which ỹ Maiestie of the Lord entred in. Of which gate he speaketh in this maner: ✝ This gate shall be still shutte, & shall not be opened, & there shall not a man passe through it: because the Lorde God of Israel hath come in therat, els shall it be shutte still. The prince hymselfe shal come through it, &c. Whan ye heare the Temple of the Lord, ye know well enough to be mẽt therby the wombe of Mary consecrated by the holy ghoste. Whan ye heare the Este gate, doe ye not know the meanyng of it to bee the enclosure and tabernacle of the virginly chastitie, which neither any mortall man entreing vnto it, ne the sonne of God either entreyng in, or cummyng forthe of it hathe violated or defoiled. Certes thissame is the Este gate, out of whiche proceded & issued the light that should lighten all the worlde vniuersall. And this misterie although it be not yet published abrode emong the Jewes, yet is it not vnknowen vnto those, that haue had familiar conuersacion of lyuing with Mary the mother of Jesus, and with Joseph his spouse. For the saied Joseph was taken and vsed as a moste true & vndoubted witnesse of this priuy misterie, which at his due tyme shall be famously spred and spoken of throughout the worlde vniuersall: howe that a virgin without any lyke example afore goyng sence the worlde first begon, by the breathing of the holy ghost vpon hir, brought forth a babe, whiche was partaker of the diuine nature of the godhead, & of the humain nature of man both at once. That if it appere to you or seme a thyng vncredible that God should be borne of a creature mortall: consider ye what the Prophete Baruch did prophecie of the sonne, whom God, taking pitie and compassion on mankynde, dyd euen for the veray purpose sende into the yearth, that vnto the straighyng wandzeers and to the blynded he should shewe the waye of healthy and saluacion.

Baruch. iii * Thissame is our God (sayeth he) & there shall be none other esteemed beside hym. This is he that hath found all the way of discipline, & hath taught it vnto Jacob his babe, & to Israel his beloued. After this, he hath ben seen in yearth, and hath liued emong men. And as for Daniel doeth also shewe the

Dani. ix. tyme of his birth, accountyng it by seuens or seuenfoldes of weekes and yeres, if a man will any thyng curiously serche and trye it out. But long and many a daye before him, the patriarke Jacob, beeyng nowe ere the tyme of his departing out of this worlde, and endewed with the spirite of prophecie to shewe thynges to come, prophecied in this manier:

Gene. xlix. * The scepter shall not be taken awaye from Juda, & a guide frõ the thighe of hym, vntil he come whiche must be sent, and he shall be the expectacion of the heathen. Now al the regiõ of the Jewes, were in subiectiõ to the Emperours of Rome. Jewrye had Herode to their kyng beeyng an aliene, or outlandyshe landisshe man borne. That thyng did euidently conuince and proue that Messias should nowe come, if a body had serched the prophecies. And where he added: * And he shall bee the expectacion of the heathen: albeit this poynct shall in tyme to come bee more clere and manifest, yet did it euen than at the verape time of his natiuitie appere. For immediately vpon the deliuerance of the virgin, there come renning thither by the guiding and leding of a sterre, thre Magians, or sage philosophiers with presentes to wurshyp the newe kyng, and to doo homage vnto him. And euen thilsame verape poynte, that it should so be, had not the voyce of the prophetes leafte vnspoken neither. For thus sayeth Esai: * Before he haue the knowelage to refuse that is euill, and to choose that is good, he shall take the spoiles of Damaria and Damascus against the king of the Assyrians. For whyle he beepng yet a young babe and an infaunte dyaweth three Magians vnto hym by the leding and guidyng of a sterre, and of idolaters maketh them wurshippers of the kyng of kynges: did he not take the spoiles of Samaria, whiche countrey had an euill name for worshippyng and seruing of idolles?

For Damascus was in olde tyme reputed for a parte of Arabia before that by the diuidyng and partition of the countreyes of Syria it was assigned to be a parte of Syrophenicia. And in dede the Este parties haue muche aboundaunce of swete odouriferous sauours and spieces: wherof the Magians of their rychesse brought forth frankinsence, and myrrhe, and golde: wherof the prophecie failled not to make mencion neither. For thus speaketh Esai. * All they of Saba shall come bringyng golde and frankynsence, and shewing forth laude vnto the Lorde. The prophecie also of the Psalme maketh mencion of thelame where it sayeth: * There shall be geuen vnto hym of the golde of Arabie. And agayn in another place: * The kynges of the Arabians and of Saba shall bring presentes. For in those regions and parties, the chiefe rewle and gouernaunce is commonly in the handes of the Magians, that is to saye, the saiges, or the wyse me of knowlage. And forsoth by the name of the kyng of the Assyrians, was signifyed the wicked kyng Herode, who at the springyng vp of Messias, whan it was told hym, was sore out of quiete in his myndе and defeated of his purpose by the Magians. Therupon folowed the murdrepng of the infauntes within all the limites and boundes of Beethleem, whiche thyng the prophecies did not leaue vnspoken neither. For thus did Hieremie syng. The voyce of heaunnesse, wepyng, and lamentacion was heard on high: euen of Rachell mournyng for hir children, and she would not be comforted, because they wer awate. For so did he expresse the lamentyng of the mothers bewaillyng the bouchcherly murdrement of their young suckyng babes. And the place he did halse derkely and mistically expresse by the name of Rachel, whose sepulchre is not ferre of from Bethleem. Than was he secretly conueied into Egipte by the warnyng of an Iungell: and was brought home agayne from thence by the warnyng of thelame Iungel. And had not the prophecie of Oseas shewed that same afore: * Out of Egipte haue I called my sonne. Now before he begonne to take in hande the office of preachyng appoynted vnto hym by his father, did not his forgoer John openly testifie that he should come immediatly furthwithal, and whan he came in dede, shewed him to the people of the Jewes with his finger? And had not Esai clerely prophecied afore that so it should bee * The voyce of a cryer in wildernesse, prepaire ye the waye of the Lorde: make ye the pathes of our God streight in wildernesse. I wysse ye sawe Iohn preachyng in wyldernesse, ye hearde hym acknowlaging this prophecie being forespoken of hymselfe. No nor the prophecie leaft not his baptisme vnspoken of neither. Now where he begonne his preachyng not in Hierusalem, but in Galilee, did not Esai prophecie clerely enough therof aforesaying: The land of Zabulon and the lande of Neptalim, (where though the sea waie goeth ouer Iordane into the lande of Galilee:) the people which sate in derkenesse haue seen a great light. And them that dwell in the lande of the shadowe of death, vpon them hath the light shyned: and it is well knowen that Capernaum, (where Iesus first dwelt whan he entred the office of preachyng) standeth in the marchesse of Zabulon and Neptalim, and that it is a citie situate on the shores syde of the sea. Neither was there any straungenesse or clokyng made of the kynde of doctryne, whiche he oftentymes vsed emong the people, enwrappyng his mynde and sentence in the misticall derkenesse of parables. For thus renneth the discourse of the Psalme Iaph: In parables shal I open my mouth, I shall speake propositions from the beginnyng. And forthermore that people there shoulde bee whiche should crye out agaynst his doctrine, and withstande theisame, as men sinistrely interpretyng and slaundryng aswell all his sayinges as doinges. Esai prophecied saying: Ye shall heare in dede, but ye shal not vnderstãde, ye shal playnly see, and not percepue. Harden thou the herte of this people, stop their eares, and shut their yies, that they see not with their yies, heare not with their eares, and vnderstande not with their hertes, and conuert and bee healed. And suche people doeth he synde faulte withall in an other place also: Loyde, who hath geuen credence vnto the thyng whiche we haue hearde? And forthermore as touchyng the miracles whiche ye haue seen him shewyng, had not the holy sayinges of the Prophetes plainly tolde therof aforehoth not Esai thus speake? He only hath taken on him our infirmities, and hath borne our peines. For what kynde of sore or euill hath he not driuen awaye from persones being in woefull case and miserable? Theisame Esai in an other place also speaketh, yea, more openly and plainly, of the selfe same thyng in this manier.

Esai. xxxv

Saie vnto them that are fearefull: Bee of good chere, and feare not. Behold, your God commeth to take vengeaunce, and pe shall see the rewarde that God geueth. God commeth his owne selfe, and will deliuer you. Than shal the yes of the blynde be lightened, and the eares of the deaf bee opened. Than shal the lame man leape as an herte, and the dumme mannes tounge shall geue thankes. Haue ye not with your owne yes seen Iesus doe all the premisses, yea and greater thynges then those also? ye heard him whan he acknowlaged theisame prophecie as a thyng written and spoken of hymselfe, at what tyme certain disciples of Iohn beeyng sente vnto Iesus demaunded hym, whether he were the Messias that was looked for, or els it were an other that was to be looked for, and he aunswered and saied: Goe youre wayes, heare woorde agayne to Iohn of the thynges whiche ye haue hearde and seen. The blynd see, the haulte goe, the lepres are clensed, the deaf heare, the dead arise agayne, and to the poore is the glad tydinges preached. And that the chiefe rewlers of the synagogue would bee with these benefites yet stil wurse and wurse incensed, did not Esai after a goodly sorte peinte out, vnder the parable of a vyneyarde, whiche beyng with exceedyng many poyntes of diligente cure and good housebandyng occasioned to bryng forth good fruite, dyd not aunswere the expectacion of his tiller.

* I looked (saieth he) that it should haue brought forth grapes: and it hath brought forth wylde grapes: I looked that it should haue doen iudgemente, and beholde wickednesse: & that it should haue doen righteousnesse, & beholde be crying and misery. And doeth not the parable iustely agree with the same sentence of prophecie, whiche ye haue heard of Jesus himselfe, conceruing a vineyard enclosed and fensed with a toure, and furnished with a wyne presse and a gutter, whiche vineyard neuerthelesse through defaulte of the housebandmen yelded not condigne fruite to the Lord and owner. The same thyng also was noted by that same figtree, whiche would not begynne to be fruitfull, no not thanne yther, whan much doungyng and cherishyng had been doen to it. Neyther was there any thyng els mente by the parable of the sede that was cast vpon ill grounde. He founde the same selfe fault els where also in the Prophetes: * I haue all the daye long euermore holden out my handes to an vnfaithful people, that goe not the rightway, but after their owne imaginacions: to a people that is euer defying me to my face. The mennе of power had enuy at his vertue, and slaudreously surmuised those miracles to be wrought by the suppostacion of Beelzebub. But the weakenesse of his body, the meannesse of his degree, and the afflictions whiche he suffred, was a matter of offence and slaundre of conscience to the weake, though they were no euyll men. For whan he was taken of the Jewes, euen those same twelue specially chosen Apostles fled and ranne euery man his waye. See ye whether the Prophete Zachary leaft euen this poynte vnspoken of too. * I shall strieke the shepeheard (saieth he) & the sheepe of ỹ flock shalbe scattred abrode. Wherunto accordeth the song of the eightie seuenth psalme. * Thou hast put awaye myne acquaintaunce ferre from me, and made me to bee abhorred of them. For dyd not Petur with a detestacion forsweare his mayster, and the other Apostles ready to doe the same, if lyke perill had blousstreously come vpon them. And that this would so come to passe, Chriſt had foresaied to Petur before it came to passe in dede. He was betrayed by Judas, who was one of the noumbre of the twelue. Cõsider ye whether the prophetical psalme did not foretell of ỹ also. * For if mine enemy (sayth he) had spoke ill of me, I would beraply haue paciently borne it, and yf he that hated me, had spoken greate thinges vpon me, I would peraduenture haue hidden my selfe frõ him. But thou a mã of myne owne minde, my guyde & my familiar. Now if ye haue learned ỹ Christe, whan Judas comyng of purpose to betray the lord vnto the souldiers by meane of a deceipteull kisse, did thus speake vnto him: * Frende for what purpose art thou come? Betraiest thou the sonne of man vnder a kisse? Did he not manifestly lay vnto him in his beray teeth ỹ saying of ỹ prophete, he calleth him a guyde, because this Judas semed in maner as one made a rewler ouer the Apostles, because he had the charge of doyng all affaires abrode cõmitted vnto him. Again an other psalme speaketh yet more clerly: * For the mã of my peace in whõ I haue trusted, who eate my loaues hath magnified supplanting ouer me. And see I pray you, how we the wordes of Christe whiche he spake to his disciples of the betraier at his last supper with them, doe iustely agree with this prophecie: * He that eateth bread with me (saith Chriſt) shall lift vp his foote sole against me. Psal. liiii. Psal xcviii. haue stande against me. Yea and an other psalme yet again: his woordes are suppled aboue honey, and they be very dartes. And is it not a woorde softer the honey, to say hayll maister being spoken with a kisse geuing? And was it not a darte infected with deadly poison, to say: That same is he, holde ye him fast? Thus might ye haue heard of his Apostles, or in case ye haue not yet heard it, ye may yet learne it in time to come. Judas demaũded of couenaunt of the bishops, the chiefe rewlers, the sume of thirtie pens or denaries of siluer, with which deadly sume of money there was forthwithall a piece of ground bought for the buriall of poore folkes. And both these poynctes did the Prophete foresignifie in his prophecie. As concerning the pryce that he Zachar. xi was sold for, thus did one of the Prophetes say: And they toke thirtie plates the pryce of him that was valued, whom they bought of the children of Israel, and gaue them for the potters field. These thinges thus executed, Judas ouerlate repenting him of his facte, hanged himselfe, diminishing thereby the noũbre of the twelue chosen, and making a roume for an other to bee supplied Psal. cviii. into the noũbre of the Apostles. Neither was this vnspoke of by the Prophetes. For thus sayth the processe of the mistical psame: Let their abydyng be made to lye waste, and let there not be he that dwelleth in it, and his shepeherdship let an other body take. And as for the deuilishe conuocatiõ for the putting of Jesus to death, which was solemnely kept in the house of Caiphas beeyng the highest bishop, by the Scribes, the Pharisees, the rewlers of the people, and the cõmons being swoorne to the same: marke ye whether the same poynte also hath not been wrytten and declared by the prophecie of the psalme, which sayth:
Psalme. ii Why doe the heathẽ so furiously rage together? and why doe the people imagine vaine thinges? The kynges of the earth stand vp, and the rewlers take coũcell together against the Lorde, and against his enoincted. Ye heare the namyng of the heathen, and ye knowe that Jesus was crucified by Pilates seruauntes of his crue: ye heare the woorde, peoples, and ye knowe that the multitude of all sortes of the Jewes, cryed, crucifie him, crucifie him: ye heare the name of kinges, and ye know that Pilate was the rewler and gouernour of Jewry in Cesars behalfe, by whose sentẽce Jesus was cõdẽned: ye heare this woorde, the rewlers of the earth, and ye vnderstãde the headmen of the people of Jewry, who not vnderstãding the lawe spirituall, fought earthly thinges: and while they will in no wise be pulled frõ the same, they put the king of heauẽ to death. Yea and Esai also doth fore threate the same. Woe vnto the soules of thẽ (sayeth he) for Esai. lvii. c they haue thought an erreding naughty thought against thẽselues, saying: let vs tie vp the righteous man for he is not for our purpose. He was brought to iudgement as a man accused and to be arraigned. Yea and that thing also did Esai tell afore. The Lord stãdeth to be iudged, and he stãdeth to iudge the peoples: the Lord shall come into iudgement with the elders of his people, and the rewlers of the same. Jesus was iudged in the house of Caiphas by the chief Luke. xxii priestes, Scribes, and Pharisees, and the chiefe rewlers of the people. Efsons cõfessed he was by the crying and clamour of the people at the benche of the lieutenaũt, whã they cried: Away with him, away with him: naile him on the crosse. But while the Lord is iudged, they are iudged themselfes, in the their detestable iniquitie is by all maner waies and meanes bewraied. Pilate gaue pronounced sentence of iudgement against and vpon them, when he sayed: I am free and innocent from the bloud of thilfame righteous man, che ole you. And themſelues gaue ſentence of iudgement agaynſt themſelues, whan they cryed. Let his bloud be vpon vs, and vpon our chyldren. Hiteremie alſo muche lamented theis Mat. xxvii. detuliſhe weo;kyng agaynſt Chriſte. Lo;d (ſaieth he) thou haſt ſeen the iniquitie of them agaynſt me. iudge thou my iudgement. Doeth he not in theſe wo;des clerely (as it were in a playne picture) ſet fooith the p;ieſtes and the head men of the people conſultyng together how they might put Jeſus to death, huntyng fo; falſe teſtimonies whereby they might oppreſſe hym beyng innocent. laying blaſphemie vnto his charge, condemnyng hym by iudgement before they had matter to hym, ſitting vpon hym as iudges, ariſing again whan they had iudged him, becauſe they would accuſe him before the lieutenaunte. A miſchieuous ſitting downe, and a moze miſchieuous ariſing vp again. And that not any kynde of death at auenture mighte ſatiſfie their hatred, but there was ſpecially choſen luche a kynde of death as was bothe moſte ſhamefull and alſo moſte hardeſt, wherein witneſſeth bearyng the perſone of Chriſt. This, o Lo;d, haue I learned of thee, Hiere. xi. and I do vnderſtande it, fo; thou haſt ſhewed me they; imaginations. But I am as a meke lambe, that is carryed awaye to be ſlayne, not knowyng that theis had deuiſed ſuche counſayles againſte me, ſaying: we will deſtroie his meate with wood, and dryeue him out of the lande of the liuing, that his name ſhall neuer moze be thought vpon. Fo; the deuiſe and purpole of the p;hariſeis was this: that the name of Jeſus after he were accuſed, condemned, hanged betwene two noto;ious malefactours, ſhoulde either bee vtterly fo; euer aboliſhed, o; els ſhould bee reputed emong names execrable and deteſtable. Nowe ferther call ye vnto your remembraunce that Chriſt tolde you al this matter before his death, how he ſhould be betrayed and deliuered into the handes of the Gētiles, that he ſhould be refuſed of menne and caſt of, that he ſhould be ſko;ned, that he ſhould be ſcourged, that he ſhould be crucified, all ye know well by your owne eye, that no pointe hereof was vnadui ſedly doen o; by blynde chaunſe of caſualtie. The Jewes did before the preſence of Annas and Caiphas by meane of falſe witneſſe, laie vnto hym the cryme of blaſpheme, then which there is none other mar xiiii.g crime moze hainous. And this matter was marked out and figured in Joſeph, mat xxvi.c. whom his b;ethren conſpiryng together through enuie did accuſe of a verye Luk. xxii. g naughtie cryme. Before the iudges Jeſus aunſwered either nothyng at all, o; els very fewe wo;des, whā there was no ſparke ne ſpotte of any cryme in him, fo; he had determined with himſelf to dye fo; the redemption of the wo;lde. Thynke ye hardely that this was a thyng doen by blynde chaunce, if Eſai did Gen. xxxvii not tell of it afore. He was offred vp becauſe he would. and he opened not his mouth: as a ſhepe ſhall he be led to be put to death, and ſhall kepe ſilence as a lambe before one that ſhereth him, and he ſhall not open his mouth. And ſee how iuſtely the p;ophecie of the Pſalme agreeth with Eſai. As fo; me. I was lyke a deaf man, and heard not, and as one that is dumme, whiche dooeth not Pſal. xxxix. open his mouth. I became euē as a man that heareth not, and in whoſe mouth are no rep;oufes. Fo; in thee, o Lo;de, haue I put my truſte. Fo; nowe was the full tyme come, that he ſhoulde willingly offre himſelfe to all open ſhame of the wo:ld, as one that shoulde shewe vnto his felowes a perfeicte exaumple of pacient suffreaunce: bounde he was, stricken & beaten he was, bothe with blowes and buffettes, scourged he was, and all to spetten in the face. He had a wede of purple doen on his backe in the waye of mockyng and skoːming him, and crouned he was with a croune of thoːnes, and beeyng contemned of Herode, he was in the waye of puttyng hym to woːldly shame, sent backe agayne to Pilate in a white vesture. in a myserable lykenesse and pieteous to behold was he bːought fooːth to the people, and Barrabas was preferred befoːe hym to bee pardoned and to escape. Nowe foːasmuche as he willyngly suffred all these thynges foː the redemption of the woːlde, accoːdyng to the foːesaiynges of the Pːophetes, it oughte not to haue bːed desperacion in you, but rather haue geuen you the moːe hope. Doeth not Hieremie lamente and bewaile these thynges, where he sayeth: The berat bːeath of our mouth euen the enoyncted Loːde himselfe was taken in theːr nette, of whom we saye: vnder his shadowe we shalbe pːeserued emong the heathen. Heare ye againe thesame pːophete lamentyng: He shall holde out his cheke (sayeth Hieremie) vnto hym that striketh hym: he shall be filled with woːdes of reuilyng. In the allemblie oː conuocacion of the Jewes, he was striken with a blowe of the bishops seruaunte. Of Pilates men he was striken with blowes and buffettes and with a rede: and yet made he no resistence. Nowe heare the pːophecie of the Psalme: Upon my backe (sayeth he) the synners haue ploughed, they haue made long furrowes of theːr iniquitie. And the song of holy Scripture is muche accoːdyng to thesame. The Loːde god (sayeth he) hath opened my eare, therfoːe can I not saye naie, noː withdːawe my selfe: but I offre my backe vnto the smyters, and my chekes to the nippers: I turne not my face from men rebuking me and spetting vpon me. Now whan ye reade the pːophecie of thesame pːophete in an other place, do ye not thynke your selues to see berat Chːiste hymselfe, scourged, spetted on, crouned with thoːnes, couered with a garmente, and bːoughte fooːthe in pːesence to the people of the Jewes in the waye of mockage and skoːne. Foː he writeth in maner folowyng: He hath neither beautie ne fauour, whan we shal looke vpon him, there shalbe no faireneslle: we shall haue no lust vnto hym. He is despised and abhoːred of men, he is suche a man as is full of soːowe, and as hath good experience of infirmities. We haue reckoned hym so vile, that we hyd our faces from him, yea he was despised, and therfoːe we regarded hym not. Howbeit he only hath taken on him our infirmitie, and hath boːne our pernes, yet we did iudge hym, as though he were plagued and cast down of god, and punished, whereas notwithstandyng he was wounded foː our offences, and smytten foː our wickednes. Foː the chastisement of our peace was layed vpon hym, & with his stripes are we healed. Therfoːe thus speaketh he of himself in the mistical psalme: Is foːme I am a wourme, and not a man, the berat skoːne of men, and the outcast of the people. Neither hath the mistical scriptures kept silence of his croune of thoːne. Foː vnto the first man Adam it was sayd: Cursed is the yearth in thy woːke. Whan thou shalt tille it, thoːne and bːiers shal it cause to budde to thee. Thesame that the earth was to the foːmer Ada, thesame thing was the Jewyshe people vnto the second Adam. Foː thatsame earth beeyng so many sondːie waters tilled, pːouoked and occasioned with so many benefites to bːyng fooːth good fruicte: it bːought fooːth thoːnes vnto their tiller.

Now Chːiste was the spouse of the churche oː holye congregacion, as ye heard heard John also testifie, and the sonne of the Synagogue, being a murdrer of hir owne flesche and bloud. Therfore in the misticall weddyng song the father calleth forth al mē to this cruell sight of the spouse being crouned with thornes. Goe ye forth, O ye daughters of Sion, and behold king Salomon in the croune wherwith his mother crouned hym in the daye of the gladnesse of his herte. Forsoth thatsame was an earnest and effectuall louer, whiche washed his spouse in his owne bloud, and knitte hir vnto hym with a bande and knot vnpossible to be vndoen. And this was thatsame daye of espousall, whiche he had with so great desire desired, so that to hym beyng so earnestly in loue, all delay and tariaunce semed long. Whan the lieutenaunte leaft nothyng vndoen that he myght doe to quitte Jesus, & to let hym goe, the chiefe men of the Jewes together with the people, cryed with murdreyng and ragyng voices out aloude: Awaye with hym, awaye with hym, crucifie hym, crucifie hym. And see howe Hieremie leaft not that thing vnmencioned, speakyng in the persone of Christe: I haue forsaken myne owne dwellyng place, and haue leaft myne heritage. My lyfe also that I loue so well haue I geuen into the handes of myne enemies: Myne heritage is become to me as a Lion in the wood: it cryed out vpon me. But whatsoeuer thyng was doen vnto hym in the waye of open shame, that shall he turne into his glory. Herode sēt him backe again to Pilate clad in a vesture of white: & the people of the Gentiles shall in time cumming embrace him for their priest. The crue of soldiers did vpon his backe a robe of purple: they gaue hym moreouer a rede in stede of a scepre: they set on his head a croune made of thornes: Gods people shal acknowlage, and shall on theyr knees wurchippe theyr kyng, euen of suche a facion ouercumming and trioumphing. Herode and Pilate play and daly together, castyng Jesus as a boule or a balle to and fro betwene them. But in the meane tyme they are made frendes wheras they were tofore at discorde and variaunce by mutuall hatered: and euen in theyr beray so doing, did they no lesse then ratifie Jesus to be a reconciler and pacifier of all thynges which are in heauen, and whiche are in yearth. Wherof Job prophecied in this maner. The Lorde reconcileth the heartes of the princes of the yearth. Nowe eftsons renewe ye all thatsame sight vnto your selfes by castyng it in your mynde, thatsame sight (I saye) which nowe this last day ye sawe with your iyes, that is to wete, Jesus goyng out to the place of execucion, & bearyng his crosse vpon his owne shoulders. Had he not geuen tokeninges ỹ it should so be, whan he did many tymes saye emong his disciples and the people

Wo hoso doeth not take vp his crosse and folowe me, is not worthy of me. Forsoth thilke was the sceptre of the king of Jewes, that is to saye, of all men confessyng the thyng whiche Esai long and many a daye agonne, sawe vpon his shoulders, whan he sayed: And his kyngdome vpon his shoulder. I figure therof did Isaac repreasente so many hundred yeres past, whan he bore a faggot of wood vpō his shoulder for hymselfe to be slaine as a burnt sacrifice. But Isaac is safe vnto vs, a ramme only was slaine, that is to say, the materiall body of Jesus, whiche only could dye, but yet so dye, that it should within a veray litle time arise to life again. And slaine he was without the precincte of the citie: and that the thing should so be, Christe himselfe had signified tofore by the parable of the housbandemen or fermers, which after they had cast the sonne out of the vyneyarde, sewe hym. Neyther did Zachatie hold his peace concernyng this matter, whan he sayed: And it shall be in that daie, there shalbe no light, but colde and froste, and it shalbe one daie whiche is knowen to the Lorde. Ye sawe the lambe, of whiche Esai prophecied, not once openyng his lippes, Luke. xxiii.
but holdyng his peace at al oppobrious woordes, yea and moreouer prayeng hertely for the causers and workers of his death, whan he cried: Father forgeue not fore tell this thyng too: They spake against me with guilefull toungues, Psal. cviii.

they compaced me round about with wordes of hatred, and assailed me with-

of whome there was a commaundemente geuen in the booke entitled Exodus:
Ye shall not breake any bone of hym.

Ye might also haue marked this poynte that he ouercame the strengthe of the worlde and Satan with the contrarie: with simplicitee he mastered craftinesse, with meknesse he ouercame fiercenesse, with humilitee he hadde the ouer-hande of pompe and glorie, with courteous behaueour he subdued pryde, and in lyke manier with the weaknesse of body he conquered the power of Satan.
For what thyng is more weake or feble then a man dying, and yet what great thynges verally declared that his special great strength, wherwith he thoroughly subdued the deuill, and the world, was preatily and readily shewed forth at the houre of his death.

And this thyng also had the mysticall Psalme forshewed, where it sayed: Habac. iii Tell ye in the nations, God hath reigned from the tree. And this thyng did not the Prophete Habacuc leaue vnspoken: His brightnesse (sayeth he) shal be as the lyght: hornes in his handes: there is his strength hidden: death shall go before his face: and the deuill shall go out before his feete. Ye heare the hornes or peakes of the crosse, the feblenesse wherof beguyled the prynce of this worlde.

For the lord Iesus had there priuely hidden his heauenly vertue and strength, to thende that he might oppresse the detuill: he led death in a triumphe, he made Satan to be openly knowen what he was, and made hym an open shewe: and Iohn. vii. c his verai self before he should dye, foretold that this thing should so be, in that he sayed: Whan I shalbe exalted vp from the yearth, I wyll drawe all thynges
Deu. xxxiii. vnto my selfe. And the selfsame thyng did Moses signifie beyng nere the tyme of his death, although by derker wordes of a mistical sense. For whan he blessed the tribes euerie one by it selfe, and it was come to Ioseph (who bare the figure of Christe) he sated: Is of a fayre borne ore is the beautie of hym, and his hornes as the hornes of the beaste Rhinoceros, with them shal he fanne the nations euen vnto the endes of the earth. So hath it ben thought good to the wisdom of God: that Christ should subdue the vniuersal world through the hornes or angles of the crosse. Neyther did the Prophetes leaue his buriall vnspoken of neyther. For Hieremie representyng the persone of Christe wepteth in this manier: My lyfe fell downe into the lake and they put a stone vpon me. For ye Luke. xxiii. (a) Mat. xxvii. d (b) Mark. xv. d Iohn. xix. g knowe that he was buried in a sepulchre of stone, and that the mouth of the monumēte was shutte with a mightie great stone, because no body should take awaie his corpse. On the preparyng daye well towardes euentide he was laied in his graue: there did he rest all the Sabboth, that is to saye, whan the worke of mannes redemption was nowe finished, and completed. Consider ye whether the prophecie did not forshewe euen of thilsame thing also: From the sight of iniquitie (saieth the prophecie) was the righteous taken awaie, & his place shall bee in peace. Moreouer vntill the tyme of his death, he suffred hymselfe to be touched of the wicked: after his death he would not be handled ne touched of no body but of his frendes. Neither did he from that tyme forthward shewe himselfe to be seen, but only to his frendes. And of this matter had the auncient prophecie of Iacob the patriarke, geuen a darke signification and tokenyng, who, whan he should dye, prophecied in this manier of Iuda. Aye I shoulde
Gene. xlix. rather saye of Christe: Thou layest a long as a lyon, who shall reise hym vp? Furthermore lyke as it was his will to dye, and to bee buried, so that it shoulde not come to passe that he should rotte in his sepulchre, but that after tarying a veray shorte tyme, he should arise to lyfe agayn, was it not a thyng openly forshewed of the prophetes? Doeth not the holy ghoste speake after this manier in the fiftreenth psalme? Thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, nor shalt suffre thy holy one to see corruption. No spiceres, no swete baulmes doe geue this gifte, that a dead carkesse shall neuer putrifie, forasmuche as continuaunce of tyme doeth forweare the verai spices selfe, whiche tyme consumeth euen the monumentes, though they be of marble stone, but this gifte doeth resurreccion geue, whiche geueth immortalitie, but all the whole figure of this matter did not Ionas the prophete many yeares sence plainly presente? The tempest was imputed vnto him, and to the entent leste al ꝑ compayne should perishe, he was headlong toumbled into the sea, to thende that by the losse of him being but one mā, the tempeste might be alayed, whereas otherwise it threatened death vnto al the compayn. Christe dyed for the sauyng of all creatures, to the ende that he alone might pourge & wape the sinnes of all the people. Ionas was swallowed vp of a whale, and out of the bealye of thesame whale was he rendred againe on the thyrde daye after, otherwyse then all folkes loked for: Christe was layed in his graue, whethence he promised that he wouldc come forth on the thyrde daye.

Ionas. i. b

For

For vnto the Iewes requiring a signe from heauen, he promised the signe of Ionas the prophete, and that himselfe would after the exaumple of the same Ionas, come forth on the third daye out of the caues of the yearth. And howe many tymes did he repeate this thing to diuerse & vnto the disciples mindes, that he should dye, and returne agayn to life on the third daie? And that thing had Oseas the prophete told long afore, who sayed: After two dayes shall he reuiue vs, on the third daye shall he reise vs agayn to lyfe. Forasmuche therefore as ye haue hitherto seen all thynges agree together, the figures of the law, the forespainges of the prophetes, the foretellinges of Christ himselfe, and finally the ende of thynges as they haue from tyme to tyme folowed and come to passe: howe happeneth that ye nowe, as men beyng halfe in a sloumbre or a dreame, are vnbeleuers, and doe not rather of thynges alreadie paste, coniecture thynges afterwarde to ensue? He tolde you afore, that betrayed he shoulde be and deliuered to the Gentiles, that he should be bound, scourged, skorned, and crucified.

Mat. xii. c. Mark. viii. Luke. xi. d Iohn. ii. d.

Osee. vi. a

Not one iote of all these thynges but it hath come to passe. All the premisses ye haue seen, and doe beleue them: but euen he the verie same man, told also afore that on the third daye he would arise to life again, and that he would by the space of a certain of dayes, shewe himself not vnto the worlde, but vnto his disciples. Wherefore than do ye not credite those weomen which repoꝛte them selues to haue been adcertayned by the Aungels, that he was arisen to lyfe agayn? Doth the frailtie and feblenesse of his body deceaued, so greatly offende you that ye nowe fall into vtter dispaire, as though al that same noble promises of his wer vtterly extinct and dead, concernyng his kyngdome, concernyng the power of heauen and yearth to be deliuered vnto the sonne, concernyng his ascending vp into heauen, and his returnyng from hence vnto his father, concernyng his sittyng at the right hande of his father, of extendyng and spreding the gospel throughout all the nacions of the worlde, concernyng his glorious cummyng a little before the ende of the worlde, concernyng the immoꝛtalitie of the holy, concerning the euerlastyng paines and tormentes of the wicked? Nai wete ye well, that death it was whiche opened the waye and entreaunce into the maiestie of all these thynges. Euen as ye haue seen hym dying and buried, so shall ye see hym returned to lyfe agayne, so shall ye see him ascending vp into heauen, ye shall receyue the spirite of God: ye shal see the celestial power of god shewe foorth it self in men of lowe degree, and of no learnyng ne knowlage worldly: ye shall see the light of the ghospell by meane of these same persones in a litell tyme to spreade ouer all the worlde with his gaditaunt beames. And that same Iesus, who hath here ben set at naught, spetted at, and had in derision, y same Iesus shall all the worlde worthip, as equall with God the father, and an equall partener with him in his kyngdome. Finally all mankynde without exception shall see him in the maiestie of his father encompaced with coumpanies of Aungels, iudgeing the quicke and y dead. And it hath pleased him that the cummyng of that same daye shoulde bee vncertayne to all creatures. In the meane season his wille was that his seruauntes shoulde care for nothyng but the kyngdome of the ghospell.

And all the premisses haue been foreshewed by the prophetes: they haue been marked and appoynted out by figures of Moses lawe: they haue been a great portion of them, alreadie performed: neyther ought there any manne to

doubte but that all thynges shall in theyr due tymes bee presently shewed.
These wordes of the Lorde Jesus mouthe, not onely stickyng the eares of the said two disciples, but also perceyng and throughly sinking into theyr hertes, did so possesse them, that neither they felte the trauayle of the waie, nor tooke any markes of his face while he spake, nor yet remembred to thynke with themselues in theyr myndes, who is this same that hath the holy scriptures, and all the doctrine and lyfe of Jesus so prompte at his fingers endes, and the whiche doeth in suche wise hold vs styl, & moueth the verie bottome of our herte rootes with talke of suche efficacie and pith? This man did we neuer see emōg the disciples, and yet doeth nothyng escape him, but he knoweth it. They dyd nomore but cast a fansie of loue vnto him halfe in a dreame, and hadde a great delite to learne Jesus of Jesus self. For neuer is he with better lucke or successe learned, then whan himselfe vouchesafeth to teache hymselfe vnto vs.

They tourney beyng with this & other lyke cōmunicacion wel ouerpassed, they did now drawe nere to the litle towne called Emaus. Than Jesus, because he would the more enkindle their desirefulnelle, fedled & made countenaunce as though he woulde not make any tarriaunce at Emaus, but made as though he had yet somewhat further waie to goe, for the others, as men fallen in despaire had forsaken Hierusalem, and were in returnyng home into theyr owne countrey where they were borne, whereas suche persones as haue truelye beleeued in Christe, haue here in this worlde no parmanent citie, but doe by continual tourneyng make haste vnto thatsame other citie celestiall. But the sayed two disciples, because they could not bee plucked away from suche a tolye talkyng companion on the waye, they prayed hym, they beseche hym for Goddes sake, they make al possible instaunte requeste vnto him, yea and in conclusion bothe with desyryng which wolde not haue any nay, & also with takyng and holdyng him fast by the cloke and vesture that he went in, whereas he refused so to doose, they compel him without chopce or remedie to take lodgeyng with them that night, now callyng hym by the name, master, not that they knewe hym to bee Jesus: but because that by his mercuaylous talke they coniectured hym to bee no common waifaryng man. And this sayed they vnto hym: Maister, thou haste hytherto shewed thyselfe a kynde and frendly companion on the waye, now shew thy self also a like geaste vnto vs. Why wouldest thou committe thyself to goyng of a further tourney? The euentyde now draweth faste on, and the sunne draweth well towardes setting in the west. Of verye good cause dooe they hate the nighte, as many as loue Jesus: and yet ought not suche people to feare the nighte of this worlde, as haue Jesus to theyr coumpanion. And Jesus loueth to be prayed to doe the thyng, whiche he dooeth with glad will: partely to the entent he maye geue his giftes to persones ientilly desiryng it, and worthie of it: and partely to teache vs a lesson, that a benefite or good turne is to bee put in the lappe, and will be mill he, to bee doone to the neighbour beeyng in necessitee. For some persons do in suche sorte offre a good turne to the neighbour, as thoughe they were in feare, leste the partie, to whom it is offreed, would not refuse it: and they geue it with suche a countenaunce, that they seme to geue it agaynst their stomakes. Jesus hereupon entreed the toune, and vouchesalued to vse their courteous entretenimente.

The texte. ¶ And it came to passe, as he sate at meate with them, he tooke bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gaue to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knewe hym: & he vanished out out of their sight. And they sayed betwene themselues: did not our hertes burne within vs, while he talked with vs by the waye, and opened to vs the scriptures? And they arose up the same houre and returned agayn to Hierusalem, and found the eleuen gathered together, and them that were with them, saying: The Lorde is risen in dede, and hath appered to Symon. And they told what thynges were doen in the waye, and how they knewe him, in breakyng of breade.

The sayed twoo disciples beyng glad men of so great and noble a geaste, whē they had ministred vnto him all maner of thynges whiche are wont to bee ministred to geastes that are welcome to ones house: they also layed a table and made readie for supper, and as apperteined for men of their slendre hauour, they sette theron for hym suche poore parte as they had. The fare was competent & meane without any excesse: but aboue al thinges their countenaunces that they set theron, were good and frendely, & aunswerable to their moste sincere hertes. And now that Jesus was sette at the table with them, he tooke bread, he blissed it, and brake it, and than raught it forth to them. And because they knewe this gupse to be as a thyng peculiarly vsed of Christ, and no man els, that he would before meate geue thankes vnto the father, and thā afterward he would breake it with his owne handes, and so distribute it emong his disciples: These twoo disciples (as it had ben) sodaynly awakened out of slepe, begonne bothe at once to thynke in their myndes vpon Jesus. And immediatly the impediment that had hitherto been therof, beyng now taken away, they knew by that marke that it was veray Jesus in dede. And while that a certain sodain kynde of beyng amazed entred into their hertes, Jesus vanished awaye out of their sight. For after the time of his death forthward he did but a litle at once and after a sparing facion shewe himselfe in presence: either for that the infirmitie of mortall men was not hable to abyde the maiestie of his bodye beyng returned to life again: or els because they might by litell and litell enure themselues to lacke the sight of his body, which was verai shortely after to bee had awaye from them to the ende they should now loue him after the spirite. For thermore they haue perfect markes to know Jesus, but in the house, whiche is the churche or holy congregation: they haue no sure markes of him, but whan himselfe reacheth forth vnto them the breade of the worde euangelicall. For he it is that openeth the yes wherwith Jesus is by sure markes and tokens knowen. On the waye had he broken and geuen them thatsame bread after a mysticall sorte, whan he opened the scriptures vnto them. And the thyng that he had there dooen after the spirite, he did afterwarde renewe by a corporall and bodyly token. And whan Jesus was in body goen, they did now better see him, then at suche tyme whan he was in bodye present with them. Their yes were holden, because they beleued not. Now whan he is absent, they see him with the yes of their faith. After the departure of Jesus awaye from them, they ceasse not to talke of Jesus betwene themselues, saying: how happened, that it was so late ere we knew Jesus? A certayn kynde of slepe possessed our myndes: the blessyng of the bread, the breakyng and the geuyng of it vnto vs, was the firste thyng that did shake awaye thesame slepe: but had we not been as men half a slepe, we mighte of his veray talkyng with vs euen aswel haue conjectured that himselfe was Jesus, in that he did with such a long processe so mervailously tell vs so many thinges of Jesus. Whan he did in talkyng familiarly with vs on the waie, expoune vnto vs out of the scriptures the mysticall derke speakinges of the figures and prophecies: did not we fele a certain woondrefull feruentnesse of herte, suche as the

talke of the Scribes and the Pharisees doeth not engender the like in the herters of the hearers: But euen of such lyke sorte as this, are the lordes woordes woont to bee vnto suche folkes as heare them with a simplicitie. His woordes or sermons would prycke the conscience, it would moue the myndes with affections, it would rauisshe, it would burne, it would enflame, and it woulde leaue certaine sparcles and stynges or pyrcells behind it in the hertes of the audience. And whan they had bothe the one to the other confessed plainly that they hadde bothe of lyke sorte been stricken in their hertes, & did not now any thing doubte but that he was veray Jesus selfe returned again to life: they streight waie lefte Emaus although the daie did nowe growe fast awaie, & with greate spede they gotte them backe again to Hierusalem, to thentent that they mighte make the other disciples also partakers of so great a ioye, and that by mutual conferring one with another, the feith of all the cumpanie might be confirmed. For the lord hath a great desire to haue the benefites of his free gift in suche wyse to be spred ferther and ferther abrode emong men: that through their mutuall doyng of good one to another, aswell charitie maie growe emong them, as also good desertes maie encrease in them, whiche God maie rewarde. They were slowe whā they leafte Hierusalem, because Jesus beyng one that kept talke with them, beguyled them of felyng any werinesse of the waie, and plucked out of theyr myndes, all desyre of beyng in theyr hosterie. But the gredinesse aswell of bearyng tydynges backe agayn of that that had happened, as also of knowyng againe on the other syde what had befalle to the others, made them as light as though they had had wynges on their fete, whan they returned backe again to Hierusalem. Whan they were come thither, they founde the eleuen Apostles: (for now had Judas ben abated from the noumbre of the twelue.) And with these eleuen there were many disciples mo present: who not tarying vntill these twoo had reported all theyr tale, leapyng of theyr owne mocion for ioye, made relacion to the same, that after the vncertain hope, whiche the women had fyrst of all creatures made vnto them of the lordes arisyng again from death to lyfe: there was present knowlage come that he was arisen in veray true dede. For (they sayed) he had appeared vnto Symon Peter. The woordes of this Peter, because he was of a principall estimacion emong the Apostles, had more credite with the disciples, then the woordes of women afore. For it pleased the lorde Jesus to confyrme this Peter fyrst, and to confirme hym with his presence, who he knewe bespdes the cuill of vnbelief whiche was in the rest also aswell as in hym, to bee greued with the prime knowlage in his conscience of forswearyng his maister. The twoo disciples aforesaid beyng glad men of these newes, doe semblеably on theyr parte also make relacion, howe whan they were on the waye goyng towardes Emaus, there came a certaine man beyng of none acquaintaunce with them, and ioyned hymselfe togeither with them in cumpanie, in the lykenesse of a wayfaryng man, who by takyng an occasion had tolde and recited manye thynges of Jesus: repeatyng out of the bookes of Moyses & of the Prophetes, whatsoeuer thyng had been foreshewed concernyng Jesus, and also recityng what had fortuned, and what was afterward to happen: and how they had no knowlage of hym by any token till at last by the peculiar and speciall custome that he had euermore tofore vsed to bliste, to breake, and to geue bread vnto the.

And found assembled together.

And they tolde what thynges had ben doen on the waie.

The texte. (As they thus spake, Jesus hymselfe stood in the middest of them, and sayeth vnto them: peace ye care bee vnto you. It is I, feare ye not. But they were abashed and afrayed, and supposed that they had seen a spirite. And he sayed vnto them: why are ye troubled, and why do thoughtes arise in your hertes? Beholde, my handes and my feete, that it is euen I my selfe. Handle me and see, for a spirite hath no fleashe and bones, as ye see me haue. And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his handes and his feete. And whyle they yet believed not for ioye, and wondred, he sayed vnto them: haue ye here any meate? And they offred him a piece of a broiled fishe, and of an honey combe. And he tooke it, and did eate before them.

Whyle they with suche holy talkes as these, do on bothe parties counforte and glad themselues, some of them beleuing, and some yet still doubting: the Lorde Jesus sodainly entred in, whan the doores were all shutte, and was not seen comming thither, but sodaynly was standyng euen in the middes emong them. For in suche lyke sorte do the angels soodainly appere visible, whan theselues will, and again soodainly vanishyng awaie whan them lyketh. And as good spirittes whā they appere, are accustomed with frendly and amiable speakyng vnto men to take all feare out of them, to the entent that the weaknesse of mannes nature maye not bee any thyng dismayed or troubled: righte so the Lorde because he shewed himselfe visible bothe sodainly commyng in, and also in the euentide being now werye derke, he speaketh vnto them wt an amiable salutation, saying: Peace be vnto you. It is I, feare ye not. This speaking although it ought of good cause to putte away all feare: yet neuerthelesse so great was the weaknesse of some of the disciples, that hauyng they herte at they? derke mouth for feare, they dyd not believe that it was Jesus, but supposed themselues to see some spirite. And he said vnto them: peace be vnto you. &c.

They had seen hym not long afore dead and buryed, they sawe hym not to had entred at the doore, but to had appered sodainly. Wherfore it coulde in no wyse synke in their hertes, that it was Jesus bodye that they sawe, but some spirite. For the common people reporte suche maner fables, howe ye gostes of dead folkes doe oftentimes appere to suche as they wyll, and to represent to mortall mennes iyes a certain lykenesse of derke naturall bodyes, and yet not to haue any materiall and derke body in dede.

Emong these was Thomas, who vnto the disciples repostyng that they had seen the Lorde, had sayed playnly that he would neuer believe it, except by puttyng his fingers into his syde, he hadde serched all the prientes and holes of the nailes and of the speare. Jesus therfore to shewe an vndoubtable trueth vnto them all, that bothe he was aliue, and also bare aboute with hym a derke reall body in dede, and not any other bodye then: thesame whiche he had carryed tofore, sayed vnto them: Why dooe ye yet feare me, as the sight of a ghoste, seeyng that ye playnly beholde me with your iyes, and knowe my fauour of olde, and seeyng ye heare my voyce, beyng acquainted and familiar vnto you, & yet neuertheselle dooe thoughtes of vnbelief & mystrustyng aryse yet still in your hertes, euen suche like as are wooont to come commonly in mēnes myndes? Satisfie ye euery one of your senses: biew and beholde you my hādes & my feete: they haue manifest prientes of the nailes: touche & handle ye my syde, it bathe the gathe of the speare, sele ye my bodye & come nerer me with your iyes, & leaue ye suspectyng of any spirite. For a ghoste hath neither fleashe nor bones as ye see that I haue. That I entred in hither the doores beeyng shutte, that whan my wyll is I am seen, and whan my will is I am invisible: it is not any blyndyng of mennes iyes by any sleyght, but the gifte of the body beyng now made immortall. And euen suche lyke shal your body also be, after the the resurrection. When the lorde had by suche woordes as these taken awaye the feare from thē, and had put them in a comforte: he shewed forth vnto them his handes and his feete to be viewed: he opened his side that they might handle the manifest dientes of the woundes.

For it was the lordes pleasure to reserue thesame, to the entente that by those euident tokens he might than emong his disciples perfectly auouche the trueth of his humain bodye, and also that he maye in tyme to come at the laste date of iudgement enbraide to the Iewes their vnbelief according to the prophecie, which sayeth: They shall see in whom they haue pierced and made holes. Howe whereas some there wer yet still, which did not plainly beleue it to bee thesame bodye that they had seen dead, but were in case that a certain imbecillation (as pe would saye) of drounkenship or gladnesse did so holde them: myndes, that they did neither perfectly beleue they owne eyes, nor they eares, nor they handes (for oft tymes we be afeard to beleue the thyng whiche we doe rather then our liues wilbe to be true, as men fearing leste we should caste our selues into some fooles paradise, or false hope wherof to bee anon after depriued again:) Iesus vouchesaluyng with all tokens of euidence to bee a Phisitian to their vnbelief, because there should no spiece of the lyke mistrustfulnesse remaine in vs, saied: Haue ye any thyng here that maie be eaten? For none there is a more vndoubted token or proof of a man to be aliue, then yf thesame take meate. And therfore Iesus willed meate to be geuen to the damisell, whā she was called again to life, sembleably also vnto Lazarus: not that we shall fele any huger after that we be reised again to immortalitie: but because he would (as that present tyme required) confirme and make euidente vnto his disciples, the veritie of his humain body. There wer present at that tyme in thesame place a good nūber of his disciples, and yet was there but verye small prouision of viande: Therfore that that they had, they dyng fourth, whiche was a morsell of fishe that had been rosted, and a honey combe. Than Iesus in the sight of them al eate parte of the thinges whiche were set before hym.

The saied by to thē: haue ye here any meate?

And he saied vnto them: These are the woordes whiche I spake vnto you whyle I was yet with you, that all must nedes be fulfilled in suche wise written of me in the lawe of Moses, and in the prophetes, and in the psalmes. Than opened he their wittes, that they might vnderstande the scriptures, and saied vnto them. Thus it is written, and thus it behoued Christe to suffer, and to ryse again from death the thyrde day, and that repentaunce and remission of sinnes should bee preached in his name emong all nations, and must beginne at Ierusalem. And ye are witnesses of these thynges. And beholde, I will sende the promise of my father vpon you. But tarye ye in the citie of Ierusalem vntyll ye bee endowed with power from on high.

And whan he had nowe made all their senses perfectely to beleeue that he was no sighte of any ghoste, but a verai and a liuyng man, euen thesame, whō they had tofore seen bothe liuing and also dying: he taketh recourse vnto the holy scriptures, wherunto there ought credite to bee geuen, although the fēles of man should neuer so muche crye against it. Ye ought not (sayeth he) to meruaill at the thynges whiche ye see to haue been doen. The scripture cannot lye forasmuche as it hath been wrytten by the inspiracion of the holy ghoste. Whatsoeuer thyng hath hitherto been doen, thesame had been foreshewed and prefigurate afore in the bokes of Moses, in the prophetes, and in the psalmes. For euen I am verily he, whom the figures of Moses lawe did signifie: I am the man of whom the holy prophetes promised so many thynges: and it is I,

whose firste springyng vp, whose progression or goyng forewarde, and whose cõsummacion, the misticall psalmes doe describe: And with no lesse trueth shall all the rest of thynges also bee performed, which haue in theisame scriptures been foreshewed concernyng my returnyng into heauen, concernyng the spirite of God to be sent: who, after that this bodye of myne shalbe taken awaye from you, shall make you the more stedfast concernyng the gospell to bee spredde throughout the whole vniuersall worlde, and concernyng the laste ende of this worlde. These are the thynges whiche I did so many tymes labour to beate into your heades, whan hauyng yet a mortall bodye subiect vnto death, I lyued conuersaunt emong you, beeyng also mortall. At that tyme had not the promisses settled in your hertes: now can ye not any longer doubte whan ye see my sayinges to agree with the misticall scriptures, and the cummyng to passe or sequele of thynges to agree with them bothe. Hitherto as the tyme hath required) I haue tendred ye bome with the weakenesse of your fleshe, and I haue with grosse proufes laied the trueth of matiers before you. From henceforthe growe ye forewarde to a spirituall vnderstandyng of the scriptures. There shal ye frõ hencefoyth see me, there shall ye heare me. And because the misticall bokes are not vnderstanded, excepte God open our mynde and reason, Iesus opened vnto them, the eyes of theyr herte that thei might reade, beliewe, and vnderstãd, that was written in the scripture. For no man doeth vnderstande scripture, but he that dooeth beleue it. In this order (sayed Iesus) it hath semed good vnto my father to restore mankynde. And the thyng whiche he had decreed, hath ben set forthe by his inspiracion in bookes of holy scripture. The selfe same thyng hath been forshewed by me before it was doen: neither was it possible that it should any otherwyse come to passe, because the determinacions of God are immutable, and the holy scriptures can as litle skille to lye, as the selfe spirite of God, by whose instincte they haue been wytten. By death, and by open shame of the crosse, the waie did lye vnto glorye: it was necessarie that I shoulde arise again to lyfe on the thyrd daye, to the ende ye might know your selfes to haue a Lorde and an aduocate beyng a liuesman, and one that from henceforth shall dye nomore. And theisame your aduocate beeyng admitted into heauen, shall from theuce send vnto you the spirite of god. Than muste ye in the name of Iesus Christe preache repentaunce of the lyfe past, and the remission of all synnes without the kreppyng of Moses lawe. Theisame remission of synnes shall bee geuen to all people through euangelicall feith onely. I haue suffred the peines in the behalfe of all creatures: leat them no more but beleue, and they shall attayne the state of innocencie. And these thynges muste be preached, not onely to the Iewes, but also to all nacyons of the worlde: but yet prouyded alwayes, that ye begynne firste with Hierusalem. In Iewrye was I borne, & there haue I wrought miracles: at Hierusalem haue I taught, and suffered death. Emõg this people shall ye fynde hertes by meanes and wayes nowe already prepared vnto feith. Vnto these people shal ye renewe the memorie of the thynges whiche ye haue seen an heard. My doctrine whiche I firste receiued of my father, and than taught vnto you, ye shall poure out again into them. The worlde will gainsaye and withstand your testimonie, lyke as it did vnceassaunly crye out against me. But I (as I haue heretofore saied) will from my father sende vnto you the spirite, whiche he long agone prompted by the prophetes, that he woulde sende, whan he spake by the mouth of Ioheli. And it shall bee: I shall hereafter

Than opened he their wittes that thei might vnderstande the scriptures. &c

And that repentaunce & remission of synnes shoulde bee preached in his name.

And behold I wil send the promise of my father vpon you.

hereafter poure out my spirite vpon all fleashe: and pour soonnes and your daughters shall prophecie: whiche spirite holy Dauid also did wishe for, whā he saied: Sende thou furth thy spirite, and they shal be created: and thou shalt renewe the face of the yearth. That same spirite shall make you strong & inuincible against all terrours to bee shewed of this world. That same spirite shall moreouer geue you eloquence whiche no creature shall bee hable to gayneseye: he shall also geue you power to worke miracles, in sorte that your testimonie concernyng me shall bee a thyng of condigne pith and efficacie. Ye in the meane tyme vntil than, bee ye in perfecte quiete and rest with your selues, and beeyng congregated together in one coumpaignie, remayne ye in this citie of Hierusalem, begynnyng there the concorde and vnitie of the churche that shall spryng, vp: and exhorte ye one another with holy communications, deuoutly prayeng, and geuyng thankes vnto God, vntill that same spirite come from aboue, who shall enstructe and arme you with power and strength celestial.

But tarrye ye in the citie of Hierusalem vntill.&c.

The texte. ¶ And he led them out into Bethanie, and lift vp his handes, and blissed them. And it came to passe, as he blissed them he departed from them, and was caryed vp into heauen. And they worshipped him, and returned to Hierusalem with great ioye, and were continually in the temple prayseng and laudyng God.

Herupon after that Jesus had by soondry euidente proufes confirmed the veritie of his resurrection: he led his disciples into Bethanie, and beeyng euen now readie to departe from hence into heauen, he lift vp his hādes and blissed them, representyng euen in this verye poynte also the ryght of the patriarkes and of Moses. And in the same instaunte, while he wisheth well vnto his disciples, he was lifted vp from the yearth, and in sighte of them al was caryed vp into heauen. Than the disciples fallyng prostrate on the grounde worshipped the Lord, lookyng after him with their eyes as long as they might. But muche more did thei looke after hym with their hertes, after that his bodye was taken awaye from their eyes. The premisses thus executed and dooen, they returned to Hierusalem, according as the Lorde had enioyned them, and returne thei did with great ioye. For nowe had feith shaken of from theim all sorow and heauinesse: and assured hope of the promises did geue thē cherefulnesse. In the meane season thei wer muche and ofte in the temple, as men euen thā alreadie offreing euangelicall sacrifices, prayseng and magnifying the bounteous goodnesse of god towardes mankynde, and rendryng thankes vnto hym, for that he had decreed freely to geue suche high benefites vnto mortall men, through his sonne.

And lift vp his handes and blissed them.

And were cōtinually in the temple, prayseng & laudyng god.

FINIS.

To the moſte vertuous Ladie and moſte gracious Quene Katherine late wife to the moſte noble kyng Henry the eight of moſte famous memorie deceaſſed, Nicolas Udall your highneſſe moſte humble ſeruaũt wisheth healthy, and all proſperitee in Chriſt.

When I cõſider, moſt gracious Quene Katerine, the greate noumbre of noble weomen in this our time and countreye of Englande, not onelye geuen to the ſtudie of humaine ſciences and of ſtraunge tongues, but alſo ſo throughlye experte in holy ſcriptures, that they are hable to compare wyth the beſte wryters aſwell in endictynge and pennynge of godlye and fruitfull treatiſes to the cõſtruction and edifiynge of whole realmes in the knowleage of god, as alſo in translating good bokes out of Latine or Greke into Engliſhe for the vſe and commoditie of ſuche as are rude and ignorannte of the ſayd tounges, I cannot but thynke and eſteme the famous learned Antiquitee ſo ferre beyynde theſe tymes, that there cannot iuſtelye bee made any compariſon betwene them. Cornelia a noble matrone of Rome throughe longe converſation and continuannce with her learned houſebande, was in proceſſe of tyme ſo well learned & ſo eloquent, that hirſelf was the chiefe & principall inſtructreice and brynger vp of hir two ſonnes Caius Gracchus, and Tyberius Gracchus in all their learning, and made theſame at lengthe ſo fyne, that they yet to this daye remayne regiſtred in the noumbre of the abſolute and perfecte Oratours of olde tyme. We reade of one Hortenſia in Rome a woman ſo well ſpoken & ſo fine of toungue, that beynge on a time indicted and arrained of a grieuous offẽce, ſhe ſo wittily, ſo pithythily, and wyth ſuche grace made anſwer for hirſelf: that all the whole benche & Courte thãn preſente, iudged her, for þ mere reſpecte of her eloquence and witte in that preſent perill and iroperdie there ſhewed, worthy by theyr whole cõſentes & ſentences, to be quit and diſcharged of the law for that crime. Hortenſia the daughter of Quintus Hortenſius & brought vp continually frõ hir cradle and tendre infanncye in the houſe and companye of ſuche a noble Oratour, came at lengthe ſo nere to the perfect eloquẽce of her father, that ſhe was hable in publique hearing to make oraciõns, and theſame of ſo pithythye a ſorte, that where the noble weomen of Rome were on a time ſore tared to departe with their golde, & ie weis to ward certayne neceſſarie charges of that cõmon weale: Hortenſia came before the cõmiſſioners to ſpeake in the behalfe of the matrones, & with her exquiſite talke obteined a mitigacion almoſte of the whollc tare whiche the ſeſſours had afore agreed vpon, and appointed vnto the weomen to contribute.

These exaumples of eloquence in weomen, lyke as they are but beryc few in noumbre, ſo are they thynges of no ſuche highe excellencie to be mercuailed at. For what great matier of woondre is it that emong ſo many thouſãdes three or fower ſhould be founde hable to ſpeake before a iudge in open audience: or what ſtraũge caſe is it to be reputed, if ſome one or two weomẽ haue ben ſolde wittie or learned in the Latine toungue beeynge their owne native language which euerie carter and handicraftes man than ſpake, though not al thynge ſo kindely as the learned men and Oratours dyde what high matier of praise and commendacion is it, if a few weomen being either wiues or daughters to excellent fine Latine men, could in continuaunce of a greate manye yeares speake Latine well: Yet are these weomen specialy chronicled in histories as notable, yea and singulare exaumples worthy perpetuall fame and memorye for their wytte, learnyng, and eloquence. After these heathens, Hierome in his Epistles writeth specialt high praises and commendacions of Eustochium the mother, Paula the daughter, and Blesilla the daughters of whiche euerye one were passyng well sene not onely in holy scryptures, but also in Latyne, Greke and Hebrewe: whiche toungues they learned practely in a veray shorte tyme, & excelled in the same. The like testymony he geueth of Marcella a veray noble woman in Rome, whome he reporteth to had in his time so well profyted in the knowleage of holy scriptures, that after his departure from Rome, yf there were any doubtefull question or any poynte of difficultee concernyng scripture: all folkes would resorte to hir as to a iudge hable and also sufficient to decise any matier of controuersie or ambiguitee that happened emonge them. But this knowleage extended no ferther then to the priuate edifyinge of theyr owne selues with a very fewe others, and the same in suche places where Latine was their mother toungue and their native language. But nowe in this gracious and blisse full time of knowleage, in which it hath pleased almighty god to reuele and shewe abrode the lighte of his most holy ghospell: what a noumbre is there of noble weomen (especially here in this realme of Englande) yea and howe many in the yeares of tender virginitie, not onely a fewe sene and as familiarlye traded in the Latine and Greke tongues, as in their owne mother language: but also bothe in all kyndes of prophane literature, and liberall artes, exactly studyed and exercised, and in the holy scriptures and Theologie so ripe, that they are able aptely, cunnyngly, and with mutche grace eyther to endicte or translate into the vulgare toungue for the publique instruccio and edifying of the vnlearned multitude. Neyther is it nowe any straunge thing to heare gentle weomen in stede of moste vaine communicacion about the moone shynyng in the water, to vse graue and substanciall talke in Greke or Latine with their housebandes of godly matiers. It is nowe no newes in Englande to see young damysels in nobles houses and in the Courtes of princes, in stede of cardes and other instrumentes of idle tristeing, to haue continually in theyr handes eyther Psalmes, Omelies, and other deuoute meditacions, or els Paules epistles, or some booke of holy Scripture matiers, and as familiarlye both to reade or reason therof in Greke, Latine, Frenche, or Italian, as in Englishe. It is nowe a common thing to see young virgins so nouzled and trained in the studie of letters, ỹ they willingly set all other vayne pastimes at naught for learninges sake. It is nowe no newes at all to see Quenes and Ladies of moste highe estate and progenie, in stede of Courtly daliaunce, to embrace vertuous exercises of readyng and wrytyng, & with woste earneste studie both erely and late to applye themselues to the acquiring of knowlage, as well in all other liberall artes and disciplines, as also moste specially of God and his moste holy worde, wherunto all christen folkes, (of what estate or degree so euer they be,) ought to the vttermoste of their possible powers, moste principally and moste earnestly themselues to geue & dedicate. But what a great cause of publique reioycyng (o lorde) maye it be, ỹ in this time of Christes harueste, euerie good bodye moste busily applyinge the

wozke of his vocatiō towardes the inning of the lozdes cōme, some by instruc-tyng the youth, some by teachyng scholes, some by preachyng to their simple flockes, some by godly inducing of their families, some by wrytyng good and godly treatises for the edifying of suche as are wilsing to reade, and some by translating good bokes out of straunge toūgues into our vulgare language for the helpe of the vnlearned: the most noble women of blonde and estate royall, are no lesse diligent trauaillours then the best, (in any of the aboue named offices mete for their sexe,) ne take any maner shame or disdeigne in ꝑ labour of drawing this haruest home, to bee layned as ꝑ like fellowes with in-ferioure persons of moste lowe degre and condicion. Howe happie art thou, o England, for whose behoufe and edifying in Christe, Quenes and Pzin-cesses spare not ne cease with all earnest endeuour and sedulitee to spende their tyme, their wittes, their substaunce, and also their bodyes. And in this behalfe lyke as to your highnesse, moste noble Quene Katerine, as wel for compofyng and setting foorth many goodly psalmes and diuerse other contemplatiue meditations, as also for causyng these paraphyzases of the moste famous clerke and moste godly writer Erasmus of Roterodam to bee translated into oure vulgare language, Englande can neuer bee able to render thankes sufficiente:
so may it neuer bee able (as her deserres require) enough to ꝑaise & magnifye the moste noble, the moste vertuous, the moste wittye, and the moste studious Ladye Maries Grace, daughter of the late moste puissaunte and moste victozious kyng Henry the eyght of moste famous memozie, and moste derely beloued systur to the king our soueraigne lozde that now is, it maye neuer bee able (I saye) enough to ꝑaise and magnifie hir Grace for takyng suche great studie, peine and trauaill, in translatyng this paraphyzase of the said Erasmus vpon the gospel of John at your hyghnesse speciall contemplation, as a noumbze of right well learned men wolde bothe haue made courtesie at, and also would haue brought to wurse frame in the doyng. O how greatly maie we all glozy in suche a pierlesse flowre of virginitee as her Grace is: who in the middes of Courtly delices, and emiddes the enticementes of wozldly vanities, hatie by her owne choice and electiō so vertuously, and so fruictefully passed her tendze youth, that to the publique comforte and gladfull reioycing whiche at her byrth she brought to all Englande: she doeth now also conferre vnto the same the vnestimable benefite of fertheryng bothe vs and our posteritee in the knowleage of Goddes wozde, and to the moze clere vnderstandyng of Christes gospell. O royal exercise in dede of virginly education. O vnestimable and precious fruite of maydenly studies. O noble succesle of princely spending the tyme, especially in a womā. O zele of prouokyng Gods glozy wozthy im-mozalitee of fame and renoume. For what couldе be a moze manifeste argumente of myndyng the publique benefite of her countrey, what couldе bee a moze euident proofe of her will and desyre to doo good to her fathers moste derebeloued subiectes, what could be a moze plaine declaratiō of her most constaunt purpose to promote Goddes wozde, and the free grace of his gospell:
then so effectually to prosecute the wozke of translatyng whiche she had begoonne, that whan she had with ouer peynfull studie and labour of wrytyng, cast her weake body in a grieuous and long sickenesse, yet to the intent the diligent Englishe people shoulde not bee defrauded of the benefite entended and ment vnto them: she committed the same wozke to Maister Fraunciſce

Maiet doctour in the faculitee with all celeritee and expedicion to be finished and made complete. That in caſe the kynges maieſties moſte royall commaundemente by his moſte godly iniunccions expreſſed, declared, and publiſhed, (that the ſayed Paraphraſes ſhoulde within certaine monethes bee ſette fooythe to the Curates and people of this Realme of Englande) hadde not ſo preuented her grace, but that ſhe might eftſones haue put her hyle to the pooliſhing thereof: where it is nowe alreadie verye abſolute and perfect, it wouldethan emong the rude and homely doonges of me and ſuche as I am, none otherwiſe haue glyttered, then clothe of golde empowdred emog patches of canuelle, or Perles and Diamoundes emong peobleſtones. But in the meane tyme, to what learned man maye not the ſedulitee of ſuche a noble princeſſe bee a ſpurre and prouocacion to employe the talente of his learnyng and knowlage to the publique vſe and commoditee of his countrey? To who maye not this moſte notable exaumple of ſo vertuous a Lady, be an occaſion to ſhake of all ſluggiſhenelle, and to yeld vnto the common weale of Englande ſome condigne fruicte of his ſtudie and learning? To what idle loiterer maye not this moſt excellent acte of a kynges daughter and the ſame a kynges ſiſtur bee a ſhame, and reproche of negligence? To what perſones, be they neuer ſo ignoraunt or vnlearned) maie not this moſt earneſt zele of a princeſſe of ſuche highe eſtate, bee an effectuall prouocacion and encouragyng to haue good myndeand wyll to reade, hearc, and embrace this deuout and catholyke Paraphraſe ſo plainly and ſenſibly translated, and ſo graciouſly by her offred, and (as ye would ſaie) put in all folkes handes to be made familiar vnto them?
Beſechyng therfore almighty god that it maie in the hartes of all good Engliſhe people take no leſſe place, ne worke any other effect of godly knowleage and innocent liuing, then your highneſſe in procuryng theſe traſlacions, and the ſaid Ladie Maries grace on her partie alſo haue ment it: I ſhall ſembleablye be a continuall peticioner to his diuine Maieſtee, longe yeres to preſerue bothe your eſtates: you to the procuring of many ſuch good translacions for the edi-fying of ſimple people in Chriſtes diſcipline, and her to the doing of many lyke actes for the publique vtilitee of vs al, wherby ye maye both of you attayne in this worlde condigne fame and renoume with perpetuall memorie emong men, and after this lyfe a croune of immortall glorye and blilſe in heauen eternally there to raigne with Chriſt and his holy Aun-geles. Amen.

To the moste renoumed Prince/ Ferdinando Archeduke of Austriege, and brother to Charles the fift, the Emperour of the Romaynes. Erasmus of Roterodam wysheth health.

THe laste yere, moste gracious prince Ferdinando, I tooke on hande to write a paraphrase vpon the gospell of saincte Mathewe, moze at the vrgente requeste of the moste reuerende Lorde Mathewe, Cardinall of Hedune, then of myne owne myndc, partly because the greate excellencie of the woozke by a certayne reuerente feare withdrewe my mindc from medlinge therwithall, partlye also for manyche as there was besides this, many and sundry difficulties, the whiche might abashe my weakenesse (whiche did acknowleage his owne inhabilitie) from medlyng with a treatise so farre aboue my power, so that me thought I was vtterlye dispatched of all suche kinde of wzytyng: yet all this not withstandyng I am compelled (I cannot tell how) after the same sorte to declare the ghospell of sainte John, partely by the succesle of my former bolde enterprise partly by the auctozitie of certayne noble personages, whose desire, if I should not satisfie, I might be thought very vnkynde, and wicked also yf I should disobey their commaundementes: yet was it not vnknowen vnto me how muche moze full of godly maiestie this present gospell was, the whiche foz the moste parte doeth trauaile in the declaracion of suche secrete misteries, as vnto the nature of God doeth appertaine, and the wonderfull copulacion of the sayed nature vnto ours by his incarnacion. Foz what is he that canne by very imaginacio, comprise how that God the father, beyng without beginning, doeth continually beget God the sonne: in to whom the begetter doeth so wholy powze out him self, that yet thereby he is nothyng diminished, of whō also the sayed sonne is after suche wyse borne, that yet thereby he is nothyng secluded: againe how that from them bothe, the holy ghoste doeth so procede, that there continueth a perfit copulacion of one nature emōgst them, without any confusion of the distincte propzietie in persons? Who can by witte atteyne to knowe by what coniunccion the omnipotente and vnspeakeable nature by incarnacion, did couple mannes nature vnto hys: so that the selfesame whiche euermoze had bene very God of the lyuyng God begotten, was also very man borne of the virgin Marie? In the declaracion of suche matters, in the whiche oftentymes, the bare transposing of one woozde is an haynous offence, what lybertie can a Paraphrase haue? Aboute all this I did perceyue that I muste go, if I did prosecute my purpose, ouer places incumbzed with many and sundry difficulties: hedged and diched, parted and diuided with studdes, and gulfes, ouer the whiche it should not be possible to passe by reason of thickets, and standynge moates. Foz there is none of all the gospels that hath eyther moze, oz moze harde questions to be solued, either in whom moze vehement studie hath been bestowed of the old and excellent autours: finallye in whose exposicion the interpreters do moze varry and discent, the whiche verilye I doe not thinke meete to be imputed to their dulnesse oz lacke of learnyng, but either to the obſcurrite of the ſtile or elles to the diffuſenes of thinges conteyned therin. There were beſides theſe, other peculiar difficulties in the ſayed matter, becauſe that all the wordes which the Euangeliſt doeth attribute vnto Chriſt, are intricate with enigmaticall queſtions, the whiche if a man ſhoulde expreſſe in wyſe of a paraphraſe, ſuche thinges will not agree with their anſwer, ꝑ did not perceiue to what purpoſe Chriſt did ſpeake ſo. For many thynges be ſpoken of Chriſt, after ſuche a ſorte, that he knewe well that they neither coulde, neither woulde he that they ſhould be perceyued vntill the concluſion of the thyng dyd declare his ſayinge: Furthermore in aſmuche as it is the office of a Paraphraſte to expreſſe that thing that is briefely ſpoke, and in fewe wordes couched, with more copy & plety of wordes, I could not obſerue ꝑ due meaſure of time. For wher as it is read that our lorde did waſhe his maundy vpon the night time with his diſciples, & at the ſayed time to haue waſhed their feete, yet after ti eſame maundy he had ſo long cõmunicatiõ with his diſciples, that it maye be thoughte a wonder that he had time to ſpeake ſo manye wordes, namelye ſeyng that the wordes of the other Euangeliſtes do declare that manye other thynges alſo were bothe ſayed and doone by hym theſame nighte: wherfore dewe meaſure in tyme could not be obſerued of me, whiche ſhould declare at large all the ſayed thynges with more copy & plenty of wordes. Finallye this Euangeliſt hath a certaine peculiar kynde of ſtile of his own. For he doth knit his ſtile as thoughe it were ring & ringe ioyned & linked togither ſumtime with contrary mẽbres, ſumtime with like, ſumtime with one ſelfe thynge ſundry tymes repeted, ſo that a paraphraſte is not able to expreſſe ſuche pleaſaunte elegance of his ſtile: I meane ſuche places as this: In principio erat verbum, & verbum erat apud deum, & deus erat verbum. In the beginning was the worde, and the worde was with God: & God was the worde. In theſe .iii. places worde after worde, & God after God is pleaſauntly repeted. And by and by repetyng agayne the beginning, he concludeth the ſentence. Hoc erat in principio apud Deum. Theſame was in the beginninge with God: & again: Omnia per ipſum facta ſunt, & ſine ipſo factum eſt nihil. All thynges were made by theſame, & without theſame was nothing made ꝑ was made. Quod factum eſt in ipſo vita erat, & vita erat lux hominum, & lux in tenebris lucet, & tenebre eam non comprehenderunt. In him was the life, & the life was ꝑ light of men, and the lighte ſhyneth in derkenes, and the derkenes did not cõprehend it. In theſe ſett doeth appeare how that euery membre of the ſentence doeth alwaye repete the former, ſo that the ende of the former beginneth the latter: & ſuche a lyke thyng may be perceiued here, as the Greke Eccho is wõt to repreſent: but as touchyng theſe thinges, ſumthyng haue I ſpoken in the argumentes of the Euãgeliſtes goſpels and Epiſtles. This peculiar grace and elegancie of ſpeche, I perceiued well could haue no place in my paraphraſe. Therfore although I did perceiue theſe and many other like difficulties, yet I toke vpon me this buſye piece of worke, ſeyng that ſo many and noble men did by theyr exhortation, encourage me thereto, & by auctoritie enforce me: ſpecially becauſe the good ſucceſſe of my former dewtie and obedience, rather than any preſumption, dyd bolden me to theſame. For I had not onely good ſucceſſe forasmuche as the gentyll reader for my trauayle and paines doeth thanke me, but alſo forasmuche as Charles (of al Emperours ꝑ for this eight hundreth yeres hath reigned in this world, both of moſte puiſſance, if we beholde his large dominion, and alſo the moſte vertuous, if we conſider beſides his other very imperiall qualities, his feruẽt affection affection and zeale towardes religion and godlynes) hath this my paynes (for vnto him I did dedicate it) not only by countenaunce and wordes, but also by letters both full honorably and louingly written, certified me that it was most thankfully accepted of his grace, when vpō me thought it conuenient that seing Mathew was to the Emperour Charles dedicate and presented: John should be vnto Ferdinando, the other and second Charles, dedicate. And plainly good hope doeth greatly comfort my minde, promising me that it shal come to passe, that like as my former labour by Charles good fauour did wel procede, & had good successe, so shal this my present endeuour by the gracious fauour of Ferdinando, procede & haue lucky successe. These be two names in our tyme moste fortunate, a couple of brethren in these daies moste lucky. Neyther is it to be doubted, thinke I, but ỳ the fauour of God wil prosperously set forth the godly purpose of suche so godly disposed princes. For a man maye (as I thynke) haue a good opinion in them, in whom beeyng yet of tender age, the excellente fruite of vertue doeth satisfy ỳ great expectation the whiche (if I might so call it) the blading tendre age did put vs in comfort of. For in your very chyldage, there appered in you a certayne straunge and meruelous towardenes of suche prudencie, moderacion, mekenes, integritie, deuotion and godlines that euery mā did hope that your grace woulde be a wonderfull excellent prince in euery condicion perfite and absolute. And now as touchyng the publike hope, that al the whole world hath cōceyued of you, like as hitherto you haue not frustrated it, so haue you brought to passe that nowe when you be come to the age of more discrecion, it doeth appere that you will not onely contente and fulfill the sayde hope and expectacion, but also the desire of all men to the vttermoste. My litle treatise of a Christian prince, suche as it was, for many dayes agoe when ye were a young man, you caused all studious persons to lyke, in asmuche as ye dyd vouchesafe to reade it. And this present worke dedicate vnto your graces name, you shall like wise cause to be lyked, seing that of all youg mē in our time you be the stoure, and for manyfold considerations vnto all the worlde moste derely beloued, neyther shall ye so do eyther to aduaunce your glorye and renoume, eyther to procure me any benefit or commoditie, for neyther your noble estate, neyther suche a sober and moderate nature doeth court or looke for the prayse or commendacion of man, neyther my minde or fantasie doeth seke any thyng els, then the fauour of Christe, but that those for whose furtheraunce these paines were taken (and for all men in generall is my paine bestowed) more plentifully might haue cōmoditie ther by. For suche as be of their owne nature commendable, haue then especiall profite and singuler commoditie, when they ouerrum all malice, and be thought worthie the fauour and commendacion of all men. To this present purpose maye your grace muche helpe, if you declare this my present worke compiled by my payne and studie, for to haue bene not reiected of your graces maiestie. For it is not to be feared, I truste, leste your graces wysdome geue credence vnto them. the whiche peraduenture will saye when they shal vnderstande a paraphrase vpon the ghospell to be dedicate vnto prince Ferdinando, what should a lave prince and a younge manne do with the gospelle And wil make cauillacion & saye ỳ I geue frogges wine, as the Greke prouerbe speaketh. As thoughe it wer to be thought that only suche do presente princes wt mete gifres, ỳ which bryng vnto them bokes writtē in barbarous tōgue, conteyning matters of huntyng, kepyng of dogges, and hoūdes, of in-ghes for warre, yea & mafortune of diſing & carding. Verily I am in a contrary opinio: for I deame that where the euangelical and heauenlye philoſophie is thought to be to all, of the hyeſt, lowest, and myddle eſtate, wonderfull profitable, yet it is to none more neceſſarie, then to the ſupreme heades & powers of the worlde. For the more weight, charge, & burden, that they ſuſteyne, the more daungerous the ſtormeis, that appertaineth vnto them for to caulme and aſſuage, the more manyfold occaſions they haue whereby good wyttes well inclined by nature, and well inſtructed by education, maye be marred and corrupted, ſo muche the more it is semyng that they ſhoulde be inſtructed and armed more diligently then the reſte, with the moſte godly and infallible preceptes of holy doctrine: for ſuche cannot offende withoute the great dammage of the whole worlde. It is the peculiar office of the prelates to nouriſhe ỹ people with plentifull and abundant foode of the euangelicall doctrine. For the which cauſe they be called paſtours and herdes in ſcripture. I graunte all theſe to bee true. Yet the poete Homer of the moſt cõmendable chriſtian auctors is commẽded, & not vnworthily, becauſe he calleth a kyng, a herd ouer his people: howe muche more then it is mete ỹ this name & title agre with euery chriſtiã prince. A prince doeth not preache & teache the goſpell, but he doeth obſerue, practiſe, & fulfill it, & yet doeth he after a ſore teache it, whoſoeuer doeth kepe & obſerue it. But how can he fulfil it if he knowe it not? how ſhall he knowe it, excepte by diligente and frequent readyng he peruſe it, except with a great ſtudie he profoundly print it in his memorie? whom behoueth more ſtedfaſtlye to beleue ỹ the celeſtial king is gouernour of this worlde, vnto whõ nothing is vnknowen, whoſe eyes no man can beteiue, whoſe power no man can reſiſte, who ſhal iudge euery man accordyng to his merites, then the ſupreme powers, whiche by reaſon of their power do dreade no man, and can if they liſt eaſilye deceyue whome they liſt: whiche if they treſpaſſe any thyng, bee not cited to appere at any mortall mans conſiſtory, but be commended alſo of tymes for their mildedes? In whoſe myndes ought it to be more depely grauen that after this preſent lyfe (wherof the kynges theſe ſlues haue no aſſuraunce, no not aſmuche as of an houre and whiche no man can enioye long) there is to come another lyfe, that neuer ſhall haue ende: in the whiche indifferentlye without reſpecte of eſtate, or dignitie, (ſauing that the ſtrayter iudgement ſhalbe to them, ſtraiter accõpt ſhal they make, ỹ which in this worlde hath ſurmounted other in roume office, and auctorite) euery man ſhall by the ſentence of the moſte righteous & iuſt iudge (whoſe iudgemẽt no man ſhall eſcape) reape ỹ croppe of that, which he hath ſowen in this preſẽt life, neither ſhall anye eſcape but that either for his good dedes he ſhall receyue the croune of eternal glory and bliſſe, or els for his offences be committed to euerlaſtyng fier: in whoſe myndes (I ſay) is it more neceſſarie this thyng to be depely inkred, then theirs, whom al kynd of proſperitie and flatterye of man, doeth prouoke both to ſet their aſſiaunce in thynges preſent, & to forget what is hereafter to come. In whoſe memorie is it requiſite more depely to be printed, that Chriſt hath plainlye threatened vs in theſe wordes, (wo be to ỹ riche, & the high powers of this worlde, which hath their comfort in this worlde) than in theirs whiche haue plentie, and ſtore of all ſuche thinges, whereby mans minde is corrupt & degenerate. In whoſe eares is it more cõueniẽt diligently to be beate that euery man ought warely to beſtowe his talent which the lorde hath committed vnto him, in the waye of vſurie, for the lordes auauntage, and wil cal euery e man to make accompte thereof, then theirs whiche by reason of their power committed vnto them by God, may at their pleasure, either profit most, or disprofit most in this world. Who ought more, assuredly to beleue that all men be they neuer so puissant & in high auctoritie, can of themselues do nothyng, & that all thynges that be good & commendable, do come of God, of whom al thinges ought to be desired, that maye by christian petition lawefully be desired, and that vnto him the whole glory and prayse of all that we prosperously do in our affaires ought only to be attributed and ascribed, then they whom the world doeth commende and magnifie by reason they haue suche thinges as Christ taught should be despised: who because of certaine vaine and fantastical apparent shadowes of thinges þ seeme commendable, þ base sorte doeth in maner regard and worship as goddes: who ought more thereowly be persuaded, þ sternnes is hated of God, that iniurie ought not to be reuenged by iniury, þ nothyng is more commendable the peace nothyng more acceptable to God then meekenes & clemencie, then suche whome so muche busynes dayly doeth prouoke to vnquietnes, to warre, & reuengyng of displeasures. In whose minde ought it more deply be printed, þ neyther for desire of life, neither feare of death, it is lawfull to swarue from honesty þ in this present life no man ought to loke for to be rewarded for his merites & desertes, seyng that in the nexte world no man shall be defrauded of his dewe rewarde, then in the myndes of princes, whom so many occasions doeth oft and many tymes entise & allure to dishonestie. Verely such a minde vpon which þ generall felicitie or miserie of the whole world doeth depend, ought with weightie & profound persuasions of philosophy be armed: whereby it maye vpryghtly & nothyng shrinking, perseuer against all policies and engines of this worlde: but suche doctrine whiche doeth so peyse the minde that it be not tossed by the waues and surges of fortune, and worldly busines, no other wyse then the balans dothe stayet the shippes in tyme of tempest, can neither more conueniently, neither of more certayne veritie, neyther yet of more efficacie and power be collected out of any other worke, then the ghospel of God. If þ prophane princes, forasmuch as they must commonly trauaile in worldly affaires, & maintenaunce of publique tranquillite and reste, cannot alwayes obserue suche thynges as they perceiue, and iudge to be most conuenient to be kepte & obserued yet at the least if the euangelical doctrine be profoundly rooted in them, they shal be able to do this, that forasmuche as lieth in them to do, they shall alwaye endeuoure themselues to approche nigh vnto þ performaunce of Christes preceptes, & litle or nothing swarue from theyr marke. This thing as we desire that it may appeare in all such as be gouernours of this worlde, so most gracious prince Ferdinando, we greatly hope to se it in you, whome we haue known from your childeage hitherto, to haue been maruelously geuē to the readinge of the gospell for you were not wont, whyle thepriest is at seruice, to spende your tyme either in superstitious kind of prayers, eyther vnfruitful iagling as the moste parte of nobilite doth, but to ope the testamēt, & reuerently to se what the epistle & gospel of that day doeth instructe & exhorte you to do. Neyther do we doubt but that this example of your childage, you haue muche encreased by encrease of age. Neyther do we mystrust but that in tyme to come in euery place, many other will folowe this your example. For lykeas an infection of vice taken at the example of men of eſtate, doeth ſpedely creepe vnto many: euen ſo the example of vertue, if it haue his beginning of renoumed perſons, will ſoone be well lyked of all men. In what eſtimacion the worde of God was had in old time, may euidently appere by thoſe rites and ceremonies as yet be vſed in the churche, lefte vnto vs of old antiquitie. The boke is adorned truly with gold, iuery, & precious ſtones, reſerued & laied vp deuoutly amongſt ye iewels. It is not broughte forth ne caried in without greate reuerence. The goſpeller deſireth the licence of hym that doeth execute, that he maye rede and pronounce it. After that, ther is cauſed an holy perfume by cenſing of frankincenſe, of ſtacten, the droppyng of mirrha, of mirrha it ſelfe, and of the powder of the herbe galbanum. The foreheed and breſt hath the ſigne of the croſſe made vpon them, glorye is geuen to the lorde downe to the ground, euery man ariſeth and ſtandeth bolte vpright, the heades be bare, the eares attentife, the eyes full of reuerence. At the name of Jeſus as oft as it is mencioned, the knees be bowed downe to the ground, after all this with great reuerence he holdeth the boke before his breſt, and carieth it about, euery man doeth kiſſe it, and at the laſte it is reuerently layd vp emongeſt ye reliques. What other thyng doeth theſe ceremonies meane, or put vs in remembraunce of, than ye nothing ought of chriſtian men to be more regarded, more derely beloued, more reuerently handled, then that celeſtiall doctrine, whiche Chriſt hath preached vnto all perſones: the whiche for ſo manye hundreth yeres ago, the conſent of the whole worlde hath allowed, the whiche againſt this worlde, and the prince therof, maketh vs to prenaile: but like as wurthely the vain and miſordred deuocion of the Jewes is reproued, whiche Jewes doe greate reuerence vnto the booke of their lawe the olde teſtamente, in laying pure and cleane clothes vnder it, kneling downe to it, and wurſhipping it, not once touchyng it, but with cleane and vndefiled handes, (where as ſuch thinges as their lawe doeth chiefly teache them, they wickedly contemne and deſpyſe) ſo it is to be perceyued of vs, that we be not as vndeuoute in keping and fulfylling the ghoſpel, as we be ſuperſticious and ſcrupulous obſeruers of the rites and ceremonyes. For what doeth it auayle to haue the booke adourned with Iuorye, ſiluer, golde, and ſylke, if our lyuing bee polluted and infected with ſuch vice as the ghoſpell doeth ſo ſtraytely forbid: if our ſoule bee decked with no vertue accordyng to the ghoſpell: what can the booke auayle vs bowne before our hert, if the doctrine of it be not in our herte and mynde: what ſeruice doeth the perfume and odour cauſed by cenſyng, if that his doctrine bee contemned, if our lyuyng haue a dayly peſtilent ſauer: what the better be we to bowe downe our necke to the booke, if our luſtes obſtinately and with ſtiffe neckes repine at his preceptes: what doeth it profit and auayle vs to riſe vp, and to ſtand bare headed, if al our whole life be ſuche that it declare openly that we deſpiſe the doctrine of the ghoſpell: howe dare ye be ſo bolde as to kiſſe the boke that the ghoſpell is in, the whiche breyng ſubiect to lecherye, to auarice, to ambicion, to ſenſualitie, and vice, do defile and diſhoneſt the admonicions of the ghoſpell: howe dare he kyſſe the booke that teacheth nothyng but peace, but mekenеſſe, and charitie, the whiche deſpyſyng Chriſtes doctrine is wholy conſumed with enuie, repleniſhed with hatred, boyleth in anger, inflamed with deſyre to bee reuenged, furious and madde againſt his neyghbour, the whiche alſo (ſo his mynde maye bee ſatiſfied) forceth not by wood battayle to ſet all the worlde by the eares together-howe dare he be so impudente as to embrace and worshippe this holye bookes, the whiche in all kinde of liuing and conuersacion is vtterly geuen and married vnto this worlde, whiche as a mortall enemy, the doctrine of the gospell doeth detestate and abhorre? with cleane handes and verye reuerentlye we vse to touche the holy boke of the gospell, and with filthy myndes doe we despise the precepte of the gospell: why doe we not rather lay the to our hert? why doe we not kille them with mind and pure affection? why do we not here doe we do wn our neckes? Certain there be that hath hanging about their necke, and carie the about with them a part of S. Iohns gospell, as a remedie against diseases, and suche other heuy misfortunes. Why doe not we rather beare aboute with vs the doctrine of the gospell in our mynde, the whiche maye remedy all disease of synne and vice? I doe not discommend any ceremonies, I doe not raile vpon the deuocion of the simple people: but plainly, thā will these saied thinges profit vs, if we put in practeyse that thynge whiche the visible signes putteth vs in remembraunce of. If we be true christien men, that is to saye, yf we vnfainedly professe the doctrine of the gospell, let vs inwardlye in our myndes practise all suche thynges as in these signes is outwardly represented vnto vs. I haue heard saye that it is a fashion in some places that the prince shall at the ghospell tyme stande holdyng a naked sweard in his hand, the rest laying their handes vpon the hyltes. Howe shall he defende the ghospell with the sweard, whose mynde doeth hate the gospell, whiche is wholy affectionate vnto the vanities of this worlde, in whose opinion nothyng is lesse regarded then the excellente precious perle of the ghospell, of whome nothynge is more hated, then that whiche Christe taughte onely to be coueted? He that pouleth the people, that oppresseth the poore, that by warre defaceth all both good and badde, he that is the occasion of manyfolde calamities, for whose vaine glorye so muche mannes bloudde is shedde, dooeth he, I saye, drawe his sweard to defende Christes gospell withall? let him first be made at one with the gospell, lette him cutte awaye his vicious and naughtie appetites out of his mynde with the sweard of the gospell, and then yf he lyste, lette hym drawe his sweard against the ennemies of the ghospell. But these thynges haue I spoken, moste renowned Prynce, in the waye of aduertisement, without reproche of any person. I open the matter one lye. I reprehende no person: and the more boldelye vnto your grace I wryte thus, because no kynde of suspicion at all, of any suche faulte or enormitee, can be suspected to be in you. There bee none, Bysshoppes except that of congruence ought to liue more after the gospell then Princes. But they oftentymes by simplicitie vnder an assemblaunce of deuocion be deceyued. For by the persuasion of suche whiche be thoughte the perfite professours of religion, they oftentymes estemeit a poynt of great perfection, if they daily saie ouer their prayers the whiche they call their mattens, if they see a masse euery daye once. The whiche thinges as in a lay prince and a young man also, I graunt is a certaine token and signe of a well disposed mind, yet be there many other thinges þ whiche do more straitly apperteyn to a christē princes office thē these. For if he foresee that no stourme of warre arise, that the publike libertie be not diminished nor violated, that the poore comminaltie bee not compelled to famishe, that no naughty officers be made and permitted, in my opinion he shall do a more acceptable seruice to God, then yf he should saye these prayeres. bi. yeres together. Yet do I commende the said thinges if that whiche is more

principall bee couple dand ioyned therto. But and if a prince do ſuppoſe that he lacketh no portion of godly perfection, putting his confidence in the obſeruacion of thoſe thinges, ſetteyng a part ſuche thinges whiche do peculiarly appertain vnto a kynges office and dutie, plainly that is the confuſion of all religiō, that is the ſubuerſion of the common welth: and they that geue ſuche councel do neither geue profitable nor holſome councell for the prince, neither yet for his ſubiectes. It is a good dede to heare ſeruice, if thei be pure þ do it: but how can I cum in pure life vnto the ſacrifice doen in remembraunce of the true and highest prince, the which for to redeme his ſeruaunte bestowed his own life, if throughe my fury, my vain glory, and negligence, ſo many thouſande men bee eyther vexed or vtterlye periſhe? I thinke it not nedefull to ſhewe that for the moſt part princes be neuer at more leiſure, neither leſſe carefull, then when thei be at diuine ſeruice. What great thyng is it, if a prince ſaye thoſe prayers at an houre preſcribed therfore, whiche cannot haue ſufficiente tyme and leiſure to order and diſpoſe the affayres of a common wealth? A prince ſhall pray inough at full, if he ſaye daily and recite from his hearte, the notable prayer of the wyſe kyng Salomon. Lorde geue me wiſdome and knowledge how to behaue my ſelfe vnto thy people. Or the other prayer muche lyke vnto the ſame, the whiche the wyſe man, as I remember, reciteth in the booke of wiſdome. Geue me wiſdome whiche is euer about thy ſeate, that ſhe maie be with me, and labour with me, that I may knowe what is acceptable in thy ſighte, for ſhe knowethe and vnderſtandethe all thinges, and ſhe ſhall leade me ſoberly in my workes, and preſerue me in her power: So ſhall my workes be acceptable, and then ſhall I gouerne thy people righteouſly, and be worthy to ſitte in my fathers ſeate: who can haue knowledge of thy vnderſtandynge and meanynge, except thou geue wiſdome, and ſende thy holy ghoſt from aboue, that the waies of them which are vpon earth, maye be reformed, that men may learne the thinges that are pleaſaunt vnto the? This wiſdome that this moſt wiſe young mā deſireth to haue, may a man chiefly fynde in the holy ſcripture, if a mā liſt vnfainedly and with a godly curioſitie ſeke to haue it. Otherwiſe, howe is it cū to paſſe that chriſten mens behauiour and maners partely bee detayed into a conuerſacion worſe then the Gentiles or Ethnickes were, partly degenerated into a certaine Iudaical ſuperſticion, but by reaſon that the doctrine of the ghoſpell hath not been had in regarde? Notwithſtandyng to ſaye the very trueth, in all tymes there hath been euer ſum, of whome the goſpell hath beene hadde in due honoure and reuerence, yet neuertheleſſe for this fower hundred yeers paſt, the liuely heate and feruencie therof, hath been greatlye abated with the moſt part. Wherfore the moze we ought to the vttermoſte of our power, endeuour our ſelfe that euery man for his parte do reuiue thiſſame ſparkle of heauenly fire again, the whiche the eternall veritie Ieſus Chriſte our Lorde hath ſent downe into the earth, wiſhyng nothyng els but that it maye be feruentlye kyndled, and in great circuite to ſpreade it ſelfe abrode, and be ſet all on fyer.

In this our tyme when mans condicions be ſo corrupted and of ſo great diſſencions in opinions, wherby at this houre all thinges be confounded? out of order, whither ſhall we rather flee to haue redreſſe, then as S. Hilarie doeth well admoniſhe vs, vnto the moſt pure fountaine and well ſpring of holy ſcripture, wherof the moſte pure and vndefiled part be þ goſpels. Neyther ought the goſpel to be miſlyked of the ſupreme powers for this cauſe, as thoughe it

dyd as sum saye, cause suche to be seditious and disobedient, whose parte and duetie is to bee obedient vnto their princes: nay it rather profiteth princes in this ponte, in somuche as it doeth teache them to execute the true offices of princes, and not to bettraumtes, and causeth the people more gladlye to obey euery good prince, and more quietly to tollerate and beare with the bad. Finally the gospell is not to be blamed, if any man do not vse all of the best, that thing whiche of his nature is moste excellent, and the very best. It is called the gospel of peace: reconcilying god and vs to vnitie, and secondlye coupling mutuall loue and amitie betwene eche of vs together. If any man stumble at this stone, let him blame hymselfe and not the gospell. There is no power that man hath, no policy, no cõspiracy or coniuracion together, that is able to dauquilhe & oppresse the veritie of the gospel, whiche moste mightily setteth furth it self, when it is most greuously persecuted. But as touchyng these matters I feare me I haue heretofore spoken inough and to muche. Now that this paraphrase may with the more fruite bee red, after I haue spoken a worde or two of the euangelistes entent and purpose, I wyll make an ende. After that the lyke and doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ by thapostles preachyng and the other Euangelistes wrytinges was spred at large ouer all the world, the Euangelist S. John whome Christ so notably loued, after all the other toke on hande to wryte this present gospell, not so muche for thentent to compile the historie of the gospel, as to make reherfall of certaine thinges omitted by the other euangelistes, because they semed not inworthy to be knowen: But the especiall cause why that he wrote this gospel, men suppose was to set forth & confirme the godhead of Christ against the herelye, whiche euen in those daies (as euill weedes emongest good corne) begun to spring, and namely against the heresye of the Cerinthians, and Ebionites, the whiche besyde other erroniouse doctrine, preached that Christ was nothing els but man only: nether that he was in any wise before he was borne of ỹ virgin Marie. Now it was very necessarie that the worlde shoulde knowe and beleue Christe to be bothe very god, & very mã: of which twoo, the former article doeth principally helpe to inflame the loue of man toward him: for the better we knowe a thing, with the better will we do loue it: secõdarily it doth cause vs to haue more feruẽt courage to folowe the steps of him. For who will attẽpt to folow & counterfait ỹ thing which is borne of an aungell by a vision & apperaunce only & not in very dede: furthermore like as it is hard to obserue ỹ thinges which he cõmaundeth, euẽ so the thinges be rcedyng excellẽt that he promiseth: it was therfore requisite also, that his godhed should not be vnknowen, to thentent ỹ we might haue cõfydence ỹ he vndoubtedly would helpe his seruautes who he after such sort did loue, neither will defraude them of his promise, ỹ which is able w a becke to do what him list. The Euãgelistes ỹ wrote before S. John, made in maner no mention of the diuinitee of Christe. For I thynke this to bee the wysedome which S. Paul vsed to speake emõgst ỹ perfit, emõgst the rest professing himself to know nothing els but Jesus Christe & him to be crucified. Mi afortune as then ỹ time did not suffer so inexplycable a misterie to be put in wryting to al mens knowledge, lest it should be had in derisiõ of ỹ wicked, because they could neither beleue it, neither vnderstand it. For in other matters also the olde aũcient auctours as oft as they make mẽcion of heauẽly thinges, doe vse to speake both very seldome and very reuerently therof, beeyng more copious in suche

thynges as doe more profite and appertaine to godly lyuing. The Apostle S. Iohn was constrayned therfore by the vndiscrete boldenes of the heretikes, more plainly & euidently to affirme both the natures to be in Christe, like as by the bolde presumpcion of the Arians, the catholyke fathers were inforced more precisely to discusse certaine thinges as touching the same matters wher as they would rather not haue medled with the diffinicion of suche matters, whiche both doeth greatly passe the capacitie of mannes wittes, and cannot be determined without great daunger and perill. But as for this matter not without consideracion it was referred for S. Iohn so wel beloued of Christ, and so well worthy, whome as he that is the well of all wysedome dyd loue aboue the reste more feruētly, so is it to be beleued that the same did more plentifully reuele and open certain secretes and misteries vnto hym (if I maye so cal him) his so wel beloued dearlyng. Hym therfore so derely beloued of Christ, let vs all profoundly and groundely vnderstand, that we for our part may be the louers of Christ. Well of this one thing and no more, I will put the reader to acknowleage, that in this present Paraphrase I folowe the mynde of moste allowed olde autours, but not in euery place, neyther in euery thing: for they themselues do often dissent emong themselues, yet do I alway sincerely and faithfully, declare and bring forth that, the which me thinketh is the most true sence & meaning, for as muche as I dyd perceiue that the olde auctours contendyng against the opinion of heretikes, haue wrested some places some thing violently to their purpose, yet it is not my mynde that any manne gene more credence to this my Paraphrase, then he would gene to a commentarye, if I had wrytten one vpon it, notwithstandyng a Paraphrase is a kynde of a commentarie. As for allegories in the whiche I perceiue the olde auctours to haue been very scrupulously and superstitiously diligente, haue I not medled withal, but very seldome, neyther more copiously then me thought conuenient. Farewell redoubted prince, & with all your endeuour, fauour and sette forth the glory of the gospell, so almightie Christ of his part graciously assist you in all your desyres.

¶Saint Johns lyfe wrytten by Saynt Jerome.

OHn the Apoſtle whom Jeſus loued eight well, beyng the ſonne of Zebedeus, and James the Apoſtles brother, whom after the Lordes deathe Herode had beheaded, wrote his ghoſpel laſt of all ꝑ reſt, being deſired thereto by the byſhops of Aſia, both agaynſt Cerinthus, and diuers other Hereſtickes, but principally agaynſte the opinion of the Ebionites, whyche euen than aroſe, whych Ebionites auouche that Chriſte was not before Marie: by reaſon whereof he was enforced to ſhew euen his diuine natiuitie, They ſaye that beſydes this, there was an other cauſe of his wrytyng, becauſe that when he had red the volumes of Matthewe, Marke, and Luke, he well allowed the rede of the Holy, and affirmed that they had ſayd the trueth, but had only made their ſtorye of one yeres acteſ, in whyche after the impriſonmente of Johñ, Chriſte ſuffered. Wherfore omitting that yeres acteſ, whyche were ſufficiently entreated of all three, he ſhewed ſuch thynges as were done before Johñ was impriſoned. Whyche thyng may euidently appeare to hym, as ſhall diligently reade the volumes of the ſowre goſpels: the whyche thyng alſo doeth take away the diſagreyng that ſemeth to be betwene Johñ and the reſt. He wrote beſides the premiſſes one Epiſtle, which beginneth thus. That which was from the begynnyng, which we haue heard, which we haue ſene with our yes. &c. The other two which begin. The elder vnto the welbeloued Lady and her children. &c. And the elder to the beloued Caius, whom I loue in the trueth. &c. are affirmed to haue been written of Johñ the preeſt, whoſe ſcrule all toumbe is at this daye to be ſene at Epheſus, and many ſuppoſe that there are two memorials of this ſame Johñ the Euangeliſt, of whyche matter we will entreate, after we ſhall by order come to the lyfe of Baptas his ſcholler. In the ſowertenth yere than, at what tyme Domicianus after Nero ſtyred vp the ſeconde perſecution, Johñ being baniſhed into the Ile of Pathmos, wrote ꝑ Reuelation, which is entitled the Apocalipſis, which Iuſtine the martir, and Irenæus doe make commentaries vpon. But after Domician was ſlayne, and all his actes reuoked by the Senate, becauſe of his ouermuche cruelitie, he returned to Epheſus, in the tyme of prince Nerua: and continuyng there vntill the tyme of the Emperour Traiane, he inſtituted and gouerned all the churches of Aſia, and there continued vntil he was impotente for age. He lyued the three ſcore and eight yere after the paſſion of the Lorde Jeſu, and was buried a lyttle beſyde the ſame Citie.

The paraphraſe of Eraſmus

vpon the goſpell of ſainct Johñ.

¶ The firſt Chapiter.

Ecauſe the nature of God doeth paſſe beyond meaſure the weakneſſe of mans wit, although in other thinges it be right good and of quicke ſight, yet that diuine nature can neither be perceiued with our ſenſes, as it is in dede, ne conceyued in mynde, imagyned nor expreſſed with wordes. And although in thinges create, certain apparaūce of godly power, wiſdome, and goodneſſe is ſhewed, and ſo it commeth to paſſe that the ſimilitudes brought forthe of thoſe thinges, whiche we doe ſumwhat perceyue with our ſenſes and witte, maye bringe vs into ſumme ſmall and ſhadowelyke knowlage of incomprehenſible thinges, that we may behold theim as it were in a dreame and a cloude, yet that not withſtanding no ſimilitude maye bee taken out of any thinges create, whether ye behold the Aungels, the woorke-manſhip of the heauens, or els theſe inferiour bodies, whiche although they bee familiare to our ſenſes, neuertheleſſe we cannot fully perceiue theim: no ſimilitude I ſay, cañe bee brought forth of any of theſe forſaied thinges, whiche maye in all poyntes agree to the reaſon and nature of thoſe thinges, of the whiche for to attaine the knowelage, thoſe compariſons are brought in place. Therfore it behoueth manne to apply all the ſtudy of his minde to this, that he may rather loue the goodneſſe of God, then meruail at, or comprehende his highneſſe, whiche neither Cherubin or Seraphin doeth fully attayne to. And although God cannot but bee meruaylous in all his woorkes, yet he had rather be beloued of vs for his goodneſſe, then to be meruayled at for his excellēcy. But the more full knowlage of the diuine nature is reſerued in the worlde to come for theym, whiche haue purged the eyes of their herte here, through godlyneſſe of innocent lyfe. No man knoweth the father as he is in dede but the ſonne, and ſuche as the ſonne will manifeſte him vnto. Therfore to ſerche the knowlage of Goddes nature with mans reaſon, is preſumptuous boldeneſſe: to ſpeake of thoſe thinges that cannot bee expreſſed with wordes, is madneſſe, to geue iudgemente therof, is wickedneſſe. If we haue grace in the meane while to beholde any parte therof, it is more truely comprehended with pure faith, then with the helpe of mans wiſedome. And in the meane tyme it is enough for to attayne eternall ſaluacion, to beleue thoſe thinges of God, whiche he did openly ſette forth of himſelfe in holy ſcripture, by men choſen for that purpoſe, whiche were inſpired with his ſpirite: and ſuche thinges as he himſelfe afterwarde being conuerſaunt in yerth, opened to his diſciples: and laſt of all hath vouchſaued to declare manifeſtly by the holy goſt to the ſame diſciples choſen for that entent. To beleue theſe thinges ſimply and truly, is chriſten wiſedome, to reuerence theſe thinges with a pure hert, is true religion: By theſe thynges to goe forewarde vnto the meditacion of an heauenly lyfe, is godlyneſſe: to continue and perſeuer in theſe thinges, is victorye: to haue had the victorie by theſe thinges, is the whole ſumme of felicitie. But for man to ſerche of godly cauſes with mans reaſons further then theſe thinges, is a certaine perilous and wicked boldnes. And although it ſemed to be enough ỹ was borne vnto preached and ſet furthe in writinge of the other Euangeliſtes, whiche declaring in order the natiuitie of Jeſu Chriſte as concerning his manhed, life, & deathe, did affirme him to haue the true nature of man: and forthermore by declaringe his ſermones, reherſinge his miracles, and reſurrection from death, did ſo declare his godly nature as that time required: ſpeaking nothynge all that while of his diuine natiuitie, by the wiche he was borne by an vnſpeakable waye of his father without beginninge: and rekeninge alſo to call him manifeſtly by the name of God, to thintente that neyther the truethy ſhould be hidden from thoſe that were godly diſpoſed and eaſy to be taughte, neither occaſion ſhould be geuen to the weake and vntaught Jewes to go backe frō the doctrine of the ghoſpell, whiche had vtterly perſwaded themſelfes by the tradicion of their elders, and alſo out of Moyſes holy bookes, that the name of God couldenot bee right fullye attributed but onelye to God the father, whom they had alwaies wurſhipped. And beſides that alſo leſte the gentiles, whiche did wurſhippe innumerable goddes, yea goddes made of men, ſhould haue taken occaſion to continue in their peruerſe errour, if they had perceiued that in the ghoſpell the name of god had beene made common to many, which thinge the eares of the Jewes not hable to receiue this myſtery (as thinkinge that name to bee appropriate but to one) at the firſte could by no meanes haue borne. And the minde of the Gentiles beynge broughte vp in the opinion of many goddes, coulde not at the firſte bee perfectly taughte, that there were thre deuided in proprietie of perſones, of the wiche thre euerye one was very God: and yet thre was but one God. by the occaſion of one godly nature, whiche was common to all thre equally. Yet thus it hath pleaſed God that to thintente the faith of the ghoſpell ſhoulde bee the more ſtabliſhed he, woulde haue it declared to mankinde by litle and litle, as ſhoulde beſte ſerue the time and mans capacitie. So the nacion of the Jewes did wurſhippe God the father deuoutly many hundrethe yeres, being ignorannte bothe of the ſonne & the holy goſte. And the ſonne of God himſelfe whan he was here in yerthe a verray man, and (as we can witnes) did hunger, thirſte, ſlepe, ſorowe, wepe, was diſpleaſed, & had compaſſion, longe ſuffred to be reputed for none other but manne, yea euen of his owne diſciples. Alſo after his reſurrection he would haue them ignorannt in ſome thinges. In ſo muche that by the holy goſte he did not open all thynges to them, but thoſe thinges onelye, whiche helped forwarde the perſwaſion and beliefe of the euangelical doctrine and ſaluacion of mankinde. For conſidering that the nature of godly thinges is in comprehenſible, yea to the highest wittes of men or Angels, and the profeſſion of the goſpel pertaineth indifferently to all men, the heauenlye father hath opened vnto vs ſo muche of godly thinges by his ſonne, as he hath willed to be ſufficiente for the obtayninge of our ſaluacion. Therefore it comethe of a certaine perilous preſumpcion to affirme any thyng of the godly nature more then that whiche either Chriſt himſelfe, or the holy goſte haue opened vnto vs.

The texte. ¶ In the beginning was the woorde, and the woorde was with God, and God was the woorde.

But becauſe in theſe daies, as the wheate of gods woorde hath growen in the

the hertes of good folkes, ſo alſo the cockle of the wicked hath ouergrowen, whoſe curſed preſumpcion hath brayde out ſo far, that ſome hath not ben afraide to take from Jeſu Chriſte his manhed, byinging in ſtede of man, a vain vilion & ſimilitude of man: Some contrariwiſe wolde take from him his godhed, falſely ſaying that his beginning was but than, whan he was borne of the virgin Mary: becauſe they being blinded with yerthly affections, could not attain the myſtery of Gods counſaill, how ye very God toke vpon hym to be very man, that one perſon ſhoulde bee both, that in the meane while nothing ſhould be withdrawen from the immutable nature of god, and yet the perfectneſſe of his manhed ſhoulde ſtill remain. I ſhall therfore ſet forth ſum thinges more plainly in the ghoſpell, ſo much as the ſpirit of Chriſt hath vouchſaued to open vnto me, and aſmuche as he had thoughte ſufficiente to obtein ſaluacion by, thorow the faith of the ghoſpell. But as I began to ſay, foraſmuche as there is nothing any where emonges all the thinges that euer God made, wherof we may make compariſon whiche can thoughly agree with the truth of the godhed, I muſt (thoughinyproperly) vſe the termes of thinges that our vnderſtanding is acquainted with, to thintent that I may geue ſome knowlage to other, of thinges whiche paſſeth all mens vnderſtanding and vtterance. Therfore as holy ſcripture calleth God that moſt excellent minde, whiche mind is both greatter & better then all thinges that can be imagined: euen ſo it calleth his onely ſonne, the woord of that minde. For although the ſonne bee not the ſame that the father is, yet he is ſo very lyke the father, that a man may ſee the one in the other, that is to ſay, the father in the ſonne, and the ſonne in the father. But the reſemblaunce of the father, & the ſonne, whiche in mans generacion is many waies vnperfit, is moſte perfit in God the father and his ſonne. And there is nothinge which dooeth more fully and evidently expreſſe the very ſecrecye of the minde, then the true declaringe of it by woorde, for that is the very lokinge glaſſe of the minde, whiche cannot be ſeene with bodely iyes. And if we couete to haue any man knowe the will of our minde, that thinge is broughte to paſſe by no meanes more certainly or quickely, then by ſpeache: whiche being fetched out of the inward priuities of the minde conueieth by a certaine ſecrete efficacie, the minde of the ſpeaker into the minde, of the hearer, through the eares of the hearer. Neither is there any thynge amonges men more effectuall to ſtire vp euerye motion of their mindes, then to vtterit by ſpeaking. For if we haue auctorite, we maye ſhortly appointe with our woorde what we will haue done. Therfore he is called the ſonne, becauſe being equal in al other thinges with his father, he is diſtincte, and differeth in onely propirtie of perſon. He is called the word, becauſe god, whiche in his own proper nature can no waies be comprehended, wolde be knowen to vs by him: neither was his pleaſure to be knowen for any other cauſe, but to thintente we mighte attain euerlaſtinge felicitie by the knowlage of him. This birthe is not temporal or during but for a time, ne yet this woorde is like to mans woorde. There is no corporall thing in God, nothing that paſſeth with time, or can be conteined in place, neither is there in him any thynge at all ſubiect to beginninge, proceding, age, or any mutabilitie, he is alwaye one, whole, and altogether in himſelfe, and the ſonne is continually begotten of him euen ſuch an one as he is himſelfe: eternall, of him that is eternall, almighte, of him that is almightie, moſt good of him y is beſt: in concluſion God of God: neither later in time, nor inferior to hys father: the euerlaſtinge woorde of the euerlaſting mind, by the which the father ſpeaketh to himſelfe al waies as it were by a ſecret thought, yea before the world was made, being known to no body, but only to himſelfe and his ſonne. He did euermore & ſhall begette the ſonne in himſelfe, and in like wiſe did euermore bringe forthe his almighty woorde, he had no nede of any thinge that is create to whoſe felicitie nothinge can be added: but of his naturall goodneſſe he hath made this whole ingine of the world, and ſet therin euangelicall mindes, and mankinde as in the meane betweene aungels & beaſtes, to thintent he might gather of thinges wunderfully create, and alſo of himſelfe, the power, the loue, and goodnes of the maker therof. And as if there were a greate mighty king, whatſoeuer he commaundeth to be doen ſhoulde be doen by and by: euen ſo the beraye almightye father hath made all thinges by his ſonne and woorde. And firſte by this waye he ſhewed furth his woord by whom he would be knowen, as though he had ſpoken vnto vs himſelfe. And beinge ſo knowē by the wonderfulnes of his moſte fayre workemanſhip, might wind himſelfe into our inward inocions. Therefore they do erre and go very far frō the trueth, whiche thinke the woorde of god to be ſo after him in time, from whom it proceedeth, as enonges vs the mind goeth before the ſpeache. And ſo they alſo whiche take the woorde of God (by the which God the father hath made all thinges,) to bee numbred emonges thinges create. But theſe errour is more rude & groſſe, whiche do ſuppoſe the ſonne and woord of God than to haue begun and neuer before, whan he was borne bodily of the virgin Mary. What thinge ſoeuer is create hath his beginning in time, but the ſonne of God was twiſe borne, once of his father before time, or rather with out time, very God of him that is verily God: & gain he was borne of the virgin Mary in time appointed therto eternally of the euerlaſtynge father, very man of mankynde. For it hath pleaſed God after this ſorte to bringe furthe agayne to vs hys woorde, that is to ſaye his ſonne, to thintente he might be known after a more plaine waye, or more familiarly. That perſon therfore is wicked which maketh argumente that Jeſus Chriſt was nothinge els but manne, or that contendeth he him to haue beene create emonges other creatures. The father did begette him that was both the his ſonne and his woorde, & yet all one, after ſoundry waies: once in time, as touchinge his manhed, and alwaye without all time, as touchinge his godhed. For before there was this vniuerſall creacion of thinges, both yearthly and heauenly, the eternall woorde was alredy with the euerlaſtinge father. And this woorde did ſo proceede from the father, that yet it remained ſtill with the father. He was of ſuche an inſeperable nature with the father, that by propriete of perſon he was with the father: And yet he did not cleue to the father, as the accidente doeth to the ſubſtaunce: But he was god of god, he was god in God, and he was God with God, by reaſon that they both had but one diuine nature common to both. They twaine were ſo both one that nothing made difference betweene them ſauing onely the propriete of perſon of the father and the ſonne, of the ſpeaker and the woorde that was ſpoken: likeas he was the onely begotten ſonne of his onely father, ſo he was the onely woorde of the ſaid father, being therof the onely ſpeaker.

An accident is a thing that may be or not be without corrupcion of þ wherin it is, as for exaumple: one may take awaye the whightnes of a wal yet the ſubſtaunce doeth ſtil remaigne.

¶ The ſame was in the beginning with god: al thinges were by it, and without it was nothing that was made.

The texte.

And albeit this woorde was God, being almighty of him that was almighty, yet differing in propriete of perſon, not by vnlikenes of nature, he was

with

with god ỹ father, not wrought furth in time, but before all tymes: to alwayes procedyng from the fatherly mind, that neuertheles he neuer departed from the same. Neyther was he create of the father, but the father made all thynges that be create both visible & invisible, by this his worde, beyng lyke wyse eternall as he is himselfe. By the same woord he gouerneth all thinges, & by the same he hath restored all thinges, not vsyng it as an instrument or minister, but as a sonne, of the selfe same nature and vertue, that he is of: to thintent that all manier of thynges should come from the father, as the excellent Auctour and maker of the same, but by the sonne, whome he had eternally begotten, and shall beget without ende, like to himselfe in all thinges. All thinges were made by it.

The texte. ¶ In it was lyfe, and life was the light of men, and the light shineth in darkenes, and the darkenesse comprehended it not.

And this woorde of god had might & power not only to make all thinges in generall both visible and invisible at his will & pleasure, as it were with a becke, but also in that woorde was the life & strength of all thinges that were create, that by the same euery thyng should haue his naturall strength and force: and by the might whiche was once geuen to them, saue themselues in their kynde, by continuall generation. For there is nothyng idle or without vse emonges so great a multitude of thinges: Euery herbe and tree hath his strengthe put into it, and euery beast hath a certain wit in his kynde. But as by his prouidence he hath framed al thinges, whiche he hath create by a certain power naturally graffed in them, euery thing to worke his propertie, and to the continuaunce of his kinde, so he hath not lefte the moste faire workemanshyp of this woorlde without light. For as he is to all folkes the fountain of lyfe, so is he also the fountain of lyght, by reason that his fatherly power ryseth into hym the fulnes of the diuine nature, by an euerlasting nativitie. So that he only restoreth lyfe, yea euen to the dead, and by his light putteth awaye the darkenes of mens mindes be they neuer so darke. Therefore the woorde of God, whiche is Christ Jesus, is to mens myndes the selfe thing; that the yearthly sunne is to bodily eyes, whose mindes after they were fallen thorowe sinne into most depe darkenes and death, he labored to helpe with his vnspeakable charitie. For before that tyme men dyd lyue in ignoraunce, and abyding in the darkenes of synnes, worshippyng dumme ydoles, in stede of the true God, being spytefully drowned in blind desyres of their mindes, lacked the eyes of the hert, wherewith eternall trueth is perceyued. God had sprinkled into mens mindes some litle sparke of a quicke perceyuing wit, but bodily affections and darkenes of synnes had blinded the same. And the darkenes of this woorde was so very great, that neyther mans wisedome and philosophie, ne yether the religion of Moses lawe, nor yet the lyght of the Prophetes, could put it clerly awaye. But at the last came that our eternall moste bright sunne, to whose inuincible light all darkenes geueth place, and he came to restore lyfe to all men, not only to the Jewes but to all nacions of the woorlde. And by putting away the darkenes of synnes to geue lyght to all people, that thorowe the lyght of faith they might acknowlege God the father onely to be worshipped and loued, and his onely sonne Jesus Christe. This bodily sunne doth not geue lyghe to all men at once, for it hath his soondrye courses: but this other spirituall lyghte by his naturall power, dooeth shyne, yea euen in the moste thicke darkenesse of the woorlde, offeryng it selfe to all menne to thentente they maye haue lyfe again, and see the waye of eternall saluacion, whiche is open to euery body throughe the faith of the ghospell. And although the worlde being blinded with the filthines of synne, and the cloude of synfull desyres, wouslde not beholde this lyght, yet could it bee blemished with no darkenes of this worlde, how greate soeuer it were. For he onely was pure from all impureues of synne, neyther was he anye other thyng but light: all maner waiges pure and vncorrupted. For the darkenes of this worlde doeth cõtinually striue against the lyght, whiche the worlde hateth as the bewrayer of his workes, and that darkenes doth eyther quenche or darken the beames of many, but against this lyuely and eternal lyghte it couslde nothyng preuayle. The Iewes haue striuen against this lyght, the Philosophers, the great men of the world, and all those whiche hath dedicate themselfes wholly to transitoiry thinges, but this light hath had the victory: it shineth still in the middes of the darkenes of the worlde, and euer shall shine, making all men partakers therof, so they will apply themselfes to bee apt to receyue it. But what should a man doe to them whiche wittingly and willingly repell the lyght, whan it is offred vnto them, whiche whan they bee allured and called to the lyght, of purpose shut theyr eyes because they wyll not see it? Truely the sonne of God dyd leaue nothyng vndoen, wherby any man should lacke his lyght.

The texte

¶ There was sent from God a man, whose name was John, the same came as a witnes to beare witnes of the lyght, that all men throughe hym might beleue: he was not the lyght, but was sent to beare witnes of the lyght.

For he dyd not preace hymselfe sodainly into mens sight, lest he should the more haue blinded them by reason of their incredulytie and lacke of beliefe. For who would haue beleued a thing so muche to bee meruayled at, excepte it tell by tytel, he had prepared mens mindes by many wayes to beleue? Therefore he not being satisfyed to haue declared to all men by this wunderfull creation of the worlde, both his almighty power, wisedom, excedyng great goodnes, and excellent charitie towardes mankind, neyther yet contented as it were to signifie his cumming before hand by so many prophecies of the prophetes, and so many shadowes and figures of the olde lawe, in conclusion he sente a man more excellent then all the Prophetes, whose name was John, who although he destroyed the chiefe prayse of holynes emonge all men that were borne vntil his time, and was called an Aungel for the dignitie of his office being greater then any Prophetes office, yet he was none other but man, very largely endued with many giftes of God. But all those came of Goddes liberalitie, and not of his owne nature, that was geuen hym at the firste, yet he was chosen and sente of God for this purpose, that accordyng to the prophecie that was prophecied of hym before, he myght beare witnes of that godly lyght: whiche being couered with his manhed, was conuersaunt in the worlde, not (as who say) that he whiche was God, and so declared before by the voice of the father, should nede mannes witnes: but to thintent he might by all maner of meanes cause hymselfe to bee had in credit with the people, he would that John should bee the gote before the lyghte: as the day sterre appearing before, the weth the rysyng of the sunne to the worlde. And also that by his preachyng, he should prepare mennes mindes to receyue that lyght, whiche should immediatly come after. And because synne is the let wherby the heauenly lyght is not admitted and receyued, John dyd allure and call all people to penaunce, proclaming openly that the kyngdome of heauen was at hande: for the firste degree or step to the lyghte is that men should hate their owne darkenes. And this John was of so great

The same came as a witnes.

auctozitie emonge the Jewes for the excellente holines of his liuinge, that many toke him for Chriſte himſelfe, whereby Chriſt would the rather be cõmended to the Jewes by his witnes, as that time required: to thintente that litle by litle (as men do commonly vſe) he might crepe into the mindes of the people, for otherwile the meaner perſon is alwaye wount to be commended by the witnes of the greater: And Eſay had promiſed that at Chriſtes comming, there ſhoulde a certaine excellente lighte ariſe and ſpringe vp to theym whiche did liue in darkenes, and in the ſhadowe of deathe: and for that cauſe before that Chriſte was notable by his miracles, many ſuſpected John to haue been the light whiche was promiſed of the Prophete. But John was onelye the publiſher before of the true lighte, and not the light it ſelfe. Therefore Chriſte, as the opozkunitie of that time ſerued, did, as ye would ſaye, abuſe both the errour of the Jewes, and the auctozitie of John, to prepare the mindes of all men to the faithe of the goſpell. Truely John was a certaine light, that is to ſaye, a burninge candle, and geninge lighte feruently: burninge in godlines, and geuing light by holynes of life, neuertheles he was not the lighte whiche ſhould bring life to the whole worlde: but the woord of God, whereof wee doe ſpeake at this preſente was that true light, euer proceding from God the father, the fountaine of all light: from whence, what ſoeuer is lightſome in heauen and earth, bozoweth his lighte: what ſparke of witte, what knowlage of trueth, what light of faith ſoeuer there be, either emong men oz Angels, all the ſame cummeth from this fountaine. He was not the light.

¶ That lyght was the true light, which lighteth euery man that cummeth into the world. The texte.

As this worlde is blind without the ſunne, ſo all thinges are darke without this light. The worlde alſo was full of darkenes on euery ſyde, becauſe ſinne and abhominable errours did reigne in euery place. And in the tyme of this darkenes there did ofren tymes ſhine fooorth men excellent in holynes of lyfe, as a lyttell ſterre in the moſte darkeſt nyghtes, and gaue ſome lyght as it were thozow a cloud, howbeit they dyd it but to the Jewes only oz to the boz-derers of Jewry, but this true light geueth lyght, not onely to one nacion, but to all men that come into the darkenes of this worlde. The Jewes went about to challenge this lyght ſeuerally to themſelues, becauſe they thought it to be promiſed to theim onely, for almuche (as touching the fleſhe) it dyd ſpring of theim, and emonge theim: but that light came to geue lyght to the herres of all nacions, of the whole worlde, thozow the faith of the goſpel. Neisther Scithian, Jewe, Spaniard, Gothian, Engliſhman, Kynges, noz bondemen, be excluded from this lyght. The lyght came to geue light to al men almuche as lay in it: but if any continue in their darkenes, the faulte is not in the lyght, but in hym that frowardely loueth darkenes and abhorreth the lyght. For the lyght ſhineth to al me, becauſe none might pretend any excuſe, when willingly, & wittingly he perſiſteth thozow his owne faulte. As if a man ſhoulde get a knocke at noone dayes, becauſe he wouldenot lyfte vp his eyes. Which lighteth euery man.

¶ He was in the world, and the world was made by hym, and the world knew hym not. The texte.

This woꝛd of God was alwayes in the worlde, not (as who ſay) that he whiche is without meaſure, can bee contayned in any circuite of place, but he was ſo in the worlde, as the druſſe of the workeman is in his woorke. And as the ruler is in that thing he ruleth. Alſo at that tyme this lyght dyd ſhine in the worlde, ſum what opening the godly power, wiſedom and goodnes ther-of, by theſe thinges which were wunderfully creat by it, and by this meanes it did then, after a sorte, speake to mankinde. But many putting their felicitie in the visible thinges of this worlde (whome for that cause of good righte our lorde Jesus did accustome to call by the name of the worlde) when he taughte them eternall thinges, they beinge blinded with earthly affections, did not acknowleage their maker. The darkenes of mindes was so greate, that the worlde knewe not the maker thereof, but did worshipp serpentes, oxen, goates lekes, oynions, yea & that whiche is more vile then all these, stockes, & stones, dispising him, of whome they had receiued both that themselfes were, and all that they had.

The texte. He came emong his owne, and his owne receiued him not.

They being accustomed to darkenes, did abhorre the light, and being blinded with sinne did embrace deathe in stede of life: yea and when he did shewe himselfe more familiarly to the worlde being conuersaunt & liuing in his manhed emonges men, he was not knowen of them whiche had dedicate themselfes wholy to this worlde. Neither is it any meruail though the gentiles beringe woorshippers of ydols, & measuring all thinges by the commodities of this life, being also ignorant of the prophetes, and the lawe, did not acknowleage him, whiles he liued here in the shape of a man. This is more to be meruayled at, that when he came specially to his owne people, to whome Helias had ben promised by so many prophecies of the prophetes, to whom he had bene shadowed with so many figures, of whom he had ben loked for so many hundreth yeares before which saw him do miracles & heard his teaching, yet they were so far from receiuing of him, that with fierce mindes they wente about his destruction, whiche came specially to saue them. And procured that innocentes death, who freely brought life to his enemies. They sawe & did not see, heard and did not heare, & hauing intelligence did not vnderstand: whiche rhozow a froward study of the lawe, did rise against him whom the law had promised. Therfore by their malice it came to passe that the light whiche brought eternall lyfe to the beleuers therof, was to them occasion of greater blyndnes. But their frowardnes could not hinder the health of theym that beleued in it, but rather the blindnes of the Jewes made open way for the Gentiles to the lyght of the ghospel. They which vnto that time were taken for the people of God, which onely did boaste themselues in the worthipping of the true God, in the religion of the lawe, in the kynred of the fathers, and in the promises of Gods testament, turned themselues from the sonne of god, when he came to theim. And therefore the Jewes being righteously caste out as rebels to the ghospell, the grace of the ghospell remoued thence to the Gentiles: that the course of thinges being altered, they whiche before swelled in pride shoowe the false colour of religion, shoulde openly declare their wickednes, reiecting the sonne of him, whom they worthipped for God. And on the other parte, they which before were vtterly contrary to true religion and dyd worthip beastes, and stockes for their goddes, shoulde embrace the holynes of the ghospell by faith: hoo wherit vpon this occasion the Gentyles were so admitted to bee saued by the ghospell, that neyther the Jewes nor any other nacions at all, shoulde be excluded from hauing entry therunto, so they woulde put away their studdernes, and shewe themselues obediente to faith, which is the principall and onely gate to eternall saluacion.

The texte, But as many as receyued hym, to theim gaue he power to be the sonnes of God, euen them that beleued on his name.

And

And albeit many both of the Iewes and the Gentiles whiche loued the worlde more then God, withdrewe themselfes from this lighte, yet the cumming therof was not in vayne. Firste of all, it did manifeste their infelicitie, whiche thoꝛow their owne faulte did depriue themselues of so greate goodnes freely offered vnto them: Neyther could any man doubte, but that by the iuste iudgemente of God they shoulde be reserued to eternall deathe. Furthermoꝛe it caused that of the contrary parte it shoulde moꝛe euidently appeare, howe notable the liberalitie of God was to them which with a simple a redy faith would receiue the woꝛde of the gospel. And foꝛ that cause, he that was both the sonne of God and God, did humble himselfe to our lowe estate, to thintente ꝓ thoꝛowe faith we might exalte vs to his highnes. Therfoꝛe he toke vpon him the rebukefull misery of our moꝛtalitie, to make vs partakers of his godly glory. Therefoꝛe also he wolde be boꝛne a coꝛporal man of the virgin, to thintente we should be boꝛne again spiritual of God: and foꝛ that purpose he came downe into the earth to carry vs vp into heauen. The stately and haut philosophers, were reiected because they would not beleue. But to this high dignitie were admitted men of lowe degre, of litle estimacion, without renoume, vnlearned persons, bonde men, barbarous men, and sinners, whom the worlde hath in no estimacion at all, of whom nothing is required but pure faithe, neither cunninge, noꝛ nobleues of bloode, noꝛ yet the ꝓfessyon of Moses lawe: but all that did receyue this woꝛde, of what nacion oꝛ condicion soeuer they were, of his behalfe, he gaue to theim this dignitie, that they beinge graffed in Christ thoꝛow faith and baptisme, and hauing ꝓfessed his name, should be made euen the children of God, that they mighte bee made by adopcion the same thinge, whiche Christe was by nature. And what can bee higher then this honour, that they whiche before were the children of the deuill & inheritours of hell, shoulde thoꝛowe faithe onely be made the children of God, the brethren of Iesu Christe, and coinheritoures of the kingdome of heauen? As touching the flesh we were all boꝛne the children of wrath of our firste father Adam, but by the woꝛde of God we be releused from that sinfull kinred: & touching the spirite, we be happily boꝛne again of God by Iesu Christ.

Which were boꝛne not of blood, noꝛ of the will of the fleshe, noꝛ yet of the will of man, but of God. The texte.

Foꝛ finally God taketh foꝛ his children, not suche as bee boꝛne of the children of Abraham by mans sede, oꝛ actuall iuste in generacion, but those that be boꝛne of God by faith. Our firste father Adam had begotten vs after an vnfoꝛtunate and miserable soꝛte, foꝛ he begate vs to deathe and hell. Howeuer they whiche are boꝛne touchinge the carnal birthe, bee not all boꝛne to one estate, foꝛ some be boꝛne to a kingdome, & some to bondage: But Christe Iesus the auctoꝛ of our newe generacion doth regenerate al men without difference to like dignitie, that the bondage of sinne and the misery of moꝛtalitie put away thoꝛow faith and grace, they may be made children of the liuyng God.

And the same woꝛde became flesshe and dwelte emongest vs.

Neyther is it any meruaill though man be transformed after a soꝛte into the felowship of the godly nature, seyng the woꝛde of God did submitte itself foꝛ this cause to take our flesshe, that is to say a moꝛtall body of the virgine, ioyning together in himselfe two thynges moste vnlyke, God and mankinde: what thing is thoꝛe frayle oꝛ moꝛe vile then mans flesshe? and what thing is more mighty or more excellente then God: Neuer inerualll that these thinges were knit to gither. It was God that did it. Neither mistrust that men may be made the children of God, seynge he loued vs so, that for our sake he himselfe would be made the sonne of man: doubtles he toke vpon him no fantasticall body, for who coulde loue a vaine vision, or a deceitfull illusion: but truely he toke vpon him the body of a manne, that is to say, the full and perfect nature of man, abhorring not so muche as that parte, wherby we be subiect to death, and doue very litel differ from the kinde of brute beastes. And he became not man for a small time redy by and by to put awaye that thinge, whiche he had taken: but to proue assuredly that he toke his manhed not deceitfully or vnder a colour, he was long conuersaunt in earth, he was hungrie, thirstie, diuers waies punished, suffred death, was seen with iyes, heard with eares, and touched with handes. And to thintent this dignitie should alwaye remaine with mankinde, the godhed, hauing the manhed with it, and in it being glorified, sittinge on the righte hande of the father allmighty, dooeth stil dwell in vs.

The texte, And we sawe the glory of it, as the glory of the onely begotten sonne of the father, full of grace and trueth.

Neuertheles he lacked not his godly maiestie, when he in his manhed walked here in earth: for we whiche liued familiarlye with him, are witnes, that he was both God and man: we haue seen him hungry, athirst, slepinge, wepinge, wery and dyinge. We haue heard him speake with the voice of a man, we haue touched him with our handes, and by all proues, and tokenes we haue founde him to be very man: yea and also we haue seen his godly glory in very dede mete for the onely sonne of God, the like wherof was neuer shewed to any of the angels, Prophetes, or Patriarches, but it was suche as God the father would haue his onely sonne to be honoured with. And this glory we haue seen in the worckinge of his miracles, in the vttringe of his heauenly doctrine, and in the vision vpon the mounte Thabor, when he was transfigured before our iyes, when also the very voice of his father cumming downe from heauen, professed him to be his dearly beloued sonne, as the saied father did notably set him furth in his baptisme, both with his voice and with the holy goste, vnder the figure and similitude of a doue. And againe when the sonne before his death desired hym to glorify hym with that glorye whiche he had before the worlde was made, a voyce came downe from heauen and knowledged him to be his sonne, saying: Both I haue and will glorifye the. In conclusion we haue seen hym in his resurrection, both when he already beeyng risen from death to lyfe, did shewe furthe to vs his body, whiche we might the more handle, but yet was it subiecte to no euill, and also when before oure iyes he was carried vp into heauen. And his glory did appeare and shine vnto vs not onely by these thinges, but also by his very death did approue his godly power and strengthe, when as the vaile of the temple was rent, the earth quaked, the stones brake in sounder, the graues and monumentes did open, the dead bodies did rise againe, the sunne loosinge his lighte, brought suche darkenes into the worlde: And whiles immediatly after a behement rein, he yelded vp his goste, as who sayeth he forsoke his life wyllyngly and not for lacke of strengthe. By this so wonderfull a death he did so glorify the father, that both the theefe whiche did hange by him, and also the Centurion, did acknowledge him to bee the sonne ſonne of God. And albeit when he was conuerſaunt here in earth, and went about the buſines of our ſaluacion, he had leaue ſhewe vs exaumple of ſobrenes, meknes and obedience, then to boaſt his owne greatnes, yet all his communicacion, all his dedes, yea his very behauiour and countenaunce did declare hym to bee full of all godly giftes, full of eternall, and ſuche trueth as cannot bee confounded. For although God doeth geue to other holy men alſo large giftes of his grace & trueth, yet he did powre into him as into his onely ſonne the whole fountaine of heauenly giftes, to thintent that in hym alone might be ſo muche as ſhoulde ſuffice all men. And we did thorowly ſee him to be ſuche one euen vntill his aſcencion.

¶ John beareth witnes of hym, and cryeth, ſaying: This was he, of whom I ſpake, whiche though he came after me, went before me: for he was before me. The texte.

Let vs now proceede and declare how he was firſt knowen vnto the worlde, whereas vntil this time not ſo muche as his owne brethren beleued hym to be any other but man, for he would be knowen lytle by lytle, leſt ſo ſtraunge a thing ſhoulde not haue been beleued emonges men, if it had riſen ſodainly. And truly many thinges went before, whiche might ſome maner of way haue prepared mens mindes to faithfull beliefe: as the auctozitie of the prophetes, the ſhadowes of the lawe, the agreable ſong of the Angels at his natiuitie, the godly deuocion of the ſhephardes, the guiding ſtarre, the deuout behauiour of the three wiſe men, the vnquietnes of kyng Herode with all Ieruſalem for the birth of this new kyng, the prophecies of Simeon and Anna, and alſo certain thinges that he did, beyond the reche & courſe of mans nature, wherat his mother and Ioſeph meruailed with theim ſelfe what thoſe thinges ſhould meane: yet neuertheles, when the tyme was come, wherin it was decreed eternally that he ſhould openly take in hande the buſynes of preaching the kingdome of heauen, it pleaſed hym (as I ſayd before) to be commended and ſet furth by the witnes of John alſo. For a tyme: not that he neded mans witnes, but becauſe ſo it was expedient, eyther to allure the Iewes to beleue, of whom euery one had John in hye eſtimacion, or els to rebuke the vnbeliefe of the wicked, when they wouldenot beleue, no not hym bearing witnes of Chriſt, to whom in other thinges they did attribute ſo much, that they toke him to be Meſſias, which was promyſed by the prophecies of the prophetes to deliuer the people of Iſrael. Therfore when John preaching the kyngdom of God to bee at hand, had alredy gathered together many diſciples, dyd dayly baptiſe many & was had in great auctozitie emong al men (but in very dede men had an ill opinion of Ieſu) the ſaid John doth openly beate into the heades of the multitude, and eſſons reherſeth that thing whiche diuers times before he had witneſſed of him: And accozdyng to Eſaies prophecy whiche dyd tell before hand that he ſhoulde in wildernes ſay with a loud voice, make redy the way of the lozde, he nowe not priuely vnto his owne diſciples, but to all people indifferently, which euery day reſozted to him accuſtomably because of his baptiſme and Doctrine, yea and came purpoſely to heare the very certaintie what opinion ſo notable a man had of Ieſu, he, I ſay, ſpake out with a plain and a cleare voice, ſaying: This is he of whom heretofore I haue often ſpoken vnto you, before whome thozow errour yon do prefer me, when that I told you there ſhoulde be one which ſhould folowe me in age and time of preaching, and ſhoulde alſo be reckened inferiour to me in the opinion of the multitude, he hath nowe ouertaken me: and whereas he ſemed to bee after me, he hath begun to

The texte. ¶ And of his fulnes haue all we receiued, euen grace for grace: for the law was giuen by Moses, but grace and trueth came by Iesus Christe.

He is the fountain of all truth and grace. All we whom ye haue in so great admyracion be nothing els but as it were litle brookes or furth cumming streames: for the litle that we haue euery man accordyng to his porcion, is drawen furth out of the fulnes of this fountain, frō whence, whatsoeuer appertaineth to euerlasting saluacion springeth vnto all men. All the vertue that was in the patriarkes, in the prophetes, and in Moses, dyd come from this fountain. I am nothing els but the goer before of hym that is cumming, he is both the very publisher, and also the auctour of the grace of the ghospell, whiche geueth true and euerlastyng saluacion to all men thorow faithe. We are bounde to thanke hym for that by the voice of the Prophetes we haue been instructed to godlinesse: by the prescript and appointment of the lawe we haue been forbidden to doe euill, and for that we haue receiued as it were the shadowe of true religion. Nowe doeth euen very he offre to all men more plenteous grace, who thorowe the faythe of the ghospell, pardoneth freely all synnes, and geueth euerlasting life to theim that deserued death. For Moses whose auctorite is had emong you as a thing halowed or consecrate, is no manier of waye to bee compared to hym. Moses was onely the pronouncer and setter furth of the lawe but not the auctor, and he brought a lawe vneffectuall, sharpe, and hard, the whiche with figures and shadowes might bee, as it were a preparacion to the light of the ghospell, that should come after: and the saied Moses lawe, should rather make synnes to bee knowen, then take them awaye: yea and to say trueth, should rather make a way to health then geue health, or allure vs with promises. But nowe in steade of the straytnesse of the lawe, grace is geuen by Iesu Christe, whiche thorowe faith of the ghospell, freely and wholy forgeueth all men their synnes. He hath geuen the lawe of truth in steade of shadowes, wherof he hymselfe is not onely the declarer, but also the auctor, as he vnto whom God the father hath geuen all power.

The lawe was geuen by Moses.

But grace and trueth came by Iesus Christe.

No man hath seen God at any time: the onely begotten sonne, whiche is in the bosome of the father, he hath declared him.

And truely these be the secretes of God the father, these bee the hidde counsailes of the diuine mynde, by the whiche it hath pleased hym that god shoulde become man, and after a sorte to make menne godlike, to mire moste highe thinges with the lowest, and to exalt the lowest vnto the hiest. He dyd neuer fully open these thinges to any of our forefathers, although he dyd sometyme shewfurth to them certain lytel sparkes of his lyght, by Angels, by dreames, and by visions. For no mortall man (were he neuer so great) did euer see God as he is in dede: but couertly as it were in a shadowe. And although he dyd vtter in some parte to Moses, to the Patriarkes and Prophetes a litell porcion of his secretes, yet none but his onely begotten sonne dyd receyue this fulnes of grace and trueth: who being made man, did so come down to vs, that neuertheles by his godly nature he doeth allway remaine in the bosome of God the father, and as touchyng all thinges that pertayne to the obtayning of euerlastyng saluacion, he hath declared vnto vs more familiarly and plainly, without wrappyng, or coueryng the thyng whiche he dyd signify to

¶ And this is the recorde of Iohn: When the Iewes sente priestes and leuites from Hierusalem to aske him, what art thou? And he confessed and denied not, and saied plainly: I am not Christe. The texte.

When Iohn had often times priuely commended Christe by this maner of writinge, then did he openly declare, what maner of man he was, doing the dutie of a pure honeste seruaunte, whiche neither would wrongfully take vpon him the honour of his maister, whe the Iewes would haue geuen it to him, neither yet would depriue his saied maister thereof, although he knewe well inough that he should not onely by that meanes leese the estimacion and auctoritie, which alredy he had emong the Iewes, but also it should cause them to enuy him muche, because they had rather haue geuen that auctoritie to Iohn, whose birthe also was famous & notable emonge the Iewes, who for the dignitie that his father was of, beinge a head priestlie, was the more highly esteemed of them: who for the straungenes of his diet, his wearinge of Camell skinnes, his beinge in wildernes, his baptisme, and the greate nombre of his disciples, caused ye people to haue him in admiracion, wherefore Christe for the baseness of his kinred, & by reason of his trade of liuing and apparell, nothinge differing from the comon ble of people, at that time was litel set by: therefore seing that poore Christ himselfe did not contente the proud Pharisees, yea and they began somwhat to enuy Iohn, only because he had commended Christe in his preaching, the saied Pharisees sent from Ierusalem priestes and leuites being men of great auctoritie, to enquise of Iohn before the multitude who he was, of whom the iudgemente of the people did somuche vary. For some saied that he was Christ that shoulde deliuer the whole nacion of the Iewes from ses vnder: some supposed him to be Helye, whom accordinge to Malachies prophetie, they thought was come again to be ye gorr before of Messias to come. As touching Christe very fewe regarded him, because both his parentes, & himselfe liued barely and poorely, yet neuerthe les some began to enuy him. And so the craftie of the Pharisees did then goe about this thynge to thintent they might frame Christ to their euill desires. Whiche thing they thought should be brought to passe, if he had not been alowed but by theyr auctoritie & profession: for if he had taught thinges repugnaunte to theyr affections and vices, they would haue disalowed and taken away his auctoritie emong the people, whose doctrine they had perceyued should hinder theyr commodities. This is the folishe policie of worldely wisedom. But Christe whose doctrine is all heauenly, would not haue any part of theyr humain auctoritie to be mixt with his euangelicall doctreine. Some of the Iewes also did trust it should come to passe, that Iohn although he were not Christ, yet would accept so honorable a name that was willingly offred him. They being bondmen most addict & geuen to glory, did know wel inough that moste holye men be soone deceiued with this pestilence of vainglorye: they were not ignorant how muche all that nacion would haue reioyced, if Iohn would haue taken vpon him the name of Messias, which alredy a good part of the Iewes did willingly attribute to him. If he had taken it vpon him emonge the people, they had occasion wherby they might exclude Christe, whom they hated for his poore estate: if he had not taken it vpon him they would furthwith haue falsely accused him. Therefore they aske Iohn before the people by the auctoritie they had of ye Priestes & Pharisees, saying: Who art thou? For for already they had begunne both to be greued with his auctorizie, and sumwhat to enuy his good renoume. He beinge well assured that they asked him these questions for the hatred they had to Christ, did not bryanly open vnto them his owne opinion as concerning Christ, but did repell the false suspicion that they had touchinge himselfe, whiche might haue hindred the glory of Christ among the people: & boldly contemning the glory of an vnrightful title, did confesse that he was not Messias (as many thought he had done) neither did he deny himselfe to bee that thinge he was in dede, beinge redy to declare who he was, to whom the glory of that name was due. Of whiche two aunswers, the one, that is to saye the confessing what he was himself, endaungered him to lose his owne estimacion: & the other (whiche declared him redy to confesse Christe) put him in ieopardy to be hated of the Pharisees. But the manne being perfecte without corrupcion passing nothing of either of bothe these daungers, did openly confesse that he was not Messias, whiche was promised by the prophecies of the Prophetes, and by the voyce of Moses: not denying Messias to be already come, but I am not he (saieth he). He shewed the that this surname was due to an other that excelled him, who neuertheleste was lesse regarded after their opinion. And so this malicious diligent serche of the Pharisees came to none other effecte, but to stablisshe the fayethe of the gospell.

I am not he

The texte. ¶ And they asked him, what then? Arte thou Helias? And he saieth: I am not. Arte thou that prophete? And he aunswered, no.

Therfore after they wer disapointed in this first question, they did proceede to demaunde further, sayinge: If thou be not the chefest of all, and that which many attribute vnto the, seing thou doest vsurpe a new dignitie wythout the auctorizie of the Scribes & Pharisees, & caulsest the people wonderfully to fauour the, not without ỳ decay of the common auctorizie of the priestes & Pharisees, at the leaste thou muste be one verey nie vnto Messias, & not much vnder him. And we reade in the prophet Malachie that before Messias cummeth, Elias the Thesbite shal cum: who shall repaire again all thinges.

Art thou Elias?

Art not thou therfore that Elias? & John denied that he was Elias, not but that he was Elias in sum respecte, because he was the goer before Christe in the spirite & vertue of Ely, but that he was not that Elias the Thesbite whiche was rapte & sodainly caried vp into the aier in a fiery chariot, whom the Prophet iudged to be reserued for this purpose, that he maye be the goer before of the second cumminge of Jesu Christe. The Jewes had read the prophecy, but they vnderstood it not, neither were thei wurthy to learne this mistery, for so much as they enquired it of an hatefull minde, and because they knewe that Moses had promised, that a certaine Prophete shoulde come of the Jewes kinred, whom he commaunded thei should geue eare vnto. And some of them knewe right well that this Prophete shoulde be Messias himselfe, moreouer some other buried abrode, that one of the auncient Prophetes was rysen agayne, and they suspected John to bee the same: therefore they asked him whether he was that Prophete promised of Moses, or at leaste some other of the Prophetes, whiche becynge rysen from deathe to lyfe, shoulde take vpon him that auctorizie. He did frankely and playnly confesse, that he was no suche thynge as many tooke him to be.

But now when they had no more matier to question with hym of, seeing mens conjectures touching John, were at a full pointe, they moued hym ernestly to tell openly what he hymselfe was: and because he shoulde no longer make any delay or excuse, they prouoked him by the auctorite of the priestes to thintent that euen for very feare of power, he should confesse who he was. We do perceyue (say they) that thou takest vpon thee more then the Pharisees, priestes, and scribes do. We can no further diuine or conjecture therof, and yet we must bring some answer to them which haue sent vs hither: I fain would the people bee deceiued in their so diuers and soundrie opinions of thee, tell thou thyselfe who thou art: for vndoubtedly thou arte knowen to thyselfe well ynough. Therfore whom doest thou profesſe thy selfe to bee? Here now Josias because he spake to them that were learned in the lawe, lest he shoulde seme to take vpon him of mans presumption that thing whiche he was in dede, he taught them out of the very prophecie of Esay, whiche was righte well knowen to the Pharisees, both howe he was none other but the goer before Christe, and that the lorde hymselfe was already come, whom they ought to receyue with cleane herte, whom also they being blinded with enuie, ambicio, and pride, shoulde crucifie. I (sayeth he) am neyther Messias, nor Elias, nor any of the prophetes reised vp agayne to this lyfe, neyther yet haue I taken vpon me this office by myne owne autozitie, forasmuche as many yeres herebefore, I was appointed to the busynes of this office, by the auctozitie of God. For I am euen he of whom Esay did write. The voice of the criar in desert, make right the way of the Lorde. The texte.

And you shall vnderstande that they which were sent to John, were of the Pharisees sorte, for the Pharisees in those daies did excell all other borthen knowlege of the lawe, in opinion of holines, and also in auctozitie. And they were not fare of from the doctrine of the gospel, forasmuche as they did beleue the immortalitie of soules, and that there was an other life to cum after this. But ambicion, couetousnes, and enuy, had corrupted their mindes. Howbeit at that time their malice as yet was not so farre inflamed, that they wouldeopenly shewe themselfes aduersaries to Christ, but within a while after when they perceiued his doctrine to bee contrary to their renenue, aduantage, and autozitie, being vtterly caste into an extreme rage, they went about to crucifie their Messias, whom they had promised to the people by the prophetes, and in the knowlege of whom they had muche boasted themselfe. So hurtful and pestilent a thing it is, yea the knowlege euen of holy scripture, except a mans minde be free & voide from yearthly desires. But the prudence of God being far wiser then mans inuencions, can clerely turne the malice of the wicked men to the welth of the good. For this so enuious and so craftie enquiring of the Pharisees hath stablished our beliefe.

And they asked him, and saied vnto him: Why baptisest thou then, yf thou be not Christ nor Helias, neyther that Prophete? John answered them, saying: I baptise with water, but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not.

Therefore

Therefore they nowe being more ſtired and prouoked, and not onely enuiyng Chriſte, whom alway they had in contempte, but alſo Iohn whom heretofore they had in reuerence, goe aboute further to charge hym, and fynde faulte with him, ſayinge: What is the cauſe, that thou takeſte vpon thee, the power to baptiſe the people if thou be neither Chriſte, who (as the prophecies do declare) ſhal put away the ſinnes of the people, nor Elias the goer before Meſſias, nor that notable Prophete, whom Moſes did promiſe, neither yet any other of all the Prophetes, whie then dooeſte thou enterpriſe to putte awaye ſinnes by thyne owne auctoritie, whiche thou neither haſt of God, nor by any decree of the Prieſtes, whoſe auctoritie thou darkeneſte with thy newe cuſtomes? To this ſlaunderous demaunde Iohn did aunſwere mekelye: but yet in ſuche ſorte, that he did both fcely knowlage his owne lowe eſtate, and did openly declare the dignitie of Chriſte. Why baptiſme (ſaieth he) is euen

I baptiſe ſuche like as my preaching is. For as my preaching is not perfit but onely with water. &c. prepareth your mindes to the wiſedom of the goſpel, ſo my baptiſme whiche conſiſteth onely in the water doth not waſhe a way the filthyneſſe of mindes, but in a certaine reſemblaunce of true baptiſme, frameth the ignoraunte: that they being prepared with repentaunce of their former life, maye bee hable to receyue that baptiſme by the whiche Meſſias thorow his ſpirite ſhall waſhe away all at once, the vniuerſall vnclennes and vices of all theim that ſhall credite his heauenly doctrine. And now he is not farre hence, but is alredy preſent in this ſame great noumbre of people, and as one of the multitude is conuerſaunte euen in the middeſt of you. And he is therfore either deſpiſed, or not knowen of you, becauſe after the worldes eſtimacion he is but poore and of ſmall regarde, vaunting himſelfe with no pompe of thoſe thinges, by the whiche they that honour the worlde doe exteeme a manne. It hath not pleaſed him as yet to put furth his power and greatneſſe, but in heraye dede he is an other maner of perſone, then you take hym to bee.

John did pronounce this ſo full and ſo honorable witnes of Chriſte to the Phariſeis, Prieſtes and Leuites, in the preſence of a great noumbre of people, and that in a famous place, that is to ſaye, in Bethabara, which is not farre from Ieruſalem beyond Iordane a place very conueniente for him that was a baptiſer and preacher of penaunce, by reaſon that plentie of water was nigh to it, and alſo the deſerte, to whiche place a great preace of people out of diuerſe coaſtes of Iurie, did reſort dayly to be baptiſed. For Iohn did bothe preache and baptiſe there.

The text, ¶ The next day Iohn ſeeth Ieſus cumming vnto him, and ſaieth: Behold the lambe of God, whiche taketh away the ſinnes of the worlde.

And

And hitherto he did so beare witnesse of Jesus, that he did neyther name hym, nor poynte hym with hys fynger, when he stoode emong the multitude, because he would not styre vp the enuie of the Phariseis against hym: And also because he would set on fire the minders of simple folkes the more to haue a desyre to know him, whom the sayd John being so notable a mā, had so highly commended in his preaching, and for as muche as at that tyme many of the people did make diligent serche to knowe, who shoulde be that great man, to whose dignitie, euen John beeing in all mens iudgement taken for an excellēt persone, did so much geue place to. Jesus therfore came thither agayn the day folowing, and did not then kepe hymselfe close emong the multitude, but went to John seuerally and alone, partely for good maner sake to salute his cosin, partely to knowledge his baptiser, but specially to geue him occasion to testifye more playnely and liuely of Christ emong the people, lest he being yet not knowen should seme to goe to John for that purpose, that other did: that is to saye to be baptised of raughte, or els to confesse his sinnes, for in that he was baptised of John, was to geue vs exaumple of humilitie: but because no body shoulde suspecte that he had nede of baptisme, or that he had any spot in hym, whiche the water of Jordane could washe away, he separating himselfe from the multitude wente to John aparte. John being warned by the holy ghoste what he shoulde doe, beholding Jesus cumming towardes hym, turned himselfe to the people, and poynted Jesus to them with his fynger: that after they knewe him by sight, they shoulde accustome themselues both to lyke hym and loue him the better, and should rather folow hym then John himselfe, yea and rather rouet to be baptised of hym then of John. For the purenesse of Jesus mynde being ful of the holy ghost did shine in his bery eyes and countenaunce. And did shewe it selfe furth both in his goyng and all other behauiours of hys bodye: as of the contrarye parte, a furyouse mynde and ouerwhelmed with vices, dooeth expresse it selfe in the very countenaunce of the bodye. Beholde (sayth John) this is he whom many of you did see me baptise, whereas in dede the water of Jordane did not purifye him, but he did rather halowe it. For he alone and none other is free from all kinde and spotte of sinne. And verely he is that most pure lambe, whome God (according to Esaies prophecie) had chosen and appoynted to ber a sacrifice moste acceptable to hym, for to purge the sinnes of the whole worlde, whiche was defiled with all maner of vices. This is he whome the lambe in Moses lawe did signifye, whose vnharmeful bloud defended the children of Israel from the reuenging swoerd of the Angel. This lambe (I saye) is so fer from being subiect to any kynde of sinne, that he alone is able to take away all the sinnes of the whole worlde. He is so well beloued of God, that he onely may turne his wrath into mercie: he is also so gentle and so desirous of mans saluacion, that he is redy to suffer paynes for the sinnes of all men, and to take vpon hym our euils, because he woulde bestowe vpon vs his good thynges.

John seeth Jesus cōming.

Behold the lambe of God which taketh away the sinnes of the worlde.

Yea thys is hee of whome I haue tolde you diuers tymes, thoughe it wer sum what derkely, that one should come after me, who going before me in dignitie, and power, did ouerrecche me: for because although he semed to come

I knewe him not.

after me both in byrth of hys manhed, in the tyme of hys preaching, and also in auctorite, yet in godly gyftes he was far before me. In so much that I my selfe did not certainly knowe at the fyrst howe great he was, or what he was. For he is so great that I (whome ye haue in suche reuerence) am no maner of way to be compared vnto him. He is the lorde and auctour of all health. I am none other but his seruaunte and goer before, neyther is my baptisme or preaching any other thing but an introduccio to the heauenly doctrine and vertue, whiche he shall bryng vnto you. Neyther yet am I sent for any other purpose by the commaundemente of God, but to preache repentaunce of your former sinnes, to shewe you that the kyngdome of heauen is at hande, and to washe you with water, to thintent that after he should be shewed to me of his father by sure tokens, he might at his coming be the better conceiued in your mindes, being already prepared with these principles. His conuersacyon and life was simple and pure, and beyng in no poynete notable emong men, he ioyned hymselfe to the multitude as one of the common sorte of the people, and came to be baptised as though he had bene subiect to sinne.

The texte. ¶ And John bare recorde, saying: I sawe the spirite descende from heauen lyke vnto a doowe, and abode vpon him. And I knew him not.

Therfore I coulde not knowe surely by the disposicion of hys body, nor by mans coniecture that he was the onely sonne of God, and that moste pure lambe whiche through hys dethe shoulde put awaye all the sinnes of the worlde, but that I was taught by a notable sygne from heauen that thys was he, to whome I was appoynted to bee the goer before. And what this sygne was, John did openly declare to the multitude. When Christe (sayeth he) willyngе to shewe to the worlde an exaumple of humilitie, and ioyning hymselfe to the company of sinners, came to be baptised, the father of heauen did honour hym with an heauenly token. For I my selfe sawe the holy ghost cummyng downe vpon his head in the likenesse of a doowe and there remaynyng. Until that time I did not certaynly knowe hym, whose goer before I was: by reason that his corporall estate, did hyde hys celestial excellencie.

I sawe the spirite descende from heauen. &c.

The texte. But he that sent me to baptise in water, the same sayed vnto me: Vpon whom thou shalt see the spirite descende, and tary vpon him, the same is he which baptiseth with the holy goost: and I sawe, and bare recorde that he is the sonne of God.

For as yet the tyme was not come in the whiche the father of heauen woulde haue him to be openly knowē to the people. Therfore when I knewe by the inspiracion of the sayde father that Messias was alreadye come, then to take awaye the errour and mistakyng of hys persone, or leste mannes coniecture should haue any doubt therin, he, by whose commaundement I toke vpon me the office to baptise you with water, taught me by a sure token: by the whyng wherof I might assuredly knowe who he was, that shoulde baptise you with an effectuall baptisme, and should by the holy goost, wherwith he was replenished, freely geue to all them that trusted in hym, remyssyon of all theyr synnes. For before Iesus came to me to be baptised, the father of heauen did aduertise me before hande, saying: By thys token thou shalt surely knowe my sonne. Emonges many whom thou shalt wash with water, vpō whomsoeuer thou shalt see the holy ghost in the lykenesse of a doowe descending, and remaynyng,

be wel assured, that the same is he which hath power to baptise with the holy goost. For man wascheth wt water, but he onely by his heauenly power, taketh away sinnes, and geueth righteousnesse. I saw this token according to the fathers prompse in hym whan he was baptised. And for thys cause, he gaue me grace to see him, that you also through my preaching, should know the autour of your saluacio. Wherfore like as hereto fore I haue witnessed, so doe I now also openly testifie, that this is the sonne of god, from whence, as frō the heauenly fountayn, ye must require all thynges whiche pertayne to righteousnes and eternall felicitie. For I will suffer you no longer to suspecte greater thinges of me then I deserue, nor yet to be ignorannte of hym, whome to know is saluation. By these manier of witnesses, John did often commend Jesus (being as yet vnknowen) to the multitude, and gaue ouer his owne auctozitie to him as to his better: to the entent that from that time furth, the people should leaue hym and cleaue to the gouernaunce of Jesu: Soddes prouydence in the meane tyme procuring this, to thentent that they both might be to vs an holsome exaumple of a true preacher of the Ghospell. For truely John neyther with the entisement of so great renoume beeing willingly offered vnto hym, was so much corrupt that he would take vpon hym an other mannes praise, nor yet so afrayed of the enuie of the Priestes and Phariseis, (whose ambicyous enuie, and enuious ambicyon would suffer no bodye to bee exalted but themselfe) that therefore he dyd cease to speake of the glozy of Chryst: neyther did he regarde his owne commoditie, but what was expedient for the people: hereby teachyng how a preacher of the ghospel ought to haue a constaunt and sure stayed mynde, yea, euen to the auenturyng of hys lyfe, not onely agaynste exesse & couetousnes, but also against al ambicion. And as for Jesus Christ, when he came as one of the common sorte of the people to be baptised, and also when he behaued himselfe amongest Johns disciples, as if he had bene one of them, wheras he was lorde of all, he taught vs how we must come to true glorye, by great humilitie and modestie of mynde, and that none is mete to be a mayster, vnlesse he haue played the parte of a good scoller, neyther that anye ought to take rathely in hande the office of preachyng, excepte he hath bene all manier of wayes well tryed and approued: and in manier appointed therunto of God.

upon who thou shalte see the spirit descend &c.

I saw and bare recorde that this is the sonne of God.

The nexte day after, John stode agayn, and two of his disciples, and he beheld Jesus as he walked by and sayeth: Beholde the lambe of God. And the two disciples yeard him speake, and they followed Jesus. The texte.

Now to thentent that Johns most excellent pureues and honestie might more clerely appere, he thought it not inough to turne thaffections of ỹ people from him to Christ, but he laboureth also to despatch from himselfe his owne peculier disciples whome he had, and to put them to Christ. For the day after these thinges, which I haue already rehearsed vnto you, were doen in the presence of the people, John stoode there agayne, and two of hys disciples with hym. And Jesus walked vp and downe not farre from thence (whiche thyng in dede was doen to signifie a misterye therby.) For John was a figure of Moses lawe, and Christe was the auctour of the profession of the ghospell. Therefore the lawe, whiche was now come to the bitterest poynt, stayed, as though it coulde goe no further, but shoulde cease by and by, and giue place to Christ at hys comming, and commit his disciples to hym, but neuertheless in the meane while constaūntly bearing witnesse of Christ: and as it were delineating the Synagogue to the true spouse, to be his churche. Christe walketh vp and down vnto declare that he should alway growe greater and greater, and euery where gathereth disciples to heare hys heauenly doctrine. Therefore whiles Iohn stoode and beheld Iesus as he walked, knowyng rightwe well that the sayde Iesus dyd desyre and long for the saluacyon of mankynde, and also did couet to geat disciples vnto hys heauenly doctryne, Iohn turning him to the twooe disciples whiche stoode by hym, beeyng theyr maister, because he would put them to Iesu, that was a better maister then hymselfe, he poynted him to them with his finger as he was walking, and sayde: Beholde yonder is the lambe of God of whome I haue so often testifyed, who alone doeth take away all the sinnes of the wholle worlde. I haue prepared you for him, whosoeuer desyreth true and effectuall baptisme, whosoeuer loueth true innocēcie, and whosoeuer coueteth true and perfit health, must nedes commit himselfe to his rule and ordre. For they that were the true obseruers of Moses lawe, (as the lawe it selfe doeth witnesse) did prosite and goe forwarder thereby to the perfeccion of the ghospell, that is to say, from fayth to fayth: whereas the Pharisees through their peruerse and ouerthwart loue of the lawe, did persecute him whō the law had cōmended to thē. Now Iohns disciples made their maister no aunswere, but geuing credite to his worde, they left the sayd Iohn that was the goer before the ghospell, and folowed Iesus the auctour of euangelicall health. And they sayde neuer a woorde, but folowed hym, beeyng set on fyer with the loue of hys hye doctrine, the hope wherof they had conceyued by the testimonie of Iohn. But they dare not be bolde to moue anye communicacion to him with whome they had not bene acquaynted.

He beholdeth Iesus as he walked. &c.

Beholde the lambe of god. &c.

And ye two disciples heard him.

The texte. And Iesus turned about, and saw them folow him, and sayeth vnto them: what seke you? They said vnto him: Rabbi (which is to say, if one enterpreete it, Maister) where dwellest thou? He sayeth vnto them: Come and see. They came and saw where he dweled, and abode with him that daye, for it was about the tenth houre.

Therefore Iesus perceiuing for what purpose they did folow him, to declare how ready he would be to mete and ioyne with them whiche with pure mindes doe thirste and couet the doctrine of the ghospel: he (I say) not tarying for theyr calling vpon hym, of hys owne good will doeth encourage and allure their bashefulnes, & turning himselfe toward e them, did beholde them as they folowed him, not ye was ignorāunt whom they folowed, or of what minde they folowed him, but because he would shewe to other theyr worthy and mete affeccio for the ghospel. He speaketh to them and asketh what they would haue, to the intent that theyr desyre beeing knowen, might also kindle and styre vp the myndes of other. But they furthwith declared themselues to bee very desyrous to learne of him, euē by ye very name they called him by, saying: Rabbi (which woorde in the Syryans tongue is as much to say as Maister) where is your abyding. And vndoubtedly in that they called him Maister, they confesse themselues to be his disciples. And whereas they enquire of him, where his dwelling place is, by that they doe declare, that they haue a will to learne of him certayn secret thinges more familiarely, which (peraduēture) he would not speake openly before euery body. Here now our lorde Iesus taking pleasure in theyr deuoute feruentnesse to learne, maketh no excuse by reason of the vnmesse of the night, nor commaundeth them to come againe the day folowing, neyther neyther yet signifyeth to them where his house is, in case they wouldе at theyr conuenyente leysure visite hym: But he iemlye and courteously requireth them to come talke with him at his lodgeing, saying: Come ye and se. For he perceiued that any delay shouldе haue bene paynful to theyr earneste desyre. They reioycing in that answer, beyng euen suche as they wouldе haue wished for, came thither, and did not onely se the litle house, where then Jesus had lyen abidyng, but also taried with him all that day: and were so enflamed with his holy communication, that not onelye they reioyced in theyr owne behalfe, but moeued and procured other also to come to the company of that felicitie. Cum and se. They came. And abode with him that daye.

What seke ye?

Rabbi, where dwellest thou?

And when they came to Jesus house, it was almost the tēth houre of the day, that is to say, nye vpon the goyng downe of the sunne. For there is no tyme nor place vnfit or vnconuenyente for to learne thosе thynges whiche pertayne to euerlasting welthe. And the presence of the preacher of the ghospell oughte alwaye to bee in a redinesse: For suche an one oughte he to be that taketh vpon hym to teache Christen philosophie and wisedome, whiche is onely the philosophie that can no skill of any pryde or statelynesse.

The texte.

One of the two which heard Johu speake and folowed him, was Andrew, Simon Peters brother. The same found his brother Simon first, & sayeth vnto him: we haue found Messias (which is by interpretacion anoynted) and brought him to Jesus. And Jesus beheld him, and sayd: Thou art Simon the sonne of Jonas, thou shalte bee called Cephas, which is by interpretacion a stone.

As concerning these two, whiche had folowed Jesus by the counsayl of John, the one of them was Andrew, Simon Peters elder brother: to whiche Peter, although he were the younger, yet for the excellēt feruencie of his faith, Jesus afterwarde did promise him the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen: and committed his shepe to be fedde of hym, after he had thryse professed hys loue towardes Jesu. The godly loue of the ghospell hath thys difference from that which man of himselfe is inclined vnto, that if it haue gotten any notable treasure, it hydeth it not, or enuieth other: for manye thynke that they doue not possesse that thyng, which is common to other aswell as to themselues: but thys godly loue reioyceth that the commoditie therof shouldе be common to many. Andrew being much comforted with so great felicitie, for almuche as by the report of John, but much more by the familiar communication of Jesu hymselfe, he found it true that Jesus was ꝑ heauenly Lambe, which onely should take away the sinnes of the worlde, that he was the sonne of GOD, the onely redemer of mankynde: and that also he was promised of the Prophetes, and looked for so manye hundred yeres before: the sayde Andrew (I say) as soone as he had found Simon Peter his brother, whose presence he desyred greatlye, for thys purpose, that Peter whome he knewe dyd looke for Christe with greate feruencie, myghte be made partaker of the felicitie of that assured knowledge whiche Andrewe hymselfe had of Christe: We haue founde (sayeth he) that Messias, whome the Prophetes had promysed shoulde bee redemer of the worlde. And Messias in the Syrians tounge is as muche to say as Christe, that is to vnderstande anoynted: because that anoynting pertaineth to kynges and priestes. But Christe was the onelye anoynted of God, to hym onely all power was geuen both in heauen and yearth, and he onely was ꝑ priest eternally after Melchisedechs ordre, which hath reconciled God to mankynde with the sacrifice of hys bodye. Symon beeing glad of so We haue found Messias. Ioan. 1.

And brought hi to Jesus.

pleasaunte and welcome a message, and not satisfyed onely to haue heard de it, ioyfully prearseth hymselfe also to see Jesu. Andrew who had already proued the gentlenes and graciousnesse of Jesu, furthwith brought Simon to hym. And when Jesus beheld Peter, he did not onely bewe his face, wherin neuertheless did shine a pureues of herr, but he rather loked vpon his minde which was endued with dooueiyke simplicitie: and there by apte to receyue the grace of the ghospell. The sayde Jesus takyng pleasure in hys pure affection, dooeth tell the name of Peters father (by that declaryng how nothyng was hydden from hym) and therewithall prayseth the godly simplicitie of Peters minde, gathering an argument there of, by the propertie of hys fathers name: and by the darke sence of the chaungeing of Peters owne name, he telleth before that in time to come, there shall be in hym stablenesse of inuyncible faythe. For Jonas is a smuch to saye, as a dooue or grace. Simon, by interpretation, signifieth obedient, for out of the obedience of Moses law, is had some furtherraunce to the fayth of the gospell. Therefore after that Jesus had loked vpon hym, he doeth lyke both hys present simplicitie, and also doeth sumwhat open, as you wouide saye darkely, his stedfastnesse to come, saying: Thou arte that Simon the sonne of Joanna, right aptly agreyng both to thyne owne name, and thy fathers: But hereafter when this fayth shall haue gathered strength, that it may be able to stand stable and vnshaken against al temptacions of the deuill, thou shalte be called Cephas, whiche in Greke is as muche to saye as Peter, in Latine, saxum, and in Englishe a stone. And this was the firste institucion and principle of Christes church: this was also the first beginning of the schole of the ghospell.

And Jesus beheld him. &c.

Thou art Simon the sonne of Joanna. &c.

Thou shalt be called Cephas. &c.

The texte. The day folowing, Jesus would goe into Galile, and found Philip, and saieth vnto him: folow me. Philip was of Bethsaida, the citie of Andrew and Peter. Philip founde Nathanael and saieth vnto him: We haue found him of whom Moses in the law and in the prophetes did write. Jesus the sonne of Joseph of Nazareth. And Nathanael said vnto him: Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip sayeth to him: Come & see.

The day after, it pleased Jesus to goe into Galile, whyche was least set by of al the prouinces of Jewrie, because no man of any great renoume or fame, had at any tyme come from thence: and yet neuertheless Esay dyd prophecie before that the light of the ghospell should first appeare and haue hys beginning about ỹ place. Also the diuine counsayl thought it good so to be, because he woulde beginne his churche of meane persones, vntaught and vnlearned, borne and come out of a countrey that was barayne, and of no regarde. For both Peter and Andrew, whiche without calling folowed Christe, were men of Galile: and that the one brother did perswade and drawe the other to Jesu, was a fortunate prenostication of the churche nowe newly beginning, whiche consisteth in brotherly charitie and mutual concorde. Therfore when Jesus shoulde goe his way into Galile, hauing alreadie two disciples of Galile to wayte vpon hym, because he myghte come sumwhat the better accompanied, he taketh to hym two other also of the same countrey, and of lyke nobilitie. For Jesus founde one called Philip borne in Bethsaida a citie of Galile, whiche is nye vnto the lake of Genazareth being the countrey of Andrew and Simon, to whome the name of Peter was added. Furthermore in that they were all of one countrey, it betokeneth the concorde and agreement of the ghospell:

He founde Philip.

gholpell: And that the diuerſities of all maner of people, ſhould be ioyned and brought together into one churche, as it were into one cite. Philip ſemed to haue met with Chriſte by chaunce, but the very thyng in dede was doen altogether by the prouidence of God, whiche had eternallye decreed and appoynted, whome he wouldе haue to be ỳ firſt rulers and beginners of his churche.
Therefore Jeſus ſayed to Philip when he met with him: folow me. He taried nothyng at all, but bỳ and bỳ folowed Jeſus, of whome alredy he had knowen many thinges, both by the witneſſe of John, and alſo by the common rumour of the people. The woord of the ſpeaker was of ſo great effect, and the mind of the hearer was ready of hys owne good will. It chaunced verely, that as Andrew had allured and drawen hys brother Simon, ſo Philip now reioy-ſing that he was in the ſeruice of Jeſu, when he had found Nathanell, whome he knew to be wonderfully deſyrous of Meſſias cummyng, for whiche cauſe he was woont very diligentlye to marke and obſerue in the prophecies of the lawe and the Prophetes, from whence and when the ſame Meſſias ſhoulde come, Philip (I ſay) becauſe he would make Nathanaell partaker of that ioye wherein he did reioyce with all his hert, ſayeth vnto hym: We haue found that iuſt Meſſias of whome Moſes hath written, that there ſhould a Prophet riſe out of the kinred of Jſrael, of whome the prophecies of the Prophetes hath vttered and declared ſo many thynges: Thys is Jeſus the ſonne of Joſeph of Nazareth, for at that time euery man toke Jeſus to be Joſephs ſonne, and he was better knowen by that name then by the name of Marie hys mother.
Howbeit he was called emong the comon ſorte a Nazarean, not that he was borne there, for Bethleem was halowed with hys birth and infancie, but becauſe he was conuerſaunt and brought vp there of a childe, with his parentes.
When Nathanael hearde this, truely he lyked wel the moſt ioyfull tydinges:
but he is offended with ỳ doubt, wherwith he was ſecretly troubled, through the prophecie, whiche (as euery man knew) doeth promiſe that Chriſt ſhoulde come furth out of Bethleem: therfore he deſyring to be taught more certainly, ſayeth vnto Philip: Can any good thing come out of Nazareth of the whiche no we the prophecies of the Prophetes hath made no mencion? When Philip himſelfe being yet vntaught, and hauing no further knowledge but hys plaine ſimple faith, could not diſcuſſe this hard matter, he aduiſeth and allureth Na-thanaell to go to Jeſu the fountayn it ſelfe, not doubtyng but that he would beleue as ſoone as he had ſeene and heard him. If you doubt (ſayeth he) to credite me, come your ſelfe and ſee.

Folowe me &c.

Philip found Nathanael.

We haue found him. &c. Jeſus ỳ ſonne of Joſeph. &c.

Can there any good thinge come out of Nazareth?

Philip ſaieth: come & ſee.

Jeſus ſawe Nathanael cumming to him and ſayeth of him: beholde a right Jſraelite, in whome is no guile. Nathanael ſaieth vnto him: Whence knoweſt thou me: Jeſus anſwered, and ſeid vnto him: Before that Philip called the, when thou waſt vnder the figge tree, I ſawe the. Nathanael anſwered and ſaide vnto him: Rabbi, thou art euen the very ſonne of God, thou art the king of Jſrael.

The texte.

And Jeſus who as yet was of no fame or renoumme by working any miracles, ſum what to open his godlye power by the knowlage he had of ſecrete thinges, whe he behelde Nathanael cũmyng toward hym, turned to his diſciples, before Philip gaue hym any warning of hym, & before he named hym, and ſhewed Nathanaell to them, ſaying: Behold a verye Jſraelite in dede, in whome there is no guile. In these woordes Jeſus did both prayſe the true meaning beliefe of Nathanael, and alſo his pure deſyre to haue knowlage, whereas they which vntruely doe boast themselues to be Israelites, are wont to be busy and curious of a desyre they haue to lay matters to mennes charge. Nathanaell perceiuing that Jesus shewed by these wordes, how that he knewe well inough the communication which was betweene Philip and him concerning Jesus hymselfe, & meruaylyng how this came to his knowledge, for as yet he toke Jesus to be none other but mã, sayth vnto him: how knowest thou me? But Jesus yet declaring more euidently how he knew the thoughtes of men, were they neuer so secret, sayth: before Philip called the when thou wast vnder the figtree, I had already sene the. The cõmunicatiõ was but betwene them two, and there was no witnes by, that could make any relation thereof. The place was expressed, and the figtree was noted and spoken of by ỹ way in a mistery, as a thing priuie and of counsel to his firste fault (that is to saye, of hys vnbeliefe) whiche faute they must nedes leaue, that will knowe Christ. It was manifest by these argumentes that Jesus knewe the matter of their whole communicatyon, wherof neuertheless he maketh no great rehersal, lest he should seme to vp braide hym with his lacke of fayth, which was shamfast, and asked the question of a good symple mynde. Allone as Nathanaell heard these thinges, who was persuaded, that the secretes of the hearte was open to god onely, and that the thing which he heard was more than man could do, nowe beryng nothyng offended with the double concernyng the name of the place of Christes birth, he gaue his verdit of hym, saying: maister. Thou arte the very sonne of god, by whom the father hath determined to deliuer his people. Thou art that king of Israel whiche was long a goe promised by the prophecies of the Prophetes.

Nathanael sayeth vnto him. &c.

Rabbi thou art euen the very sonne of God. &c.

The texte. Jesus answered and said vnto him: because I sayde vnto thee, I saw thee vnder the figtree, thou beleuest. Thou shalt see greatter thinges than these. And he sayeth vnto him: Verely, verely, I say vnto you, hereafter shall ye see heauen open, and the aungels of god ascending and descending ouer the sonne of man.

Jesus gladly embracing the mannes so ready and chereful fayth, and his so euangelicall profession, doeth stablishe also the opynyon that Nathanaell had of him. And now more euidently declaring his godly nature, sayth: Thou hast here by conceiued a beliefe that I am the very Messias & king of Israel, which was promised, because I tolde thee howe I sawe thee euen then when thou waste with Philip vnder the figtree, and therefore thou hast a very good opinion of me: In tyme to come thou shalt see more apparaunte sygnes, where by thyne opinion of me may encrease. And foorthwithall Jesus turned hym to his other disciples, (of whome as yet, neuer a one did iudge of hym according to hys dignitie) and he sayde vnto them. Take thys for a suretie, hereafter ye shall see the heauens open and the aungels of God ascendyng and descendyng ouer the sonne of manne. By thys derke saying our Lorde Jesus did stirre vp the fayth of his disciples, which although it were simple and vncorrupted, yet was it not fully enstructed, and beside that far from the perfect knowledge of the excellencie of Christ: He did stirre vp their faith (I say) to the looking for of greater miracles, and therby to haue higher knowledge. For although the disciples did fantasie, as it were in a dreame, some thing to be in Christ passing mannes nature, whereat they marueiled: neuertheless they dyd not as yet vtterly beleue that the fulnesse of the Godhead was in hym. Nathanaell dyd confesse the selfesame thinges whiche Peter dyd after confesse: But because hys meaning was not lyke Peters, he had not therefore lyke aunswere that Peter had, whiche was: Upon this stone I will buylde my churche, And to thee wyl I geue the keyes of the kingdõe of heauen. And in very dede for because some that were very mẽ, are called the sonnes of god in holy scripture, for their great holines, and other besides Christ also did many times se before, thinges which shoulde folowe, by the inspiracyon of the holy ghoste: therefore it is not to bee maruciled at, if Christe knewe without relacion of any other, what was dorn secretly betwene the two disciples. Furthermore in that he called hym kyng of Israell, intending thereby to honour Jesus, as it were with an hye and glorious tytle, it declareth that euen as yet he dreamed of a worldelye kyngdome. And to haue a kingdome in thys worlde is but a very base & an earthly thing: But it is a thyng of far more honour to ber kyng of all the whole worlde, and also of aungels. This thing mente Christe when he sayde that the aungels as ministers diligente to doe seruice, should ascende, and descende ouer the sonne of man. And although the disciples did not yet vnderstande at that tyme this saying of Jesu, neuertheles he dyd hyde it and layed it vp in theyr myndes, as a seede whiche shoulde bryng foorthe fruicte in due tyme: For afterwarde we knewe how the aungels dyd often knowledge hym to bee kyng of all thynges by theyr obedient seruice, as whan Gabriel brought tidinges of his conception, when they song at hys natiuitie: Glory be to god that is aboue: when at diuerse tymes they appearing to Joseph, did procure the safegarde of the childe, when they did hym seruice after he was tempted of the deuyll, when they dyd coumfort hym in his conflict at the tyme he swet water and blond: and whiles they did often appeare in the tyme of hys resurrection: Agayne also, when in all mens sight he was taken vp into heauen, the aungels wer present, as surtties of the promise of his returne. And that in dede shalbe dorn most specially, whē he shal come in the cloudes with the maiestie of his father, and with the whole hoste and company of aungels, to iudge bothe quicke and dead: and to deliuer a kingdome to god the father.

¶ The.ii Chapter.

The texte. And the third day there was a mariage in Cana a citie of Galile: and the mother of Jesus was there. And Jesus was called and his disciples vnto the mariage. And when the wine tayled, the mother of Jesus saith vnto him: they haue no wine. Jesus sayth vnto her: woman what haue I to doe with thee? myne houre is not yet come.

ANd Jesus had not taryed long in Galile, but therowe worlking of a miracle he begā to declare ỳ Johns witnes of him was not vntrue. In dede Jesus was better knowen in Galile then in other countreys of Jewrie, but yet they had no notable opiniõ of him, when as at ỳ time also euen his brethren and kinsfolkes had no right iudgement of him. Therfore the third day after he came to Galile, there was a solemne mariage made in Cana, which is a toune of ỳ countrey. Jesus mother was biddē to this wedding, because she was of alyaūce to thē. The mother of Jesus was there &c.

red together a litle before. Now then when ꝑ feast was at the hottest, and the bridgrome for lacke of wyne was lyke to be abashed, as if he had made but a nygardely feast: And besides that it was to be feared leste hys geastes carefulnesse for lacke of wyne shoulde make the feaste the lesse cheresull: Marie the mother of Jesu of a certain womanly carefulnes desyring to haue this discommodite remedied, seing that alreadi by manye tokens and also by the witnesses of Iohn she was not ignorant of the power of her sonne, she is bold to cal vpō him, saying: Sonne, they haue no wine. In that she dare speake to him, it declared her motherly auctoritie: And in that she dooeth not prescribe nor appoynte any thyng to him, what she would haue doen, it sheweth her reuerence rowarde her sonne. But Jesus intending nowe to take in hande the heauenly busines of the ghospell, where of he would haue hys father to be the onely auctour, suffereth not mans auctoritie to be mixte therewith. For he dyd not myracles for this purpose to pleasethe affections of hys kynsfolkes, but to cause his spiritual doctrine to be the better beleued through corporal sygnes and tokens, amonges the vnfaythfull people of that countrey. Therfore he answereth his mother sumwhat roughly, not that he did not loue her entierely being suche a one as she was, consyderynge he loued all mankynde so muche, but to thentent ꝑ he would kepe his auctoritie of working miracles free from worldly affections, and to cause the whole glory therof to be attributed to the power of God. For this was a thing expedient for mans saluacion, whiche Jesus dyd greatly chyrst for and couet. Therfore not vtterly denying hys mother, but declaring that she had litle to doe with ꝑ busines he went about, he answereth her: woman what haue I to doe with thee? I haue a time appoynted me of my father, when and after what soute I should worke the saluacion of mankind, that time is not yet come. Hitherto I haue shewed my self obedient to thy wil, from hens forth I must doe all thinges according to my fathers will, and not after mans prescript and appoyntmente. In other thinges thou hast bene my mother, hereafter I will take thee but as a woman, as often as I am occupied about my fathers busines. Wheresoeuer his glorie shal be to be serued, I shal not nede thy calling vpon. I will doe of mine own good wil, ꝑ which ꝑ thing it selfe shal require. I haue a time appoynted me of my father. So before ꝑ time also, whē he was but a childe, he tolde his mother of ꝑ she did interrupt hym, when he was disputing in ꝑ temple. And of the like thing againe he warned her, whē she bad one cal him furth to her, whiles he was preaching emōg ꝑ people.

This mother sayeth vnto the ministers. Whatsoeuer he sayeth vnto you doe it. And there were standing there sire waterportes of stone, after ꝑ maner of the purifying of ꝑ Jewes, conteruing two or three firkins a piece. Jesus sayth vnto them: fill the waterportes with water. And they filled them vp to the brimme. And he sayeth vnto them: drawe out nowe and beare vnto the gouernour of the feast. And they bare it.

But Marie the mother of Jesu, beyng neither offended with her sonnes answere, although it were sumwhat roughe, nor in the meane tyme mystrustyng either his goodnes or hys power, maketh no answere agayn, but calleth the seruauntes of the house to her, and secretly in their eares sayeth thus vnto thē: Doe ye, whatsoeuer he shall bid you doe. Undoubtedly the godly pitifull carefulnes of this mother, did procure that, lest ꝑ seruauntes lacke of beleef, or their vnready seruice, should be a let whereby that whiche lacked at the feast should not be amended. But how and what time ꝑ thing should be dooen, she holding her peace leaueth it secretly to hir sonnes wil and appointment. These thinges were wer not doen by chaunce, but Jesus deferred the miracle for ꝑ honest, because the lacke of wine should be the better perceiued of euery body, and shoulde be well sene to bee geuen for necessitie, and not for any vayne boasting or glorye: For so our Lord wrought all hys miracles, that he semed not to doe them for thaffeccion of any worldly praise, but to succour & relieue men of their ciuilles and griefes: he did them so temperatly & in so due order, that they could not be don more faithfully nor with more trueth. Therfore now whiles the geastes tarried and were carefull for lacke of wine, Jesus perceyuynge the tyme to bee come that he should be knowen to his own, commaunderh the seruauntes to fyll with water sixe portes of stone, which stode there for this purpose, that if any, according to ꝑ custome of the Jewes, would clense himselfe with washing, he might haue plentie of water ready, for asmuche as that countrey was very dry, & in fewe places well watered with fountaynes & running riuers. Thys truely did cause the miracle also to be rather beleued, because ꝑ vse of those waterportes was a solemne thyng emong the Jewes. And the sayd portes neuer receyued any other licour but water. Moreouer the greatnesse of ꝑ vessels setfoorth the beliefe of the miracle, for they conteined two or three firkens a piece, so that they could not easily bee remoued out of theyr place. The seruauntes did obey him and filled the waterportes with water, as they were commaunded euen to the brimme. Whē that was doen, because he would haue no witnesses of the miracle, he commaunded them to drawe out of the waterportes and to offer that whiche they had drawen, to hym that was the chiefe ruler & had the ordreyng of the feast. And this Jesus did, partely because the ruler was sober, for he that hath the charge committed to hym to see all thinges wel furnished, is euer wont to abstayn from wyne, whiles other folkes doe drinke: And partely because he being well skilled in tast, and hauing a fyne iudgement therein, myght more trewely geue verdite of the wyne thē the rest of ꝑ geastes, whose tastes myght seme to bee dulled with drynking of muche wyne before.

Fil the waterportes with water.

And thei filled them vp to ꝑ brimme.

¶ When the ruler of the feaste had tasted the water that was turned into wyne, & knew not whence it was (but the ministers which drew the water knew) he calleth the bridegroom & any calleth vnto hym. Euery man at the beginning doth set furthe good wine, & when men be dronke, then that whiche is worse: but thou hast kept the good wyne vntill now. ¶ This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galile, and shewed his glorie: and his disciples beleued on hym.

The texte.

But as soone as the ruler of the feast had tasted of the wine, that was turned out of water, & knew not where they drewe it, (suspecting the faute to be in the seruauntes, that cōtrary to the custome of other, they deferred to bring in such wine vntil the latter end of the feast) he calleth the bridgrome to hym, desyring to know of him by what occasion ꝑ fault chaunced. Others (sayeth he) which make a solemne feast, at the beginning thereof, bryng to the table of the beste sortes of wine, afterward whē their geastes being already dronke haue their mouthes out of tast, & powre in drinke intemperatly, thē they bring a serue of the worst sort. But thou cōtrariwise hast reserued vnto the end of ꝑ feast, this wine which is better & more pleasaunt than any ꝑ was serued yet. And by this declaracion ꝑ miracle of ꝑ thing ꝑ was doē, spred abrod litle by litle emonges many. And afterward by examining the seruauntes of this thing, it was knowen that the water was not onely turned into wyne, but also into very good wine. And as for the waterportes they had no mistrust, but that they were onely dedicate dicate and ordeyned for water. The seruauntes put water to water, and filled them vp to the brimme, & after they had drawen of the same which they powred into the vessels, they offered it to the gouernour of ỳ feast, who was lorde. The bridgrome knoweth well inough that there was no such wine prouyded nor prepared. They wente to the waterpots and found them ful of ỳ selfesame good wyne. With this dede our Lorde Jesus began the working and setting foorth of his miracles in Cana a towne of Galile, intending by litle and litle to shew furth tokens of his godly power to the worlde. For first of all this thing was doen in a matier not very weighti & also priuately, yea & almost to please his mother and kinsfolkes withal: whiche had him in lesse admiracion because they were his familiars & of his kinne. And this miracle was not much noted of very many, but afterwarde it grewe to be hadde in greatter credite with more: yet in the meane while ỳ kayth of his disciples ỳ were present was stablished concerning Jesu, who hauing promised greater thinges, performed that whiche he had promised. And besides that, this miracle (wher by he framed as it were a beginning to ỳ rest that he should do afterward) was not in vain. For firste of all he wouldbe honour the mariage with his presence, knowing before hand that in tyme to come there should be some which would condemne it as an vnpure & filthye thing, whereas an honourable mariage and vndefiled bed, is a thyng most acceptable to God. Moreouer Jesus dyd as it were shadowe vnto vs by a certayn figure, that thing, whiche he then chiefely went aboute. For now was the tyme come ỳ in steade of the vnsauery & watersihe lettre of Moses lawe, we should drinke the pleasaunt wyne of the spirite of the gospel, by reason that Christ turned into our more welth that thing which was without strength & vnprofitable. For the law was not only vnsauery to ỳ Jewes without Christ, but also hurtfull & deadly. They which haue not beleued in the ghospel, doe stil drinke of the water of Moses law, but they, which haue beleued Christe doe happely waxe warme, & growe finely toward the loue of heauenly lyfe, through the moyst & swete licour of his heauenly doctrine. And this was not doen before that Christ had ioyned vnto him the churche hys spouse. Also the mother of Jesu was present there, representing the forme of the synagogue, whose autorite is diminished, yet she telleth the lacke of the wyne, but she her selfe doeth not remedy it. Neuertheles she was for our behouffe mother vnto him, which doth reioyce and coumforte our mindes with the swete wine of his spirite. The names of the places also do agree to the mistery of ỳ thing. For Cana of Galile betokeneth possessiō of a ready passage frō one place to an other. For now was ỳ original beginning of a new people gathered together, which should remoue from the letter of the lawe, to the spirite of the ghospell, from the world, to heauen.

The texte. ¶ After this he went downe to Capernaum, he and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples: and there continued not many dayes.

After Jesus by thys miracle had begonne to declare his mightie power emonges his kinfolkes in a towne of smal renoume, he went downe to Capernaum. That citie is in the selfesame Galile of the Gentiles, all ryottouse and swelling in pryde, by reason of the plentie of richelle therin: beyng also nye vnto the lake of Genazareth and in the coastes of Zabulon and Neptalim. But according to the wisedome of the ghospel, that thing which is highely esteemed in the world, is abiect, and litle set by afore God. Jesus mother with his bre-

then and disciples went down thither with him, but they tarryed there very fewe dayes. Neyther was there any miracle doen in that place. But this benefit semed to be doen in the meane time, for his mothers & kinsfolkes pleasure: who now he would no longer cary about with him, for asmuch as he would take in hand greater thynges, because that worldly affection and loue should chalenge vnto it no parte of those thinges whiche were doen for the glorye of the heauenly father.

The texte. And the Jewes Easter was euen at hande: and Jesus went vp to Hierusalem, and found sitting in the temple those that solde oxen & shepe, & doues, & changers of money. And when he had made as it were a scourge of small cordes, he droue them al out of the temple, with the shepe and oxen, and powred out the chaungers money, and ouerthrewe the tables. And sayd vnto them that solde doues: haue these thinges hence, and make not my fathers house a house of marchaundies. And his disciples remembred it that is written: the zele of thine house hath euen eaten me.

Therfore Jesus leauyng his kynsfolkes behynde at Capernaum, seeketh time and place mete to declare openly hys power and auctoritie, which he had receiued of his heauenly father, & not of men. For euen then the most high and solemne feast of the Jewes was at hand, which is called Easter, and after the Hebrewe tounge, is as much to say as a passing ouer. They did kepe this day as an holy feast euery yere in the remembraunce of the olde story: because their elders had safely passed ouer oute of Egipte: when they wente into the lande whiche God had promised them. But now that thing whiche they did honour but in figure, was doen in dede by Christ, ỳ is to say, he now brought to passe that men hauing forsaken the darkenes of errours, and cloude of sinne, should be remoued, and brought, through the fayth of the gospel, to innocencie, light and immortalitie: forasmuch therfore as at that time there was at Jerusalem a great number of people which out of all the partes of Syrya did assemble there against that feastful day, Jesus wente thither nowe going vp towardes hys fathers bussines, whereas before he went down to Capernaũ to obey & please his kinsfolkes withal. And furthwith he goeth into the temple, which place is wont to be ofte gone to of a religiouse minde, to serue god therin: And verelye Christ was the maister of true religion, who when he entered into the temple which was ordeyned for deuout religion & worshipping of god, founde there thapparaunce not of a temple, but rather of a market place. For he founde verye many there, which in ỳ holy place did exercise themselues about filthie, yea & sinful gaine, & so turned into robbery that which was ordeined to geue occasiõ of godly religion. For to thinke that straungiers might haue some what to offer, they solde to them of an hye pryce, shepe, oxen dooues, & other suche lyke thinges, whiche (according to the custome of ỳ Jewes) were woonte to be offered or geuen to the priestes: but in the meane while ỳ sellers bargained with the priestes and leuites that the sayd priestes & leuites should sel agayne to thẽ by a lesse pryce, the selfesame beastes that the priestes had receyued of them which had offered, wherby thing the sellers did, because they myghte sell those beastes agayn to other straungiers with a double gaine. So it was brought to passe that by powling the straungers, the filthie gayne whiche rose double by selling one thing twyse, shoulde be deuyded betwene the merchaunte and the ministers of the temple. And to haue more quicke and readye marchaundise, there was presente, according to the custome of their cõmon market, chaungers of money and bankers, such as did chaunge the greater coynes for money of smaller coyne, or golde for siluer, or els did exchaunge strange coyne for coyne of that place. And thereby also they had shamefull gayne, litle differyng from vsurie. Jesus then declaryng by hys very acte how great a pestilence corrupt desyre of lucre is to the church, and howe far al they ought to be from thys diseale, which professe themselues rulers of religion of the gospell, made him (as it were) a scourge of smal cordes, as though he would driue dogges out of goddes temple. And both with great indignacion and auctoritie, he droue them all out of the temple, displaying and throwyng downe bothe the merchaunises and their wares: And did not onely put out the men, but also the shepe, and oxen, that there shoulde remayne behynde no suche filthie baggage.

Yea and besydes that, he scattered abrode the chaungers money vpon the ground, and ouerthrew also their boardes, teaching how these thinges ought vtterly to be troden vnder foote of the worshippers of true religiō. Moreouer as if he had bene moued with indignacion therat, he sayd to them which sould the dooues: haue these thinges hence: and make not my fathers house an house of marchaundise. And hys disciples when they sawe Jesus, beyng at all other times quiete and meke, here now how earnestly he chased out those which did vnseemely vse and defyle the godly religion of the temple with theyr fowle and sinnefull gayne, the disciples, I say, remembred the prophecie whiche is in the three score and eyght psalme. The zele of thy house hath euen eaten me.

The texte. Then answered the Jewes and sayd vnto him: what token shewest thou vnto vs, seeing that thou doest these thinges? Jesus answered and sayed vnto them: destroy this temple, and in three daies I will reare it vp.

But as for the Jewes when they had hearde that he namyng his fathers house, did as it were by a certayne peculier and singular way, declare himselfe to be the sonne of god, and saw hym also so hyely take vpon hym openlye and in apparaunce to be so very angrye with them, whiche semed to further bothe the priestes profite, & also the religiouse seruice of god, they crie out vpon hym and saye: If god be thy father, and if thou wilt reuenge the contempte and iniurie of thy father, doe soe miracle þ we may perceyue thou doest these thinges by the auctoritie of thy father. If thou doest these thinges by thyne owne auctoritie it is presumption: And if thou dost them by goddes auctoritie, what token shewest thou that we may beleue thee? But Jesus knowing þ they would slaunder him in case he had wrought any miracle to shew himselfe therby, seyng he neuer yet did any miracle but onely to succoure them that lacked helpe in theyr nede, to thintente þ the same thyng whiche was a proufe of hys godly power, should be also a benefit & helpe vnto the necessitie of man, he promised thē a token vnder a parable, which token if he had thē openly declared, they would not haue beleued, in so much as they did not beleue it whē it was doē in dede. The token was cōcerning his death & resurrectiō. The same was also signified by Jonas, which token Jesus had promised after he had doen many miracles, & also at such time as they required him to shew sū token þ should cū frō reaue. But now he promiseth (although more darkely) þ selfesame token to thē, who as yet were but ignorāt: The temple wherin they were at that time, occasioned him to say as he did: of the which temple þ Jewes dyd boast themselues beyond

Destroy this temple, and in three dayes.&c measure. Breake down this temple, sayth he, & in three dayes I will set it vp again. This parable not so much as his Apostles did vnderstand. But at length whē they had knowē & sene his resurrectiō, they perceiued the meaning of his saying, by the effect of the thing it selfe: for Iesus ment it by the temple of hys owne body, whiche they through their malice should pul downe, by putting it to death: & he by his godly power, should raise it vp again within thre daies. The Iewes thought thys saying not onely to fonde and without reason, but also vngodly and wicked. For it was an vngodly thyng to commaund a temple of so great religion to bee broken: and to set vp agayne within three dayes so laborious a building, semed to be a saying contrarye to all reason.

Then sayde the Iewes: xlvi. yeres was this temple a building, and wilt thou reare it vp in three dayes? But he spake of the temple of hys bodye. Whose therefore as he was risen from deathe agayn, his disciples remembred that he had thus sayd: And they beleued the scripture and the woordes whiche Iesus had sayde. The texte.

And as they vnderstode the thing, so they answered accordingly, saying: When labored very sore ꝑ space of xlvi. yeres after that the Babilonias had brought Iewry into captiuitie to repayre this temple, and wilt thou set it vp again in thre daies? Our lord Iesus made no aunswer to that obiection, knowing that he should haue doone no good, in case he had made playne his darke saying, whē not so much as his owne disciples, yea, after they were instructed by his doing of so many miracles, & his so manifolde preachinges, could abide to heare hys death spoken of, nor beleue the mistery of his resurrection. Yet this saying did lieue and remayne still, as a certayne seede in the myndes of the hearers: but it brought furth sundry fruites in soondry persones. For the Iewes kepyng the same still in theyr remembraunce, did lay thys saying to hys charge before the wicked priestes, as a cryme worthye of deathe. The disciples in as muche as at that time they coulde not vnderstande it, yet bearing it in theyr myndes, dyd mervayl what it shoulde meane vntyl the tyme that after hys resurrection the holy ghost taught them how Christ by the name of the temple, ment his owne bodye that was muche more holy then the temple, whiche the Iewes dyddē honour so religiously: for so muche as the fulnesse of the godheade dyd dwell therin. And yet emongeste them it was sacrilege to defile and violate that temple of stone: but they were nothing afrayed synfully to throw downe the most holy temple of hys moste holy and precious bodye. Howbeit Iesus the verye Salomon who had builded this temple for his owne selfe, of the virgin Marie, did restore it agayne within three dayes after they had pulled it downe, according to the prophecies of the prophetes. Therfore the disciples conferring the scryptures with Iesus saying at thys tyme, dyd perceyue thys hys resurrection to be the greatest token whereby he declared to the Iewes his godhed. For albeit we haue red that some men haue risen againe from death to life, yet no man did raise vp himselfe to life but onely our lord Iesus. For he onely had power in himselfe to leaue his life and to reuiue it agayn, when he would. And by these principles & beginninges, Iesus did stirre vp all the Iewes myndes to looke for greater thinges in hym against theyr hye feast, which was nowe at hande. But he spake of the temple of his bodye. And they beleued the scripture. &c.

When he was in Ierusalē at Ester, in the feast day, many beleued on his name whē they sawe his miracles which he did: but Iesus did not commit himselfe vnto them because he knew al men, & neded not that any man should testify of him: for he knew what was in man. The texte.

But after ꝑ he had taried at Ierusalem certayn dayes of the feaste of Ester, & had shewed his miracles and doctrine had, as it were, sowen some seedes of the fayth

of the

of the ghospel, many being moued rather with the miracles whiche he did then with his woordes, did credite his saying: and beleued him to bee the sonne of god, whome he preached himselfe to be. For the Iewes be not so much moued with reason as with the sight of miracles: but Iesus then shewyng to vs the very forme and fashion of a teacher of the gospel, to whose wisedome it appertayneth not euen at the firste to commit to the myndes of ignorannte persones all the misteries of his hye doctrine, whose gentlenesse it behoueth to beare with, and to suffer them that be yet but weake and vnperfit vntill they may attayne to hier thinges: Iesus, I say, because he knewe theyr fayth was yet but wauering and vnperfite, and theyr myndes not hable to receyue the mysteryes of the wisedome of the gospel, he dyd not aduenture himselfe emong the common sort, lest the peoples affections should be sodainly altered, where by some commocion were like to rise. For there were many that were sore vexed with the auctorite of Iesus, specially they whiche dyd suppose that hys doctryne and glory should hinder theyr lucre and auctorite. The enuie of the Pharisees and Scribes had not yet brast forth into open slaundering of hym, but neuertheless they kepte enuie and malice close in theyr hearres, decerkully seking occasion to hurte hym. And therfore because at this time Iesus could doo litle good emong them, lest he should geue euil persones occasyon of greater euyll, he withdrewe himselfe from them, forasmuch as he knewe the secret thoughtes of them all, neither neded he to bee tolde any thyng of any manne. For he, who was ignorannte in nothing, knewe euen of hymselfe the verye secretes of euery man there. Neyther yet in the meane whyle dyd Iesus make any prouisyon to saue himselfe, who willyngly came of verye purpose to suffer deathe for the saluacion of the world, but he toke away from theyr malice occasyon wherby they shoulde els haue sinned.

The iii. Chapter.

The texte. There was a man of the phariseis named Nicodemus a ruler of the Iewes. The same came to Iesus by night and said vnto him: Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from god, for no man coulde doe suche miracles, as thou doest, except god were with him.

Amonge many whiche had conceiued some good opinion of Iesu by seing him do his miracles, there was a certain man called Nicodemus, who was of ỹ phariseis secte: and one of the nounber of them whiche were taken emong the Iewes for chiefe rulers. Thys Nicodemus knowing right wel that there were many of his ordre and secte, whiche did enuie Iesu, and lay in wayte to doe hym displeasure, went vnto Iesu, but it was in the night tyme: declaring by that dede how he was as yet but weake & wauering in hys loue toward Iesu: whome although here-

The same came to Iesu by nighte &c. tofore he had in great admiracion, neuertheles he wolde not for hys sake suffre anye losse of hys own renoume & glory emong men: nor yet for his loue would he be brought to be hated & enuied of his own cumpany: but this came rather of feare then of vngodlines, and surely more of worldly shamefastnes, then of frowardnesse: and of truth this maner of shamefastnes hath so great power in some folkes myndes, that they whiche can litle regarde bothe theyr goodes goodes and their lyfe, cannot ouercome this kinde of affection, which is specially grafted in those hertes that be naturally disposed to gentlenes. For he which was the chiefest emong the rulers of the Iewes, was ashamed to bee taken for poore Iesus disciple. And he who was placed in ỹ hieist seate of the Synagogue, feared to be put out of that place. But Iesus the moste milde and gentle teacher, who doeth not breake the bruised reede, nor quenche the smoldring flaxe, did not repel or refuse the saied Nicodemus, that came to salute hym, though he were both fearfull and came out of due tyme, but doeth curteously receiue hym who was doubtlesse a weake spirited manne, but yet without malyce, and for that cause worthy to be promoted lytle by lytle, to higher thinges. Now by and by Nicodemus declaring how much he had profited by seyng Iesus doe his miracles, maketh suite to gette his good will with this preface. Maister, saieth he, we doe already euidently perceiue this thy doctrine not to be suche as the Pharisees is, for the thyng it selfe doeth shewe that thine authoritie of preaching is geuen the not of man but of God. For no manne could doe these miracles, which thou doest except God were present with hym and did helpe hym. Nicodemus dyd set forth this opinion concernyng Iesus, as an hype and great estimation, howbeit it was farre vnder his dignitie: for Nicodemus supposed him to be none other, but summe Prophete whom God dyd fauour, and was present with in the doing of his miracles, as though he had not wrought them by his owne power.

Iesus answered and sayed vnto hym: verily verily I saye vnto the: except a manne bee borne frō aboue, he cannot see the kyngdome of God. Nicodemus sayeth vnto hym: howe can a man be borne, when he is older: can he entre into his mothers wombe and be borne againe? The texte.

But Iesus doeth neither reproue Nicodemus vnperfite opinion cōcerning him, neither doeth he forthwith boast of his owne greatnes: but with gentle and frēdly behauiour, litle by litle bringeth him that is so apte, and redy to bee taught, vnto further knowledge of more secrete misteries of the euāgelicall doctrine. The Iewes which had as yet dronke but only of ỹ water of Moses lawe, whiche had known nothyng els but the baptisme of Iohn, neither had they yet tasted the wyne of the euangelicall doctrine, nor had been baptysed by the spirite and fyer: The Iewes (I say) vnderstode all thynges carnally, and for that cause were very rude and vnfit for the Philosophie of the gospel, whiche is all spirituall. Therfore our lorde did not cast him in the teeth with his ignorannce, nor with his halting minde on both sides, in that he did partely apply himselfe to the worlde, and partely to God, nor yet spake that thing to him which afterwarde he required of his disciples, when they were come to more knowledge, saying to them: whosoeuer shalbe ashamed of me afore men, I will be also ashamed of hym before my father. Our lorde, I say, did lay none of these forsaied thynges to his charge, but by his darke sayinges he causeth Nicodemus to vtter his ignorance, to the entent that litle by litle he may instruct him, and bring him from carnal affection to spirituall vnderstanding. Nicodemus (sayth he) take this for a very suertie, except a man be borne again new, and as it were chaūged into a new man, he cānot see the kingdome of God: So very new is this doctrine which thou desirest to learne of me. Forasmuche as Nicodemus thought that saying to be to no purpose, he answereth in dede ignorauntly and grossely, but neuertheleise simply and plainly, saying: how is it possible that a man being already of so many yeres as I am, can be borne again? Canne it any waye be brought to passe that he should entre into his mothers wombe, and come thence again and so be borne a newe?

The texte. Jesus answered: verily verily I saye vnto the, except a man be borne of water and of the spirite, he cannot entre into the kyngdome of God. That whiche is borne of the flesh is flesh, and that whiche is borne of the spirite is spirite.

Except a man be borne of water and of the spirite.

Jesus beyng not offended euen with this so grosse an aunswere, bouchesaueth gētelly to enterprete and declare what it is to be borne a new, or from aboue. Nicodemus (sayth he) the thing that I haue saied to the is most true. He that hath a will and desire to be hable to receiue the euangelical Doctrine, must be borne again: but the maner of byrthe that I speake of, is after an other sorte: for it is not carnall but spirituall, and it doeth not consist in multiplying of bodyes by generation, but in turnyng of soules into a new forme: neither by this byrth be we made again the children of me, but ꝑ children of God. Therfore be wel assured (as I toulde you euē now) that except a man be borne again by water & the holy gost, & of a carnall mā become spirituall, he cannot entre into the kingdom of God which is altogether spiritual. Lyke is borne of the lyke. That which is borne of the flesh, is none other thyng the flesh: but that which is borne of the spirite is spirite. And verily as much difference as is betwene the flesh, & the spirite, betwene ꝑ body & God, so much is this generacio (wherof I speake) more excellent then that which bringeth forth one body out of an other. They which be borne after ꝑ flesh, doe sauer none other thing but the flesh, nor beleue any thing to be, but ꝑ which they fele and perceiue wt their senses. But those thynges which be not seen, be moste excellent, and of greatest strength, where as the flesh is weake and impotente.

That whiche is borne of flesche. &c.

The texte. Mernaile not thou that I saied to the, ye must be borne from aboue: The wynde bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sounde therof, but canst not tell whence it cummeth or whyther it goeth. So is euery one that is borne of the spirite.

Mernaile not thou that I saye to thee, ye must be borne from aboue.

Wherfore seyng that there be two sundry wayes how to be borne: there is no cause why thou shouldest mernaile that the same beray man, which is once borne naturally after the flesh, whereby he might be the child of a man, should be borne again of the spirite inuisible, that thereby he maye be the childe of God, who is a spirite, & also might be made apte for the kyngdom of heauen which is spirituall and not carnal. But if thou doest not yet vnderstand me, take vnto the a similitude of suche thynges as be sumwhat agreable to spirituall thynges, and yet may be perceiued with our bodily senses. God in very deede is a moste sincere and pure spirite, and very far of, from all bodily senses: but this ayre, wherby we be cōserued in life, & wherof we fele so great strength and profit, is called a spirite or wynde, because in cōparison of our bodies it is right subtile and fyne: but this kinde of spirite the wynde, is not stayed at mannes will and pleasure, but of his owne violence is caryed whyther soeuer he list: spreading it selfe ouer all thynges, and putting into corporall thynges a meruailous force and strength. Sumtyme it bryngeth lyfe, sumtime death: it is otherwhyle calme and still, and otherwhile more boysterous & violent: sumtyme it bloweth out of the East, sumtime out of ꝑ West, sumtime out of one part of the world, sumtime out of another, shewing himselfe by the effect therof: & so thou hearest the sound of it whē thou seest no body at all, nor any thyng whiche thou canst catche or lay hand vpon: thou perceyuest

The wynde bloweth. &c

neſt that it is preſent, yet doeſt thou not ſee it whẽ it cummeth, nor to what place it conueyeth it ſelfe when it goeth from thee. This ſpiritual birth is of lyke ſorte. The ſpirite of God doth rauiche & tranſforme the myndes of men by ſecrete inſpiracions: Therfore there is felt an vneſtable ſtrength & efficacie, and yet the thyng whiche is doen is not perceyued with our iyes. And they whiche be thus borne again, bẽ not led with a worldly & carnal ſpirite, but with the ſpirite of God, whiche geueth life to all thinges and gouerneth theſame. So is euery one that is borne of the ſpirite.

Nicodemus anſwered and ſayed vnto him: How can theſe thinges be? Jeſus anſwered and ſayed vnto hym: Art thou a maiſter in Jſrael and knoweſt not theſe thinges? The texte.

Nicodemus being as yet rude and groſſe, did not repugne againſt Jeſus, but not perceyuing the meanyng of his wordes, and deſirouſe alſo to haue thoſe thynges, which he had heard, more plainly declared, ſayeth to Jeſus: By what meanes can theſe thinges be brought to paſſe that a man of bodily ſubſtaunce ſhould be turned into a ſpirite by a newe byrthe, and of God bee borne godlyke? Howe Jeſus to declare that thoſe thinges which pertaine to the heauenly doctrine are not perceiued with mans reaſon, but rather are cõprehended with fayth, and ſhewyng lykewyſe that the philoſophiers of the world being proude of their naturall wytte, were vnapte to be taught theſe thinges, yea & the Phariſeis alſo whiche ſtoutly profeſſed the litterall ſence of the lawe, when in dede they knewe not the ſpiritual meanyng therof: but to declare therfore that this his doctrine is theſame wiſedom which the father of heauen would hyde from worldly perſones, & open to them which as touchyng the world, are ſimple witted, & taken for fooles: Jeſus (I ſay) maketh this anſwer to Nicodemus ſaying: thou art taken for a maiſter in Jſrael, and profeſſeſt thy ſelfe to be a teacher of the people, & art thou ignorawnt in theſe thinges which thou oughteſt moſt chiefly to knowe: how farre of then are the common ſorte of people from ſpirituall doctrine, if thou being ſo great a teacher of the people, doeſt not vnderſtãd theſe thinges? but in the meane while it ſhal profit thee to beleue that thing which thou canſt not vnderſtãd. Faith ſhall cauſe thee to feele and perceiue theſe thinges although thou ſeeſt thẽ not: for if thy witte cannot ſerue thee, to come to the full knowledge of the nature and violence of this worldly ayre, when thou feleſt it with thy ſences, howe ſhalt thou attaine to the knowledge of theſe thinges which are farre hier and further of from all bodily ſenſes? For truly inas much as they be godly, they doe farre paſſe and ſurmounte the capacitie of mennes myndes, except they? myndes be inſpired with the holy ghoſte. Howe can theſe thinges bee? Art thou a maiſter in Jſracle &c.

Verily verily we ſpeake as we doe knowe, and teſtifie that we haue ſeen, and ye receyue not our witnes. If I haue tould you yearthly thinges, and ye beleue not, how ſhall ye beleue yf I tell you of heauenly thynges? The texte. We ſpeake as we doe knowe. &c.

But thou mayeſt ſurely and ſafely beleue me whiche doe not onely by inſpiracion feele theſe thynges that be heauenly, or haue only heard them after ſuch ſorte as the Prophetes did (of whoſe numbre thou takeſt me to be one) but we ſpeake thinges wherof we haue had full proufe & ſure knowledge, yea & we beare witnes to you in earthe of ? thing which we haue ſeen in heauen. But ye which bẽ not yet borne again by the ſpirite, doe not beleue theſe ſpirituall thinges. Ye beleue a man when he beareth witnes of thoſe thinges which he hath ſeen with his bodely iyes, & yet ye doe not credit him, who being heauenly himselfe, hath seen heauenly thinges with his spirituall yes. As heauenly thinges be of more certaintie then earthly thinges: so they be more assuredly perceyued of hym which hath heauenly yes. Verily our Lord Jesus spake these thynges couertly and darkely, signifying that he was naturally God, although he caryed about a mortall body: and to shewe also that this wirnes which Nicodemus did attribute to hym as an hye thing (that is to say that he was sent from God) was farre vnder Jesus dignitie, after his sorte of meanyng whiche he spake it: for Nicodemus as yet iudged no higher thing of Jesu, but that he was sent from God as we reade other Prophetes haue been, and in suche wyse as John also was sent from God. But the sonne of God was after an higher sorte sent from God, who alwaie had been with God the father, before he was sent: yea and euē then was with the father as touching his godhead: by reason wherof, he neuer departed from the father. And for because those thinges which therfore Jesus had spoken cōcerning how to be borne a new by water & spirite, might appere to grosse or rude for the highnes of this misterie, that is to say how Gods nature & mans should be buried together in one person, that the same person should lyue in earth a very mortall man, and be so immortall God still remaynyng with his father in heauen: Therfore (I say) Jesus spake further, saying: If you, by reasō of your carnal and fleshly minde, doe not beleue me speakyng to you as yet but of earthly thinges, how will ye beleue me, if I shal tel you those thinges that be altogether heauenly: which neuertheles both I my selfe haue seen, & know wen more assuredly then ye know the these thynges which ye see with your bodily yes.

The terte. And no man ascendeth vp to heauen, but he that came downe from heauen, euen the sonne of manne whiche is in heauen. And as Moses lifted vp the serpente in the wildernes, euen so must the sunne of manne be lifte vp: that whosoeuer beleueth in hym, perysshe not but haue eternall lyfe.

No manne ascendeth vp to heauen.

For who emong eyther menne or angels was euer able to ascende vp to heauen, there to beholde celestiall thynges, and presently to looke vpon the diuine nature as it is in dede? No mā at al ascendeth vp into this heauen, but the sonne of man, who came downe from heauen into the earth: and the very same doeth yet still remaine in heauen, beyng neuer seperate from the perfite beholdyng of the godhead, albeit in the meane while he semeth here in earth, to be base & litle regarded. But thus it was thought mete to þ determinatiō of God, to declare his glory to þ world by worldly reproche, & lowe estate: to thintent þ by the very same way, men after they haue forsake false glory: should make haste to the true and eternall glory. And if any manne aske what necessitie compelled the sonne of God to come downe from heauen, & to lyue here in earth as a poore abiecte persō: truly none other thing was cause therof, but the mosse hye and excellent loue of God the father toward mankynd, for whose saluatiō he hath geuen his only begotten sonne to suffer death, yea and suche a death as is mosse shameful after the worldes estimatiō, his will was to destroy & geue one for the saluatiō of al men. Nicodemus (sayth he) let not this thyng seme to thee to be suddayne and straunge, this is the very thyng which Moses by a figure did signifie should come, when, at such time as the people did perishe thorow the vehement inuasion of serpentes, he did hang vp a brasen serpent vpon a stake: that whosoeuer had loked therupon, should be safe from the deadly stryng of the serpētes. Therfore as that brasen

As Moses lyfted vp þ serpent.

sen serpent hauing in dede the likenes of a venemous beaste, but yet beyng so voyde of all venome, that it did also helpe others whiche were poysoned, was hanged vp in the desert, that all men might see it, for their saffete: so muste the sonne of man be exalted, to thintent that all, which thorowe faith shall lifte vp their tyes vnto hym, maye be deliuered frō the deadly poyson of synne, that not onely the people of Israel, but generally what manne soeuer with a pure herte putteth his full truste in hym, should not perishe, as subiect to sinne which bringeth euerlastyng death: but thorow the death of one innocent, shoulde obtayne eternall lyfe. Truelye our lorde Iesus by this maner of darke sayinges opened to Nicodemus the misterie of his manhed, and of redemyng the worlde by the crosse: albeit he was not yet able to receyue and vnderstande these thynges. In the meane while declaryng therewithall, howe great difference was betwene them whiche did reade the lawe after a carnall sence, consideryng nothyng but the plaine storye therof, and them, whiche by inspiracion of the holye ghoste (of whom heretofore we haue spoken) did perceyue the mistical sence that lieth hid, couered ouer with the texte. But neuertheles our lorde Iesus did then, as it were, sowe seedes of fayth into Nicodemus minde: that hereafter he might perceiue this thyng to haue been doen not by casualtie or chaunce, but by the appoyntment of God: and so the good seede beyng receyued into apte grounde, might byyng furth in due tyme, the fruite of faith, not only in Nicodemus hert, whiche did heare these thynges, but also in all theyr myndes, vnto whom these thynges should be declared by his repoyce.

The texte.

For God so loued the worlde, that he gaue his onely begotten sonne, that whosoeuer beleueth in hym, should not perishe, but haue euerlastyng lyfe. For God sent not his sonne into the worlde, to condemne the worlde, but that the worlde thorow him might be saued. He that beleueth in hym is not condemned. But he that beleueth not is condemned alreadye, because he hath not beleued in the name of the onely begotten sonne of god.

He gaue his one ye begotten sonne.

For who would haue beleued the charitie of God to haue been so greate towardes the worlde beyng rebell to hym, and giltie of so many great faultes, that not onely he did not reuenge the vngraciouse actes that had been committed therin, but also sent downe his onely sonne from heauen into earth, and deliuered hym to suffre death: yea euen the moste shamefull death of the crosse, to thintente that what man soeuer would beleue in him, wether Iewe, Grecian, or neuer so barbarouse, should not perishe, but obtaine eternall lyfe, thorowe the fayth of the ghospel. For albeit that in tyme to come the father should iudge the vniuersall worlde by his sonne at his last cummyng, yet at this tyme, whiche is appoynted for mercie, God hath not sente his sonne to condemne the worlde for the wicked dedes therof, but by his death to geue free saluacion to the worlde thorow faith. And leste any body perishyng wilfully, should haue wherby to excuse their owne malice, there is geuen to al folkes an easie entrie to saluacion. For satisfaccion of the faultes committed before, is not required: neither yet obseruacion of the law, nor circumcision: only he that beleueth in hym shall not be condemned: for asmuche as he hath embraced that thing, by the whiche eternal saluacion is geuen to all folkes, be thei neuer so muche burdened with synnes, so that the same person after he hath professed the ghospell, dooe abstayne from the euil dedes of his former life, and laboure to go forward to perfect godlines according to the doctrine of him, whose name he hath professed: but whosoeuer contemnyng so great charitie of God towardes hym, and putting from himselfe the saluacion that was freely offred hym, doeth not beleue the ghospell: he

He that beleueth on him is not condemned.

Because he hath not beleued.

hath no nede to be iudged of any body, for as muche as he doeth openly condēne himselfe, and reiectyng the thyng, wherby he mighte attaine eternall lyfe, maketh hymselfe giltye of eternall payne. God hath offred saluacion to all folkes by his onely begotte sonne, and ꝑ thys owe faithe, to thyntent we maie knowlege and worshyp hym as the auctour of saluacion, and put the hope of all oure felicitie in hym. Wholoeuer refuseth thus to do and despiseth the goodnes of god beyng so readie to be had, and dishonoureth his sonne, whom the father wolde haue to be honoured, and also estemeth as nothyng his death that he suffred for vs, that person (I saye) doeth declare himselfe euen in very dede to be worthy of euerlastyng punishement. For who perceyueth not hym to perishe of good right, and thorow his owne faute, whiche willingly & wittyngly doeth embrace that thing, by the which he perisheth, and resisteth that thyng, wherby he might haue recouered healthe.

The texte. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the worlde, and men loued darkenes more then light. because their dedes were euill: for euery man that euill doeth, hateth the light, neither cummeth he to the light lest his dedes should be reproued: but he that doeth trueth, cummeth to the light that his dedes maye be knowē how that they are wrought in god.

Men loued darkenes more then light.

Because their workes were euill.

For euerye man ꝑ euill doeth hateth the light.

Errour and synnes be the darkenes of myndes, and synnes doe ingender euerlastyng death. The sonne of God is the lighte of the worlde: for the lighte is trueth, to beleue him is euerlastyng healthe. Therefore when thorowe the bountifull goodnes of God, light came into the worlde, whiche was blynded thorowe lacke of knowledge of the trueth, and with innumerable vices, to thintent that the trueth beyng knowen, it should be conuerted and saued: yet men loued theyr owne darkenes, more then the lyght that was sente from heauen. If the sicke man perishe, whiche hideth his disease from the physician, because he would not be holpen, dooeth not he geue iudgemente of hymselfe that he perisheth thorowe his owne faute? So menne that were altogether geuen to the worlde, did refuse the light when it was offred them, because their workes were euill. For as he whiche committeth a shamefull acte, dooeth loue the darke nighte, and shunneth the light of the sunne, leste his deedes should be knowen, so thei whiche know themselues giltie, hate the light of the euangelical trueth, by the whiche all foule and naughtie doinges are bewraied, because thei might be amended: for he cannot be holpen that loueth his disease. The sinner must mekelye himself, that he may please God. But he whose workes be good, loueth the light of the sunne, that he maye be commended for his well doyng. So he that hath a good cōscience, or at least he whiche despyeth to be healed, and doeth not dissemble or colloure his synnes: (for this is also a kynde of trueth to knowlege the euill that is in thee, and to couet the good thyng which thou lackest) hr, I saye, doeth willyngly offre hymselfe to the light of the gospell, that his workes maye be made manyfest: and those dedes which be good maye be praysed, because they procede not from the spirite of the worlde, but from God: and those whiche be euill maye be corrected and amended. But they whiche doe presumptcously attribute to themselues perfit righteousnes by the obseruacion of the lawe, when inwardly their myndes swimme in vices, they also which sette their felicitie in the defenses of worldly wisedome, and in the commodities of this worlde, eyther they lyue in great darkenes in case they beleue this in their herte, or els they liue in greatter darkenes, yf they being blinded with their

their naughtie affections, doe stifly vpholde and maintеine that thyng, which they perceyue to be euill, and obstinately refuse that thyng which they see to be helthfull. Our lorde Jesus dyd (as it were) lay vp in store certain seedes of suche like misteries, in Nicodemus harte. And verily this is that Nicodemus, which afterwarde did defende and aunswer for Jesu, against the false surmisses of the Pharisеis by meane of his autozitie, saying, howe no manne ought to be condēned, but vpō due proofe of his actes. This is he also which dyd honour his buriall with his seruice, when he was dead.

The texte.

After these thinges came Jesus and his disciples into the lande of Jewry, & there he taried with them, and baptised. And John also baptised in Enon besides Salim, because there was muche water there: and they came & were baptised. For Jhon was not yet cast in pryson. And there arose a question betwene Johns disciples and the Jewes about purifying. And they came vnto John, & sayed vnto him: Rabbi, he that was with the beyonde Jordan (to whom thou bareste witnes) beholde the same baptiseth, and all men come to him.

Jesus then, after he had layed these foundacions of the glozy of the ghospel in Galile, and Jerusalem, to thintent he might moze and moze be knowen abrode, went into the lande of Jewry, which countrey had his proper name of Judas the autor of that tribe, of the which Jesus lineally descended. And there he taried a lytle whyle with his disciples, beginnyng his euangelicall preaching with the same principles wherewith John had begun. For he dyd allure them to penaunce, & did baptise them. And at that tyme also John dyd stil baptise, for Herode had not yet put him in prisō. But now he did not baptise in Jordan as he was wonne to doe, but in a place lesse notable, whiche was called Enon, not farre from Salim, (whiche signifieth in the Syrians tongue, gushyng streames of water) by the reason wherof, there was plēte of water to baptise the people withal. Many did come to that place, & were baptised of John: Sum went to Jesus, and were baptised of his disciples. And by this occasiō certain of Johns disciples did enuy Jesu, forasmuch as concerning he himselfe was lately baptised of John: & had behaued himselfe as though he had bren his disciple, & also had been cōmēded & set furth to the people by his witnes, he would now forthwith make himselfe equall to him: yea & moreouer preferre himselfe before hym, in that his disciples did take vpon them the thyng, which hitherto none but John had doen. And first of al they labonred to withdraw the people frō the baptisme of Jesus disciples, & went about to perswade them that Johns baptisme was of moze effecte, in washyng away of synnes, then the baptisme of Jesu. When they couldе not perswade the people to beleue this, they wente to John, makyng their complaynte to him, thinking that he would be mislontented therwith, and by sum meanes stay this their griefe & grudge. But this worldly affeccio of Johns disciples, did þ moze set furth Christes glozy, & caused John to testifie moze manifestly of Christ. And they doe cōplaine of the matter vp these woordes. Maister (say they) he that was lately wt you, when you did baptise besydes Jordan, & was baptised of you himselfe, yea & euen he whom ye did cōmend with your witnes emonges the multitude, when he was vnknowe to al folkes, now taketh vpon him to doe as you did, that is to say, to baptise openly: and all menne runne on heapes to him, by which thyng it must nedes come to passe, that by hym thyne autozitie shall be darkened. Johns disciples spake these thynges of a certaine carnall affection, desiryng to haue their maisters glory and renoume to be dayly increased, and for this cause they dyd enuy Christe, whose autorities semed to hynder Johns estimacion.

The texte. John answered and sayed: A man can receyue nothyng except it be geuen hym from heauen. Ye your selues are witnesses, howe that I sayed: I am not Christe, but am sente before hym. He that hath the bryde, is the bridegrome, but the frende of the bridegrome which standeth, and heareth hym, reioyseth greatly, because of the bridegromes voyce. This my ioy therfore is fulfilled: he must encrease, but I must decrease.

When Johm had heard these thinges, he did so goe about to remedie the euill desyre of his disciples, that he dyd not onely shewe himselfe not to take grenously that the dayly increase of Jesus glory should darken his, but also did greatly reioyce therat. He shewed that he had fully accomplyshed the office that he was charged withall, & that now Christes tyme was come, who should performe thinges far more excellent. Therfore he answereth on this wise. Why will ye glory in me, of a carnall and worldly affection? doe ye desyre that I should make my selfe greater then I am? Man can haue nothyng, except it be geuen hym from aboue. For these thinges be not doen by mannes helpe and strength, but by the autorisie of God: that office which he hath assigned to me, accordyng to my habilitie, thesame haue I perfourmed layefully. I haue doen the office of a goer before: I haue allured and prouoked men to penaunce, warnyng them that the kyngdome of heauen was at hande. With the baptisme of water I haue prepared many to the baptisme of the spirite and fier: I haue shewed you whom ye ought to folowe from henceforth, & of whom ye must aske perfecte health. If ye regard myne autorisie, why doe ye not geue credite to my woordes? your selues can beare recorde, that I haue diuerse times openly confessed my selfe not to be Christe, whom many take me to be: neyther þ I was sente for any other purpose but that I going before, should make redy the waye for him against he came. I am his seruaunt, he is Lord of all thynges. But if he now begin to be knowen to the worlde, & that his fame and renoume doeth darken myne, I reioyce that my witnes was true. For I did only with & desire, that my seruice myght growe to that ende and effecte. For as the bryde is his by right, whiche is the very bridegrome in dede, and yet he whiche is not the bridegrome but onely his frende, doeth not enuy the bridegromes felicitie, nor taketh his spouse from him, but reioyseth on his behalfe, whom he toucheth in his herte: and holdyng his peace standeth by him, & also with great ioy of mynde heareth the voice of the bridegrome whiles he talketh with his spouse: so I, who haue wished for nothyng more, then that he should be knowen to be so great a man, as of truethe is, & that I should be no more taken for a greater man than I am in dede, doe greatly reioyce, in that I perceiue this matter to haue so good successe. Of right he must encrease, which hitherto hath been reputed to be much lesse, then he is in dede. And it is mete that I should decrease, who haue alwaye be taken to be greater then I was. Thus it is expedient for mans saluation, both that myne estimation should be darkened, and his glory should dayly growe greater: and that my disciples should leaue me, & goe to him: in comparison of whose power, myne is but weake and of none effecte. And my baptisme is as farre vnderneth his, as fire is of more might then water.

The texte. He that cummeth from on hye, is aboue all. He that is of the yearth, is yearthly, and speaketh of the yearth: He that cummeth from heauen is aboue al, and what he hath seen & heard, that that he teſtifieth, & noma receiueth his teſtimonie. He that hath receiued his teſtimonie, hath ſet to his ſeale, that God is true: for he whom God hath ſent ſpeaketh the woordes of God.

It is mete that yearthly thinges ſhould geue place to heauenly, worldely to Godly, imperfite to thynges perfite. He that cummeth from the earth, is earthly, and ſpeaketh thinges that be earthly and baſe. For what other thing can man ſpeake but thynges pertayning to man: but he whiche is come from heauē excelleth al men, be they neuer ſo great. We haue receyued but a ſmall knowlege of heauenly thinges, & as we are able, ſo we teſtifie: but he doeth beare witnes moſte faithfully emong men, of that thyng whiche he hath ſeen and heard in heauen with his father. And men haue me in admiracion, who am muche his inferiour, but no man almoſte receiueth his witnes: they doe require me that am but a ſeruaunt, to beare recorde of hym. And they refuſe the witnes that he beareth of his father. And in dede yf any bodie doe not truſt me, he doeth but miſtruſt a man: yf any doe not beleue hym, whiche is the only ſonne, as the father hath witneſſed with his owne voice, that perſon maketh God a lier. The Jewes doe wurchip the father, and they contemne and diſhonor his ſonne whom he ſent: howbeit euery reproche & iniury doen to the ſonne redoūdeth to the father. Therfore whoſoeuer receiueth the witnes of the ſonne, he geuing credit to the ſonne, doeth certainly affirme God to be true, whiche ſpeaketh in the ſonne. For the ſonne which is ſent from the father, ſpeaketh not the woordes of a mā, but the woordes of God. God hath ſpoken bothe by the Prophetes, and alſo hath made euery man partaker of his ſpirite, accordyng as they haue been able to receyue it. But God hath geuen his ſpirite to this his onely ſonne, not after any certaine meaſure, but he hath powred vpō him, the whole fulnes of his ſpirite, ſo that the father hath nothyng, but the ſonne hath the ſame.

What he hath ſeen, & heard that he teſtifieth

The father loueth the ſonne, and hath geuen all thynges into his hande. He that beleueth in the ſonne hath euerlaſtyng lyfe. He that beleueth not the ſonne, ſhall not ſee lyfe, but the wrath of God abideth on hym.

The texte.

And whatſoeuer the incredulitie of men would take from the ſonne, the father imputeth it to be taken from himſelfe: for the father loueth his only ſōne moſt intierly, and hath put in his hande, the whole ſumme of all thynges, not depriuing himſelfe of his owne power, but maketh that vertue and power which he hath, common to both. And what thing ſoeuer God hath willed to geue and beſtowe vpon mankynde, his pleaſure was to geue it by his ſonne. And verily he offreth to all men no ſmall or meane thyng, for he offreth euerlaſtyng lyfe, but by hym whiche is the only fountayne of eternall lyfe: howbeit that perſon maketh hymſelfe vnapte to receyue this ſo excellent a gyfte, whiche refuſeth to take it. And ſurely he refuſeth it, whiche doeth not beleue that the ſonne can geue and perfourme that whiche he promiſeth. Moreouer he doeth charge the father with vntrueth, as who ſayeth he ſhould promiſe by his ſonne vaine & vntrue thinges. Therfore the rewarde of belefe is great: and the puniſhment of vnbelefe is fierce and terrible. For of trueth, whoſoeuer putteth his hope and truſt in the ſonne, hath already the ſonne, and whoſo hath the ſonne, hath eternall lyfe. The texte. As soone as the Lorde knewe howe the Phariseis had heard that Jesus made and baptised moe disciples thru John (though that Jesus himselfe baptised not, but his disciples) he leaft Jewry, and departed againe into Galile.

ND so John with these woordes corrected the vnmesurable loue and affecion of his disciples toward hymselfe, and their euill and wicked opinion concernyng Jesus: secretely prouokyng them, that they should leaue him, and now folowe Jesus, of whom all men ought to aske al thynges. Therfore when Jesus (frō whom nothyng at all was hid) dyd perceiue the like thing to haue chaunced to him, which is wonte to happen emongest men, that is to saye, that enuy followeth prayse and renoume, and also that now already the Phariseis tooke in euyll parte, that he should allure and drawe to hym many disciples, and that moze people had recourse to his baptisme thē to Johns, although in dede not Jesus himselfe, but his disciples did baptise. (Euen thē declaring ꝑ to preache the gospel was a moze excellent office, then to baptise.) And the Phariseis were so muche the moze greued & displeased, because his disciples dyd take so muche vpon them as they scantly would haue suffred John to haue doen, to whom they dyd attribute very muche: Jesus, I saye, partly because he would not prouoke, sharpen, and stiere vp theyr enuy, in case he should haue longer taried there and therby should seme to haue contemned them, partly because at that tyme he would as it were shewe before, that in the tyme to come, after the Jewes had refused and repelled the grace of the ghospell, it should be brought and geuen to the Gentiles, he leaueth Jewry, hauyng begunne there already the principles of the euangelicall doctrine, and prepareth hymselfe to returne into Galile, from whence he came.

The texte. For it was so that he must nedes goe through Samaria: then came he to a citie of Samaria (which is called Sichar) besydes the possession that Jacob gaue to his sonne Joseph. And there was Jacobs well. Jesus then beyng wery of this iourney, sate downe on the well. And it was about the sixte houre. And there came a woman of Samaria to drawe water. Jesus sayeth vnto her: Geue me drinke. For his disciples were gon away vnto the towne to bye meate. Then sayeth the woman of Samaria vnto hym: howe is it, that thou beyng a Jewe, askest drinke of me which am a Samaritane? for the Jewes medle not with the Samaritanes. Jesus answered & sayd vnto her, if thou knewest the gifte of God, & who is it that sayeth to the, geue me drinke, thou wouldest haue asked of him, & he would haue geuen the water of life.

But in the meane while his waye was to goe through Samaria, whiche countrey the Gentiles did in old time enhabite, after they had expulsed ꝑ Israelites from thence, and brought thither straungers assebled out of diuerse places to dwel there. The Samaritanes being at last taught of God by many troubles & afflictions, did partely enbrace the religion of the Jewes, for they began to worthip one God, although after a contrary sorte, & also they referred their petigrew vnto Jacob, Abrahams sonnes sonne, because he the sayed Jacob dwelled in times past emōges the Caldeis. The Samaritanes did receiue Moses bokes only, but the Prophetes they did not allowe. And that people toke their name of the mount Samor. Therfore the Jewes dyd beare cruell and common hatred agaynst them, remembryng howe once they wonne theyr countrey by violence, and had put the inhabitauntes therof out of theyr dwellyng places. And also forbecause of theyr contrary rites and customes, in most parte of thinges. For they had so receyued Moses lawe, ꝑ yet there did remayne many tokēs of their old superstitiō. Therfore whē Jesus

For it was so that he must nedes go thorowe Samaria.

Than he came to a citie, &c.

sus was cum to a citie of Samaria called Sichar, and he lacked meate (for the disciples dyd so muche attende upon theyr maister, that they had made no provision for any vitels) Jesus himselfe went not into the myddes of the citie, because he would not geue a iuste occasion to the Jewes to late to his charge, that hauyng forsaken the Israelites, he dyd goe to the heathen and wicked Gētiles, as afterwarde in great despite they called hym Samaritane, and a man possessed with a deuill, but he suffered his disciples to go into the citie to bye meate. He himselfe tarved there alone, partly to looke for, and abide the returne of his disciples, and partely because he would not be absente when occasion shoulde serue hym to do a miracle. For he knewe afore what should happen after: and there was that porcion of ground whiche Jacob had geuen to Joseph his sōne to possesse. The place was holy and famous emōges the Samaritanes for the memoriall of the olde storie, because Leui and Simeon hadde reuenged in that place the villanye of the rauishyng of Dina with a great slaughter and destruction of the inhabitauntes there. There was also a wel very notable emong the people, euen for: because Jacob had digged it, in whom, as I sayde before, the Samaritanes do glory as in theyr first progenitour & auctour of their linage. Then Jesus beyng weary of his long tourney, whiche he had goen all on fote, and not on horse backe or in a wagon (euen then geuing vs an example what mauer a man a preacher of the gospel ought to be) sat hym downe there, as the place serued nigh vnto the well, and (as it were) refreshed hymselfe with the ayre therof. And it was then about sixe of the clocke after the Jewes computacion, when the sonne alreadye drawyng towarde nonetyde, dooeth with heate double the paynfulnes of Jesus labour. And by these tokens Jesus dydde declare hymselfe to be a very man in dede, subiecte euen to the selfe same passions whereunto the bodyes of other men be subiect. In the meane whyle in came a certain woman of Samaria thither to drawe water out of the same well, nighe vnto whiche Jesus did sit. To whom Jesus, because furthwith he would mynister to her matter of communication, & would go about to bring her to saluacion vpon the occasion of that thing whiche she did herselfe, saieth in this maner: Woomā geue me drinke. And it chaunced well þ the Apostles in the meane while wer absent, because Jesus would speake certayne secrete thynges to her, which if he had spoken in presence of others, it might haue been thought a point of lightnes. In the whiche thyng certes the Lorde Jesus shewed and gaue to the teachers of the gospel an example of sobre behaueour and gentilnes, who dooeth so litle disdayn to talke with a sinful woman, & one that had naughtely & vnchastely misused her body with diuerse, that also by the meanes of his being with her alone, he did prouide for the bashefulnes of the vnchast woman. The woman perceiuing by Jesus tōgue & apparell also that he was a Jewe, & knowyng right well how muche the Jewes are wont to abhorre the cumpanye of the Samaritanes, tusomuche that they thought themselues also to be defiled when they do eyther mete or speake with any of them, she hauyng great mervaple that he of his owne good will called to her, and asked drynke of her, answereth in this wyse: How commeth this to passe, that thou beyng a Jewe (as I maye well coniecture by thy speache and garment) doest contrarie to the custome of the Jewes, aske drinke of me that am a Samaritane, consydering that ye Jewes are wont to abhorre to haue any thyng to do with the Samaritanes, accomptyng it a thyng detestable to haue any familiaritie or conuersacion

And it was about the sixt houre.

This disciples were gone amare vnto the toun to bye meate.

facion with vs. But Jesus who did not so muche thirste for that kynde of water albeit as concernyng his manhed he was a thirst in dede) as he did coueite the health of the soules, litle by litle doeth allure the poore woman to the knowledge of the grace of the ghospell: and wer yng her after this sorte by a darke saying: to the entent he might the more kindle in her a desire to learne. If thou diddest knowe, saieth he, how excellent that gifte is whiche now God doeth offer vnto you, and in case thou knewest hym also whiche at this presente asketh water to drinke of thee, thou wouldest rather aske drinke of hym, and he couldbe geue vnto thee ferre better water then this is, that is to saye, the water of lyfe.

Ye text. The woman saieth vnto him: Sir thou hast nothyng to drawe with, and the well is deepe, from whence then hast thou that water of lyfe? Art thou greater thy our father Jacob, which gaue vs the well, and he him selfe dranke therof, and his children, and his cattell? Jesus answered and said vnto her: Whosoeuer drynketh of this water, shall thirste againe: but whosoeuer drinketh of the water that I shall geue hym, shall neuer be more athirste: but the water that I shall geue hym shall be in hym a well of water springing vp into euerlasting lyfe. The woman saieth vnto hym: Sir geue me of that water that I thirste not, neither come hither to drawe.

For asmuche as this was spoken of the spirite whiche the beleuers in the ghospell should receiue, it is no meruaill thoughe a poore selye woman of Samaria did not vnderstand it, seing that Nicodemus beyng both a Jewe and a maister could not perceiue that thing, whiche Jesus had spoken sumwhat more plainly, concernyng being borne agayne from aboue, yea and yet did he aunswere more grossely then this woman. For he saied: can a man when he is olde enter again into his mothers wombe, and so be borne a newe? But this woman after she had conceiued a certayn great high thyng of this saying of Jesus, (If thou knewest the gifte of God, and if thou knewest who he were, and he couldegeue thee water of life,) she was not mistonte that he semed litle to regarde Jacobs well, whiche she had in great reuerence, neither yet did she mocke the bolde sayinges of him, whiche was to her both a straunger vnknowen, and also a Jewe, but she desyryng to learne what this was whyche he did so set furth as a thyng straunge and notable, in token of honour calleth him Lord, as who saieth, she had alreadie conceiued no small opinion of him. But in the meane while this example of the woman of Samaria was thus deuised and brought to passe by the prouydence of gods counsel, to rebuke and declare thereby the peruerse frowardnes of the Jewes, whiche were so ferre from thewyng themselues ealie to be taught of our lord Jesus, that they did wickedly despise his benefites, and finde fault with his holsome doctrine, whereas this poore woman hauing a desyre to be taught, did curteously and gently aunswere to all thynges, insomuche that she tarying styll in the heate, and hauyng forgotten the thyng for whiche she came, gaue hede to his wordes, who was to her both vnknowen, a straunger, and of whome as yet she had heard no notable reporte. Sir, saieth she, thou doest promise vnto me water farre more excellēt then this, but thou hast no dessell wherewith to drawe the same, and the well is deepe. Therfore, how shouldest thou come by this liuely water, which thou doest promise? Art thou greater then our father Jacob, whome ye Jewes also haue in reuerence? He gaue this well vnto vs as a notable gift, & did so muche set by this water, that he himself was wont to drinke therof with all his familie, and also his cattel. Jesus perceyuing that the woman was apt to be taught, which did not suspect hym to be a southsayer or an enchaunter, but some notable great man whom she thought worthy to be compared with Iacob (a man highly esteemed of her) Iesus, I say, doeth not disdeyne to allure her by little and little to haue him in higher and greatter estimacion, shewyng how the water wherof he did speake is spirituall, whiche should not refreshe beastes, but soules. Whoso drynketh (sayeth he) of this water whiche the Patriarche Iacob gaue vnto you, dooeth but onely for a shorte time slake the bodily thirst, whiche within a while after will returne agayne. But to thintente that thou mayest vnderstande howe muche this gyfte of God (wherof I haue spoken) is more excellent then the gift of Iacob, I how muche the water (which I promise) is better then this water which floweth furth oute of the veines of the yearth: if any man drinke of this water which I shall geue him (if he delyre it,) he shall not thirste eternally, neyther shall any thirste euer after put hym in any feoperdye, nor yet shall he nede from tyme to tyme anywhere els to aske water, but after he hath once dronken this water, it shall remayne in hym which hath droncke it, and shall bryng furth in thesame a fountaine perpetually springing vp euen vnto life euerlastyng. Iesus spake these thynges by a darke similitude, knowyng that the woman was not yet hable to receyue the misterie of faith, by the whiche the holy ghoste is geuen, who beyng once receyued, neuer failleth, but doeth styll goe forwarde whilest it bryngeth man vp to eternall life. But the simplicitie of this woman was so great, that whereas the Iewes are wont ouerthwartly and wrongfully to interprete suche maner of parables, she not vnderstanding what he saied, but yet both beleuing and louyng hym, saied: Lord I praye the geue me parte of this water, that I be not compelled by beyng often and sundrie times a thirst, to go vnto this wel, and drawe therof. Albeit this aunswere was grosse, yet neuertheles it did declare that her mynde was enclined and readie to beleue.

¶ Iesus saieth vnto her, goe call thy husbande and come hither. The woman aunswered and saied vnto hym: I haue no husbande. Iesus saied vnto her, thou hast well saied: I haue no husbande, for thou hast had fiue husbandes, and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband. In that saiedst thou truely. The texte.

Therfore because she had alreadie conceyued no small opinion of Iesus, he dooeth inuite and moue her further with greater tokens and proues of his godhead to thynke yet more highly of hym. Iesus then, as though he wolde not open so secrete a matter to her, vnles her husbande wer present, commaundeth her to call her husbande, and bryngyng hym with her, to returne agayn to hym by and by. When the woman had heard this, thinkyng that she spake but to a man, and by the reason of womanly shamefastnes, desirying to dissemble & hide her bicidus liuyng, and with denyall of mattimonie to kepe secret her aduoutrie, she saieth: Sir I haue no husbande. Here Iesus doth declaryng his godhed and gently repryuyng the womans lyfe, saieth vnto her: In that thou sayest thou hast no husbande, thou hast tolde the trueth, for although thou hast had fyue husbandes to satisfy thy filthy lustes, yet neuer a one of them was lawfull, yea and euen verye he whom thou now hast, is not thy lawfull husbande. Therefore in this poynte thou hast spoken nothyng but trueth.

The woman sayeth vnto hym: Sir I perceyue that thou arte a prophete. Our fathers worshipped in this mountaine, and ye saye that in Hierusalem is the place where menne ought to worshippe. Iesus sayeth vnto her; woman beleue me, the houre commeth when ye shall neither in this mountayne, nor yet at Hierusalem worshippe the father. Ye worshippe ye wotte not what, we knowe what we worshippe, for saluacion cummeth of the Iewes. But the houre cummeth, and nowe it is, when the true worshippers shall worshippe the The texte.

father in spirite, and in the trueth: For suche the father also requireth to worshipp hym. God is a spirite, and they that worshipp him must worshipp hym in spirite and in the trueth.

The woman when she perceyued the rebukeful synnes of her life, committed at home, not to be hidden from Iesu, beyng a straungier and also a Iewe, who could not know by the reporte of menne, that thing whiche he did disclose, she hyrketh not awaye from hym, as one confounded with shame, neither is she with anger moued to answer him agayn spitefully, but so muche the more she is inflamed to haue hym in great admiracion: whereas if Iesus had spoken any suche thyng vnto the Pharisies, they would haue cried out & sayed: he is an enchaunter & possessed with a deuill. But what aunswere made this godly sinner the Samaritane? Sir sayeth she (as I perceiue) thou arte a prophete. The faith of the woman was come to this poynte. At the firste she calleth him but a Iewe: and mervaileth that he did no more earnestly obserue the Iewes religion, because that contrarie to the custome of other Iewes he did alke dyrnke of a Samaritane. Anon after she calleth him Lorde. Here nowe she attributeth vnto him the name of a Prophete, because euen of himselfe he knew the secretes of other. And at last she desyrryng to learne certayne higher thynges of this prophete, ceassed to speake of lowe and meane matters, and propounded to him a question, (as a thyng) to her thynkyng, impossible to be assoyled concernyng the wale and maner how to worshipp God, because in this poynt the Iewes and the Samaritanes did very muche disagree. For albeit bothe those kyndes of people did worshipp one god, yet the Iewes had an opinion that God should be worshipped in no place but onely at Ierusalem in the temple, as though God did no where els heare the desires of them that did praye. Cõtrariwyse the Samaritanes with like superstition (but after another sorte) denyed that God should be worshipped in any place but in the mounte Garizim, because that place was appoynted by Moses where the Patriarkes should blesse the people that kepte the commaundementes of God. And forasmuche as both these nacions, beyng wel pleased with their owne seuerall rites and customes, did the one of them contemne the religion of the other, the woman desyred to learne of Iesus (as of a Prophete not ignorraunt in suche thynges) whiche of those two nacions had the holyest wave in seruyng of God, as one that would folow that wave whiche she should knowe to be best.

Sir I perceiue that thou art a prophete.

our fathers worshipped in this mounte.

Therfore she sayeth: Our elders wer wont to worshipp God in this mount, and they thinke it not lawfull to worshipp hym in any other place, where as you Iewes contrariewyse accoumpt it abhominable to do sacrifices in high places & groues, & that it is not lawfull to worshipp God any other where then at Ierusalem in the temple: wherof they do glorie, as though God were shut vp in a house builded with mans hand. Because this question of the woman did appertaine to the learnyng of true godlynes, Iesus openeth & declareth to her howe that after the true and spirituall worshippyng of god should be sette foorth by the doctrine of the ghospel, the superstitious religion of the goddes and deuils of the Gentiles should be vtterly extinguished: yea and also that the maner of the Samaritanes worshyppyng of God, should be abolyshed, whiche had no suche iudgement of god as they ought to haue: but take hym to be as a certain special deuell, and did mixe the worshippyng of hym with the worshippyng of deuils, mingling and confounding together the wicked superstition of the Gentiles with the worshyppyng of God, as a man should put fyer to water: and folowyng

And ye saye that in Ierusalem is the place where men oughte to worshipp.

folowing the saied Gentiles exaumple, did their sacrifices in hye groues and mountaines. And furthermoze he shewed her that the Jewes religion which (as the time required) had been hitherto grosse and carnal: and did rather represent certain shadowes of true godlines the very godlines it selfe, should encreace vnto moze perfeccion, & that God being afterward moze fully knowen through the sonne and the holy gost, should be wurshipped not onely in Jurie, but through the whole worlde: yea & that in moze holy temples then the temple of Hierusalē was, that is to say, in the pure myndes of mē which God had dedicate vnto himselfe with his spirite, and is not nowe to be pacified with the sauoure of burt offreynges of beastes, but with holy prayers, godly desires, and chaste affections. But before Jesus would open this mistery of the godlines of the gospel: he speaketh first of feith, without which none is mete to be a hearer of the euangelicall doctryne, neyther fitte to be a wurshipper of Christes religion: for faith only doeth purifie the hertes and maketh them apt to be put in trust with the secretes of heauenly wysedome. Woman (sayth he) beleue me (if thou take me for a Prophete in dede) the time is come now, when both the vnpure wurshippyng of the Samaritanes shalbe dolyshed: and also the carnall religion of the Jewes shall be turned into better, neither shal ye herafter wurship the father in this mountayne (who is not only the God of this mountayne, but also of the whole worlde) ne yet at Jerusalem: but wheresoeuer shalbe the congregacion of good & godly people, there shall hereafter be Jerusalem. In the meane whyle, we Jewes doe excell you in this behalfe, that we wurship God whom we know by the lawe, & whom we doe confesse to be the Lord of all thinges & all people: nor we doe not defile the wurshipping of him, who is only to be honoured, with the wurshipping of other Gods. You wurship you cannot tell what, supposing God to be no bodies God but the Jewes & your owne, yea and ye take hym to be suche a one as would suffer hymselfe to be matched with deuyls: wheras all godly honoure is due to hym alone. The lawe hath taught the Jewes these thynges. And by Gods commaundement there was a temple builded at Jerusalem to wurship one God therin, which should be a fygure of the spirituall temple. There were prieستes ordayned, & also rytes and ceremonies of sacrifices as it were with certain shadowes betokening the holynes of the gospell. Therfore the Jewes doe excell you herin, that both we haue a better iudgemet of God then you haue, & also that we doe not pollute or defile ỹ wurshipping of him with any prophane wurshippinges of other Gods. And moreouer we doe excell you in that we doe wurshippe hym in a place appointed of God himselfe, & with rytes & ceremonies of his own teaching. Howbeit in ỹ meane while this our religion although it be not perfit, yet it is (as it were) a step or furtheraūce toward perfit honouryng of God. Therfore eternall health came firste of the Jewes, to whom the Prophetes haue promised Messias to come, whiche by the meanes of the lawe haue the fygures and shadowes of the religion of the gospell. Now the tyme is come that the false religion of the Gentiles must geue place, and that both the carnall wurshipping must geue place to the spirituall wurshipping of God, and also the shadowes of the lawe to the light of the gospel. For now I tell you the tyme is at hande, yea it is alreadie presente, when true wurshippers, shall wurshippe the father not in temples, not with beastes, nor with bodily

Ye wurship ye wot not what, we know what we wurshippe. &c.

thynges, but in the spirite: not with shadowes, but with trueth. For God seyng he is a spirite, is not delyted with the pureness of the body, nor with the walles of the temple, neyther yet to haue beastes offered in sacrifices, but he loueth spiritual worthippers, of whom he may be worthipped accordyng to the spirite and trueth. For there hath been hitherto enough attributed to the shadowes and figures of Moses lawe: Hereafter wheresoeuer there shalbe a mynde pure from syme thrzough the faith of the ghospel, there shalbe a worthy temple for God. Wheresoeuer there shalbe heauenly desiers, pure prayers, and holy thoughtes, there shalbe sacrifices wherwith God is pleased.

The texte. The woman sayeth vnto hym: I wote that Messias shall come, which is called Christe. When he is come, he will tell vs all thynges. Jesus sayeth vnto her: I that speake vnto the am he. And immediately came his disciples, and merueyled that he talked with the woman, yet no manne sayed: what meanest thou? or why talkest thou with her? The woman then left her waterpot, and went her waye vnto the citie, and sayeth vnto the men. Come see a man whiche tolde me all thynges that euer I dyd. Is not he Christe? Then they went out of the citie and came vnto hym.

The simple and pacient beleke of this woman of Samaria dyd so muche profite by the forsaid communicacion of Jesu, that she nowe supposeth hym (whom first she had called a Jewe, then a Lorde, and after a Prophete) to be Messias himselfe. For the Samaritanes also by the prophyse of Moses, dyd loke for that excellent Prophete to aryse & come of the Jewes. Therfore the aunswered after this sorte: I know that Messias shall come whom the Jewes doe loke for, of whom already there is a rumoure emong the Jewes. Therfore when he shall come, he shall declare vnto vs all these thynges whiche thou haste spoken concernyng the newe maner of the worthippyng of God, neither shall he suffre vs to be ignorante in any thyng. Jesus perceyuyng the beleke of the woman apte to be taught, and suche feruente desyre to knowe the trueth, as she had not founde the like among his countrey men the Jewes, he vouchesaueth therfore to ope and declare vnto her who he was.

I knowe that Messias shall come, whiche is called Christe.

Jesus sayeth vnto her: I that speake vnto the am he.

Thou lokest (sayeth he) for Messias to come, be thou assured he is come, and euen nowe thou seest hym, for I that doe talke with the am he in dede. And as soone as these thynges were spoken, his disciples returnyng from the toune came thyther, and before they came at hym, perceyued that he talked with a woman of Samaria, and dyd merualle at his so great gentieness, yet no manne durst aske hym what thyng he required of the woman, or for what cause he had talked with her. But the woman beyng amased with the saying of the Lorde Jesus, did aunswer nothing at all: but leauing her waterpotte at the well (for nowe the thirsting for that water was clearely gon and forgotten, after she had tasted of the water which Christe had promised) she maketh haste towardes the citie, and of a synful Samaritane so denly became a messenger, & as it were an Apostle in that she doeth declare this thing openly to all folkes, to thintent that the knowledge of many should confirme her feith: Come, saieth she, and see a manne to be merualled at, & one that knoweth all secretes, who although he be a straunger and one that I neuer sawe before, yet hath he tolde me all the secretes that I haue doen, if is possible that the same is Messias. Trust not my woordes, proue the thyng your selues and ye shall fynde me no lyar.

In the meane while his disciples prayed him, saying: eate master. But he sayed vnto them: I haue meate to eate that you knowe not of. Therfore sayed the disciples emongest themselues: hath any man brought him ought to eate? Jesus sayeth vnto them: my meate is to do the will of hym that hath sent me, and to finishe his worke. Saye not ye there are yet fower monethes and than cummeth harvest? Behold I saye vnto you, lifte up your eyes and looke on the regions for they are all white alredy vnto harvest, and he that reapeth receyveth reward, and gathereth fruite vnto life eternall, that both he that soweth and he that reapeth might reioyce together. And herein is the saying true that one soweth and another reapeth. I sende you to reape that wherein you bestowed no labour. Other men laboured and ye are entred into their labours.

Jesus saith vnto them: my meate is to do the will of hym that hathe sent me.

Saye not ye there are yet iiii. monethes and than cummeth harvest.

Whiles the woman did bruite abrode this rumour emonges the citizens of Sychar, in the meane tyme Jesus disciples supposyng hym to bee payned with hoongre, moued hym to take suche meates as they had brought. But Jesus euery where cakyng occasion to drawe men vp from the eare of bodilye thinges, to the desire of spirituall thynges: lyke as he had allured and drawen the woman to the knowlage of the fayth of the ghospell by his speakyng of the water, so by the occasion of meates he prouoketh his disciples that were as yet but ignorannt, to be diligent in preachyng the ghospel: yea and peraduenture at that time he did not so muche thyrste for the water of the well, and although he did so, yet did he more desyre and thirst for mans saluacion: neuertheles the affection of the woman whiche came to drawe water, gaue him occasion of this godly cõmunicacion: In lyke maner although he was then hungrie in that he was a very man, he was muche more hungrie to saue mankynde, for which cause he descended from heauen. Therfore he sayed vnto his disciples whiche moued hym to take his bodilye refeccion: I haue other meate to eate (sayeth he) and suche meate as I delite more in, then in that whiche you bryng me. His disciples meruailyng what this saying ment, and yet not bolde to aske their maister, for reuerence they bare vnto hym, leste he shoulde bee any thyng offended therewith, talked thus emong themselues: what meaneth he by this? hath any other body whiles we were absent brought him any meate? But Jesus because he would nowe imprint in them mynde the thynge whiche he had spoken before darkely, sayeth nowe openly: I passe very litle (sayeth he) yõ this bodely meate. There is an other kynde of meate which I do specially care for: that is to saye, to accomplishe that thyng for: whiche cause my heauenly father hath sent me hither. This is my hoongre, this is my thirst, to go about the thyng whiche he hath cõmaunded me. Both the time prouoketh, & the prompte-nes of mens mindes to the faith of the ghospell, do also require the diligence of preachers. If you whiche doe so muche care for the welth and commoditie of yõ bodies, know that harvest is at hande fower monethes after that seede tyme is past, how muche more ought we to regarde the tyme of our spirituall harvestes? And as when the corne beginneth to grow pealowe, it dooeth (as it were) require a sickle, and the diligence of reapers: so yf you will lyfte vp your eyes and behold the corne that groweth in mens mindes, yea euen in them emongest the Samaritanes and Heathen, which make haste to the doctrine of the ghospell, ye shall perceyue the regions and countreyes on euery syde to be as it were reapyng vppe to the harvest of the ghospell and to require our labour and diligence. But yf the hope of yearthly fruite dooeth soone prouoke the reaper to his labour, howe muche more ought we to be forwarde to gather this harveste

SEc. i. to

to our father, whiche bothe shall obteyne for the reaper a ryghte large rewarde in heauen, and shall gather for God, not wheate into the barnes, but the soules of men into euerlastyng lyfe. And so it shall come to passe that bothe the sowier and the reaper shall reioyce togethier. For that thyng happeneth to you whiche is woont to be spoken, in a common prouerbe, one soweth and another reapeth: there is more payne and laboure aboute the tilling and sowing, then in the harueste and reapping. The grounde muste be plowed, the cloddes muste be broken with the harowe, the fielde must be dunged, the sede muste bee sowen, couered with earth, attended and kept, the cokle also muste be weeded out, but after whē the corne is ripe, there is not so great a do about the reapyng therof: and the fruite beyng ripe and ready doeth mitigate the tediousnesse of the laboure, but in this spirituall haruest it happeneth muche otherwyse then in the bodily haruest: for there (accordyng to the common prouerbe) as often as the fruite and commoditie of the haruest, cūmeth to another then to hym that soweth, the reaper in dede reioyceth but the sowier is grieuously vexed. In this spirituall haruest it is otherwyse, for both the sowier and the reaper reioyseth, and neyther of them lacketh theyr fruite and commoditie. I haue sent you to reape the corne, in sowyng wherof ye bestowed no labour. The prophetes haue tilled the ground with their trauaile, and haue with theyr doctrine prepared to the ghospell, the world beyng as at that time vnpractable: ye nowe succede and entre vpon their labour, and goe about a thyng prepared to your hāde, by reason that the world nowe applyeth it selfe to receyue willyngly heauenly doctrine, and men goeth about to preach into the kyngdome of heauen, in manner by violence.

And herein is the saying true that one soweth and an other reapeth.

The texte.

Many of the Samaritanes of that cittie beleued on hym for the saying of the woman, whiche testified that he tolde her all that euer she dyd. So whē the Samaritanes were come vnto hym, they besought hym that he would tary with them, and he abode there two dayes. And many more beleeued because of his owne woordes, and sayed vnto the woman, Now we beleeue, not because of thy saying, for we haue heard him our selues, and knowe that this is euen Christe, the sauiour of the worlde.

Whiles our Lorde with these sayinges doeth exhorte his disciples towardes the business of the ghospell, the thing it selfe doeth declare that to be true which he had spoken of the corne waxing white and ripe towardes the haruest. For in the cittie many Samaritanes dyd beleue that Messias was come: whereas that woman had testified nothyng els of Iesu, but that he had opened and declared vnto her the secrete shamefull deedes of her life time. As yet they had neyther heard him speake, nor seen him doe any miracle. So readye was yea euen their beliefe which semed to be farre from the promisses of the prophetes. Therfore a multitude of the Samaritanes came renning out of the cittie to see him, whom the forsaped woman had so earnestly commended and sette furthe vnto them. Neither doeth his presence diminishe their opinion of hym, neither be they offended with his homely and course apparell, ne yet with his sleudre trayne of his simple and vnlearned disciples: whereas the Iewes after that they had seen so many of his miracles, heard so many of his sermons, and receyued so many commodities and benefites at his hande, did eyther falsely accuse hym, openly rebuke hym, or els chased him awaye with castyng stones at hym. In conclusion the Samaritanes vpon a womans reporte and witnesse, goe forth to mete with a manne whiche was not of theyr owne nacion, whome

as yet they had neuer heard speake, of whom they had neuer seen any notable thyng done, and yet do they require and desire him to bee contented to take a lodging in their citie. But what did moste gentle Jesus? he knewe the enuie of the Jewes, he knewe what hatered they bare to the Samaritanes, and yet the tyme was not come that the ghospell should be taken from them & geyng reiected for their inuincible lacke of beliefe, and should be preached to the Gentiles. Therfore he so tempered the matter, that he neyther gaue by apparaunt proofe, any occasion to his owne countrey men the Jewes to complaine that they were despised of him, and the Samaritanes preferred before thē: considering the Prophecie promised that Messias should come to them: neither yet would he vtterly disapointe the godly beliefe of the Samaritanes. For in that he went through Samaria, he did euen of very necessitie. And at their requeste, to tary there but two dayes, was good maner and gentlenes, wherewith no maner of right coulde fynde faulte. And nowe when they had heard Jesus, many moe there dyd beleue, and their beliefe was stablished, which vpon the reporte of one woman, had conceyued a notable opinion of Jesu. And nowe they beare a full witnesse of Jesu: and suche a testimonie as was ryght semyng for a very true Jewe, saying to the woman: Thou haste reported lesse of him then the thing requireth. For we nowe doe beleue hym to be Messias, not by the perswasiō of thy woordes, but we our selfes doe assuredly knowe by his woonderful communicacion that he is the very true Messias which was loked for of the Jewes: who shall bryng saluacion not only to them but to the whole worlde. With this so therefull, and so full a witnesse, the Samaritanes did both declare their owne beliefe, and therewithall reproued the wicked vnbeliefe of the Jewes.

And he abode there ii. dayes.

After two dayes he departed thence, and wente awaye into Galile. For Jesus hymselfe testified that a prophete hath none honour in his owne countrey. Than assone as he was come into Galile, the Galileans receyued hym, when they had seen all thynges that he did at Jerusalem at the daye of the feast, for they went also vnto the feast daye. The texte.

Therfore Jesus because he would geue no occasion to the Jewes of greater hatred and enuy: wrought no miracle emong the Samaritanes neyther tourned he in to them but by the waye, and at their desire, nor yet dyd not he lodge emong them lenger then two dayes, but forthwith he maketh an ende of his purposed iourney, and so goeth forth on his waye into Galile.
Moreouer albeit his owne countrey lay in his waye here in this iourney, yet would he not turne into it: not that he did despise it, but that by reaso of the contempte and lacke of beliefe of his owne countreymenne, to whom he was knowen and also of kindered, as concerning his māhood, he had no hope that the gospell should bring forth any fruite there, and than his preaching should haue doubled the faulte of their vnbeliefe. For by this meanes their faulte was the lesse in not beleuing Jesus doctrine. And whē our Lord was asked the questiō why he did not goe to his owne nacion to shewe of what power he was: in his answer he vsed that auncient prouerbe whiche the common people vseth, that is to saye: a Prophete is nowhere contemned but in hys owne countrey and emong his owne kinfolkes. For such are the affeccios of men, that familiaritie bringeth contempt. And they etteme many thinges for none other cause, but that they come frō farre & straunge countreys. Furthermore fotasmuche as in Galile by reason of Johns testimonie and the miracle which Jesus hymselfe had doen there of late, a ryght honest bruite and fame was spred of him, they of Galile receiued him when he came thither, specially because at Jerusalem they had seen hym dryue the byers & sellers out of the Temple, and other thynges which he had doen there with great authoritie in the presence of the people: for at that tyme they also of Galile were assembled at Jerusalem to kepe the holy and feastfull day. All these thynges verily doe condemne the incredulitie of the Pharisees, and betoken that the grace of the ghospell shall remoue from them to the Gentiles. The Samaritanes doe beleue at the reporte of one symple woman: They doe in maner forze hym beyng a straunger to lodge with them: They confesse hym to bee Messias and the redemer of the worlde, when as yet he had not vouchsaued to worke any myracle emong them. The people of Galile beyng but a grosse nacio and vnlearned in the lawe who neuer had any Prophete emong them, after they had seen his miracles, began to beleue. They of Jerusalem both priestes, Pharisees, and Scribes, which seemed to kepe moste perfectly the religion of the Jewes, and also were excellently learned in the lawe: did obstinately fynde faulte both with Jesus doinges and sayinges. Therfore the more iust and religious euery man thought himselfe to be, so muche the farther was he from the godlines of the ghospell: and agayne the further of he semed in mannes iudgement from the knowledge of the Prophetes and the lawe, whiche dyd promyse Christe, and the more contrariouse to the Jewes religion, so muche the nerer he was vnto Christe: whom the lawe had promysed to come, and more apte to receyue the doctryne of the ghospell.

The texte. So Jesus came agayne into Cana of Galile, where he turned the water into wyne. And there was a certayne ruler whose sonne was sicke at Capernaum: as the same heard that Jesus was come out of Jewry into Galile, he went vnto him, and besought hym that he would come downe and heale his sonne, for he was euen at the poynte of death. Then sayed Jesus vnto him: except ye see signes and woonders ye will not beleue. The ruler sayeth vnto him: Sir come downe or euer that my sonne die. Jesus sayed vnto him: Goe thy wape, thy sonne liueth. The man beleued the woorde that Jesus had spoken vnto him. And he went his wape, and as he was nowe goyng downe, the seruauntes met hym, and tolde him saying: thy sonne liueth. Then required he of them the houre when he began to amende. And they sayed vnto hym. Yesterdape at the seuenth houre the feuer lefte hym. So the father knewe that it was the same houre in the which Jesus sayed vnto hym: Thy sonne liueth? And he beleued and al his houshold. This is agayne the seconde miracle, that Jesus dyd when he was come out of Jewry into Galile.

Therfore Jesus beyng entred into Galile, wente againe to Cana a toune of the saied Galile: where not long before he had turned water into wyne. That miracle at the first being knowen but to a few, when afterward it was commonly bruted abrode: caused the people to haue some good opinion of Jesu, but yet not suche as was wurthy for his dignitie, for very fewe dyd beleue that he was Messias, & many toke him to be but a prophete. Therfore Jesus went againe to Cana not to get any prayse for the miracle which he had doen there, but now at this time to reape some corne of that sede which he had sowen secretly: for this was the thing that he thirsted for & coueted, that is to say, the faith of men wurthy of the ghospell: and here againe an occasion rose to lay to ỹ Jewes charge their vnbeleefe: for at that time there was in Galile

a certaine ruler which was the Emperours deputie in prophane and temporall causes, who was neither Iewe nor Samaritane, but an heathen manne, and clene contrary from the Iewes religion: he had a sonne whom he loued entierly, whiche lay very sore sicke and in great daunger of life in the citie of Capernaum: when he heard that Iesus had left Iewry and was come into Galile, he leauing his sonne at home, departed out of the citie of Capernaum & came to Iesus, requiring him very earnestly to go with him to Capernaū and heale his sonne, because the vehemencie of his disease was such, that the sicke man could not be caried to Iesus: for he was euē at the poynte of death when the forsayed ruler departed from hym. Nowe Iesus declaring ꝑ faith of this ruler to be as yet vnperfit, in that he dyd not rather beleue that his sone could be healed vnles Iesus himselfe had gon thyther, as though he called vpon a physician, or els as though Iesus could not restore euen the dead vnto life: but Iesus rather rebuking the incredulitie of certain Iewes, which would not beleue, after they had seen his miracles, sayeth vnto the ruler: I doe alowe their beleefe (sayeth he) whiche doe credit my woorde alone, without confirmation of miracles: ye beleue not me vnles you see tokens and miracles. The ruler was so myndful of his sonnes perill and ieopardy, that he made no answer to this saying of our Lorde Iesus, because he thought such cōmunication was but a wasting of time, whereas the disease required a present remedie. Therfore he requireth him more importunately to make haste to come to Capernaum, before his sonne were dead, as though he shoulde come in vayne in case he dyd come after he had geuen vp the ghost, whereas it was as easie to Iesu to call again the lyfe after it was once past, as to kepe the same in the body when it was ready to go out therof. Therfore Iesus without rebuking the rulers fayth, the weth by the dede it selfe, that he can doe much more then the ruler trusted that he could doe: I nede not (sayeth he) for this cause go to Capernaum. Go thy waie, thy sonne whom thou diddest leaue at the poynte of death, is now aliue and in helth. The rulers faith was somewhat stayed by this saying, for he (trusting to Iesus woorde) maketh haste homewarde. And as he was goyng thyther, his seruauntes mette with hym to bryng the father good tidinges of his childe: that is to saye, that he whiche was a litle before at poynte of death was sodenly recouered: & that he should not trouble Iesus, of whose helpe they had no nede: for they supposed that the childe had recouered his health but by hap, as men that were ignorant what was doen betwene the ruler and Iesus. In this poynt verily the rulers lacke of full trust, being mixte with some hope, caused the miracle to be better beleued. For the ruler desirous to knowe the trueth certaynly whether his sonne was restored to helth againe by chaunce, or by the power of Iesu, enquired of his seruantes at what houre his sonne began to amend. Yesterday (say they) at the seuenth houre, that was about one of the clocke at after none, the feuer sodeinly left hym, and ryght your sonne was whole. The father knewe that euen at that very houre Iesus sayed vnto hym, go home, thy sonne lyueth: and than he was well assured that his sonne was reuiued not by chaunce, but through the power of Iesus. And though this miracle was wrought vpon an heathen man, yet muche fruite came therof: for not only the ruler himselfe beleued that Christ was Messias, but also by his perswasiō and exaumple his whole houshold beleued the same, which must nedes

The ruler sayeth vnto hym.

Iesus sayeth vnto hym: goe thy waye, thy sonne lyueth.

Then he enquired of them the houre in the which he began to amende.

So the father knewe

And he beleued, and all his houshold.

nedes haue muche people in it, considering that he was ryche, and a manne of high autozitie, whereas Jesus after he had wzought many miracles amongst his owne countreymē and kinfolkes, had muche a doe to wyn a fewe to the gospell. This is the seconde miracle that Jesus wzought when he was come out of Jewzy into Galile, to the entent that he myght confirme agayne the former miracle whiche he had wzought in Cana, with doyng an other that was greater then it, and by the example of a prophane and heathen manne, might pzouoke his owne countreymen vnto fayth: and did euen than by that occasion, as it were, pzognosticate and signifie, bothe that the Jewes should be repelled for theyr incredulitie, and the Gentiles thzough faith receyued to the grace of the ghospell.

This is the seconde miracle.

¶ The.v. Chapter.

The texte.

¶ After this was there a feast daye of the Jewes, and Jesus went vp to Jerusalem. And there is at Jerusalem by the slaughter house, a poole (which is called in the Hebrue tounge Bethsaida,) hauing fyue porches, in which lay a great multitude of sicke folke, of blynde, halt, and withered, waiting for the mouyng of the water. For an Angell went downe at a certain season into the poole, and stired the water: whosoeuer then first (after the stirring of the water) stepped in, was made whole, whatsoeuer disease he had.

After that Jesus had in this wyse begunne his matters among the Samaritanes, and the people of Galile, he goeth again to Jerusalem, euen about the feast of Pentechost, intendyng there by reason of the great resorte of people, to declare & set forth his autozitie to many, and to reproue ꝑ Phariseis of their infidelitie, (whiche swelled in pryde thzough false perswasion of holines and knowledge) whom nowe the Samaritanes & heathen did so muche excell. It Jerusalem verily there was a poole oz a certayne depe lake of water, whiche the Grekes calleth probatica, rabyng that name of cattell, because the priestes were wonte there to washe the sacrifices that were to be offered: and of a lyke reason it is called in hebzue Bethsaida, as a mā would say, a slaughter house, oz an house of cattel. This lake hath fiue pozches ouer it. In these pozches lay a great numbte of men that were sicke of diuerse bodily diseases: and besydes that, there was a great multitude of folkes that were blynde, that halted, and were lame, abiding and lokyng for the mouyng of the water: for the Angell of the Lozde went downe at certaine times into the poole, and therwithall the water was moued: whoso than (after the Angell had stiered the water) stepped first into the poole, he was made whole, were he sicke, oz whatsoeuer bodily mayme he had. And euen at that tyme was this a figure of baptisme, wherby the filthines and diseases of our soules (be they neuer so deadly) are washed away at once, so often as the office of the baptiser & Gods operation from aboue, be concurrant with the element of the water. There is no doubte but by this occasion muche people at that time were in that place, either of such as were gathered together there, to beholde and see what was doen, oz els of them whiche dyd attende vpon the sicke folkes that lay in the fyue pozches.

And there is at Jerusalē by the slaughter house, a poole, &c.

And a certayne man was there, whiche had bene diseased .xxxviii. yere: when Jesus sawe hym lye, and knewe that he nowe long time had been diseased, he sayeth unto hym: wylt thou be made whole? The sicke man answered him: Syr I haue no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the poole, but in the meane time while I am aboute to come, an other steppeth downe before me. Jesus sayeth unto him: ryse, take up thy bedde, and walke. And immediately the man was made whole, and toke up his bed and walked. The texte.

And because the miracle myght be the more notable, Jesus did chose out from among all the sicke folke, one whiche was of them all furthest frō hope of recouery, whose disease was dangerouse and almoste incurable, and had also holden hym a long tyme: finally the saied manne moste of all lacked the helpe and succour of other men, & was so poore, that he was not able to prouide any man, by whom he might at due tyme be caryed downe into the water. For any one of the multitude was cured but only he, whose chaūce was first to goe downe before me. Jesus sayeth unto him: ryse, take up thy bedde, and walke. And immediately the man was made whole, and toke up his bed and walked.

Whan Jesus sawe hym lye. &c.

He sayed unto hym: wylte thou bee made whole.

Syr I haue no man. &c.

And because the miracle myght be the more notable, Jesus did chose out from among all the sicke folke, one whiche was of them all furthest frō hope of recouery, whose disease was dangerouse and almoste incurable, and had also holden hym a long tyme: finally the saied manne moste of all lacked the helpe and succour of other men, & was so poore, that he was not able to prouide any man, by whom he might at due tyme be caryed downe into the water. For any one of the multitude was cured but only he, whose chaūce was first to goe downe into the water. This mans great misery must nedes set forth the greatnes of the miracle, and the same mans faith helped muche to the example of other. For the palsie had vexed him .xxx. yeres together: to teache vs that there is no disease of the soule so deadly and of so long continuance, but that baptisme and faith in Jesu, may easily take it awaye. Therfore when that moste mercifull Jesus had beholden this sicke mā of the palsey, whom euery body pitied, lying withall his membres looce & shaking by reason of that disease: & also perceyued that sickenes so muche the more to be dispayred of, for that it had holden already the miserable creature thirtie yeres together: Jesus, I saye, beeyng moued with mercy, sayed unto hym: wilt thou be made whole? wylling to declare hereby to the standers by, the fayth & sufferaunce of that man, & also to make them beside this, perceyue the violence of that disease, declaryng therby, howe no man can be cured of the vyces of the soule, vnles he hate his owne sickenes, & haue a desyre to be made whole. For it is not to be doubted but that he desired health, whiche so many yeres had lyen beside that poole with a constante hope of health, and being so ofte disapointed, ceased not from his hope nor dispaired. Therfore the sicke man of the palsey, made no answere to Jesus question, and yet conceyuing some good hope vpon his so cherefull demaunde, sheweth that he lacketh no will, nor that he mistrusteth for all the greatnesse and long continuaunce of his disease, but that he should be healed, in case he were brought into ỹ poole: howbeit (he sayth) he lacketh a man to helpe to beare hym, who myght in due season cary hym into the poole, assone as the water should be stirred. For when other perceiued that ỹ poole was stirred, euery man made haste for himselfe to entre first & so to obteine alone the benefite of helth: but as for the sayed sicke man, being slowe by reason of his disease, & lackyng one to beare hym, dyd but in vayne crepe forth towarde the lake, for a muche as another had gon into it before hym. Truely the sicke mannes meaning in this his saying was lowely and shamefastly, to desire Jesus that he beyng a man of strength, & piteouse as it semed by his woordes, would when time were, cary him downe into the poole: whiche thyng he durst not requyre of hym openly: but yet after he had disclosed his necessitie, he shewed what hindred his helth, for the sicke man knew not Jesus. But Jesus being well pleased with the mans patient sufferaūce, whiche did not as the moste parte of suche miserable creatures are wont to doe, that is to say, cry out, wysshe himselfe dead, and curse the daye he was borne in: neyther was he offended with Jesus al-

kyng him whether he would be made whole or no, and therfore did not saye or make any clamour that Jesus had him in derision: our Lord being in likewyse moued with his so constant hope to recouer his helth, and in conclusion willing to shewe, both that they which were healed by the mouyng of the fore sayd poole, were cured by his power, & that it was an easy & ready thing for hym, euen only with a becke to take awaye all diseases, both of body and soule, he saied vnto the sicke man: ryse, take vp thy couche, and go thy waye. And the woorde was no sooner spoken, but the man was healed, & so healed, that not only he was clerely deliuered frō his disease, who els should haue been fainte and feble, like as they are wont to be, which are cured by phisike: but this man (I saye) was so throughly healed, ỹ without any stay of mans helpe, he rose vp vpon his fete, caried awaye his bed vpon his shoulders, & so beyng strong inough to beare his owne bed, did walke forth, and bare it home in all mennes sight, as a remembraunce of his long continued disease.

The fette. And the same daye was the Sabboth. The Jewes therfore sayed vnto him that was made whole: It is the Sabboth daye, it is not lawfull for the to carry thy bed. He answered them: he that made me whole saied vnto me, take vp thy bed and walke. Then asked they him: what man is that whiche saied vnto the, take vp thy bed and walke? He that was healed wist not who it was; for Jesus had gotten himselfe awaye, because that there was preasse of people in that place.

And the same daye was the Sabboth, &c. And it was the Sabboth daye whan the sicke man of the palsey dyd these thinges, wherat the Phariseis toke occasion to finde faulte with him: which Phariseis did superstitiously maintein suche thinges of the lawe, as were carnall & geuen but for a time: and contened those thinges which were chiefe and should still continue: amonges thē it was counted a wicked dede to doe any busines on the Sabboth daye, but to deceyue their neyghbour vpon the Sabboth daye, they toke it but for a trifle. They would haue it seme an vngodly thing that a poore sicke mā should cary away his bed vpon the Sabboth daye, but to grudge and enuy his helth, they thought it no faulte. They knew this man which was sicke of the palsey well inough, & that he had lyen sicke many yeres. They did well perceiue that he was now strong, and had no token or apparance of his disease in him. Of so great a miracle, they ought both to haue glorified God, and to haue reioysed in his behalfe which was cured, vnles they had been very wicked against god, & enuiouse toward their neighbour. Therfore these, like peruerters of true religion, fall in hand and chide with him, which caried awaye his couche. This is the Sabboth daye (say they) which ought to be kept with rest & quiet. It is not lawfull for the to cary awaye thy couche: he not dissembling the benefite that he had receyued, & to deliuer hymselfe from their enuy of that faulte, by the autozitie of Jesu, shewyng that he which coulde doe so great a thyng with his woozde, semed to be greater than either man or the Sabboth daye, the poore man (I say) maketh this answer to ỹ spitefull Jewes: he that made me whole with his very woozde only, commaunded me to cary awaye my couche & walke.

Tha asked they hym what man is that, &c. When they heard this (whereas they ought by reason of the miracle to haue beleued it) they did not only enuy him that was cured, but also wet about to deuise matter against him by whom he was cured: who is ỹ man (saye they) whiche badde thee cary awaye thy couche and walke? for they would haue burdened him with the faulte of breaking ỹ Sabboth day, as they had doen many tymes before. Nowe he that was healed, knewe not Jesus by name, but only but onely by sight: howbeit at that tyme he couldе not shewe hym vnto them, because that Iesus after he had spoken to the sicke man of the palsey, immediately withdrewe hymselfe from the multitude: partely lest his presence shoulde moue prouoke the Iewes enuy, and partly that he beeyng absente, the miracle should be the better knowen by the reporte of hym whiche had felte the benefite of health.

The texte. After ward Iesus found him in the temple, and sayde vnto hym: behold, thou arte made whole, synne no more, lest a worse thyng happen vnto thee. The man departed and tolde the Iewes that it was Iesus whiche had made hym whole. And therfore the Iewes dyd persecute Iesus, and sought the meanes to slea hym, because he had doen these thinges on the Sabboth daye.

But after the miracle was made manifest and euidently proued, Iesus wilyng that the autour therof also should be knowen, when he met with the man vpon whome he had bestowed that benefite of health, he sayed vnto hym: behold, thou hast obteyned health, and art deliuered from the bodelye sickenes whiche came to the, by reason that thy soule was sicke, I haue cured thee of bothe thole diseases. Take thou good hede hereafter that thou fall not agayne into thyne olde former synnes, and therby cause thy selfe to haue some worse disease. Therfore after the man that was made whole knewe that this was he whiche before had commaunded him to carrye awaye his couche, and whiche nowe also hauyng testified himselfe to be the authour of health, did monish and warne hym to beware leste he shoulde fall agayne into some fouler and worse disease, by committing and renewyng synne: also perceyuyng that his name was Iesus, the sayed manne went to the malicious and slaunderous Iewes, and tolde them howe it was Iesus whom he might thanke for his health, thinkyng that it should be profitable for manye, to haue hym knowen to all menne, whiche with a woorde could so helpe a desperate disease. And here nowe againe the Iewes peruerse and damnable frowardnes, sheweth it selfe: for whereas the Samaritanes had honourably receyued Iesus, by the reporte of one woman, whereas the people of Galilee beeyng cuill spoken of commonlye among the Iewes, for theyr dulnes & ignorauncе of the lawe, had geuen credite to Christ: when a great ruler also beyng a gentile, and an heathen man with all his familie and householde for one onely miracle had confessed Iesus to be the sauioure of the worlde, yet the citizens of Ierusalem beyng proude as well of the nobilnesse of theyr cite, as also of the wholy religion of theyr temple, and in lykewise auaunteyng themselues to bee menne exactely learned in the lawe, picked quarels to Iesus, of suche purposed malice, that albeit the benefite of healthe was so euident that it couldе not be denayed, and so holy that it couldе not be found faulte with, (for what thyng is more holy then freely to geue healthe of body to a manne miserablye afflicted:) yet dooe they laye to Christes charge as a faulte, that without regard of the Sabboth daye he hath commaunded hym to carye awaye his couche, as who saye man had be made for the Sabboth daye, and not rather the Sabboth daye ordeyned for manne, or as though the ceremonies of Moses lawe oughte not euermore where to geue place to more holye preceptes and diuelles. But what great blyndnes was this, to disdayne Iesus because he hadde healed a pitcouse creature vpon the Sabboth daye: when they whiche thoughte theimselues moste precyse kepers and obseruers of the lawe, were not afrayed to helpe vp theyr asse beyng fallen into the ditche

The man departed & tolde the Iewes that it was Iesus.

Because he dooth these thynges on the sabboth daye.

upon the Sabboth daye. They falsly say that in helpyng the manne, God was offended, without whose helpe the man coulde not be cured, but in helpyng by the asse they thought not the religion of the Sabboth day to be br[illegible]n. This is the ouerthwart and disordered religion of the Jewes, tmbracyng outwarde apparaunce of religion, and therby subuertyng the very perfection of true religion: stylfely obseruing the shadowes of the lawe, and with obstinate mindes persecutyng hym who was the cause that the lawe was wrytten. For they did not onely slaunder Jesus but also persecuted him, because he had doen an holy and good dede upon the Sabboth daye.

The texte. And Jesus aunswered them: My father worketh hytherto, and I worke. Therfore the Jewes sought the more to kyll hym, not onely because he had broken the Sabboth, but sayed also that God was his father, and made hymselfe equall with God.

But Jesus, to shewe that he was maister of the Sabboth day and not bonde, the verye auctor, and not subiecte to it, therewithall declareth that the thyng wherof the Jewes slaunder hym, beyng sonne to the father of heauen, and one that did worke whatsoeuer he did by his fathers auctorite, dyd also redounde to his fathers dishonour: Jesus (I saye) went about to reprelle and put awaie the Jewes false report of him with these woordes. My heauenly father (saieth he) whose religious wurshippers ye would seme to bee, who also made the sabboth daye for you, when after he had made the whole worlde in sire daies, he rested the seuenth daye and wrought not: the (I saye) did not so bynde hymself to rest and quiet, but that he maye worke whatsoeuer he wyll as ofte as it pleaseth him. For although the sabboth daye dooeth yet stil endure, neuertheleste he ceasseth not from his worke wherby he gouerneth all thynges whiche he hath made, wherby also he causeth from tyme to tyme by procreacion, one thyng to succede of another: and finally wherby he restoreth thynges decayed. Therfore lyke as he doeth not cease dayly to do good both to men & all other thinges that he hath create (notwithstanding the religion and obseruaunce of the Sabboth day, wherin as scripture saieth, he ceassed from the creacion of thynges) so I, who am his sonne, haupng both power and craumple of hym to worke suche thinges as perteineth to mans saluacion, am not letted by the religious obseruacion of the Sabboth day, but I maye perfourme those thynges whiche my father hath commaunded me. But yf ye blame me for breaking of the Sabboth daye, by these meanes ye condemne also my father, who geueth me both craumple and auctorite to do these thynges. But yf ye thynke hym faultlesse and glorifie hym for restoryng health to a desperate creature: wherfore do ye laye to my charge the fault of breaking the Sabboth date: and do not rather acknowledge the vertue and power whiche is greater than the keping of the Sabboth date. I haue restored lyke to a miserable man. And you craftely go about to procure my death for doyng so good a dede. These moste sacred woordes which Jesus spake, dyd so litle allwage the fury of the Jewes, that they were thereby the more sharpened and vehemently styred against hym, seking occasion to putte him to death, because that nowe he dyd not only breake the Sabboth date, but also dyd (as they sayed) wrongfully take god to be his owne father: making himselfe equall with god both in his woordes and auctorite to do whatsoeuer he would.

Therefore the Jewes sought the more to kill hym.

The texte. Then answered Jesus, and sayed vnto them: Verely, verely, I say vnto you: the sonne cannc do nothyng of hymselfe, but that he seeth the father doe. For what soeuer he doeth that doeth the sonne also. For the father loueth the sonne, and sheweth hym all thynges that hymselfe hymselfe doeth, and he will shewe hym greater workes then these, wherafore you shoulde mervayle. 21 For lykewyse as the father rayseth up the dead and quickeneth them, euen so the sonne quickeneth whom he will. 22 For the father iudgeth the father any man, but hath committed all iudgemente vnto the sonne, because that all men should honour the sonne, euen as they honour the father. He that honoureth not the sonne, the same honoureth not the father, which hath sent hym.

But after our Lord Jesus had perceiued their malice, he proceedeth further with them, and openeth more manifestely vnto them his power which he had receiued of God the father: thereby to make them afearde to proceede in theyr wicked crueltie: and doeth so tempre his communicatió, that other whiles he talketh of certaine hye thinges, to signifie vnto the couertly his diuine nature whiche was all one betwene God the father & hym: And other whyles againe in his communication he bringeth in lower thinges, to testifie his mãhed therby: that it the assistintie which was betwene him and them in that he was mã, would not stirre them to loue, at the leaste the maiestie of his godly power should let them from their wicked rashenesse: but yet he doeth so chalenge to hymselfe lyke power with his father, that neuertheles he attributeth to him the preeminence of autorytie. And he spake on this wyse: Ye mervayle that I haue taken vponme to be of equall power with my father in his worzkyng. This I doe assuredly promyse you, the sonne whiche doeth wholy depende of the father can doe nothyng of hymselfe: forasmuche as he is not of hymselfe, but doeth that whiche he seeth his father doe. They haue both one will and one power: but the autorytie resteth in the father, from whence proceedeth to the sonne what soeuer the sone is, or may doe. Therfore whatsoeuer the father doeth, the same in like wise worzketh the sonne by the equalitie of power communicate to him through his eternall nativitie. Among men oftentymes children be vnlike in maners to theyr parentes, neyther is the fathers wyll and the sonnes all one, nor yet theyr power like: but in this case the thing is farre otherwyse. For the father loueth his sonne intierly, and hath begotten hym moste like to hymselfe, pouryng into hym egall power of worzkyng, and sheweth vnto the sonne howe to doe all thynges whiche he doeth himselfe. The exaumple cummeth from hym, but the worzkyng is common to both: he hath create the world, and he also gouerneth the world, yea euen vpon the Sabboth dayes. He hath made man, and it is he also that preserueth man vpon the Sabboth dayes. Therfore whosoeuer doeth slaundre the worzkes of the sonne, doeth iniurie to the father. These thynges whiche ye see me doe on the Sabboth daye, I doe them by the fathers autorytie, & at his appoyntment: but yf ye thinke it a thyng to be merveyled at and aboue mans power, to restore helth with a worzde to a man sicke of the palsey, the father (at whose commaundement the sonne doeth all thynges whiche he doeth) wyll declare that he hath shewed to his sonne greater worzkes than these, because ye may the more marualle. For it is a thyng of farre greater power to raise the dead to life, than to restore helth to the sicke, yet the father hath geuen this power also to the sonne, and he hath geuen him it as his owne for euer: that as the father with his only worde rayseth the dead and calleth them agayne to lyfe, so the sonne also by that selfe power may call agayne to lyfe, whom he lust: for whatsoeuer the father doeth, he doeth it by the sonne: whatsoeuer the sonne doeth, he doeth it after the will of the father: and the father & the sonne haue both one wyll, lyke as they haue both one power. chiefe chiefe autozitie of God is to iudge the wozld. Foz he is king and Lozd of all thynges. And yet hath he made his sonne partaker with hym of this whole power, vnto whom he hath geuē al power to iudge whatsoeuer is in heauē, in yearth & vnder the earth. Like as the father hath create all thynges by his sonne, gouerneth al thinges by his sonne, and hath restozed al thinges by his sonne, so he iudgeth nothing but by his sonne: to the entent that eyther of the may glozifie and honour the other. The father is knowen by his sonne, by whom he wozketh: the sonne on the other partie declareth the maiestie of his father, from whence he hath whatsoeuer he wozketh: so that eyther of them be ying knowen by the other, all men may honour the sonne as they doe the father. Foz it is mete that they which be egall in power and will, should be also felowes in honour. Thinke not that ye can haue the father mercifull vnto you, if ye be alienate & fallen from the sonne. Whosoeuer honozeth the father wozking in the sonne, he honozeth also the sonne wozking by the power of the father. And whosoeuer doeth not honour the sonne, which is moste intierly beloued and moste lyke to the father, that person doeth dishonour the father who sent the sonne to thintent he might thzough hym be honoured: foz euery thyng is common betwene them, be it honour oz dishonour. He that mistrusteth the sonne, mistrusteth also the father which sent hym into the wozlde, by whose will and appoyntmente, he doeth all thynges that he doeth: and by whom also the father speaketh vnto thy wozlde. Lyke as the faithfull shall haue great reward, so the vnfaythfull shall haue no small punishmente.

Verily verily I say vnto you: he that heareth my wooꝛde & beleueth on him that sente me, hath euerlasting life: and shall not come into damnation, but is scaped from death vnto life.

Foz this I tell you foz certayne, whoso heareth my wooꝛde and beleueth hym whiche both sent me, and speaketh iuste, that persone hath already euerlasting life. Foz whosoeuer is iustified from his sinnes, and iuyeth to God thozowe rightcousnes, he hath God and also life eternall: neyther shall he nede to feare the damnation of eternall death, whiche is redie to receyue the vnfaithfull, yea rather which doeth already possesse the vnfaithfull, but the true beleuer beyng clensed from his olde sinne by faith, passeth thozowe frō death to lyfe. Foz it is a greater thyng to rayse a soule that is dead by sinne, from death to life, than to restoze a dead body to life: but the father hath geuen power to the sonne to doe both these thynges.

Verily verily I say vnto you, the houre shall come, and nowe it is, when the dead shall heare the voyce of the sonne of God. And they that heare, shall lyue. For as the father hath lyfe in hymselfe, so lykewyse hath he geuen to the sonne to haue lyfe in hymselfe, and hath geuen hym power also to iudge, because he is the sonne of mannē. Marueyle not at this, for the houre shall come in the whiche all that are in the graues, shall heare his voyce, and shal come forth, they that haue doen good vnto the resurrection of lyfe, and they that haue doen euill vnto the resurrection of damnation.

Be ye well assured of this, the tyme is nowe at hande, yea it is already present, that euen the dead also shall heare the voice of the sonne of God: and whoso heareth it, shal liue: foz they being as it were rayseb out of their slepe shall come forth out of their graues, and shall declare vnto you (beeyng astonished therwith) that they liue in very dede. In like maner also ꝑ dead soules doe liue againe, if they will heare the voice of the sonne of God: but he doeth not not heare it, whiche heareth it without fayth.

In tyme to come all dead bodyes shall ryse agayne at the voyce of the sonne of God, now hauyng shewed a likelyhoode of the resurrection to come by rayssing of a fewe from death to lyfe: a greater matter is in hãde, to rayse vp soules from death to lyfe at his woyde and call. As nothyng is more precious than lyfe, so nothyng is more godlike than to geue lyfe, or to restore the same. There is no cause why any man should mistrust the power of the sonne, yf he beleue in the power of the father. No man doubteth but God is the fountaine of all life, from whence all liuing thinges eyther in heauen or earth, haue theyr lyfe: but as the father hath life in himselfe to geue it or restore it to whom he list, so hath he also geuen to his sonne to haue in himselfe ye fountaine of all lyfe. And besides that, hath geuen him power to iudge both quicke and dead. For by the sentence of the sayed sonne, whiche cannot be eschewed, they that haue obeyed his doctryne, shall go from hence to eternall lyfe: and contrarye, they that wouldoe not obey it, shall be appoynted and iudged to eternall punishment. Wherwaple note that so great power is geuen to a man, considerynge that the same is the sonne of God. The selfe thyng is nowe committed to hym, whiche he alwaye had common betweene hym and the father. Endeuour your selues in the meane tyme that thorowe fayth ye maye be wurthy to haue lyfe. For the tyme shal come that all whiche be dead and buryed, shall heare the almightie voyce of the sonne of God: and furthwith the bodyes shall liue agayne. Then shall they which haue been dead and buried, come out of theyr graues, to be rewarded in sundry sorte, eyther according to theyr beliefe or vnbeliefe: for they whiche haue doen good workes in this lyfe shall than lyue agayne, to enherite immortall lyfe: on the other syde, those whiche haue doen euill here, shall lyue agayne to suffre paines of eternall death. And lyke as fayth is the well and fountayne of all goodnes, so is infidelitie the spryng of all euill.

The tyme shall come and nowe it is. &c.

I can of myne owne selfe do nothyng. As I heare I iudge, and my iudgemente is iuste, because I seke not mine owne will, but the will of the father, whiche hath sente me. If I should beare witnes of my selfe, my witnes were not true. There is another that beareth witnes of me, and I am sure that the witnes which he beareth of me is true.

The texte.

Neither is there cause why any man should slaunder the iudgement of the sonne as though it were not indifferent. If the fathers iudgement cannot bee but indifferent no more can the sonnes iudgement (whiche is all one with the fathers) be but in like maner indifferent. For the sonne iudgeth none otherwise but as the father hath appoynted and prescribed vnto him. Whoso feareth the fathers iudgement, ought also to feare the sonnes iudgemẽt. I can do nothing of my selfe. As I heare of my father, so I iudge, and therfore my iudgement is iuste, because I haue no other will, but that whiche is my fathers, so that in no wyse there can be a corrupt will, wherof maye procede a corrupte iudgemente. Among men small credite is geuen to him whiche beareth witnes of himselfe, and he is counted arrogant and proude whiche by his owne report, attributeth great thynges to himselfe. If I alone be myne owne witnes, then let my witnes be taken emong you to be but vayne and vntrue: but there is one which hath borne witnes of me, that is to saye John, to whom ye dooe attribute very muche in other thynges: but here nowe as vnstedfast men, ye dooe not credite him, wheras I knowe his witnes to be true, forasmuche as he hath not vttered it of hymselfe, but by the inspiracion of my father.

I can of myne owne selfe do nothyng.

If I should beare witnesse of my selfe.

Ye

ye cannot deny but that Iohns recorde and witnes is mucke let by amonges you: your selues haue sent grauemen vnto him, that by truslie men you might knowe of him (as of a moste true auctor) whether he were Messias or no. He did not take vpon hym that false prayse, whiche ye would haue attributed vnto hym, but confessed the trueth, openly testifying himself not to be the manne that he was taken for; but sayed that I was the Messias whiche shoulde take awaye the sinnes of the worlde, and geue lyfe to theselame.

The sense. Ye sent vnto Iohn, and he bare witnes vnto the trueth, but I receiue not the recorde of man. Neuertheleste this thing I saye that ye maye be safe. He was a burning and a shining light, and ye would for a season haue reioyced in his light: but I haue greater witnes then the witnes of Iohn, for the workes whiche the father hath geuen me to finishe, theselame workes that I do, beare witnes of me, that the father hath sent me. And the father himself which hath sente me, hath borne witnes of me. Ye haue not heard his voyce at any tyme, nor seen his shape, his worde haue ye not abydyng in you: for whom he hath sent, hym ye beleue not.

But I receyue not the recorde of man. &c.

At the least his witnes (whom ye did so muche esteeme, that ye dyd beleue hym to be Messias) ought to haue been regarded among you, specially seyng it was not procured on my behalfe, but brought to light by your owne selues. I as concernyng my selfe haue no nede to bee commended by mannes witnes, but I do reporte vnto you Iohns witnes of me: not because I (who care nothyng for worldly glory) would be the more made of among you: but to thintent that you, whiche so muche regarde Iohns auctoritie, shoulde credite me, of whom he hath borne witnes: whereby ye maye eschewe the condemnacion of infidelitie, and thorowe faith obteyne saluacion. Iohn doubtles was a greate man, yet was not he that light whiche was promised to the world, but onlye a burnyng candell tynded at our fyre, and geuyng light by our light. And yet whereas ye ought at his tellyng and declaracion to haue made haste to ỹ true light which doeth alwaie illuminate euery man that cummeth into this world, ye had leauer for a shorte tyme to boast and glory in his lighte, than to embrace the true light which geueth euerlastyng glory, & is neuer darkened nor dyeth. Iohn gaue light before the sonne, as one that should immediatelye geue place to theselame, and be darkened thorowe the shining of the true light. You wolde haue taken hym for Messias, which denyed hymselfe to be worthy to vnlouse the latchet of Messias shooes.

He was a burning & a shyning light.

But I haue greater witnes the the witnesse of Iohn.

Why doe you then so litle regarde his witnes that he bare of me, seing in other thynges ye haue had so good an opinion of hym: I do not depende vpon Iohns witnes, but yet I would be wishe that ye would geue credite vnto it, that ye do not perishe thorowe infidelitie. And though ye do not beleue his witnes, yet haue I a more certaine testimonye of my selfe, that is to saye my fathers testimonie and witnes, who is greater than Iohn, and whose witnes cannot be reproued.

for the workes whiche my father hath geuen me to finishe. &c.

There is no recorde more sure than the very dedes that a man doeth: ye perceyue those workes to be worthy for God whiche ye haue seen me doo, they beare sufficient witnesse of me that I doe nothyng of my selfe, but by hym whiche for your saluacion hath sente me into the worlde, wherfore ye haue no cause whereby to excuse your infidelitie, and diminishe my credence, as who sayeth I alonely were myne owne witnesse, and did declare great thynges of my selfe. Ye haue Iohns witnes, whiche among you is muche regarded and taken to be very weightie, howbeit in dede he rather nedeth my witnesse leste he seme to haue borne false witnes. Ye haue the testimonie of my workes, so that nowe ye nede not to beleue anye mannes sayinges when ye looke vpon the dedes themselfe. And if all this dooe not satisfie your vnbeliefe, yet haue ye hearde at Jordane the voice of my father from above bearing witnes of me. But yet my father (for asmuche as he is a spirite,) neither hathe voice whiche maye be perceyued with mannes eares, nor fourme or shape that maye bee seen with bodely eyes. For Moses did neyther heare him, nor see hym in the verye fourme of his owne mere nature, as you suppose he did. Onely his sonne hath seen hym, and heard him after that sorte. yet neuertheles he hath made himselfe knowen to your senses, by some kynde of voyce, and thorowe some manner of fourme. He spake to the Prophetes, and by the Prophetes hath spoken to you. He hath spoken to John, and by John to you, but vnto me he hath spoken as heis of his owne very nature, and by me he speaketh vnto you. If ye can make no excuse but that John did beare playne + manifest witnesse, why do ye not beleue hym? If ye thinke that God in very dede did speake, and was seen of Moses and the Prophetes, wherfore do ye not credite those thynges which he hath spoken by them?

that

Ye haue not heard his voyce at anye time nor seen his shape.

¶ Searche the scriptures, for in them ye thinke ye haue eternall lyfe. And they are they, whiche reporte of me, and yet will ye not come to me that ye might haue lyfe. I receyue not prayse of men, but I knowe you that ye haue not the loue of God in you. I am come in my fathers name, and ye receyue me not, if an other come in his owne name him will ye receyue. Howe can ye beleue, whiche receyue honour one of another, and seke not the honour that cummeth of God? Do not thinke that I will accuse you to my father. There is one that accuseth you, euen Moses, in whome ye truste. For had ye beleued Moses, ye would haue beleued me, for he wrote of me, but if ye beleue not his writynges, howe shall ye beleue my woordes?

The texte.

Verely ye beleue that the scriptures are come from God: and albeit you do diligentely occupie your selues in searchyng of them, and put the hope and felicitie of your lyfe in them, yet euen as ye would not beleue John, (to whom in other thynges ye gaue very great credite,) when he bare witnes of me: so you beleue not the very scriptures in that whiche is the chiefe poynte of all: for they prompte life, but through me.

The father doeth there beare witnesses of me, and promiseth that he wil send his sonne, by whom men shall be saued. But as ye haue heard John and not beleued hym, and also the voice of the father and not geuen credite vnto it: so neither the witnesse of the lawe nor of the Prophetes sticketh in your myndes. And although ye haue they bookes euer in your handes, and their woordes alwaye in your mouthes, yet doe ye reiecte hym whom those scriptures doo prompte: and doe not beleue hym, whome the father hath sent accordyng to the promises of the Prophetes: and whereas there is none other entrie into life but by me, who hathe been approued to you by so manye testimonies, yet ye will not forsake all thyng and come to me, wherby ye mate obtain life withoute difficultie. For the gate and entrie of saluation is to haue beleued the sonne whō the father sent. There is no cause why I should seke for worldye glory amonges you by the testimonie of John, or the Prophetes, but I am sory for youre destruction, whiche through your incredulitie dooe in maner enuye your owne saluation. And besides that I leaue you no maner of excuse to make for your selfe, if you will not beleue: for I haue brought forth thus manye witnesses,

whiche in other thynges be of verye great auctorytie among you: and onelye in matters concernyng me (for whose cause all thynges wer written and spoke,) ye doe not alowe them: ye pretende to worthip and loue God, ye haue the prophetes in reuerence by whom he spake: and yet you do despise him, which was promised of God: and doeth declare himselfe by his workes what he is. This is a playne argument that ye worthip God with counterfaicte holynes, and that ye loue not God in dede, whom the lawe commaundeth you to loue with all the power of your soule, and your strēgeth, inasmuche as ye contemne and regarde not his sonne. Therfore your infidelitie is not for wante of witnesses, but for lacke of true loue towardes God. You loue worldly glory, you loue money, you loue pleasures, and to get these thynges you misuse your selues with false pretence of religion. But ye persecute the sonne of God: because he teacheth those thynges, whiche be contrary to these your wicked desyres, albeit his teachyng agreeth with the will of the father. These thynges declare that ye loue not god with your herte. For he whiche loueth doeth also beleue and obeye: and whoso loueth the father cannot hate his moste entierly beloued sonne. In lyke maner he that loueth the sender, cannot misprise and contemne the messanger specially considerynge I couet neither glory, kyngdome, nor richesse among mē, but onely the glory of my father. And also I couet that, to thentent you maye be saued. you see workes worthy for God, and yet I doe not ascribe the worldlye prayse to my selfe, but to my father, who worketh by me. Therfore although ye would feme religiously to worthip my father: yet ye do not receyue me who am come in his name, and doe none other thyng but that whiche he hath prescribed vnto me. And looke howe peruerselye you do discredite me, who cummyng in my fathers name do freely offer lyfe and saluacion: euen so fondely shall ye beleue whosoeuer cummeth in his owne name, presumpteously takyng vpon hym the glory of God, and therewith attendeth his owne busines and not Gods, bringyng suche thynges vnto you as maye leade you into eternal death. If ye loue God, why do ye murmure and grudge against him that seketh his glory? If ye loue euerlastyng lyfe, why do ye reiecte the autour of lyfe? If ye accompte hym wicked whiche chalengeth the glory of God to hymselfe, wherefore then do ye receyue hym whiche doeth presume falsly to take vpon him the glorye of God: what is then more to be sayed, but that ye must nedes confelle your holynes towardes God to be but fayned: ye worthip God with woordes, with outwarde obseruaunces, and ceremonies, but ye hate hym in very dede: ye haue alwaye in your mouth, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lorde, but your herte is set vpon ryches. ye talke muche of the lawe and the Prophetes, but in your herte ye couet and desire worldly prayse: you bee euer speakyng of these woordes of the lawe, loue thy Lorde God with al thy herte, & thy neighbour as thyselfe, but in your hert remaineth envy, hatred, and manslaughter. To deserue prayse before God is the true prayse in dede. True godlynes is to geue and ascribe all glory to god. Therfore howe can ye beleue me seekyng fuerly to you none other thyng but gods glory, when you despisyng the true glory which proceedeth from god, goe about to seke false glorye and prayse amongst men, one of you flatteryng another, and enuying that God shoulde haue his owne due prayse and glorye: seekyng also vnder a false pretence, to be thought holy before men, and not regardyng the sincere and pure conscience

Ye haue not the loue of god.

whiche God beholdeth, whiles ye traualle to get the vile iuere of this worlde, ye lose eternall life. Therfore it is no meruail though God be angrie with you whom ye reliste so stubbernely. Thynke not that I, or any desire to reuenge the contempte ye haue me in, will accuse you to my father. I nede not to doe youre accuser. Moses hymselfe shall accuse you, whose authoritie you amongeste you take to be right holy, & in whō ye put verye great trust, rakyng whatsoeuer he wrote as a thyng spoken of Gods owne mouth. But as ye pretended but a feigned reuerence to wardes John, whose witnesse concernyng me ye doe not beleue, and as ye doe shew your selues to regarde the sayinges of the Prophetes but feynedly, in that ye doe nowe persecute hym, whome they haue promised, finally as ye do vntruely worthip god, whose workes ye doe not acknowlage, whose sonne ye doe hate: So ye doe honour Moses but after a feined sort, whose authoritie ye sette litle by in ỹ thyng, wherein ye ought moste to regarde him. And yet euen beraye he hath written of me, for when youre elders beeyng agreued with the terrible voyce of God, and with the perillous fyer, made intercession that from thencefoorth they might no more heare the voyce of God, or sone that dreadfull fyer, God dyd graunte their requeste, and promysed Moses that he would rayse an excellente Prophete lyke vnto hymselfe, whiche shoulde cumme of your brethren, whose gentle and pleasant voyce not fearyng men with threatenyng, but allureng them to saluation, it shoulde behoue the to heare. But God did threaten punishement to him that would not obey thys Prophetes woordes, saiyng: Truely I will be reuenged of hym whiche wyll not heare the woordes that he shall speake in my name. And agayn he cōmaundeth him to be destroied whiche wyll heare a Prophete cumminyng in his owne name, and speakyng suche thinges as God hath not commaunded hym.

Therefore none other shal more accuse you before god, than Moses your frend, whose writinges ye contemne: he hath promysed that I shoulde dee quiete, gentle, and should speake all thynges accordyng to Goddes will. Such a one am I beeyng here presente, and yet ye refuse me: he also commaundeth that persones be killed, whiche shall cum in his owne name and speake of his owne spirite. Such a one dooe you embrace & make much of, for the hatred ye beare to me, as one that is more agreable to your wicked desires. Therefore you be not onely stubberne agaynst me, but also agaynst Moses hymselfe, whose promyses you do not credite. For truely yf ye beleued Moses, ye would credite me also, whom he hath promysed, and whose saiyng he hath commaunded to bee beleued. Therfore it is no meruaile though ye beleue not my woordes whom ye doe openly contemne as one that is but a meane simple person, when ye gene no credite to Moses writynges, whose authoritie ye wouldе seme to haue in so great estimacion, and of whom ye haue so notable an opinion. With these sayinges our Lorde Jesus beyng the light and trueth, did reproue and disclose the feyned religion of the Jewes, a thyng as muche contrarye to the godlinesse of the ghospell as may bee, to the entent he would make it euidently knowen to all menne, that they throughe theyr owne faulte and deserte didde perishe, whiche would not be moued with so many recordes and testimonies of hym, nor be allured by his benefites & gentle woordes, nor feared with his threatenynges, neither prouoked to fayth by the desire of eternall life, nor yet turne from theyr infidelitie for feare of hell. But if Jesus hadde spoken these thinges amonge the Samaritanes or the Gentiles, specially cauilling his woordes the better to be beleued through myracles, they would haue been conuerted to penaunce. But the Scribes and Pharises of Hierusalem make no answere to these thynges which they could not reprouе: but yet neuertheles they doe stil remaine in their murderous thoughtes: & procure his deathe, whiche offreth to them the benefites of eternall life.

¶ The.vi. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ After these thinges, Jesus went his waie ouer the sea of Galile, whiche is the sea of Tiberias: and a great multitude folowed him, because they sawe his myracles, which he did on them that were diseased. And Jesus went vp into a mountaine, and there he sate with his disciples. And Easter, a feaste of the Jewes was nye.

NOw therfore, to geue place for a tyme to their furie, and to withdrawe hymselfe from amongest those that swelled in pride through an opinion thei hadde in their false feyned religion, and in their vnperfite knowledge of the lawe, Jesus presented hymselfe to more plaine meanyng men: goyng not now again into Cana, but into that Galile whiche lyeth beyonde the great lake Tiberias, takyng that name of the citie Tiberias, whiche citie Tiberius the Emperoure buylded vpon the ryuers syde. And a great noumbre of folke folowed hym goyng thither partely beeyng moued so to doe of the great mindе they hadde to his myracles. because they hadde seen him healpe men of their diseases by a rare and straunge power, partely because that they whiche were sicke of vncurable diseases might rather be holpen of hym, and partely for that they desired to heare his doctrine. But when he sawe the feruencie of that disordred and confused multitude to be so great, that forgettyng prouision of victes, they wente farre into the desert with him: now to make his disciples mete for the myracle (to whome moste specially he would haue the thyng that he should woorke to be knowen and imprinted in their herres, for as yet they were but rude and ignorante:) Jesus I saye, gote himselfe secretlye vp into the mountaine, and his disciples with hym: teachyng euen by the same dede, that albeit he whiche professeth hymselfe to be a shepeheard of the people, doe accompany hymself often with the meane and lowe sorte to profite them, yet it behoueth suche a one to elenate and lifte vp his mynde to more high thinges, so ofte as throughe holye studie or prayer his mynde is to bee stirred and prouoked to the contemplacion of heauenlye thynges. The people abideth beneth vpon the plaine grounde, and onelye Jesus disciples wente vp with hym, for it behouethe bishops to be without all vile care of temporall thynges: and as menne that haue mounted higher, so to contemne those thynges whiche the ignorante people setteth muche by.

Therfore Jesus beyng somwhat separate from the people, setteth hym down on the hyll accompanied with his disciples: but so that he might loke vpon the people: for bishops ought not to goe backe from Christe, although the comon people sticke muche to lower thynges.

And in dede aboue all in the hyll is conuenient for men to sitte, that is to saye, in studye of celestiall thynges muste menne take reste, and as for lower and inferiour matters (whiche thynges are to bee handled and gone a boute as charitie, ritie, and tyme requireth) men muste rather walke therin, then sitte downe and reste. Nor our mynde ought not so to be delited in the contemplacion of hye thinges, that we fall to be careles of our common flocke: for the solitarinesse of bishops ought to be to thys ende, that they moze liuelye and better enstructed, myght repayze againe to looke to the peoples profite. Neyther doeth it beseme them whiche are in Chzistes stede to leaue coumpany for bankettyng, wantonnesse of bodye, dicyng huntyng, oz suche lyke inozdinate pleasures: but throughe quietnes to renewe the mynde (whiche before was muche buisied and weried with moze lowe and meane buisinesse.) And to make thesame by pure desyre, instant prayer, by holy studye and deuoute communicacion, mete for the office and ministerie of the ghospell. Moreouer whyles these thynges were dooen in Galile, Easter was at hande: A feast which the Jewes kepte verai religiously. Wherfore if he had sought for to haue bene noted of theyr religion, it had been moze conuenient for hym now at this tyme, to haue been at Hierusalem, but to shewe sum likelihood that in tyme to cum theyr house should bee leafe desolate, after the Jewes wer once becum rebels against God throughincredulitie, and also that after the holy ghospell should be openly setforth, all theyr carnal worshippyng of God should ceasse, and there finally the feaste of Easter to be moste specially celebrate, whereas (worldly affeccions remouered and put away) the mynde should be brought vnto the loue of celestiall thynges: vpon these consideracions (I saye) Jesus had rather bee among the people of Galile in deserte solitarily, then at Hierusalem in the temple.

When Jesus then lift vp his eyes, and saw a great cumpany cum vnto him, he saieth vnto Philip. Whence shal we bye breade, that these maie eate. This he saied to proue him, for he himself knew what he would do. Philip answered him. Two hundred penyworth of breade are not sufficiente for them that euery manne maie take a litle. The texte.

Nowe then when Jesus had opened his eyes and looked vpon the people, perceiuyng the noumbre to bee exceadyng greate, he so prepared the myndes of his disciples towardes true credence of the myracle, that fyrst he wolde haue the lacke of meate well marked and considered of theim, and also that the multitude whiche stoode beneath in their sight was innumerable: besydes thys that there was but verye fewe loaues whiche they themselues with their own handes shoulde take vnto Jesus, and from hym distribute thesame among the people. Finallye, howe that there shoulde bee leafte manye basshettes full of broken meate, whiche thesame disciples should gather together as fragmentes of the feaste: And all this wolde Jesus haue theim to consider, because they should not be ignorauntein the thyng, neyther after warde forget thesame. For he knewe that as yet his disciples wer but of smal vnderstandyng and forgetfull. Therefore to proue what myndes Philip was of, and little by little to make hym beleue better the myracle, Jesus sayeth vnto hym: where shall we bye breade that this great noumbre of people maye haue sumwhat to eate. Where that we by bread that these maye eate.

Our Lorde Jesus asked these thinges, not that he was ignorant what store of breade and other vitels they hadde, but partelye (as was sayed euen nowe) to cause his Apostles moze aduisedlye to considre the myracle: and partelye also that all men myght knowe howe without care of bodilye sustenaūce the disciples were whiche folowed Chzistе, and howe well contented with common and homely meate. But Philip, as yet loobyng for no myracle, although he hadde seene Christe before turne water into wyne at the mariage, when he wayed well how lytle money they hadde to succoure theymselfes withall, and further what a great multitude of men there was, he answered: Syr, why speake you of bying breade? I assure you, in case we beslowe two hundred pence in bread, yet wyll it not be enough. I meane for to satisfie these menne, which by reason of long abstinence are betrayed to hungred, it will not so relieue them that euery one eatyng but a litle, maye escape thereby the perill of famishyng.

The .xxiii. One of his disciples, Andrew (Simon Peters brother) saieth vnto him: there is a lad here, which hath fiue barly loaues, and two fishes. But what are they among so many? And Jesus saied: make the people sitte downe. There was muche grasse in that place. So the men sate downe in noumber about fiue thousand. And Jesus toke the bread and when he had geuen thankes, he gaue to the disciples, and the disciples gaue to them that were set downe, and likewise of the fishes as muche as they would.

When Philyp had spoken thus, Andrewe (brother to Symon Peter) beyng somwhat wyser, lifted vp hys myndes to some hope of a myracle. Howbeit as yet with no full confidence, for he had seene the water turned into wyne and therefore did not altogether mistruste but that the loaues also myght bee multiplied, neuertheles as he thought, none otherwyse then after a moderate portion, so that of fewer loaues, the lesse bread, and of no loaues more breade shoulde encrease. Whereas Jesus (of truethe) had no nede at all of anye matter to make breade of, who createth euen of nothyng what he wyll, and when he will. Andrewe therefore sayed, here is a certayne boye that hathe fyue barlye loaues and two fishes, but what can so litle do to so great a multitude, beyng alreadye hungrie.

When Jesus sawe they perceyued the lacke of meate, and pondered what a multitude there was, he entendyng to stirre vp theyr myndes to looke for a myracle, commaunded his Apostles to see the people placed and set downe vpon the grasse, whereof in that place was great plentye. The disciples doe not nowe answere againe, and saye: what neadeth it to haue them sette downe when we lacke meate to sette before them? For that whiche we haue in store will not suffice our selfes, but simply they without more adoe obeyed Jesus commaundemente, and caused the people to sitte downe in order, as it were to a feaste. The people also lyke simple playne men, trusted wel, and did obediently as the Apostles badde them, although they sawe no prouision of meate.

Jesus saieth, make the people sitte downe,

There was that sate downe almost fiue thousand. Jesus therfore toke the fiue barly loaues, and when he (after his customable maner) hadde geuen thankes to the father, he brake them, and so toke them to his disciples to distribute the same vnto the people, then frayning and fashionyng them, that by thys corporall similitude they should enure theimselues to playe well the shepherdes: and beyng ministers of the ghospel, to feede and nourishe the soules of Christes flocke with spirituall foode. For he is that bery bread, which came downe from heauen, to geue eternall lyfe to them that desirously eate thereof. This breade beeing duly dyshops bestowe and ministre vnto the people, but from no where els, then out of Christes handes, and not without rendryng thankes to the father of heauen, of whome we must knowlage our selfes to haue receyued whatsoeuer apperteineth to the saluacion of mankynde.

And

And toke the bread,

And vnto whom as to the very auctour, our Lorde Jesus referred all notable thynges whiche he dydde here in this worlde, monithyng vs therewith by the way, that in case we should haue any excellence bertue in vs, we shoulde not chalenge the prayse therof, but cleirlye parte from our selues all the glorye of the same and geue it vnto God, from whom proceedeth al thynges that of right deserue prayse.

Furthermore, Jesus dyd euen here nowe the same thing by the two fishes, that he had before doen by the fyue loaues, deliuerynge it vnto his disciples, and at his wyl and pleasure, the meat did encrease betwene the handes of the dealer of it, so muche in quantitie as he knewe would suffice theim all, yea and also a great deale more, to make the myracle the better to be beleued.

When they had eaten enough, he saieth vnto his disciples: Gather vp the broken meate which remaineth, that nothing be loste. And they gathered it together, and filled twelue basketes with the broken meate of the fiue barlye loaues: which broken meate remained vnto them that had eaten. Then these men (when they had seen the myracle that Jesus did) saied. This is of a truethe the same prophete, that should cumme into the worlde. The texte.

Finallye, when that great cumpany was well filled with meate, Jesus letting fo[r]th the certaintie of that dede by an other proofe, leste anye man shoulde fynde faulte and impute the thyng to bee a delusion or a counterfayte thyng, sayed thus to his disciples: Gather vp the broken meate whiche is lefte of the reaste, that nothyng bee loste. And they founde so muche broken meate after euerye one had eaten his fylle, as fylled twelue basketes: The bountifull goodnes of Jesus augmented that scarcitie and small store of barayles (that is to wete, of fyue loaues and two fishes) into this so greate plentye, to teache vs by the way that we shoulde not niggardlye do our charitie vnto the poore. But by this his myracle muche more he teacheth howe that it behoueth hym whiche hath taken vpon hym the charge to feede the flocke of Christe, largelye to deale out of the ryche treasourye of holy scripture what soeuer apperteineth to enstructe, to counsayle, to coumfo[r]te and encourage theym that neede such foode.

Moreouer, when they whiche had eaten enough at full, were not ignorante howe there was at the fyrst founde out but fyue barleye loaues and two fishes, and hadde alreadye seene so manye basketes full of broken meate remayne, they begonne highlye to repo[r]te of Jesus, saying: Truelye this is that same prophete whiche hath long tyme been looked for, to cumme into the worlde. This is euen the nature of the common people, they doo sooner feele the benefite of the bely then of the mind. They had seen greater myracles, yet did they neuer geue hym so hye a prayse, as plentye of meate could cause them speake thus.

When Jesus therefore perceiued that they would cum, and take him by to make him king, he departed again into a mountaine himselfe alone. And when euen was now cum, his disciples went downe vnto the sea, and gat vp into a ship, and came ouer the sea vnto Capernaum. And it was now darke, and Jesus was not cum to them. The texte.

And at this presente, (because as yet they were ignorante and grosse, looking that Messias shoulde cum to get hymselfe a worldelye kyngdome) they dyd consulte among theimselfes to take Jesus, and make hym their kyng, well assuryng theimselfes therof, that in case they myght haue suche a kyng, they should haue plentye of all thynges, vittayles inough, riches, libertye, and other worldly commodities aboundantly.

But Jesus whiche did couet an other maner of kyngdome, and came to teache vs to contemne riches, pleasures, and worldely glorye, knowyng right well what they entended and wente aboute, dydde nowe agayne secretelye conuey hymselfe to the hyll, from whence he came downe to the people. From theym that called hym to a kyngdome, he withdrewe hymselfe priuelye all alone, so that no manne coulde perceiue his goyng awaye, but of his owne free will he meteth theym that pulleth hym to the crosse, therein geuyng a playne exaumple to them that shoulde hereafter be his deputies. For he can neuer preache the ghospell purelye, that loueth a worldelye kyngdome and pompe, whiche thynges spirituall shepeherdes ought so litle to seeke for, that it behoueth them to refuse those thynges, though they be freelye geuen them. For the kyngdome of the worlde agreeth not with the kyngdome of heauen, no more derkenesse then darkenesse and light accordeth.

Whem the disciples had long looked for theyr maister in the hyll, and euenyng was nowe at hande, leste the darke nyght should cum vpon them beeyng in deserte, they wente doune to the lake to rowe ouer vnto the citie Capernaum (for Jesus had there a litle place to repose hymselfe in) well hopyng eyther that he in summe other shyppe should mete them as they wer sailyng ouer the lake, or at the leaste they shoulde fynde hym in the citie. And it was darke already when they prepared theyr passage ouer: neyther dyd Jesus in the meane while cumme to his disciples, beyng long and much looked for of them, knowing wel enough howe much they were agreued with his absence.

But Jesus mynde was through his absence to make his disciples more desyrous of hym, and there with also to teache in what great daungier we be in, what great darkenes, what worldely trouble hangeth ouer vs, as often as we be disseuered from Jesus. In the meane whyle a matter was prepared for a greater miracle.

The texte. ¶ And the sea arose with a great wind that blew. So when they had rowen about a xxv. or xxx. furlonges, they sawe Jesus walkyng in the sea, and drawyng nighe vnto the shippe, and they were afraied. But he saieth vnto them: It is I, be not afrayed. Then would they haue receiued him into the shippe, and immediately the shippe was at the lande whether they went.

The lake was so great that they called it the sea, which the nyght made more terrible. And to make it moe waies daungerous then one, they hadde the windes so outragious agaynste theim, that the lake was exceadyng rough withall: yet neuertheles the disciples were so desirous of theyr mayster, that they dydde aduenture to rowe vpon the water. Nowe therefore, when they were farre from the lande and hadde rowed vpon a fyue and twenty, or thyrtie furlonges, being almoste in despaire of theyr liues, oure Lorde Jesus was cumme nighe vnto theym vnlooked for: notwithstandyng the darkenesse they se hym goyng on foote vpon the sea, as thoughe he had troden vpon the harde grounde, to declare hymselfe thereby lorde not onely of the yearth, but of all elementes also. And of trueth the charitie of the ghospell hath yes and can see in the darke, neyther is there anye nyght where Jesus is presente, nor anye deadly deadly tempeste whereas he is nygh, that maketh all thinges clere and cauime. But now whē our Lord was cum nighe vnto the shyppe: the disciples were sodaynly afeerde, and because they could not well see and perfectly discerne in the darke, they nowe suspect the thyng to be but as it were a vision in the nyght, a ghoste or suche lyke as the vulgar people beleue many to bee seen of theym that layle by nyght.

Neuertheleſſe, to put theym out of all feare with speakyng vnto theym in his owne proper voyce, (whiche they knewe, and were well accustomed therewith) Jesus sayd vnto them: it is I, bee not afrayed, signifyyng thereby that such as haue the assistence of our Lorde Jesus, oughte not to bee afrayed of worldly trouble, bee it neuer so great and fierce. All they truelye whiche in simplicite and plainnes of heart do constātly and faythfullye depende vpon hym, hath hym presente euen to the worldes ende. Now the disciples being boldened at the voyce of theyr maister, were desirous to take hym into the shyppe: for euen they herdly were sumwhat afrayed, whose truste and hope yet was bothe weake and vnconstant. But to thintent that our Lord Jesus myghte declare to his disciples the whole thing ỹ was doen, to be wrought by his diuine power, and that the stormē was not swaged and ceassed by casualtye, the shippe which incontinentelye before was tossed hyther and thyther a ferre of from the shore, did sodainly arriue to the lande, whereunto they entended to goe. The disciples (whose faythe was to be framed and confirmed by all the wayes that could be possible) by these prooues and tokens dydde more diligentelye imprinte in theyr myndes this myracle.

The date following when the people (whiche stoode on the other side of the sea) sawe that there was no ship there, saue that one wherein his disciples were entred, & that Jesus went not in with his disciples into the ship, but that his disciples were gon awaie alone, howebeit there came other ships from Tiberias vnto that place, where they did eat bread after the Lord had geuen thankes. When the people saw that Jesus was not there, neyther his disciples, they also tooke shipping and came to Capernaum seeking for Jesus. The texte.

And in deede the people were not altogether ignorante of this straunge thing and myracle, for the nexte date after these thynges were doorn when the multitude whiche remayned styll on the other syde of the water, sawe that none other shyppe was there, saue that one wherein the disciples went ouer, whom when they sawe shootyng on the shore, they were well assured that Jesus wente not with his disciples into the shippe, but that they went awaye alone: The people (I saye) merualled to what place he hadde secretelye withdrawen hymselfe, for so muche as not withstandyng the multitude whom he had fed the day before dyd muche desire and long for hym, yet in the mornyng dydde he no where appeare. But yet supposyng that he wouldde not be very long absente from his disciples, whiche were alreadye gon ouer, euen these folkes also were determyned to rowe ouer the water to proue yf they could fynde hym: on the other side. And there was presente at the same tyme certayne shyppes which had cum, not from Capernaum, but from Tyberias, nere also standyng by the sea syde, nigh vnto the place where they had been fedde, and eaten their fill with .v. barly loaues, wherewith beyng satisfied they gaue thankes to God whiche had sente to his people suche a prophete. Therefore when these shyps were in a readinesse to carrye ouer the people, and Jesus that was muche soughte for, could no where bee founde, the people tooke shipping there to seke Jesus, because he had there a restyng place, and because they also knewe that the Apostles were sailed ouer thyther.

And when they had found him on the other side of the sea, they said vnto him: Rabbi, when camest thou hither? Jesus answered them and saide: Verely, verely, I saie vnto
The xvi. you, ye seke me, not because ye sawe the myracles, but because ye did eat of the loaues, & were filled. Labour not for meate that perysheth, but for that whiche endureth vnto euerlasting life, whiche meate the sonne of man shall geue vnto you. For him hath god the father sealed.

Whē they had founde Jesus here, and sawe that he had passed ouer the lake, and knowyng right well that there was no shippe to conueigh him ouer, muche meruailyng by what meanes he coulde passe ouer the water, asked of him, saiyng: Maister when camest thou hyther? desiring to gather by the very time how he hadde passed ouer. For they supposed euen this thing also to be done by myracle, lyke as he had the day past fedde a very great multitude.
But the feruencie whiche they had the daye before, where by the other daye they went about to force him to a kingdome euen agaynste his will, was now well cooled. And leste Jesus should seme to auaunte his owne power, he maketh no answere to these thynges: to the intente they shoulde be more credibly enfourmed of the myracle by his disciples, and also by euidente proues thereof. But Jesus dyd sore rebuke and earnestely reproue the affection of the multitude (as not onely vnconstaunte, but also rude and grosse, and farre vnmete for the doctryne of the ghospell,) because that albeit they hadde seene greatter myracles whiche dyd more proue his Liuyne power, yet neuertheleste one plenteous dinner dyd more stirre them, then the desire of eternal saluacion. And they sette more by bodily sustenaunce (where with that thyng is now and then and but for a time releued, whiche within a whyle after shall perishe) then they dydde hungre after that meate, without whiche the soule dothe euerlastingly perishe.
Finally, he didde correcte their grosse iudgemente of him: wherebye they thought he did woorke his miracles, to the intente to deserue there with, & the rathe peoples hand, a worldly kyngdome: whereas Christe in berayre berde (according as the tyme required) didde shewe sum proue of his diuine power by certaine miracles, for none other cause surelye but that throughe scripture and bodilye thinges, he myghte cause more credite to bee geuen vnto his doctrine: whiche promyseth those thynges that cannot be perceiued with bodilye senses. And by this waie also to bring by those (that were yet rude and weake) by certaine degrees, to the capacitie of more hye thynges: Like as a trustie Maister would wishe, that (if it coulde be) his scholer shoulde foorth with take and vnderstande his whole science, yet for a time he fourmeth and fashioneth the rude and tender mynde with certayne principles, vntyll he haue brought hym vp to the perfecte knowlege of his facultie, so that he shal afterwarde more of those introductions. And though the teacher doo not teache the verye letters and his fyrste rules without wordes, yet he doth beare them vnder hande and weare it away with the hope of profityng his scholer, labouryng all the wayes he can, to get him soone out of those course principles. Therefore Jesus to declare here also his godhead, in that he knewe their thoughtes, when he sawe the people hadde no we agayne recourse vnto hym, for the desire of suche myracles whiche shoulde rather fyll the belye then instructe the mynde: he tooke occasion of the meate that he hadde once geuen them, to teache them in what foode they ought to haue moste desired. The effecte of his saiyng was this. Uerely this thing is true (saieth he) whiche I woll tell you: ye calle me maister, not because ye bee muche desirous of my doctryne whiche is all spirituall, but because ye seeke for worldelye pleasures and small commodities, whiche are more esteemed of you then thynges whiche doe farre excelle them. And at this presente ye doe seeke me with great affection, and yet (I wisse) not so muche for to see myracles, whiche ought in dede to allure you to mynde celestiall thynges, but yesterdayes there dooeth more prouoke you, then that ye bee enamoured of goddely power. And ye coumpte it a great matter if a manne fede your bodye without your charge. It is but a small matter to frede this bodie, that otherwyse muste needes decaye and bee destroied: neyther shal they that bee desirous of the doctrine of the gholpell lacke meate. Therfore surme all youre care to gette that foode, whiche where it is taken, dooeth not perishe by digestion, nor dooeth prolong lyfe of the bodye for a shorte tyme, as the common materiall sustenaunce dooeth, and yet within a whyle hungre ammeth againe: But gette suche foode (I saye) as tarrieth styll in man, nozysshing the soule with spirituall foode: and geueth eternall lyfe thereunto. The sonne of man wil geue you this excellent bread, if he perceiue that you doe long and hungre for it. For certainly God willyng to geue eternall lyfe to mankynde, hath dydde specially appoynt this sonne of manne, geuyng vnto hym power, and with myracles bringing him to greate estimacion, that he shoulde geue spirituall foode to all that desyre eternall life. And also for this purpose he gaue vnto the same, power and auctozitie and with myracles brought hym to great estimacion. For Jesus came not into the worlde to get vnto himselfe worldelye honour, nor to make menne blessed with worldly commodities, but he came rather aboute this businesse, that is to weete, to lift vp men from byle filthy cares, to care and studye for heauenly thynges.

Labour not for y meate which perisheth

¶ Then said they vnto him: what shal we do, that we might worke the workes of God? Jesus answered and said vnto them: this is the worke of God, that ye beleue on him who he hath sent. They said therefore vnto him: what signe shewest thou then, that we maie see and beleue thee? what doest thou worke? our fathers did eat manna in the desert as it is written: He gaue them bread from heauen to eate.

The texte.

When as the rude and ignozaunt people (minding altogether their belly) vnderstoode not these thynges, no nor once considered theim, they answered Jesus on this wise. For so muche as thou counsellest vs to worke a certaine meate, that shoulde still remayne in vs, and bring with it euerlastyng life, what shall we doe therefore, that we maie worke those thynges which are mete for God, and that we maie deserue eternall lyfe, for whiche causes you saye that you were sent into the worlde? Jesus beeyng nothyng offended with this so grosse an aunswere, proceedeth by litle and litle to call them from their fondenesse to more perfite thynges. If ye aske (saieth he) what is the worke whereby ye maie deserue to haue God, whiche is a spirite and is pleased with spirituall thynges, ye shall vnderstande, that it is no sacrifisyng of beastes, no keepyng of the Sabboth daye, no outwarde washynges, no choyse of meates, no relygion of garmentes, nor other thynges whiche dooeth consiste in corporall ceremonies: but this is the worke whiche God requireth of you, to beleue his sonne whome he hath sent, and by whome he speaketh vnto you: leste he shoulde

This is the worke of God that ye beleue.

seme to graunt euerlasting life to you that be vnthankefull persones, or rather vnworthy suche a benefite. The people whiche chalenged a wonderfull religion throughe the obstruyng of Moses lawe, made no we aunswere vnto these thynges, not onely grossly, but also vnskylfully and wickedlye, and saye, If you take vpon you a speciall auctorities aboue our elders, whose auctorities we haue hitherto folowed, shewe sum proffe and token of thine auctorite geuen eyther of God: that vpon syght ther of we maye beleue not by woordes but thy dedes. For it is no reason that without sum woonderous signe we should beleue the, whiche in wordes takest arrogantly vpon the this auctorite. Neyther wouldest we rathelye haue geuen credence vnto our forefathers, but that throughe a token whiche came from heauen, they dydde certifye vs of theyr goddelye authoritie. Our auncetours dydde eate Manna in the wildernesse vnder Moses that was theyr guyde. This was of truethe the breade of God, an heauenly foode whiche dydde not puttrifie, as it is writen in the Psalme: he gaue them celestiall breade to eate. Therefore by reason of this woondrefull thyng, the people then beyng moued, obeyed Moses. And in case thou canste doe the lyke or els summe greatter thyng, we wyll also beleue the. Not yet dyd this so grosse, so vnkynde, so wicked an aunswer of the people, make the gentelnes of Jesus weary, from allurying them to the knowledge of spirituall thynges. For lyttle of all they requite sum straunge token, as thoughe they had neuer seene anye myracle before: neyther be they contente with euerye kynde of myracle, but as men that woulde goe before hym in all thynges, they prescribe hym what kynde of myracle they would haue hym doe: and to conclude, amongest so many wonderful doinges that are red to be doen vnto the old auncient Jewes, they picke out that chiefly which appertaineth to fedyng: so muche care had they of theyr belie.

what signe shewest thou?

Then Jesus said vnto them: verely verely, I saye vnto you, Moses gaue you not that bread from heauen, but my father geueth you the true bread from heauen. For the breade of God is he whiche cummeth down from heauen, and geueth life vnto the world.

Therfore Jesus as it wer dissembleyng the ignoraunce of the people, thus little by litle bringeth them to the perceiuyng of spirituall thinges, saiyng: If Moses auctorite bee therefore weightie and regarded among you, because he gaue you Manna from heauen, and ye honour it as heauenlye foode because it came down from heauen: God is meete then to be thanked herein, frō whome Manna dyd flow, and to whom the glorie and praise of al myracles is due. For neyther Moses could do this thyng of himself, who was nothyng els but gods ministre, neyther was that bread very heauenly breade in deede, although Dauid that wrote the Psalmes cal it bread of heauē: for it came not from very heauē, but it rained doune out of the ayer, lyke as dydes lieyng in the ayer are called dydes of heauen: and truely this Manna was but onely a figure of the heauenlye bread. And euen as god gaue vnto vs not only bread to a carnall people by Moses, that serued him in the world: so now my father by his heauenly sonne geueth vnto you, as to a spirituall people, that bread whiche vndoubtedly came from heauen: and doeth not onely fill and saciate the bodyes for a time, but geueth immortalitie of soule to them that will receiue it. That was but materiall breade, and gaue lyfe onely to the bodye for a tyme, and how great a benefite so euer it was, yet did it profite but the people of one nacion alone: but the bread that I speake of, is neyther corporall, neyther dydit distyll out of the ayer, but did procede euen from very god hymselfe, and is of suche efficacie, that it geueth

it geueth lyfe, not to bodyes but to soules, and not to one sorte of people alone, but to ỹ whole worlde: As touchyng the autour thereof, in case ye paūe muche therupon) well, in stede of Moses in whome ye muche gloryе, ye haue God the very auctour of this gyfte: and for the seruaunte of god, ye haue goddes owne sonne. And yf ye regarde the gift, there is as great diuersitie betwene these, as is betwene the bodye and the soule, and as is betwene this life which shal shortly cease, and euerlastyng lyfe in heauen.

Then said they vnto him: lord, euermore geue vs this bread. And Iesus said vnto them: I am the bread of life. He that cumeth to me shal not hungre, and he that beleueth on me, shall neuer thyrst. But I said vnto you, that ye also haue sene me, & yet ye beleue me not. The texte.

Whan the Iewes had heard all these thynges, yet wer not they for all that lifte vp to the loue of celestiall thynges: but styll dreamyng vpon matters touchyng the belly, sayde vnto Iesus: Syr geue vs alwaye this bреde. They loued the sacietie of meate better then healthe, and soughte rather for a plentiful geuer of meate and drynke, then for a sauiour. Therefore, to take from them their dreame of corporall foode, Iesus expresseth more plainelye vnto them, that he did not speake of bread that is chewed with teeth, and whiche breyng conueied throughe the throte into the stomake, swageth bodilye hungre for a season, but of heauenly bread, whiche is the woord of God. Therefore he saith: I am that bread the very geuer of eternall life. He that hungrely listeth after this bread, and will cumme to me, and suffre it to haue passage into the bowelles of the soule by fayth, shal not feele any grief of hungre, that shall cum to hym after he bee once fullye satisfied, but it shall tarrye still and a bide in hym that hath receyued it, vnto eternall lyfe. And my woorde hath in it a fountaine of spirituall water: whereof the soule drynketh by fayth, and not the bodye: therfore he that beleueth in me, shall not onely be without hungre, but also without thirst eternally. This bread is not receiued by gapyng of the mouthe, but through beliefe of the soule. And therfore I haue spoken these thynges vnto you, to let you knowe, that throughe your owne faulte ye shall perishe, in case ye dode perishe and continue in your infidelitie. My father deuiseth this bread to no man, and to you of all men it hath been lyfte offered, notwithstandyng ye care more for the bread that shal vtterly cum to naught. Ye haue sene me do greatter thynges then yf I should feede you with Manna: and I promyse vnto you also thinges of greatter felicitie, and for al this ye beleue me not. I am the bread of life. The texte.

All that the father geueth me shall cum to me, and he that cummeth to me, I cast not away. For I came doune from heauen, not to do that I will, but ỹ he will which hath sent me. And this is the fathers will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath geuen me, I shall loose nothing, but raise them vp againe at the last day. And this is the will of him that sent me: that euery one which seeth the sonne and beleueth on him, haue euerlasting life. And I will rayse him vp at the last day. The texte.

And albeit ye do throughe vnbeliefe loth this bread, yet for all that my father hath not sent it into this worlde without cause. There shall bee sum folke to whom this bread shall bryng euerlastyng lyfe, although the whole nacion of the Iewes shall reiecte gods sonne: and therfore be euen wicked towardes god because they do contemne the said sonne, whome the father hathe sent to saue the whole worlde. For my father is God not onely of the Iewes, but also of al Gentyles. I haue nothyng in dede of my selfe, but yet whatsoe-

ther my father hath geuen to me (what kynde of people so euer it bee of) the same shall cum to me by fayth, although it hath nothyng to dooe at all with Moses law. And whosoeuer wyll cumme to me, hym will I not reiecte, yea and wouldo to God all folke wouldo cum vnto me. For my fathers wyll is (as muche as lyeth in hym) that all men shoulde bee saued by fayth. And for as muche as his wyll and myne is all one, for this ende therfore I descended from heauen: not to doe what I wyll, as it were dilagreyng with my father, but to dooe my fathers wyl whiche sente me: from whose wyll myne cannot dissente.

For I am cum downe from heaue

And truely my fathers wyll that sente me is this, that what thyng so euer he hath through faith geuen vnto me, no deale therof dooe perishe, I beeyng the preseruer of the same, leste the worlde shoulde violently dyawe vnto death that thyng whiche my father hath ordeined to liue.

Furthermore, although the bodye do dye by the course of mans nature, yet dooeth the soule, whiche is the better parte of man, remain still aliue.

This is the wil of him that sēt me,

And to thintente also that the whole man shoulde like throughe me, my father wylleth thys thyng too, that in the last day I shal restore the dead body also to lyfe. For this is my fathers wyll that sente me, euen by his soonne to geue to eternall lyfe vnto all men: and that not through Moses lawe, but by fayth of the ghospell. The father dooeth nothyng but by his soune. And therfore he that dooeth not acknowlage the soonne, dooeth not acknowlage the father: and whoso resisteth the sonne, he also resisteth the father. The father is inuisible, but yet he is seen in his sonne. Therfore whoso seeth the sonne, acknowledgeth hym, and beleueth his woordes, the same soonne will not suffre hym to perishe, but although he bee deade in bodye, he wyll rayse hym agayne in the laste daye, accordyng to his fathers wylle, that he so maye liue wholly, both in bodie and soule, in the presence of the soonne whome he gaue credite vnto. The father hath geuen this power vnto the soonne, that he maye restore euen the dead vnto life.

The text

The Iewes then murmured at hym because he said: I am the bread of life which came downe from heauen. And they said: Is not this Iesus the soune of Ioseph whose father and mother we knowe: How is it then that he saieth I came down from heaue. Iesus answered and said vnto them: murmure not among youre selues. No man can cumme to me, excepte the father whiche sente me drawe hym. And I wil rayse hym at the laste daie.

When Iesus had spoken these thinges, the people whiche hytherto throughe hope of meate, couldo merely wel away with his communication, now seyng that they sawe their hope of bodilye sustenaunce was taken away, they fell to quarelyng with hym, to maligne against him. And also whereas they (beeing sufficed with eatyng) wouldo haue made him king, him doe they nowe condemne as a vyle persone, and late arrogancie to his charge, not openlye as yet, but murmuring emong themselues, chiefelye at that saiyng whiche of all others they oughte to embrace, that is to weete: I am the liuelye breade whiche descended from heauen. They moste coueted and graped for bodilye foode, and with this saiyng, they thoughte themselues deluded and mocked, where as in dede a thyng farre more excellent was offred them then they loked for.

Certes the infirmitie of his manhed offended theim, whiche they onely looked vpon with bodily iyes, when as they myght both of his dooynges and sayinges haue seene the power of god in hym, yf they had hadiyes of fayethe. Is not this not this man (saye they) Joseph the carpenters sonne, whose father and mother we know we well enough by sight: and to be but poore folkes and of a very meane estate. Further more how can he for shame say, that he came down out of heauen, when as but of late time he was borne here in earth emongest vs, a very man of men as we be? or what meaneth he by tellyng vs of an other father? And whyles they were talkyng secretly one to an other of these thynges, Jesus (declaring forthwith that mēs very thoughtes were not hid frō his knowlage) did make more plain, and also confirme that which he had spokē before, saiyng: there is no cause why ye should murmure among your selues at these thynges, which I haue spoken vnto you. your infidelities is the cause why my woordes sticke not in your myndes. ye se and se not, you heare and heare not, and whyles ye be present yet are ye absent. Of truely whosoeuer cūmeth to me, shal obteine eternall life, but by fayth must men cum to me. And faithe cummeth not at all auentures, but it is hadde by the inspiracion of god the father: who like as he draweth vnto him mens myndes by his sonne, so by breathyng in fayth secretely into mens soules, he draweth them to his sonne in suche wyse, that through the operacion of both ioyntly together, men cum to them both. The father doth not geue this so great a gift, but to them that be willing, and desirouse to haue it. And truely whosoeuer doeth with a redy will and godly diligence desire to bee drawen of my father, he shall obteine euerlastyng life by me. For I (as I tolde you) shall call to lyfe again euen him that is dead, when þ day shall cum, wherin the felicitie of the godly and the destruccion of the wicked shalbe finished and fully concluded. He that beleueth me receiueth an excellent greate thyng, but he ought to thanke the father for it, without whom no mā can beleue, and yet for al that they that in the meane season doe not beleue, can not excuse theyr faute by saying that they were not drawen: For the father (so muche as lieth in hym) coueteth to draw all men. He that is not drawen is in faute himselfe, because he wyth draweth hymselfe from him that els would draw hym.

The texte. Cyt is written in the prophetes: and they shalbe al taught of god. Euery man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the father, cummeth vnto me, not that any man hath seen the father, saue he which is of god: the same hath seen the father. Verelye, verelye, I saie vnto you: he that putteth his trust in me, hath euerlasting life.

Thynges of thys worlde are learned by mannes endeuour and studye. This celestiall philosophye is not vnderstande, vnles the secrete inspiracion of the father make mannes harte apte to bee taught. Vndoubtedlye thys is that whiche the prophetes long a go dyd saye shoulde be, thus prophecying before hād: And they shall be al taught of god. But the lustes of this worlde maketh many one vnfowardes to be taughte: whiche woorldelye desyres whyles they euen drowne men in these earthlye thynges, they suffre theym not to lifte vp theyr myndes to heauenlye thynges. The gyfte is goddes, but the endeuour is yours. A man heareth my woordes with bodily eares in vayne, except he heare before the secrete voyce of the father, whiche must inspire the mynde with an inuysible grace of fayethe. Therefore whosoeuer fashyon theymselfes to bee apte to receiue this inspiracion, the father doeth thus drawe theym. And he onely that is so drawen, cummeth finally to me. For god is a spirite, and is eyther heard ne not seen, but to them that bee spirituall. And so to haue seene and haue heard e hym, is saluacion. Many shall see and heare the sonne to theyr perpl and daunger, notwithstandyng that ye do glorye in that god was seene

And they shall bee al taughte of God.

and heard to Moſes and to the prophetes . There was neuer mortall manne that ſawe and hard god, as he is in his own nature and ſubſtaunce, that thing is geuen to the ſonne of god alone, whiche onely came from God, with whom he was euermore before he came into this worlde. Therfore put clearely out of your myndes the vyle cares of thys corporall lyfe, labourynge al that ye can, that through earneſt deſyre of thynges that be ſpiritually good, ye may attaine life euerlaſtyng. I would ye ſhould forget that bread wherewith the bodie is ſatiſfyed, and be ye deſirous of that heauenly bread, whiche geueth eternall lyfe. This bread is receiued by fayth, and fayth is to be obteyned of god the father: be ye well aſſured therof, that whoſoeuer hath affiaunce in me, the ſame hath he already eternall lyfe for ſo muche as he hath the fountaine of immortalitie.

The texte. I am the bread of life: your fathers did eate Manna in wildernes, and are dead. This is that bread, whiche cummeth down from heauen, that a man maie eate therof and not die. I am that liuing bread, whiche came downe from heauen. If any manne eate of this bread, he ſhall liue for euer. And the bread that I will geue, is my flethe, whiche I will geue for the life of the world.

I am that very bread whiche geueth not a bodily and a tranſitorye life, but the lyfe of the ſoule, and eternall lyfe. Although ye haue me preſente, yet neuertheleſſe ye deſyre Manna, as a woondrefull thyng. And al beit Manna (whiche youre anneſtours didde eate and feede vpon for a certaine eyme in the wildernelſe) diddē cum from heauen (as you ſuppoſe) yet it dyd theim no further pleaſure then wheaten or barlye bread would haue dooen. It putte away for a whyle the hunger of the bodye, whiche ſhortelye after wounde returne agayne, and require more meate: but it couldē not geue them immortalitie. For though your forefathers were neuer ſo happye, yet dyd as manye of them dye as dyd feede of that Manna. This bread (whiche I ſpeake of) deſcended out of heauen in verye deede, and it hath receiued of god celeſtiall ſtrengthe to make hym that eateth of it, to liue in bodye and ſoule euerlaſtyng lye, and neuer to dye ſubiecte vnto deathe. Ye neede not therefore aſke impertunately any Manna from heauen, when as ye haue here heauenly bread preſente and ready prepared for you, whiche geueth eternall lyfe, in caſe ye wyll receiue it by fayth. For I my ſelfe am that bread, the grauter of immortall lyfe, who alone came down from heauen, whome you (beeyng offended with the infirmitie of this bodye) take and thynke to be nothyng els but the ſonne of Joſeph and Mary.

I am the liuyng bread.

Truely I am the very woorde of god the father, whiche whoſo beleueth ſhall haue immortall lyfe. If any man wyll conueye and digeſte this heauenlye bread into the inwarde partes of the ſoule, he ſhall bee quickened and growe into eternall lyfe. And yf you beyng but carnall do not yet vnderſtande ſpirituall thynges, I wyll ſhewe you a more a plain and groſſer matter, and a thyng that is more apperteinyng vnto the flethe. Euen thys flethe whiche you ſee and lode vpon, and whiche I ſhall beſtowe and geue vnto deathe for to redeme the lyfe of the whole worlde, is the liuyng bread. Beleue, eate it, and liue. By thys ſayeng our Lord Jeſus did ſumwhat (after an obſcure ſorte) open vnto them the miſterie of this godhed, whereby he was alwaye with God the father, and of his death alſo: by the whiche he ſhould deliuer and ſaue the worlde from the tyrannye of deathe. Finallye he did inſinuate herein vnto them, the priuitie of hys myſticall bodye; whereof he that is not a membre and by fayth annexed there-unto

vnto, and so styll cleaue and sticke fast vnto it as the branche dooeth cleaue vnto the tyne, he shall not haue life in hym. And Jesus knewe well enough that at that tyme the Jewes dyd not vnderstande his sayynges, but yet for all that he was assured that in tyme to cum it should cum to passe, how wel that these seedes (and as ye would say notsthumentes of misteryes) beeyng shutte and closed vp within the myndes of good men, should growe vp and bryng forth plentyouse fruite.

The Jewes therfore stroue among theimselfes, saiyng: howe can this felow geue vs that flesh of his to eat. Then Jesus said vnto them: verily verily I saie vnto you, except ye eat the flesche of the sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, ye haue no life in you. Whosoeuer eateth my flesh and drinketh my bloude, hath eternall life, and I will raise him vp at the last daie. For my flesche is meate in deede: and my bloude is drinke in deede. He that eateth my flesche, and drinketh my bloude, dwelleth in me, and I in hym. The texte

Therfore when as these thynges semed to them very inconuenient and to folish to be spoke, and durst not talke homely and familiarly with the lord himself, there arose a great discorde in opinions among them, diuerse of them diuersly interpretyng the thyng that was spoken. For euen as Nicodemus vnderstoode not Jesus when he spake of a newe heauenlye birth, nor the woman of Samaria knewe what Jesus ment in his darke speakyng of the water that should flo weinto euerlastyng life: so this rude and grosse people cõceiued how it could be brought to passe, that a man should geue hys flesh to be eaten of other: and that in suche sorte as it should suffyse al men to perpetual lyfe. For he dyd bid, and inuited all men to eate heauenly bread, and sayd moreouer that his flesh was bread. How shall we (say they) eate the flesh of a liuyng mane? And again, Jesus beeyng not ignorannte about what matter they contended, dyd not declare vnto them by what way and meanes that flesh might be eaten in steade of bread, but here now confirmeth the thyng to be needeful, and a very necessarie thyng, which they iudged but a bayne thyng and a plaine absurditie, and that it could not be doen. Take this for a declaration (saieth he) excepte ye receiue me whole, that is to saye, vnlesse ye eate the flesh of the sonne of man in steade of bread, and in the place of wyne drinke his bloud, ye shall not haue life in you. On the contrarye syde, whosoeuer eateth my flesh and drinketh my bloud, hath by eating and drinking therof eternal life: Neyther shall the soule alone liue blessed and most happy by reason of this meat and drinke, but also after the resurrection of the bodye, the whole man bothe bodye and soule shall haue with me the fruicion of euerlastyng lyfe. For like as mans naturall meate beeyng conueyed downe into the stomake, and after it bee digested is conueyed thence throughout all the membres of the bodye, and turneth into the substaunce of the bodye, so that then the meate and the man that eateth it is al one: in lyke maner on the other syde, he that hath eaten me, shalbe spiritually tranſormed and turned into me. Furthermore, for somuche as I am the true auctour of the resurrection, I will not suffre my membres to bee disseuered and pulled away from me: but whosoeuer is sureiye ioyned to me by thys meate and drinke, I shall rayse hym vp agayne in the last day: that because the whole man hauyng bothe bodye and soule beleued me, the whole man now be alwaye liue with me euerlastynglye. Wodelye meate woorketh not this effecte, neyther yet Manna wherein ye reioyce, but the eatyng of my bodye, and the drinkyng of my bloude, bringeth this thyng to passe. And therfore my flesh is truelye meate, whyche geueth immortalitie, and my bloude is truely drynke, except ye eat the flesh of the sonne of manne.

which doeth procure eternall life, not only to ꝑ body, but to ꝑ whole man both bodye and soule. And as the lyfe of the bodye whiche is nourished with dayly sustenaunce, lest it shoulde perishe before the ryme, is common to all the membres of the body, by reason of the indiuisible felowshippe that all the partes of the bodye hathe together wardes, in so muche that though the membres of the bodye be diuerse and sundrye, yet there is but one bodye, because that one soule geueth lyfe to euerye parte of the bodye: so he that eateth my flesshe, and drynketh my bloude, is in suche sorte coupled and ioyned to me, that neither can I be seperate from hym, nor he from me. For I am in hym by my spirite, by who I wyll geue lyfe to hym. And he is in me as a membre in the bodye, and as the braunche is in the tree, by suche a participation as cannot bee dissolued.

The texte. ¶ As the liuing father hath sente me, and I liue for the father: euen so he that eateth me, shal liue by the meanes of me. This is the bread which came downe from heauen, not as your fathers did eate Manna, and are dead. He that eateth of this bread, shall liue euer. These thinges sayed he in the synagogue as he taught in Capernaum. Many therefore of his disciples (when they had heard this) sayd, this is an hard saying: Who can abide the hearing of it?

The father that sent me is the principall fountaine of al life. Whosoeuer is ioyned to hym, is made partaker of life. And therefore as the father is in me, so geueth he me life, and also power to geue life vnto other: euen like wyse to him that eateth me (and is so annexed to me, by reason of that misticall eatyng, and drinkyng, that he is made one with me) doe I geue lyfe, not to endure for a shorte tyme, but eternall life. What thyng soeuer is of earthly nature, the same dooeth continue but for a time, and is of small efficacie. Manna which styled downe from heauen for you, then beyng vnder Moses tuition and conductyng, because it was foode pertaynyng to the bodye, it coulde not geue eternall lyfe to your elders: for whereas all men did eat therof, they neuertheles dyed, neyther did any one of so great a number remain vndead: yea more part of them did also in soule, because they prouoked god many wayes, to wrath. But certes this bread, that vndoubtedly came downe from heauen, hath a celestiall vertue in it
This is the bread which came down from heauen, &c. and geueth eternall lyfe to the eater therof. The Lorde Jesus did instruct the ignorant and grosse multitude with such wordes: very desirous to stirre them vp from the loue of vysible and corporal thynges, to the loue and desire of heauenly and eternall thynges. And he spake these woordes in the Synagoge amongest a great assembly of people exercising the office of a teacher. Howbeit the grosse people was so farre of from the capacitye of these heauenlye mysteries, that a great sorte of his disciples also beyng offended herewith, wer about to fall from theyr maister, murmuryng amongest themselues and with perying this saiyng: This is an harde cruell saiyng (saye they) concernyng the eatyng of a lyuyng mannes flesshe, and drinkyng his bloude: whose eares can abyde to heare such doctryne.

The texte. Jesus knewe in himselfe that his disciples murmured at it, & he said vnto them: doeth this offend you? What & if ye shal se the sonne of man ascend vp thither where as he was before? It is ꝑ spirite that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. The wordes that I speake vnto you are the spirite & life. But there are some of you ꝑ beleue not. For Jesus knewe frō the beginning which they were ꝑ beleued not, & who should betraie him. And he said: Therefore said I vnto you, that no man can come vnto me, except it were geuē vnto him of my father

Jesus, vnderstandyng what they murmured at secretly among themselues, he bozed to remedie the thing that they were offẽded with, geuing knowledge befozehand vnto them that they shoulde see greater thinges with their iyes then that they heard hym at this tyme speake of hymselfe. And he shewed them that the wozdes whiche he had spoken as touchyng the eatyng of his flesche, and to drinke his blood, was no inconueniẽt thing, noz to be abhozred, but a right pleasaunt, gracious and fruitfull saying: in case it were taken and vnderstande not after their course and grosse intelligence, but after a spirituall sence. Nowe therfoze being turned towardes his disciples, whom it had behoued to haue further consydered, and to haue bern wyser then the base sozte of people, by reason of the acquaintance and familiaritie whiche they had with Iesus, and also foz the myracles which they had seen hym worke: Iesus (I say) loking vpon his disciples, rebuked theyz dulnes in this wyse, saying: Doeth it offend your eares to heare me saye that I am the breade which came out of heauen, to geue lyfe to the worlde: whether is it a greater difficultie (after the grosse vnderstandyng of mannes wit) to haue descended from heauen, oz to ascend vp into heauen: Wo what then, yf hereafter ye do see the sonne of man, whom ye nowe see to haue the natural body of a man, ascende into heauen, where he was before he came downe thence, and before he had this mozTal bodye: This is doen and graunted by reason of your senses: not that ye shoulde bee alwaye carnall and vnderstand all thinges flechly, but that ye shoulde leaue the flesche, and go foz-warde to the spirite. The spirite descended from heauen, and was incarnate: the flesche beeyng now made spirituall, shalbe carryed awaye vp into heauen, leste ye should all waye loue the flesche, and be carnall, but yet beeing first instructed by the flesch, ye ought to profit and go fozward towardes heauenly thinges. Foz the flesch alone is of himselfe, profiteth nothing, it is the spirite that geueth life.

Foz what is bodily substance of men, if the spirit lacke: euen so my wozd car-nally vnderstand, shall not geue life vnles ye take it as an heauenly thing, and vnderstãd it spiritually. By my flesche and blood, I meane my doctrine, and so I tearme it, whiche doctrine yf ye do by true faith receiue it, desyrously, and effectuously, and than conueigh it into the bowels of your minde, and retaine it there, it will quicken and make your mindes liuely, and cause you and me to be al one: so that ye shal thzough my spirite, liue euerlastingly: like as the mem-bres of one bodye lyueth by one common spirite, so long as they do adhere and cleaue fast to gether. And I shall leaue vnto you my flesche and blood as a hid secret mystery, and mistical token of this copulacion and felowship: which selfe thing although ye do receiue it yet will it not profit you vnles ye receyue it spiritually. Therfoze do not repugne and refuse my saying (though being still carnal ye do not rightly vnderstande it, noz take it as it ought to be taken) but rather labour foz the true vnderstanding therof. Foz the wozdes which I haue spoken vnto you, are not carnall (as you interpretate them) but be spirite, and lyfe: and whye. Verely because they beeing spiritually vnderstand, do conferre and geue lyfe to the soule. He that receiueth these wozdes rightly and truely, eateth my flesche, and drinketh my blood: for being coupled to me, gayneth thereby euerlasting lyfe. But he that willingly refuseth them continueth in death, thzough the synnes of his former lyfe, and doubleth his owne damnacion of eternall death, by reason of infidelitie. And all they refuse this bread when it is offered them, which beleue not my wozdes. And I knowe that these thinges are spoken all in vaine to sum folkes: being right wel assured that there be sum

What and yf ye shall see the sone of man ge.

among you which dooeth not credite my woordes, and therefore reiectyng life whyche it is offered them, they be cause of their owne vtter destruccion.

And for that cause our Lorde Jesus spake these thynges, who was ignorant in nothyng, yet he knewe well ynough or euer he spake these woordes, whiche of his disciples woulde geue faith vnto hym. And moreouer he couldne tell this also: that euen amonge ſt the twelue Apostles, (whom he so surnamed for honour sake) and whome hee dyd also choose specially to bee aboute hym: selfe, as most sure frendes: He knewe (I say) that there should be one of theim whiche woulde betraye hym to the Jewes, that shoulde put hym to death. Therefore, to note them, whiche thoughe they dyd heare all one woordes and saying with the reste, and though also one of the twelue should eate of the same bread and drinke of the same cup, which his felowes shoulde eate and drinke of, yet shoulde not they obtaine lyfe thereby, because they tooke and receiued that heauenlye bread not spirituallye, but carnally, Jesus added moze, and sayde: for this cause I tolde you a litle before, that no man couldc cum vnto me, excepte it were geuen him so to do from heauen of my father. To haue heard this my bopce, is nothyng: to haue seen and felte this body, is nothyng, except the father of heauen haue geuen withall, the eyes of fayth: with the whiche I am loked vpon to the beholders health, and vnles he shall geue therwith heauenly eares of the myndc, with the whiche I am heard fruitefully, and to the hearers commoditie.

The texte. From that tyme many of his disciples went backe and forsoothe hym, and walked no moze with hym. Then sayed Jesus to the twelue: wyll ye also go awaye? Then Symon Peter answered hym: Lorde to whom shall we goe? thou hast the woordes of eternall lyfe, and we beleue and are sure that thou arte Christe the sonne of the liuing God. Jesus answered them: Haue not I chosen you twelue and one of you is a deuill: He spake of Judas Scariotb the sonne of Simon; for he it was that should betraye hym, beyng one of the twelue.

These woordes of Jesus beyng full of the doctrine of saluacion, dyd not defende doune into theyr myndes, whose mindes were occupied with earthly desyres and couetousnesse: who also vnderstood no heauenly thinges, besides the grosse and carnall religion (as they vsed it) of Moses lawe. Therefore after that Jesus had this communicacion among them, the moze parte not onely of the common people, but also of his owne disciples, fell awaye from theyr maister, and thereby are made worse, whereby they myght haue ben muche better, in case they had taken all thinges well, and receiued hym accordynglye, and they so muche forsooke hym, that they withdrewe themselues from his cumpany, and from eating and drinking with hym, as men that by that facte woulde condemne his doctrine. But Jesus to shewe euen now the maner and way how that preachers of the ghospel should behaue themselues: doeth neyther make to humble and vile suite to haue them tarie styll with hym lesteye shoulde seme to doo the thing that other are wounte to doo: that is, to shew himselfe to standeth in nede of their cumpany: Neyther doeth he speake to theim pzoche of theyr goyng awaye, leste therein he myght haue been thought to haue moze sought his owne pzayse and glozy, then theyr saluacion: and yet he doeth not bytterly put them away from hym, because they myght (perchaunce) afterwarde haue ben better aduised: but to declare that though their owne faute they were offended, and so without any occasion geuen the, went awaye: and yet his saying shoulde not altogether lacke fruite, although that sum made themselues themselfes through infidelitie unworthye any heauenly gifte. Jesus (I saye) vpon these skylles tourning him towardes the twelue Apostles, whom he had admitted and taken vnto hym, to be the specialll witnesses and byrders abrode, of all the thinges that he wroughte, did so gett out of theim the open confession of theyr belefe, that he neyther restraineth these with flatterye, as thoughe he had gonne about his owne businesse rather then theyrs, neither did he to much feare theym with threatening and chiding, lestе they shoulde seeme to folowe Jesus, rather compelled, then (with their owne consent) perswaded. For no man is to be compelled vnto the fayth of the ghospell. And Jesus had leaver men should openly forsake him, then to haue a disciple colourably and fayuedly: And therfore whiles other were departing from him, Jesus saieth to the twelue: And will ye also goe away from me? ye mayetarye styl and ye lust, vnlesse ye thinke it more your commoditie to departe. Verely I doe desyre that it might be euery mans lucke to haue this heauenly gyft by me: but it is neither to be geuen to theim that refuse it, for they dooe not deserue it, nor any manne can attaine to cum by it, excepte he be destrouse of it. And yet it is the gift of the father that any man doeth couet and earnestly desyre it. Here nowe doeth Simon Peter, a man alway of a plaine and ardent faith towardes Jesus (representyng in his person the whole churche) and in the name also of other, maketh answer therefully, and with great courage saying: O Lorde, God forbyd that we should forsake the, for considering that we be muche desyrous of eternal saluation, and also know right wel how bare and vnpleasaunt, how Vnto whom shall we go? Thou hast the wordes of eternal life, &c. colde and vnprofitable those thinges are, which the Pharisees teache, and seing also that we haue hearde John testifying of the, whither els and to what other man should we go from thee: for thou alone speakest the woordes which bring with them euerlasting lyfe. Thou that receyuest euery one (that will cum) shalt not driue vs from the, whom thou hast once admitted to thy seruice, neyther do we desyre to chaunge our Lorde and maister, for we thoulde change for the worse, what new maister soeuer we shall choose. For we not only trusting vpon thy woordes beleue thee, but also wee know by the very dedes that thou doest and haue certainly e foulde and tried out therby that thou arte verie Christe and the anointed sonne of God: of whom only e all men ought to hope for eternall health and saluacion. But Jesus did neither shew himselfe We may not a little muche to wounder at this stoute saying of Peter, wherby Peter did so highe thou arte Christe, &c. reporte of Christe, lest he should seme to take pleasure in mens praysyng of him, nor he did not vtterly refuse it, lest he shoulde so haue denied the truth: but forbyrding all men to persеuer in that faithfull confession, which Peter had made in all their names, he did sumwhat disclose that one of those fewe shoulde dreadfully one as shoulde not only go from hym, as other disciples had dom, but should also conuenaunt with his aduersaries, and betraye him euen to deathe. And his pleasure was to signifye that thing couertly, because he would not bewray Judas: lest any man shoulde thinke that Judas beyng with suche a rebuke prouoked, did worthely reuenge hymselfe vpon his maister, and Jesus minde was also to cause euery man with this saying to beware lestе through theyr owne faulte, they fal into so wicked a dede. And he sayeth: what is the cause ye do not all that already sum of my disciples are gone awaye from me? haue not I chosen you as moste excellent, out from amongst all other? And yet one of so small a numbre and so specially chosen is a very di-nell, and that accuse and betraie him whose bodie he hath eaten, & whose bloud he hath dronke carnally, but not spiritually: whom he hath heard also preache, and seen doe miracles. Therefore do not thinke from the thing that you haue begonne, as they haue doen, whom ye haue seen go awaye, but persiuer and ware alwaye better and better, vntill ye maye wurthelye cum to be suche, as can spiritually eate the foode of my heauenly doctrine, and beyng therby as it were conuerted into me, ye shall obtaine euerlasting lyfe.

The. vij. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ After these thinges, Jesus went about in Galile, for he would not goe about in Jewry because that the Jewes sought to kill hym. The Jewes feast of tabernacles was at hande. His brethren therfore sayed vnto hym: Get the hence, and goe into Jewry, that thy disciples also maye se thy workes that thou doest. For there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himselfe seketh to be knowen openly. If thou do suche thinges, shewe thy selfe to the worlde. For his brethren beleued not in him.

But after that our Lorde Jesus went about & was muche conuersaunt in Galile, forsomuch as by reason of his wordes whiche did implie certayne heauenly thynges, and thynges of greater importaunce than mans reason coulde reache, and also through the miracles that he wrought, he gat him selfe muche enuie amongst his own disciples, who had him in more contempte, because he was knowen vnto thē by reyng in house among them: and verely the baseness of the house and parentes that he came of, made their hatred more bitter and vengeable against hym. For he could not now tyne in Jewry with suretie of his lyfe, because ye Jewes had a good while sought wayes to kyll him, yet Jesus went not out of Jewrie for feat of death, or that he had not power to flyde awaye out of the middest of theyr wilie traines as ofte as he list: but the wing himselfe very man, he layed before his disciples as it were an image and portraiture of thinges that shoulde follow, to whom it should chaunce, that through the malicious infidelitie of the Jewes, he should be copelled to go from them to the Gentiles. But the Jewes hery feastful hye and solemne day, which is emong the Grekes called Scenopegia (in Englishe the feast of tabernacles) was at hande. And this feast had that name Scenopegiam, to call to remembraunce the olde Patriarches, and their wayes: whiche led theyr lyfe in pauilions and tentes, many times remouyng from place to place, euen so at that tyme declaring by a figure what maner of lyfe theirs ought to be, which professe the doctrine of the gospel. And because a great mayn companye of folkes came now against this holy tyme & hye feast out of all Syria, and other countreis whiche border therupon thicke and thyefold vnto Hierusalem, for the solemnitie of the temple, the holynes and religion wherof was had in reuerence euen among the heathen people, Jesus knyfolkes all ignoraunt and subiect as yet to worldly desyres and affections, hauing affeaunce in the title of theyr kinred, more boldly than was mete, exhorte hym, as if he had ben desyrous of fame and glory, but yet they toke hym to be timorouse, and of lesse audacitie than behoued hym, and for that cause they moue him that if he thought himselfe well inough ayded and durst truste therto, that he would not lurke and hide himselfe amongst the aliens of Galile, but woulde woozke and perfourme at Hierusalem, in the full syght and euenin the middes of the people that was resorted thither, those thinges whiche he had so hiely spoken of hymselfe. The great day and solemne feast (saye they) is at hande: leaue Galile therfore, whereas thou hast so long tyme kept thy selfe close, and go into Iurie the most flozishing part of the whole kingdom, & so bring thy-selfe to Hierusalem the chiefe citie, and head place of all the Iewish nacion, thou maiest there get many disciples if they all once looke vpon thy doynges. No man that would be extemed, doeth those thinges priuely & in corners, wher-by he maye get a name amongst men. If thou be cum from heauen in dede, and canst do so great thinges as thou sayest thou canst, do so that thou mayst be knowen to the woꝛld. But let no mã merualt at this carnal, presumptuouse, & very vngodly saying of the lozde Iesus kinsfolkes. For of trueth at that time, they that were his nye kinsmen (and therfore called his brethren) & knit to him by a straight familiaritie, did not beleue on him: of whõ, sum for all that, being afterward of the numbre of his Apostles, did most constantely setfurth Christes glozy in their preachinges.

There is no man that doth any thyng in secrete. &c.

For his brethren beleued not in hym.

¶ Then Iesus sayd vnto them: My tyme is not yet cum, but your tyme is alwaye readie. The woꝛlde cannot hate you, but me it hateth, because I testifie of it, that the woꝛkes therof be euill. Go ye vp vnto this feast, I will not go yet vnto this feast, for my tyme is not yet full cum. When he had sayd these woordes vnto them, he abode still in Galile. But as soone as his brethren were cum, then went he also vp vnto the feast, not openly but as it were priuely. Then sought hym the Iewes at the feaste, and sayd, where is he? And muche murmuring was there of hym among the people. For sum sayed: he is good: other sayed nay, but he deceiueth the people. Howbeit, no man spake openly of him, for feare of the Iewes.

The texte.

My time is not yet cum &c.

Iesus therfore according to his singular modestie & gentilnes, did blame the boldnesse of his familiar frendes easely, and with greate softnesse, signifying that carnal kinred hath no interesse in that he did concerning the saluacion of mankinde, but that all suche busnesse (because it is heauenly) is to be moderate by thauctozitie of the father of heauen: he declared also that he neyther feared death, which he was ready willingly to suffer for the saluacion of mankind, nor that he desired the glozie of this woꝛld, the hatred wherof he did prouoke towardes himselfe by speaking trueth, & thiges cõtrary to mens woꝛldly affections: and in consideracion hereof, Iesus sayed: My tyme is not yet cum. Whan that shall exhoꝛte me, then shall not nede your aduertisementes.

It dependeth of the father of heauens determinacion, & not of mans deuise how & whan it behoueth me to be knowen to the woꝛld. That came at the fathers pleasure and arbitrement, haue my tyme. But your tyme (whiche beyng led with woꝛldly affections, seketh for the glozye of this woꝛld, & would haue me according to the iudgement of the woꝛlde to glozy) is alway ready. Ye may safely go whither ye list, when as the woꝛld loueth you as men cõfozmable therunto. I do not seke glozye at the woꝛldes handes with this affection & loue that ye hunte about for it, for I seke my fathers glozy, and go about the saluacion of man. It is so vnlike & far of, that I should (by any kynde of flattery) get glozy and prayse in the woꝛld, that I do rather bring the hatred of the woꝛld vpõ me by dissentinge from the lustes and carnall pleasures therof, & by testifying openly þ the woꝛkes of it are euel, not withstanding that the woꝛld selfe putteth forged godlynesse and false felicitie in such woꝛkes as be but carnall and woꝛldly. The Iewes haue their feastfull dayes whiche now of late

The woꝛlde cannot hate you.

time God abhorreth. For they offre vnthankfull sacrifices and odiouse to God, seying in the meane tyme they haue their handes all bloudie, and in the self same daies which they would should be thought pure and holye, they go about the death of innocentes. There is one true feastfull daye which I must celebrate spiritually, where with the father is pleased and delited. That day is not yet cū, but when it shal cū I shal willingly go mete with it. You that are yet stil carnal and worldly wise, get you vp to this solēne feast. I entend not to go with you to this greate feast that is now nie at hand, for because my time is not yet fulfilled. I will not go vp to this feast. &c lye accomplished, &c with these woordes our loode Jesus sent awaye from hym his naturall kynsmen, being alwaye wont to set aside the regarde and affection towardes them, as often as the busynes of the gospel was to be gone in hand withall, whiche matter because he would it should be wholly ascribed to his fathers will & arbitrement, he would not suffre it to be polluted wt any worldly thing. Thus did he restraine & stint the autozitie of his mother at the mariage, and again he was euil apaied, and in maner thought scorne and disdayned that he should be called out by his mother & kynsfolkes from talking of the gospel, & after that he had made his abode awhile with his nye frendes at Capernaū, he left them and set in hande to preache: furthermoze hanging vpon the crosse he called his mother woman, as though he had knowen no mother in ỳ busynesse, yea and also beyng a child but of .xii. yeres old, he semed to disdayne that by their autozitie he should be called from his fathers affaires. Now therfoze they suppesyng that foz feare of the Jewes Jesus would be not cum to the hye and solemne feast, wēt thither alone. And they going vp to Hierusalem, Jesus taried still in Galile: so tempering al his doinges and with moderacion duelye best to wing thē, that sometime he preued himself to be very men, lest he should not haue semed to be man, and sum other time he shewed great likelihood of his godlye power, lest men should beleue that he was but man only. But after that his brethren were departed and gon towardes the feast, then did he himself go after: so that the matter is plain, he did not so muche refrain going to ỳ solemne meting foz feare of the Jewes, as he did to eschewe the coumpany of his kinsmen, whom being as yet carnall, he would not haue to be associate wt hym in the gospels cause, oz to haue anye medlyng therwith. But he came to Hierusalem, not to auaunt himself, but as it were by sleth and priuely, & as a man would say, to cause them the moze earnestlye to loke foz his cūmyng: and when his time were, to cum abzode and declare himselfe to the bzode worlde with moze fruite. Foz he knewe the Pharisies mindes, how that they had been a great while about in their conuenticles and secrete counsels to fynde sum occasion vpon the holy daye to attache and apprehende him. Now therfoze when he was of truethcum to Hierusalem, but as yet he went not abzode into the common resozte and assemblie of people as he was wont to doe, the Jewes marked him and layed spyal foz him whether he went to the keping of the holy day oz no, and foz asmuche as they desyred to se him, they enquired one of an other where he was. And euen nowe already many sundry tales went of him amonge the people, as if he had been absent, because all men had not one opinion nor were not lyke affected towardes Jesus. Foz of suretie manye of the homely soze of the people whiche had been present at his miracles worzhyng, & had heard him preache, who also had had experience of his gentlenes by being in his cumpany, said that Jesus was a good man, and one not mete to be euil

entreated and cruelly hādled. Of the cōtrarye side, the Priestes and Pharisees, whom the prayse and renoume which was of Jesus had vexed a great while, deuyed that he was a good man, who lyke a seditious felowe did allure the people to hym and turne thē from hauing the Priestes, Scribes, & Pharisees in reuerēce. Merely these sayinges were by secrete whisperinges sperpled abrode concernyng Jesus, whereas no man durst in ỳ meane while openly make any good reporte of hym: Howbeit there was many whiche had a good opinion of hym: For they feared the head men of the Jewes, of whome they knewe Jesus to be muche hated, because he semed with his woordes and dedes to diminisshe the yr auctozitie. Moreouer, as touchynge the keping of hym selfe out of the waye, he so did of very meknes and modestie, lest he should be thought wittingly and willingly to haue prouoked the malice of the Pharisees, who soughte for nothinge els but matter and occasion to put him to deathe. That he did go abrode, was doen for ỳ cause whō he knewe shoulde bee further ted to saluacion by his doctrine: whereas he was not ignozaunt ỳ the Pharisees & Scribes would growe moze heady and fierce through that he should saye and doe for the saluacion of the worlde. For the Lorde beynge moste desirous of mans saluacion, coueted that yf it might be possible, his doctrine should wozke saluacion in al men: but yet so muche was not to begeuen to the frowardnes of certaine, that the doctrine of the gospel was to be withdrawen and kept from the good simple people.

Howbeit no mā spake openly of hym. &c.

For feare of the Jewes.

Now when half the feast was done, Jesus went by into the temple, and taught. And the Jewes merueiled, saying: how knoweth he the scriptures, seing that he neuer learned? Jesus answered and said: my doctrine is not mine, but his that sente mē. If any man will be obedient to his will, he shall knowe of my doctrine, whether it be of god, or whether I speake of my self. He that speaketh of himselfe, seketh his owne prayse, but he that seketh his prayse that sent him, the same is true, and no vnrighteousnes is in hym.

The texte.

Therfore when as the highe an solemne feast was halfe doen, Jesus went openly in the sight of all men into the temple, and there taught the people not pharisaicall ordinances or ceremonies of the lawe, whiche should anon after cease, but the philosophy and wisdom of the gholpell. But when the Jewes could picke no quarell against his doctrine, yet they deuise and studie to bringe him out of credence & to diminisshe his auctozitie amōgst the people, murmuringe how that he, being not learned and vnlettred (for in dede he was neuer brought vp in pharisaicall doctrine, in the reading and profession whereof they swelled for pride) should go by those sayinges, whiche he alledged and brought out of holy scripture, with great wisdom, & to muche purpose in matter appertaining him as one that had a deuill to teache hym, or that he had cō by the knowledge of that learning (whiche he learned of no man) by sum other magical arte and deuilishe witchecraft. The Jewes therfore in consyderatiō hereof, sayed: how doeth this felowe, a Carpēter himself, & a Carpenters sonne, read & vnderstād sciences, when as he neuer learned the? Merely Jesus, to the wōders & reuiple of sobrietie and gentle behauiour, very courteously and with muche sclicite put away and kindled their so sinfull and wicked suspicion, declaring plainlye ỳ his doctrine came neyther of man nor deuill, but euen of God whom they also did worshippe: whose glozye and honoz they ought of duetie to fauour, yf they would be taken for true godly men, and as for himself, he told them plainly, that he did neyther chalenge to himself the doctrine which they wōndred at,

How knoweth he the scriptures?

not the honour and prayse which they did enuie: but that altogether came of the father of heauen, whose bountifulnesse he did. He told them furthermore that forasmuche as they had taken vpon them the perfite knowledge of the lawe which God gaue vnto the, and did disdainfullie lothe other as vnlearned and very idiotes, it were indifferentlye doen that in case they had the very true knowledge of scripture, they shoulde embrace and acknowledge the doctrine whiche proceded from the same, from whom the law came: vnlesse they would make men knowe, that enuie, hatred, desyre of their owne glory, loue of gain and lucre, and suche lyke inordinate and carnall desyres, whiche proceedeth of lewde minde, had blinded their iudgement. For God is not (sayeth he) contrary to himselfe, that now he would teache by his sonne a contrary thing to that he gaue in his lawe. Therfore Iesus knowyng all their secretes, made this answer to their secrete murmuring, saying: My doctrine which ye wōder of whome I shoulde haue it, for so muche as I haue learned no letter of any man, is not mine: (for in dede I do bring you no newe learning of mā that differeth from the will of God and the minde of the lawe whiche was geuen you of God) but it is my fathers doctrine which hath sent me into the worlde: that the worlde being seduced with the sundry and manifolde doctrines of men, and blinded with wicked affections and naughty desyres, might by me knowe my fathers will: & when it is knowen folowe it, and so by folowyng of it, obteine eternall lyfe. For of trueth his will is this, that they that beleue his sonne sayinges, by whom he teacheth you and speaketh vnto you, shoulde get therey by euerlasting health. And the cause why many do lesse minde and desyre that thing, is enuie, hatred, ambition, aduauntage, and other euill desyres and carnall lustes. But if any man would (setting aside all malice) with a true meaning and a plain simple herte, obey my fathers will, rather then his owne lewde and vngracious affections, he will soone recognyse my doctrine not to be of man, or any newe and straunge inuencion of the deuill, but to becum of God: nor that I do speake those thinges which I saye, of mannes reason and witte, but after my fathers minde whose ambassadour I am. Wherfore that be more studiouse of their owne glorye than of Goddes, do preferre newe doctrine of their owne inuencio before the doctrine of God, to be made more of in the worlde then to her publike preachers of Gods doctrine: and had leauer teache those thinges, which might get to themselues prayse & aduauntage, then that which should bring glory and honour to God, or saluacion to their neyghbour. But he that seeketh not his owne prayse, but his from whom he is sent, speaketh all thinges purely and vncorruptely, neyther is his doctrine in daunger of any errour, or faulty through the lustes of ambicion, of auarice, enuie or hatred.

If any man will be obedient vnto his will.

He that speaketh of himselfe seeketh his owne prayse

The texte.

Did not Moses geue you a lawe, and yet none of you kepeth the lawe? Why go ye about to kill me? The people answered and saied: Thou hast a deuil: who goeth about to kill thee? Iesus answered, and sayed vnto them: I haue done one worke, and ye all meruaill. Moses therfore gaue vnto you the circumcision, not because it is of Moses, but of the father. And yet ye on the Sabboth day circumcise a man. If a man on the Sabboth day receyue circumcision without breakyng of the lawe of Moses, bil thin ye me me, because I haue made a man cuerye whit whollie on the Sabboth day? Iudge not after the vtter appearaunce, but iudge with a righteous iudgement.

I teache no other thing then that which God had taught you by his lawe, if a man vnderstand the meaning of the lawe, not I do nothyng els but that the lawe prescribeth vnto me. The auctozitie of Moses is an halowed thyng, and had in reuerence with you that despise me. And did not he take you a lawe whiche he reuelued at Gods hande: ye take vpon you the right vnderstanding and keping of the lawe, wherreas none of you doeth truely obserue the lawe after the wil of God, who gaue you the lawe: yea rather vnder a coulour and pretence of the lawe, ye go about those thinges whiche he doeth moste detreste and punishe. Ye laye blasphemie vnto my charge because I doe more seke the glozy of God then mans prayse. Ye obiect against me the breakyng of the Sabboth daye, who haue saued a man on the Sabboth day, when as the holy religion of the Sabboth doeth not stay you from deuisyng and labouring to destroye an innocent, and not only an innocent, but suche one as hath deserued good at your handes. Is this to magnifie Moses whom ye pretende before me? Is this to honour and reuerence God, whom ye with feyned religion wurshipper Doeth not the law curse him that sheadeth innocentes bloud? Neither doeth it permitte any power or auctozitie of putting to death but vpon malefactours, not vpon them neyther, except they be lawfully conuicted and condemned. Why than do ye contrary to the lawe trauaill about my death, that being sent of God do preache his will and pleasure to you according to the intent of the law: that do seke his glozye and not mine owne: that do not effectuously seke a kingdome or riches to myself, but that do freely offre saluation to all men: that hurte no mã but do good to all men: This saying of Jesus did vexe and trouble the Pharisees mindes for two causes: first because they perceiued well that their craftie inuencions (though they were secretly doen) were not hid from his knowledge, whom they supposed mighte soone without difficultie haue deen made awaye, yf the thing that they went about could haue deen kepte fercete from him: Secondarily his wordes pinched their mindes, because he did appeale them of sinnefull transgression of the lawe, in the presence of the people, who would haue deen thought moste true obseruers of the lawe. They laying snares for the innocet bloud, feared not the knowledge of God, but they feared to haue their dedes knowen to the people. Therfore to face out the thyng by dissimulatiõ, they let fare as if they thought the multitude did not know their wickednes, & so fell to open rebukes and threates as is the maner of all wicked persons that are taken with the maner in a mischeuous dede that cãnot be excused. Thou hast (say they) the deuill, seyng thou makest the father of heauen deep God himselfe, to be auctour of thy doctrine, to auaunt thy selfe thereby. Who goeth about to kill thee? The people answered and said, a deuill.

God is true, and thou by the deuils instigacion art vntrue. Who goeth about to deuise thy death? The Lorde Jesus did not bydde with them again with any cherkyng answere to their so furiouse blasphemie, lest he should haue made them more woode by putting to of furie to them, that were alreadyrreuel and furiouse: but geuing vs an ensaumple of mildenesse, full gentelly he teacheth them the cause why he did the dede, for the whiche they quarelled with hym. And wherreas themselfes in very dede were breakers of the lawe in all thinges, yet did they accuse Jesus, as a transgressour of the lawe, because he had healed a man syeke of the Palsey on the Sabboth day.

I (saieth Jesus) did one certain dede on the Sabboth daye, which was neyther euil, sinfull nor yet vnhoneste: but wherwith I gaue health to a man that was miserably diseased, which you your selues could not but allowe & commend mend, in case it had not been doen on the Sabboth day. But they do rather breake the Sabboth, whiche goeth about that thyng on the Sabboth, whych is sinful and wicked, on what daye soeuer it bee doen. The religion of the Sabboth is not so great, but it ought to giue place to those thynges whiche are of more weight and greatter importaunce, and good and godly euery daye whensoeuer they be doen.

If Moses himselfe, whom ye highly esteme and attribute so much vnto, haue geuen you the same exaumple, and hath doen before me like wise as I haue doē: I also the very lawe do teache that worke maye be doen on the Sabboth day without breakyng the lawe of the Sabboth, eyther ye muste nedes absolue and cleare me: or els in case ye condemne me, ye must also condemne Moses with me, and the lawe it selfe to, because whatsoeuer he gaue vnto you, was a lawe. Moses gaue circumcision vnto you, not that circumcision began euen very than when Moses lawe began, for it was geuen of God to the Patriarches before the lawe was written: a for that cause circumcision is a greatter matter in religion then the Sabboth daye, because it went before the lawe, and is as it were, the head of the lawe. But the very same Moses whiche commaunded circumcision, commaunded the Sabboth daye. You do circumcise a man on the Sabboth daye, and ye thinke not that ye violate the Sabboth day therin: because of the dignitie of circucision, whereunto ye thinke that ỳ religion of the Sabboth ought of right to geue place: like as the Deacons and Priestes doe also in the temple these thynges whiche be pertaining to Goddes seruice, and yet in so doyng they take not themselues to be breakers of the Sabboth daye, for somuche as they esteme the thyng that they doe, to be of more holynesse then that it should be omitted because of the Sabboth daye.

Andre on the Sabboth day circumcise a man.

Considering therefore that ye doe circuncise a man on the Sabbothe daye, lest thoughe not beynge circumcised he should not be one of you, ne yther doe you wene that the Sabboth day is by that worke the worse kept, I mervaill why than do you like disdainfull men make suche clamour, that by my worke the Sabboth daye is vnkept and broken, who haue healed not one parte alone of mā, but haue preserued and saued the whole manne altogether on the Sabboth daye: Although circumcision were before the lawe, and is after a sorte the very beginning & chiefe parte of the lawe, yet it is not perpetuall. For men were acceptable and dearly beloued of God before there was any circumcisiō, and the time shalbe, when God shall mislyke and refuse the ouerthwarte circumcision of the flesche, beyng without the inward circumcision of the herte. But to geue healthy both of body and soule to a mans sily wretched neighbour, as it is a greater acte and a more holy dede than to circumcise a man, so is it always good: before the law, in the tyme of the law, and after the law, because it is of it owne selfe good.

Why than do ye, in a cause not vnlyke, yea in a much better matter as touchyng my behalfe, worthip and haue Moses in reuerence, and accuse me as giltye of a greater crime? For I do not now dispute whiche of vs twayne is greatter then the other. Take Moses still (as he is) for an excellent man, yet so that I am euen as you suppose me to be, a mean and an abiect person, yet if ye like well about you, and do consider the matter rightly, either ye ought to condemne vs bothe, or to absolue vs bothe. And ỳ very lawe, of truethy, teacheth vs this, that in geuyng iudgement, ye should loke vpon the matter, and not the the perlone: and he ſtandeth accurſed that thꝛough fauouring the riche, oppꝛeſſeth the pooze.

Therfoꝛe iudge not after thꝛ qualitie of the perſone, but lette youꝛ iudgemẽt be iuſte and rightful accoꝛding to the matter, if ye will truely obſeꝛue Goꝺs lawe. But after theſe thinges and many ſuche other were ſpoken by our Lord Jeſus, ſo gentelly that they had been able to haue pacified neuer ſo cruell a minde, & when his ſayinges alſo were ſo trewe that they could not be proued falſe and confuted of any man, were he neuer ſo ſhameleſſe, the Phariſeis (of truth) ceaſſed from ſpeakyng, but neuertheleſſe they perſiſt and continue in theyꝛ malice without any mitigacion of minde, becauſe he durſt in the preſence of a multitude, in ſuche wiſe laye from himſelfe the faulte of breakyng the Sabboth, that he burdened them with a muche greater crime.

Judge not after the vtter appearance.&c.

¶ Then ſayed ſum of them of Hieruſalem: Is not this he, whom they go about to kill? But lo: he ſpeaketh boldely, and they ſaye nothing to him. Doe the rewlers knowe in dede, that this is very Chriſte? Howbeit we knowe this man whence he is, but when Chriſte cummeth, no man knoweth whence he is. Then cryed Jeſus in the temple (as he taught) ſaying: Ye both knowe me, and whence I am ye knowe. And I am not cum of my ſelfe, but he that ſent me is true, whom ye knowe not. But I knowe him, and if I ſaye that I knowe hym not, I ſhall be a lyar lyke vnto you. But I knowe hym, for I am of hym, and he hath ſent me.

The Phariſeis pride was ſo great, that they would be thus farre priuileged, that an innocent being accuſed ſhould rather geue ouer his true cauſe, then that theyꝛ auctoꝛitie ſhoulde any thing quayle amongeſt the people: and rather that Goꝺs prayſe and glozye ſhoulde be nothyng at all ſpoken vpon, than that any parte of their honour ſhoulde decaye. And yet euen this kynde of men founde many among the people whiche had rather ſerue this lewde ambicion of theirs, then to obey Goꝺs will. For certain of Hieruſalem ſayed: Is not this he, whom the Scribes and Phariſeis drift is to put to death: and whom men thought did hyde himſelfe and durſte not cum to the hye feaſtfull day for feare of them? Lo, he ſpeketh openly in the temple, and vttereth his minde vnto them frankely and freely euen to theyꝛ face, yet do they geue hym no anſwer. What meaneth this their ſylence? Are our head rulers bꝛought in beleefe that this is Meſſias, and now confeſſe that thing with ſilence whiche they did before impugne and denie? How beit, it is not lyke to be true that the chefe rewlers ſhould thus thinke, for euen all we knowe whence this man came. His father and mother are knowen wellinough to be playne folkes and of a meane ſoꝛte, we knowe what countrey man he is, we knowe alſo his bꝛethꝛen and his other kinſfolkes. But whan Meſſias cummeth he ſhall ſo cum, that no man ſhall knowe from whence he cummeth. Jeſus perceyuing theyꝛ blindneſſe to be ſo great, that where as the prophecie had geuen knowledge before hande that Meſſias ſhoulde cum out of Bethleem, where Jeſus was bozne, and where all other ſignes of the prophecies agree with hym to all purpoſes, yet they beyng blynded with malice, denye that they knowe hym, foꝛ no cauſe els, but becauſe they knowe him, and therfoꝛe euen of purpoſe they make a lye, ſaying that Chriſt ſhoulde cum ſo, that no man ſhould know from whence he cummeth: and this they foꝛge, becauſe they would not be compelled to recognyſe him. Jeſus, I ſay, frõ whoſe knowleage, no not the ſecretes of men were hidde, to rebuke alſo this foolich ignozance of the multitude, whiche was coꝛrupt rupt with seing their head men so set and affected, whiche multitude was wilfully ignorant in that thing whiche they might haue knowen, but that they (le wde minde letted their iudgemente, doeth now with a more shrill and loude voice (to thintente he might be heard not onely of them that were nyer at hande, but of all the people whiche were within the temple, a place most conuenient to haue Gods glorye preached and set furth in) beginne to teache openly who he was, and from whom he was sent: and that no man could be ignorant who he was, but eyther suche as was wilfully would be without knowleage, or els he that of very malice, would not confesse the thing that he knewe: and thus doing, Iesus doeth admonishe vs therwith, to giue place often times to the malice of men, lest it be ying more kindled, thoulde do worse and more cruelly, and so prouoke a more soore iudgemēt of God against them: thus also, after that by all assayes he did all that could be doen for their amendment, he might iustly geue them ouer and leaue them as desperate persones, to their owne folly and disease, not þ the Glorie of God should be hid & conceled, ne yet the neyghbours health and saluacion neglected for their obstinate wickednesse. If therfore (sayeth Iesus) ye do not thinke me to be Messias, whome by the prophecies of your Prophetes ye looke for, bycause ye knowe from whence I came, euen that is the very thing which might teache you that I am he in dede, who haue cum after such sorte, & was borne in that selfe place, our wherof the Prophetes hath tolde before hand þ Messias should cum. ye haue heard Iohns record of me, ye se my miracles, ye heare me beare witnes to the trueth, studying about none other thing, but Gods glorye & your saluacio. And therfore ye muste nedes knowe me, except ye had leaue r wylfully be ignorant in the thing ye knowe. And how can ye say þ Messias should so cum that no man can knowe from whence he cummeth, when as the Prophetes pointe and assigne both his stocke and his countrey. These thinges being knowen vnto you, might induce and further you to the vnderstanding of the prophecie:

And I am not cum of myselfe but he that sent me is true.

howbeit it is a thing of more force and better it were to knowe from whence I came, than what stocke I am borne of. And in case ye wolde consider me with pure and sincere eyes, ye could not of trueth be ignorant therin. Neyther am I so of the worlde, nor do nowe cum out of the worlde, as ye do slaunderously reporte of me, but I cum from him that sente me into þ worlde, to the intent it might conuert and be saued. For I am sent from him whom ye knowe not, and for this cause he sent me, that ye also shoulde learne to knowe him by me, as muche as he may of man be knowen. Albeit ye can by no meane yet knowe him except ye applye your selfes throughly godlines, to deserue that he would geue you knowlage of him. For they knowe him not, þ doeth not obey his will: And it is not sufficient to knowe God in wordes, if ye denye him in your dedes. If ye will haue true knowelage of the father, ye must learne it of his sonne. I onely haue truely known him, because I proceded from him, and was with him before I came into the worlde, and I was sent into the worlde from him to teache you to knowe him: that thoughe your beliefe ye might be saued. For I came not of mine owne head as other doe, seking their owne praise rather then Goddes honour, teaching their owne commentes and fantasies and not the doctrine of God. And he that sent me is true: and for because I haue it of him whatsoeuer I speake, therfore my sayinges be also true.

thoulde conuey himselfe to. For he went euen to death. Whereunto as yet they might not folowe him. He returned again to heauen, & thither was no mortall bodye able to pursue after him. Well, Iesus spake vnto them in this manier: I am yet a litle while with you & then goe I vnto him that sent me. Ye shall then seke me, and not fynde me, and where I shal goe to, ye cannot cum. The Lorde Iesus spake these thinges vnto them couertly, as he was wont to doo many mo thinges, that they should not vnderstande them before they were put in vre and finished. And the darkenes of speaking maketh a man diligent to seke the matter. And whē the thinges be exibite and dooen, the wordes are more surely beleued. Finally, the thing grue to this point, that it was well knowen to all men, that whatsoeuer our lorde suffered, he suffered it aduisedly and vpon deliberation, not of casualtie: he suffered it willingly, and out of necessitie. Though these wordes were spoken to all men in generall, yet it did most specially pricke the Pharisees seruauntes, whiche were sent to take Iesus, against whom they perceiued that they coulde nothyng do, except he were willyng. And whiles he toucheth secretly their inwarde conscience, he declareth that he knoweth what thyng soeuer is most secretely hid in meanes heartes. And therwithall he winneth those hertes vnto him through his gentilnes, whose wicked enterprises he did not disclose vnto the people.

Ye shall seke me and shall not fynde me.

¶ Then sayd the Iewes among themselues: whither will he goe that we shall not fynde him: will he goe amonge the Gentiles (whiche are scattered abrode) and teache the Gentiles: what maner of saying is this that he sayd, ye shall seke me, and shall not fynde me, and where I am thither can ye not cum.

Than sayd the Iewes among themselues whither will he goe.

Therfore when as the multitude did not vnderstande this his saying, they reasoned among themselues: what meaneth this that he sayeth, where I goe to, thither can ye not cum: will he priuely steale awaye and goe to sum farre countrey among the heathen people: will he suffre himselfe to forsake this holy lande and holy people to go dwell among wicked & prophane people, whither he thinketh we will neuer folowe him: or will he wander hither and thither like a vagabounde among the Gentiles dwellyng farre alwaye, that he cannot be found of vs.

The texte.

In the last day, that great day of the feast, Iesus stode and cryed, saying. If any man thirst, let him cum vnto me and drinke. He that beleueth on me (as sayeth the scripture) out of his belly shall flowe ryuers of water of lyfe. But this spake he of the spirite which they that beleue on him, should receiue, for the holy ghoste was not yet there, because Iesus was not yet glorified.

But when the last day of that feast was cum, whiche was moste solemnely kept with moste great resorte of people, & with great religion, (for when this day was past, euery mā was glad to repayre home againe) Iesus stode vp in the temple as though he also would leaue the countrey of Iurye, & doth halow that moste solemne day of that great feast with a notable sermō, and therwith purueyed vitailes of euangelicall faith of the ghospell, for them that should tourney. For he did not onely speake openly, but also cryed with a firme and a stayed voyce, therby declaryng that the matter was mete to be heard of all folke. The Pharisees had babished the simple people, with fained and colde religion, and had tangled their consciences with mannes ordinances. And surely the multitude had nothing els almost in admiration that Iesus sayd or did, did but his miracles. But for lomuche as they had not dronke of the spirite of the gospell, they toke the lesse spirituall profite at his handes. Therfore Jesus called and allured all menne openly from the barren and colde doctrine of the Phariseis, unto himselfe, promisyng them the spirite, whiche once being receiued, not only they (by his grace) themselues shall attaine to the true & euangelicall doctrine, but shall also by theyr preachyng issue fourth vpō other great aboundaunce and delitacie of wyll come: I am (sayth he) the fountaine of helthfull wyll come: wholo thirsteth, let him aske nothing of Moses, the Phariseis, the Scribes, or of the priestes. Let him cum to me, and drinke of this well. And whosoeuer beleueth my wordes, the same drinketh. Therfore whosoeuer beleueth on me, & desyrously drinketh vp my wordes, as the scripture biddeth hearing witnesse of me, he shal not weare dry thrō we infidelitie, but ý draught that he dronke of the spirite of God, shall bring foorth in his heart a well that shall runne euermore and plentifully, in suche wyse, that out of his heart shall flowe, not onely small litle streames, but also great & plēteous fluddes, wherwith the drynesse of the Gentiles shalbe watered, & therof shall spring muche fruite of the ghospell. By this parable & far of speakyng, Jesus did meane that fertile and plēteous spirite whiche afterward they should receiue that woulde beleue on him: whiche spirite after that the Apostles had receiued, foorthwith they began with great confidence to preache in diuers tounglues to the whole worlde ý philosophie of the gospel, & to distill into the soules of all that beleued on Christ, the same spirite that they receyued from heauen. For albeit that many at that time had sum smattering and were sum what entered into knowlage of the faith, for all that the verye effectuall and plentifull spirite was not yet cum to any of them, for because Jesus was not by his death and resurrection glorified, nor had not ascended vp to heauen to sitte on the fathers right hande, from whence he should sende that spirite to his Apostles. But the mistrie of the crosse was to be perfourmed before, whiche thing could not be doen and accomplished, except his glorious maiestie had been kept secret, and as it were dissembled for a season: and they also could not be made ableto receyue that diuine spirite, vnlesse they had first been framed and fashioned therunto by many miracles, sayinges and doinges. Therfore the Lorde Jesus doeth call and byd all folke to this well of the water of lyfe, yet he compelleth no man against his wyll, nor he excludeth no man, so that he cum athirst.

If any man thirst, let him cumme vnto me and drinke.

Many of the people therfore, when they heard this saying, sayed: of a truethis is a prophte: but other sayd, this is Christ: but sum sayd, shall Christe cum out of Galile? Sayeth not the scripture, that Christe shall cum of the sede of Dauid and out of the towne of Bethleem, where Dauid was? So there was discension amōg the people, because of him. And sum of them would haue taken hym, but no man layed handes on hym.

The texte.

When the Lorde Jesus had spoken this, and many mo lyke thynges, though they were not fullye vnderstande, yet they dyd wonder sundrie myndes and affections in the multitude of the people: for sum, vpon sight of so many miracles, and the great auctozitie of his wordes, sayed: truly this is a very prophete. Again, other that thought more highly of him, sayed: ye a this is that very Messias, whom the prophetes haue promised in their prophecies. On the contrary syde, other being corrupted with pharisaicall leuen, went about to reproue and confute these mens opinion by the very wordes of the prophetes, whiche tolde before that he shoulde ryse out of the tribe of Juda, and out of the towne of Bethleem. Christe was thought with moste part of men to be borne in Nazareth, because he was nursed there, and broughte vp with his parentes whiche dwelte there, and also because he begannne his preaching in Galile: and for the moste part had his abode there. But the people of Jerusalē and the Jewes that were of the tribes of Iurie, tolde the people of Galile as men nigh neighbours vnto the heathen, and were myxte together, but for halfe their countreymen, because they neyther excelled in knowledge of the lawe, nor euer had any prophete in whome they might worthily reioyce. They knewe verily that Messias was promysed to the tribe of Juda, not to men of Galile, and that he shoulde cum of the seede of Dauid, who had his princely palace at Jerusalem. And thus therfore they dyd chalenge vnto them, honour of Christ to cum, whom they themselfes being with malice corrupted nowe at his very cumming did persecute. They say therfore: it is not lyke to be true that this man should be Messias, if you do ponder and straitly examine the prophecies. When Christe shall cum shall he cum to vs out of Galile? doth not the prophecies manifestly saye that Messias shall come of the sede of Dauid, who was certainly of the tribe of Juda? And further more, it also expresseth the tounes name where he shoulde bee borne, that is to say, Bethleem, whiche is the citie of Dauid, that was geuen to Judas for his parte or tribe. Therefore forasmuche as the prophecie doeth plainlye shewe that he shoulde cum of a kynges stocke, of the moste holye tribe of all Juda, out of a princely toune, howe can it stande and accorde that this man shoulde be Messias, whose parentes be poore and of no estimation, and cummeth to vs out of a vile toune, of no name, whiche standeth in Galile a countrey of no renowme? After this sorte the people disputed of Jesus with diuers iudgementes, and there was dissencion among theim for his sake. Yet did not Jesus accumpany hymselfe with theim in this disputacion, because they did not dispute with suche simple pureneſſe of mynde, that they dyd deserue to bee taught: and it was not yet tyme to declare hymselfe howe great and excellent a man he was. For yf they had dyligently and truely desyred to knowe who he was, they themselues might haue learned of Jesus kinsfolkes that he was not borne at Nazareth as moze part of theim supposed, but in Bethleem, and that he came of Dauids familie. Nor there was not a fewe that knewe these thinges, but because Jesus dyd not bryng with hym, and shewe vnto them thinges agreable to their lustes, they were moze wyllyng to serue theyr owne affections, than to receiue and acknowledge hym. For and if their minde had been plain, simple and pure, they might haue learned the thing whereabout they contended, in case they woulde haue asked Jesus hymselfe the question. And there were many of the people so blynded with enuy and hatered, that they conspired among theymselfes to take our Lorde Jesus and laye handes on hym. But the malice of man had no power and strength against hym, who hath all thinges in his power.

And therefore the sergeauntes whom the Pharisees had sent as seruauntes

of their mad fury, to attache Jesus, returned againe, with their mindes cleane chaunged, vnto the hye priestes and Pharisees, whiche with fierce and cruell myndes, tarved lokyng for theyr seruautes to haue brought the apprehended person vnto them, to the intēte that so at last they might haue satisfyed and accomplisshed their hatered vpon hym.

But in the meane tyme the prouision of God, whiche farre passeth all worldly wennes crafte and subtiltie, prosoured such succoure, that whatsoeuer the malicious Phariseis wente about to procure, the same lighted vpon theyr owne heades and made well for the settyng forth of Christes glory. The vnlearned multitude, the rude ignorant people of Galilee, the Samaritanes, the Cananites, and the Heathen people beyng moued with Jesus sayinges & doinges, beleued on hym. Onely the Scribes, Phariseis, seniors, and priestes in whose gouernaunce the open confessiō and discussion of the whole law and religion was, wer not only neuer a deale moued to cum to better aduisement, and to be conuerted: but were made euery way worse and more woode. It was now cum to this point, that their hyered men the catche polles, a curryshe kynde of people, & readye to be hyered to do all vnhappinesse for money, should bothe honestly reporte of Jesus, and also reproue theyr vncurable blyndnesse. These seruauntes had seen no miracles wrought, they had but onelye hearde hym speake a fewe wordes, yet hauing their myndes cleane altered, and without any regarde to the commaundementes of the Phariseis, they returned agayne vnto them, and brought not Jesus with them. And when they that sent them, asked and quarelled with them, why they did not as they were commaunded, the menne did not laye for their excuse the feare of the multitude, nor feined any other excuse, but frankly and freely confessed that of truth they went purposely to haue taken Jesus, and to haue brought hym with them, but they were thrugh a few of his effectuouse & gracious wordes, so as it were charmed and newely hearted agayne, that they vtterlye repined in theyr hartes to do that thyng whiche they had purposed: we neuer (saye they) hearde manne speake as this man doeth. Who can laye violent handes vpon suche lyke menne? What recorde coulde haue been auouched in the synagoge, which should more haue burdened and pressed, and more openly disclosed the Phariseis obstinate malice? They did all they could to the vttermoste of theyr power to subuert the doctrine of Jesus, but all their endeuoure wente backe warde: for whiles they went about by all the waies they could, vtterly to destroy Christ and his doctrine, they stablishe and set forth both. But as yet still they dissemble the wood furie of their hartes, speakyng to their seruauntes more courteously and more quietly then according to the fury of their thoughtes: howe chaunsed this saye they? Are ye which belong to vs, and therfore not to be taken as of the rascall noumbre, also deceiued by him? Do yenot perceyue him to go about to deceiue of vs rulers of the people? Doeth any of our Phariseis beleue on him? Do yenot perceyue him to go about to deceiue men with faire promises, and to sell false ware for good? If he were true. Do ye not thynke that suche notable men as doth excell both in learning and auctoritie would approue his sayinges? Do ye see any rulers or magistrates, vnto whō the auctoritie of the religion belongeth, or any of the Phariseis, which hath the moste exacte knowledge of the law, persuaded by his wordes? doeth the exaumple of a fewe ratifes, a sorte of drudges, moue you? This sorte of people is ignorante, & knoweth not the lawe, and therfore are accursed. Well, when God thus disposed these thinges, to certifie and teache vs that nothyng doeth more obstinately resist true religion, then the malice of them whiche are cloked with the false pretence of religion, nor no man more deadly enemy to ꝑ Doctrine of the gospel, then he that wresteth holy scripture to his owne lewde affections: neyther are any more desperately wicked, then those, whiche with pretence of holynes, with perswasion of learnyng, with publike auctoritie, be armed against the trueth of the gospell. But in dede, what soeuer this worlde deuiseth with all his engyns against the heauenly trueth the succesle therof is, to the glorie of our lord Jesus Christ. Now than, marke me this well (O wise reader) that there is no where more scarcitie of them, that with theyr harres fauoureth the christen trueth, than among the ringleaders of religion, and head learned men.

The texte. Nicodemus sayeth vnto them (he that came to Jesus by night, and was one of them) doeth our lawe iudge any man before it heare hym, and knowe what he hath doen? They answered, and sayed vnto him: Art thou of Galile? Searche and looke, for out of Galile ariseth no prophete. And euery man went vnto his owne house.

In so great a counsail which was of Pharisies, Scribes, Seniours, and Priestes, there was no man saue onely Nicodemus which would stand in the defence of that innocente lorde, against suche wicked enterpzises. This Nicodemus was one of the headmen of the secte of Pharisies, a grosse mã of truth and lesse learned thē other, but he was of a lesse corzupt minde: and it was the same which for feare of the Jewes came to Jesus by night (as I tolde you before) to be better instructed by him throughe priuate and secrete communicatiō.

And by that one metyng, he profited so muche that he toke Jesus for a good man, though he did not fully vnderstande the mistery and spirituall meanynge of his woozde. When this man sawe his felowes with blond suckyng mynedes, fende to the vtter destruccion of Jesus, whome he so fauoured that neuertheles he feared the malice that was armed with auctozitie, he tooke Jesus part warely: And spake those thynges for him whiche might haue been spoke for any malefactour before he had been conuicted: we do (sayeth he) professe a law, whith doeth not condemne the euill doer, except he be first heard, and the matters duely discussed, whiche he layed to his charge that is accused. Lette this manne haue at leste this benefite of the lawe, whiche is common for all folke: and the lawe selfe geueth it euen to them that be misdoers. When they had no matter once to open theyr mouthe to speake against this so indifferent and manerly defence, whiche Nicodemus vsed in speakyng for Christ, they do not onely not call themselfes home, & turne to a better mynde, but yet be pacified and appeased, but without regarding the maimes dignitie and auctozitie they fall in hande to rebuke him, & to his repzoche, say thus vnto hym: art thou also nowe become a man of Galile? The common people and the vnlearned are to be holden excused, and maye be forgeuen: but is it not a great shame for thee that art an head man, & a doctor of the lawe, to be the disciple and scholler of this Galile man, whiche is a verye deceiuer of the people: to whom no man ꝑteyneth himselfe, but suche as be moste vile abiectes before manne, and cursed before God. Thou that professest the knowledge of the lawe, and art an open reader and discusser of the same, searche well the scriptures, & throughlye examine them, and if thou fynde any where throughout all the scriptures that either any prophete hath euer cum or euer shall cum out of Galile: beleue then this this felowe to be a prophete. This answere of the Phariseis was not onelye wicked, but also folishe. For Nicodemus had not affirmed him to be a prophete, but sayde: whosoever he be, he ought not after our common, or rather publike law, (that is to saye, a lawe which indifferently perteyneth to all men of every state) to be condemned, except his cause be knowen before. But where malice & hatred is in the heart, & occupieth the powers of the mynde, there is no iudgement. After these thynges were commoned to and fro from one to an other, the counsell brake vp and was dismist: And so every mā went home, their wyll to bertue (whilst of his life, beyng delayed and proroged, but not chaunged. For Jesus tyme was not as yet.

The. viii. Chapter.

Jesus wente into the mount Oliuete, and early in the morninge he came agayne into the temple, and the people came vnto hym, and he sate downe and taught them. The text.

And so now (when it drewe nere night) Jesus wēt vnto mount Oliuete, where Bethanie was, a pleasaunte lodgeyng for the lorde, considering that there was no quiete place in Jerusalem: wherein he taught vs that a secrete place, or some vacacio, is conuenient for preachers of the gholpell: and that the truethy hath no where lesse place, than in riche and welthy cities. How beit sometyme the euangelicall wyse preachers shall resorte thither, not to get riches or honoure, but to do good to other: though they do endaungier their liues thereby. Therfore the next daye folowynge, Jesus returned againe to Jerusalem early in the morninge, and now not stādyng (as he did the daye before) but sate downe, and taught in the temple, with a bolde countenaunce: openly shewyng hymselfe to be nothyng afearde of the Phariseis wicked conspiracies. And all the people came in a great assembly vnto him, partly being brought to haue him in admiracion throughe the miracles and wordes that he had doen and spoken before tyme: and partly to intrappe hym, and to get matter to harme him.

And the Scribes and Phariseis brought vnto hym a woman taken in aduoutrye, and when they had set her in the middes, they saye vnto hym. Master this woman was taken in aduoutrie euen as the deede was a doyng. Moses in the lawe commaunded vs that such shoulde be stoned. But what sayest thou? this they sayde to tempte hym, that they might accuse hym. The texte.

And for because they had marked in hym a certayn meruellous clemencye & gentle pacience towardes the poore miserable cōmon people, thereat they toke occasiō to accuse him: whereas thei ought ꝑ rather to haue loued hym. Moses law had ordeined a sore statute against aduoutrie, that is to saye, that in case any woman were taken vnlawfully vsyng her selfe with any other manne, she should be stoned at the peoples handes. And in the meane while the menparteining themselues, were extreme against the women: as though thei should be innocent before god, or auoide eternal paine, if they were not punished by the lawe, though otherwyse they committed greater faultes. The lawe onely punisheth open faultes: It doth not punishe pride, hautenes of mind, nor hatred, but god doth more abhorre these thinges, than ꝑ other, which ꝑ law punisheth.

Now therfore the Scribes and Phariseis, (that is to wete, men yeknowe wellinough, very seuere kepers of iustice, and of very zele and loue to ꝑ lawe fiercely set against malefactours, and open synners, when they themselues are inwardly in their hertes soused and washed with muche more enormious sinnes) brought a woman taken in aduoutrie vnto Jesus, at that time sitting in the temple. They set the woman openly in the middes of ꝑ people, to thintente

And the Scribes and Pharisees brought vnto hym a woman taken in aduoutrie, that if Christ would haue geuen sentence of condemnacion against her, many of the multitude shoulde haue borne him lesse fauoure, whose fauoure he had gotten, chiefly by reason of his lenitie and gentlenes, but and if he should pardon her and clearely dismisse her, as they thoughte he would haue doen, that then they might finde some faulte by him, wherof to accuse hym: whiche was not afrayd to forgeue an aduouterer cõtrary to Moses ordinaunce and lawe: and so then they hope to bring to passe, that (when all should beset on a roare) in steede of the woman, Christ himselfe should be ouerthrowen and euẽ ꝓfessed downe with stones. And verily these Pharisees themselues, beyng more wicked synners, accuse the synfull woman before Jesus, as a iudge on this wyse. This woman (saye they) was euen now taken in aduoutrie, euen as the deede was doing, and Moses made vs a law that suche shoulde be stoned. Therfore we byyng her vnto the people to be stoned, excepte thou disagree therunto: what thynkest thou?

The texte.

But Jesus stouped downe, and with his fynger, wrote on the grounde. So when they continued askyng him, he lifte himselfe vp and sayed vnto them: Let him that is amonge you without synne, caste the firste stone at her. And againe he stouped downe and wrote on the grounde. And assone as they heard this, they went out one by one, beginning at the eldest. And Jesus was left alone, and the woman standyng in the middest. When Jesus had lifte vp himselfe, and sawe no man but the woman, he sayed vnto her: woman where are thine accusars? hath no man condemned thee? She sayd, no man lorde: and Jesus sayd: neyther do I condemne thee. Goe and synne no more.

Verely Jesus, who knewe the secretes of their hearttes, and was ignorannt in no maner of thyng were it neuer so priuie, did so elude and dilappointe their malice, by his godly wysedome, that he deliuered the aduoutresse oute of the stonecasters handes, and yet did not clerely absolue her as fautlesse, leste he should seme to abrogate Moses lawe, whichr was necessarily geuen, to cause men refrayne from euil dedes. This, I say, did Jesus, who came not to breake and abrogate the lawe, but to fulfil it: and againe on the other syde, he did not condemne her, because he came not into the worlde to haue synners lost, but to saue them. For of trueth Jesus doeth euery where so moderate his wordes, as touchyng those ordinaunces whiche the worlde obserueth necessarily, euen to preserue a publike peace, and for a common quietnes, that he neither muche allowe th them, nor improueth them, but vpõ occasion therof, geueth monicion that generally all vngraciousnes is to be eschewed, and not onely these dedes whiche worldly prynces lawes do punishe.

For truely there be in goddes iudgementes ymes more horrible than theft, which yet the lawe doeth not punish, not withstanding they cannot escape punishment at goddes hande where he taketh on hand to reuenge the doer. Therfore Jesus doeth neither refuse the indgement, which was cõmitted vnto him, forasmuche as he is iudge ouer all, nor he doth not appoint and cõmit the woman, which was giltie, vnto the men that wer in readinesse to cast stones, neither doeth he cleare the woman of the matter, wyo in dede had deserued to be punished: but with silēce he succoureth hēr, that was pulled & hurried to pain, to preserue her vnto penaunce: and that she might with due repentaunce bee better aduised, and conuerte to healthe and saluation. He gaue no answere by worde of mouthe, but he spake the more by his dede. He knewe the selye giltie woman to bee a sinner, but he also knewe her accusers, whiche woulde haue been thought righteous, to be more sinfull then she was. He did not take away Moses lawe, but he shewed the mercifulnes of Christes newe law, whereof he was chaūcro: he informed them that dzewe the faultie womā to cruel pain, to loke well vpon thē selues, and accozding to gods lawe, to examine their owne conscience duely: a euery one to shewe himself suche a one towardes his neighbour that had offended, as he would haue god to iudge hym. This thyng our Lorde Jesus did for our instruccion, and he bowed downe himselfe, to signifie that a man, al stately nesse and pzide layd doune (wherwith any man flattered himself, and of an hault minde despised his neighbour,) should descende doune into himself, and loke wel vpon himself: and being bowed doune, Jesus wzote vpon the grounde, euen to geue vs warnyng that God shall iudge euerye man after the lawe of the gospel: The lawe written in tables, made them by an vntrue righteousnes pzoude and arrogant. The law written vpon the grounde, maketh euery man thzough a conscience and knowlage of his owne infirmitie, meke and mercifull vnto his neighbour.

Now whiles the Jewes pzeaced still vpon him, to knowe his iudgemente (although he had alzeady by his dede pzonounced it) he stoode vp, and to tolde them playnly his minde, that wyll not what he meant by his doing, and sayd: He that is among you without synne let him cast the first stone at her. With this saying he did not clearely alloyle the offender, but he pearced their consciences. And euery one of them knowynge himselfe giltie, feared leste Jesus, to whom they sawe were knowen euen moste hid and seret thynges, should haue published their vngracious actes. When he had thus pzicked their conscience, he stouped doune againe, and wzote vpon the grounde, as it wer by that dede paintyng before theyr yes, what he would haue them to do.

Let hi that is among you with-out synne cast þ first stone at her.

He noted their arrogancie, whiche toke vpon them to be holy, when as in dede they were more synfull then those whom the lawe extremely punished. For the, whom they had brought foozth to be stoned with the comūs handes of manye, had not kylled her husband: but thzough the frailtie of the flesche, had geuen the vse of her body to an other man, and so committed aduourtie. They beyng full of enuy, hatered, complaynyng, couetousnes, ambicion, and decette, laye in wayte to kyl the lozde of þ whole lawe, who alone was free in al thynges, and clerely pure from all synne. Therefore vpon this the lozdes answere, euery one knowing himself giltie, & being afrayed lest he shoulde be bewzaied and his faultes disclosed, went out of the temple one after another: the seniors, the Pharisies, the Scribes, the Pziestes, and other head men goyng before, and the rest folowing them. For they whiche among that lotte wer taken for the very pillers and mainteiners of religion and iustice, were euen sowsed in moznities, and in wardly moste great synners: When these folkes were goen out, of whom neuer one was cleare and without fault, Jesus remained alone, who onely was without fault. And now the synful womā found him, which neuer hadde doen synne, a mercifull iudge, wheras she should haue had them cruel murderers, who were themselues giltie of grieuous sinnes. Therfore the woman seing their cruelties, stoode alone as a wofull synner before Jesus that was alone: a woman ready to perishe, before a Sauiour: a sinfull creature before the fountaine of all perfection and holynes. She quaked for feare euen of a very conscience, but the clemencie of Jesus, whiche shewed it selfe cureinin his countenaunce, put her in good coumfort: and in the meane whyle our lorde (as it were a man occupied about an other thyng) wrote vpon the grounde, so that the Jewes (as it well appeared) wente awaye, not as men afeated with the lordes threatnynges, but condemned in their owne consciences.

He said vnto her: woman where are thyne accusers?

At lengthe Jesus stoode vppe, and when he sawe that all were goen and the woman all alone and fearefull, he speake curteously vnto her, saying: woman wher are thine accusers: hath any man condemned the? She answered no man sir. Then Jesus sayed, neither will I that came to saue all men, bee more vnmercifull then they, nor condemne her whom they haue not condemned.

The rigour of the lawe doeth punishe, to feare men: the fauourable benefite of the gospell seketh not the deathe of a synner, but rather his amendemente and lyfe. Therfore go thy waye and synne nomore hereafter. By this example our lorde Jesus taught those that taketh vpon them to be shepherdes ouer the people, and to be teachers of the gospell, howe greate sufferaunce and gentelnelle they ought to vse towardes them, whiche fall into synne by fraultie: for considering that he, in whom was no synne at all, shewed himselfe so merciful to wardes an open sinner, how great ought the bishops gentiles to be towardes offenders: when as they themselues haue many times more nede of Goddes mercy then they, against whose faultes they be very angry: or in case they be not so sinfull, certes their life is not without some spotte: at leaste waye truely they maye by the frailtie of man, fall into all kynde of synne.

Go & synne nomoze.

¶ Then spake Jesus againe vnto them, saying: I am the light of the worlde. He that followeth me, doth not walke in darkenesse, but shall haue the light of life. The phariseis therfore sayed vnto hym: thou bearest recorde of thy selfe, thy recorde is not true. Jesus answered and sayed vnto them: Though I bear recorde of my self, yet my recorde is true, for I knowe whence I came and whither I go. But ye can not tell whence I come and whither I go. Ye iudge after the flesshe. I iudge no man. And if I iudge, my iudgemente is true. For I am not alone but I go to the father that sent me. It is also written in your lawe, that the testimonie of two men is true. I am one that bearest witnesse of my selfe, and the father that sent me beareth witnesse of me. Then sayed they vnto him, where is thy father? Jesus answered, ye neyther knowe me nor yet my father: if ye had knowen me ye should haue knowen my father also. These wordes spake Jesus in the treasury as he taught in the temple, and no man layed handes on hym, for his houre was not yet come.

The texte.

Therfore now when they whiche complayned of the woman, were sente awaie and euery man brought to the knowledge of his owne synne, and the synner dismyst, Jesus vpon this occasion goeth in hande againe to make an ende of the sermon whiche he had begun. Synne is darkenes. They that bee true and of plaine meaninge, & studie not to be thoughte other maner of folke then they be, go to the light, and are delighted out of darkenes, lyke as the synfull woman wente vnto Jesus. And because she did not denye, but confessed the thynge that she had committed, she wente awaye iustified. Contrary wyse the heademen and the Phariseis, because they wolde be thoughte righteous, when as in very dede they were vngracious, and very wicked, dedde from the lyghte, leste theyr dyseases shoulde be knowen, and so they made whole. Therfore Jesus doeth exhorte all folke, ỹ whosoeuer is be wrapped in synne, should come to hym, but so that he come penitente: and shoulde rather folowe hym then them the Phariſeis, who being blynde, were guydes of the blynde. And leſte any man throughe knowledge of his ſinnes, ſhouldenot be bolde to come vnto hym, he taught vs in the aduoutreſſe a litle before, how we he reiected no man that deſireth to be healed. I am (ſayeth he) that to the whole, not to Paleſtine alone, which the ſunne in the firmamente is to all the worlde: as muche to ſaye, I am the light of the worlde. The ſunne taken awaye maketh all thinges darke withall. Ie beareth lighte before all bodyes: I am light to pure ſoules. Ie geueth life and likynge to all bodyes: I am lighte moze preſently to ſoules. He that walketh in the lighte of the ſunne, ſtumbleth not in the darke: whoſo lolo wethe me and beleueth on my doctrine, ſhall abide no longer in darkenes of errour and ſinne: but being purged frō ſinne and illumined with the doctrine of the goſpell, ſhall haue the true light which geueth lyke to the ſoule. Ie belongeth to the dead to be hid in darkenes, and the propertie of them that be aliue is to walke and be couerſant in the light. To haue knowledge of me, is the life of the ſoule. Contrary, ſynne, and to be ignozaunt of me, is eternall death. The Phariſeis enuye coulde not broke this magnificence whiche Chriſte preached of hymſelfe, ſpecially foraſmuche as they thoughte themſelues to be touched couertly, and what ſoeuer did redound vnto Ieſus commendacion and praiſe, the ſame to be a derogacion to theirs. And furthwith therfore they cried out againſte hym, in the preſence of the multitude, fearyng leſte the common people would forſake them and folow Chriſt: and to bring hym out of credence, they would make him a lyar, and charged hym therwith. Thou (they ſaye) beareſt recorde and ſpeakeſt ſtoutly of thy ſelfe, but no mans owne recorde is to be beleued. It is no true mans parte, but a prounde mans faſhion, to ſet forth his owne prayſe: wherfore this thyne owne teſtemonye is not true. To this vengeable checke (whiche yet in dede coulde not ſo muche hurte his glory, as it mighte hynder the ſaluacion of that great nombre of people) Ieſus made a ſharpe anſwere, ſaying: Trueth it is, amonges men the witneſſe of hym whiche bothe maye deceyue and be deceiued, is of ſmall importaunce, and weyeth litle.

I am not the light of the worlde, that is to ſaye, I am the light of the worlde. I am light to pure ſoules. I am lighte moze preſently to ſoules. of the ſoule. of thy ſelfe.

I alone am not witneſſe to my ſelfe, who can bring for me Iohns recorde, and the witneſſe whiche the prophetes bare of me, yea and though there were no mannes recorde of me, who ſtande in no nede of it. Forſit I alone ſhoulde beare witneſſe of my ſelfe, yet could not you (in caſe ye knewe plainly who I am and whence I came) reproue mine owne recorde. It is expedient that thoſe menne witneſſe be drawen in queſtion and doubted of, which (being nothing els but verye men, and according to mans iudgement make relacion of themſelues,) may be deceiued, & alſo lye if they liſt: but theſe thinges hath that way no place in me. For I ſpeake nothing of mine owne head, but the thyng that I ſay, cummeth of him from whom I was ſent: & I haue none other pretenſe therein, but to ſet furth his glory. He cannot lye, and his onely recorde is moze holy and vncorrupt then all mannes witneſſes. Whoſoeuer hath prouede frō him, and ſpeaketh all thinges according to his minde, within a while to returne again vnto the ſame perſon from whence he came, hath no nede of mans witneſſe: when as his owne proper actes are in redines to declare who he is. But you being blinded with enuye, of purpoſe will not knowe the thyng that ye might knowe: and becauſe ye iudge peruerſlye of me through the eſtimacion that ye haue of thoſe thinges which are in me, & other mortall men indifferētly,

Whence I am. But ye can not tell woman seing their crueltie, stoode alone as a wofull synner before Jesus that was alone: a woman ready to perishe, before a Sauiour: a sinfull creature before the fountaine of all perfection and holynes. The rigour of the lawe doeth punishe, to feare men: the fauourablenesse of the gospell seketh not the deathe of a synner, but rather his amendemente and lyfe. Therfore go thy waye and synne no more hereafter. The Pharisies therfore sayed vnto hym: thou beareste recorde of thy selfe, thy recorde is not true. Jesus answered and sayed vnto them: Though I beare recorde of my self, yet my recorde is true, for I knowe whence I cam and whether I go. But ye can not tell whence I come and whither I go. And because she did not denye, but confessed the thynge that she had committed, she wente awaye iustified. Contrary wyse the heademen and the Pharisies, because they wolde be thoughte righteous, when as in very dede they were vngracious, and very wicked, fledde from the lyghte, lest their vnpleasaunt shoulde be knowen, and so they made whole. Therfore Jesus doeth exhorte all folke, yͤ whosoeuer is be wrapped in synne, should come to hym, but so that he come penitente: and shoulde rather folowe hym

then

them the Phariseis, who being blynde, were gupdes of the blynde. And leste any man thzoughe knowledge of his sinnes, shouldenot be bolde to come vnto hym, he taught vs in the aduoutresse a litle before, how we he reiected no man that desireth to be healed. I am (saye the he) that to the whole, not to Palestine alone, which the sunne in the firmamente is to all the worlde: as muche to saye, I am the light of the worlde. The sunne taken awaye maketh all thinges darke withall. It bearethlighte before all bodyes: I am light to pure soules. It geueth life and lykynge to all bodyes: I am lighte moze pzeciously to soules. He that walketh in the lighte of the sunne, stumbleth not in the darke: whosoo folowethe me and beleueth on my doctrine, shall abideno longer in darkenes of errour and sinne: but beinge purged fro sinne and illumined with the doctrine of the gospell, shall haue the true light which geueth lyke to the soule. It belongeth to the dead to be hid in darkenes, and the propertie of them that be alyue is to walke and be couersant in the light. To haue knowledge of me, is the life of the soule. Contrary, synne, and to be ignozaunt of me, is eternall death. The Phariseis enuye coulde not broke this magnificence whiche Christe preached of hymselfe, specially fozasmuche as they thoughte themselues to be touched couertly, and whatsoeuer did redound vnto Jesus commendacion and praise, the same to be a derogracion to theirs. And furthwith therfore they cried out against hym, in the presence of the multitude, fearyng leste the common people would forsake them and folow Christ: and to bzyng hym out of credence, they would make him a lyar, and charged hym therwith. Thou (they saye) bearest recorde and speakest stoutly of thy selfe, but no mans owne recorde is to be beleued. It is no true mans parte, but a proude maus fashion, to set forth his owne prayse: wherfore this thyne owne testimonye is not true. To this vengeable checke (whiche yet in dede coulde not so muche hurte his glozy, as it mighte hynder the saluacion of that great nombze of people) Jesus made a sharpe answere, saying: Treuth it is, amonges men the witnesse of hym whiche bothe maye deceyue and be deceiued, is of small impoztaunce, and weyeth litle.

I am the light of the world. &c

Thou bearest recorde of thy selfe.

I alone am not witnesse to my selfe, who can bring foz me Johns recorde, and the witnesse whiche the prophetes bare of me, yea and though there were no mannes recorde of me, who standeth in no nede of it. Foz if I alone should beare witnesse of my selfe, yet could not you (in case ye knewe plainly who I am and whence I came) reproue mine owne recorde. It is expedient that those menues witnesse be drawen in question and doubted of, which (being nothing els but verye men, and according to mans iudgement make relacion of themselues,) may be deceiued, & also lye if they list: but these thinges hath that way no place in me. Foz I speake nothing of mine owne head, but the thyng that I say, cummeth of him from whom I was sent: & I haue none other pretese therein, but to set furth his glozy. He cannot lye, and his onely recorde is moze holy and incorrupt then all menues witnesses. Whosoeuer hath proceded fro him, and speaketh all thinges according to his minde, within a while to returne again vnto the same person from whence he came, hath no nede of mans witnesse: when as his owne proprie actes are in redines to declare who he is. But yon being blinded with enuye, of purpose will not knowe the thing that ye might knowe: and because ye iudge perueresye of me through the estimacion that ye haue of those thinges which are in me, & other mortall men indifferently,

But ye can not tell whence I am.

and cõmon to both, ye do not perceiue frõ whence I came, nor whither I shall go. For this is not seen except mennes myndes (wicked affections set aside) do iudge after the spirite, and in ready beleue of myndes, learne by the thynges whiche I do & speake (with cõferryng together the sayinges of the prophetes) to see that it is an heauenly thyng, and no worldly thyng. But you iudge after the flesshe: & why? because ye be corrupted with worldly affection, condemning wickedly to your owne vtter destructiõ, that thing which ought to imbrace to eternall saluacion. Your iudgement therfore is corrupte and false, because it cũmeth not of God, but out of worldly and humaine lustes. And in the meane tyme do I iudge no man. For the tyme of iudgement is not yet, but of saluacion. And yet if I should geue iudgement of you my iudgement should be true, because it doeth not swarue and dissent from Gods iudgement. For I should not geue sentence alone, but I and my father who sent me, ioyntelye together should pronounce semblably one thyng, forasmuche as we bothe thoughlye will all one. In worldly matters the iudgement of many weyeth more, and is of greater auctoritie then one mannes mynde alone: but yet Goddes iudgement alone, passeth the iudgement of all mankynde. If ye despise my sentence as but mans iudgement, truelye ye cannot contemne the iudgement of God, though he himselfe alone geue iudgement. And yf ye do not despise the iudgement of God, neither can ye refuse or refuse my iudgement, whiche is consenteyng to his in all thynges, except with a common contempte ye do vs bothe at once wrong: bothe him that sendeth, and me that am sent from hym. I speake or do nothyng but that whiche he hath commaunded me.

I iudge no man, and yet my iudgemente is true.

Semblably euen amongst menne the recorde of many is more substauncial then of a fewe: & after your lawe there is no recorde, vnlesse it be of two at least, allowed and admitted before a iudge. But yet in dede it is more to be regarded if a man beare recorde of another, then if he beare witnesse of himself. How beit it cannot be auoided but among men there be wrong iudgementes, and vntrue recordes: yea and although a thousand men should agree vpõ one thyng beyng but men, either for because through errour they knewe not the truth, or els because they being corrupte in their affections, do not pronounce & geue sentence accordyng to the true iudgement of reason, but after the leude affections of the heart: Notwithstandyng where euen one alone sayeth any thyng of hymselfe, incase he do not pronounce the thyng which he ought of himselfe, as of his owne heade, but by Gods commaundement, his iudgemente and recorde must nedes be true, because God can neither be deceiued nor corrupt.

I beare no witnesse of my selfe, but by the auctorite of my father, who doeth also himselfe beare witnesse of me: neither do I pronounce any other thyng concernyng myne owne person, then he hath testified who sent me into the worlde to be a witnesser of the trueth, whichonely he hath knowe. If ye do put away my recorde, ye must nedes therin also reiecte his. If ye refuse and repel my iudgement, ye must of force and necessitie contrarie him. We be twaine, but we two haue all but one witnesse and iudgemẽt. And there is one of these twaine who if he were alone, yet were his iudgement not to be replied against. And if ye aske when did the father testifie of me, forsoth he bare recorde of me, in your lawe: whose bokes ye should know, if ye would with pure heartes vnderstand: which is written: he did also testifie of me at Iordane, his recorde of me is to be seen in the very actes and dedes which he doeth by me: and in conclusion whe

tyme shall be, he shall glorifie me with more euident and clere witnesses. After these thinges wer spokē, the Iewes because they heard the father often named, from whom he was sent, and whose auctoritie he laied for his defēce, meruailed if he woulde speake so highly of Ioseph the carpenter, whose sōne he was them commōly thought to be. And in case he ment not of him, they be desirous to get out of him who should be that other father, frō whom he had come, & to whom he should go: Where is (sy thei) this thy father, of whom thou speakest suche wonderful thynges? But Iesus somewhat opening that as yet he was not knowen vnto them, touchyng his diuine nature and Godhead, whē as they supposed him to be but a very man and nought els: and yet for al that they shuld haue beleued him as a man vnlesse they? iudgment had ben corrupted with carnal affections, yea & his wordes did also implie that neither the father could truly be knowen, but by the sonne, nor the sōne fully knowen except the father wer knowen: for the sonne is not knowen with bodily eyes but by fayth, nor ? father can be shewed to mans sēses, but maye be brought into denout myndes spiritually. Well, Iesus (I say) maketh answere on this wyse: Ye neyther know me, nor yet my father: and so long as ye will not know me, ye can not know my father. Geue credence vnto me, & ye shall both know me, and my father. Ye saye that ye know me, because ye know my countrey, my dwelling place, my parētes, & brethren: Whē as through these wordes, which they vnderstode not, our lorde Iesus did sore prouoke the pharisēis myndes against him, teaching openly in the temple, yea & where most preace of people was, in a place of the Temple called the treasury (because that offringes and thinges geuen to the Temple were brought thither, and kept there, whiche thinges wholly wer turned to the priestes and Pharisēis pleasures, and gaine treasuely, though the thinges were geuen, and as ye would saye were consecrate to God.) Albeit I say that Christe did thus, as I haue said, yet no man layde handes on hym: not because they lacked any vngracious wyll, but because God did not suffre them to do it. For the time was not yet come, whē as Christe had appoynted himselfe to suffre, neither would he suffre vntyll he had fully taught that doctrine whiche the father had committed to his ministracion, for the saluacion of man.

¶ Then sayde Iesus agayne vnto them: I go my waye, and ye shall seke me, and shall dye in your synnes. Whither I go, thither can ye not cum. Then sayed the Iewes, will he slyll himselfe, because he sayeth, whither I go, thither can ye not come? And he sayed vnto them: ye are from beneth, I am from above. Ye are of this world, I am not of this worlde. Therfore sayd vnto you, that ye shal dye in your synnes. For if ye beleue not that I am he, ye shall dye in your synnes. The texte.

Therfore whiles they wer whight and kept silence, yet cumpassyng in minde full vngracious and murderous thoughtes, Iesus went forth with his talke priuely pricking their cōsciences, that so at leaste wai it might forthinke them, when as they knew that nothing was told vnto him: a thyng whiche was neuer before geuen to hym that was but a very man. No manner wickednesse, (sayeth he) can let the thyng that I do by my fathers commaundement. That thyng once finished, I go to hym that sent me, and then ye shall seke me all in vayne, and in myne absence ye shall dispyte me, whom beyng present, you enuy, and do displeasure vnto. Then ye shall know me by the ende and conclusion of the matter, who I am: ye shall wythe my presence, and not haue it. But you whiche doe now persecute the preacher, and setter foorthe of eternall trueth, shall dye in your synne yf ye do perisste and continue in your infidelitie. For he doeth perishe throughe his owne faulte that obstinately putteth awaye healthe when it is freely offered vnto hym: and he prouoketh and seketh his owne deathe, whoso doeth despyse the fountayne of lyfe. I go not thither, whereas youre wickednes compelleth me, but I do willyngly go thither where as ye cannot folow me. By this parable our lord Jesus did meane manye thynges: fiest of all, that of his owne good will he went to his death, furthermore ỳ by his death and resurrection he should be lyfted vp to heauen, whither as no man by any worldly wisedom could be brought. When with this saying ỳ Jewes wer made afeard, and vnderstode not what he ment, they durste not for al that aske the meanyng: but whispered and talked therof secretely among theselues saying: What is the matter that this man doethe sundrye tymes threaten vs with his goyng awaye thither, whither we cannot folowe hym: wyll he violently kyll hymselfe, and so withdrawe him from vs? Jesus, whiche knew the very thoughtes of them all, dyd so temper and moderate his answere vnto this very grosse muttrynge and sinfull murmurynge, that the thyng whiche he spake shoulde not be vnderstande, but after his death, resurrection, and ascension. For they supposyng that Jesus was nothyng els but a man, could coniecture none other thyng, but that he shoulde go to his death, and so be delyuered from the greke of his persecutours, when as his meanyng was that hymselfe (as touchynge his godhede) came from heauen, and that he should anon after ouercome deathe: and returne agayne thither from whence he came. Ye (sayethe he) beynge of this worlde are worldly wise, and speake after the carnall iudgement of the world. I am not of this worlde, and do speake hyer thynges then you can vnderstande, neyther shall ye euer vnderstande them excepte ye leaue your infidelitie, and shew your selues ready to be taught, and therefore I tolde you erwhile and now tell you once againe, that vnlesse ye put away your malice ye shall dye in your synnes. The onely waye to escape the darkenes of synnes, is to receiue the lyght. The onely waye to lyfe, is to knowe him whiche onely deliuereth from deathe by the faythe of the gospell. And in case ye do obstinately refuse to beleue that I am he, by whom the father willeth that all men should obtaine life and saluation, ye shall throwe your own faulte dye in your synnes.

Ye pe beleue not that I am he, ye shall dye in your sinnes

The texte. Then sayed they vnto hym: Who art thou? And Jesus sayeth vnto them: euen the verye same thyng that I speake vnto you. I haue many thynges to saye and to iudge of you. Yet and he that sent me is true, and I speake in the worlde those thinges, whiche I haue heard of hym. Howbeit they vnderstoode not that he spake of his father. Then sayed Jesus vnto them: When ye haue lift vp on hye the sonne of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I doe nothyng of my selfe, but as my father hath taughte me, euen so I speake those thynges, & he that sent me, is with me. The father hath not left me alone, for I do alwayes those thynges that please hym.

Neither yet did this saying of the lord Jesus settell downe into the mindes of the Pharisees, so verye muche had their inordinate loue of this world blynded their myndes, and therefore as thoughe they had neither seen nor heard of anye thing whereby they might know who he was, they now maliciously saie vnto Jesus: who art thou? but Jesus knowing before hand that their would picke some quarell against whatsoeuer answere he should make, which asked him ỳ question of a frowarde mynde, therwith also iudgeyng them to be more fitte to heare what themselues wer, then what he was, maketh them answeere on this this wise, saying: ye desyre to knowe who I am, wel then, do beleue, but surely ye shall not beleue except ye put away ye grosse and worldely affections, for els if I doe tell you who I am, I shall tell it to your harme. For ye will not only be neuer a deale better therby, but for asmuche as ye be manye wayes euyll, ye shall so muche the more be made worse. And this that I nowe speake vnto you, shall make your damnation the greater. I thyrst and couet the sal-uacion of men and not theyr vtter destruccion. Or els I could speake manye thynges of you, and for manye causes condemne you. But it is not so thought good to my father, who sente me into the worlde, not to cause the euyll to be worse, but to thintent that those whiche be euill should forthinke and amende themselues, and be saued. The father that sent me is he that sayth trueth, yf ye beleue hym ye shall be saued. And ye shall beleue hym, yf ye will beleue me: for truethe ye shall without daunger safelye beleue me that speake nothynge vnto you, but what as I haue heard of my father, with whō I was before I came into the worlde. He hath commaunded me to speake true thynges, & the trueth of suche thynges as do further me to saluacion, and not to damnacion. And yf any man do periche, he shall perisshe thorow his owne faulte, who doeth enuye his owne health that is offered him.

But the blyndnes of the Iewes was so grosse, that although he had so ofte made mencion of his father, from whom he was sent, and to whom he shoulde go, of whom he should haue recorde, and did heare the thynges which he did speake, as yet for all that it vnderstood not that he spake of the father of heauen, because they could beleue nothynge in hym aboue a manne. For these say-inges were then as seedes closed vp in the memorye of the hearers, to thintente that they shoulde then bring furth frute, when as all thinges shoulde be fully accomplished, whiche the Prophetes had written of Iesu. It was expediente that as yet he shoulde be thought a very man, vntill he had fully finished for saluacion of the worlde, that hye sacrifice whiche was to bee offered vpon the alter of the crosse. For it so pleased the father, that by death God shoulde bee glorified. Our lorde Iesus in the meane time meaning this, goeth furth in his communicacion, insinuating couertly that he shoulde afterwarde willingly be crucified by them, & sayeth thus: When ye shall lyfte vp on hye the sonne of man, euen very then ye shall vnderstande who I am: and after that ye shall thinke me vtterly made awaye, then in conclusion ye shall well knowe my power. For ye shall right well perceiue that the thing is wrought, not as men do thinges, but by my fathers power: after whose pleasure and iudgemente I do what thing soeuer I do practise herein earth, to the saluacion of man. Neither do I speake any thing but accordyng to his minde. And albeit I am sente into the worlde from hym, yet am not I forsaken of hym, he hath not lefte me, but he is alway present with me, and doeth assiste me, and by me, he doth worketh and speaketh vnto you. For betwene vs two is a moste hye consente: he is glorified by me, and I againe by hym: but he is the auctor and I the messenger.
And I do the office of an embassadour so faythfully, that I alwaye do those thinges whiche he hath commaunded and determined. Moses and Dauid, whom ye haue in great reuerence, spake and did manye thinges according to Gods will, but yet the same did many tymes offend hym with their doynges.
I neuer dissent from that whiche is my fathers pleasure.

that vnder
stoode not y
he spake of his father.

The texte. As he spake these wordes, many beleued on hym. Then sayed Jesus to those Iewes whiche beleued on hym: If ye continue in my worde, then are ye my true disciples, and ye shall knowe the trueth, and the trueth shal make you free. They answered hym: We be Abrahams seed, and were neuer bounde to any man: howe sayest thou than, ye shall be made free? Jesus answered them: Verely verely I saye vnto you, that whosoeuer committeth sinne, is the seruaunt of sinne. And the seruaunt abydeth not in the house for euer, but the sonne abideth euer. If the sonne therfore shall make you free, then are ye free in deede. I know that ye are Abrahams seede, but ye seke meanes to kil me, because my worde hath no place in you. I speake that whiche I haue seen with my father, and ye do that whiche ye haue seen with your father.

If ye continue in my worde, &c.

When as at that season none did fully vnderstande these sayinges, yet there was many among the people whiche thought them not vngodly. And diuerse conceyuyng good hope of the thynges whiche Jesus promysed them, beleued hym, but yet not perfitly, for they were still ignoraunte, but as they wer then able to vnderstande the doctrine of the gospell. There was in dede a certayne way prepared to fayth already: although they wer not yet so far forwarde as they should be brought afterwarde. The Lorde Jesus therfore doeth exhorte them to persheuer in the thynge wherin they were meterly welentred, vntill they might atteyne the perfyte knowledge of him. For faith of good men doeth euer beleue those thynges whiche it vnderstaderly not. The malice of the Pharisees waxed alwaye worse and worse. He sayeth vnto them: take you no exaumple at these which do wilfully perishe, it is a good beginnyng for you, some deale to beleue my sayinges, from which if other mens infidelitie do not withdraw you, and if ye will firmely abide in that ye are entred vnto, I which do professe heauenly trueth and no Pharisaicall doctrine, will take you for my very owne proper disciples. And you whiche hitherto haue embraced the shadowes of Moses lawe for truthes, shall in processe of tyme knowe all trueth. And the knowen trueth shall make you free.

And the trueth shall make you free.

But the Iewes not perceiuing that Christe mente of that libertie whiche the gospell teacheth, whiche libertie doth not chaunge any worldly aduauntement, as to deliuer the bodye from the interesse that the maister hath ouerit, but setteth thy mynde at libertie from sinne, from leude and worldlye desyres, from the tiranny of the deuil, from feare of death, from bondage of Pharisaicall ordinaunces, from the yoke of carnall obseruyng of the lawe: The Iewes I saye, not vnderstandynge this, maketh answere disdaynefully: for they were proude of the nobilitie of their carnal auncetors. We, say they, by succession come of Abraham the Patriarche, and are naturally free men borne, and not onely free but noble gentlemen also, neither did we euer serue any man as bonde men. What libertie therfore doest thou promise vs as though we were bonde seruauntes, nedefull of manumission? This answere declared the Iewes to be grosse, whiche put their affiaunce and glory in carnall thynges, neglectynge spirituall thinges whiche commende vs to God.

They tooke puremes to consiste in washyng of the bodye, of cuppes, and of vessels, though they had their soule polluted with sinfull vices. They despised other in comparison of themselues, because they were bodely circumcised, whe as they had an vncircumcised mynde. They thought themselues holy because they caried about with them the lawe written in bookes or scrolles rounde about their heade, when as they be holye to God, whiche haue the lawe written in their myndes, and expresse the same, not in scrolles, but in their dedes. So nowe they were proude in herte because after the flesshe they came of Abraham,

as thought it were a great matter to be borne of holyones, when before God they be no die and famouse, whiche, of whosoeuer they be borne, do expresse the conditions of holy men in their maners. Therefore when Iesus had reproued them for two causes, both because thei were ignorannt in the trueth, and also because they serued as bondemenne: they dissembled the spyte, and stomaked the lesse weyghty matter: for ignorannce of the trueth is a fault of the mynde, to be a seruaunte is no euyll thynge of the mynde, but a lacke of worldlye fortune. Now wherefore oure Lorde Iesus teacheth plainlye what seruitude he ment: Pou sayeth he, also ayne that I promise liberty, because in pour o ware conceyte ye be free, that is to saye, the naturall free children of Abraham: but there is an other kynde of seruitude macheth more vyle and myserable, from which no kynges of aunceters, be it neuer so greate, can clayme freedome and make a man free. Ye haue not a man to your lorde, from whose bondage ye are to be made free, but here of I do wellassure you, whosoeuer sinneth, maketh himself seruaunt to synne, and looseth his fredome: theis verily a naturall borne fremā that is subiect to no dishonestie, nor giltie of sinnefull vilanye. This is the freedome, wherof ye maye worthely reioyce before God. But whosoeuer is addicte to sinne hath the deuill his lorde, and is moued and drawen at his pleasure and arbitreemente: although he maye clayme kynne and can bryng his pedigree to moste holy aunceters.

Whoso euer committeth sinne. &c.

For an other mans holynes taketh not awaye the bondage of them that succede in blonde, but euery man is taken and estemed after his owne dedes: a seruaunt can not make his felowe seruaunt that is also sinfull as he is, partaker of his fredome: but he only maketh men free and setteth at libertie, whiche onely is boyde of all sinne. For albeit a seruaunte do for a tyme certain thinges in the house, yet because he is a seruaunt and no heyre, he hath no perpetuitie or interest there for euer, but is put out of the house when it pleaseth the maister: but because the sonne is heyre and Lorde of the house, he hath continuall right in the house, nor he hymselfe onely is free in dede without all seruitude, but he may also make other folke free. If ye therfore desire this freedome, there is no cause why ye should loke to haue it of Moses, or from the Patriarches, or your priestes, whose ministracion was for a while: neyther was any of these vtterely voide of all sinne, nor had autorite to abolishe or put away sinnes, ne yet did any of them know the trueth exactely and at full. But if one cleaue fast to the sonne (to whom is geuen the whole perpetual power of the house) the same, of what soeuer stocke he be borne, maye well hope to haue true fredome.

But if the sonne make you free. &c.

Therfore Abraham dyd not begette vs free, Moses did it not, the Priestes did not with their sacrifice make vs free. If the sonne shall make you free from errour and sinne, ye shall be truely and fully free.

You stande muche in your owne conceyte because ye be the sonnes of Abraham. I know that ye be borne of Abraham as touching the flesh, but this honour is but sinal, bruit, and comon to al Iewes. If ye will algates be thought to be Abrahams posteritie, and children of a moste holy father, nothing degenerate, in your dedes declare you to be his sonnes. For it is ꝑ propertie of a very true naturall childe, to resemble and expresse the fashion & maners of his parentes. Abraham did so muche beleue God, that where as there was promised him of God a populouse succession, and great in nūber, to come of his sonne Isaac, he doubted not at one commaundement of God to slea his sonne Isaac.

But

I speake þ which I haue see, &c.

But ye see now how farre ye be of, from the maners of your father, whiche do your endeuour to kill euen me for no cause els, but that you being blinded with desyres of the flesh and the worlde, do not vnderstande my communication and wordes whiche be spirituall. Abrahamnot doubtyng of the promyses, did in a thing against nature, beleue the aungel by whome god spake vnto him. To me whom ye se, and by whom god speaketh to you, promising greater thynges then in times paste he did to Abraham, ye do not onelye not geue credence, but also maliciously seke and deuise my death. Do not therefore arrogantly chalenge Abraham to be your father. Euery one is before God þ sonne of hym, whose actes and condicions he folowethe. For as the children seeth their parentes do at home, so will they do, and growe to be of lyke affection & maners. I proue both by wordes and dedes that I am his sonne from whom I was sente: for I speake that which I haue sene and heard of my father. You lykewyse do the thynges whiche you haue seen your father do.

The texte.

¶ They answeered and sayde vnto hym: Abraham is our father. Jesus sayeth vnto them: If ye were Abrahams children ye would do the dedes of Abraham, but now ye go about to kill me, a man that hath tolde you the trueth, which I haue harde of God: this did not Abraham. Ye do the dedes of your father. Then sayed they vnto hym, we were not borne of fornicacion, we haue one father, euen god. Jesus saied vnto them: If God were your father, truelye ye would loue me, for I proceded forth and came from God, neyther came I of my selfe, but he sent me. Why doe ye not knowe my speache? Euen because ye cannot abide the hearyng of my woorde. Ye are of your father the deuill, and the lustes of your father wyl ye fulfill. He was a murtherer from the begynning, and abode not in the truethe, because there is no trueth in him: when he speaketh a lye, he speaketh of his owne, for he is a lyar, and the father of the same thing. And because I tell you the trueth, therefore ye beleue me not.

For somuche as the Jewes toke this saying of our Lorde Jesus in euill parte, they frame their answere in suche sorte, that they go about therein to picke out of Jesus wordes some thyng spoken to Abrahās rebuke: which thing if it had been so in dede, they would haue prouoked the people to haue stoned Christe: for where as he had openly testified that their dedes were euill, and added further that they did those thinges whiche they had sene their father do (neyther did they knowledge any other father then Abraham) they toke it as if by this saying of Jesus, Abraham the Patriarche had been reproued, who had hymselfe been suche one as were the children that came of him. But Jesus spake nothing sore at all against Abraham, but reasoned contrary to them saying, prouing that therfore they were not the children of Abraham, because they were moste farre from his wayes, & moste vnlike him. If ye will, sayeth he, be taken for the true children of Abraham do as your father did: beleue Goddes worde. For he ded trueth through notable affiaunce in God, deserued the commendacio of righteousnes, and was called righteouse. Now although ye haue neuer doen boastyng Abraham to be your father, neuertheles your studie and dyfte is to kill me, a mā that albeit I were none other but very man, yet were I innocent and one that harmes man, and you therefore wouldst slea me, because I tell you the trueth, whiche I do not fayne of myne owne heade, but that trueth whiche I haue heard of God: insomuche that whosoeuer distrusteth me, the same must nedes distruste God. But Abraham will not acknowledge you for his sonnes whiche goe about a wicked matter, and muche disagreable to his maners. And if it be so that euery one is that mans sonne, whose whose dedes he folowyth, and that your dedes withall are farre vnlike to Abrahams, you muste nedes haue some other father, whosoeuer he be, whose naturall dispolicion you do resemble, and thewe your selfe lyke in condicions. The Jewes hereyng of trueth more prouoked by these sayinges, nowe (as it were) gealling to what ende the processe of Jesus wordes tended, and whom he noted to be their father, aunswere: whom (is apointest thou for our father, that takest awaye our father Abraham?

We be not base gotten, we maye reioyce in that which is common to all the Jewes, who are not onely the succession of Abraham, but also the sonnes of God, whiche calleth Israell his first begotten childe. And we are Israelites. And if thou take away our father Abraham from vs, if thou geue vs another father then God, the common father of all our nacion, thou art not only iniurious and dispiteful to vs, but to the whole nacion of the Jewes. Wherras this was a wicked and shameles aunswere (for what coulde be more shameful the to boaste themselfes to be the children of God, who knewe themselues guilty in such great faultes, who also layed in wayt to bring y sonne of God to death) Jesus replied sharpely to this answer and saied: If God were your father, that is to witte, if ye were very true and naturall Israelites, ye would I am sure loue me, as a brother begotten of the common father of all, and as one that doeth expresselye folowe his fathers behaueour and maners, euen as it becommeth a true naturall childe. For I neyther shewe foorth any other thyng then God the father, nor I do none other mens bulynes then my fathers, from whom I proceaded and came into this world. For I neither speake nor do any thing of my selfe. I do not apoint my selfe to this embaſſage but he sente me, whom ye claime to be comon father to you all. If God were your fathers

And yf ye saye trueth, why do ye not acknowledge his sprache, that is the same fathers sonne, and his very true sonne, who was also with his father before he came into the world, neither speaketh he any thyng but at his fathers appoyntement? Why can yelo very euill beare my wordes whē as by me, god speaketh vnto you? If ye beleue God to be true, beneficiall, & an healthy gener, frendely to the that be godly, and enemy to the wicked, when as yese nothing in my sayinges or doinges vnlyke vnto these thinges, why do you not acknowledge the maners and verye nature of youre father? But if ye couet to heare your fathers name, whome in witte and dedes ye do reseble: ye be neyther begotten of Abraham, nor of God, but euen of the deuill: ye be his very naturall children, whose witte and disposicion ye breathe out and thewe likelyhoods of, and whose will ye obey. For ye haue bothe hated the trueth, and go aboute to kyll an innocent. This is an exaumple of the deuill your father. For because he hath been the chefe auctor of bothe lyes and murder, who by his lying entised vnto death the firste parentes of mankinde, being with none other thyng prouoked then through the enuie of other folkes felicitie. And the same sinfull disease doth pricke you forwarde to slea one that is innocent, and a beneficiall person. The deuill enuyed man, that was of a blessed creation, re enuie man to be reclaced vnto the felicitie from whence he fell. He fell from the truethe by hys pryde. And his fall was suche that there is no hope of his amendemente, but persistyng in euill, he heapeth sinne vpon sinne. Striuing against Gods veritie by you at this presente, and doyng the same thyng that in the beginnyng of the worlde he firste practised, when he drewe the first auctors of mankynde vnto

death. Who so therfore hateth trueth and loueth lyes, he declareth sufficiently who is his father. And whosoeuer pronounceth a lye, he speaketh of hym that is the fountaine of all lyes. Whatsoeuer that auctor speaketh is a lye, and he speaketh of hymselfe for he is not onely a lyar, but the father and prince of lyes. As of the contrary syde, God is the fountayne of all trueth, and whosoeuer speaketh the trueth to Gods glory, he speaketh not of hymselfe but of God.

But if you be begotten rather of God the auctour of trueth, then of the deuill the father of lyes, wherfore then (considerynge that I doue speake vnto you he aurely trueth,) doe not you beleyng the chyldren of Abraham beleue God? why do not ye the chyldren of God, acknowledge and loue Goddes trueth?

The texte. Which of you rebuketh me of sinne? If I saye the trueth, why do not ye beleue me? He that is of God heareth gods wordes. Ye therfore heare them not, because ye are not of God. Then aunswered the Iewes, and sayed vnto hym: Saye we not well that thou art a Samaritane, and hast the deuill? Iesus aunswered: I haue not the deuill, but I honoure my father, and ye haue dishonored me: I seke not mine awne prayse, there is one that seketh and iudgeth.

If ye fynde any lye in my wordes or any faulte in my preterdyng, geue not credite to my wordes. But which of ye all can burden me with any one faulte? And what maner of men ye be, ye your selfes are prinie: but if whatsoeuer be right and true, the same is of God, and neither can ye proue in me any thyng that varieth from right and trueth, why then in not beleuyng me do ye distruste god, specially considerynge that ye boaste your selues to be the chyldren of God. But and if ye did extolle and aduaunce your selues truely, ye would acknowledge the wordes of God, but in case ye do it vntruely, ye declare your selues to haue a lying father.

Do that is of God, heareth Gods wordes. Whosoeuer is begotten of god, the same doeth (lyke a true naturall chylde) geue eare to his fathers wordes. And that thing well proueth you not to be begotten of God the father, because ye cannot abyde to heare the trueth that summeth from him. The Iewes beeyng made through these wordes more wood, fall to geuyng cursed wordes in theyr aunswere, whereunto the malice of men beyng with reason concluded is woont to haue refuge, and saieth: Do not we saye right of thee, that where thou wilte be taken for a Iewe, and boastest god to be thy father, thou art a Samaritane, and haste the deuill whiche selfe thyng, thou doest now declare in dede, and approuest our iudgement of thee. But what aunswer made moste gentle Iesus vnto this peruise mad reproche? As touching the reproche in namyng hym a Samaritane although it were commonly taken for a greate rebuke and slaunder, yet because it was naught els but a fumishe cheeke spoken in a furye, he made no aunswere at all therunto, as though they had but called hym a mushrome, or an oynion, but yet to the bearing hym on hande that he had the deuill, he aunswereth, but in suche sorte that he gaue them no euill language againe, whiche he might worthely haue doen, and countermaūded backe againe, theyr lewde saying to themselfes, but auoydeth it courteously from hymselfe: teachynge vs by the waye, that as ofte as we haue to do concernyng goddes glory, as ofte as the trueth of the ghospell is to be defended agaynst the wicked, we should bear nere, quicke and sharpe: And as often as we oure selfes be rebuked, that we

shoulde shewe our selfes gentle and meke. In suche wise that we do not make aūswere to all thynges, but repell and auoyde those thinges onely from vs, which we cannot concele without hinderaunce of the gospell.

To haue the people vnderstande that Christ did euery thyng in all his procedynges, not by the deuils auctorite, but God the father beyng auctour, made muche to the furtheraunce of the ghospell. I haue sayeth Christ, no familiaritie with any deuill, nor I doe not therfore boaste my selfe of God beeyng my father, to thintent that I wouldе with a lye obtayne myne owne prayse, but that through me my father myght be glorifyed emongst men. And albeit ye doe glorie that ye haue the same god to your father, yet doe ye me despite, who seke nothyng els but his glory, of whom ye wouldе be thought true worshippers.

I seke not myne owne prayse.&c.

I do not curiously seke myne owne prayse at mennes handes, neyther doth your contumelious wordes hurt me, but rather worketh your destruccion. For there is one, who as he is couetous to be glorified amonges men by me, so he wilseth that I agayne should haue glorye by hym: not that eyther he or I haue nede of this glorye, but that so to haue it is expediente for you for the exchaunge of death, and that ye maye attayn saluacion. Of trueth, lyke as I doe not muche couet myne owne glory (howbeit in dede my glory is the glory of my father) so am I no reuenger of myne owne rebuke or iniury. But yet for all that thinke not that ye shall be without punishmente for that ye haue slaundered me. For there is he that both seketh my prayse and glory, and will reuenge my iniury and contempte, except ye amende.

The texte.

Verely verely I say vnto you, if a man kepe my saying, he shall neuer see death. Then saied the Iewes vnto him: Nowe knowe we that thou hast the deuil. Abraham is dead, and the prophetes, and thou sayst: If a man kepe my saying he shall neuer taste of death. Arte thou greater than our father Abraham whiche is dead? and the prophetes are dead: whom makest thou thy selfe?

To glory in names, as ye doe, profiteth nothyng, for in that sorte neyther Abraham, the originall begynnyng of your stocke, nor Moses, nor the Prophetes, nor the Pharisees, ne God the father, shal do you any good. Be ye well assured hereof, if any man obey my wordes (as I haue sayed ofte) he shall neuer see death, onely beleue is the way and entre to immortalitie. Althoughe the Iewes ought with this so cauilme and gentle an aunswere to haue ben appeased, and with this so great a rewarde to haue ben allured vnto fayth, yet according to their rudenesse, doo they interpretate that thyng whiche was spiritually spoken of life of the soule, to be spoken of bodily lyfe, and that whiche was told them for their instruccion, they sedicyously marre and frowardly turne into the reproche of the Patriarkes, studying euerye waie to procure some hatred agaynst our Lord Jesus among the multitude. They aunswere verely in thys maner. We haue also of that thy saying more certayn knowlege that thou art possessed with a deuill wood and frantike, which promysest this thing to them that kepe thy worde, whiche manier of thing our Patriarkes, menne of moste highe prayse, neuer had, vnto whome God himselfe spake. God spake vnto Abraham, as he did also to other Prophetes. They were obedient to Goddes worde, and neuertheles these they be all deade, and thou promysest perpetuall lyfe to them that obserue those thinges whiche thou teachest.

What makest thou thy selfe?

With what countenaunce or howe darcste thou bee bolde to promise other that thyng whiche thou haste not thy selfe? Doeste thou promise immortalitie to other, beyng mortall thy selfe? Arte thou greater then oure father Abraham whiche is deade? yea and moreouer the Prophetes also be all dead. They durste promise no suche thyng to any man. How highly doeste thou presume of thy selfe? Whome makeste thou thy selfe? Thou preferreste thy selfe before the Prophetes, and Abraham, and in promising that thing which is gods, thou makeste thy selfe god.

The text. Iesus aunswered: if I honour my selfe, my honour is nothyng. It is my father that honoureth me, which ye saye is your God, and yet ye haue not knowen him, but I know hym. And if I saye I knowe hym not, I shall be a lyar lyke vnto you, but I knowe hym, and kepe his saying. Your father Abraham was glad to see my daye, and he sawe it and reioyced. Then sayed the Iewes vnto hym: thou arte not yet fiftie yere olde, and haste thou seene Abraham? Iesus sayed vnto them: Verely, verely, I saye vnto youeere Abraham was borne, I am. Then toke they vp stones to caste at him. But Iesus bid himselfe and wente out of the temple.

The Lorde Iesus did so moderate his aunswere vnto these fonde peuyshe reproches, wherewith the Iewes taunted hym, that because they were not yet able to receyue so great a mistery, he dyd of trueth somewhat by insinuacion open that he was greater then the Prophetes, and Abraham hymselfe too: and that he was one that might perfourme by Gods power that thyng which he did promyse, yet he would not appeare arrogant amonges the ignorante. But he tempered his sayinges leste he shoulde kyndle more wrathe in them that were moued already, and sayeth: I attribute nothyng vntruely to my selfe. For yf I shoulde after the manner of men seeke for prayse at mannes hande, then were my prayse false and vayne. And in case I were curiouse to seeke for prayse and glory, it were not nedefull to hunte for it amongest men. For it is my father, from whom all true glory cummeth, that glorifyeth me. He that is honoured of hym, the rebukefull woordes of menne doe not dishonoure the same. And yf ye wyll algates knowe hym that is my father, it is verye he whome ye boaste to be both your God and father. Whose chyldē if ye were in dede, forsothe ye would recognyse his embassadour, and yf ye were true worshippers of hym, ye would fauour his glory, and not byrnyng hym in contempte whome he sente into the worlde for your saluacion. But as ye worshippe hym with false religion, so ye vntruely clayme vnto you the knowledge of hym. He is spirituall, and you fauour and knowe nothyng els but carnall thynges. I who am his very sonne in dede, doe verely knowe hym, which thyng I doe not of arrogancye vntruely chalenge, but I saye that whiche is true: and yf I shoulde saye I knowe hym not, I should be a lyar, and lyke vnto you that professe the knowledge of God whom ye knowe not. I am sent from hym and was with hym before I came into the worlde. Therefore I knowe hym, and what thyng soeuer he hath commaunded me, I doe it. But whosoeuer contemneth my worde contemneth god, in whose name I exercise the commission of his embassage, and that faithfully. And whosoeuer despyseth gods worde, he neither knoweth God nor taketh him as God.

It is my father which honoureth me &c.

Furthermore whereas ye neuer ceasse braggyng of youre father Abraham to whom ye be moste farre vnlike, and that ye procure hatred vnto me, for that I take my selfe to be Abrahams better, verely I do neyther vainly boaste mine owne greatnes, nor diminishe his dignitie. This I will now saye vnto you, that Abraham whome you doe rather wonder at then folowe, how great a man soeuer soeuer he was, yet he was glad and thought he should be happy if it mygin be his lucke to see my daye. And he sawe that thyng whiche he desired, and that great man greatly ioyed to haue my daye chaunce to hym, and yet you contemne me. Jesus dyd herein and by this straunge saying, signifie that whan Abraham made hymselfe ready to offre in sacrifice his sonne Jsaac, he sawe by the spirite of prophecie that our Lord Jesus should be geuen of his father vnto the death of the crosse, for the saluation of the worlde: and yet should not through that death vtterly perysshe, but within three dayes after reuiue againe to an immortall lyfe. The Jewes not yet vnderstandyng this misterie, doe nowe againe according to theyr carnall iudgement, fall in hand with checking: suppolsyng Jesus to be no nother thyng then man, nor that he had any beyng before he was borne of Mary. Thou art not yet (say they) fifty yeres olde, and hast thou seen Abraham that died so many hundred yeres agoe. Finally the Lorde Jesus as a man prouoked with theyr opprobrious woordes, some deale openeth, and as it were vttereth a lytle sparke of his Godhed through whiche he knoweth no tyme nor number of yeres, but was alwaye all one before all course of tyme, lyke as God the father being without the limites of tyme alwaie is that he is. For thus he speaketh vnto Moses. I am that I am: signifyinge an eternalitie, and a nature that cannot chaunge. And in lyke maner the sone vsing the woordes of his father, sayeth: This I doe assuredly confirme vnto you (though as yet ye will not beleue it) or euer Abraham was borne, I am. If these woordes as playne blasphemous, because he beyng a mortall man semed to take vpon hym the eternalitie, a thyng for God only conuenient, they could not withholde theyr handes, but take vp stones, and wente in hande to ouerthrowe and presse hym with stones. But Jesus professyng hymselfe to be God, to declare hymselfe to be a very man also, gaue place to their fury, not because he feared theyr forcible violence, whiche he had power to kepe of, but to teache vs by the waye that when time requireth that the trueth of the ghospell should be preached valiantly and boldely, and again, that when we had once executed our duetie, the fury of euill men should not causeleste and in vayne be prouoked and exasperate: for our Lorde Jesus knewe that it could not haue been beate into the heades, I will not say of the grosse and ignorannte multitude, but not of his disciples: and they to be brought to beleue therof, in case he had openly preached himselfe to be both God & man, and thesame to be all at once both mortall as touching his manhed, and also immortall as touching his deitie: and as perteyning to the flesche to be a man borne of a virgin in time, as touchyng diuine power to haue been alwaye before all time God of God. Surely this so secrete a misterie was rather to be at time conuenient perswaded to the worlde by miracles, death, resurrection, ascendyng to heauen, and by the inspiration of the holy ghoste, then before due tyme to be brought in, and vttered in open playne woordes to them that would not beleue it. Therfore Jesus withdrewe hymselfe from them, geuyng place to theyr fury, and wente secretly forth of the temple: by that acte declarynge before hande, that afterwarde the light of the ghospell beyng repelled of the wicked and voluntary blynde Jewes, should be put ouer to the Gentiles, & their house left to them desolate which only thought themselfes the true seruauntes of God, and obseruers of true religiō. And so Jesus which is the author of true godlines, wente to an other place.

The.ix. Chapter.

The text. And as Jesus passed by, he sawe a manne, whiche was blynde from his byrth, and his disciples asked him, saying: Master who did synne, this manne or his father or mother, that he was borne blynde? Jesus sayed: neyther hath this manne synned, nor yet his father and mother, but that the workes of God should be shewed.

Herfore our Lorde Jesus did now for a while gene place to the fury of them, whom as yet he sawe incurable, and falleth in hande with miracles to declare his Godly power, whiche he coulde not all this while dryue into theyr headdes by any perswasion of woordes. And loe there fel forthwith a matter in his waye not vnlike those thynges which were doen in the temple. For of trueth much a doe was there with the blynde. But suche as were blynde in soule, not in body, whiche is the moste vnhappy kynde of blyndnesse. And so muche also the worse, as that although they were more then blynde, yet they thought themselues quicke sighted, so that they were not only miserable, but also vnworthy to be cured. For somuch a miser was not that blynde man whom Jesus sawe as he passed by, whiche man lacked onely bodily sight, and was borne blinde, so that it was a maladie aboue the Phisicions cure, but yet coulde Christe heale it. This man had an inwarde sight, sawe with yes of the soule: when Jesus therfore sawe the man, and had compassion on him, much pitying his misery, the disciples which called to their remembraunce that Christe had sayd to the man that was healed of his palsey: Go, and hereafter synne no more, leste some worse thing come vpon the, supposing that euery blemiche of the body had come of some faulte of the soule, ared Christe of the blinde man, and sayed: through whose synne chaunced it that this man should be borne blinde? for where as none coulde synne or he were borne, whosoeuer is borne with any sickenes or impediment of body, is to be thought punished for some other mans faulte, which thyng should yet seme against equitie, the disciples therfore sayed: Maister whēce came so great euill to this felowe, that he should be borne blinde? whether came it of his owne or of the synne of his parentes? Jesus aunswered: Neyther did this man through his owne synne deserue to be borne blinde, who coulde not synne when as yet he was not: nor his parentes. For as the lawe teacheth, God punysheth not the chyldren for the faultes of theyr parentes, excepte the children folowe the sinnes of theyr parentes. But blyndnesse chaunced to this man vpon a casualtie (and not through any mans synne) as in the course of mans life, many thinges chaūce to many folke. This mans misery & lacke of sight was not prohibit, but suffered to chaunce vnto hym, because that by hym the mighty power and goodnesse of God, whom the blinde Jewes so obstinately cryeth out vpon, should be declared to mē. The more vncurable the disease is, the more famous and commendable shall be the healing of the same.

De sawes man which was blynd.

I must worke the worke of hym that sent me, whyle it is daye. The night cummeth when no manne can worke. As long as I am in the worlde I am the light of the worlde. Assoone as he had thus spoken, he spatte on the grounde, and made clay of the spyttell and rubbed the clay on the eyes of the blynde, & sayed unto hym: Goe washe the in the poole of Siloe, which (by interpretacion) is almuche to saye as sent. He wente his waye therfore and washed, and came again seeyng. The texte.

For this cause was I sent into the worlde euē to procure the glory of God with suche dedes, as should cause the unfaythfull to beleue my woordes to be true, and to thinken also that those whiche will beleue, should be cured of their blindnes. I must doe this commaundement diligently while it is daye: for yf menne haue any worke in handē, they be wonte to doe it in the day. The night (perdy) is unhansome to worke in. Therfore in the meane tyme, whyle presēt day geueth us leaue to worke, we may not cease: For the night shall come when as men (all in baine) would worke and cannot. As long as I am in the worlde, I am the light of the worlde. If men make spede to finiche the worke, which they goe about for some commoditie of this life, before night, how muche more behoueth it euery man to labour, that while they haue me with them, they may go thorowe with the busines of the eternall saluacion. In fauour wherof, what soeuer (in the meane season) I doe in this worlde, I doe it for that thing sake, and to further saluacion. For what other thing doe I, then that all folke should, throughe yes of faith, see and acknowlege God and his sonne, whom he sent into the worlde: I shall within a while departe hence, than shall those that haue now had no will to worke, desyre lyght in baine. The Lord Jesus did with this saying, couertly notifie unto them that were presēt, that (al unfaithfulnesse set aparte) they should quickely go about to beleue the sonne of God, whom they coulde not long after see bodily. Moreouer, he did insinuate therwithall that those which otherwyse coulde not be brought to beliefe than by hearing him speake, and seeyng him worke miracles, should to none effecte desire to haue him made away, whom they despised beyng presēt. And at whose light, beyng obiecte to all mennes sight, they shut their eyes. Furthermore he signified likewise, that al suche as of obstinate minde did perdure in wilful blindnesse of minde, should, when time were, as menne unrecouerable and without hope to be amended, be lefte to theyr owne folly unto eternall destruccion, euen when a douersaunce miserye is imminent and ready to inuade them, whiche calamitie wyll rather cause them periche than heale them. And ouer all this he dyd ensigne them in tyme to come, a terrible iudgemente, at what season the wicked shall couet to labour aboute businesse of theyr saluacion: And it shall not bee lefull, for that the night will not suffre it, for as muche as they neglected the day in which they myght haue wrought: yet for all this, euery one whyle he is in state of this bodely lyfe, and also after Christes ascencion into heauen, hath this dayes lyght of the Apostles, and of holy scripture, whiche geueth habilitie to doe the thyng that appertayneth to our saluacion: But after the bodye be once dead, than is his daye awaye from hym, nor it cannot worke any thing more: but the rewarde of his foredoen dedes is to be hoped upon and loked for.

I am the lyght of the worlde.

These diffuse sayinges our Lord Jesus than had, to quicken and pricke forwarde with feare of the thyng to come, men that were slowe to beleue. But nowe, while the disciples looked for a miracle, Jesus spatte on the grounde, and of his ſpattle and duſte mired together, he made clay, and he anoynted the blinde mans iyes with the clay, euen therby reſemblyng his fathers, or rather his owne worke, wherein he made the firſte manne of hard clay, mollified with licoure. And to reſtore that whiche was loſte, pertayneth to the ſame author, which fyrſt made the ſame thynges of nought. And to purifie or make whole agayne, a thyng that is corrupted, is of more power & ſtrength, than to begette a thyng that is not borne. Well but in the meane tyme, the nouelrie of this plaſter made all theyr myndes attentiue and quietely to geue hede, and well to conſidre the miracle that ſhould be wrought, and it alſo proued a ſtedfaſt fayth in the blynde man, whiche murmured nothyng at hym that anoynted hym, but ſimply obeyeth hym that doeth what hymſelfe liſte, doubtyng nothyng at all of the benefyte, what waye ſoeuer it ſhould be geuen. The blynde dyd not furthwith receyue his ſight, but as ſoone as he was anoynted with the clay, he is commaunded to goe to the poole Siloe, and there to waſhe awaye the clay, wherewith his iyes were embrued, to thentente that both the blynde mannes faithfull aſſiaunce ſhould be of greater fame, for that he made no refuſall to doe that he was commaunded, and that the nouelrie of that ſtraunge ſight, & alſo the delay whiche was through length of the Journey, ſhould byng furthmoe recordes of the miracle: for the blynde manne ſat not farre of from the temple beggyng by the waye ſyde. And the well Syloe wherof ryſeth the poole, is at the foote of the mounte Syon: of whyche water Elay ſpeaketh too and complayneth that that water was contemned, not, that the water geueth to any manne helthe, but becauſe it beareth the figure of holy ſcripture. Which ſcriptures of God, whē as without bluſterying of worldely eloquence they iſſue furth caulmely and ſmoothely, yet becauſe they bubble out of the priuy hid caues of godly wiſedome, they haue heauenly violence to remoue the blyndeneſſe of mannes myndē, how long ſoeuer it hath continued and to open thoſe iyes wherwith God is ſeen, whom to haue ſeen is felicitie. For Syloe in the Syrians tongue ſygnifieth ſent. For one there is euen ſpecially ſente from the father, whiche only geueth lyght to mennes myndes, for he is the fountayne. It did repreſente Chriſte hymſelfe, who euen at this preſente tyme alſo, beyng as it were with a ſecrete power enclosed in holy ſcripture, openeth the iyes of the blynde, yf ſo be that they will acknowledge theyr blyndeneſſe. He muſt be made more then blynde that will receyue light of Chriſte. He that is wyſe to the worlde, is very farre of from hope of heauēly wiſedome: he that thinketh himſelfe well ſighted, nor vouchſafeth to haue his iyes cloſed vp with the clay of Jeſus, there is no cauſe why he ſhould hope for the lyght of the ghoſpell. Nowe than whan the blynde felowe, a notable knowen manne for his beggyng, and knowen alſo to bee borne blynde, wente thither as he was commaunded, no doubte but a great croude of people folowed hym as he wente, not without laughyng, to ſee his iyes blurred with clay: and ſo twiſe blynde goyng to a water whiche was of no name through any miracle that euer was doen therin: when they were come to the water, he waſheth awaye the clay from his iyes, and returneth home with open iyes and and cleare ſight.

The texte. ¶ So the neyghbours and they that had ſeen hym before howe that he was a begger, ſayed: is not this he that ſate and begged? Some ſayed this is he: Agayne, other ſayed: no, but but he is lyke hym. He chymselfe sayed, I am euen he. Therfore sayd they vnto hym: howe are thine yes opened? He aunswered and sayed. The manne that is called Jesus, made clay, and anointed myne yes, and sayed vnto me: Goe to the poole Siloe and washe. And whan I went and washed, I receiued my sight. Then sayed they vnto hym: where is he? He sayed, I cannot tell. They brought to the Pharises, hym that a litle before was blynd, and it was the Sabboth daye, when Jesus made the clay and opened his yes.

Neighboures therfore and other whiche had knowen hym before (neither coulde he but be well knowen to many, considering he was a common beggar) when they knewe his face, but as for his yes they sawe altered, they sayed: Is not this he whome we sawe sitting before the temple, and begged by the waye syde? Some sayde: It is he. Other contrarie, it is not he, but it is an other like hym. Whyle they disagreed among themselues, the blynde himselfe sayed: yes verely I am the same beggar, and he that was borne blynde, whome ye haue often seen. And he thus sayed, that his voyce also beyng knowen, should cause the miracle be the better beleued. But we (say they) sawe the blinde: now see we the see with open yes. How chaunced it that thyne yes were shut, and now are open? The man (saieth he) that is called Jesus, made clay, and therwith anopnted mine yes, and that doen he sayed: goe thy waye to the poole Siloe, and there washe thine yes. I wēt my waye, I washed me, and now I see. They than seking occasion to pycke a quarell to the Lorde Jesus, to put him to rebuke, because in tempering the clay and anoynting the yes therwith, he sumwhat laboured on the holy daye, they enquire where he was that did this dede. When the beggar had aunswered that he knew not who it was, for he had not knowen Jesus by sight, but onely by name, they bring him whiche of a blynde man was brought to his sight, vnto the Pharises, that by shewyng the thyng playnely before them, he shoulde detecte Jesus that he hadde broken the Sabboth daye. For it was the Sabboth daye whan Jesus opened the blynde mannes yes.

Then agayne the Pharisees also asked him howe he had receyued his sight. He sayed vnto them: he put clay vpon my yes and I washed, and do see. Therfore sayed some of the Pharises: this man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabboth daye: other sayde, how can a man that is a sinner, do such myracles? And there was a strife amongst them. They speake to the blynde man agayne: what sayest thou of him, because he hath opened thine yes? he sayed: he is a prophete. The texte.

There the Phatisees enquire of the manne once againe howe he came from beyng blinde to haue sight. He casting no perils shewed playnly how the matter was, and sayed: he annointed mine yes with clay that was tempered with spattle. And vpon his commaundement I washed me in Siloe, and that doen I receyued my sight. Certayne of the Pharisees when they hearde this, sayed: this Jesus is not of God, though he speake of God the father: for if he tooke God for his auctour, he woulde not by doyng suche miracles violate the Sabboth whiche God commaunded to be kepte. It is a detestable thyng to breake the holy Sabboth daye. God medleth not with suche a one. So those maliciously faithlesse because they could not denye so manifest a dede, no reproue so beneficiall a dede, they borowe and make shift to haue a quarell against him at the holines of the daye, other agayne that were more curable, sayth: if this man were not beloued of God, or detestable before hym for breakyng the Sabboth, howe coulde he wooꝛke theſe miracles? The matter it ſelfe ſheweth that theſe thynges are dooen by the ayde of God: Noꝛ this is not nowe the firſte miracle that he hath wꝛought. After this ſoꝛte was altercacion and ſondꝛye opinions among them, touchyng Jeſus. Therfoꝛe the Phariſees, whiche by all aſſayes, toke occaſion to repꝛoue hym, ſpake yet againe to the blynde: What thynkeſt thou (ſaye they) of hym that opened thyne yes? The thyng that they hunted foꝛ; was this: that in caſe he had ſpoken euill of Jeſus (whiche thyng the blynde man knewe was they: mynde) they might haue matter to laye againſte thoſe whiche had merely good opinion of Jeſus: but and he had repoꝛted well by hym, they woulde haue been fierce againſte the blynde man ſelfe, and haue caſte hym out of the Synagogue. The beggar of truethe ſimple and without dꝛeade ſpake out what he thought of Jeſus. I take hym (ſayeth he) to be a pꝛophete, meanyng by that ſame, ſome greate and notable man of whom he had both heard great fame, and had had alſo experience of his power and ſtrengthe in hymſelfe.

The texte. But the Jewes did not beleue of the man (howe that he had been blinde and receyued his ſighte) vntyll they called the father and mother of hym that had receyued his ſyghte. And they aſked them, ſayeng: Is this your ſonne, u̇ howe ye ſaye was borne blinde? Howe doeth he nowe ſee then? His father and mother anſwered them, and ſayed: we knowe that this is our ſonne, and that he was borne blynde: By what meanes he nowe ſeeth we cannot tell, oꝛ who hath opened his yes, cannot we tell: he is olde ynough, aſke hym: leat hym anſwer foꝛ himſelfe. Suche wordes ſpake his father and mother, becauſe, they feared the Jewes. Foꝛ the Jewes had conſpired alreadye that if any man dyd confeſſe that he was Chriſt, he woulde be excommunicate out of the Synagogue. Therfoꝛe ſayed his father and mother: he is olde ynoughe aſke hym.

There were many Jewes therfoꝛe, whiche coulde not be bꝛought in beliefe, that this was the ſame whiche late befoꝛe ſate beggyng at the dooꝛe of the temple, beyng boꝛne blynde, foꝛ ſomuche as it did euidentlye appeare that he nowe had cleare ſight and open yes. Therfoꝛe his father and mother were called foꝛ, whiche coulde knowe their ſonne euen by ſome ſpeciall marke. And here nowe the malicious curioſitie of the Phariſees ſet foꝛwarde the beliefe and alſo the commendacion of the thyng that was doen. Therfoꝛe they ſaye to his parētes:

Is this your ſonne. Is this your ſonne whome ye were woont to ſaye was boꝛne blind? And howe chaunced it that nowe he ſeeth? They (as in dede ſuche bee timoꝛous as haue ſmall ſubſtaunce at home) anſwere warely: The thing (ſaye they) whiche we certainly know, we can teſtify: We knowe that this is our ſonne, & that he was boꝛne blind. But of the ſight that is geuen him, we neither knowe how it came, noꝛ from whom, himſelfe ſhall teſtifie this thyng moꝛe aſſuredly than we can. He is old ynough, aſke him rather then vs, lette him ſpeake foꝛ himſelfe that he knoweth. His parentes had theſe ſaynges, not as ignoꝛaunt what had befalle vpon their childe, but they had leauer that he alone ſhoulde come in daunger, than they to endaunger themſelues with him: foꝛ the Jewes had already conſpired, that if any man durſte pꝛofeſſe Jeſus to be Meſſias, he ſhoulde bee excōmunicate and caſte out of the Synagogue, whiche was taken foꝛ a matter among the Jewes of great repꝛoche, wherof it cūmeth that euen among the pꝛofeſſers of the goſpel, the ſharpeſt kynde of puniſhment is, that if a man ſwarue frō his pꝛofeſſiō and fal into an haynous cryme, he be remoued from the felowſhyp of other, to the intente that he whiche cannot bee reſourmed by wholeſome informacion, beyng eschewed of other, shoulde be better aduised, and for verye shame amend. But this example of gentle fiercenesse, whiche was fitte to bee exhibite vpon them onely, which through theyr enormities should make themselues detestable and pestilente, the Iewes nowe turne to the establishement of theyr tyranny: lyke as they dyd also abuse all other good ordinaunces to theyr owne gayne and pompe. The darte whiche ought to haue been hurled at the cruell sorte, to haue healed them therby, rather than to haue destroyed them, they turne the same weapon agaynst them, whiche professe Christe. The blinde màs parentes fearyng this thyng, layeth vpon theyr sonnes backe, the enuie that shoulde rise of testifying the trueth: he is (saye they) of sufficiente age, ye maye aske him.

Then agayne call they the man that was blinde, and sayed vnto hym: Geue God prayse, we knowe that this man is a sinner. He answered. Whether he bee a sinner or no, I cannot tell: one thyng I am sure of, that where I was blinde, I nowe see. Then sayed they to hym agayne: what did he to thee: howe opened he thyne yes? he answered them: I tolde you ere while, and ye did heare, wherfore woulde ye heare it agayne: wyll ye also be his disciples? The texte.

Than he that had been blynde, was called for agayne, to bee his owne witnes and aduocate, and to bee also a publisher of Christes renoume, for it was Christes vse to reuerse and turne the malice of the Pharisees, vnto Gods glorye. For though the dede was more euidente, partelye by the recorde of the parẽtes, & partely by ỹ acte selfe, than that it could be cloked or denied, yet to turne awaye the prayse of that dede from Christe, whome they hated, they saye: That thou haste sight where before thou waste blinde, do not ascribe it to Iesus: vnto whom thou arte nothyng beholden, but prayse god for this benefite. For we know that this felow Iesus is a sinner, who hath no acquaintaunce with god. The Pharisees did their endeuour to deuide in sunder that whiche coulde not be seperate, that is to wete, the glory of the father from the glorye of the sonne: and they spake colourably, to hyde theyr owne iniquitie with the pretence of hye godlynesse, as thoughe they toke great care leste Goddes honoure shoulde decaye, when as in very dede they sought theyr owne prayse in all thynges, and regarded not the prayse of God. The blynde manne answeryng vnto these sayinges, bothe boldely and aduisedly, sayeth: whether he bee a sinner or no, let other men iudge, it is not my parte to geue sentence therin, one thyng I can true lye testifie, I founde in very dede that I was before blynde, and I nowe see: here nowe, when as no sufficient occasion was geuen to the Pharisees, eyther to rebuke Iesus or to bee cruell agaynste the man, whiche had spoken warely and with good aduisement, they were turned backe agayne to theyr former interrogatories, driuing drifes on euery syde how to bereue Christ of his praise: what did he to the (saye they) or by what meanes did he open thine yes? hoping that by a new maner of framing his tale, thei might picke out somewhat wherby they should perswade that this prayse was not due to Christe. Agaynst this impudẽt & shamelesse malice of the Pharisees, the beggar beyng now wel bolded, maketh this answere: I tolde you erewhile playnelye as the thyng was doen in dede, once ye haue heard it. To what purpose is it, to repete the same agayne: If ye do enquire of a pure simple minde, well, I haue already opened ỹ matter, and with my recorde, I haue satisfied that whiche was demaunded of me: and yf ye dooe not so aske, it were not indifferentelye dooen, eftesones to Geue God prayse.

tell the same. Marke ye therfore so diligently enquire the maner of the dede, that after the matter be throughly knowen, ye also wil become his disciples, by whō God worketh so great thinges: like as I (vpon experience of his power) and many other moe are his disciples.

The texte. Then rated they him and sayed: be thou his disciple, we are Moses disciples: we are sure that God spake vnto Moses: As for this felowe, we knowe not from whence he is. The man answered and sayed vnto them: this is a meruelous thyng that ye wot not whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine yes. For we are sure that God heareth no sinners, but yf anye man be a worshipper of God and obedient vnto his wil, him heareth he. Sence the world began, was it not heard, that any man opened the yes of one, that was borne blynd. If this man were not of god, he could haue doen nothing. They answered and sayed vnto hym: thou arte altogether borne in sinne, and doest thou teache vs? And they cast him out.

The Pharisees beeyng sore prouoked with the beggars great affyaunce, made no answere, but all to rated him: wishing that thyng to the manne as an extreme euill, whereby themselues might bee made blessed, and through abhomination putting backe from them that thyng, whiche oughte to haue been moste hartely desyred, saying for, that they were as blynde in soule as the beggar beyng nowe an euangeliste, was before in bodye: the Pharisees (I saye) saye vnto hym: O thou vngracious wyerche, bee thou that naughtye felowes disciple. We that are the disciples of Moses, with whome this Jesus is not to bee compared, doe deteste and abhorre suche a maister. For we bee certayn that god spake to Moses, and that whatsoeuer he teacheth vs, he hath it at Goddes hande to teache. But why should we geue eare to this Jesus, seing we knowe not from whence he came? leat him teache and proue vnto vs his authorite, and perchaunce we will beleue him. The beggars courage and boldenes dyd in the tyme of theyr reasonyng, growe and increase: And thoughe he perceiued that they by all subtill meanes went about to destrope Jesus, yet did he stoutely (setting a syde all perils) pleade Jesus cause, gathering and well prouyng by the miracle that was wrought in geuyng him his sighte, that it was cleare pnough from whence Jesus came. I meruayle (sayeth he) why ye saye ye knowe not from whence Jesus is, when as it cannot be denayed but that by hym myne yes be open: with whiche (being shut and without sighte) I was borne. Certes this is a thing without controuersie, neither doo ye thynke the contrary, that God heareth not the desyres of sinners. But if a man worshippe him deuoutly, and obeyeth his will whome he religiously serueth, hym dooeth God heare. But if God by Jesus haue taken from me my blyndnes, albeit the chiefe prayse is to be geuen to god, yet neuertheles it must nedes be that he is a reuerente worshipper of God, and one that God loueth, at whose desyre and prayer God gaue vnto me so notable a benefite. For it is no common or meane miracle whiche ye see wrought in me. Many wonderous thynges are tolde of, which god log agoe did by our elders, but suche as were holy and not sinners. But except this Jesus were come from God, except the power of god were present with him, he coulde of himselfe do nothing at all. It is not of mans stregth wiche yet we see doen.

We are Moses disciples.

The Pharisees beeyng made extreme woode with this courage and boldnes that the beggar was of (and when there was no hope to bee hadde that the poore felowe would either bee corrupted, or with feare astonished, and so cease

of from preachyng Christ, yal to extremitie, and to say the vttermost they could. They vpbrayed him with his olde blindnesse, they cast him in the teeth with his beggerlynesse, as though God hadde punished him therwithall for his sinnes, and as though he were borne wicked and vngracious, that commeth into the worlde poore or blynd, or otherwise bleamished in bodye. Thou (saye they) arte altogether borne in sinne, and teachest thou vs that knowe howe to defende religion, and vpholde the profession of the lawe? darest thou here in the presence of so great men teache diuinitie, whiche but a while a go asked almes? neyther did they suffer him to speake any longer. And beyng ashamed to be so put to silence, and haue their mouthes stopped by a poore ignorannt person: they thrust him out of the Sinagogue as a leude masters leude disciple.

Jesus heard: that they had excommunicated him: and when he had founde hym he saied vnto him: doest thou beleue on the sonne of god? He aunswered and saied: who is it lord that I might beleue on hym? And Jesus saied vnto hym: thou hast seen hym, and he it is that talketh with the. And he saied: Lorde, I beleue, and he worshypped hym. The texte.

But whome Pharisees call fiercenes thrusteth out of the Sinagogue, them doeth Christe receiue into his churche. For to bee disseuered from the communion of the wicked, is to be coupled to Christe. And to bee disallowed of them, that stablishyng their owne righteousnesse, speake agaynste the righteousnesse of God, is to bee approued and alowed: and of them to be rebuked, that seking their owne prayse, goe about to darken the prayse of Jesus, is moste hye prayse: and to be detestable to thē that are to be detested, is to be derely beloued of god. Therefore relacion was made vnto Jesus how boldely the man that so muche set foorth his prayse, behaued himselfe towardes the Pharisees. For it was already bruted abrode by the people, that he was caste of and reiect. Therefore as soone as Jesus had met with him, to make this mans fayth more knowen to al men, he sayeth vnto him: howe sayest thou felowe, beleuest thou on the sonne of God? For he had already confessed before the Pharisees, that he whiche did so greate a thyng came playnely from God. Nor Jesus was ignorannte thereof, but he gatte out the mannes open confession thereof, for other mennes sakes, procuryng thereby a good exaumple for other. But though he that had been blynde, as yet knewe not Jesus by sighte, yet hauyng great affection to knowe that mannes face, whome Jesus named the sonne of god, sayeth: lorde who is he that when I knowe hym, I maye beleue on him? The manne had beleued on Jesus, yea ere he sawe hym: nor this was not the doyce of a faythlesse man, but of one that vehemently desyred to see the auctour of so great a benefite. Jesus therefore with humble woordes, signifying hymselfe to be the personne he spake of, sayeth vnto hym: thou haste already seen hym whome thou desyrest to see. and he it is that talketh with thee, on whome it behoueth thee to beleue.

The man vpon these woordes without any staying at all, confesseth with great promptnes of mynde that he doeth beleue: and euen with that saying, he fell downe at Jesus knee, and worshipped hym, and so his dede declared what he thought of Jesus.

And Jesus saied vnto hym: I am come vnto iudgemente into this worlde, that they whiche see not might see: & that they whiche see might be made blynde. And some of the pharisees which were with hym, heard these woordes & saied vnto hym: are we blynd also? Jesus saied The texte.

sayed vnto them. If ye were blind ye shulde haue no synne. But nowe ye saye we see, therfore your synne remayneth.

Now than, Jesus (to thentent, that by example of this manne he might the more prouoke other mens myndes that wer present) sayeth: I that am the light of the worlde, therfore came into the worlde, that the course of thynges might be turned vpsyde doune: as muche to say, that the symilitude and sleight of vntrue holinesse and forged knoweledge, beyng disclosed, these whiche heretofore sawe not, might se: and that they whiche see might be made blynde. With this saying, Jesus noted the naughty peruerse iudgement of the Pharisees, which though they thought that onely they knew what was religion, what was law, and what was righteousnes, yet wer they more foule ouerseen, than any of the mean sorte of people, by reason that worldelye couetousnes had darkened the iudgemente of their myndes, when as that selye poore blinde felowe, simple and vnlearned, likewyse as he had bodily sight freely geuen him, so did he inwardly see so muche in soule, that in knowlage of trueth he excelled euen the very pharisees. Neither did these bytyng wordes so scape all the Pharisees (whiche followed Jesus of no good minde, but rather to seke on euery syde, occasion to reproue hym) but that the styng of this saying caused some of them to marke it, so that those were not beguiled therwith. These, beyng nothyng altered from their malepert presumption, to thintent that they might either force the Lorde to testifie honorably of them, or to haue some matter to accuse him of vnto them that were of the pharisees order, saye vnto hym: are we than blynde also? But Jesus doeth so aunswere vnto this question, whiche was very wily, capcious, and also presumptuous, that he declareth them, whiche thoughte themselues men of great sight, to be more than blinde: not in body but in soule, and to bee the more vncurably blynde, because they thought themselues quicke sighted. Verely (sayeth Jesus) yf ye were blynde, and woulde knowledge howe ignoraūt in soule ye be, your simplicitie should be pardoned. But nowe, forasmuche as ye be blinde in dede, and yet ye would be praysed among the people for learned men, ye are so very starke blinde that ye cannot be healed. As this blinde manne hath obteyned sight because he knowledged the deformitie of his body, euen so you, because ye be voluntary blynde, as sinne blynded through lustes of your flesshe, cannot be cured, but continue in the sinne of infidelitie: whereas the vnlearned whiche firste were ignorannt of the trueth, vpon the syght of miracles, and by hearyng me preache (all darkenes taken awaye) embraceth the light of the trueth. He that presumptuously taketh vpon hym to knowe the lawe, and speaketh against him that is the principall poynte and conclusion of the lawe, is more than blynde, and altogether out of the waye. All men haue liued heretofore vnder shadowes, nor any waye lieth open to the lightwarde, but by fayth of the ghospell. Therefore the common and bulgare people sonest receiue sight, because they do not very muche thynke themselues well sighted, and if they be any whit ouerseen, it is rather through rude ignoraūce than malice. But they that whan themselues be twise blinde, yet they professe themselues teachers of the people, that is, guiders of the blynde: suche, I say, be starke blynde, and moste daungerously, without recouery. For neyther they themselues come to the light, and yet through false opinion, and pretence of learnyng and holinesse, they seduce and bryng other into errour.

I am come iudgement &c.

If ye were blynde ye should haue no sinne.

The

The .x. Chapter.

Verely verely I say vnto you, he that entreth not in by the doore into the shepefolde, but climeth vp some other waye, the same is a theefe and murderer. But he that entreth in by the doore is the shepeherde of the shepe, to hym the porter openeth and the shepe heare his voyce, and he calleth his owne shepe by name, and leadeth them out. And when he hath set forth his owne shepe he goeth before them, & the shepe followe him: for they knowe his voyce. A straunger will they not followe, but will flee from hym, for they knowe not the voyce of straungers. The texte.

AND albeit they were such, yet did they disdain & enuy the Lord Jesus, because he did allure the people vnto hym, and withdrewe them from the obedience of the Pharisees and prestes, whiche sayed persones, because they coulde no longer defende their autoritie by honest meanes, they doe their endeuoure to maynteine their tirranny with disceites, fraytinges, wyles, traynes, threteninges and wicked conspiracies, not attendyng the peoples commoditie, as it had been fitte they should haue doen, co[n]sidering they professed themselues teachers, guydes, and shepeherdes of the people, but with the peoples discommoditie sought their owne commoditie: Jesus therfore, who had before tyme by many and diuerse similitudes enuited all men vnto hym, somewhyle calling hymselfe heauenly breade, wherof he that dyd eate should lyue ternally: Some tyme namyng hymselfe liuely water, wherof whoso did drinke, should conceiue in hymselfe a spryng of water that would gushe out and renne into euerlasting lyfe: some tyme the light of the worlde that lighteneth all mennes myndes: an other time the some and ambassadour of God the father, on whom he that did beleue should obtaine eternall saluacion: In this place he doeth the same thyng by an other parable, entendyng that that thyng should more depely settle in al mennes myndes, which is the chiefe and head poynte of mannes whole saluacion, that is to witte, that no manne can be a directour or shepeherde of people, vnles hymselfe be firste a shepe of Christe, that true shepeherde of all the shepe that are to be placed on the right hande in the last daye. But surely he is not Christes shepe, that is not a membre of Christe: and he is no membre of Christe that doeth preferre this worlde or his owne honour before Christes glory. But the Pharisees, because they would be shepeherdes without Christe, they were therfore robbers and theues and no shepeherdes though they chalenged as due to them selues, the name, the hye looke, and solemne gravitie of a shepeherde. Jesus therfore noting them, sayeth: one thyng I assure you of, whosoeuer entereth into the shepefold, not by the doore, but entereth with force an other ware, as eyther by climyng ouer the enclosures, or by diggyng through the walles, the same is no shepeherd, but a theefe, & a murtherer. A theefe to catche somewhat by fraude and stealth, a murtherer to kill by violence. But whoso entereth in by the doore, because he deuiseth no guile against the shepe, he is a shepeherde: & to him hauing minde to entre in by the doore, shall he open the doore, whiche onely hath the right to let in. Though the shepe be a feareful at the vnknowen voyce of the theefe and murtherer, yet doe they acknowledge and heare this mannes voyce: because it is the true shepeherdes voyce. For albeit the shepe be a seely simple beast, and dependeth of the ayde of other,

yet shepe

yet thepe doe knowe the voyce of the thepeherde, of whom they perceyue re-lefe: and they quake for feare at the voyce of wulfes, by whom they be put in feare of death. Therfore the thepeherde goyng into the thepefolde by the doore, maketh not the thepe afearde, but is well inough knowen, and on his behalfe knoweth his thepe, so that he can also name euery one of them, and they beyng called doe obey his voyce. For they be called to theyr foode and meate, and not to the flesshe chambles to be killed. And they be called with a frendely and with a knowen voyce: they be not thruste out with violence: and the thepeherde conducteth them, beyng redy and to wardes at his call, to pastures: and when they be once brought out of the folde (wherin they were enclosed) and are come abrode into the common fieldes, leste they should runne astray, the true and knowen thepeherde goeth before his flocke: and ỹ flocke followeth him. For he goeth not all hushe and dumme before them, but ekslones enstseth them to followe hym: and calleth the thepe backe againe in case they be wandered and strayed asyde. And they knowe theyr thepeherdes voice, and therat come into order. But they doe not followe the thepeherde of an other flocke: but loeth him, and flie from him as vnknowen, because they knowe no nother thepeherdes voice but their owne.

The texte. This proverde spake Jesus vnto them, but they vnderstode not what thynges they were which he spake vnto them. Then sayed Jesus vnto them againe: Verely verely I saye vnto you: I am the doore of the thepe: all (euen as many as came before me) are theues and mur-therers, but the thepe dyd not heare them: I am the doore, by me yf any man entre in, he shall be safe and shall goe in and out, and finde pasture.

With this parable our Lorde Jesus did sore reproue the Pharisees, the Scribes, the priestes, and headmen of the people, whiche had indignacion and disdained that there should be so many whiche had leauer cleaue vnto Jesus than to them that toke themselues to be the guides of the people. Moreouer they that were very swyne and goates, gaue eare to those mens voyces. But they that were truely thepe, without fraude, simple, and that doeth no harme, did knowlage the voyce of the Lorde Jesus: who was the true thepeherde to whom the father beyng porter, opened the dooze, that he might lede his obedient thepe into the pastures of euerlastyng lyfe. But for so much as the Pharisees did not vnderstand what this parable ment, Jesus did vouchesafe to make playne the thynges whiche he had spoken darkely, for two skilles, thone, to make them more attentiue, the other, that the matter whiche he vttered by a parable, myght take roote deper in theyr herres that heard him; he sayeth vnto them: I doe affirme vnto you a moste true thyng. I am the very dooze whereof I haue spoken, by which dooze the thepe ỹ will be saued must goe in & out. By this dooze it behoueth him to goe in, that will entre to the office of a thepeherd, & exercise that function, for it is not ynough, at all aduentures (not regarding what waye) to haue entred forceably within the limites, enclosure, & thepefolde of ỹ churche. It is not sufficiēt to haue attained the name & dignitie of a thepeherde, not forcing howe. Howe many soeuer hath been such, that by euil meanes haue rathely runne into the thepe-folde of Gods people, not of any minde to feede, but to spoyle, because they haue not entred by me that am ỹ dooze, they be no thepeherdes, but theues & murderers, for asmuch as they be gredy of lucre, & in cruelte rigorous & very tiraunes. But yet those swine & goates that loue this worlde, haue geuen care to all these maner of boyces. But Shepe limited and predestinate to the pastures of eternall life, and that are desirous of foode of the gospell, haue not heard the voyce of these, nor knowen in them any gospellers voyce, because they were not true Shepeherdes. For their voyce sounderh nothyng Shepeheardlyke. But more lyke the voyce of a robber, and of a rauenous woulfe. I am (I tell you) the doze. There is no healthfull entryng into the churche and kingdō of heauen but by me, whether thou wilt be Shepeherde or Shepe. If any entre in by me, he shall attain eternall health: and shalbe without all daunger of theues and murderers, but through this Shepehearde shall go into the Shepefolde safe, and take the fruition of the blessed quietnes of contemplacion, and shall again go out into the pastures, to practise and put in vre the office of charitie. And there shal no where lacke pastures, but in all places shall be matter to do good vpon, to the intente he maye bothe profit other, and he hymselfe through good dedes repayre home agayne to the Shepefolde more fatter and better likyng. Thus now ye haue one token, whereby ye maye discerne a Shepe from a goate, a true Shepeherde from a falle. He that beleueth not on me, & yet maketh himself a Shepeheard of the people, of him ought men to beware. And his voice shal thā disclose what manier one he is. If his woordes haue no taste of Goddes glorye, if they sauoure not of the peoples health: but of his owne praise, of gaine, of worldly subtiltie, and of tirannye: let the Shepe take hede to themselues and beware of him: for he is a theefe and a murtherer, he is no Shepeherde. And he is the more daungerous, because he fameth himselfe to be a Shepeheard. And in case the voyce be not a sufficient proofe, take hede to theyr dedes.

A theefe cummeth not but for to steale, kyll and to destroye: I am come that they might haue lyfe, and that they might haue it more aboundauntly. I am the good Shepeherde. A good Shepeherde geueth his life for his Shepe. An hired seruaunt, and he whiche is not the Shepeherd (neither the Shepe are his owne) seeth the woulfe comming and leaueth the Shepe, and flieth, and the woulfe catcheth and scatereth the Shepe. The hired seruaunte flyeth, because he is an hyred seruaunte, and careth not for the Shepe. I am the good Shepeheard, and know my Shepe, and am knowen of myne. The texte.

The theefe cummeth for none other purpose but to steale, and to get himselfe vile and filthy gaine of the harmes of an other mans flocke. The murderer cūmeth not but to worry and destroye, and to practise tiränye vpon the flocke, vnto the whiche to haue doone good, had been his parte and duetie. The wayes therefore it shalbe lefull to deeme the true Shepeheard from the theefe or prayecatcher: If he entre not in by the dooze, that is to saye, yf he dooe not acknowlage me by whome onely there is hope of eternall healthe: If he speake not those thynges whiche agreeth with the doctrine of God: thyrdely if his intente be directed any other waye than to those thynges that appartayne to Goddes glorye, and saluacion of the people. If none of these faultes can be found in me, but if rather the father of heauen haue opened the dooze, if I speake those thinges whiche accordeth with the meanyng of the lawe, & whiche are agreable to the will of the father of heauen, yf I doe no where hunte for lucre or mine owne prayse, but obeying my fathers pleasure, thirst after nothyng els but al folkes health, than bydet stande ye that I am the true Shepeherde, and acknowlage ye my founder, my voyce, my delyre and study. I am the good Shepeherde.

They that auaunt themselues to be Shepeheardes, goe aboute this, hereby euen to get themselues commoditie of your discommodities, who than fare best whan the flocke fareth wurst. I that haue entred in by the dooze, came for none none other thing, but that the diseased shepe should bee healed, the dead should liue, and the quicke shoulde be fatted with all kynde of vertues. Hys is taken for a good shepehearde which liueth in dede of the reuenewes and pearcly profites that come of his shepe, whiche purlopneth nothyng, or nothyng deuoureth. But an euangelicall shepeheard de ferre passeth this vpright dealyng. For he doeth not onely not spoyle as the theefe doeth, not onelye not teare in pieces as the praie catcher doeth, but also bestoweth his owne life for to defend his shepe, so farre of it is that he would for any gayne sake, hurt the flocke that he is put in trust withal, or lose that which he hath taken in hand to kepe. Therfore the other sort, that braggue vpon theyr beyng shepherdes, are woulfes & no shepherdes. But if ye demaunde an exaumple, and a profe of a good shepherde, it is I that am a good shepherde, whiche do not onelye my selfe not seke my commodite of the flockes harme but I also dooe freely geue of myne own goodes, yea and my lyfe too, to reliste theim that come against the flocke, to endammage or greue it. I dooe that for my shepe, that one frende will not doe for a nother. He cannot be a shepherde vnlesse he be pure from all singular profite and priuate commoditie, except also he set euen his owne life at naught, whan at any time the flocke standeth in ieopardy. For ther be many thinges that make incursion against the health of the flocke. Therfore he that is a true shepheardе, and in his herte careth for the flocke for none other skull, but because he loueth the flocke, redy to do his commaundemente that gaue him that flocke to be kepte safe, and not to be nye shorne, spoyled, slayn, or worried, he defendeth the health of his shepe, euen with the losse of his owne lyfe.

But contrary, he that is an hierelinge, & hath taken the ouersight of the flocke for his owne aduauntage, yet although he doe rightlye gouerne, and rule the flocke whiles al thinges be caulme and quiet, yet if there hange any ieopardye of life thereupon, that is to wete, if he see the woulfe preасe vpon him furyously, he betrayeth the shepe, and leaueth the flocke to the woulfe to be scattered abrode, and so pece meale to be worried, and saueth his owne lyfe by runnyng awaie. And what is the cause? Nothing els but because he is an hired seruaũt, and no shepeherd. True charitie hath no respecte to the rewarde. Whereas consideration of the reward hath place, there is either no charitie or vnperfite charitie. And if there be any duetie doen, it is not doen with that good will that a true shepeheарde would dooe it with all. But where the thyng moste requireth the very naturall shepeheарde, there thã is ỹ flocke deceitfully betrayed, whiles the hired shepeherde runneth awape. And why is that? Because, when that he hath considered the matter after worldly iudgement, he counteth it better that an other mans flocke do perishe, than himselfe to come in perill of life. And yet is this maner of men some deale better than they, whiche playe the woulfes themselues against the flocke, vnder the false title of shepeheardes. For there be they, whiche in tyme of prosperitie doeth right faythfully take hede to theyr flocke, but yet when there is a great daunger, they leaue trayterously the flocke to the woulf to be disperpled abrode and torne in pieces: for he fantasieth thus: In case that go to wracke, what than? I haue no losse therby. My wage is safe, and though I lose some deale therof, I had rather lose it, than to cope and fight with the woulfe, for another mannes cattell. There shal another flocke be found out, whiche I shall bee hyred to haue the ouersight of: thoughe the maister of this flocke loose it.

Neyther

Neyther doeth the death of the flocke greue the hyred mans mynd. So it happeneth that both the owner hath losse of that thyng which he entierely loueth, and the flocke cummeth to destruccion, whiche might haue bene saued. It is therfore no meruayl, though euangelike shepe knew not the voyce of sucy like shepeherdes. The shepe be not in faute, but the lewde shepherdes are to blame. Nor it is not to be disdained at, if they whome my father so draweth, do folow me, forsakyng the hyred shepherdes that are but very theues and murderers. For they seele and perceiue that I am all maner of wayes a good shepeherde, euen to spend my lyfe therfore. I know my shepe comitted to me of my father, al whose goodes are mine: and on the other syde, the shepe that are drawen by the inspiracion of the father, acknowlageth their shepeherd, loueth him, and foloweth hym, knowing right well that there is no hope of saluacion but by me.

As my father knoweth me, euen so know I also my father, and I geue my lyfe for the shepe, and other shepe I haue, which are not of this folde. Them also must I bring, & they shal heare my voice, and there shal be one folde and one shepeherd. Therfore doeth my father loue me, because I put my life from me, that I might take it againe. No man taketh it from me, but I put it away of my self: I haue power to put it from me, and I haue power to take it againe: this commaundement haue I receiued of my father. The texte.

The father knoweth me as his owne naturall sonne, obeying his will in all thynges: and agayne I know the father, who desyreth, that all menne shoulde be saued. At his commaundement I bestowe my life for the safete of my shepe whiche he hathe geuen me to haue them saued: nor any thyng will I so doce, that this worlde, while I am the shepherd) shall haue power to harme them, nor yet the prince of this worlde the deuil: but to kepe my shepe whol and soud, I will geue my selfe to death, by that meannes to abate the woulfes violence: and to deliuer my obedient shepe out of his chawes.

Nor it doeth not fully content the fathers will and my charitie, if I should saue these shepe alone, whiche beyng of the people of Israell, he hath geuen to me to be saued first, but my cure reacheth further than so. There bee also in other nations shepe scattered and in daungier of snares, of woulfes, theues, and murderers: neyther will I rest until I bring these also into the common shepefold. And although they heare not the voice of Moses, or of the prophetes, yet shal they know and geue eare to my voyce, I meane suche as be ordayned to saluacion. For the countrey dooeth not exclude from saluacion. Whosoeuer heareth the voyce of the sonne of God, (who is the very true shepeherd) shalbe saued. Hitherto the flocke of God hath bene scattered through the multitude of false shepeherdes. All doeth promise saluacion, and euery one hath his voyce, and one calleth this waye and an other the other waye. In the meane whyle, the flocke being destitute, is scattered here and there, and dyuers wayes perisheth. But so soone as they shall heare me, all they will know the voyce of the true shepeherde, and they shall come together out of all partes of the worlde. And so shall be made one folde of all, and no moe shepeherdes but one. For that is without this folde cannot be saued. He that dooethe not acknowlage thys shepeherd, shal goe to perdicion. But lest that should happen through my fault, I for thoughly play the good shepeherde, that I lose my lyfe clerely. There is no decay in my father, thoughe all thyng that be create doe perysshe, for he hath nede of nothing, but of mere charitie towardes mankynde, he sente hys sonne to saue all menneif it coulde be. And because I am of the same mynde that my father is of, therfore he doeth dekely loue me, as hys owne sonne, and no hired manne, because of myne owne good will I bestowe my lyfe for the healthy of my fathers flocke, it is so muche more vnlyke that I would, to hurt the flocke withal, seke out myne owne cõmoditie. Amongest men it is a great loue, if one when there is ieopardie towardes and daungier imminente, doeth not priuely steale awaye. I doe more, who with a free good will, geue my selfe to deathe. There be that lyeth in wayte to haue my lyfe, well, theyr malice could not preuaile agaynste me, excepte I were determyned of myne owne free will, to dye for the saluaciõ of mine. These folke of truth are in mind to murther, yet could they not kyl me vnlesse I would my selfe. Therfore they shal not take from me my life, but I will willyngly yelde it vp to redeme my shepe w my death to euerlasting lyfe. Doe not beleue that I shall willingly geue my selfe vnto death, except I take agayn that willingly left lyfe, euen of myn own power, when I will. Herein consisteth the prayse of a true shepeherde, that of hys free will he offereth himself to death for the flockes helth, when it lieth in his owne power to eschew death if he list. No mans power could take my lyfe from me against my wil, but I geue it willingly for the flockes saluacyon. Other dye when as they would not, & being dead they reuiue not. And though a mã may wickedly kill himselfe, yet cannot he reuiue hys bodye agayne, with the lyfe that is once gone. I haue power to doe both, to sende foorth this lyfe out of the bodye, and to call agayn the same into the very selfe sayd body. In case it seme a thyng incredible vnto you, that any manne shoulde willingly redeme an other mannes lyfe with his owne death, no more to say, but it is so thought to my father that sente me into this worlde, by this waye to worke the feate of mannes saluacion. I willingly and gladly doe obey his commaundement, whose wil and mine are all one, and who hath geuen me power to perfourme my will.

I put my lyfe frõ me ꝑ I might take it agayne.

The texte. There was a diffencion therfore agayne among the Iewes for these sayinges, and many of them sayd: He hath a deuil and is madde, why heare ye him? Other sayd: these are not the wordes of him that hath the deuil. Can the deuil opē the eyes of the blinde? And it was at Ierusalē the feast of the dedicacion, and it was winter. And Iesus walked in the temple, euen in Salomons porche. Than came the Iewes rounde about him, and sayde vnto him: How long doest thou make vs doubt? If thou be Christ tell vs playnly.

When Iesus had tolde a long tale of these thinges that were straunge, vnheard of and far aboue the common capacitie of most men, there fel a newe iar in opinions among the people: for some sayde that whiche they had alreadi many tymes sayed, whensoeuer he disclosed theyr secrete conspiracies, or if he spake or did any thyng aboue the power of manne: he hath the deuyll (saye they) and is madde. For the wordes whiche he speaketh, lacke common sence. What pleasure is it to heare this felowe? Againe some folke els sayde: these be no suche mans wordes, as is in the deuils daunger. For his wordes, smelleth of the power of God, specially for as muche as his deedes be agreable to his wordes. As his wordes be, suche be his deedes. He speaketh thinges farre passing mans wit, but the same doth thinges, which far exceede mans power. Can a mad man, and he that is possessed with a deuil open blinde mens eyes? It is ꝑ propertie of deuils to put out ones eyes that seeth, but to geue syght to him that is borne blind, cummeth of the power of God. For asmuche than

as it is euident that that thyng is doen by hym, hys talke cannot procede of a noysome deuil, whose dedes appereth playne to come from a beneficiall God. The Lorde Jesus maketh no aunswere to thys altercacyon, teachyng vs by the way, that the wicked are not alway to be striuen with in wordes: and that by dedes it is rather to bee declared what we can doo, than by woordes: and sumtimes place is to bee geuen to the furie of the ciuil sorte, nor the moderate temperaunce of the ghospell, is at any tyme to bee forgotten. After all thys the feastful daye ministred newe matter to fette in hande and dispute with hym agayne. That solemne feaste was than, whiche they call the dedicacyon of the temple, for because the temple was reedefyed and repayred after the exile that was made at Hierusalem by the Persians. Neyther was Jesus absent at this feasteful daye, and we maker of the law, and of a new temple, that is to say, the churche, cheefe deuyser and maister of the woorkes. And it was winter: A full very mete tyme for theyr myndes, whiche throughe loue of the colde lawe, dyd not burne in the loue of the ghospell. Therefore Jesus was not nowe in the inner parte of the temple, but walked in the porche which ioyneth to the temple, that is called Salomons temple, to the intent that the very place shoulde declare that peacemaker to be presente, whiche shoulde reconcyle all thynges in heauen and earth. There walked truely the aucthor of the lawe of the ghospel, Moses lawe being nowe at a poynte to cease. The Jewes therefore, lest he should escape theyr handes, came rounde about him, whyle he was walkyng there, foremoued with many of his sayinges and dooynges: neyther dyd they well agree among themselues, some maliciously fyndyng faulte with al thing, some gathering of hys dedes and woordes, a certain thing to be honored in him aboue mannes power. And they set vpon hym with these woordes: Howe long wilt thou kepe vs in a doubtful mynde, and therewith sette the people on a roare? If thou bee that verye Messias, whome we looke for, tell it vs openly without all colour. If thou bee Christ, tell vs playnly.

Jesus aunswered them: I telde you, and ye beleue not. The workes that I doe in my fathers name, they beare witnes of me, but ye beleue not because ye are not of my shepe, as I sayd vnto you. My shepe heare my voyce, and I know them, and they folow me, and I geue vnto them eternal life, and they shal neuer perishe, neyther shal any man pluckе them out of my hande. My father whiche gaue them me, is greatter than all, and no man is able to take them out of my fathers hande. I and my father are one. The texte.

But although Jesus was not ignoraunt that they dyd demaunde of a peruerse mynde this thing, whiche they had both often tymes heard, and myght also haue perceiued the same by his doynges, yet he maketh them a gentle aunswere, more desyrous to instruct them, then to angre them. What nedeth it me (sayth he) so often to speake of my selfe, and tell who I am: namely forasmuch as if I doe openly testifie the trueth, ye call the recorde therof arrogancie. I haue already tolde you (if ye wouldе beleue me) who I am: Yea though ye doo not credite my woordes, yet ye cannot be ignoraunt of the thyng wherbe ye desyre to knowe of me.

There is no surer proфe than dedes: ye see my doynges, which your selues doe witnesse I doe at my fathers will and not the deuilles, as some doe misreporte. If my actes be worthie to bee imputed to God, beleue that I am sente of God. But ye dooe neyther beleue my dedes nor my woordes: whereof I am not the cause, but your owne corrupte and suspicious mynde. They that meane well and playnelye and bre not pollured with the naughtynesse of thys worlde, beleue my woordes, and lyke good shepe knowe the voyce of a good shepeherd: and semblably I knowlage them for my shepe, though after the worlde they be poore sely thinges. But ye therfore doe not knowlege my voyce, because ye are not of the number of my shepe, whose simplicitie is lightely taughte, when as youre myndes be swollen with ambicion, leuened with malice, with envie corrupted, infected with couetousnes, and with sundrie affeccions of this worlde defyled, from whiche vices, if ye would purge your minde, verely euen you also should heare my voice: neither should you so doe without benefit. For first of al, ye should therby auoide death, which hangeth ouer all rebels agaynst the sonne of God: moreouer ye shall obteyne therby euerlasting life. For of truth, those my shepe (how simple and vnlerned soeuer they be after the iudgement of the worlde) as long as they doe knowlege me the shepeherde, and all the while they folow me as gyde, doo thrugth my liberalitie, get euerlasting life: when as other that are taken in the worlde for men of great felicitie, goe to euerlasting death. They be symple shepe, harmelesse, weake, lacking all worldely succour. The world riseth against these with all engines and force. But the aduersarye shall not haue so greate power, that he shall be able to take them out of my handes. The world hath auctoritie of pharisees, dignitie of priestes, it hath armed kynges, hye magistrates, iudges, places of iudgement, prisones, cheines, roddes, axes, brodded to pricke with, exile, deathes, & whatsoeuer is wont to bring feare, yea euen to stedfast myndes. On the other syde, it hath riches, pleasures, dignities, honours, and what soeuer is wont to corrupt most vncorrupt myndes. The world vseth all these engines to plucke my shepe out of my handes, but I beeyng theyr protectour & gouernour, no man shall be able to take them awaye from me. What thyng soeuer the worlde shal goe about, the same shall be commodiouse to the shepe, and turne to my fathers glorye. We will not fyght agayne with weapons, or with poyson, we will not counter with them and geue rebuke for rebuke, but without suche defence, we shall yet by a new way, haue the victorye.

my father. &c. is greater than al. ec.

That defence alone, whiche my father hath geuen me to defende my shepe withall, is greater and of more force than all the wepons, where withall the world shal ryse agaynst me and myne. Neyther will my father forsake me, nor I my shepe. The same thyng that I perth in me to doe, I perth also in my father to doe. And because there is no power of the world that can force any thing out of his handes, whiche can doo all thynges with a nodde, neyther can any thyng pull that out of my handes, which he hath taken me to kepe: As there is an exact companionship of power betweene my father and me: so there is a full consent of will. For e be thioughly one, all one in power, all one in will and mill.

The texte. Then the Jewes agayn toke vp stones to stone him withal. Jesus aunswered them: many good workes haue I shewed you from my father, for which of them doe ye stone me? The Jewes aunswered him saying: For thy good workes sake we stone thee not, but for thy blasphemie, and because that thou being a man, makest thy selfe God.

The Jewes being sore moued with these sayinges, not content with so often namyng hys father, by whose defence he promised so great thynges, tooke vp stones again to stone Jesus. But yet no man set vpo him, because his time was not as yet come, in whiche he had determined to dye for the saluacyon of mankynde, but he assayeth to asswage & mitigate theyr furie with gentle woordes. The people are accustomed to take vp stones in theyr handes (sayth he) and to openly to punishe euil doers, and common malefactours. I haue doen nought

els but bestowed benefites on you of my fathers liberalitie: I haue better enstruct them that erred; I haue comforted them that were in affliction, I haue fedde ỹ hungrie, I haue restored the one handed to doth, I haue made cleane the leprouse, I haue healed the sicke, I haue driuen awaye deuils from menne, I haue set them on fote that were diseased of the palsey, and such as had their sinowes shrounken, I haue put awaye feuers, and all diseases and maladies, I haue called the dead to lyfe agayn, & the whole power and auctorizitie which my father hath geuē me, hath bene bestowed to succour you, & it hath bene freely employed to your cōmoditie. In al these thinges now which is ỹ one thing that ye thinke worthy stoning? If he that is good and liberall be stoned, what is to be doen to naughtie folke, & to them that be harmfull? The Iewes being brought in conclusion to this poynte, that eyther they muste bring furthe some faulte agaynste hym, or elles acknowlage they? owne folye, leste they shoulde haue no pretext to hyde their furie withall: we (say they) are not wont to stone any man for his good workes sake, but we count thee woorthy to bee stoned for an horrible crime, of all other moste greate, euen blasphemye: And in thys thyng we folowe the auctorizitie of the lawe, which commaundeth such should be ouerthrowen with stones. Who can suffer any longer, that thou being a man, makest thy selfe God, hauyng eftsones god thy father in thy mouthe, as though we al were not the children of god, and as though thou were by some newe and peculiar waye, Gods sonne, that thou and thy father may be partners in all thynges? Is not this to take a certayn godhead vpon thee? But for asmuche as there is but one God, what manne soeuer (therefore) taketh vpon him to be felow with god in power, is iniurious to Gods maiestie, & a rebel.

Iesus aunswered them Is it not written in your law, I sayd ye are Gods? If he cal the Gods, vnto whome the worde of God was spoken (and the scripture cannot be broken) cō- cerning him, whome the father hath sanctified, and sent vnto the worlde, doe ye say that I blaspheme, because I sayd, I am the sonne of god? If I do not the workes of my father beleue me not: but if I doe, and if ye beleue not me, beleue the workes: that ye may knowe and beleue that the father is in me, and I in him. The texte.

The Lorde Iesus dooeth with suche moderacion make aunswere vnto thys faulte which was layed to his charge, that he clearelye auoyded from him the sinne of blasphemie, and that also he did not, with auy terrible woordes more engreue their frowardnes, and yet he did with great subtiltie defend that his due, whiche he ought not to denye, because he woulde not haue it vnknowen to vs: You (sayeth he) lay blasphemie to my charge because I name God to be my father. Is there not a greater thing than that writte in your lawe, euen in the Psalmes? I haue sayd ye are al gods, & sonnes of him that is hie. If god himselfe geue prayse of the dignitie of his name to them, vnto whome the woorde of God was spoken not onely calling them the children of God, but gods too, and yet was not the maiestie of one god harmed, nor that thing can be vnkenne whiche is declared in holye scripture, howe can ye stretche to me the faulte of blasphemie, that doe say, I am the sonne of God, whome the father hath only sanctified & sent vnto the world, that by the sonne al should obteine holynesse? If cōmunication had betweene God and man, make of men gods, and the children of God, is it not a thing to be borne with, if I say that I am gods sonne, whiche am the woorde of God it selfe, and who was with god before I came into the worlde, and am he that hath coumpany with hym in all thinges. It is no presumpteouse thyng that I take vpon me in my woordes, a thyng beesly that becometh many other, by the auctorizitie of scripture. But it were more conuenient to iudge by the selfe dedes, what name I ought to haue.

If my dedes doo not proue me to be aboue a man, if they haue not the proofe of godly power, beleue not that I am the sonne of God, and that God & I agree throughly in al poynts. But if ye see God the father shew furth his power in me, though algates ye will geue no faithe to my woordes, yet at least beleue the dedes that ye see with your eyes, and take me for arrogant if I doe not perfourme more in dedes, than I take vpon me in woordes. If ye would consider these thinges with pure simple mindes, it should come to passe that ye would geue faythe to my woordes too, and doubte no more, but that the father is in me, and I in the father, that bothe we, the one and the other, are sociate & adherent together naturally & vnseparably, whiles he woorketh by me, whatsoeuer he will, and I doe no where swarue or alter from his exaumple & commaundemente: In so muche that he whiche beleueth on hym, beleueth on me, and whosoeuer speaketh agaynst hym, speaketh agaynst me.

The texte. Agayn they went about to take him. and he escaped out of theyr handes, and went away agayn beyond Iordane into the place where Iohn before had baptised, & there he abode. And many resorted vnto him, and sayde: Iohn did no miracle, but all thinges that Iohn spake of this man, were true, And many beleued on hym there.

When the Iewes had heard these sayinges, being therwith more an angred, wherwith in dede they ought to haue bene reformed, they goe about to lay handes on hym, and so to accomplishe that thyng whiche they had already often attempted in vayne. But Iesus escaped oute of theyr handes, declaryng therby, that he was wel willyng to suffer, when time should come. Therfore when Iesus had taught there sufficiently he geueth place for a tyme to theyr vncurable fury, and wēt ouer again beyond Iordane, to the very place where Iohn begun first to baptise, (for as we haue sayd, he afterward chaunged his place, and baptised at the water of Sichem.) Here now Iesus abode in the desert, as one that had lothed or extremely hated the sinnefull wickednes of the cities. And many came also thither vnto him, out of places þ ioyned nye thereunto, whose myndes the fame that was bruted of Iesus, the sermons and miracles þ were heard and sene, did inflame. And of truth, the very place brought them furthwith in mynde to compare Iesus, who had alreadye shewed some tryall & proofe of himselfe, wt Iohn, whome they had known before. And whā they remembred that Iohn had bene in highe auctorizitie, and yet had doone no thing els but preached the baptisme of penaunce, and without dooyng anye miracles had gotten himselfe so greate estimacyon among the multitude, that he was thought to be Christ: And on the other side, when Iesus had by shewing furth so many miracles, declared a power greater then mans strengthe, þ he had so often put the Scribes and Phariseis to sylēce, with his prudent and pithythie aunswers: Finally, that Iohn himselfe had so often testifyed so highly of Iesus, confessing openly that himselfe was not worthie to lowse the latchet of his thoe: The Jewes (I say) conſideryng all theſe thinges, had thys saying among themſelues. John (say they) when as he wrought no miracle, was in credite with the Jewes. Much more therfore ought faith to be geuen to this man, that with ſo wōderful ſeldome ſene miracles, gathereth o2 winneth faith to his wordes. And albeit Johns recorde of this man were herefore litle beleued, yet now the matter ſelfe declareth that his recorde was true, for ſo much as this ſaide Jeſus hath accomplished mo thinges than John promiſed of the mans behalfe. And ſo now therfore, partely for Johns relations ſake, (whoſe reporte had no ſlender auctorītie among the Jewes,) partly through his own wordes that were ful of godly wiſedome, and partly for his dedes ſake which did beare witnes of his diuyne power, many beleued that Jeſus was verye Meſſias, whiles yet the Phariſeis, the Scribes, and the Prieſtes, did styl continue and perſiſte in they2 frowarde malyce.

¶ The xi. Chapter.

A certayn man was ſicke named Lazarus of Bethania, the towne of Mary, and her ſiſter Martha: It was that Marie which anointed Jeſus with oyntment, and wiped his fete with her heare, whoſe brother Lazarus was ſicke. Therfore the ſiſters ſent vnto him, saying: Lord beholde, he whome thou loueſt is ſicke. When Jeſus neарde that, he ſayde: this infirmitie is not vnto deathe, but for the prayſe of God, that the ſonne of God might bee prayſed by reaſon of it. The text.

And furthwith occaſion is offered, whereby Chriſtes glory and his fathers ſhoulde highly be renowmed, & withal the malice of the phariſees ſhould be prouoked to murther. For while he made his abode at Jordane, it chaūced that a certain mā called Lazarus, lay ſicke in the towne Bethania. This was both the ſicke mās and the twoe ſiſters Marie and Marthaes countrey. Furthermore, Mary was she, that (to ỹ notable proſe of loue towardes Jeſus) with a precious oyntmente anointed his head ſitting at the feaſt, and with her heare wiped his fete, which ſhe had waſhed with teares. Wherof came a great amitie betwene the Lorde Jeſus and this familie. Therfore whē Lazarus was through greuous ſickeneſſe in perill, his ſiſters (truſting vpon the acquayntaunce that they had with Jeſus) ſendeth to shewe him of his frendes dyſeaſe, doubtyng not but that he would of his mercyeloule gētlenes towardes all folke, helpe his frende being in daunger. Behold (say they) he whome thou loueſt is ſicke. For they thought it inough to ſignifie the thing to him that loued the manne, and therefore they made not further intercelſion. To whome Jeſus made anſwere: this ſickenes is not vnto death. God hath ſuffered it to fall vpon hym, that by that occaſion, God and his ſonne ſhoulde be glorifyed, with putting awaye the ſickeneſſe by they2 godly power.

Jeſus loued Martha and her ſiſter, and Lazarus. When he hearde therfore that he was ſicke, he abode two dayes ſtill in the ſame place where he was: then after that, he ſayde to his diſciples: Let vs go into Jewrie again. His diſciples ſayd vnto him: Maiſter, ỹ Jewes lately ſought to ſtone thee, and wilt thou goe thither agayn? Jeſus anſwered: Are there The text.

not twelue houres of the daye? If a man walke in the day he stumbleth not: because he seeth the light of this worlde: but if a man walke in the night, he stumbleth because there is no light in him.

Jesus vvecly loued Martha and Mary, and theyr brother Lazarus too, & yet suffered he him to fall into sickenes, and also to dye: lest we shoulde thinke it an vnsemely thing, if at any tyme good folke and right holy menne bee punyshed with miseries of this worlde: god, as it were dissemblyng, either because so it is expedient for them ỹ suffer, or els because it is to helpeth to set furth the glory of God, not that God doeth through mans harme procure hys owne glory, but that for mans sake, he is wont to turne the euels, which chaunseth vs after the lawe of mans state and condicion, or by casualtie, to our saluacyon, or to hys owne glory. He knewe right well his frendes sickenes: yea, before it was tolde him. But yet was it fit, that his disciples mindes should be prepared and made redy for the great miracle that was to come. Therfore after report was made to Jesus of his frendes disease, he did not furthwith goe thence, but taried still two dayes in that same place, verayly not neglecting the daunger of hys frendes, but looking for a more large matter to worke a miracle of, wherwithal he himselfe, who should sone after dye, might lift vp the mindes of his disciples, weake and feble as yet, to the hope of the resurrection.

But his disciples kepyng silence for feare, because he of late escaping the handes of the Jewes, was thought to be more safe in the deserte, Jesus sayd vnto them: Let vs go into Jewrie again. Whē the disciples heard Jewry named, remembryng howe dengeable and cruell the Pharisies hatred was towardes him, and how often they had taken vp stones to cast at him, how often they endeuored themselues to apprehende him: the disciples (I saye) stoode in dreade not onely of theyr maisters harme, but also of theyr owne. For as yet they had not receiued the holy ghost, and bare a certayne worldely affection towardes Jesus, themselues lykewise through feblenes lothyng death. Therefore disswading him from goyng agayne into Jewrie, they say: Sir haue you forgotten how that there a while ago the Jewes would haue stoned you, vnlesse ye had secretely withdrawen youre selfe? And will you goe thither agayne puttyng your selfe in open daunger? But Jesus did counforte theyr fearefulnesse by a parable, signifying that nothing is to be dredde of them that cleaue to Christ: who is the light of the worlde. For the night hath bayn feares. The daye knoweth no suche terrours. Hathe not the daye (sayeth Christe) twelue houres? The night shall not come before his tyme. In the meane tyme, whosoeuer walketh in the daye, stumbleth not: for why, the sunne maketh him to see and to eschewe stumblyng. But the sunne beeynge taken awaye, whosoeuer walketh in the night, stumbleth, because he lacketh light. I am the light of the worlde, it is right mete that you be guided by me, and folowe my conductyng, and not to goe before the lighte. Be not afrayde before the tyme. So long as I geue light vnto you, there is no iopardie. The night shall come, whē you beeing disseuered from me, shall bee troubled.

The texte. ¶ This sayd he, and after he sayd vnto them: our frende Lazarus sleaperth, but I goe to wake him out of sleepe. Then sayd his disciples: Lord if he slepe he shal doe well inough. Howbeit, Howbeit Jesus spake of hys death, but they thought that he had spoken of the natural slepe. Then sayd Jesus vnto the playnly: Lazarus is dead, and I am glad for your sakes, that I was not there, because ye may beleue: neuertheles let vs goe vnto him. The texte.

When Jesus had with this saying mitigate the Apostles feare, he sheweth the cause of his going furth on his iourney, saying: Our frende Lazarus sleapeth, I therfore go hence to wake him. When as the disciples that were troubled with feare supposed that Jesus dyd not speake of very death, but of the common slepe, they aunswer: Sir if he slepe, there is no cause why you should goe thither, for slepe in sicke folke is woont to bee a token of recouery of health. The disciples wer loth to go into Jewry again, and therfore to the vttermost of theyr power, they doe auoyde the causes of going thither. But Jesus did by litle and litle prepare the myndes of his, earnestly to consyder and t'holde the miracle to come. For he had therfore leauer say fyrst he was aslepe then dead, to the entente he might after the vsage of holye scripture, shewe the hope of the resurrection. For they be rather aslepe then dead, whiche rese to lyue agayne. Neyther is it so easy for any of vs to awake hym that sleapeth, as it is for the Lorde to call the dead to lyfe. Therefore the disciples not vnderstandyng the thyng that he spake of slepe, and waking out of sleape, to let them know that no hidde thyng was vnknowen to him, he sayth vnto them more playnly: Lazarus is dead, nor he added not the thing that was than more stoute to be spoken, as concerning the rayling him vp agayn. For he would rather that to be signifyed than expressed, and hys mynde was rather to doe the thyng, than promyse it, euery where making readye for vs an exaumple of modesty and temperaunce. And because he aunswered them that tolde hym his frende was sicke, that that sickenes was not deadly, but chaunced to the entente that Godes glorye and hys sonnes also shoulde bee set furthe by it: a lyke thyng shewed by the disciples, saying: I am glad that I was not there while my frende was sicke and dyed, and for youre cause I reioyce, that youre truste whiche I perceyue to bee weake as yet, may bee strengthed and confirmed with a more euident miracle. For if the sicke man had mended and recouered healthe (I being present) it might haue bene thought a casualtie: in case I had at hys sisters requestes raysed hym that had bene newly dead, the Phariseis whiche fynde faulte with all thynges, mighte haue layed for them that it had bene a lacking of sences, or but a swoming, & no death, for that sumtimes happeneth in some diseases, that the bodies lying a long time in swoune, come to lyfe agayn. Now for as much as it is a very death in dede, there shal be a more plenteouse matter of beliefe. Therfore let vs go to him. The going thither pleased not the disciples for feare of the Jewes, which feare stacke sore in theyr mindes, and yet coulde they not inpeache the godly and weighty cause of that iourney. And albeit Jesus was not ignorant what thing troubled the myndes of his disciples, and though also he swaged theyr dreade by reason that he sayed he shoulde goe to Bethania and not to Hierusalem, yet neuertheles the myserable of the place that they feared, made also theyr timorouse myndes afrayd. Lazarus is dead and I am glad for your sakes, &c.

Then sayed Thomas, which is called Didimus, vnto the disciples: let vs also go that we may die with hym. Then went Jesus, and found that he had lien in his graue fower daies already. Bethanie was nye vnto Hierusalem, about fifteene furlonges of, and many of the Jewes came to Martha and Marie, to counsolate them ouer theyr brother. The texte.

The

The disciples being carefull and pensyfe, (and yet durste they not refuse to do their maisters commaundement,) Thomas whome the Grekes cal Didimus, and in Latine is named geminus (a twinne) bring more timorouse than the rest, sayeth vnto his felowes: let vs also goe, (if it be certaynly thus) to dye with him, for as muche as his determinate mynde is, so dying bothe himselfe and vs, into a manyfeste perill of lyfe, whereas he may so deuise that bothe shall be in safetie. Jesus than went furth with hys disciples to Bethania, (I founde that Lazarus had lyen in hys graue fower dayes alreadye. Verily Bethania was about fiftene furlonges of from Hierusalem, and thereof came the disciples feare, and therevpon also arose occasion that caused the miracle haue more witnesses and lokers vpon. For the nighnes of the place caused many to come thither out of Hierusalem, euen of fauoure they beare to Marie and Martha, and of neyghbourlye duetie to coumfoute them in the deathe of theyr brother. Whiche kinde of office and duetie was wont to be doen to riche folke, euen for honour sake.

The texte. Martha assone as she hearde that Jesus was cumming, went and met him: but Marie sate stil in the house. Then sayde Martha vnto Jesus: Lorde if thou hadste bene here, my brother had not dyed: neuertheles now I know that whatsoeuer thou askest of god, god will geue it the. Jesus sayeth vnto her: thy brother shall rise agayne. Martha sayeth vnto him: I knowe that he shall rise agayne in the resurrection at the last day.

Martha that diligently beholded her, wente about all thinges with diligence: when she had tolde her that Jesus was come nyghe at hande, she with spede went out to mete hym. Marie kept still the house: Martha therefore when she was within the sight of Jesus (vpon ryght good hope that she had conceiued of her brother to be called to life again) with a doleful voice, she sayd vnto him: lorde if thou hadst bene here, my brother had not bene dead, for thou couldeste soone haue healed him with a woorde. Although in dede the thing is not yet euen at this present vtterly without hope. For I know that what thyng soeuer thou askest of God, he will deny the nothing, although thou wouldest aske life in hym that is dead and buried. These sayinges were spoken of Martha with a minde that neither did vtterly despayre, nor yet fully beleue. Therfore to confirme her beliefe, Jesus sayed vnto her: be of good coumfoure, thy brother shal ryse agayne. Neither did this promise satisfye Marthaes minde, who (because she had but a sley pitrouse hope of her brothers rysing agayne) couldе not but feare the matter. She was afrayd verily, that lyke as he aunswered the messengers, saying that the sickenes was not deathlyke, and with that doubtfull aunswere beguiled them, so was there nowe lyke wise some mistery in his woordes that should disapoynt and deceiue her hope: I knowe (sayeth she) that my brother shal ryse agayne: but that shall bee in the laste daye when we shall all ryse agayne, for some Jewes, namely they that were of the Pharisees secte, beleued that there should bee a generall resurrecyon.

The texte. Jesus sayeth vnto her: I am the resurrection and the lyfe: he that beleueth on me, yea though he were dead, yet shal he liue, and whosoeuer liueth and beleueth on me, shall neuer dye: Beleuest thou this? She sayde vnto him: Ye Lorde. I beleue that thou arte Christ the sonne of God, whiche should come into this worlde.

Jesus therefore to further the woimans affiaunce and opinion of hym, by litle and litle to greater thynges, and that he might declare himselfe to be very he,

he, that not onely could obteyn by prayer, of God, lyfe to the dead (a thing that is redde ofte to bee dooen of other holy men) but to be the very fountayne of lyfe and authour of lyfe, both already geuen and to bee geuen to all thynges, noz that any death is to be feared of them, that putteth theyr confidence and hope in him, forasmuche as thoughe deathe chaunce, it can nothyng hurte hym that cleaueth fast to the fountayne of all lyfe: Jesus (I saye) vpon these consideracions, answereth Martha on thys wise: Thou beleuest Martha that with my prayers I may obtayne of my father, lyfe for thy brother whiche is deade: thou beleuest that thy brother shall bee restored to lyfe agayne (as other shall be) in the last day. Yea but thou must beleue this also: that they which shal ryse in the last daye, shall haue lyfe by me, noz that any man hath lyfe at all, but by my gifte, neyther is any restored to lyfe agayne but by me, not onely touchyng death of body, which is not muche to be feared, but as concernyng the death of the soule also, whiche is most of all to be feared. And the soule that liueth, liueth by me. And the reuiuing soule, reuiueth by me, for I am the very fountayne of resurreccion and lyfe. He that cleueth to me by fayth, although he bee dead in bodye, yet shall he lyue. And take not thys saying to be onely spoken of thy brother, but generally, what man oz woman soeuer hath faythful affiaūce in me, he shall not dye euerlastingly, although his body lye vnclene lye at rest for a tyme. Martha, beleuest thou the thyng that I saye: Martha breyng at thys tyme altogether myndeful to haue her brother reuiued againe, geueth no very apte aunswere to Jesus saying, but yet she did confesse generally how hiely she iudged of him, saying: Loꝛde I dee beleue. I beleue that thou arte Messias, the sonne of the liuing God, who beeing promised of the Prophetes, and many hundreth yeres looked for, art come into the worlde.

And assone as he had so sayd, she went her waye and called Marie her sister secretly, saying: The maister is come and calleth for the: assone as she heard that, she arose quickly and came vnto him. Jesus was not yet come into the towne but was in that place where Martha met him. The Iewes then which were with her in the house, and comforted her, when they sawe Marie that she rose vp hastely, wente out and followed her, saying: She goeth vnto the graue to wepe there. The texte.

Martha vpon these wordes being commaunded to returne home agayne, and to call her sister Marie, (her lamentable mourning already asswaged) doth nowe leaue Jesus, and goeth al cheareful and full of good hope home to her sister: and calleth her secretly out of the throng of suche as were sette rounde about her, and priuely telleth her in her eare the ioyfull thyng, saying: The maister is come and calleth for the. Assone as Marie knewe that Jesus was come, and sawe her sister cheareful and of good coumfort, she her selfe also conceiued some good hope, although Jesus semed to haue come already to late, en whome therfore they dyd not ofrrn call by messenger, because they thoughte it inoughe if he once knewe his frendes perill, committyng all other thynges to hys arbitrement. And so Marie, supposing that his comming was not for nought, without delaye, rose vp to goe mete him before he should entre into the house. And so it was expedient for the better bestowing of that miracle, was to be shewed. For litte it was that many Pharisees shoulde be present, which although they came of very duetie for priuate frendeship sake to se Marie, yet dyd they hate Jesus. These surely woulde not haue folowed Marie, in case they had knowē

howe that she went to mete Jesus. But therefore the Jewes that were with Marie in the house to counfort hir, when they saw that with so great haste she arose vp and wente furth of the house, they folowed hir: suspectyng that vpon a soden pangue and brunte of heuynesse, she wouldbe haue goon to the graue, and there to wepe hir belly full, to saciate her sorowful harte with teares.

The texte. Then when Marie was come where Jesus was, and saw him, she cummeth nye vnto his feete, and sayth vnto him: Lord if thou hadst bene here, my brother had not bene dead. When Jesus therfore saw her wepe, and the Jewes also weping which came with her, he groned in the spirit, and was troubled in himselfe, and sayd: where haue ye laid him? they sayd vnto him. Lorde come and se. And Jesus wept: then sayd the Jewes, behold how he loued hym: And some of them sayde. Could not he which opened the eyes of the blinde, haue made also that this man shoulde not haue dyed?

So then Marie went furth and founde Jesus as yet vnclumed with the walles of the towne: but abode in that place where as Martha had late before met him. For he carried there for Marie, whome he commaunded to be called to hym, chosyng a place fitte to worcke the miracle in: because the graue was not far from that place, as the maner was than to make the dead mens sepulchres nye the hye wayes. When Marie was come thither, assone as euer she sawe Jesus (as in dede she was very worfull) she fell downe at his feete & spake weping, the same thing that her syster had sayde: Lord (sayth she) if thou haddest bene here in due time, my brother had not bene dead, and we had bene without this miserable weping and waylyng. But Jesus, seeing Marie altogether in heuinesse, & the Jewes lykewise that folowed her, weping withall, he dyd not reaste and stande in disputacion with her, as he dyd with her sister Martha, with whome he talked aparte, (the people being remoued aside) neyther doeth he promyse any thyng, when as nowe was place and tyme to performe in dede, that whiche he had promysed Martha: but Jesus (I say) fitte of al groned in the spirite, and was troubled in himself, euen to shewe the truth of his manhoode, ready anon after to bryng furth a sygne of hys diuine power and Godhead. They were no fayned affections, that he was of so lothsome a mynde, and in himselfe so troubled, but there was good skill why he tooke vnto hym those mocyons of mynde, whiche came not of the infirmitie of nature, but by the consente of reason: neyther was it al one cause why other wept and why Jesus was troubled. They bewayled the death of the body of a certayn worldely and naturall affeccyon, Jesus rather misliked and lothed mennes sinnes, whereby so many soules shoulde perysshe: he was dysquyeted throughe the inuincible dyffydence of the Jewes, who wepte for theyr frendes bodely death, when as them selues (as touchyng the soule) were subiecte to eternall death, and yet dyd they not wepe for themselues. Jesus desyred that all men should reuiue from this deathe, and had indignacion that hys doctryne, miracles and deathe, should be lotte in many one. Therefore, after that by horrible mones of spirite and by trouble of mynde, in countenaunce, eyes, and in the whole habite of his bodye, he had geuen a manifest profe of hys manhoode (teachyng also by the waye that it behoueth not to yelde and bee subdued to suche affeccions, or to be called away from thynges of vertue) the memorie of his mind beeyng reframed and stayed, Jesus sayde: where haue ye layed hym? not that he was ignorante therof, but to remoue all suspicion of disceyt from the myracle. His kinsfolkes answereth: Lorde, come and see.

That

That aunſwere proued that the graue was not far of. And nowe as if at the ſight of the graue his ſorow had ben renued, Jeſus wept. Groaning and trou- Jeſus wept ble went before, a token of ſorow that with ſorze entred into hys mynde. Teares are as it were the bloud of a minde already wounded and ouercome. But theſe teares came not from a mind that was ouercome, for they were not beſtowed vpon Lazarus that was dead, but they were for vs, that we ſhould beleue him to be very man, and alſo learne how death of the ſoule is to bee pi- tied and lamented, whiche yet men doe not in ſuche ſorte abhorre and bewaile. But the Iewes ſuppoſing that Jeſus was in ſuche moode for nought elles, but for the death of hys frende, with whome he was acquaynted, behold (ſay they) how entierly he loued Lazarus, for whom being dead he wepeth in ſuch ſort, and yet were they nothing of kinne. And ſome there were that would haue layed to his charge and rebuke, his teares, wherwith he teſtifyed no meane or common loue towardes Lazarus, ſaying: Dyd not thys felowe of late geue ſight to the blinde beggar vp whō he had no acquaintaunce? Why than made he not that his great frende ſhould not die? In caſe he had no will to doe it, why dooeth he nowe ſignifye with teares, loue that cummeth out of ſeaſon? If he could not doe the thing that is more eaſie to be doō, how did he that feat which is of more difficultie to be dooen? The phiſicion many tymes faueth the ſicke mans lyfe. There was neuer mā before gaue ſight to him ꝑ was borne blind.

Jeſus therfore againe groned in himſelfe, and came to the graue: It was a caue and a The tette.
ſtone was layed on it. Jeſus ſayed, take ye away the ſtone, Martha the ſiſter of him that was dead ſaid vnto him: Lord, by this time he ſtinketh, for he hath bene dead fower daies. Jeſus ſayth vnto her: Saied I not vnto thee, that if thou diddſt beleue thou ſhouldeſt ſe the glorp of God? Then they toke away the ſtone from the place where he that had bene dead, was layed.

But Jeſus nowe being nye to the graue, to declare playnly how horrible is the ſtate of a manne that hath alreadye lyen long in ſynne, and with howe great repentaunce, howe many teares are nedeful, that throughe Gods mercy he may penitentely returne to the lyfe of innocencie, dyd grone agayne, and fared euill with himſelfe, exemplyfying in himſelfe verely the thyng whiche ought to be exhibite in vs if we will eſtones repente vs of the euilles and re- turne from the ſame, wherin we haue long tyme muſſeled our ſelues. Nowe than they were come to the graue. It was verelye a caue, whoſe mouthe was cloſed with a ſtone layed vpon it. And that made much to the beliefe of the mi- racle, and to exclude the ſuſpicyon of inchauntment and deluſion, and becauſe the beliefe therof ſhould be more certayne and ſure if the thyng were doorn by the handes of hys frendes, and not with Jeſus owne handes or hys diſciples (for thoſe frendes ſuſpect no fraude or illuſion,) Jeſus than turned him to the and ſayed, take awaye the ſtone. The playne meanyng of Martha, ſiſter to the dead man, did alſo ſer furth & made a more certenie of the miracle. For ſhe now forgetting what Jeſus had promiſed her, did through the weeping and heui- neſſe that ſhe ſawe Jeſus in, come agayne into her olde mynde and affecyon, and conceiued almoſt a certayn diffidence. Verely ſhe feared leſt (the ſtone be- yng taken awaye) the ſtyncke of the deade bodye ſhoulde offende theyr noſes that ſtode by, not conſidering that he which in the general reſurrection ſhould rayſe all mens bodies already many hundzeth yeres before turned into duſte,

coulde rayse a dead bodye euen newlye putrifyed: She (I tell you) thus thynkyng, sayd: Lord, by this tyme he stinketh. For he hath bene dead fower dayes. Iesus therefore did with a litle rebuke, stirre vp the vnconstaunt, and wauering womans fayth, saying: hast thou forgotten how I tolde thee euen now, that if thou biddest beleue, it shoulde come to passe that by thy brothers death god should be glorifyed? If they therefore depending and staying in the expectation, and vpon hope of a newe woonderfull miracle, the stone by the Lorde Iesus commaundement was remoued.

The texte. ¶ And Iesus lift vp his eyes and sayed: Father I thanke thee, that thou hast heard me. Howbeit I know that thou hearest me alwayes, but because of the people which stand by I sayde it, that they may beleue that thou hast sent me: and when he thus had spoken, he cryed with a loude voyce: Lazarus come furth. And he that was dead came furth bounde hande and foote with graue clothes, and his face was bound with a napkin. Iesus sayd vnto them: Louse him and let him go.

And furthwith all theyr myndes and eyes pawsing as men in doubte, our Lord Iesus lifting vp his eyes, to teache vs therby ỳ whatsoeuer great thing we doo, we ought to referre it to God as authour therof, and withall, to declare vnto the standers by, that himselfe should by goddes power doe it, what thing so euer he should doe, saide: father, I thanke the because thou hast heard my desyre, not because that it is an vncouth or a tineduring thing to me: for I know we that for as muche as thy will and myne is all one, thou dooeste alwaye yeare me if I aske any thing of the. For neither do I wil any thing ỳ thou willest not, but thys prayer I make because of the people that stande by: to thentent that whē they haue sene the miracle, they may beleue that I doe al thinges in earth after thy will, and that also I am sente into the worlde to set furthe the glory of thy name amongest men. When he had spoken thus to hys father, he calleth out the dead man by name, saying: Lazarus come furth. He could euen with a becke alone haue made hym that was buryed reuyue and come out of the graue: but this great sterne voyce, was a token of great power, wherwith the sinfull soule that is far of from the syghte of God, beeyng buried in darkenesse of sinne, and rotten with filthinesse of enoȝme crymes, maye ryse agayne, and come furth into the light of trueth. And without delay, he that was dead and buryed, came out byandby at the voyce of him that called vpon him before all theyr eyes. And he came foorth before them, hys body sounde and whole of trueth, but he came with all ỳ clothes vpon hym that he was buried in, that al they might know him to be the same man whome they buried in such apparell thre dayes before. For as corses were wont to be doen withall, his feete were tyed with lystes: and his handes bounde with sepulchre bandes, hys face also bound with a napkin. And nowe than was thys a wunder, the dead corse dyd not quiver and styrre litle & litle, & so there we likelihod of life returning again as for the more parte it happeneth in them, whome we rede to be raysed to life by good and holy men, but thys man that had bene dead fower daies space, came sodaynly to lyfe agayn at the commaundement of a woorde. And to make the miracle seme greater, he, both tied & harde fast bounden, sodeinly esmeth furth abrod out of ỳ depe secret place of a cane. Than (lest any thyng shoulde wante to the full perfecte beliefe of the miracle,) Iesus sayde to the mannes frendes: louse him & let hym goe, that hys mouyng and lustie quicke pace maye declare that the manne doth not onely liue but hath also his healthe. Jesus could haue made the bandes to haue lewsed of theyr owne accorde: but sith with theyr seruice they had throughly the doing of al thinges, by al wayes and pcaues they both excluded suspicion of forgeyng the thynge, and confirmed the certayntie of the miracle. The twoe sisters aduertised Jesus, than beyng absent, of theyr brothers sickenesse by other men. And in the absence of Jesus the man dyed, he was buried, he was kept till he stonke withall. He was mourned for, with solemne recourse of muche people. The sisters theimselues tolde Jesus of hys death, they shewed him the graue: when ye had muche people waityng vpon hym, the stone is taken away with other mens handes, and with other mēes handes, was he lewsed that came foorth of the graue. Here is nothyng left to the vnfaithfull that they coulde lay for their excuse. Neither did Jesus, when he had wrought so notable a miracle, speake any stoute word of himself. He did not checke & reproue the people because their accustomed maner was to slaunder, & fynd faulte with his miracles: he requireth no thanke of Lazarus or of his systers.

Then many of the Jewes which came to Marye, and had seen the thynges which Jesus did, beleued on hym: but sum of them went their waies to the Phariseis, and tolde them what Jesus had doen. Then gathered the hie priestes and Phariseis a counsell, and saied: What doe we? for this man dooeth many miracles: if we let him escape thus, al men will beleue on hym: and the Romaynes shall come and take away bothe oure rowme and the people. The texte.

Therefore, many that came of frendly duetie to Martha and Marie, Lazarus sisters, when they had seene so notable a miracle, they beleued ý Jesus was Messias, and stacke to his doctrine, the power wherof they sawe before theyr face to bee so greate and effectuall. And truely some of them returnyng home to Hierusalem, shewed to the Phariseis the thinges that Jesus had dooen a litle of Bethania. Therfore, when thys great acte beyng so exceadyng wonderous was heard of ý Bishops and Phariseis, who for the euident declaration of gods power, ought to haue worshipped Jesus, and to haue beene ioyous on Gods behalfe, they being styrred with the prickes of enuie, cannot now forbeare any longer, but (to cause the thyng seme more lawefully dooen) they call a wicked counsayl, wherein they consult emong themselues, by what way and meanes they maye resiste suche great daungiers. For albeit that the respect of priuate wealth, & sickenes of soule set thē on a woodnes against Jesus that was beneficiall towardes al men, yet wil they that thys matter do apperteyn vnto the healthe & preseruation of all the people. What is your aduyce (say they) to be dooen? This manne dooeth many wonderful thynges, and exerciseth himself daily in doing of miracles. If we suffer him to goe on as he hath begun, it will come to passe, that lyke as now many of the people dooeth thinke hiely of hym, so within a whyle al wil take him for Messias. Whiche thyng yf it hap to be, and the bruite therof cum to the Romaines (that is to wit) that the nacion of the Jewes hath forsaken the emperour and are fallen to a new king of theyr owne, whiche Romaynes do well knowe that of late a certayn kynge hath been toked for of the Jewes whiche shoulde set the nacion at libertie, the Romaines will make cruell warre agaynst vs: And so with al the prophane

Gentiles

Gentiles shall kepe with force thys holy place, and with manues slaughter make hauocke and destroy the whole flocke of the Jewes.

The texte. And one of them named Caiphas, being the hie priest the same yere, said vnto them: ye perceiue nothing at all, nor consider that it is expedient for vs that one man die for the people, and not that all the people perishe. This spake he not of himselfe, but being highe priest the same yere, he prophecied that Jesus should dye for the people, & not for the people only, but that he would gather together in one, ꝑ childrē of god that were scattered abrod.

Whereas this their aduice, vnder the pretence of a publike health, tended to the destruction of Jesus Christ, thautour of all health, yet was it thought vnto Caiphas to slender a deuice and to weake a counsell. He was the bishop of that yeare. For that dignitie, as thoughe within a whyle it shoulde fayle for altogether, had ceassed to be a continuall roume: but beyng a bearfice lette to sale, it was fined for euery yere to the prynces. Therfore he that professed him selfe chiefe prelate of religion, being more wicked then all other, blameth the cowardship of them that with deliberate counsell did further de bate the matter, whether Jesus were to be put to death or nay: whereas it, (thought he) all other thynges set aparte, was to be dooen incontinently and with spede. You (sayeth he) that sitte deliberatyng whether thys felow that doeth suche thynges, is to be put to execucyon or no, seme not to wey the matter as it is: not yet consider not how it is profitable and expedyent for euery man, that thys one should dye for the people, rather than that he being saued, al the people should perishe. This saying came not of the bysshops owne mynde, that was vngracious and full of murder, but by reason of the office of priesthode, whiche he than bare, the spirite of prophecie dyd bryng forthe a godly prophecie by the mouth of a wicked man: which sayd prophecie did geue forthe knowledge how it should come to passe, that Jesus should by his death redeme & saue the Jewes: not onelye to bryng thys to effecte, that suche of the Jewes as dydde beleue should be saued alone, but that those also among the Gentiles whiche lyued in diuers countreys dispersed through the wholle worlde (but to thys ende poynted that they shoulde once be made the children of God through fayth of the ghospell,) might be counite together, and that the man of Inde, the manne of Ethiope, the Greke, the Scithian, and the Britan, should ioyne together in felowship of a common vniuersall churche.

The texte. Then from that day furth, they toke counsel together for to put him to death. Jesus therfore walked no more openly among the Jewes, but went his way thence into a countrey nigbe to a wildernesse, into a citie whiche is called Ephraim, and there continued with his disciples.

Now therfore, the Pharisees being stablished with this voyce of the wicked bishop, doe in theyr herres certaynly determine (which thyng they often before attempted as occasion serued) to rid Jesus out of the way, by all meanes possible, as though ther by they well prouided for the preseruacion of the comuion weale: and agayne, leste they vngracious act shoulde be the lesse sinfull, they coulour their impietie: supposing they had now found out matter to stirre and prouoke al the people likewise, openly and by the lawe, to put Jesus to death, as a hurtefull man to the whole nacyon of the Jewes: neyther neded they (as they thought) any fault or any new cause to lay to hys charge. Jesus therfore, from

from whom nothyng was hid, although the rumoure of the people did not aduertise him of the Phariseis and priestes pretended malyce, shewyng himselfe a very man, al ỹ while he was in Jury came not abrode, lest he should increase their fury. But he conueied himselfe a farre of, from the bondes of the citie of Jerusalem, the killer of Prophetes, & went to the citie of Ephraim: wherunto the deserte was nye, signifying by that dede, that the wicked Jewes should forgoe their Synagogue: and a newe people (that should not sticke to the vnfrutefull workes of Moses lawe, but to the fayth of the gospell) should be gathered together, and a churche made of them: whiche people should also (as the signification of the Hebrue woorde betokeneth) growe of a small beginnyng into an exceadyng great thing: for Ephraim, to the Hebrues, signifieth encreasing. Jesus therfore tarryed here with his fewe disciples, whether though they were wofully afearde of themselfes also, yet durst they not forsake their Lorde.

And the Jewes Easter was nye at hande, and many went out of the countrey vp to Jerusalem before the easter, to purifie themselfes. Then sought they for Jesus, and spake among themselfes as they stode in the temple: what thinke ye, seyng he cummeth not to the feast daye? The hye priestes and Phariseis had geuen a commaundement that if any man knewe where he were, he should shewe it, that they myght take hym. The texte.

Now the very time was come, sothly apoynted of the father, when Christ should be offered vp in sacrifice for the saluacion of mankinde. For that most religiouse day of the Jewes was at hande, which they call phase, that is to wete, a passing ouer: (in English Easter) by that name calling to their remembraunce that dede, which was, that long before ỹ tyme the bloud of a lambe striken on the postes, did saue the Hebrues from the swoorde of the Aungell that kylled the Egyptcians: and those only houses passed ouer that had their postes marked with the lambes bloud. Now therfore before the feast which was here nie, many went out of diuerse coastes of Palestine to Jerusalem, there being purified with ceremonies of their law, to solemnise ỹ most holy feast. And to let vs know that nothing is more vnreligiouse than Jewish religion, which consisteth in visible thinges: & sith also ỹ while they take great bede with much paine deuocio lest they ouerslip any thing that was prescribed them of Moses, or that was added to by the Phariseis: they be not loth to doe that thing on the moste sacred daye, whiche is of al thinges most wicked, that is to wete, to shead ỹ bloud of an innocent mā. Therfore, whē there was a great throng of people together, & many of thē knewe Jesus, whose maner was to be present at suche feastes, they wondered ỹ he was not there present: and standing in the temple, they talked one to an other what should be the cause that contrary to his customable maner, Jesus was absent frō so solemne & high a feast. From which solemnitie would not he yet altogether absent himselfe, but to thentente he myght come more loked for, he deferred his cumming vntill suche time as he thought best. Furthermore the bishops and Phariseis suspecting him sumwhere to hide himselfe for feare, they trauayled & gaue a commaundemēt yea with an autoritie also, that if any mā knewe where he were in secrete, that they should shew it that he might be apprehended. With these approued holy customes, the bishops and Phariseis, that were guides & maisters of religion, prepared themselfes to the feastful day, but in the meane while they vnwares procured the saluacion of the worlde.

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon

The.xii. Chapter.

The texte. Then Jesus sixe dayes before Easter, came to Bethanie, where Lazarus had been dead whom he raysed from death. There they made him a supper, and Martha serued, but Lazarus was one of them that sate at the table with hym.

Jesus therfore knowyng that they had concluded vpon his death, and that the tyme also was nigh, when as he had determined willingly to be offred in sacrifice, an vnspotted lambe for the saluacio of the worlde, he would no longer kepe hymselfe in secrete, but as one offeryng hymselfe to be a sacrifice, the seuenth daye before the feast of Easter, in whiche daye the Jewes were wount at a solemne supper, as it were, to taste before hand the paschall lambe, he returned againe to Bethania: both to call to remembraunce the lately dorn miracle, and also to imprinte the hope of the resurrection in the myndes of his disciples, whom he knewe should be with his death exceedyngly troubled in mynde: For there dwelt Lazarus whom he had a fewe dayes before rayseth from death to lyfe. And the place was more notable for beeyng nigh to Jerusalem. There therfore a supper was made readie for Jesus. Martha serued him at supper: But Lazarus was one of the numbre that sate at supper with him, to make it more certain to them all, that it was no vision nor gost whiche lately was seen to goe out of the graue home to his house, forasmuche as he had now liued after his death many dayes, and had also, both commoned and eaten with other.

The texte. Then toke Mary a pounde of oyntmente, called Nardus, perfite and precious, and anoynted Jesus feete, and wiped his feete with her heare, and the house was filled with the odour of the oyntment.

There did Mary, (who with a siguler loue, loued the Lorde Jesus ardently,) come to the feast, as wel for many other causes, as for the late benefite shewed vpon her brother: and shedde vpon Jesus head sitting at the table, a great quantitie of very precious oyntmente, whiche was made of the beste kynde of Nardus, to the mountenaunce of a pounde: Insomuche that the whole house was filled with the sauour of the oyntmente. And yet was the womans (suche loue as hath not been heard) not herewith content, but anoynted his fete with oyntmente, and washed them with teares, and wiped them with her heer: not that she thought Jesus did delite in suche delicacies, whose moderate lodyctie she knew, but great feruecie of loue caused her doe as her minde gaue her, without stay of herselfe: for truely she knew not nor cõsidered what she did: but yet through doing honor, she gaue aduertisemẽt before hand of Jesus death & burial, & was a figure of the churche, whiche should embrace with godly honor, the lord whom the Synagogue despised.

The texte. Then saied one of the disciples, euen Judas Iscarioth Symons sonne, which afterward betraid him, Why was not this oyntmente solde for thre hundred pence & geuen to the poore? This he saied not that he cared for the poore, but because he was a theefe, and had the bagge, and bare that whiche was geuen.

The disciples thought much at the bestowing of this oyntmente as a thing wastfull?

wastfully spente, but specially Judas Iscarioth was moued withall: to whom as to the wurst of them al, the purse was committed, to thintent that the wurst man should be the disposer & later out of the naughtiest thyng: he was wonte, as the maner of thē that hath the handelyng of money is, which is common to many, to steale priuily some what therof to himselfe: not with a single pure minde depending of the maisterchip & autozitie that Jesus had ouer him, but euen than making prouision foz himselfe, wherwith he might liue, after he were departed out of Jesus felowship. He therfoze, repining against Mary sayed: to what purpose is it to loose so precious a thing? foz neither is our Lozd & maister delighted in suche nyce thinges, neither is this sumptuousnes seming foz our feast. And in case this woman had bren determined to bestowe so precious a thing, when it had been geuen, it might haue been solde and the price therof geuen to the poore. This (ye wote well) had been moze godly and moze seming foz our maister and vs too. Albeit in dede the other Apostles also did speake these thynges of a simplicitie, and mente none euill therin, yet had Judas a farre vnlike mynde, though his woordes were like vnto theirs: foz he had no care of the poore mens cause, but he kept the purse: and the thing whiche frendes sente of their free good will, dyd he full vniustly kepe, & therof priuily stole some what, euen than shewyng some proofe of hymselfe, howe vnfit he is foz the ministracion of Gods woozde, whose mynde the inozdinate desire of money doth possesse.

Than sayed Jesus, let her alone: against the daye of my burying hath she kept this: foz the poore alwayes shall ye haue with you, but me haue ye not alwaye. Much people of the Jewes therfoze had knowledge that he was there. And they came, not foz Jesus sake onely, but that they might see Lazarus also whom he raised from death: but the hye priestes helde a councell that they myght put Lazarus to death also, because that foz his sake many of the Jewes went awaye, and beleued on Christe. The texte.

But Jesus did so apease his disciples murmuryng, that yet he did not openly disclose the malice of Judas, & in suche wise he toke Maries part, that he signified, howe of his owne voluntarie wil, he should dye. Foz our Lozd Jesus most coueted to haue all folke induced to beleue: not that by compulsion of man, but by his owne good aduisement, he should suffre death foz the saluacio of man, euen as he would and when he would. Grudge ye not (sayeth he) at this womans obsequiousnesse & benefite towardes me. This coste is not lost, but this honoz is doen and bestowed against the time of my burieng, which honoz this woman doth now preuenting the thing, foz than shall there lacke wherwith to anoynte. you do iudge well of me, that beyng aliue I haue alwaie refused suche pleasante thinges, yet I will that my death and burial be cumly and honozable: doe not haue enuy at this my honoz, which is bestowed on me, that shall shoztely departe hence, ye shall haue alway with you ready at your hand, great plenty of these common sozte of poore men, whose nede ye maye succour: ye shall haue me but a while. And because many of Jerusalem came much to Bethania by reason of the nynesse, and bycause of Lazarus, in that he was a notable & a ryche man, and therby knowen to many, (but yet was he the moze knowen through the fame of the late doen miracle:) it was not vnknowen abzode that Jesus was at Bethania. And anon verie many came thither out of the citie thicke and thzefolde, partely to see Jesus (whose fame and renowne, the myracle that was so notable, dyd muche encrease,) partly also they came to see Lazarus, whom they heard to be rayled from death to lyfe. The curiositie that is naturally geuen to man, caused them thus to dor. Moreouer, enuy and despite against Jesus had so blinded the myndes of the priestes and the Pharisees, that it did not suffice their malice to put Jesus to death, but they sel in deuise also howe to make Lazarus away, against whom they couldе lay no colour or likelyhood of any fault. They had cast out of theyr Synagogue ỹ blinde man, because he did boldly defende Jesus glory among thē, now their enuy was growen to suche malice, that they were in mynde to kyll Lazarus, a mā of great estimacion and power, of whom they were neuer by any woorde or dede prouoked and offended, and against whom they couldе not imagine any thing: and kill him would they for nothing els, but because many Jewes being moued with so manifest a myracle, did fall awaye from the Pharisees conspiracie, and beleued in Jesus.

The texte. On the nexte daye muche people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus should come to Jerusalem, toke braunches of palme trees and went forth to mete him and cried Osanna: blessed is he that in the name of the Lorde cummeth kyng of Israel. And Jesus got a yong asse, and sat theron as it is written: feare not daughter of Sion, beholde thy kyng cummeth sittyng on an asses colte.

But the daye folowyng when as a great route of men (which were assembled at Jerusalē because of the feastfull day,) had knowledge that he would leaue Bethania and come to Jerusalem, to doe him honor came they to mete him with braunches cut of from the palme trees, wherwith they strawed the waie that he should goe by. For of this tree were theyr garlandes made that gate victorie, and it was a tree perteyning to triumphes, al waie grene, long and hye, hard to be climed vpon: but of a pleasante swete frute, and by a certayne peculiar power of nature it riseth vp against the weight and burden that is layed vpon it. And that saying whiche is written in the Psalmes, Osanna, prayse and honor be to him that being loked for of vs, cummeth in the name of the Lorde, was cried by aloude, like as the people is wonte to publiche and witnes a common ioy. Jesus also (euer before this tyme beareyng a full lowe sayle, and a contemner of worldely glory,) was than contente to come to Jerusalē with a newe solemne pompe. For after he had gotten vnto him an asse, he rode vpō her, wheras before he was wount to walke his iourneyes on foote, partly to teache his howe vaine is the honor of this worlde, partly to ratifie that whiche Esay prophecied of him, for it is written. Feare not daughter of Sion, beholde thy kyng cummeth to thee, meke & gentle, sitting vpon the colte of an asse. Suche a pompe certainly becummeth well the kyng of the spirituall Jerusalem, whiche is the churche.

The texte. ¶ These thinges vnderstode not his disciples at the first, but whan Jesus was glorified, then remembred they that suche thynges were written of hym, and that suche thynges they had doen vnto him. The people that was with him when he called Lazarus out of his greaue, and rayled him from death, bare recorde. Therfore mette him the people also because they heard he had doen suche a miracle.

The apostles verily at that season vnderstode not these thinges, supposyng thē to be doen by casualtie, but after that Jesus through death, through his resurrection, & by sendyng downe the holy gost was glorified, than cōferring the thing that was doen with the wordes of ỹ prophetes, they wel perceiued, that the wordes whiche the people cried out a loude, & also the thing that he

thus cummyng did, was written of hym. For there were some whiche loked for suche a kyng as worldly kinges be. Christes pleasure was to haue those mens expectacion derided, declaring that the kyngdome of the ghospell doeth not consist and stande in the aide and defenses of this worlde, but in mekenes, and heauenly doctryne. This great and notable affeccion that was in the people, came of those mens stirryng and prouocacion, which had of late been present a litle before at Bethania, when the Lord rayfed Lazarus out of his graue, and so they made relacion of that thyng whiche they sawe with theyr eyes, to other. And therof came it that suche a preace of people came forth to mete Jesus, because they had learned of them that sawe it, how that this wonderous miracle, suche one as had neuer been hearde of since the beginnyng of the worlde, was wrought by hym. And accordyng as the thyng broughte with it in open appearaunce, a certain godly power, so had he suche honour geuen vnto hym, as was neuer geuen to any prophete.

The pharisees therfore sayed among themselues: perceyue ye howe we preuayle nothyng? Beholde all the whole world goeth after him. There were certayne Grekes amonges them that came to worshyp at the feast, the same came therfore to Philip (whiche was of Bethsaida a cite in Galile) and desired him saying: Sir we would fayne see Jesus. Philip came and tolde Andrewe. And agayne Andrewe and Philip tolde Jesus. The texte.

That thing droue the myndes of the priestes and pharisees almost into desperacion: neyther do they repent them of theyr wicked enterprise, but there was a spitefull mutteryng emong them, and they sayed: ye perceiue that with all our crafty policies and deuices against him, we go nothyng forwarde in oure purpose, but þ more we do resist, the more doeth his autoritie florishe, & the more earnestly doeth the people fauour hym. Before this he had but fewe disciples, beholde nowe the whole world falleth from vs to hym, in somuche that nowe it is sumwhat daungerous for vs, openly to arest him. The vngracious pharisees had this communicacion, to thintent thei might therby sturre and prouoke eche one another to set on, and sodainly to come vpon the lord Jesus, with more succour and greater guiles: wherfore thei did not atchieue and accomplishe this mischieuous acte, before they had the graund consent of the Pharisees, the scribes, the priestes and the auncient rewlers, the people also (as in dede theyr myndes is inconstant) beyng inflamed with thesame fury and wicked myndes, yea and with Pilate the vicerores auctorite: neyther yet without deceptfull craft brought in withall by Judas the traytour. The people notwithstanding did that tyme so fauour Jesus, that the Gentiles also whiche for religion sake came to Jerusalem there to prape, muche desired to see Jesus. The reuerence of that temple was so great, that out of farre countreies many went thither of deuocion to serue god, and for religion sake. Verily from that tyme, a certayne likelyhood of a thyng to be, was shewed, that is to wit, that the Gentiles being before Idolaters, should haue recourse & come to be of Christes churche (whereof that temple at Jerusalem bare the figure) and should louingly embrace Jesus with due religion, whome the Pharisees reiected. These folke therfore beyng very desirous to see Jesus, of whom they had heard so wonderful thinges, yet they were bashefull, and with shamefastnesse letted to approche vnto hym: for in dede they coueted not only as he passed by lightly to se him in the thyng, but also to salute him, and to heare hym speake nere hande: these persones, I saye, do come to Philip, to whom (by reason of nighnesse of countrey, for he was borne in Bethsaida a cite in Galilee of the Gentiles) they were knowen: and their cummyng to hym was, that he would make them wape into Jesus. For they gaue knowledge that they were very desirous to se Jesus. Philip brake the matter to Andrewe, they being cõpanions of one citie. For Andrewe was of a greater auctoritie with the lorde, because he was fyrst of all called. They both therfore wente to Jesus, and declared vnto him that certayne folke there was, not Jewes, but Gentiles, whiche out of measure desyred to se him, if he would vouchesafe to admitte them.

The texte. And Jesus answered them, saying: The houre is come that the sonne of manne must be glorified. Verely, verely, I saye vnto you, except the wheate corne fall into the grounde and dye, it bideth alone: But if it dye it bryngeth furth muche fruite. He that loueth his life shall destroye it, and he that hateth his life in this worlde, shall kepe it vnto life eternall.

But when Jesus was certified by his disciples that the heathen also longed to see him, when as so lewdly he was contemned of the Pharisees, and priestes, vpon this occasion he began to open his death to his disciples, and what great fruite it should bring, not onely to the Jewes, but to al the worlde: for because in like maner as the miracle of raysing vp Lazarus, alone did drawe and prouoke not onely many Jewes, but also Gentiles to his loue: so shoulde his death and resurrection moue and drawe all the countreyes of the whole worlde: Than Jesus gaue answer to his disciples that shewed him the godly minde and affection of the heathen, and sayed: Ye dyd heare the Jewes raile with a loude voice: blessed is he that cummeth in the name of the Lorde. Ye see the Gentiles drawe to me with lyke desyre, and why? Because now the tyme is nygh, that whan the Pharisees beleueth that the sonne of man shall bee vtterlye extincte, than shall he bee most glorified with all nacions of the worlde. It is a newe kynde of glory, and by a newe wape must it be gotten. I beyng aliue, haue drawen fewe to me: but when I am dead, my fame shalbe spred abrode, and drawe me than my bodily presence hath doen. Ye be loth to heare of death, yet take that for moste sure, vnlesse the wheat corne be caste into the grounde, and beyng buryed there, dooe rotte and dye, it shall bring furth no fruite, but it only alone abideth safe: But if it be dead and lye buried in the grounde, it spryngeth vp againe with muche gayne of fruite, yealdyng for one corne an hundreth, and nowe the corne standing toyfully vpon the grounde, garnisheth the fieldes abrode in many places, and with a plenteous encrease enricheth the countreye. The thing that is commodious to many is the more to be coueted, and the saluacion of many is to be redemed with the death of a fewe. So to bestowe life is no perishemente, but auauãtage, and this is not to loose the lyfe, but to kepe it. For the soule doeth not perishe whiche departeth from the bodye, nor the bodye dooeth not altogether go to destruccion, that in tyme to come shal liue more blessedlye, and be immortall. Therfore whosoeuer loueth his life in this worlde, whyle he euill kepeth it he loseth it. Contrary, whosoeuer hateth his life in this worlde, and for the furtheraunce of the ghospel casteth it into perils, and betaketh it to death, he doeth not loose lyfe whiche he so bestoweth, but kepeth it: and for a mortall, a shorte, and a wretched lyfe, shal receyue at the time of resurrection an eternal and blessed lyfe. In lyke maner, he that kepeth the wheat corne looseth it, that euen els of it selfe would perishe, but he that soweth and burieth it in the grounde, in conclusion well saueth it, within a whyle after to receiue the same agayne with auantage: whiche he thought he had loste.

Except the wheate corne fall into the ground and dye.

If

If any man minister vnto me, let him folowe me: and where I am, there shall also my minister be: if any man minister vnto me, him will my father honour. Nowe is my soule troubled, & what shall I saye? Father deliuer me from this houre, but therfore came I vnto this houre. Father glorifie thy name. The texte.

There is therfore no cause why my death should trouble you: whiche death once shalbe folowed, to thintent that you, whiche shalbe folowers of death, may be partakers both of glory & immortalitie. As the autour of the gospels businesse, doe bestowe my life willingly for the saluacion of the world, and my fathers glory. You shall be ministers of the same businesse, reporting and publishing abrode through the whole world with your preaching, those thinges that I haue both wrought and taught. The same thing that the Scribes and Pharisees doe nowe with great craft deuise against me, shal the wicked execute vpon you, whiche vngracious persones louyth the world more than God: and whiles ful folishly they kepe this life, they loose euerlasting life, and cast themselues headlong into euerlasting death. If one professe himselfe my disciple or minister, it behoueth the same to folowe me their master and Lord. For it is mete that the seruaunte be not pulled away from his Lord, neither in prosperouse thinges nor aduersaunt. Whom I haue partakers and companions in affectious and aduersitie, them will not I diseuer from the felowship of felicitie: but where soeuer I become, there shall also my seruaunte be. And though the world reiecte me neuer so much, yet shall my father enhaunce me to glory. And in case any maune behaue hymselfe as a faithfull seruaunt to me, hym (in recompence of transitorie harmes, and for ignominie wherwith he liueth in rebuke among men) my father shal bewtifie and honour with eternall felicitie, & true glory. For my father shall acknowledge not me only, but the ministers also of his only sonne, and shall bouchesafe like reward vpon the, whom he hath knowen to suffre suche like thinges as his sayed sonne did suffre: Affliction had here, hath of trueth his anguishe and paine, by reason of the infirmitie of mans body. But the saluacion of many well considered, the felicitie of euerlasting life well pondered, whiche are redemed and recouered with a short torment, ought to conuince this quiuering feare of mans nature. And if in time to come, ye feale that nature irketh and repineth against the dreadfull torementes and deathes, wherewith ye be menaced and threatned, doe not vtterly sterte awaye as men discomfeited & clearly ouercome, but let valiantues of mynde alwaye depending of the father of heauens ayde, banquish in you the feblenes and cowardnesse of mans nature. But euen nowe also I feele myne owne soule troubled in my selfe, because the daye of my death is nye. I see a soze greuouse tempest imminent and hang ouer me. What shall I saye, or whither shall I turne me? shall I yelde to the infirmitie of the body, which abhorreth death? Shal I flee to the succours of the worlde? or shall I for the loue of mine owne life neglect the life of the whole worlde? no not so. I will accommodate and applye my selfe to my fathers will. My naturall infirmitie, beyng soze incumbred with the horribleneste of death, shall say vnto him: Father, if it may be, kepe me safe from this instant perill of death. But charitie, whiche muche desireth mans saluacion, furthwith putteth to this saying: Not rather, for all that (sayeth she) (in case it be fit and expedient so to be) let the coueted death come, when as after the will of the spirite, whiche doeth no where disagree with thyne, I haue willyngly and wittingly offered my selfe to death. Nowe dyng thou it to passe, that my death and resurrection maye cause thy name to be notable and famouse in al countreys of the worlde, that when thou art once knowen, the people honozing thee, may attayne to eternall saluacion.

The texte. Than came a voyce from heauen, saying: I haue both glozified it, and will glozifie it agayne. The people therfore that stode by and heard it, sayed that it thundred: other sayed an aungell spake to hym. Jesus answered, and sayed. This voice came not because of me, but for your sakes. Nowe is the iudgement of this worlde, nowe shall the prince of this worlde be cast out. And I if I were lifte vp from the earth, will drawe all men vnto me. This he sayed signifying what death he should dye.

After our Lord Jesus had thus prayed, with his eyes lift vp into heauen, the voice of the father came from heauen saying: I haue glozified my name, and will after this moze excellently set it forth. For already his name throughout so many miracles was wared great and muche knowen among mennne by his sonne, but mosse chiefly by raysing Lazarus from death to lyfe. And soone after would he augment the glozy of his name in all þ nations of the worlde by the crosse, by the resurrection, and by the ascendyng vp into heauen, by sendyng downe of the holy ghost, and by the preaching of his Apostles. Moreouer the route of people whiche stode not farre of, when they heard the voice that came downe from heauen, because they toke lyfle hede, neyther was it euident to them vnto whom that voice did appartayne, that cumpany of people (I say) agreed not in their opinions of the thyng. For some did interprete the voice that they thought they heard to be a thunder, for the voice came out of the cloudes. Some againe did interpretate the thyng moze fauourably, saying some angell did speake vnto hym. But Jesus to make them take moze hede, & also to put awaye from him all suspicion of prayse, sayeth: this voice which is neither noise of thundres nor voice of angell, but the voice of my father which hath heard my prayers, came not for me who knowe in my selfe my fathers minde, but it is come for you, that ye maye vnderstand that my father & I doe agre, and that whatsoeuer I dor, he being the authour, I doe it for your saluacion sake. You haue hearde what my father hath promised as touching my death. Nowe shortly must Satan be wrestled withal for good & all, who is the prince or rather tiranne of this worlde, & through sinne hath hitherto kept al thē in death, which loue this worlde. Nowe is the cause of the whole worlde drawen into iudgemente, but falshood beyng reproued, trueth shall come to light: And whiles the prince of the worlde, the authour of death, thinketh himselfe a conqueroure, he shall through death be put from his tiranny. For all men shalbe pardoned theyr sinnes through fayethe of the gospell. Sinne once take away, the tirantes force & strength is quelled, who is valiant & mighty in no other weapon saue sinne onely. And as he that shall thinke himselfe to haue the victory shal sodainly be expelled his kingdom: so I that shalbe thought vtterly made away, after I be lifted vp frō the earth, will drawe all thinges on euery side vnto me, of right chalengyng that thyng vnto me, which hitherto he hath kept in possession by tyrāny. Furthermoze in that Christe sayed: When I shalbe lifte vp from the earth (because the saying was doubtfull, & yet right fitte to expresse þ thing,) he would signifie what kinde of death he should dye. For they that are hanged vp vpon a crosse, hang vp on hye that all men may see thē a farre of: And he gaue them withall a prury warning of the old storye, which sheweth that a brasen serpent beyng a figure gure of Christe, and set vp vpon a hie pole, did geue to all them that beheld it, though it were a farre of, present helpe against the mortall woundes of serpentes.

The texte.

The people answered hym. We haue heard out of the lawe that Christe bideth euer, and howe sayest thou, the sonne of man must be lift vp? who is that sonne of man? Then Jesus sayd vnto them: yet a litle while is the light with you. Walke while ye haue light, leste the darknes come on you. He that walketh also in the darke, wotteth not whither he goeth: while ye haue light, beleue on the light, that ye may be the children of the lyght.

And yet were there some in that assembly of people, which did coniecte (because of the foresprekyng of death) that he had spoken of the tormente of the crosse. And therupon they stode in argument, that he was not Messias which published that himselfe should dye: whereas scripture geueth to Messias, power, and a kyngdome eternall. For thus writeth Daniel: His power is an euerlastyng power, which shal not be taken away: and his kingdome shal remaine for euer. And again Micheas the Prophete speaketh thus: His outgoing hath been from the beginning, and from euerlasting. Also Esai sayeth: And there shalbe no ende of his peace. Yea and moreouer the prophecie of the psalmes doeth promise hym a perpetuall priesthood, saying: Thou art a priest for euer after the order of Melchisedeck. Than say they therfore: We knowe by the lawe, that when Messias shall come, he shall abyde & continue for euer. What meaneth it therfore that thou sayest, it shall come to passe that the sonne of man shall be lift vp from the earth? but and if to be lift vp from the earth be to dye, and yf thou wilt haue the sonne of man (so often as thou speakest of him) to be taken for thee thy selfe, eyther shalt thou not dye, or els that sonne of man is not Messias, if the prophecie saye truetly.

Well, because these sayinges were spoken of malice: Jesus made no answere to them. Verely, he myght haue answered that he was not only man, but also God, & that he should of truetly die, as concerning his naturel mans body, but yet so that it should soone rise againe, nor yet should that death let the perpetuitie of his kingdome, because it should not be worldly, but a spirituall kyngdome. But neyther did they vnderstande these misteries, nor yet was there opportunitie to declare them openly. He doeth onely councell them that (setting aparte all blyndenesses of harte) they would ceasse theyr erying out on the trueth that was come to light, specially seyng that it should within a whyle be taken awaye. Not that the light of the ghospell should euer be throughly abolished, but that they should not after this heare of his owne mouthe his doctrine, nor see hym worke any myracles, whiche myght geue them sight to see theyr folye, and repente them of it: yet a lytle whyle (sayeth he) is the lyght with you. Wherfore, while ye haue this lyght, walke ye, and amende sleth there is good cause, leste the lyght being so daintly taken awaye, darke night come on you, and than ye desyre all in vayne, the thing that is taken from you, which nowe being offered vnto you, ye doe contemne. Whoso foloweth the blinde affections of his owne minde, walketh in darkenesse, and knoweth not whither he goeth: and whiles he beleueth that he doeth wel and godly, he falleth into death. I am the lyght of the worlde: whoso beleueth in me, shall not erre or swarue from the trueth. The children of darkenesse fleeth from the light, while you therfore haue light, beleue on the light, that ye maye be seen the children of light. He that beleueth, seeth, whoso beleueth not, the same hauyng syght, is blinde.

The text. These thynges spake Jesus, and departed and hid hymselfe from them. But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet beleued not they on him, that the saying of the prophete Esaias might be fulfilled, whiche he spake: Lorde who shall beleue our saying? and to whom is the arme of the Lorde declared?

Jesus spake no more to them at that time, lest he should the more prouoke the fury of them, whom he knewe to be very prone vnto all mischiefe, but he went thence, and hidde himselfe from them, and so would he through his absence and with silence assuage their cruell woodnes, and therewithall admonishing vs by the way, that (according to his exaumple) as often as we haue to doe with wilfull persones, and that there is no hope to doe them good, we than ought to geue place for a time, lest not only we doe them no good at al, but also make other the worse. For what is more to be lamented, than the myndes of those Jewes? For where as our Lorde Jesus, through so many, so cleare, and so woonderfull miracles wrought before their iyes, ought to haue brought them moste surely to haue beleued his sayinges, yet dyd they stande stifly in their vnbeliefe, no doubte but euen blinded with enuy, hatred, ambicion, auarice, and other vngracious concupiscence of the mynde. And euen so Esai long ago dyd prophecie that some suche should be, saying: Lord who hath beleued our woordes, and to whom is the arme of the Lord opened? Verily, therfore they did not see the power of God in Jesus his doynges, because beyng blynded with their malice, they did not beleue.

The text. Therfore could they not beleue, because that Esaias sayeth agayne. He hath blynded their iyes, and hath hardened their harte, that they should not see with their iyes, and lest they should be vnderstande with their harte, and should be conuerted, and I should heale them. Suche thinges sayed Esaias, when he sawe his glorye and spake of hym.

Yea and they did not beleue, because they would not caste awaye their naughtie desires. And this also did Esai speake of before: He hath (sayth Esai) blinded their iyes, & hardened their hartes, that they should not see with their iyes, and vnderstand with their hartes, and should be conuerted, and I shoud heale them. For they seeyng did not see, and vnderstanding did not vnderstand. And contrarye to their owne saluacion, they made all they could against him, at whose hand alone, saluació was to be hoped for. These thinges tolde Esai long ago, who beeyng spiritually inspired, sawe with the iyes of prophecie, the glory of the sonne of God, whiche (in tyme to come) he should haue beyng a very man. And he prophecied that he sawe, and the thing which he prophecied should be, haue we seen doen.

The text. Neuertheles among the chiefe rulers also, many beleued on him, but (because of the pharisees) they would not be knowen of it, lest they should be excommunicate, for they loued the praise of men, more then the praise of God.

Yet for al this, these mens vnbeliefe did not exclude the saluació of other that did beleue: for many gaue faith to Jesus, not only of ꝑ vulgar people, but of the nobles also. But neuertheles, the men of worthip durst not confesse the faith openly, for feare of the Pharisees, whiche had made a decre, ꝑ whosoeuer did confesse himselfe to be a disciple of Jesus, should be excommunicate & thrust out of ꝑ Synagogue. Ouer this, those whiche haue preeminence in the worlde, ignominie irketh them much. For as yet their faith was not stable & perfite, but notwithstanding that, it was for that time, a good beginning of an euangelicall minde, to thinke well of Jesus: though feare & shamefastnesse letted the to shewe it furth. Enuy stopped some, couetoulnes letted other, & other some other some did ambicion hinder, why they did not with an whole harte cleaue to Christ, for whose sake all thynges are to be contemned. But because the holye ghoste, whiche coroborateth a man towardes the ghospell, was not yet geuen: many beleued fearfully, as yet setting more by mans glorie than Goddes. To be hiely placed in the synagogue was honorable among men, but to be reiecte out of the wicked mens synagogue for Christes sake, is honour & prayse before God. But feare and infirmitie in men that be of nature weake, soone obteineth forgeuenesse. Howbeit, those whiche were so blynded with ciuill desyres, that with a wicked conscience they spake against Christe, turned awaye the people from him, layed snares for hym, and ouer that craftely sought his death, it is nedefull (I saye) that those perishe, because they would not bee saued.

Jesus cryed and sayed: he that beleueth on me, beleueth not on me, but on hym that sent me: and he that seeth me, seeth hym that sent me. I am come a light into the worlde, that whosoeuer beleueth on me, should not abide in darkenesse. The texte.

Another tyme agayne, Jesus goyng abrode in the sight of the Jewes, now when their fury ought to haue been well appeased, the more to moue them all to beleue, and to leaue them no excuse at all that through their owne wilfull malice would perishe, declaryng what great profite should come to them that beleued, and how great destruccion to them that did perisite in their vnbeliefe, Jesus (I saye) cryed and sayd: all you do professe that ye beleue on God. But for asmuche than as I am come from god, nor saye or do any thyng, vnlesse he beyng the auctour, whosoeuer beleueth on me, beleueth not on me, but do nothyng of my self, but on him that sent me into the worlde. The worlde is full of darkenesse, of errour and sinnes. And therfore syth I descend into the world from my father, that is the fountayne of al light, as a beame from the sune: that errours beyng remoued, and synnes taken awaye, I should be the lighte of the worlde. Truely by fayth are the eyes of the vnderstandyng opened, that they maye see lighte, and no more fall in darkenesse. All my doctrine, miracles, and what thyng soeuer I haue doen or shall do, to this hath respecte, that he whiche beleueth on me, and putteth his whole affiaunce in me, doeth not abyde in darkenesse: but beyng lightened with knowledge of trueth, and pourged from al sinnes of their old lyfe, maye through leadyng of the light, and by godlinesse of the ghospel, procede to euerlastyng lyfe.

And if any man heare my wordes and beleue not, I iudge hym not: for I came not to iudge the worlde, but to saue the world. He that refuseth me, & receyueth not my wordes, hath one that iudgeth him. The worde that I haue spoken, the same shal iudge him in the last daye. The texte.

But if a man heare my wordes and obey them not, that hearing doeth so not profite him, that for his vnbeleefe he shal haue a more sorye ende: not that I shall iudge him. For I came not to condemne the worlde for the sinnefull enormities therof, but to saue it, beyng once purged by fayth. But neyther yet shall ỹ man escape terrible iudgemente, whiche when he hath hearde my woordes, casteth them awaye and contemneth them. Verily at this present, I omitte nothyng, wherby I may drawe al folke to eternal saluacio, nor any man shal be losse through my faulte. But whosoeuer shall contemne saluacion, when it is offred hym, this selfe sayed woorde whiche I now speake, shall condemne hym: and shall in the laste daye rebuke him, because he did perisshe through his owne wilfull malice. I (for my parte) haue muttred nenne with promising them rewardes, I

haue feared them by threatnyng them with punishementes, I haue allured the with benefites, I haue prouoked them with miracles: I repell no bodye from saluacion, I set open a ready waye for euery man and woman to life. What excuse therfore in the laste daye shall he pretende, that beyng so many wayes prouoked to beleue, doeth continue still in his blindnesse?

The texte. For I haue not spoken of my selfe, but the father which sent me, he gaue me a commaundemente what I should saye, and what I should speake. And I knowe that his commaundemente is lyfe euerlastyng: whatsoeuer I speake therfore, euen as the father bad me so I speake.

O

If ye be worshippers of God (as ye thinke your selues to be) in case ye haue the lawe in reuerence, ye cannot contemne my woordes. For I do not speake of myne owne heade, as they be woont to do, whiche dooe feine what they liste to theyr owne prayse and aduauntage, no; I do not teache thynges repugnaunte to the law, but I do perfourme in dede, those thynges whiche the lawe did shadow in figures, and prophecied should come. Furthermore, my father who is the auctour of the lawe, and from whom I came hither, hath prescribed me what I shall saye and do. Therfore considerynge that I do obeye his commaundementes in all thynges, how can ye honour hym, when as ye do cõtemne his ambassadour? And truely, the thing whiche he hath geuen me in commaundement, he hath onely commaunded it of loue towardes you, that you throughe beleuyng the thinges, whiche I shewe vnto you, maye obtayne euerlastyng lyfe. Lykeas my father thirsteth the saluacion of all, and seketh no mans damnacion: so verely do I delyte to haue all saued, and wyll suffre none to perishe, as muche as in me lyeth verily. Wherfore because I am well assured, that whatsoeuer he hath willed me to saye, doeth pertayne to your saluacion, therefore doe I leaue naught vnspoken that he hath alligned me to saye vnto you. As touchyng this good will of God the father towardes you, and myne also, which throughly agreeth with my fathers wil and minde, see there be no defaulte on your behalfe, wilfully seekyng your owne damnacion, when as ye maie attaine to eternal saluacion.

The.xiii. Chapter.

The texte. Before the feast of Easter, when Iesus knewe that his houre was come that he should departe out of this worlde vnto the father, when he loued his whiche were in the worlde, vnto the ende he loued them.

Our Lorde Iesus, dydde with these kynde of woordes, exhorte þ wicked people to prouide for they; owne saluacio, and to leaue their vngracious purpose, considerynge he had leafte nothyng vnassayed, whereby they might be recouered and brought to a better minde and emendemente. Nowe then was no more a doe, but to instructe his disciples (whom he had specially chosen, whome he should shortely leaue behynde him, and whome he knewe would be muche discoumfited with the deathe of they; maister) against the stourme that was imminente and nye at hand, and throughly to pull out of theyr myndes those Pestilences whiche corrupteth the sincerittie of the ghospell, that is to saye, enuie, hatred, pride, ambition, and graffe in them affections contrary to these, declaryng therein the tokens of perfite charitie, whose example and steppes they should folow in louing eche other mutually, shewing also the manner of suche meknesse and humilitie as hath not been hearde of, wherby one shoulde preuente an other semebleably with mutuall benefites.

Therfore the daye before Easter whiche the Hebrues (as was sayed before) did call Phase, that is to saye, a passeouer, for asmuche as oure Lorde Jesus from whom nothyng was hid, knewe the tyme nowe to bee at hande, when as hymselfe, aunswerying to the name of that feastefull daye, shoulde passe out of this worlde, and go agayn to his father, from whence he came: seyng he had alwaies loued his Apostles, whom he had specially chosen to hymselfe as his familiares and frendes, whiche shoulde not yet depart out of the worlde, but shoulde haue a great and long battaple with the world, he didde declare his continuall loue and charitie towardes them. Neyther the stourme of his death, beeyng nowe at hande, did put awaye the zele and affection whiche he bare towardes them, but at his derap departyng from them, he did specially shewe tokens of a certayne rare loue, not that he had fayntly loued them before, but because those thinges whiche he shoulde printe into theyr myndes, at his goyng from them, might more deeply remayne in memorie.

¶ And when supper was ended, after that the deuill had put in the harte of Judas Iscariotb Simons sonne to betraye hym, Jesus knowyng that the father had geuen al thynges into his handes, and that he was come from God, and went to God, he rose from supper and layed aside his vpper garmentes, & when he had taken a towell, he girded hymselfe. After that he powred water into a basin, and began to washe the disciples feete, and to wype them with the towell wherwith he was girded. The text.

Therefore after that laste and misticall supper was prepared, in the whiche the holy memorial of his body and blonde beeing geuen, he leafte vnto vs by waye of couenaunte a continuall remembraunce of himselfe, and purposed to make a league of frendeshyp that should neuer by anymeanes dye betwene vs, although he knewe wel ynough that Judas Iscarioth by the suggestion of the deuill, already went about to betraie him, that he might be taken of the Jewes: whiche mynde of Judas, the pestilence of couetousnesse had so possessed, that he coulde not be called backe from his vngracious wicked dede, for all the greate gentilnesse and mildnesse of his maister towardes him: and seyng Jesus knewe also that his father woulde suffer none of those thynges to perishe whiche he had deliuered him to kepe, and was well assured that himselfe should shortelye go to his father, from whence he came, yet because he would vtterlye pull oute of his disciples myndes, all ambicious desire, he riseth from supper, meat being already set vpon the table, and laying aside his vpper garmentes, whereby he might in euery condition shewe the similitude of a seruaunte, he tooke a towell and girded himself with it, furthwith he himselfe powred water into the basen, and takyng vpon hym the moste vile and abiect office after the worldes estimation, he began to washe his disciples feete. The Hebrues in dede did accustomably bestow this manner of seruice vpon their geastes and frendes, but yet this thyng that Christe did was not onely an exaumple of perfit humblenesse, but also had in it a figure of a misticall meanyng: that is to saye, howe that they

whiche should prepare themselues to the office of preaching the ghospell, and would be partakers of þ table of the lord, ought to be moste pure from al earthly affections, notwithstanding none should attein this puritie, vnlesse our lord Iesus with his goodnesse should wipe awaye all the filthinesse of our infirmitie, who onely was without all spot, and who also beyng verey man was after suche a sorte conuersaunt among men, that he trained forth the whole course of his life without any spot of carnalitie.

The texte. Than came he to Simon Peter, and Peter sayed vnto him: Lord doest thou washe my feete? Iesus aunswered and sayed vnto hym: what I do, thou wotest not now, but thou shalt knowe hereafter. Peter sayeth vnto hym: Thou shalt neuer washe my feete. Iesus aunswered hym: If I washe the not, thou hast no parte with me.

Therefore when the lorde of all thinges that are in heauen and earth, knowyng all thynges before, and hauyng al thynges geuen hym of his father, in his apparell beyng girded after a sorte of a seruaunt, naked and carrying the basin, came to Symon Peter, and kneled before hym to washe his feete. Peter was horribly afearde at this rare and straunge exaumple of humilitie, on the on side knowledgyng his owne infirmitie, on the other syde considerying þ maiestie of the Lorde, whiche he had somewhat perceyued by his myracles, and meruelouse doctrine, although he had not yet fully knowen hym to be god, nor as yet seene hym ryse agayne, neyther ascende into heauen, sitte on the ryghte hande of the father, nor worthipped throughe the whole worlde, with godly honours: but this thyng beyng knowen after, did the more commend his exaumple of so notable humilitie. Peter therefore refusing to be washed of his maister vpon the selfsame consideracio that John baptiste was lothe to take vpon him to baptise Christe, sayed: Lord what a thyng is this whiche thou goest about? wilte thou washe my feete? I knowe who I am, and who thou arte: and furthwith to Peters refusall, Iesus aunswered. Suffer me to do that thyng whiche I do, for it is no trifle, nor doen in vain: thou doest not yet vnderstād what this thyng meaneth, but hereafter thou shalt. And than thou shalt wel perceyue the thyng whiche I do, to haue been nedefull for thee. Peter was not staied with this manier of aunswer, because he vnderstoode it not, but made a further denial, saying: I will neuer suffer so great a man as thou arte, to washe suche an ones feete as I am. But our Lorde to put awaye this earnest refusal, although it came of loue, as it were, to dryue out one nayle with another, by threatninges forced Peter to cōsent, seing he was not other wise easie to be taught as yet, saying: Peter, why doest thou stryue with me? If I washe thee not, thou canste not be partaker with me. Either thou shalte be washed, or thou shalt be remoued from the felowshyp of my boorde and league. He muste be pure and cleane, whom I will admit into my company. And Iesus spake this, not of washyng the fete of the bodye, but concernyng the folowyng of his so notable humilitie, and purenesse of mynde, whiche oughte to bee excellent in those persones that professe the doctrine of the gospell, and take vpon thē the cure of Christes flock.

Lord doest thou washe my feete?

If I washe not, thou hast no part with me.

The texte. Symon Peter sayeth vnto hym: Lord not my feete onely, but also the handes and the heade. Iesus sayeth vnto hym: He that is washed, needeth not saue to washe his feete, but is cleane euery whitte. And ye are cleane, but not all. For he knewe who it was that should betraye hym. Therefore he sayed, ye are not all cleane.

And

And although Peter that loued the Lorde feruently, vnderstode not than what Jesus sayinges meante, yet because it is greuous to a louer to heare any mencion made of diuorcement or departure, as soone as he heard that he should be separate from the companie of hym, whom he entierly loued, sodaynly he became more behemēt in admitting him to washe his feete, then he was before in refusing the same, and sayed: Lord rather then I would be put from thee, I dee not only suffre the to washe my feete (seeyng it pleaseth the so to doe) but also my handes and my head. To this the Lord aunswered: he that is once washed, hath no nede to be washed again, for the rest of his body beyng cleane, there remayneth nothing to be washed, but his feete: which ofstones by treadyng on the grounde, gathereth some filthinesse.

Truely our Lorde Jesus did signifie by this parable, that it is not sufficient for him that is a preacher of the gospell to haue that cōmon puritie which baptisme and the profession of Christes fayth geueth to al folkes, except his feete, that is to say, the affections of his minde, be often purged from all impuritie of this worlde, from the whiche neuertheles se no man can be pure, vnlesse he study to washe away many tymes, through the mercy of Christe, the infection that he hath taken by the cumpanie of men.

Therfore (sayeth he) I will not washe againe the reste of your body but onely your feete, for ye be cleane: but not euery one of you. In this exception our Lord Jesus did touche the conscience of Judas Iscariothe, for he knewe well inough, who should betray him to the Jewes. The gentlenesse of Jesus was so great, that although he knewe him, yet would he not be wray him to other, nor reiecte him from hauyng his feete washed, neyther would he put him backe from his holy Supper, nor yet from the communion of his body and bloud: he doeth only touche his conscience, who knewe himselfe welynough, that he might repent & emende himselfe, after he should perceiue that he was not vnknowen to the Lorde, whom he was determined to betray. Therfore was he the cause why Jesus sayd, verily ye are cleane, but not all.

So after he had washed their feete, and receyued his clothes, and was set downe, he sayed vnto them againe: Wote ye what I haue doen to you? ye call me maister and Lorde, and ye saye well, for so am I. If I then your Lorde & maister haue washed your feete, ye also ought to wash one an others feete. For I haue geuē you an exaumple that ye should doe as I haue doen to you. Verily verily I saye vnto you, the seruaunt is not greater then his maister, neyther the messenger greater then he that sent him. If ye vnderstand these thynges, happy are ye if ye doe them. I speake not of you al. I knowe whom I haue chose, but that the scripture may be fulfilled, he that eateth bread with me, hath lifte vp his hele against me. Nowe tell I you before it come, that when it is come to passe, ye might beleue that I am he. The texte.

When Jesus had finished this kinde of seruice towardes his twelue Apostles, he put on againe his garmentes, & sate downe to sup with them, but in the meane while he doeth once againe put into their myndes the exaumple of owelines which he had shewed thē, leste they should forget the thing which was necessary for thē, for he sayth: doe ye not vnderstād what is mēt by that I haue washed all your feete: ye call me maister & Lorde, and there is good cause why ye should so doe, for doubtlesse I am the same that ye call me: and seyng I haue washed your feete, that am in very dede your maister & Lorde, you that are brethren and seruauntes together, shall muche lesse grudge eche one one to serue an other continually. For I that am so farre aboue you, haue therfore geue you this example, that you should not be lothe to doe the lyke among you that be felowes, whiche I haue doen to my disciples & seruaunts, and that one brother, should be ashamed to take vpon him the pryde of a tyraunt ouer his brother, and likewise a seruaunt ouer his companion, seyng I, that maye worthyly take vpon me the preeminence of this dignitie, haue humbled my selfe to washe your fete. Neyther is there cause why any manne should say, the thyng that I doe is to vyle, abiecte and seruile. The greater a man is, the more it behoueth him to humble himselfe. The pestilence of ambicion doeth crepe in, euen emong euangelicall vertues. When ye shall doe myracles through my name, when ye shal prophecie, than ought ye chiefly to remember that thing whiche I haue doen this day vnto you: ye may not defend the autoritie of the gospel with high lookes, with pryde, nor with violence, by other meanes shall that be attayned. That thing verily cannot be denied, which is certainly knowē by naturall reason, that is to say, howe there is no seruaunte greater then his maister, nor the messenger that is sent to doe any other mans businesse, is greater then he that sendeth him: ye knowe me to be your maister, and hereafter ye shall knowe it better: ye are my messengers, and I am the authour of your Message. Therfore it were a shame for you to be puft vp with pryde, or to be fierce and cruel against the flocke that is committed vnto you, or also among your selfes, considering ye haue found me so meke and curteous a Lord and maister. Because now ye vnderstande this, if ye doe it hereafter, ye shalbe blessed after my doctrine, which I so often repeate vnto you, leste it should any waye be forgotten. But all you shall not obtayne this blessing. In dede I haue chosen you all to the honourable roumth and office of an apostle. But all you shall not aunswere to the worthynesse of this office. Blessed shall they be which shall vse the Apostles office after myne example. But there is among you that shall so lytle folowe this myne example towarde his brethren and companions (with whom he hathe heretofore been felowe like) that he shall lift vp his head against me, whiche am so great a Lord and suche a maister. But it was long agon prophecied in the Psalme, that this thing should be, where as it is thus sayed: he that shal eate my bread, shall lyfte vp his hele against me. I doe nowe shewe you before it come to passe, that this thyng shall be, because when ye shall see that doen whiche scripture hath spoken of before, ye maye beleue that I am he of whom it hath prophecied, and that nothing is doen against me by chaunce or aduenture, but all this matter is moderate according to Gods determinacion. And like as he that foloweth mine example is happy: so shal he be vnhappy (whosoeuer he be) that had rather folowe that trayters doing that myne. For he shall haue in time to come many folowers of his naughtinesse, which shall set more by money then by the glory of myne name: and pretendyng the honour of the Apostles name, shall traiterously misuse the office of an Apostle, and shall deface thapostles office.

Now I tel you before it come.

The texte.

Verily, verily, I saye vnto you: He that receyueth whomsoeuer I sende, receyueth me: and he that receyueth me, receyueth him that sent me.

But the greater the dignitie of this office is, so muche the greuouser is the faulte to abuse the honour of that profession thorowe playing the traytour: for this I tell you assuredly, whosoeuer receiueth him that I send, receyueth ceiueth me,and whosoeuer receiueth me,receiueth hym that sente me: for as I being my fathers messenger,do nothyng but accordyng to his will,so you that be my messengers and Apostles,yf you faythfullye put in execucion the thyng ỹ

I haue commaunded you,shall bee so receiued of godlye folkes,as thoughe I spake in you : lyke as my father speaketh in me,who teache none other thyng but that whiche he hath limyted.

¶ Whan Iesus had thus saied,he was troubled in the spirite and testified and saied: The texte.
treelye verely I saie vnto you,that one of you shall betraye me. Then the disciples loked one on an other, doubtyng of whom he spake. There was one of Iesus disciples, whiche leaned on him(euen he whome Iesus loued.) To him beckened Symon Peter therefore, that he should aske who it was,of whom he spake. He then when he leaned on Iesus brest saied vnto him: Lorde who is it: Iesus aunswered: He it is to whom I geue a soppe. And he wette the breade and gaue it to Iudas Iscariothe Symons sonne. And after the soppe, Satan entred into him.

When Iesus comfortyng his Apostles myndes had spoken these wordes, furthwith,because he wouldе make theim the more afrayed to folowe the mayrtours ensample,and to the entente he wouldе more vehementelye prouoke the trayetoure to amende, he was troubled in spirite as one greuously vexed for the dettruccion of hym,whiche thorowe his owne malice,went about to procure to himselfe euerlasting death: and dooeth againe witnesse euen by othe, that the thyng whiche he spake before shall verilye come to passe. Forsoothe, I tell you yet once again(saieth he)that one of you,whiche beeyng but a fewe doeth here sit downe with me at one table,shall betraye me. This saiyng so of- One of you tentepered did awake the disciples myndes,whiche els had bene ful heuye and shall betray pensife for the foresaid departure of their Maister. And euerye mans conscience me.
(sauyng Iudas) did counforte hymselfe, because onelye one was noted to bee the betrayer. But this addicion(of you) did trouble theim,neyther didde they doubte but the thyng shoulde at some tyme come to passe,whiche our Lorde saied should bee,and yet no man could suspecte of an other so detestable a deede, forasmuche as they thought all other to be of theyr minde,sauyng that euerye man mistrusted the fragilitie of mannes nature. Onely Iudas knowyng hymselfe giltye neyther thynkeeth thereat,nor was ashamed, nor yet dreadfull to bee presente at that holye repaste: and besides that,in the meane whyle coulde a-byde the syghte of his maister,to whome he knewe the whole purpose of his minde to bee manifestely knowen. So pestilent a thyng was couetousnesse,and so it liked hym to abuse the gentelenes of his maister,beeyng alreadye well knowen vnto him. Therfore the reste of the disciples beyng heuy and careful,dyddе beholde one an other,to see if they couldе perceiue any token by countenaunce, by whome Iesus had spoken this: as they whiche(without doubte)wouldе furthwith haue been fierce agaynst him that had determined so wicked a deede.
Here truelye was Simon Peters myndе set on fyer,who loued our Lorde no man more,but hitherto(for ỹ more parte)the boldenes which he had by reason of his loue towardes his maister,had euill succeeded. He haddе heard our Lorde saye before: Go backe from me Sathan,thou canoyesle not those thynges that appertaine to God: and euen nowe he hearde hym saye. Thou shalt haue no parte with me. Therfore when Peter dyd greatly desyre to be deliuered from this doubtefull care,and to knowe assuredlye who he was that went about so great a mischiefe,as one that would not haue suffred hym to haue sitte emong them at that feaste,yet durste not he hymselfe be bolde to aske Iesus who was that traytour, whom he aduertised them of: but he beckened to a certayne disciple, to demaunde of Jesus, who was the manne he spake of: whiche disciple the Lorde louedintierly, and vsed familyarly, and at that same tyme he leaned vpon the lordes breste, by reason of whiche kynde dealing and familiar handeling of hym, the manne dyd mourne, and was halfe deade, because the lordes death was at hande: but the Lord dyd counforte and recreate him.

Therfore that disciple as he was then leanyng vpon Jesus breste, saied secretly vnto hym: Lorde who is he that shall dare enterprise suche a mischeuous dede? Jesus answered hym saiyng: He it is to whome I shall geue a dipt soppe. And when he hadde dipped the breade in the brothe, he gaue the soppe to Judas Iscarioth, Simons sonne. The vnhappye traitour was neyther ashamed therewithall, nor wente about to amende hymselfe, but with a shameleese countenaunce setteyng at noughte the Lordes knoweledge, and despisyng his greate gentylnesse, he tooke a token of frendshyppe at the Lordes hande, whome he woulde anone after betraye for a litle money. And after he had receiued that litle morsell, the deuill dyd fully possesse his minde, and of a wicked man, made hym vncurable.

The texte.

¶ Than said Jesus vnto him. That thou doest do quickely. That wist no man at the table for what entent he spake vnto him. Some of them thought because Judas hadde the bag, that Jesus had saied vnto him, bye thyse thinges that we haue nede of against the feaste, or that he shoulde geue some thing to the poore. Assone then as he had receiued the soppe, he went immediatly out, and it it was nyght.

Now when Jesus sawe that the purposed malice of Judas woulde neyther bee chaunged with shame nor feare (for he was almoste bewrayed allready, and should haue bene in daunger, yf Jesus hadde disclosed hym) he therfore sent hym away from the feaste, and suffred hym to doo that vngracious dede, whiche he already had committed in full wyll, and purpose of mynde. The thyng which thou goest about (saieth he) doe it quickly. Judas knowyng himselfe giltye, dyd onelye vnderstande that saiyng: none of the reste that sate at the table perceiued wherefore Jesus had spoken this. For as goodnesse is nothyng mistrustfull, none of them coulde suspecte this, that he, to whome Jesus had shewed so manye tokens of loue, whome he semed in a manner to preferre before ỹ reste, in that he had the kepyng of his moneye, who also sate rightе nere vnto hym, in that feaste, to whome euen nowe our Lorde gaue a dypped soppe: no man (I saye) dyd mistruste that he durste enterprise so haynous a deede, as to betraye hym to death. And whereas Jesus had saide, the thyng which thou dooeste, dooe it quickelye, some, because they knewe Judas kepte the purse, dyd take it, that the Lord had admonished hym to bye some such thinges as should be nedefull to the solemnisacion of that feastful day, or that he should distribute somewhat to the poore.

That he shoulde geue some what to ỹ poore.

For Jesus was often wounte to commaunde hym to doe this, there by instructeryng and prouokyng vs to be liberall to poore folke. When Judas hadde receiued the soppe, and made as thoughe he hadde not vnderstande the Lordes saiyng, he went furthewith out of the parlour, where they supped. For it becamme not hym to be any longer presente in the coumpany of holy folkes, whiche had geuen hymselfe to the deuill, and shewed hymselfe to Jesus so often vncurable. And it was nyght, a tyme betokenyng his mynde that was blynded

with the darkenesse of couetise, whiche shoulde withdrawe hym selfe from the lyght and make suche haste to dop the worke of the prynce of darkenes, that not so muche as the vnlue season of tyme cc unde mouse hym to delaye his purposed wicked dede. Hy lacked no euyll will before, but then Jesus hadde geuen hym no power, to the intente that here also it myght bee euidently perceiued, how that no man coulde preuaile any thyng agaynste him except he wouldе geue licence to his vngracious wyll, to accomplisshe in dede that thyng whiche he had determined in his mynde.

¶ Therefore when he was gone out, Jesus sayed: Nowe is the sonne of man glorified. The texte. and God is glorified by him. If God bee glorified by him, God shall also glorifie him by himselfe, and shall straightwaye glorifie him. Litle children, yet a litle while am I with you, ye shall seke me, as I sayed vnto the Jewes, whither I go thither can ye not cumme, also to you I saie nowe, a newe commaundemente geue I vnto you, that ye loue together as I haue loued you, that euen so ye loue one an other. By this shall all men knowe that ye are my disciples, yf ye haue loue one to an other.

When he therfore was departed whiche had made hymselfe vnwoorthye to bee in coumpanye, Jesus beganne to speake manye thynges to his disciples, whiche should partely coumforte and stablishe them, and partly arme them against the storme that was at hande, vttrerlye prieuenyng in theyr myndes those thynges, whiche at the fyrste beyng ignoraunt, and after warde bulled with sorowe and sleape, they coulde not fully perceiue, but yet they shoulde afterwarde vnderstande the same. And tyrste of all he shewed his death to be at hand, which although in the iudgemente of the worlde, it shoulde seme full of reproche, yet should it set furth both his fathers glorye and his owne. Now (sayeth he) this thyng is specially in hande, for the whiche ye haue hearde me prayse: For nowe the tyme is come that the sonne of manne whiche hath serued hytherto poore, and as an abiecte, shoulde after a newe sorte, become notable among men: and that his fathers glorye shoulde likewise be set forth by him. For as he sought not his owne glorye, but thorowe his infirmitie sette forth his fathers glorye: so in lyke manier the father (which is the true fountayne of all true glorye) shall glorifye his sonne before men, not by Aungels, nor Archaungels, nor yet anye other creature, but by hymselfe, declaryng to the worlde howe the fathers and the sonnes glorye is all one, to the entente mente so maye know on euerye syde theyr mutuall woorkes, not that they canne wynne any thyng by it, but that men by knowyng the glorye of them bothe, myght obteine true glorye. In tyme to come, verily he shall thoughly glorifie his sonne in his laste cumming before all the company of heauen, and in the meane whyle also, he shall furthwith glorifie hym by his owne death (whiche shall bee of more force them al mans power) and anone after by his resurrection and ascension. Wherfore my children let not my death discoumforte you, whiche although it seme to come for wante of strength, for I shall it bee of more power then my lyfe.

Though it shall seme to be shamefull and vyle, yet shall it serue foorth bothe my glorye and my fathers: yea and though it shall seme an vtter abolishyng of me, yet shall it bryng saluacion, bothe to you and to the whole worlde: stere these thynges coumforte the heauinesse of your myndes. For it is expedient for you that this mortall bodye of myne bee withdrawen from your syght, and nowe the tyme is euen at hand for it to bee doone. In the meane whyle vse my coum-

panye as one that shall goo thorowe from you, and print well in your hertes those thynges that I commaunde you, or els as I haue tolde the Iewes, ye shall sethe me in vayne when I am gone hence. For within a while I goe away, and that to suche a place whither at this tyme ye cannot folowe me. Therefore nowe there is no more to do, but take my departure patiently, and fasten well in your myndes both my doctrine and the remembraunce of me. This is the thyng that shall make you happye rather then the syghte of this mortall bodye.

A newe commaundement gene I vnto you, that ye loue together.

There bee many preceptes of Moses lawe: I nowe at my departure commaunde you one, and that a newe precepte, that lyke as I haue loued you, so one of you loue an other: I haue vsed no tyrannye against you, I haue not couered praise, or lucre, nor haue gotten any worldelye commoditie by you. I haue loued youre welthe, yea and that freelye, and I haue loued you euen vnto the death, for I will willingly bestowe this life for you. In like maner loue you one an other. Other mens disciples are knowen by their nakednes, apparel, and by the obseruing of certaine ordinaunces of menne: ye haue learned none of these thinges. By this onely signe menne shall know that ye bee my veri disciples in dede, if ye haue suche mutuall loue among youre selues, as I haue effectuously shewed to you all: this is a rare thyng among menne, but yet is it the fruite wherebye the good tree is knowen.

¶ Simon Peter saied vnto him: Lorde whither goest thou? Iesus answered him: Whither I go thou canste not folowe me nowe, but thou shalte folowe me afterwarde. Peter saied vnto him: Lorde why cannot I folowe the nowe? I will leaue my life for thy sake. Iesus answered him: Wilte thou leaue thy life for my sake? Verely verely I saye vnto thee: the cocke shall not crowe till thou haue denied me thrise.

The texte.

Peter whiche was all set on fier with the loue of his maister (although he tooke his death grieuously, yet because he hadde saide he shulde go vnto him, go after me Saran, he durste no more moue and molest him, concerning that matter, but this thing troubled Peters minde, who loued him so well, that he coulde haue no leaue to folowe him, when he shoulde departe from his frendes. For it is a great comforte if a manne loue one vnkainedlye, to folowe him in all chaunces wheresoeuer he shall become. Therefore Peter asketh: Lorde whether goest thou that I maie not folowe thee? To this Iesus answereth: Thou maiest not presentely folowe me thither as I goo, but hereafter thou shalte. Peter not vnderstanding as yet to what purpose Iesus spake these woordes, wherat he mente it of his owne deathe, whiche they were not yet apte to beare well: Lorde (saieth he) why maie not I folowe thee? what perilles woulde I refuse for thee. whiche am readie to die for thee? His loue being verie earnest in dede, neuertheles as yet but worldly, not throughlye knowen to himselfe, caused hym thus to speake beyonde his power. Iesus therefore to chastened he would frame his successoure litle by litle, and vtterly pull out of his disciples mindes confidence in mannes power, like as before he hadde somewhat remoued and put backe the same, at suche time as Peter didde boldelye aduise him not to die, and againe he rebuked the saied Peter when he had rathelye caste himselfe into the water: and furthwith beganne to doubte, yea and but a while agoote also he was controlled, for so muche as when he woulde not haue obeyed hym at suche time as he wente aboute to washe his feete: euen so nowe he is taught not to truste in his owne strength, nor credite hys owne affections, but distrustyng hymselfe, to depende vpon the helpe of Christe: what saieste thou Peter (saieth Iesus) howe stoute thynges of thy selfe doest thou promise vs to doe-

wyth

wilte thou bestowe thy ielpes on me? nay but beraye pecience shall teache thee howe true the saiyngis whiche I speake euen nowe, and coulde not bee beleued of ther (that is to saye) whither I goe thou canste not folowe me, the proffe therof is at hande. For this be thou well assured of, that this nyght before the cocke shall crowe (that is to saye at the firste cocke crowyng) thou shalte haue denied me thryse: muche lesse shalte thou bee hable to saue my lyfe with thyne.

Before the cocke crow

With these woordes our Lorde did restrayne Peters stoute saying, although it came of great loue, and therewithall warned other that in perylles they shoulde not reuste in theyr owne strengthe: but whensoeuer they broughte to passe any suche thyng, they should knowe ledge it to come of the power & gyfte of God. At these thynges Peter helde his peace, as one that was not yet all free from carefulnesse, concernyng the betraying whiche Jesus had made mencion of.

The .xiii. Chapter.

¶ And he saied vnto his disciples: let not your hertes be troubled, ye beleue in God, beleue also in me. In my fathers house are many mansions, If it were not so I would haue The texte. told you. I goe to prepare a place for you. And yf I go to prepare a place for you, I will come againe and receiue you euen vnto my selfe, that where I am, there may ye bee also, and whither I goe ye knowe, and the way ye knowe.

When as at this saying (whiche signified that a certayne straunge and outragious tempeste was imminente and hanged ouer theim, whiche storme shoulde also driue Peter that was moste mannely, to so greate errour that he shoulde thryse thesame nyghte denye the Lorde) when as (I saye) the disciples wer therewith stricken, euen to the herte, and after Peters exaumple euerye one stood in dreade of himselfe, Jesus beeyng a maister of moste gentlenes, syed with moste fayre and pleasaunt woordes comforte his troubled and sorowfull disciples, saiyng: All these thynges shall be doubtles whiche I haue tolde you of be forehande. But yet there is no cause why ye should there with be herteles or dismayed, cruell thynges shall bee dooen againste me, and the lyke shall after be dooen againste you, nor I am not ignoraunte howe greate the infinitie of mans nature is. But notwithstanding, if you will put youre whole affyaunce in God and me: ye shall not neede to feare anye violence of wicked men: God is almighty, and he alone maye doe more than all they that feercelye stryuen againste vs. And verilye euen by Moyses lawe you truste to hym, and in case ye do truely truste to hym, it also behoueth you to truste to me. For though him, and you through me, shal haue victory, yf distrustyng your owne proper ayde & defenses, ye wyll fyxe all youre affiaunce and hope vpon me. For deathe it selfe shall be able to dyscreyuer vs: lyke as ye shall at a tyme bee partakers of afflictions, so shall you bee of croune and glorye. I wyll fyxste shewe the waye and exaumple howe to fyghte and to gette victorye, by me shall boldnes bee geuen vnto you, and felowshyppe of glorye. Onely truste vnto me. Nowe than:

In my fathers house be many dwellynges ready for them that haue bicome-for neyther are rewardes prepared for me alone, neyther shall Peter alone In my fa-thers house are many mansions &c. lo we me, but all those that cleaueth vnto me by charite and fayth of the ghos-pell, shall bee recompensed semerably, and haue euery one his rewarde prepared for hym. For vnlesse I knewe certaynly that dwellyng places were alreadye prepared for you, which are to receiue you that shall in a whyle bee taken oute of the hurly burly of this worlde into the felicitie of euerlastyng lyfe, I would no we before hande haue admonished you. That I dooe therefore goe before to my father, is to thentente I maye there prepare a place for you also, whome I wyll not suffre to be dissociate from me.

And no we because I know e it for to be certayne, that in my fathers kyngdome euery manne hath his mansion in a readinesse for hym: you haue no neede to bee carefull of beyng recompensed, it onelye lyeth you vpon hande to fyght manfully. And though I dyd go farre awaye to prepare a place for you, yet is there no cause for all that why ye shoulde in the meane while thynke your selfe succourlesse, for I shall come agayne vnto you for to receyue you wholye vnto me, neuer after to departe from me. For than whereseuer I am, there shall you also bee: there is no matter why to distrusse your cummyng thyther where as I nowe goe to before you, and in very dede ye do know e whither I do go, and the waye thyther. By this darke parable our Lorde dyd geue them some litell knowledge that he shoulde go to his father, but none other wyse than by death of the crosse. The thyng that was gone to, was worthye to be desired and well liked, but the way to it was thought worthy to be misliked and not to be beloued. The disciples coulde not but knowe this, beatyng the Lorde so often speakyng thereof, but perilsnes and o blindnesse made theym ignorannte in the thyng that they knewe.

The texte. Thomas saieth vnto him: Lord we knowe not whether thou goest. And howe is it possible for vs to know e the waie? Jesus saieth vnto him: I am the waie, and the trueth, and the life. No man cummeth vnto the father, but by me. If ye had knowen me, ye habde knowen my father also, and nowe ye know e him, and haue seen him.

And so therfore Thomas being very desirouse to know e certainely whyther our Lorde woulde goe, sayeth: Lorde whyn we know e not whether thou goest, how can we know e the waye thither? but rather where thou sayeste we know e both, we be in dede ignorannte in both: with this blunte (although his entente) saieng, Thomas dyd in a maner force oure Lorde to tell more playnly, whyther he woulde goe thence: whiche thyng all they dydde (for a space) vn-long to know e. Of erueth Jesus enstructeyng, framyng, and kathyoning his litle by litle, doeth in dede teache the thyng that they wishe to know e: but he doeth it as yet couertly, to thentente that the thing might more depely be fixed in their mindes, whiche they shoulde haue muche a doe, and long tyme, to learne. That is to saye, that after he hadde lefte his mortalitie, he shoulde retourne agayne to his father, from whence he came before he was incarnate: but withall he teacheth that the waye vnto the father, is open vnto no manne, but by the sonne, whiche onelye shoulde open the waye to heauen, whiche onely shoulde instruct mennes fayth with heauenly knowledge, and shoulde bee the onelye fountayne of immortalitie: to whome whosoeuer dydde firmely sticke, the same shoulde bee without

without feare of death: Thomas (sayeth he) how we happeneth this, that thou beneest the to know the waye, vnlesse thou as yet (percase) know neste me not at all? For verely I am the way, the trueth & life. I sayed euen now ye I doe goe I am the agayne to my father, and onely do open for all folke the way vnto hym: and be- waye of cause he is come to by dedes fit and semyng for god, ye haue the proufe of good trueth and life in me: and also because no man without me cummeth to the father, ye haue life learned of me the trueth. And yf the feare of death do in the meane tyme trouble youre myndes, know we well that ye bee sure of immortalitye, forsmuche as I am lyke: do ye onelye folowe thyther as I goe before, beleue and kepe in No manne minde that whiche I haue taughte you, hope assuredly for the thyng which I cummeth to promise. If ye aske whither I goe, I goe to my father, yf ye desyre to know the father the waye whereby ye maye come thither, I say to you, no man cummeth to the but by me.
father but by me: wherefore you know we both as well whyther I doe goe, as what waye the couenaye lyeth, excepte (paradventure) ye bee vtterlye ignorraunte who I am: verely yf ye hadde know wen me, ye hadde also know wen my father, yea (to say trueth) ye haue already some waye know wen my father, whome yet ye take to bee vnknowen vnto you, nor ye haue not onelye know wen hym by the determination of the lawe, but ye haue also seen hym doubtlesse. Our Lord Jesus dyd with this obscure saying sumdeale aduertise his disciples, that hys father, of trueth, was inuisible, and not onely inuisible to the bodilye eyes: but also that the mynde of it owne proper nature coulde not see and perceiue what he is, yet notwithstanding but that he had beene seene after a sorte in his sonne, as whyle they see hym in his soonne rewlyng the wyndes and the sea, forcyng deuils to obeye, putting awaie with a woorde sicknesses and diseases, were they neuer so incurable, and with a woorde rayssing the deade to life. But the vnlearned Apostles didde not as yet vnderstande these hye misteries, and yet for all that euen as though they had in very dede vnderstand that which the Lorde spake vnto them, they euen leap and skip of greate affection to see the father: Imaginyng that the father might bee seene in suche sorte as they sawe hys sonne, such was there simplicitie as yet: albeit neyther sawe they the sonne thoroughly, whiche beheld hym with bodily eyes alone.

Philip saieth vnto him: lord shewe vs the father, and it sufficeth vs. Jesus saieth vnto him: haue I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not knowen me? Philip, he that The texte.
hath sene me, hath seen my father. And howe saiest thou than, shewe vs the father? beleuest thou not that I am in the father, and the father in me? The woordes that I speake vnto you, I speake not of my selfe, but the father that dwelleth in me is he that doeth the woorkes: beleue me that I am in the father, and the father in me. Or els beleue me for the woorkes sake

Philip therfore, beyng more desirous to learne then the reste, speaketh thus: Lorde (q he) shewe vs that the father is seene of vs, but woulde God thou wouldest graunte that it myghte bee lawfull for vs to see and locke vpon thy father: then were oure desyres satisfyed, and we woulde wishe no more, nor desire ought els. In deede we haue heard e muche speakyng of him, we lacke onelye the sight of hym. Our lorde doth controull and correct Philips request, that was so very rude and fooliche, saiyng: Philip, haue I been so long tyme with thee, and yet thou know est me not? It is not the syght of my face that thou knowest me by, but the ryght vnderstandyng of my power, vertue, and trueth, maketh the to know me.

This my mighty truerh and true power, is not seen with bodilye eyes, but the minde and soule seeth it. Therefore when as I am the verye Image of my father, in all thynges lyke vnto hym, and that by my deedes and woordes thou oughtest allready to haue knowen me, (and verelye to haue knowen is to haue seen) howe darest thou bee so bolde, with what countenaunce sayest thou to me, shewe vs the father: as though he that hath seene me hath not seene my father. I meane not that my father is none other than I, but that betweene vs two is no vnlikenes, or any thyng vncommon as touchyng the highest and our diuyne nature. In case thou canste not vnderstande what I saye by naturall reason, he seeth also (I tel you) that beleueth. Thou hast heard me speake, thou hast seen me do myracles: and therein surely thou haste seen and heard of my father: Doest thou not yet beleue that by an inseparable copulacion of nature, will, and power, my father is in me, and I in my father.

He þ hath seen me, hath seen þ father.

What thing soeuer I speake, I speake it of his mynde: what thyng soeuer I dooe, I dooe it after his mynde: I am therefore alwaye in hym (by reason of suche a coniunction of nature and wyll, as cannot be vnioyned and disseuered) and he alwaye in me, speakyng by me: and by me declaryng with miracles, his power. Neyther doe I speake any thing of my selfe, whiche same thing he speaketh not by me: neither dooe I any thing of my selfe, whiche he by me toyneth, doeth not worke: howe therefore doest thou separate them that be inseparable: and with seuerall sight desireste to see them seuerally: beleueste thou that the one being knowen, the other can be vnknowen: doth the reste of you also yet not beleue þ all thynges cummeth of my father which are spoken and doen by me: and that there is no separation betwixt vs two? It had behoued you to haue credited me, so oft teachyng this thing: and if ye mistrusted my woordes, yet truely the diuine woorkes and deedes surmounting mannes power, oughte to haue caused you to beleue, that what thing soeuer proceedeth frō me, is of my father: yf my father himselfe should speake vnto you, he would speake none other thing than I doe: or if he would worke by himselfe, he would worke none other thing than I do worke: we haue one minde, one will, one power and nature.

The texte. Verely, verely, I saie vnto you: he that beleueth on me, the woorke that I doe, the same shall he do also: and greater woorkes then these shall he do, because I goe vnto my father. And whatsoeuer ye aske in my name, that will I dooe: that the father maie bee glorified by the sonne. If ye shall aske any thing in my name, I will dooe it. If ye loue me, keepe my commaundements. And I will praye the father, and he shal geue you an other comforter, that he maye bide with you for euer, euen the spirite of truerh, whom the world cannot receiue, because the world seeth him not, neyther knoweth him: but you knowe him, for he dwelleth with you, and shalbe in you.

Therefore beleue this, retaine this, haue this surely fixte in youre hertes: whiche thyng yf you doe in dede, the withdrawyng of the syghte of this bodye, shalbe no harme vnto you: ye shall better see me beeyng absente with the eyes of fayth: and the same thing whiche ye now see my father dooe by me, whiche doe faste cleaue vnto him all manner of wayes, shall I dooe by you, if you will cleaue to me by fayth and charitie: yea and I shall also moze euidently extende foorth the mightie power of my godheade, after that I shall remoue awaye from you this my manhead: yea and moreouer, whoso euer dooeth ioyne himselfe to me by true christen fayth (like as I am naturally alwaie ioyned, and neuer disseuered from the company of my father) the same persone shall also dooe greater thynges, than I doe, so often as the glorye of God requireth a miracle. For as my father worketh nowe by me, so shall I worke by you.

And because it is so expediente for the salvation of manne that I doe goe a-gaine to my father, ye shall succede me, and by course enter into my rowme con-cernyng the ministracion of the ghospell. Nor this thyng shal onelye bee dorn, but what thyng soeuer elles ye shall aske of my father in my name, whiche shal apperteyne vnto the prayse and glorye of my fathers name and kyne, that ye aske in same shall I doe: to the ende that by you also, I maie bee glorified emong men, as my father hath beene hitherto glorified by his soonne. Let not my departure therefore trouble you, whiche shall tourne to your greate commoditie and pre-fermente. Than moste of all shall I bee youre ayde in al affayres and purpo-ses, whiche make for true health, when as I shall take awaye from you this fielye body. Onely aske the thing that you couete, my father shall heare your de-sires, and I beeing a continuall presente advocate vnto him, wil bring to passe that what soeuer ye shall aske, shall bee obteined: for as he denieth me nothing, whiche doe no manner of thing that redoundeth not to his glorye: so will I denye you nothyng, so long as ye doe that what whiche shall set forth the honoure of my name: For sooth my spirite shall put into your myndes what you ought to aske. Thus to be greued with my going hence, is no proufe of christen charitie, for so men are dismaied when a frende remoueth whome they shall soone after forget. If ye loue me truely, as I dooe loue my father, declare your charitie to-wardes me in very dede: ye shall soothly and certainelye declare it, if ye dooe kepe my commaundementes. So shall it come to passe, that as my father loueth me and denieth me nothyng: In like wise shall he also loue you, obeying my pre-ceptes, whiche be the verey commaundementes of my father. Thus it is nede-full for the salvacion of the worlde, that I doe absente my selfe from you.

And yet going awaie I wyll not leaue you desolate, and altogether with-out coumforte. But rather if ye abide fermelie in my loue, and kepe my com-maundementes, I shall obteine of my father by praier after my returne again vnto him, that he which denieth me nothing, shall sende you an other coumfor-ter: whiche after he be once sente, shall not goe awaie from you, as I nowe do, concerning this manner of corporall presence. I am pulled awaie from you, but he shall continue with you for euer. He shall bee the spirite of me, and my father, whiche shall make you of carnall folke spirituall: and he shall tourne this worldelye affeccion whiche ye nowe beare towardes me, into an heauenlye loue: he shall also with secrete inspiracions, putte in you the treweth of all thinges, whiche ye nowe vnderstande as it were but by a dreame and throughe a cloude. This speciall pledge of me shall bee peculiar and proper vnto you. For I haue all this while exhibite my selfe generallye and in common to chuill and good: leste anye mighte make excuse that he was not inuited to saluacion. But this worlde whiche coueteth muche, and gapeth for goodes that bee of the worlde, and deceitfull, cannot receiue that spirite, bee-cause he is heauenlye and true. And why can it not: because it hath grosse eyes, whiche deliteth and loueth not but grosse and earthlye thynges, it seethe not hym nor knoweth hym: for he withoute nopse beyng all whisched and still, casteth in hymselfe to the secrete senses of the mynde, if he fynde anye where a conueniente place to reste in. But truelye you, in case that the delusions and de-ceptfull thynges of this worlde beeyng despysed, ye wyll folowe thynges that be good in deede, and liue well: you (I saie) shall then knowe hym, because he will not onely come vnto you, as I am come, one that may be seen, but he shal also abyde continually with you: nor he shall not in suche sorte be conuersaunte emong you as the aduocate is with his client, but he shall inhabyte hymselfe in the secrete inner partes of your soules, and shall ioyne hymselfe as it were glued to your spirite, that he maye become one spirite in all folkes: and because he shalbe as it were bred and planted in your hertes, he shal accompany and assist you in all thynges, and the meane tyme shall not bee long ere this coumfozter that shalbe in the steade of me, and my vicegerente, shall come vnto you. Wherefore there is no cause why your hertes should be discoumforted or afeard, good children, whom I haue perfectly begotten, and sumwhat framed with the heauenly doctryne of gods woorde, and do nourishe you beeyng as yet but vnperfite, and not fully taught vntill ye growe vnto the strength of the ghospell.

The verse. If I will not leaue you coumfortelesse, but will come to you: yet a litle while, and the world seeth me no more, but ye see me, For I liue and ye shall liue. That daye shall ye knowe that I am in my father and you in me, and I in you. He that hathe my commaundementes & keperh thē, the same is he that loueth me. And he that loueth me shalbe loued of my father, and I will loue him and will shewe mine own selfe to him.

Although I goe hence for a tyme, and shal no longer liue a manne with men, yet wyl I not leaue you in the meane tyme fatherlesse, and without conuoytable succoure at my handes: for I will cumme to you agayne, before I returne to my father: and I wyll shewe my selfe before your eyes, and bee seene of you with a bery bodye in dede, but than not mortal, to the entente that I maye aduaunce and bryng you from loue of the flesche, to the spirite: for it were no great matter yf I should geue thys my bodye to you alwaye to looke thereupon, because euen the wicked dooe also beholde it to theyr damnacion: within a whyle therfore I shalbe out of the woyldes syghte: for death and the graue shall take me away fro the syght of woyldly folkes. Neuertheless I wyll see you agayn, and presente my selfe vnto you aliue, for this kynde of death shall not alienate vs in sundre, nor kepe me out of youre syghte, for I shall liue agayne, yea after that I bee deade: and I shall not onelye liue, but there withall bryng to you lyfe euerlastyng: and notwithstanding the tyme of myne absence, I beeyng aliue shall fynde you aliue, and I will so spende my life for you, that you shall be in health and safegarde. Then shall you vnderstande more fully, that as nothyng can pull my father from me, nor me from my father: so am I bothe to you and you agayne to me, ioyned by mutuall charitie together, that death can not dissoyne vs: let your onely care be, that by youre owne faulte ye bee not vncoupled and let lewse. The obseruyng of my commaundementes shal trye true charytie: for he louethnot in herte, that neglecteth the preceptes of his Lorde. It is not sufficiente to haue accepted my commaundementes, vnlesse a manne retayne them in mynde. Nor it is not inoughe to remembre theym, except they bee kept: he that doth accomplishe and kepe these, is he that truelye loueth me. For to bee tormented in mynde for my departure, is no proufe of beraye true loue. I that truely do loue my father: do kepe all his commaundementes, and will kepe theym vnto death of the crosse. And there is no cause why my commaundementes of sufferyng iniurye pacientelye, of bearyng the crosse quietely, should make youre putte you in feare, as seuere and grieuous commaundementes: and why? for charitie shall sweeten and make them all easie, and there shall not lacke coumfozte at my hande, foz surely whoso loueth me, he shalbe bothe loued of my father, and I also wyll loue hym, and neuer leaue hym succourlesse, but will see hym againe, and will openlye shewe my selfe vnto hym to bee looked vpon: to make it more certain that I doe not vtterly perishe by suffryng deathe of the crosse. Nowe I geue my selfe to bee seen of all folke, but than no manne shall see me, excepte he abyde constantly in frendeshyppe. Of truethe our Lorde Jesus spake these thynges sum what darkelye, not onelye signifying that he beeyng reuiued agayne would often after his death come among his frendes to bee seen, but that he would also by the holy ghoste his spirite, secretely place and wynde himselfe into theyr myndes, and that finally he would come in the glozye of his father, in the open sight of all folke.

C Judas saieth vnto him, not Judas Iscarioth: lorde what is done that thou wilt shewe thy selfe vnto vs and not vnto the worlde? Jesus aunswered and said: If a manne loue me he will kepe my sayinges, and my father will loue him, and we will come vnto hym and dwell with him. He that loueth me not, keepeth not my sayinges. And the worde which ye heare is not mine, but the fathers whiche sent me. These thinges haue I spoken vnto you beyng yet present with you, but the comforter whiche is the holy ghost whome my father will send in my name, he shall teache you all thinges, and bring all thinges to your remembraunce, whatsoeuer I haue sayed vnto you. Peace I leaue with you: my peace I geue vnto you. Not as the worlde geueth geue I vnto you. Let not your hertes be greued, neyther feare: ye haue heard how I sayd vnto you. I goe and I come againe vnto you. If ye loued me, ye would verely reioyce because I sayd: I goe vnto the father. For the father is greater than I. The texte.

Now than where as Judas, not he verely that is called Iscarioth which was absente at this sermon, but the other Judas whose surname was Lebeus, did not fully vnderstande our lordes saiyng: but beyng thoughe sozowe and feare very sore troubled, dyd suppose that our Lorde shoulde in suche wyse appeare to his frendes, as terrible spirites & phantastical sightes, shewe themselfes many tymes in the darkenesse of the nyght: or as certain visions appeare in dreames rather to the feare of men, then to mennes coumforte. This Judas therefore, saith: Lorde what hath chaunced that when now thou maiest be seen of all folke, thou shalte not than appeare to the worlde, but onelye to vs?

And howe canste thou be one that maye be seen of vs, yf thou be such one as other cannot see? But Jesus because he knewe that his disciples were not yet able to vnderstande the misterie howe that the same bodye, whiche hadde been deade and buried, but nowe made spirituall, and ha able to dooe as it lyste, shoulde ryse agayne: Jesus I saye, knowyng this, dyd not playnelye answere to the thyng that was asked, but turned his saiyng to that thyng whiche was more necessarye to bee imprinted in theyr hearres, whereby they shoulde nowe bee prepared spirituallye to haue his presence: for as muche as that presence whiche shoulde bee eribited vnto theim after his resurrection, coulde not long endure with theim. Therefore Jesus sayed: I will not presente my selfe to the worlde, because it loueth me not, neyther dothe it kepe my commaundementes. If one loue me truely, he will not testifie his loue with sozowe, but by kepyng my commaundementes, and hym wyll I loue semblablye: and whome I shall loue, hym wyll my father loue, and we shall neuer bee pulled awaye from hym: nor I wyll not onelye see hym agayne that hath my commaundementes in remembraunce, but therewithall my father and I wyll by the spirite, whiche is common to vs both, come vnto hym: and we will not only come, forthwith

to departe againe, but we will dwell with him, and neuer go away from him. That which is doen after the spirite is both perpetuall and effectuall: bodily ioyning together muste nedes haue an ende, euen for because ye thoulde lette at naught transitorye thynges, and inure your selfes to loue eternall thinges: and where ye as yet cannot come to vs, we will come to you inuisible, but effectually to dwell in the temple of your hertes. We be three in deede, but to ioyned and conuerte together, that he whiche loueth one, muste loue all: and he that hath one of vs lacketh none of vs. Only on your behalfe let charitie be present, and that couenaunte kepte, whiche I made with you of late. That shal so couple you and vs together, that neyther life nor deathe can vncouple vs. If members maie bee disseuered from the heade, we maie be disseuered. There bee many whiche boaste themselfes to loue God the father, and seme to obserue the commaundementes of the lawe, but none dooeth truelye loue God, yf he hate and contemne his soonne: and he berelye contemneth the soonne, who soeuer keepeth not my commaundemente, who soeuer neglecteth my preceptes, he neglecteth withall the preceptes of God: for in good sooth the thyng that I haue taught you, is not so my peculiar doctrine that the same is not my fathers: but is rather my fathers than myne, from whome cummeth whatsoeuer I can vt doe teache, doyng nothyng but by his autozitie from whome I was sente into the worlde, to teache these matters whiche I dooe teache. But now we there thynges haue I spoken accozding to youre capacitie, as yet a mozrall manne, beeyng conuersaunte among mozrall menne: soone hereafter I will repayre to see you againe, for certayne dayes space: and beeyng immortall, will kepe cumpany with menne mozrall, to the entente I maye coumfozte, teache, and geue you my counsell.

Neyther is it vnawares to me, that ye shal not fully vnderstande these thinges, whiche I nowe speake, and shall speake anone after my deathe, because ye be yet fleshly carnall and rude: not withstaudyng they are not spoken all in vayne, for after that I shall take away this body from you: an other comforter shall come to you, yf ye aske hym (of God) in myname: a comforter (I saye) not bodily as ye se me to to be, but that holy spirite which doeth sanctify spirites and mindes, whome my father shall sende you in my roume yf you require hym in my name. Ye shall not after this neede my corporall presence, whiche for a season was geuen in consideracion of mens grossenes, to the entente that they myght by degrees and ozderlye go forwarde to moze perfeite thynges, for that spirite in asmuche as ye is myne and my fathers, shall putte you in remembraunce of all the thynges, whiche I nowe speake vnto you that bee as yet ignoraunte, and of small capacitie: and besides that obliuious. And he also shall make you vnderstande these thynges whiche ye hadde not vnderstande before, neyther will he suffre you to forget anye thyng or to lacke knowledge of anye thing that pertaineth to saluacion. Of menne obliuious he shall make you of good remembraunce, of slowe witted, easie to bee taughte, of sleapithe slouthfulnesse, vigilante and warchefull, of sozowfull men cheerefull, of yearthly folke heauenly. Onelye perseuer you in charitie, hauing in remembraunce my commaundementes.

There is no cause why that ye should in the meane while feare the troublesumnesse of this worlde, whiche ye shall see ryse agaynste me, and in tyme to come againste you also: let it suffise you that at my departure, I shall leaue

peace

peace vnto you, and geue you my peace. No worldely storme can destroye and vndoe hym that hath my peace. The worlde also hath his kynde of peace whiche it bestoweth vpon them whome it loueth, but this is a peace not to be trusted on. My peace whiche I doe geue you, doeth make frendeshyppe betwene God and you: and who can hurte hym whiche hath God his protectour and gouernour? The peace whiche I do leaue vnto you is ioyning you together among your selues by mutuall concord, shall make your felowship strong and inuincible, agaynst all that the worlde or Satan, prince of the world, can doe. What meaneth it than that my going hence whiche shall bee veray commodious vnto you, doth so muche feare you? Let not your hertes therefore bee troubled nor stricken in feare, ye haue heard me saye alreadye, and (that ye shoulde the more credite me) I expresses tell you that of trueth I goe hence for a tyme: but I will anone returne againe vnto you. And in the meane tyme I will bryng to effecte that I shall kynde you at my returne safe and in health. This blusterous storme of cruell persecution shall for this one tyme be executed vpon me onelye, And soone after I am come againe to my father, I will bee present with you agayne throughe the spirite that is the comforter. And by hym my father shall also bee with you, and we shall neuer bee separate from you, but ye shall be fully placed with vs in the kyngdome of heauen. ye are sorowfull because I goe my waye, but & if ye did rightly loue me, forsooth ye wouldе reioyce, both for your owne sake and mine: for I will not playe the runagate and goe euerye where, but I will returne agayne to my father to obteyne for you more excellent giftes at his hand, for because my father is greatter then I am: and from him it cummeth, what thyng soeuer I doe departe with you. If ye stande in dread of any harme to waydes me, and are sorowfull for my cause, it were more semyng ye should be ioyfull on my behalfe, that am remoued and taken a waye from these mills of the worlde, and goe to my fathers coumpany: and yf ye be sory for your selues, my departure shall bring to you muche profite. Peace I leaue vnto you

And nowe haue I shewed you before it come, that when it is come to passe, ye might beleue. Hereafter will I not talke many woordes with you: for the prince of this worlde cummeth and hath nothing in me. But that the world may know that I loue the father, euen as the father gaue me commaundemente, euen so doe I. Arise let vs goe hence. The texte

I know that I speake this to them that neyther greatlye take hede, nor vnderstande the same, but I do therefore repete, and often inculcate and bryng in the same, that after the dede shal effectuously verifie þ thing that I haue spoken, ye may than therewith beleue all the rest to be true, which I haue tolde afore hande shoulde folowe: after this I beyng a mortall man shall not speake many thynges with the that be mortall: for the time is at hande when I shalbe taken away from you in body. Mary the Satan the prynce of this worlde is presente by his mynysters ready to set vpon me, with his full myght & force wherewith to caste me into the fyre of hell. Howbeit he hath no power ouer me, and when he moste truseth to haue the ouerhande and victorye, than shall he bee banquished and ouerthrowen: he hath no myght but vpon them which bee in synne, and because the worlde is in bondage to synne, he maye playe the tyraunne ouer them that make the worlde their God: for in dede I am neyther forced to dye, nor for any faulte do I dye, but I suffre, throughe my deathe to redeme those that bee ioyned to me by faythe, as membres The prince of this worlde cummeth & hath nothing in me.

mem bres to the bodye, from the tyrannye of sinne and deathe: and my father hath commaunded me thus to doe, whiche his commaundemente I dooe accordyng to his minde: wherefore we haue now already sitte here long inough. Because I doe my fathers commaundemente willingly, it is tyme to goe mete deathe, whiche is at hande. Arise therefore and goe we hence. Our Lorde Iesus seeyng his disciples many wayes dismayed, partely with sorowe because that they sawe that theyr Lordes death was nye, whom they loued somewhat worldly, but yet moste vehemently: partely for feare of harmes whiche they thoughte did hang ouer hym beeyng once abrode: and he also seeyng them heauye of slepe whiche both the myght prouoked, and also sorowe of mynde augmented, and theyr sittyng made theym of moze sluggishe mynde: he commaundeth theym to ryse, that so at the least, duringe beeyng auoided, they myghte bee made moze pregnaunte and quicke witted to those thynges whiche he thoulde saye vnto them, and therewithall he monished the a farre of, and darkely, that nowe is the tyme to elenate theyr myndes from yearthly affections to heauenly thynges, from bodily thynges to spirituall thynges, from mortall thynges to immortall, from thynges transitorye to eternall thynges, he woulde haue that also inprinted in theyr myndes, that he knewe before, and was willyng to suffre what thyng soeuer he thoulde suffre, his father also willyng the same: from whose will his did neuer barye. His will was that his Apostles so farre as mannes weakenesse coulde beare, should be witnesses and seers of his passion, and therefore in this sermon he maketh oftentymes mencion of his departure, litle by litle, there by to inure them to sufferaunce, but mixyng withal many coumfortes to mitigate the bitter payne of sorowe, saiyng that in very dede he muste departe: but so that within a whyle he thoulde come to them agayne: that he should go to his father, that thence he should sende him an other coumforter whiche should finisher that he had begoonne, and also that he and his father ioyntly together, should coume and dwell with them. He sayed furthermoze that this persecucion thoulde not vtterlye deuour and consume them: and after all this he had them thence to an other place, because the place where they were than, was open & in syght: and for because that they had hearde that the prynce of the world was euen than present, they stoode in a generall feare of themself, and therfore he brought them to an other place where they were moze in safetie, to thentente they myghte with moze bolde hertes geue eare to other thynges.

Arise let vs go hence.

In conclusion he telleth them aforehande, that at the length they shoulde folowe hym thyther, whether he nowe goeth before them: well nowe he hath recourse agayne to that saiyng whiche algates muste sitte inwardely and abyde in theyr hearte: in whiche saiyng he counsailleth them to persteuer in charitye, and obseruyng his commaundementes, lette thougie theyr owne faulte, they shoulde dilleuer theym selfes from the felowshippe of the father, the sonne and the holy ghoste, from whiche Judas had already forcerably dissociate himselfe. But he aduiseth theym to sticke to theyr couenaunte by obeying the saiynges of theyr Lorde, and to thutterm oste of theyr power to folowe his doynges.

And truethy it is that this coulde not be doen, vnlesse they dyd persteuer in the spirituall felowshippe of the sonne, and yet in the meane tyme not to truste to theim selfes, or any thyng at all to presume vpon theyr owne proppe strength, for they shoulde neuer bee able to dooe oughte at anye tyme, but by the benefite and free gyfte of Godde, from whome flowyth and issueth oute to all folke, what what thyng soeuer serteth for warde true health, and maketh to saluacion, and that they myght the better vnderstaude this, and retaine it in memory, he declareth the matter by a similitude, taken and brought in of a plaine knowen thing, that is the vyne and the braunches thereof.

¶ The. xv. Chapter:

The texte. I am the true vine, and my father is the husbande man. Euery braunche that beareth no fruite in me, he will take awaye. And euery braunche that beareth fruite, he will pourge that it maie bring foorth more fruite.

O thintent, saieth he, that ye maie vtterly vnderstand how cleane voyde of all perill ye be, yf ye wyll continue still to be of my felowship, and what great daunger it is for you, yf ye fallyng from the couenaunte that I haue made with you, bee disseuered from me: remembre this that I am the true vyne, ye bee the braunches, and my father is the housbandman. I am the roote or stocke of the vyne, ye are my membres as braunches sprong out of the stocke. My father hath planted me, that is to saye, he hath begotten me. The stocke came foorth from hym, and ye out of the stocke. The thanke of the whole benefite redoundeth to my father, as the fountaine therof, whiche doth gene vnto you by me, and his spirite, whatsoeuer he geueth you. And the sappe of the stocke whiche geueth vnto the braunches both lyfe and strength to bring forth fruite, is the spirite that is common both to my father and to me. And yͤ as the spirite knitteth me to my father, so doth it also ioyne you to me. Therefore what braunche soeuer cleaueth to me, and liuyng by my spirite, bringeth forth fruite woorthy for the stocke, the same shall my father purge, cuttyng away the superfluous desyres thereof, that it maye bring forth more plenteous and kindly fruite. But whoso cleaueth to me by ꝑ profession of faith, and bringeth foorth no fruite of euangelicall charitie, my father shall cutte him of from the vyne, as a cumberous and vnprofitable membre. For that braunche which hath no fruite, but onely leaues, serueth to no purpose in the vyne.

The texte. Nowe are ye cleane through the woordes whiche I haue spoken vnto you: byde in me, and I in you. As the braunche cannot beare fruite of it selfe excepte it bide in the vine: no more can ye excepte ye bide in me. I am the vine, ye are the braunches: he that abydeth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth muche fruite. For without me can ye do nothyng: yf a man bide not in me, he is cast foorthe as a braunche, and is withered: and men gather them and caste them into the fier, and they burne. If ye byde in me, and my woordes abide in you, aske what ye will, and it shalbe doen for you. Herein is my father glorified, that ye beare muche fruite and become my disciples.

Now already ye be braunches some what purged and made cleane through beleuyng my woorde: but yet ye muste hereafter bee more purged, that ye maye bring forth more plentye of fruit. At this tyme it is inough for you to bee grafted in the stocke, from whence through fayth ye maye receyue like: la bourde diligently to abyde in me, & I will in lyke manner dwelle in you, so long as you depende vpon me. For as the braunche if it be pulled of frō his vine, cannot it selfe bring foorth the fruite, because it taketh all his sap of the stocke: no more can ye bring foorth the fruite of any good woorke, excepte ye cleaue to me by fayth the and charitie: from whence muste come to you whatsoeuer furthereth to trewe and

eternall saluacion. Wherefore neyther Moses nor any of the Prophetes is the vyne, but I am the onelye vyne, to the whiche all they muste cleaue that will bryng foorth the fruite of saluacion. Ye be the braunches of this vyne, wherein ye are freely graffed, freely pourged, but ye maye fall from thence throughy your owne faute. Wherefore ye muste earnestely take hede that ye maye bee alwaies ioyned to me. For whosoeuer continueth still ioyned to me, hauyng me likewyse ioyned to hym, and liuyng by my spirite, that persone throughe my fathers inspiration, bringeth forth fruite plenteously, gayning for himselfe eternall saluacion, and causing God, for whose sake al thinges bee doone, to bee glorified amonges men. And his glorie is my glorie: by whome it hathe pleased him liberally to geue al that ye geuerth mennе, to the attemyng of eternall saluacion.

Therfore remembre this well, that without me ye can doe nothyng that good is. But if anye braunche dooe throughy his owne faulte pull hymselfe backe againe from me, he not onely bringeth foorth no fruite at all, but like as an vnprofitable braunche, when it is cut of with a shreadyng hooke, withereth, and afterwarde beeyng gathered vp with other twigges that bee shed of, is caste into the fyer to burne: so the same braunche destitute of my moysture a spirite, byeth spiritually although he liue bodilye. And beeyng after this like seperate withoute recouerie from the vyne, is caste into euerlastyng fyer, there to burne for euer to his great tormente: for se muche as he would not abyde styll in the vyne, so bryng foorth fruite of eternall felicitie. And ye shall abyde in me, yf my woordes abyde in you, if ye kepe in mynde the thinges whiche ye beleue, and execute in dede that whiche ye remembre. If ye wyll do this, ye neede not feare anye worldelye stormes, for thoughe I bee not still presente with you in bodye, yet both my father and I will heare you. And yf ye do rightly aske all such thinges as ye would haue, ye shal obtayne your asking. But like as of your selues ye are not able to bryng foorth fruite: euen so ye ought not presumptuously to attribute to your selues the prayse of your good dedes, for as I haue not sought mine owne glorye but my fathers, of whome I haue all my being and power: so shall ye referre all the thanke and commendacion of your good deedes to my father and me. When menne shall perceiue you to bryng foorth muche euangelical fruite, then is my father glorified among them: for what prayse soeuer I shall gette by you, the same shall redounde to my fathers glorye: whome ye shall cause to be praysed among menne, by the wyng your selues the ryght disciples of his sonne, not that we neede worldely praise, but because so it is expedient for the saluacion of mankynde, which thyng we do thinke for and couete. It cummeth of charitie and not of ambition that my father thus desireth to bee glorified amonges men.

Yf ye byde in me &c. aske what ye wyl and it shall bee geuen you.

The texte

AS the father hath loued me, euen so haue I also loued you. Continue ye in my loue: If ye kepe my commaundementes, ye shall byde in my loue euen as I haue kept my fathers commaundementes, and haue bydden in his loue. These thinges haue I spoken vnto you, that my ioye might remaine vnto you, and that your ioye might bee full.

I haue loued you whiche are my braunches, euen as my father hath loued me, that am the stocke. Be carefull to kepe this so great a benefite freelye geuen you, lest ye leese it through your negligence, and ye shall not leese it: Lyke as I alwaies procuring my fathers glorye, haue continued euen to the death in my loue towardes hym: so will ye perseuer in your loue towardes me.

Wherin

Wherin ye shall perseuer not by the obseruing of the Phariseis or phylosophers preceptes, but by keping of my commaundementes: so that neither any flattery or feare of the worlde may separate you from thē, no more then it doeth me, which do constantly to the death, kepe my fathers commaūdementes, being neuer disseuered frō the loue of hym, but by very deedes declaring my selfe to requite his loue with lyke loue. Wherfore as it shall be my fathers glory, to haue so naturall a sonne, and so worthy for hym no lesse shall it be for both our honours that I may haue you my disciples obseruers of my woordes, and followers of my doinges. Albeit these thinges be sumwhat painfull & tedious, yet do I therfore vse so long cōmunicacion therin, to thintent that as I haue not labored for the loye of this worlde, but herein do reioyce that for obeying my fathers cōmaundemēt I am beloued of him, no more should you seke comfort of the worlde, but reioyce in this my kynde of ioye, whensoeuer ye following my steppes shall be afflicted: and let that ioy remayne in you euer increasyng into greater, and better, vntill it cum perfitly to the perpetuall felicitie of immortall life. One of you charitably to loue an other, shalbe a great cumforte to you, euen in the myddest of all your troubles, when ye be at the worste.

¶ This is my commaundemēt, that ye loue together as I haue loued you. Greater loue hath no man than this, that a man bestowe his life for his frendes: Ye are my frendes yf ye do what soeuer I commaund you. Hence furth call I you not seruauntes, for the seruaunt knoweth not what hys Lorde doth, but you haue I called frendes, for all thynges that I haue heard of my father, haue I opened to you. The texte,

There be diuerse preceptes of the Phariseis, and Moses hath also many, but this one precept is my very owne whiche includeth all thinges that I do teache, and shall make pleasaunt all aduersities whiche shall happen, that is to say, that ye beare such loue one to an other, as I haue borne to wardes you. I doe testifie my loue not with woordes onely, but also with deedes: and that loue not to be after the commune sorte, but excellent: and the greatest that any man lyuing can haue, for there can bee no greater token of loue amonge men, than a man to bestowe his lyfe for his frendes sake, for euery man setteth by his lyfe aboue all thinges. Many perchaunce myght bee found that could bee content to bestowe money or labour for an other mans sake, but the person is rare to bee found out, whiche will bestowe his lyfe for his frendes sake. I doe more then all this, whiche bestowe my lyfe for mine enemies, so they will becum my frendes. And in the meane while I call them my frendes in the waye of honour, whom I haue good right to call my seruauntes. Neuertheles I will not take you for my seruauntes, but for my frendes: yf ye wyll as therefully and gladly perfourme these thinges that I commaunde you, as I dooe willingly obey my fathers commaundement. They that are vnder Moses lawe, be rightfully called seruauntes: because they depend vpon diuerse rules prescribed vnto them, and rather for feare then for loue doe the thing that is apointed them. But as for you (whom I haue called from the bondage of the law, vnto the libertie of the gospell) from hence foorth I will no more call seruauntes but frendes, as them whome mutuall loue and not necessitie doeth ioyne vnto me. For the seruaunte perceiueth not his Lordes intent, but onely dooeth that he is bydden, lokyng for no greate rewarde yf he dooe it, and well assured to bee punished yf he dooe it not, besydes that for euery sundrie doyng must be had a sundry commaundement, as gor. cum agayne, doe this.

Obtinue re in my loue. &c.

ethewe that. For the maister telleth not his owne counsell to his seruauntes, whiche are therfore cuil to be trusted, because they rather feare then loue hym. The cause wherfore I haue called you my frendes, is for that I once haue opened vnto you all the purpose of my minde, to thintent there should be no nede hereafter of mennes preceptes contrary to myne. Whatsoeuer my father hath willed me to shewe you, therof I haue made you partakers, as my trusty frendes. Those thinges whiche I haue taught you, be out of all doubte: for I haue taughte you none other, saue what I haue hearde of my father. Thy preceptes be his preceptes, by kepyng whereof he shall count you his frendes in stede of seruauntes.

The texte. Ye haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you, and ordeined you to goe, and bringe forth fruite, and your fruite shall remayne, that whatsoeuer ye aske of the father in my name, he may geue it you.

And because ye maye the better vnderstand how great the honor of this my gentlenes towardes you is, consider how that ye haue neyther prouoked me with your seruice doing, to my frendship, that of duetie I ought to loue you again: nor yet haue you willyngly cum to my frendshippe, that for gētlenes sake, I should requite you with lyke loue: but when ye wer in bondage of the lawe, and farre of from the fauour of God, then did I of myne owne voluntary wil chose you from among al the reste, without your desert. And for this purpose haue I chosen you, that ye should more and more increase in goodnes, beeyng grafted in me thorow mutuall loue, whiche ye couldе not haue towardes me, except I had first loued you. As the braunches is alwaye nourished by the moysture of the vine, and spredeth it self in many braunches, so must you lykewise plentifully bring forth fruite of the ghospell throughout the whole world, and so do good to other that your self loose no fruite therby. For the common byne bringeth forth fruite, but for other, and that suche as soone decayeth: wherfore the braunches thereof be fruitefull but for a tyme, because they growe in a vine that soone fadeth. Contrarywise you, because ye cleaue to an immortal stocke, shall bryng forth fruite that neuer shall perishe, but continue fruitе to your eternall saluacion. And ye haue no cause in the meane while to say it is a great payne to trauayle about the worlde to teache the Gentiles, to suffer the dispites of wicked people. What wages, what ayde, what rewarde is apointed for vs: passe not vpon these worldely defenses. Let this stand you in stede of all rewardes and helpes, that whatsoeuer ye shall rightly aske my father in my name, he shall geue it you. What thinge is more easy then to aske? And what is it that he is not able to geue? Furthermore what is ethe thyng that he will not geue for my sake?

The texte. This commaunde I you that ye loue together. If the world hate you, ye knowe that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the worlde, the worlde would loue his owne. Now bee because ye are not of the world, but I haue chosen you out of the worlde, therfore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I sayed vnto you, the seruaunt is not greater then the lord. If they haue persecuted me, they wil also persecute you. If they haue kept my saying, they will kepe yours also.

Besides this, my commaundements be not tedious, for what is more pleasaunt then one to loue an other? Who bee so weake but mutuall loue may make them strong? what thyng is so grieuous but mutuall charitie can make it delectable? Neither let this trouble you, that whiles you and I bee frendes

and one of you charitablie doe agree with an other, ye shall be at discorde and strife with the worlde, but rather the selfe same thyng ought to comfort your myndes, for so muche as by thys token ye shall well perceiue your selfes to bee my very disciples and frendes, that is to saye, contrary to the worlde, whyche is all sette vpon malice: whereas you are apointed for heauen, disdayne not to suffer that in the world which I haue suffered before you. The worlde hateth me also not for my deserte, but because I reproue and disclose the euill dedes therof, teaching thynges whiche do not agree with theyr worldly affections.
The worlde knoweth menne of his sorte, and them doeth it loue and cherish, as lyke louethe lyke: and as an euyll litche coueteth an handsome stratcher. Therfore be they vnhappy whom this worlde flattereth and fauoureth, for that declareth them to bee farre from the fauour of God, whiche is that onely thyng that maketh the man happie in dede. Wohan the worlde hateth you, remember myne exaumple and reioyce in your owne behalfe that ye haue no felowshyp with the worlde, but do cleaue faste vnto me. For this shall ye perceiue by the hatred the worlde beareth you, howe that ye be myne. In case ye were of the worlde, if ye loued worldly thinges, and taught according to worldly desyres, then the worlde would know you and loue you as hys owne, but because ye folowe not the wayes of the flesshe, but of the spirite, and couete not worldly goodes but heauenly, therefore the worlde hateth you: not that ye deserue it, but for that ye be vnlyke to the same whiche is euill & wicked. In tymes paste when ye thoughte perfitte righteousnes to consiste in the grosse ceremonyes of Moses lawe, and setting your myndes on transytorie thinges, had no loue to heauenly thinges, the worlde bid then well lyke you: but after that I had once called you from this sorte to the euangelicall and heauenly doctrine, and grafted you in me as braunches in the stocke, the worlde began to hate you, and that onely because ye bee myne. yet of trueth for no cause elles shall ye bee blessed, then for that ye be mine. Wherunto nothing at all though your innocencie shall not defende you from the hatred of the worlde. Remember howe
I haue tolde you, the seruauntes state is no better then his lordes. For neither coulde my innocencie, which is greater then yours, defende me from the malice of the worlde, neyther were they afearde to despise my doctrine, nor yet for all my benefites would they waxe gentle, and call themselues backe from theyr cruell purposes. That thing whiche they durst enterprise against me, who am your Lorde and Maister, muche more boldely will they do it to you. Se-ing they haue deuised so many snares to bring me euen to the most reprochefull death, and haue so often spitefully railed vpon me, they will also persecute you my disciples, nay but rather me in you. If they will obey my wordes they will also obey vnto yours: but lyke as they haue not well borne my doctrine, no more will they yours, because ye shal teache the selfe same thinges, that I teache.

But all these thinges will they doe vnto you for my names sake, because they haue not knowen him that sent me. If I had not cum and spoke vnto them, they should haue had no synne, but nowe haue they nothing to cloke theyr sinne withall. He that hateth me, ha-teth my father. If I had not done among them the workes which none other man did, they should haue had no sinne. But now haue they both seen, and heard, not onely me, but also my father. But this happeneth that the saying might be fulfilled that is written in theyr lawe. They hated me without a cause. The texte.

And what soeuer despite they shall doe against you, I will thinke it doen to me: for all thynges that they shall do against you, they shall doe it for the hatred they beare to me: when they curse you, they shal curse me: when they reiecte you, they shal reiecte me: when they beate you, they shall beate me. For whatsoeuer displeasure is doen to the membres, the same redoundeth to the head. And they would doe the lyke to me, if they had me present with them. Now because they cannot shewe their cruelte to me, they will shewe it to you. But as all the iniurie that is doen to you toucheth me: In lyke maner whatsoeuer is committed against my name, tourneth to my fathers dishonour also: whom if they did rightlye knowe, as they thynke they doe, they woulde neuer so shamfully haue handled his sonne. They arrogantlye pretende loue towardes God, and yet they bee wickedly minded against his sonne. They aske saluation of God, and goe about to destroye his sonne. They boaste themselues to be keepers of Gods commaundementes, and doe reiecte the preceptes whiche his sonne geueth by the auctourite of his father. They glorie in their knowledge of the lawe, and doe not receiue the knowledge of hym, whom the lawe setteth forth. They worshyp the sonne, and persecute hym whome he hath sente. Therefore they knowe not God, whome they boaste themselues to knowe. And yet thys ignorannce shall not excuse them in the daye of punishemente. They be ignoraunte in dede, but why: because they woulde not learne. And therfore woulde they not learne, because they loued more theyr owne glorye, then the glorye of god. They did set more by their owne aduauntage, then to winne saluacion by the gospell. And therefore that thynge whiche my father hath ordeyned for theyr saluacion, haue they throughe their owne stubbernesse, heaped by to theyr eternall damnacion. For verily I am come and was sente for this purpose, if it might be, to saue all men. If I the sonne of God, and greatest persone that could be sent, had not come my selfe, and declared vnto them all suche thynges as might haue brought them to a better minde: if I had not also doen these thynges whiche had been inough to haue forced euen stoure hertes to faythe and beliefe, surely theyr destruction shoulde haue been the more easie, as gilteles of this infidelitie, the addicion wherof, shall make the burden of theyr eternall damnacion the heauyer. But nowe sith I haue leafte nothing vndone wherby they might be saued, and they against with obstinate malice haue resisted him whiche freely offereth saluacion, they can alledge no excuse for theyr incredulitie. If one hate a straunger, it maie be thought sumwhat woorthie of pardon because he hateth him whom he neuer sawe, but me they haue both seene and heard. They haue seene me dot good to all folkes, and haue heard me speake thinges woorthy for God, Neuertheless they hate me for those thynges, for whiche they ought to loue me. But whoso hateth me, must nedes hate my father, by whose auctourite I speake that I speake, by whose power I do all that I do. And I haue not onelye spoken by woordes, but also by my dedes: yet were they so blinded, that they did neither beleue my woordes nor dedes. And this selfe thing shall make their damnacion more grieuous, in that they haue so stubbernely abused the goodnesse of God, being alwaye so ready for them. If I had not doen suche miracles among them as neuer any of the Prophetes afore me did, whether a man consider the nounber or greatnesse of them, and that not to make them afeared or astonished therewith, but to helpe them that were afflicted, If I had not doen al this, I say, they should not haue been giltie of this moste grieuous sinne: but nowe they haue both heard and seene,

But nowe haue they nothing to cloke theyr sinne with all.

ſcene,and ſo muche the more haue hated not only me that haue both ſpoken and doen,but alſo my father whiche hath ſpoken by me, and ſet furth his power by me. They neuer ſawe Hoſes and yet hym they doe exteme hylye,they beleue the Prophetes whom they neuer heardе,but they turne cleane awaye from me whom they haue preſentely ſeene before theyr eyes, whom they haue heardе ſpeake,of whoſe benefites they haue ſo manye wayes had the proſe. And not herewith ſatiſfyed, they take my lyfe from me. In the meane while they pretende a reuerente loue to God the father,whereas whoſo truely loueth the father cannot hate his ſonne. Howbeit theſe thinges happen not by chaunce,for the verye ſame thing that theſe men doe,the Pſalmes whiche they haue and reade,did long agon prophecie ſhould cum to paſſe,that is to ſaye, that in ſtede of thankes,they ſhoulde recompence good turnes with euill will. For thus ſpake I there,by the mouthe of the Prophete: let them not triopce and triumphe ouer me,whiche vniuſtely are myne enemies & hate me without cauſe. If a man being prouoked,hate an other, it maye bee ſuffered: if one hate a ſtraunger, it maye ſumwhat be pardoned: but who can forgiue him that hateth one whom he bothe knoweth and hath kound beneficiall:

But when the comforter is cum,whom I will ſende vnto you from the father (euen the ſpirite of truth, whiche proceedeth of the father) he ſhall teſtifie of me. And ye ſhall beare witneſſe alſo,becauſe ye haue been with me from the begynning. The texte.

Neuertheleſſe the incredulitie of theſe perſones ſhall not make their fruite vneffectuall whiche will cleaue to me. For when I ſhall haue accomplished al that my father hath geuen me in commaundement,and after that the comforter is come, whom proceding from my father, I will ſende you according to my prouiſſe, whiche is the holy goſte (beyng the inſpirer and teacher of all truth) he ſhall declare all that euer I haue ſayd and doen,wherby bothe my goodneſſe and their obſtinate blindneſſe ſhall euidētly appeare. He ſhall ſhewe how there hath been nothing doen againſt me,but the ſame hath been prophecied before in their owne bookes whiche they reade and yet vnderſtande not. Ye alſo whiche are now but weake, then being made ſtrong through the inſpiracion of my ſpirite, ſhall teſtifie of me before all menne, for ſo muche as ye haue ſeene in order what I haue doen,and heard the what I haue ſayed: Lyke as I haue tolde you thinges certaine,euen the very whiche I haue ſeene and heard of my father, neyther ſhall the holye goſte put any thing but truth in youre mindes, for ſo muche as he proceedeth from my father: ſo ſhall ye beare witneſſe of thinges not doubtefull, but ſuche as be throughly tryed by all your ſenſes. And there will be ſum whiche will not beleue you,but yet muſte not the ſaluacion of other be loſte,becauſe of them whiche wilfully periſhe through theyr owne faulte.

The.xvj.Chapter.

These thinges haue I ſayd vnto you,becauſe ye ſhoulde not be offended. They ſhall excommunicate you:yea the tyme ſhall cum that whoſoeuer killeth you, will thinke that he doeth God ſeruice. And ſuche thinges will they doe vnto you, becauſe they haue not knowen the father, nor yet me. But theſe thinges haue I tolde you,that when the tyme is cum ye may remember them that I tolde you. The texte.

T Shal not be seming that euery daunger should with-drawe folke frō the open cōfessiō of the gospels trueth, which the world, of trueth, shal spurne against with all deuices, but it shall neuer bee able to put it to vtter silēce and conuince that trueth, which flateth it selfe vpō God the auctour thereof. ye see what thynges the worlde goeth about to doe against me, for publyshyng my fathers trueth. And it is nedeful ỳ ye prepare your mides paciently to suffer the lyke. I doe therfore tel you ỳ these thin ges shall cum, lest ye suppose the professiō of the ghospell to bee all plesaūt and delicate, and than you to be ỳ sōner dismaied when the same thinges chaūceth to you at vnwares, & otherwise than you loke for. For the euils which a man forseeth, against whiche he stil-ly bendeth his mynde ere they cū in place, lesse grieueth. I will not deceiue you, neither in the displeasures whiche muste nedes be suffered for ỳ gospels sake, neyther as touchyng ỳ rewardes which tarieth for them ỳ valiantly doe theyr duetie and office. To you that beginne to preache the ghospell shall this thyng fyrste happen. They that are thoughte to vnderstand the highe poyntes of religion, and to kepe the perfeccion, and do teache and professe the knowledge of the law, shall caste you out of their Synagogues as wicked & coursed people, a thyng amōg them of moste reprofe, and herewith will they not afterwarde be contented, but they will cum to imprisonment and to strokes. And at length the thyng will growe to this ende, ỳ whosoeuer kylleth you, shall thynke himselfe therein to offre a thākefull sacrifice to God. They shall colour out their wickednesse with pretense of godlinesse, & shall accuse & condemne as giltie of impietie, the teachers of true godlinesse: and so it shall cum to passe, that not onely ye muste suffer harde & greuouse thinges, but ye shall bee punished as vngodly persons & malefactours. But care ye not what the worlde iudgeth of you, let my exaumple comforte you, remembryng that ye suffre these thinges with me, and for my fathers sake and myne. The iniurie is ours, we haue the wrong, and it shal be our parte, bothe to ayde you in youre conflicte, to rewarde you hauing the victorie, to resiste them and also punische their obstinacie: thinke ye nothing at all of bengeaunce, for they shall not thus handle you because ye be theues or transgressours, or any waye els woorthie suche ciuill intreating, but because they doe not yet perfectly knowe neyther me nor my father. The ignorauunce wherwith their crueltie is mingled, shall cause my father to take compassiō vpō them, nor I would not ye should so muche desyre their punishmente, as to haue them saued by doctrine: for the zeale of religiō shal sette or prouoke many against you, rather through errour of iudgement, than of ciuill wil. These folke shall repent themselfes and amend, after that my father be knowen to the worlde by you, and assone as men shall through youre preachyng vnderstande my doctrine, and knowe what is the power of the holy goste. I knowe ye bee sory for my departure hence, and sorow is not to be added vpon sorow, but I thought mete to forewarne you hereof, that when these discommodities falleth vpon you, ye maye the more patiently and with lesse hertebreake beare them, calling to your remembrauūce how I had tolde you before, ỳ these thinges shoulde folowe: and that after myne exaumple, ye should suffer of the wicked, of suche as be ignorauunte of the trueth, and euen for my fathers sake and myne: but be ye suffised with a stayed conscience in the trueth, and passe not what menne iudge of you, or rather folow my doctrine, and iudge your selfe blessed, when for my names sake menne doe persecute you, when they speake all euill of you, and defile you. They shall put you out of their Synagogues, but that selfe thing shall proue your names to be registred in heauen.

These thynges sayd I not vnto you at the beginning, because I was present with you. The texte.
But now I go my waie to him that sente me, and none of you asketh me whither I goe: but because I haue sayed suche thinges vnto you, your hertes are full of sorow. Neuertheles I tell you the trueth. It is expedient for you that I goe awaye. For if I goe not awaye, that comforter will not cum vnto you, but if I departe I will sende hym vnto you. And when he is cum, he will rebuke the world of sinne, and of righteousnesse, and of iudgement: of sinne, because they beleue not on me: of righteousnesse, because I go to my father, and ye shall see me no more. Of iudgement because the prince of this world is iudged alreadye.

I knewe all these thynges should happen you. Neuertheless when I first tooke you to me, I spake nothing of them, not to deceiue you therebye, but because the time serued not than, as in dede all thinges are not fyt for all times.
This my bodily presence hath for a season nourished and strengthned your weakenesse, but now forasmuche as the tyme of my departure from you is at hande, it is nedefull ye be openly admonished what ye shall suffer, to the entent ye maye by litle & litle enure your selues to be content to lacke the comforte of my corporall presence, and after ye haue sequestred worldly affection, to take vnto you more fyrme and manlyke boldenesse of herte, and not to be childishe and lyke vnto babes that hang on their mothers lap, all afraied, if it chaunce them at any tyme to be pulled away out of their parentes syght. I would not pamper and disceyue you with vaine hope, nor yet an other tyme discourage you: ye haue bern serued according to your infirmitie, and as tyme required. I haue been your comforter, aduocate, and defender. Now I must departe hence, It is expe-& though I do so, for your cause chiefly to strengthen you in greater thinges; dient for after this my body bee withdrawen out of your sight, yet my talke therof you that I dooeth put you in suche feare that none dooeth aske, or so much as thinke whi- goe awaye.
ther I goe, where as in dede ye ought rather to reioice, than in mind to be troubled with my departure, seing I goe to my father, from whom I came: not that I shall hereafter be vtterly absent from you, but in an other sorte present with you. Nor I was not ignorant what would haue been more pleasaunt to your affections: ye had rather haue the continuall fruicion of this my con-uersacion among you, but I had leuer speake to you of thinges that do pro-fite, then: which doth delyte you, & would leuer haue you bydo knowelage of the trueth to be in beautifulnesse for a time, than not to proceede to the sure constancie shoulde be fitte for the tyme to cum. And for this cause I do open vnto you what shall chaunce hereafter. Verily thus I must leue you, and after that I be taken away from you, ye shall suffer many thinges: & that ye may be the more apte to beare the same more patiently, it is expedient for you, that I be had out of your sygnt. For vnlesse by takyng from you the sight of the fleshe, ye ware spirituall, that comforter the spirite which shall make you strong, and not to be banquished, shal not cum vnto you. And because I haue prepared you for him, he shall perfourme & finish that which I haue begonne in you. Finally through that spirite I shall alwaye continue with you, yea and that more presently after I be gone, than I am nowe in this kynde of presence. For the purpose of my

For if I goe not away the cõforter will not cum vnto you.

cumming was not to dwell still with you in the worlde, but the cause why I did abase my selfe to your state and infirmitie, was to enhaunce you to heauen. It hath so semed good to my fathers wysedome as proceasse of tyme thoulde serue, to aduaunce you litle by litle, and by certaine degrees, to thinges of perfection: and it is but reason that ye on your behalfes do accommodate your mindes and good willes to my fathers order and disposicio of thinges: ye shall haue al thing of our gifte, but your parte is to endeuoure your selfe to be mete to receiue our benefite, for if ye should alway cõtinue thus affect as ye be now, that heauenly comforter will not cum to you, as yet vnable to receiue his giftes. But if I goe my waye, and that you not regarding this corporall presence, will frame your mindes to hier giftes, whiche that spirite shall geue you, then shall my father sende hym vnto you, neuer to forsake you nor to lene you succourlesse, whether you lyue or dye. Nor he shall be no fruteless spirite, but when he cummeth he shall worke more by you, than I nowe doe: not that but our power is all one, but because to appointe to euery busynes his tyme, is a thing expedient for mannes saluacion. I haue reproued the worlde, the same thing shall he doe more fully and more plainly: for he shall forechargethe worlde, that creepte it do forthinke and amende it selfe, geuyng faithe to the ghospell, it shall be without all excuse: for in dede lyke as the infirmitie of our flesche offendeth the worlde, euen so doeth it seme to minister matter why the sayed world may pretende an excuse of his infidelitie. They haue seen this outward man very hungrie and a thurst, they haue seen me poore, and had in contempt, within a while they shall se me sore afflicted, taken of mine enemies, al to beate and cutyped, and in conclusion die. But when all thinges be finished that the flesh hath here to do, & that they shall se this body after it be dead, liue againe, and ascend vp into heauen, and shall se the holye ghoste sent, and make you sodainly vnfearefull preachers of my name, and shall also perceiue wonderfull power, vertue, and strength, the word by calling vpon my name, as deuils to go sodainly out of men, the halte a lame to be restored to their lymmes, the sycke to be healed, the dead to lyue againe, and moreouer euery thing to cu to passe whiche the Prophetes had prophesied shoulde folowe and be: than (I say) no manner of excuse shal be left to the wicked and miscreantes: for than the worlde shall be adiudged and condẽned of these poinctes, and can not be excused: firste of synne, after of righteousnesse, and thirdly of Iudgement: the shal rebuke the worlde of the greatest and suche a synne as doeth include in it all other sinnes, (a synne inexcusable) and whye? because seing they perceiued the prophecies of Gods owne Prophetes take effect, many thousandes professe my name, they that beleued in me (after they had receiued the holy goste) speake straunge languages, much more for their miracles, forsake the superstition of Moses lawe, imbrace the holy gospel, detestethey? forefathers Idolatrie, and yet worshippe the father of heauen in true godlynesse of life, nothing regarding worldly commodities, but haue their mindes wholye sette vpon heauenlye thinges: the worlde, I saye, perceiuing this, what excuse shall it make for his lacke of belefe? If there shalbe no lacke on my fathers behalfe that hath sent me, nor of myne whiche was sent to haue had all men saued, and yf the holy ghoste shall omit nothing, whome both we shall sende, neyther ye whome that heauenly spirite shall vse as his instrumentes, what resteth but that al may vnderstand howe that they perishe in the synne of vnbelefe? And whan they shall see the

see the prophane Gentiles to haue the sinnes of their olde former lyfe washed awaye, and themselues endued with innocencie, throwe baptisme and profession of my name, it shalbe manifested that wittingly and willingly they abyde still in their filthines, and adde sinne vpon synne.

And the worlde also shall bee reproued of falsely vsurped righteousnes, and of right-for nowe they sum waie pretende the kepyng of the lawe, they sum what glo- eousnes &c. ry in obseruing the ordinaunces of their progenitors, they pretende religion whiche their forefathers gaue them, the feastes, the sabboth dayes, the prayers, the woorkes of mercie, their wayes of honouring God, and suche other lyke whiche hath the pretence of righteousnesse: but after that they shall see the wonderfull power of that spirite, not to bee geuen but to those that haue professed my name, and that it shall bee their chaunce whiche were Idolatres to haue it without kepyng of the lawe, what than shall they say there by, whiche challenge to themselues righteousnes by kepyng of the lawe? All in vaine do they glorye before menne in a false righteousnes, whiche haue refused hym by whome onely true righteousnesse cummeth. And all this to bee true shall then be moreopen to the worlde, whan that spirite shall declare me not to bee dead, whom they had fastened to the crosse, and had buried, but that I dyd returne agayne to my father, (from whom I came,) to lyue with hym: and than being inuisyble & withdrawen out of mens syght, to do greater thinges by you being inspired with my spirite, than I dyd beeing with you hymself in the worlde. Thus it shall cum to passe, that throughe these thinges the vnrighteousnes of them shall be rebuked, which haue put their hope of righte-ousnesse other where than in me: and the iustice of God made more notable, whiche faithfully hath performed the thing which many yeares agone he promised to mankynde by his Apostles, and prophetes: and within a while the thing shalbe put in vre and take effect, for I shall not longe be conuersaunt among you in this visible bodie, but shall dye and goe to my father. And yet ye shall perceyue me to be one that liueth, and hath power, and that shall accomplishe all that I haue promised.

Moreouer the worlde also shal be rebuked and reproued of vngodlynesse, be- Of iudge-cause that (by seing men euery where throughe penaunce conuerte from synne ment, because to innocencie of lyfe, leaue the grosse ceremonies of Moses lawe, and turne the prince to godlynesse of the ghospell, the nations of the whole worlde forsake their of this worshipping of diuels and images, and falle to the true worshipping of God world is the father, the sonne, and the holy ghost) it shall manifestly appere the prince already iudof the worlde (who hath hereto fore by synne practised tirannie) to be already ged al-with his owne weapons banquished, put out of the waye, and iudged as one ready.
that hath procured my death, by whom innocencie, libertie of the ghospell, and immortalitie is recouered, employed, and geuen. Than shall it well appere to haue been a triumphe, whiche semed to be a thing of shame and reproche, and that to haue been a victory whiche was imputed and counted for an ouerthrowe and an vtter destruccion: for whan deuils shall eche where be cast out of the temples, and shall crye out at the signe of the crosse, when they shall leaue the bodyes whiche they had of long tyme possessed at naming of me, shall not that openly proue their prince to be iudged and condemned? Shall it not bee apparante and a clere matter that they also be woorthely iudged and condemned whiche had leuer folow hym being alreadye banquished and iudged to eter-

to eternall deathe, than me, whom as a conquerour, and to all folke the verye auctour of innocencie and of life, God shall carrye vp and auaunce to the felowship of his kyngdome.

The texte. ¶ I haue yet many thinges to saye vnto you, but ye cannot beare them awaye nowe. Howbeit when he is cum whiche is the spirite of treuth, he will leade you into al treuth: he will not speake of hym selfe, but what soeuer he shall heare, that shall he speake, and he wil shewe you thinges to cum. He shall glorifie me, for he shall receyue of myne and shall shewe vnto you. All thinges that the father hathe are myne. Therefore sayed I vnto you, that he shall take of myne and shewe vnto you.

I coulde tell you many mo thinges, but the tyme serueth not, nor your weakenesse wyll not as yet beare them: and since I haue not yet altogether goen thorow with this mine ambassade, I do therfore reserue them to the cummyng of the holy ghoste: he bryng once come, shall fynde you more apte to receyue a more full knowledge, euen when the busynesse of my deathe, resurrection, and ascencion shall be dispatched and fynished. This spirite that I speake of shall be no lying nor worldely spirite, but my very spirite, that is to saye, the spirite of treuth, he shall teache you all treuth, whiche yeare not nowe able to receiue at full. He also shall speake vnto you, but (that shall be) by secrete inspiracions. He shall not with mouing the eyer touche your bodely eares, but by a priuey secrete vertue shall moue the inwarde myndes: neyther shall he speake thynges of vncertaintye, but in lyke maner as I haue spoken nothyng whiche I haue not heard of my father, so shall he inspire nothyng into your hertes, but that he hearde of my father and me: and he shall out onely open vnto you all treuth of thynges paste, but also he shall foreshewe you thynges to cumme ere they happen, so often as nede shall require: for he is not alone only almighty, but hathe withall knowleage of all thinges.

He shall by you make the glory of my name be knowen to all men, lyke as I by my deathe and resurrection shall make my fathers glory notable and famouse: for as what thing soeuer I doe, redoundeth to my fathers praise and glory, of whome I haue my being, and of him haue receiued all that I haue: euen so shall it growe to my honour and praise, what soeuer he shall woorke by you. He shall mocion you to nothing contrary to those thinges, whiche I (receiuing them of my father,) haue taught you. All thinges is common betwene vs, all thinges proceede from my father: but wholsoeuer is his, is mine, nor any thing is my fathers nor mine, whiche is not common to the spirite. Therefore by the saye de spirite shall I speake to you, as my father hathe spoken to you by me: he that beleueth me, beleueth my father, and he that beleueth the spirite, beleueth vs both.

The texte. ¶ After a while ye shall not see me, and againe after a while, ye shall see me: for I go to the father. Then sayed sum of his disciples betwene themselues: what is this that he sayeth vnto vs, after a while ye shal not see me, and againe after a while ye shall see me, and that I go to the father? They sayed therefore, what is this that he sayeth after a while? we cannot tell what he sayeth: Iesus perceiuing that they woulde aske hym, sayed vnto them: Ye enquire of this betwene your selues, because I sayed after a while ye shall not see me: and againe after a while ye shall see me: Verily verily I saye vnto you, ye shall wepe and lament, but contrariwyse the worlde shall reioyce, ye shall sorowe, but your sorowe shall be turned into ioy.

Now than being corroborate and stablished with many thinges, be ye bold and take good hearte vnto you against the storme that hangeth ouer you, & in adin aduerſitie ſauc your ſelues to the proſperitie whiche ſhall folowe: within a whyle ye ſhall lacke the ſyght of me, but ye ſhall be without it no longe time: for within a ſhorte ſpace after, I ſhall be preſented to your ſyght agayne, that ſo ye may litle by litle be brought in vre to wante the ſight of this body, which is not moſte commodiouſe for you. For I returne to my father, to thentente that after I ceaſe to be ſeen of you, I maye endue you with greater giftes.

But not withſtanding all this, ſo great ſorowe did poſſeſſe the diſciples myndes at that time, that they neyther vnderſtood nor coulde kepe in memorie thinges that were often repeted and reiterate: for whereas our lord Ieſus did declare in theſe wordes not very obſcurely, ỹ by death and buryall he ſhould be abſent out of his diſciples ſight, yet none otherwyſe but that within thre dayes after he would appeare vnto them againe, euen in the ſelfſame bodye, but now immortall: ſo after he had for a fewe dayes ſpace confirmed and ſtayed the myndes of his diſciples, to conuaye hymſelfe again into heaue. And to thentent that hauing his bodely ſight withdrawen from them which letted them to be ſpirituall, they mighte deſerue that heauenly ſpirite, and after that to looke no more for their lordes bodely preſence, ſaue onely when at the laſte daye he ſhall once for all ſhewe hymſelfe to the whole worlde for to iudge the quicke and the dead: all this, I ſaye, not withſtanding, yet did not the diſciples perceiue the thing that was ſpoken, but ſayde muttering among themſelues: what meaneth this ſaying: after a litle while and ye ſhall not ſee me, and again there ſhalbe a litle time that ye ſhal ſe me, for I go to the father? How ſhall we ſe hym that hath himſelfe awaye to go to his father? Or what meaneth this litle whyle wherein he ſhall reſtraine vs from ſeing of hym, and againe after a litle whyle, when as he ſhall permit vs to ſee him? This is a darke ſaying and we vnderſtande not what he ſpeaketh.

What is ment by this ſaying.

Than Ieſus perceiuing that their myndes was to aſke him what he ment by his ſaying, preuented their demaunde and queſtion: to declare (as his cuſtome was) that he knewe the moſte ſecret thoughtes of me: and againe he ſaith: this that I ſayde, (after a litle whyle the ſight of me ſhalbe taken fro you, and againe after a litle whyle it ſhalbe reſtored newly vnto you, becauſe it is not expedient that I ſhoulde alwaye tarry among you in ſuche ſorte as I now do, but it is more for your profit ỹ I depart hence and go to my father,) doeth trouble you. The thing that I haue ſayd is moſte true. The tyme is nyghe, when as hauing this our familiar cumpanie diſcouered and broken, ye ſhall with wayling, ſorowe, and weping, be in manner conſumed, and werye of your lyues, as men deſtitute of all ſuccoure. Contrarie, the worlde ſhal ioye, praunce and triumphe as a conqueroure, but within a litle tyme the courſe of thinges ſhall be chaunged: for the worldes ioye ſhall be turned into ſorowe, & your ſorowe into ioye and gladneſſe. The cauſe is that as my death ſhall greue and make you penſife, but it ſhall make the Iewes gladde, ſo my reſurrection ſhall make you to ouſe, and contrarie it ſhall vexe and trouble the Iewes. Wherfore beare you well and boldly this ſhorte ſorowe, thorowe hope of the ioye that ſhall folowe ſoone after.

A woman when ſhe trauayleth hath ſorowe becauſe her houre is come, but aſſone as ſhe is deliuered of the childe, ſhe remembreth nomore the anguiſhe, for ioye that a man is borne into the worlde. And ye now therfore haue ſorowe: but I will ſee you againe, and your hertes ſhall reioyce, and your ioye ſhall no man take from you, And in that daye ſhal ye aſke me no queſtion. The text.

In like

In lyke maner as a woman greate with childe suffereth sore grenous paynes in the tyme of her trauayle, but yet she beareth oute those painefull throwes with a stour good herte, because she knoweth they shall not long endure, and soone after there followeth vpō the byrth of the childe, ioyous pleasure: for as sone as the hath brought forth the childe that she laboured of in trauayle, her pleasure in beyng a mother of a newe childe is so great, that she forgetteth the dolourouse payne whiche she sustained in her trauayles: yea to saye forthe, she ioyeth muche that she hath boughte long comforte with a shorte dolour. In the same wyse shall you also for a litle time that drayweth fast on, be sore vexed in minde, yea and ye be nowe already in great sorowe, yet so that within a fewe dayes hereafter when I being a conquerour of death, shal present my selfe alyue againe vnto you, your hertes shal be replenished with great ioye, because him, whome ye did bewayle and mourne for being dead, ye shall than se alyue and made immortall, neuer after to dye. Thesorowfull mourning shall be shorte, but the ioyeful mirth shall be perpetuall: for death ouerpasseth, but immortalitie remayneth for euer.

The texte

Verily, verily, I saye vnto you: whatsoeuer ye shal aske the father in my name, he will geue it you. Hitherto haue ye asked nothyng in my name. Aske and ye shall receyue, that your ioye may bee full. These thinges haue I spoken vnto you by prouerbes. The tyme will cum when I shall no more speake vnto you by prouerbes, but I shall shewe you plainly from my father. And that daye shall ye aske in my name. And I saye not vnto you that I will speake vnto my father for you, for the father himselfe loueth you, because ye haue loued me, and haue beleued that I came out from God. I went out from the father, and came into the worlde, agayne I leaue the worlde, and go to the father.

There be nowe many thinges whiche your herte lepeth for desyre to question with me of. Than shall your mindes and also your eyes bee so fully content and satisfied, that ye shall wene no mo questions are to bee demaunded: for great excelling ioye shall shake of and vtterly put awaye all griefe of minde, neyther shall you wyshe or require any thing els, considering ye shall se and perceiue more giuen you than you loked for, or durst be bolde to desyre. I assure you, after I be taken from you bi into heauen, ye shall want nothyng, for what can bee more easie than to aske of a father: whatsoeuer verely ye shall aske of him in my name, it shall be geuen you. What nede you any other ayde? The father alone maye do all thinges, and he will deny my frendes and them that aske in my name, nothyng: hitherto my bodely presence hath letted you to aske any thyng in my name wozthie the same: for as yet ye do not wholy depende of heauenly ayde, but as being led by worldly affection ye do depende vpon this bodie: hereafter lyfting vp your hertes to heauen make your petition where ye know me to be a present aduocate, and ye shall obtaine whatsoeuer ye aske, that your ioye, which shall after this kynde wherein you be now, come vnto you by reason that ye shall se me againe, maye than be full and perpetuall, for than shall be no chaunge of sorowe and ioye, by hauing or not hauing of me after the infirmitie of the body, but trusting to heauenly succour that is alwaye ready for you, hauing alwaye the spirite a present counfortor and counceler, ye maye enioye a continuall gladnes of conscience, thankyng and prayeng God both in prosperitie and also in aduersitie.

Whatsoeuer ye shall aske my father in my name, he shall geue it you.

This nowe by the waye haue I sumwhat obscurely and prouerbially spoken vnto you, as yet not fully vnderstanding what I doe saye, for it behoued

so to geue place and beare with your infirmitie, that you also maye learne to condescend and agree to the imbecillitie, and weakenesse of other: but the time shall come whan hauing this mortall body remoued hence, I shall cõmoll with you (than being more stablished and stronger, and also forowe set a syde more attent) of my father manifestly, without closynge vp the matter in parables, for now by reason ỹ your minde is vnstradie, weake, and tarefull, the thing which is plainly and openly spoken, is to you as it were a parable. At length I shal euen by my spirite declare and open vnto you, the very certaintie of my fathers wyll, for it becummeth not you to be ignorauant of my fathers wyll: verely I shall than speake vnto you wyshtfie and without wordes, but I shall speake assured and manifeste thinges, if so bee ye aske them: yea and than also the holy ghoste shall incense you, what to aske, and how to aske in my name, whiche in case ye so do, surely though it were a great matter, and a thyng of difficultie, yet shall the father for my sake not deny it you as kyng it.

And I doe not now speake this as if ye shall obtaine your requeste by my mediacion, in suche sorte as men doe sumtime at a kinges hande ỹ is but a mã, obtaine their requeste at the desyre and suite of sum one that is in fauoute with the kyng, whiche petition the kyng woulde not els haue graunted, but that he was content to geue it for his sake whiche did commende a set forward the sutters supplicacion: but as for my father, although he loueth to bee asked of by his sonne, by whome his will hath beene to graunte all thynges to menne, yet that not withstandynge he wyll other wise consente to your desyres, not onlye for the loue that he beareth towardes his sonne, but whiche he hath also towardes you: for he loueth not his sonne so that he loueth not you, but whomsoeuer the sonne loueth, those the father loueth also. Therefore he loueth you, not for your workes sake, but for that ye loue me semblablie, and beleue that I am cum out from hym, for this is to loue the father, euen to loue his sonne: and to beleue the father is euen to beleue the sonne. He of truethe dooeth not beleue whiche denyeth the sonne to haue cum from the father, and not to haue layed and doon all thyng euen by the fathers auctozitie.

I was already with the father, before I came into the worlde, euen for to cary you vp, takyng vnto me this mortall body ỹ I vse, but for your cause came I into the worlde, euen for to cary you vp into heauen. Now than the thynges beyng once doon, whiche the father gaue me in commaundemente, I doe euen for your sake, leaue the world & touchyng worldly pretence, and returne again vnto the father: and truely what soeuer is or shalbe doon here, it is and shall bee doen to bryng you to saluation.

This disciples saye vnto hym: lo, nowe talkest thou plainly and speakest no prouerbe. Nowe are we sure that thou knowest all thynges. And needest not that any man should aske the any question: Therefore beleue we that thou camest from god. Jesus answered them. Nowe ye do beleue: beholde the houre draweth nye, and is already cum, that ye shalbe scattered euery mã to his owne, and shall leaue me alone. And yet am I not alone, for the father is with me. These wordes haue I spoken vnto you, that in me ye might haue peace. For in the worlde shall ye haue tribulacion, but be of good cheer, I haue ouercum the world.

The disciples beynge boldened with these sayinges, begunne sum what to stande in their owne conceite, and as though they had of their owne strength beene able to abide and beare their lordes death that was at hande, they answered on this wyse: loke (saye they) euen now at this present doeth thou fulfill the

the selfe thynge whiche thou promisedst after warde to doe: for now we without any barkenes of parables, thou speakest plainly out, what thou wilte doe: neyther nedeth it to aske the any further question. For thou knowest all thynges, and with thy good wordes hast deliuered our hertes from sorowe, so that we nede no further communication: for why: we nothinge doubte, but that through hope of thy ioye to come, wee shall boldly and patiently suffre the thynge that is imminent and cumming to wardes vs: and we do therfore finallye and verily beleue that thou art cum out from god, because thou seest throughly the very botome and secretie of our hertes. And than the Lord Jesus, whole master was euery where ready to controll, and restraine whatsoeuer humayne and worldely arrogancie, ambition, or selfe affiance, he perceiued to arise in his disceples hearttes, þ they mighte plainely learne to distruste their owne strength and vertue, whereby they myghte dooe nothyng, and wholly to depende vpon the hande of God the father: The Lorde Jesus (I saye) dyd thus abate and acoole that arrogancie (whiche was suche) that thoughe they yet vnderstoode not what he sayed, thoughe they had no true beleefe, and as yet were not meete for the stormes that were cummyng vpon thē, for all that they tooke on hande the thyng that was to be asked of God by prayer. And he answereth them after this sorte: what door I feare the thynge whyche I promyse to geue you hereafter whan ye shalbe made stronge, and be staied by my doctrine, and by the inspiration of the holy ghoste, ye now proudely take on hande before due time: as if ye might do at least sumwhat by thyselpe and assistence of mās owne power and vertue: when as rather the tyme is full nyghe that ye shall declare howe strengthesselle yeare of your selfes. For ye shall not onely bee vnable to go throughe the instante tempeste, but leauing me alone in the handes of the sergeauntes + catchpoiles, whyche shall violently drawe me to the deathe of the crosse, ye shall run awaye eche one a seuerē waye, throughe feare so amased, that ye shall not one beare cōpany with another to your succoure and comforte, whyles euery one shall feare other, leste by any others telling he mighte be betrayed and come in daunger, albeit in dede I nede not your aide and helpe: I shall of trueth be forsaken of all my frendes: but yet shall I not be desolate, because the father shall neuer leaue me. Therefore I do speake these thynges vnto you, that distrusting your owne strength, ye maye reste and staye your selfe in me. The worlde shall make gtēate commotiō, and fiercely rise againste you, as it doeth agaynst me, but bee bolde and thynke not, remēbryng that I haue conquered the worlde: ye shall take crauncle at me, and shall trust to be holpen by me, ye shall also haue victorie but through me, beeing of youre owne nature very weake: and yet when tyme and occasion shall require, ye shalbe throughe my spirite stronge and vnuanquished.

The .xvii. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ These wordes spake Jesus, and lift vp his eyes to heauen, and sayed: father, the houre is cum, glorifie thy sonne, that thy sonne also may glorifie the. As thou hast geue him power ouer all fleshe, that he should geue eternall lyfe to as many as thou hast geuen him. This is life eternall, that they might knowe thee, the only true god, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sente.

After

After that Iesus had with this kynde of talke partelye comforted his disciples, and partlye taughte them and geuen them also instruccion againste the daungerouse storme that was imminente and cumming vpon theim than for so muche as he hau by woorde of mouthe aduertised them howe that mans own power and strengthe is not to be trusted to but meme muste put their truste in heauenly ayde and succour, he nowe therfore woulde teache hys, by very practise, that in worldely afflictions, whiche percase myghte sodenly falle vpon them, they shoulde looke to none other for succour, but vnto the father of heauen, vpon whome oughte all they wholly to depende, that bee dehyrouse to bee strong inough and able to beare persecution. Therfore, lyfting vp his eyes to heauen, to thentente he so might euen by the very semblance & behauiour of body teache whither the minde shoulde bee directed, and whereupon fixed, he spake on this wise: father (sayed he) nowe the tyme is cum whiche I haue alway longed for. Glorifie thy sonne amog men by death and resurrection, that thy sonne on his behalfe maye glorifie the amongest all men. and so the one to be knowen by the other. For so it is expediente for the saluation of all mankynd, that the worlde knowe the sonne by thee, and the father again by the sonne. And for this cause hath it pleased thee to geue vnto the sonne power ouer all mankynde vniuersally: And for none other ende haste thou geuen this power, but that all folke shoulde be saued. And being deliuered from death, should attein to euerlasting lyfe. For it hath liked the, that what thing soeuer thou graunteste and geueste to men, thou geueste and graūteste it by me: through whose death thou geueste to all that will, eternall lyfe. Furthermoze, the very originall fountain of eternal life is, that (both the one and the other setting forth eche others honour and name) men by fayth know vs both: that is to saye, thee, whiche art the onely true god, not only of the Iewes but of all the people of the whole world, from whom proceedeth whatsoeuer is any where good, and to knowe him also whom thou hast sent into the worlde, for the saluation of mankynde, Iesus Christ, by whom thou geueste whatsoeuer it pleaseth thy goodnes to geue to men: and this thou doest that they should rendre thankes to vs both, to thee as to the chiefe autor of al thinges, to me who at thy will and pleasure, am about willingly and gladly to finishe by this businesse that I am appointed to. For he cannot cum to saluacion whiche honoureth the father, in case he despise the sonne, nor yet he that hath the sonne in reuerence if so be he contēne and neglecte the father: for asmuche as the praise and glorye of the one, is the praise and glory of the other.

The texte. I haue glorified thee on the earth. I haue finished the worke, whiche thou gauest me to do. And now glorifie thou me, o father, with thine owne selfe, with the glorie which I had with thee ere the world was. I haue declared thy name vnto the men, which thou gauest me out of the worlde. Thine they were, and thou gauest them me, & they haue kept thy worde. Nowe haue they known, that all thinges whatsoeuer thou hast geuen me, are of thee. For I haue geuen vnto them the wordes whiche thou gauest me, and they haue receiued them, and haue knowen surelye, that I came oute from thee: and they haue beleued that thou didest sende me.

I haue hitherto renoumed thy name by miracles, and with my doctrine

here in the worlde, and haue goen about and doen thy commaundement being forwarde and readie to prosecute and accomplishe that which remaineth to be doen. I haue not sought myne owne glory, but thine: yea I haue abased and caste downe my selfe into extreme contempte, to the entente I might blase and honorably set furth thy name amõg men. For thy glory is alwaye whole, substanciall, and sounde in it selfe, without decaye, nor thou haste no nede of mãs prayse, but it standeth them on hande that thou be knowen vnto theym. And now my father, bring thou it to passe, that on the other parte, the worlde may semblably knowe and perceiue that I am fully and wholy receyued into that same glorie whiche I had with the, before the worlde was made. By reason of the frayle mortalitie and brittlenes of the bodie, men impute me to be very base, and extreme me very courselye, but they hiely extreme the. Thy glory as of it selfe it hath neyther beginning nor endyng. so can it neither encrease nor decrease. For the infirmitie of this bodie that I haue put vpon me, doeth not impouerishe or lessen my glorie, whiche I haue alwaye had beyng euermore borne of the, but thou haste made the worlde by me, to haue folke that thoulde knowe, that thoulde haue in admiracion, and thoulde loue thy power, wisdõ, and goodnesse: and nowe agayne is the time that thy goodnesse muste restore by me, that whiche hath been fourmed and made. It shall verelye be restored, if the worlde knowe howe great thy loue is towardes mankinde, whiche to saue, thou haste geuen thy only sonne vnto death: howe great thy power is that hath conquered the deuill and vanquished his tyrannie: how great is thy wisdome that hath with suche wonderfull deuice, conuerted the worlde vnto thee which was alienate from thee. The thing is begun, and the foundacion of this worke is layed.

I haue made thy name knowen vnto them, whom (being through thy godly inspiracion exempte and priuileged from the worlde) thou haste geuen and committed vnto me. They could not haue beene taken out and separate from the world, they could not haue been grafted in me, bules thy liberall free goodnesse, had inspired their minde. Thyne they were, whom thou createdst, thine they were whom thou haste appointed to this businesse, and geuen them to me to be taught and informed.

Neither hath thy bountefousnes nor my labours and diligente been bestowed vpon them in vaine. They haue beleued my doctrine, wherin I haue taught them thee, and not onely geuen credence vnto it, but they haue hitherto stande stedfastly in faythe, obeying my wordes. For it is well knowen and persuaded vnto them, that the Iewes would not beleue, that whatsoeuer I haue taught, whatsoeuer I haue doen, it hath proceded from the as the auctor: and hath been doen through thy power and vertue.

For I haue taught them none other thing than that I haue learned of the, who also haue al my being and whatsoeuer I am, of ther, and whatsoeuer is thine is also mine. Therfore my worde (whiche the Pharisees haue contemned,) haue they receiued as cum from the, and beleuing thesame haue certainly knowen that I proceded from the, and of the am sent into this worlde. They haue thus muche profited, that they be persuaded howe that I am Messyas, whyche haue been so many hundreth yeares looked for: whome thou haste sente into the worlde, for the saluacion of all that faithfully beleue. And nowe because I do leaue them as touching companiship of body, I do on my behalfe halfe agayne commende them to thy goodneſſe to be kepte and preſerued, that they decaye not, but alwaye profit more and more and ware better. Thei knowe whom they ought to thanke for they saluacion. They knowe of whome to bee ſuccoured, and whome to leane to. They doe depende vpon thee.

I praye for them, I praye not for the worlde, but for them whiche thou haſt geuen me, for they are thyne. And all myne are thyne, and thine are myne, and I am glorifyed in them. And nowe I am not in the worlde, and they are in the worlde, and I come to thee. O holye father, kepe thoſe we thyne owne name, them whiche thou haſt geuen me, that they alſo maye be one as we are. Whyles I was with them in the worlde, I kepte them in thy name. Thoſe that thou gauest me haue I kepte, and none of them is loſte, but that loſte chylde, that the ſcripture might be fulfylled. The text.

Therefore I praye for them whome beyng withdrawen out of the worlde, thou wouldest ſhoulde be thine: and my prayer is that thy goodnes would ſtablyſhe and make the thyng perpetually theyr owne, which thou haſte begun in them. I do not nowe praye for the worlde, which being blynded in eupl deſyres, doeth ſtubbernly oppugne and reclayme agaynſte my doctrine, hauyng enuie at theyr owne ſaluacion, when it is freely offred them: I praye for them whom thou haſt committed to my tuicion, becauſe thei be not of this worlde but thine, and agaynſt the malyce of the deuill, they cannot be in ſauetie but by thy continuall ayde. I therefore, o father, commende them to thee, that it maye pleaſe thee to let them be alwaye thyne, lyke as I am perpetually thyne for euer.

And therfore are they myne, becauſe they bee thyne: For betwene vs are all thynges common. For whatſoeuer is myne, theſame is alſo thyne: And whatſoeuer is thine, theſame is alſo myne. And like as thou arte honoured and glorifyed by my doctryne among menne, ſo am I glorifyed by the beliefe of theſe, whiche ſticke vnto me conſtauntly: when as the Phariſeis and the ſcribes ſtāde obſtinately in the denial therof. For theſe ſhall after a ſorte ſuccede me in office, and come into my roume, and after that I be take away out of this worlde, they ſhall make bothe thy name and myne to be of famouſe memorye, throughout all the worlde. I haue played the preachers parte, and doone my funccion and office therein, wherein theſe ſhall ſuccede me, and come to lyke offyce.

And nowe am I not in the worlde, whiche I do furthwith leaue, and goe out of it, but yet theſe abyde ſtyll in the worlde in my ſteade, to diſperſe abrode throughout all nacions of the worlde, that whiche they haue learned of me. But I leauyng them behynde me, come whole to thee. O holy father, kepe and preſerue them in preachyng of thy name, whome thou gauest me to teache: and ſo kepe them that they maye preache and teache thoſe thynges, which thou haſte willed me to preache, and whiche thynges I haue taughte obeying thy will in all thynges. And this do, that as I neuer went from thy commaundementes, but in all thynges haue agreed and conſented to thy will, ſo bothe the doctrine of theſe, and alſo theyr lyfe, do neuer diſſent frō myne. For ſo ſhall our name be truely glorifyed by them, yf as we agreyng within our ſelues do bothe the one and the other glorifie eche other: ſo euen theſe neuer diſſentyng from vs, doe make our name famouſe all the worlde thorowe. For whatſoeuer they haue taught and doen, becauſe it ſhall be perceyued to haue come from vs, it ſhall therfore redound and be referred to the prayſe and glorie of our name. As long as I lyued in theyr company familiarly, as a man with men, I was diligente to kepe them as thyne, and as men that thou haſte put me in truſte withall, euē with bodely seruice, and doynges also, and I haue retayned and continued the hitherto in league with vs. So manye as thou gauest me, haue I faythfullye kepte safe, and neuer one of this couente or felowship hath perished except one: whiche (though he lyued in my companye) yet was he none of myne, but borne to damnation, whiche hymselfe through his owne faulte willingly called for, and occasioned to fall vpon hym. For I omitted nothyng that should haue reuoked him, and haue brought him to better mynde. And this thyng truely dyd not happe by casualtie, but holy scripture dyd long tyme before shewe it should come to passe, that a familiar and a companion of householde, shoulde betraye to death his owne lorde and Maister. Notwithstandyng, throughe thy godlye deuise and diuine prouidence, it is come to effecte, and purpose, that also this mannes death and damnacion, shall be profitable and do good to the publique healthe and saluacion of the whole worlde, synce that by hym is procured the thyng, without whiche saluacion coulde not be had, and sithe also an example is gotten thereby, whiche ought to counsayle and admonithe euery man to abyde constantly, and to persepuer in the thyng that he hath once begunne, and taken in hande: leste he by his owne folie turne to his owne vtter destruccion and cause of his owne damnacion, that thyng whiche (by the mere bountie, and free goodnes of God) was geuen hym, to obteyne thereby eternall healthe and saluacion.

The texte. Nowe come I to thee, and these wordes speake I in the world, that they might haue my ioye full in them. I haue geuen them thy worde, and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the worlde, euen as I also am not of the worlde. I desyre not that thou shouldeste take them out of the worlde: But that thou kepe them from euill. They are not of the worlde, as I also am not of the worlde. Sanctifie them thorowe thy trueth. Thy worde is the trueth. As thou hast sente me into the worlde, euen so haue I also sente them into the worlde: and for their sakes sanctifie I my selfe, that they also might be sanctified thorowe the trueth.

But nowe, lyke as these matters are doone by thy eternall wisedome and iudgement, euen accordyng as thou wouldeste haue it, so I now after I haue finished the thynges that thou commaundedst me, do leaue the worlde and come to thee. But I that shall go hence, do in the meane while speake these thynges vnto thee, not that I am any thyng doubtfull of thy wyll, but that I maye by this prayer comforte and stablishe my disciples: to the entent they maye vnderstand how that thou wilt care and prouide for them, after that they shall want the presence and sight of my body, and that they maye also put away sorowfull pensiuenesse, for that they knowe howe that I shall lyue agayne: and so they hope to be soone renued agayne, when they haue sene me risen from death to life: and in conclusion, after they haue seene me taken vp into heauen, and they to haue receiued that heauely spirite, the holy ghost, one that shalbe both in stede of thee and me, they maye conceyue and receyue no temporall or vnperfite ioye, whiche maye ryse by the sight of my body, when it is brought to them agayne: but to haue a perpetuall and a perfite ioye whiche onre spirite shall alwaye infuse in them, dwelling in their hartes: to the entent that nowe they shoulde depende of nothyng els than of a good affiaunce in vs, and in the rightnes of conscience. The worlde shall stire vp sore stormes of grieuous persecucion agaynste them, because my doctrine agreeth not with the affeccions and carnall desyres of this worlde. For men of trueth, be desyrous of, and gape for earthlye

and transitory thinges, and I teache heauenly thinges. This doctrine which I had of the, I haue taught it them: and these fewe haue well liked it and embraced the same, the worlde setting nought by it. And because these loue my doctrine, the worlde hateth the, as forsakers of the worlde, & runnagates to vs: & the worlde hathnone other grounde thus to doe, but because they stick vnto vs, & renounce the worlde. This worlde hath his baites & enticementes that seme pleasaunt for a time: it hath also his dreadfull thinges, and threatninges, wherwith it doth discourage & weaken euen a right stronge and bold herte. Herewith he maynteineth and defendeth his faccion, & fighteth against our religion. Therfore equitie would, & no lesse becommeth our bounteousnesse, that those whiche hath forsaken the worlde to come to vs, and haue cõmit and credite themselues wholy to vs, and altogether depend vpon vs, we should care and prouide for: to thentent the worlde may know that they be in more saferie which betaketh themselues to our succoure and mayntenaũce, than those that leaneth to the ayde & helpe of the worlde. The simple, playne true hart, which they beare towardes vs, and the trust that they haue in vs, deserueth heauely fauour, & the hatred which the worlde beareth towardes them for our sake, prouoketh our beneuolence and good will towardes the. For the worlde doth not therfore hate them, because they be theues or murderers, rauishers, or deceyuers with false lying & sclyng, but because they be cleare and pure from the enormities of this worlde: as ambicion, couetousnes, malice, pharisaicall fraude, from idolatrie, from vncleanesse and other sinnes wherwith the worlde is euery where infect. Furthermore as the worlde hateth me because I haue obeyed thy will, so doeth it also hate them, because they dyd mislyke and contemne the doctrine of the Pharisets, and set nought by the foolishe wisedome of the worlde: but in a simple and true meaning fayth, obey my lawes and traditions. And the worlde doeth not onely hate me but also my name, and is lothe to haue me spoke of: yea for my cause it hateth them whosoeuer they be, that wyll neglecte mans doctryne, and folowe the playne pure doctrine of the gospel, euen because it doeth muche disagre with the lustes and desires of them whiche withal affection and pleasure doe embrace thinges of this worlde. I nowe that haue diligently doen my duetie and office, am separate from the felowship of the worlde, for so it is mete to be: But I would not as yet haue them companions with me, for the time is not yet that they also should be taken cleane out of the worlde, vntill they like wise haue with diligence executed the office that is commit vnto them. This I only pray for, that they liuing in the worlde, be not polluted with the vices of the worlde, and that they fall not away from vs, and turne backewarde into the faccions and vnstable opinions of the worlde: For they beyng so many wayes assaured, cannot chuse and eschue that, without thy helpe. They stycke to me, they be my braũches, and my membres. Thus the matter stãdeth, that as I am diuers and not agreable to the worlde because I stycke to the: euen so these also are vnlike to the worlde, & misliked, because they cleaue and stycke to me. As I haue kept me safe and pure from the filthy pollutiõs of the worlde, so kepe thou these cleane and impolluted from all contagious infections of the worlde. That shall take effecte, yf by thy ayde and helpe they persever in the trueth. The wisedome of the worlde hath muche falsehood mixte withall: Moses lawe is wrapped in shadowes of thinges: but thy woorde whiche I haue taught is pure trueth, it hathno disceite, it is cleare and easie without smoke & shadowes. This trueth haue I taught purely & sincerely, that there nedeth not nowe so many interpretacions or translacions, so many Phariſaical ordinaunces, or so many laboured Philosophical sophemes and subtyll sentences. Only my doctrine is playne and easie to be vnderstand of all folke, if so be that fayth be had: And than it shall be a sufficient doctrine to euerlastyng felicitie.

I desire not that thou shouldest take them.

Lyke as I beyng thy Apostle, and messenger, and sente from thee into the woorlde, haue doen thy busines faithfully, and haue not been corrupted with contagiousnes of the woorlde, but rather haue drawē the woorlde to my pureneſſe, euen so dor I send these into the woorlde in my steade, to teache purely & sincerely that whiche they haue heard of me, not studying their owne game and prayse, but folowyng thy will, to the intent that by their testimonie, many maye be drawen to vs, and be separate from the woorlde, whiche is altogether sinfull. And because these may be pourged from synne, and so perseuer pure in preachyng the trueth of the gospel, I doe offer my selfe a sacrifice to thee. For he cannot purely preache my doctrine to the woorlde, that is subiect to woorldly affections.

The texte. Neuertheleſſe, I pray not for them alone, but for them also, whiche shall beleue on me throwe theyr preachyng: that they all maye be one, as thou father art in me, and I in thee, and that they also maye be one in vs: that the woorde may beleue that thou haste sente me. And the glory whiche thou gauest me, I haue geuen them: that they may be one as we also are one, I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfecte in one, & that the woorlde may knowe that thou haste sente me, and haste loued them, as thou hast loued me. Father I will that they whiche thou haste geuen me, be with me where I am, that they may see my glory, which thou haste geuen me. For thou loudest me before the makyng of the woorlde.

Not I doe not onely pray for these whiche are fewe in numbre, but for all that shal, through my doctrine preached of these, renounce the woorlde, & put there whole affiaunce in me. For it shal so come to passe, that as I sticking to thy woordes, am not pulled away from thee, & like as these, sticking to my preceptes shal not be pulled away from me, but as braūches shal liue in vs, and as our membres shalbe quickened and made liuely with the spirite: euen so other (which shall sticke to these mens woordes, which beyng receyued at my handes they shall reache to the woorlde) beyng grafted in me, maye be ioyned to thee by me, so that the whole body maye cleaue iointly together, thou beyng the roote and I the stocke, the spirite beyng distributte thorowe out all the membres: and both these braunches, and the other that shall be brought to the fayth by these, beyng dispersed thorowe out the whole woorlde farre & neare. I can do nothing with[out] thee, these coulde do nothing without me: The same thing that I receyued of thee, haue I poured into them by the spirite which is common to all, that as thou extendest fooith thy power and strength in me, and I inseparably do cleaue vnto thee: euen so bothe we maye extende fooith our power in these cleauing vnto vs, and will not be dissenered, to thintent that the woorlde being prouoked with these mēs vniforme doctrine, miracles, and honest chaste maners, maye beleue that I am come from thee: & that whatsoeuer I haue doen, may redound to the glory of thy name: and that the woorlde also may vnderstande and perceyue our spirite to bee in these persones, thee wyng fooith and bryngyng to light his force and power, by

by mieacles and other diuers p̄oufes. For as I haue not chalenged to my ſelfe the p̄ayſe and glo;ie whiche the miracles that I haue w;oughte haue gotten me amongeſt men, but I haue tranſlate, ſurrend;ed, and put it ouer to thee (o father) whome I haue confeſſed to be the auct;o; thereof: ſo the glo;ie whiche theſe ſhall p;epare by they; great acres for the tyme to come, ſhall be al·ogether ours: becauſe they ſhall do nothyng in they; owne name, but ſhall referre all thynges to the commendacion and glo;y of our name. And ſo therfo;e the wo;ld ſhall pe;ceyue ſuche a conco;de betwene them and me, as is betwene thee and me. I wil wo;ke in them by my ſpirite, as thou haſt ſet abroche thy trueth in me. And ſo it wyll come to paſſe, that they alſo, as membe;s of one bodye, cleauing to one heade, and quickened with one ſpirite, maye by mutuall conco;de ſticke together among themſelues: that on all parties, there maye be a conſummate and a bety pe;fite conco;de in heauen and in pearth.

The diſcencion in opinions doeth take awaye the beliefe of doctrine. If they agreyng one with another ſhall teache theſame that I haue taughte, yf lyke agre with doctrine, doubtles the wo;ld ſhall pe;ceyue it is no wo;ldlye o; humayne doctrine, but to be come from whome thou ſendeſte into the wo;lde. It ſhall alſo vnderſtande that they be beloued of thee, obeyng thy will, as I am beloued of thee, one that no where declineth o; ſwarueth from thy mynde and purpoſe.

Father my deſy;e is, that as theſe whom beyng diſſeuered from the wo;ld thou haſte geuen to me, ſhall be folo;wers of myne afflictions and croſſe, ſo they maye be partakers with me of glo;ie: that they as they haue bene beholders of my baſe and meane ſtate, and witneſſes of my payne and to;mentes: ſo they maye likewyſe ſee and beholde the glo;ye, whiche thou ſhalte giue me after I haue paſſed thoro;we theſe euils and haue finiſhed my whole paſſion, that alſo they maye learne by afflictions to go to the eternall lo;e, and by re;oche and ignominie, to go to immo;tall glo;ye. For it is no newe glo;y whiche thou ſhals geue me, no; newe charitie wherwith thou loueſt me: but therfo;e thou ſhewelt tokens and argumentes among menne, of thy loue towardes me, to the intente that thole whiche wyll be myne, ſhoulde by lyke waye and meane cumpaſſe and ſeke for thy loue: and by lyke dedes laboure to be p;omoted vnto the glo;ye of heauen. They whome thou haſt vouchſafed to loue, and ſhalt alowe them as worthy thy glo;ye, haue been loued of the before the creacion of the wo;lde.

O righteouſe father, the worlde alſo hath not knowen the, but I haue knowen the, and theſe haue knowen that thou haſte ſent me, and I haue declared vnto them thy name, and wil declare it, that the loue wherewith thou haſte loued me, maye be in them, and I in them. The texte.

O righteouſe father, nothyng hath been ouerſlipt o; omitted of me, wherebye thou ſhouldeſt haue been b;ought to be knowen of all folke, but the wo;lde beyng for the moze parte blynded in the ſinne I faultes therof, would not knowe thee, becauſe it would not beleue me, whiles I taught thee vnto the wo;lde. But I beyng pure from the wo;lde, haue knowen thee, and haue taughte thee beyng knowen vnto me. Neyther hath my p;eachyng been altogether in vaine, They, whome thou ſpecially diddeſt chooſe for that purpoſe, haue knowen thee by me: they knewe that I came from thee, although the Phariſeis with open clamoure ſayeth, that I came from Beelzebub the prince of deuils. But as thy goodnes had ſent me to haue ſaued all folke, ſo it could by any waye haue been brought to passe, so thy righteousnesse will not suffre the desires of the faythfull to be frustrate and voyde, for the infidelitie of some that be vnfaythfull.

The learned, the potentates, the chiefe heades of religion, haue contemned thy doctrine, but these rude, ignoraunt, meke and vnlearned persones, haue by me receyued the knowleage of thy name: and I shall cause it to be more and more knowen vnto them, that thou mayest with the same great charitable loue wherwith thou embracest me, lykewise embrace them: and so they beeyng more fully taught by my spirite, maye on theyr behalfe agayne bothe loue vs, and one of them by mutuall gentlenes, nourishe, cherishe, and defende eche one the other. For so shall they be strong agaynst all the troublesome hurlyburlies of this worlde, and shall persist vnuanquished.

The.xviii.Chapter.

The texte. When Jesus had spoken these wordes, he went forth with his disciples ouer the brooke Cedron, where was a gardeyne, into the which he entred and his disciples. Judas also which betrayed hym, knewe the place: for Jesus oft tymes resorted thither with his disciples. Judas then after he had receyued a bande of men, and ministers of the hye priestes and ye Phariseis, came thither with lanternes, and fyrebrandes, and weapons. And Jesus knowyng all thynges that shoulde come vpon hym, went forth, and sayed vnto them: whom seke ye? They answered hym: Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus sayeth vnto them: I am he. Judas also whiche betrayed hym stoode with them. Assone then as he had sayed vnto them, I am he, they wente backewarde and fell to the grounde.

WIth this kynde of talke, our Lorde Jesus did confirme, stablishe, and bolden the hertes of his, and after he had so doen, and commoned his flocke to his father, he departed thence of his owne voluntary wyll, to go mete them, that shoulde apprehende hym: therein declaryng playnly to his disciples, that he woulde willyngly and gladly suffer, whatsoeuer payne shoulde be put vnto hym: for it was midnight, and except it had been a well knowen place, he could not haue been taken. Therfore he departed out of that place whereas he had thus spoken to his disciples. And when he was goen ouer the brooke whiche the Hebrewes call Cedron, because many Cedre trees growe there, he and his disciples wayting on hym, wente into a gardeyne: not ignoraunt that Judas woulde come thither with a bande of harnesped men to attache hym, because Judas that betrayed hym, knewe full well that our Lorde Jesus was wonte often to gette hymselfe secretely thither, late in the night with his disciples, to praye. They tooke the night tyme for this cause, leste the company that Jesus had with hym, shoulde make resistence, and let them to take hym.

For Judas that was of a disciple become a traytoure, and of a companion to hym that was a redemer made a capitaine of theuilshe soulders, came into the gardeyne, where the lorde beyng with his disciples, prayed with the bād of men whiche he had taken vnto hym by the appoyntmente of the Bishoppes and Phariseis, with whome he had couenaunted to betraye Jesus, and byrng hym into theyr handes: And verily they brought with them, fyrebrandes and lanternes, by meanes whereof he might be discerned and knowen in the night. Nor they came not without swerdes and staues agaynste the force and violence of Christes disciples, yf percase any would haue proffered to defende their lorde. Howbeit Jesus knowyng all thynges that were wroughte and dooen a-

gaynst him, to teache playnly what hymselfe wittingly and willingly did suffer al that he suffered, not tarying for theyr cumming, went forward to mete them as they were cumming towardes him, and of his owne mynde inforced, asked them whom they sought: leste for lacke of knowledge, they myght haue layed handes vpon some of his disciples. And when they had answered hym, Jesus of Nazareth, he sayed boldely vnto them: I am hee whom ye seke. There was then also Judas Iscarioth present, and his bande of men with him: whiche Judas had a litle before betrayed Jesus with a kysse vnder a falst pretended frendeshyp, ere the Lord had spoken these woordes. yet did Jesus neither in the meane time bewray him, of whom he was betrayed, nor spake any rough & rebukefull woordes against the souldiers that were hyred to attache him: because he would syll euen tyll all were fully ended, shewe his disciples exaumple of gentlenesse and modestie meknesse. But as soone as Jesus had sayed vnto them: I am he, the bande of men beyng sooze afrayed went backwardes and fell to the grounde, not able to sustayne and abyde the violence of the Lordes voice.

Then asked he them agayne: whom seke ye? They sayed: Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus answered: I haue tolde you that I am he. If ye seke me therfore, let these go their way, that the saying might be fulfilled which he spake: of them whiche thou gauest me haue I not lost one. The texte.

After that they were come to themselfes againe, and made ready to set vpon Jesus the secound time, the Lord asked them once againe, whom they did seke. And when they had nowe answered as before, saying they sought Jesus of Nazareth, he made them a lyke bolde answer, as he had doen before, and sayed: I tolde you euen very nowe, that I am the same manne ye looke for. And if ye seke me, I do lycence you to medle only with me: suffer ye therfore these to go theyr waye, against whom I geue you no interest at this present. The cause why Jesus did thus, was to declare by a manifest token, that he could not haue been apprehended, except he had permitted himselfe to be taken, in that he had once with one woorde put backe and cast downe to the grounde, both a desperate and an armed multitude of souldiers, and Judas selfe too, that shameles traitour. Moreouer lyke as he gaue the leaue to take himselfe, so on the other syde he restrayned them from hauyng power ouer his disciples: because he had tolde beforehande, that the fiercenesse of that stourme, should for that present time light vpon his owne head alone, and as for the rest, although they were somewhat ouerthrowen & defect, yet should they be safe without hurte vntill he should see them agayne: herein declaring hymselfe to play the parte of a good shepeherde, which redemeth the health of his flocke with the losse of his owne life.

Then Symon Peter hauing a sweorde, drewe it, and smote the hye priestes seruaunt, and cut of his right eare. The seruauntes name was Malchus. Therfore Jesus sayeth vnto Peter: put vp thy sweorde into thy sheathe: shall not I drinke of the cup which my father hath geuen me? Then the cumpany and the captayne and ministers of the Jewes, toke Jesus & bounde him, and led hym away to Annas first, for he was father in lawe to Cayphas, whiche was the hye priest the same yeere. Cayphas was he whiche gaue councell to the Jewes, that it was expedient that one man should dye for the people. The texte.

Nowe then Symon Peter whiche boze a notable ardente loue towardes his Lord, because he had made a great braggue of himselfe, no lesse then that he would be content to dye to saue his Lordes lyfe, seing the armed band of men to lay hand vpon Jesus, forgat what the Lorde had sayed vnto hym. And so beyng in a sodayne rage, drewe out a swerde, not tarying to bee commaunded of his Lorde to doe it, & stroke the Bysshops seruaunt who, e name was Malchus, but the stroke light not as he would haue had it: he onely stroke of the felowes right eare, euen accordyng as the Lorde did shape his hande, to the entent he should geue but a small wounde. Howbeit Jesus did forthwith of his owne gentlenesse heale the man againe. And in dede ỹ Lorde suffered him that should be a ruler of his churche, to fall (of a godly zeale truely) into this errour, for that he might afterward more surely and more effectuously put away all desire to doe vengeaunce, and shake of altogether priuate reuenging and vse of weapons, since he had once rebuked him whiche as yet hauing no contrary commaundement, did of very deuocion, and of a godly affeccion, goe about to defende his moste vertuouse godly Lorde against the wicked. So then Jesus verily put away by his diuine power, the force of the men of warre from Peter, but yet withall he chideth Peter as a disciple, when he seeth hym horely set to fyght out the matter, and sayth: Peter, what doest thou? Hast thou forgotten what thou hast heard of late whiles thou diddest exhorte me not to dye? that is to witte, howe thou wast called Satan, and commaunded to folowe behynde. To what purpose is thy swerde drawen, because thou wouldest hynder my death, whiche I goe to suffer willingly, and appointed so to doe by my father?

It becommeth the to folowe, and not to repell my crosse. Therfore put thy swerde into thy sheath. Matters of the ghospel are not so to be defended. If thou wilt succede me as my vicar, thou must fight with no other swerd than of Gods woorde, whiche cutteth away sinnes, and sauyth the men. Shal not I drinke of this cuppe of death, whiche my father hath geuen me to drinke? How shall it come to passe all we to be one, accordyng as I prayed to my father, excepte that like as I doe obey the fathers will euen to the very death, so you lykewyse obey my commaundementes?

The disciples beyng with this saying restrayned and stayed from fightyng, the menne of warre and their capitayne, with the ministers also whome the Bysshops and Phariseis sent to augment the numbre, layed their wicked hãdes vpon Jesus, and led hym fast bounde as a malefactour, first to Bysshop Annas, Caiphas father in law. Caiphas verily was the hye Bysshop of that yere, therfore thei led Jesus from Annas house to Caiphas, of whom it was spoken before, that whiles other were perplexed and in doubt what was to be doen with Jesus, he beyng (for the office sake that he bare) inspired with the spirite of prophetie, coũsailed that in any case Jesus should finally suffre death, because it was so expedient for all folke that the helth & saluacion of the people should be recouered and redemed with the death of one man. Jesus therfore was led vnto Caiphas father in lawe, first to fede his eyes with a sight that was wished & longed for: also that he might be examined in this mans house, if they could finde any lykelyhode of any faulte in him. For although they had suche bloudtucksyng hertes, as could haue been contente to haue murthered their owne parẽtes, yet for feare of the people, & of the lieutenant Pilate, they studied to pretend some colour of iustice, but Gods prudence turned the wicked subtil crafte of man, into the glory of his sonne. For whyleste he is thus taken, thus led from Annas to Caiphas, from Caiphas

to Pilate, from Pilate to Herode, and backe againe from Herode to Pilate, whiles he is examined of many, and of many matters accused, he made them all witnesses and confessours of his innocencie, yea they that were his enemies. And verily there is no more certaine testimonie of innocencie, then that which trueth forceth out of an enemy. How litle equitie did they shewe mete for a Bysshop? They bought the betraying of an innocent with money, they arested and toke a naked man without armour, with a bande of armed men hyred for that purpose: they bounde hym that made no resistence, but that he had onely shewed great lykelyhood howe great his power was, in case he would haue vsed it, and willingly gaue himselfe vnto them: they led hym not to a iudge, but to an enemy, as men auaunting themselues of their praye, and there finally sought they for a faulte to be layed against hym, when as the equitie euen of prophane lawes, will no man to be arested except first a man be mesle hated for his naughtines, and so burdened with a faulte.

And Simon Peter folowed Jesus, and so did an other disciple that was knowen vnto the hye priestе, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the hye priestе. But Peter stoode at the doore without. Then wente out that other disciple whiche was knowen vnto the hye priestе, and spake to the damsell that kept the doore, and brought in Peter. Then sayed the damsell that kept the dooze vnto Peter: art not thou also one of this mans disciples? he sayed: I am not. The seruauntes and the ministers stode there, whiche had made a fyre of coles, for it was colde, and they warmed themselues. Peter also stode among them and warmed hym. The texte.

Nowe then when Jesus was brought thither, that is, to Cayphas, Symon Peter, notwithstandyng that he was forbid fightyng, neuertheleste hauing yet some confidence in his owne strength, folowed Jesus, and a certaine other disciple with him: euen thesame that a lytle before leaned on Jesus breast at supper tyme. This disciple because he was knowen to the Bysshop, was bolde in trust of that knowledge, to go into the palace with Jesus. Peter because he was not knowen, durst not folowe them into the palace, but tarved at the dooze without, in the meane tyme muche swaruyng from that bolde saying: I will venter my lyfe for the. And yet some manifuesse remayned in him for all that. For it came of loue that he durst still folowe vnto the dooze, seeyng the reste of his felowes scatter themselues abrode eche one a sere waye: but in that he durst not go in, was a feare, and dyd pronostikate that he should soone after deny his Lorde. Howbeit that other disciple perceyuyng that Peter folowed not, spake to the damsell that kepte the dooze, to take in him which stode at the dooze without. And when the mayde had let him in she beheld Peter, and thought she should know hym: bothe because she had seen him in Jesus cumpany, and specially because he was commaunded to be brought in of him, whom she knewe to bee Jesus disciple. And therfore she sayed vnto Peter: Art not thou also this mannes disciple, whiche is nowe taken and brought in hyther? At this voice of a woman of small reputacion, whiche yet pretended no bynde of cruelele or thyng to be feared, seeyng she compared Peter with him whom she did not appeache nor violently handle, and knewe hym to be Jesus disciple, and so named Jesus vnto him, calling him in suche sorte a manne, as though she had rather pitied him then disdayned him: Peter, I say, for all this so dainly forgetting all thinges whiche Jesus had so ofte repeted vnto him, and forgetting also his Peter stode at the dooze without.

owne stoute promisse, denyed that he was Jesus disciple. And euen this is the firste profession of them that be destrouse to mortifie themselfes in priuees houses, verily to deny Christe, that is to saye, the trueth. And whan Peter was thus gotten in, he wente and stode among the Bysshoppes officers and seruauntes which were standyng by the fyre syde to warme themselfes, because it was colde that late tyme of the nyght. And Peter warmed hym with them, trustyng that he so myght kepe hymselfe secrete, and in the meane tyme see what should become of Jesus in conclusiō, and what issue this matter should drawe to, for as yet Peter had not putte awaye all hope that hys Lorde should escape deathalthough he was so striken with feare, that he did not once thinke of that the Lorde had euen newly before told him would be, that is to wete, that Peters selfe for al he was a bolde promiser, would forsweare hys Lorde and maister.

The texte. The hye priest then asked Jesus of disciples and of his doctrine. Jesus answered hym: I spake openly in the worlde. I euer taught in the Synagogue and in the Temple where all the Jewes resorte, and in secrete haue I sayed nothyng. Why askest thou me? Aske them which heard me what I haue sayed vnto them. Behold they can tell what I sayed. When he had thus spoken, one of the ministers whiche stoode by, smote Jesus on the face, sayeng. Answerest thou the hye priest so? Jesus answered him: If I haue euill spoken, beare witnes of the euill: but if I haue well spoken, why smytest thou me?

Howe the Bishop Cayphas to shewe some semblaunce of rightfull iudgement, but yet his entent was to gather some what of Jesus sūdry answeres, that he myght charge hym withall as a manne faultye, and therfore he questioned with Jesus of his disciples, what maner of men they were, whence he had them, and to what purpose he had gathered suche a cumpanye together, yea and also what he secretly taught them: Howbeit Jesus knowyng that he dyd not demaunde these questions of a ryght iudgelyke mynde to knowe the trueth, but deceytfully to hunte out some thyng in hym woorthy blame, and to gette occasion withall howe to harme his disciples, whom he would yet should be in safegarde, Jesus, I say, knowyng this made no answere to the Bysshoppes wylie and craftye interrogacions, but banysheth the testimony of hymselfe and his, and sendeth them to the common reporte, and also to the recorde of his enemies, a proofe of moste certaintie for the innocent, and sayth vnto the Bysshop: Why askest thou me what I haue taught my disciples secretly or in hugger mugger? Why doctryne hathe not been sedicious nor secrete. I haue spoken openly to the brode worlde. That whiche I haue taught, I haue alwaye taught it in your Synagogues. I haue taught in the temple vpon the holy dayes, in place and tyme moste notable and famouse, whither Jewes on euery syde out of all partes of Syria resorte. And I haue spoken nothyng in priuitie or corners, whiche same thyng I durst not teache openly. Full ofte hath the people and Pharisees too, heard me. Why then doest thou nowe aske me of suche maner of doctrine as should be taught by stelthand very priuely? But rather aske them, that haue heard me teache openly. Theyr recorde shall be of more certaintye which hath with me no familiar acquaintaunce, yea of whom some do hate me. Let euen them that be mine enemies reporte what I haue taught: for many knowe it, and it shalbe easie to fynde witnesses of my doctrine. Whan Jesus had spoke these thynges, teachyng thereby that the trueth is to be answered for, boldely in dede, but without tauntes or rebukes, one of the bishoppes ministers that by chaunce stoode nerte hym, a man not vnlyke his lord and maister, willing to defende his bishops dignitie agaynst the franke and liberal speache of Jesus, after suche lyke sorte as Peter would haue defended his masters lyke against the force of the souldiers, not tarrying for any commaundement of his lorde, gaue Jesus a blow vpon the cheke and suche a checkeful rebuke as was fit for suche a bishop, and suche a felow his seruaunt, saying: Aunswerest thou the bishop so? Our Lorde Jesus might bothe haue destroyed this wicked bishop, and also haue letted this blowgeuer, but that he would shewe by exaumple to his, howe ferre out of course and how peruerse the iudgementes of the world be.

For our Lorde Jesus whiche behaued himselfe moost mekely agaynst all iniuries, beyng no where so sharpe as against them that vnder the pretence of religion barke and worke agaynste true religion, tooke not the blowe without replying in woordes, whiche yet endured the crosse and made no woordes therat.

The bishoppes sate in auctoritie, Jesus beyng bounde was examined: here loe was a face of iudgement. And of trueth before a temporall iudge beyng, but an Heathen, he that is accused shall be heard to saye for hymselfe. Here now before a bishop, a blow was geuen for makyng one aunswere, and the blowe too was geuen hym that afterwarde should be iudge of the quicke and the dead.

And so in dede Jesus aunswered, in dede frankely, but yet mildly and coldely, saying: I speake before a iudge, and I aunswere hym beyng requited. In this case before Gentiles also is the matter hadled with good reasons, and not with strokes. If I haue sayed any thyng amisse tell me howe: but if I haue spoken nothing euill, why doest thou beyng a iudges officer, here in tyme of iudgemẽt, the iudge holdyng his peace, beate me without consultyng the thyng that I saye?

And Annas sent hym bound vnto Caiphas the hie priest. Symon Peter stoode and warmed hymselfe, then sayed they vnto hym: Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denyed it and sayed: I am not. One of the seruaunttes of the hye priestes, his cosin whose eare Peter smote of, sayed vnto hym: Did not I see the in the garden with hym? Peter therfore denied it againe, and immediately the cocke crewe. Then they led Jesus from Caiphas into the hall of iudgemente. It was in the mornyng, and they themselues wente not into the iudgement hall, leste they should be defiled, but that they might eate the ꝑ assouer. The texte.

Verily Annas, although vpon malice he reioyced that Jesus was vnder warde, and had in hold, neuertheles because he could fynde out nothyng of him, whereby he might by any colour be proued giltye: he sendeth hym euen bound as he was to bishop Caiphas his sonne in lawe. But in the meane time whilest these thynges were in handlyng, Peter beyng all thynges a farre of, whiche as I begun to tell, stoode in the throng of the ministers, warmyng hym at the fyre syde. And among these some there were which by certayn tokens somewhat knew Peter, and sayed vnto hym: Arte not thou one of this mannes disciples whome the bishop thus handleth? Peter seeyng so cruell a spyght, whiche made hym also sore afrayed, once agayne denyed that he was Jesus disciple. For he nowe perceyued by the bishops interogatyues, howe that they were in deuyse to attache Jesus disciples: also Peter thought by this denial to bee sake from daunger, lyke as he had shifted hymselfe from her that kepte the doore, but to make him know the better, how he could nothyng do of his owne proper strẽgth beyng dilleuered from the felowshyp of his Lorde, there stoode among other in that thꝛong of the miniſters, a certayn kinſman of hym that had a litle before in the garden firſt auentured to laye handes vpon Jeſus, and had his eare ſtrꝰck of by Peter. This felow was by the iudgement of god bꝛought in as an inſtrument, vnder pꝛetence to auenge his coſen Malchus harme, but in very dede it was to correcte the raſhe confidence that Peter had in hymſelfe. For the ſayed felow beyng not content with Peters only one denial (for his fighting though it were doen in the darke, made him to be wel knowē) ſayeth vnto Peter: What (ſayeth he) doeſt thou denye thy ſelfe to be one of his diſciples? Did not I euen right nowe ſee the with mine eyes in the garden with Jeſus? Peter beyng with this ſaying vtterly blanche and ſore aſtoniſhed, wiſhed himſelfe accurſed yf euer he knewe Jeſus. And anon the cocke crewe. Neyther did Peter by this token, whiche oute Lorde had tolde hym of before, come to hymſelfe agayne, neyther wouldꝛe haue been well aduiſed, except our Lorde had recouered hym, and bꝛought him to himſelfe agayne by his effectuall lokyng vpon Peter: and had alſo by inwarde inſpiracion pꝛouoked teares of penaunce in hym.

So many wayes was he that ſhould be a ſpeciall miniſter vnder Chriſt of the holy churche, to be taught how in al thinges to miſtruſt his owne ſtrength, and to depende of his lordes onely ayde and ſuccour. Now therefore after that Jeſus had been all the nighte long till the mornyng early, in examinacion before Caiphas, no; no faulte couldꝛe be founde in hym, wherefore he oughte to be called for: and to bee arꝛained vpon lyfe and death, they haue him out of biſhop Caiphas houſe, and leade hym to Pilate the lorde pꝛeſidente, to thentente they might charge hym, and diſcharge themſelues of the hatred that they ſhould be in for ſheading of innocent bloude. And euen being bounde as he ſtoode, Jeſus was led by the hyred ſouldiers into the pꝛeſidentes iudgemente hall. Howbeit the Jewes themſelues went not into the houſe of iudgement, leſte they ſhoulde be polluted, in aſmuche as the paſchall lambe muſte be eaten of them: to the eatyng wherof they wouldꝛe go pure and cleane, but of a naughtie peruerſe religion be pe ſure, conſideryng that they thoughte themſelues to be contammnate and ſuſpended with the harmeleſſe houſe of the pꝛeſident, becauſe he was a Gētile and no Jewe, when as themſelues by many craftes went about and deuiſed a mans death, that had doen nothing amiſſe, yea that had many wayes doen well and deſerued muche good at theyr handes.

The tenor. Pylate then went out vnto them and ſayed: what accuſation bryng ye againſt this man? They aunſwered and ſayed vnto hym. If he were not an euill doer, we wouldꝛe not haue deliuered hym vnto thee. Then ſayed Pylate vnto them: Take ye hym, and iudge hym after youre owne lawe. The Jewes therfore ſayed vnto hym: It is not lawfull for vs to putte any man to death, that the wordes of Jeſus might be fulfilled whiche he ſpake, ſignifyng what death he ſhould dye.

Therfore Pilate after he ſawe the vncouth and that newe maner of iudgement, as a man to be in captiuitie and bounde ere he were examined and hearde of the iudge, and to ſee a band of harneſſed men, he commeth forth abroade hymſelfe to be polluted with ſuche mens communicacion, as thought theſelues pure and vnpolluted. And verily he came out to appeaſe & aſſuage, yf it were poſſible, the furye of the Jewes, and ſo to quite the innocente. Ye ſende (ſayeth he) this manne vnto me to be putte to death. But it is not the maner of Rome to put any man to execucion, except hym that is pꝛoued giltie of a faulte worthy death. What crime therfore do ye laye to this mannes charge? The Jewes aunſwered, aunswerd: the autozitie of Bychops, and Pharisees is inough foz your dis-charge. If this man were not a malefactour we coulde not of our pzofession haue committed hym to your handes. Pilate suspectyng, as the trueth was, them to haue some priuate grudge towardes hym abour the superstition and the superfluous religion, and bayne deuocion of the lawe, sayeth vnto them: If it be any matter that apperteyneth not to my counte and office, as foz ex-aumple, if case the Sabboth day be broken, if any bwynes fleshe be eaten, oz perchse some rashe & liberall woordes hath been spoken against Moses, the Pzophetes, the Temple, oz your God: loe, nowe if any suche crape haue been, whiche your owne lawe commaunded to be punished, though yet there be no suche thing pzohibite by the lawe of Rome, your selfes take the mā vnto you and iudge hym after your lawe. I am sette here in the Emperours name to rule & play the Judge. If he hath committed any faulte against the Empe-rours lawes, wozthy death, bzyng him to me, and after he be conuicte by the lawe, & lawfully cast, I shall cause him to be put to execucion. But I will not intermedle & perplexe my selfe in doubtfull matters of your lawe. Uerily, though the Jewes would (they forced not howe) haue had him made away, yet foz all that they pretende reliousnesse of very feare, lest the iudge should forthwith haue punished thē, because they would haue spilled an harmeleste and an vncondemned person. But at thesame tyme they sought effectually a newe kynde of punishement foz him, such one as was then among the Jewes moste spytefull and oppzobzious. It is not, say they, lawefull foz vs to put any man to death. The shameleste people spake these woordes whiche had slayne so many Prophetes: flatteryng themselfes as cleane frō murder, not-withstandyng they did so many wayes persecute an innocente to death: oz elis they thus did, as if the hangman which with his handes fasteneth the man to the crosse, were a sole murderer. They were in herte murderers, they were murderers in theyr tongues, with theyr money they hyred one crafterously to betray hym, they hyred a sorte of warryers, they hyred false witnesses, they forged false haynouse crymes against him. They pzouoke & pzycke foz-warde the iudge, and with threatning make hym afearde, & yet impute them-selues pure & fre from murder, and also wozthy to eate the Paschall Lambe, foz no cause elis, but that they dyd stay and refrayne themselues from goyng into the iudgement hall. Well these thinges truely were doen to make it ap-peare euidente that there is nothyng wurse oz moze haynouse then false and peruerse religion, and that thesame thyng also should be bzought to effecte, which Jesus sayed should come to passe, signifying by a parable what death he shoulde dye, whan he spake these woordes: Je suche tyme as I shall be lyfte vp on hye from the grounde, I shall drawe all thynges vnto me: by the foze of which woordes, he would that we should take it foz a certaintie that not only the selfe death was determinately limited vnto him, but also a choice and seuerall kynde of death.

Then Pilate entred into the iudgement hall againe, and called Jesus, and sayed vnto him: Art thou the king of the Jewes? Jesus answerd: sayest thou that of thy selfe, oz did other tell it thee of me? Pilate answerd: Am I a Jew? Thine owne nation & hye priestes hath deliuered thee vnto me. What hast thou doen? Jesus answered. My kyngdome is not of this worlde: If my kyngdome were of this worlde, then would my ministers surely fight, that I should not be deliuered vnto the Jewes: but nowe is my kyngdome not from hence. The texte.

Wherfoze then after that Pilate vnderstanding by the woozdes which the Jewes

Jewes had spoken of a matter (I knowe not what) amonges other thinges to be obiecte against Jesus, concerning a kingdome that he should goe about destrously (and yet there appeared no likelyhood at all in Jesus that shoulde cause any manne to thynke hym fautye therein) Pilate, I saye, after this, went once againe into the iudgement halle, and lefte the people standyng without. And so called for Jesus secretly aside, that quietly and without all ruffle, he might boulte out and gather of hym (which in countenaunce appeared no lesse then both vertuouse and wise) what the matter was, and saied vnto him: Art thou that king of the Jewes whom they are reported to looke for? This one thyng did Pilate diligently searche out, because the other matters touched not the weale publique: but this faulte, to call himselfe a kyng, semed to concerne both the Emperours Maiestie, and a common peace and tranquillitie. And truly Pilate made this searche and enquirie not that he did take it to be true, but to get some matter of him that was accused, wherewith he might reproue ꝑ Jewes of falsehood. Howbeit though Jesus knew wel inough the Jewes to haue falsely appeached hym that he should be desirous of a kyngdome to the Emperours losse, or in despite of his highnesse, yet to the entent he myght open and disclose the malice of the Jewes, and commende the reasonablenesse & equitie muche better in Pilate then in the Bysshops and Pharisees, though he were but a Gentyle, and set naught by the Jewes religion: for this skill, I saye, Jesus made hym aunswere, saying: Whether thinkest thou of thine owne cõfecture, that I am desyrouse of a kingdome, or haue the Jewes accused me herof to thee? Pilate both to declare his owne innocẽcie & the malice of the Jewes too, sayeth: I doe not cõfecture this of mine owne head, neyther doe I see in thee any thyng agreable thereunto. It is a Jewes tale of a king to come. Thinkest thou me to be a Jewe? Thy quarelling countrey folkes and the Bysshops, committed thee into my handes, seking all the meanes they can to haue thee put to death, but because it is not the fashion of Rome to putte any vncondemned person to death, if therfore thou haste not trãsgressed in ꝑ trayterous desire of a kingdom, then what faute beside haste thou made? Because Pilate asked hym of these thynges simply, and meaning good fayth, entending to deliuer the innocente, Jesus did bouche safe to aunswere hym by a ryddle & prouerbially: teaching that it was an other maner of kingdom wherof the Prophetes had spoken, a farre more excellent kingdom then is the kingdom of this worlde, whiche consisteth in mans lawes, in the ayde of mẽ, which haue no power, but ꝑ bodies. Howbeit he signified this kingdom to be an heauẽly kingdom, which could not couet ꝑ kingdom of the worlde, but contemne it: and should not harme it, but auaunce it into a better kinde. My kingdom, sayth Christ, is no suche kingdom as ꝑ Emperours is, his kingdom is terrestriall, but mine is celestiall. And for ꝑ cause am I affectionate to nothing that can harme the Emperours maiestie. If my kingdom were of this worlde, the worlde should not handle me as it doth, vnreuenged. For euen I, be ye sure, should haue (as other kynges hath) a garde of harnessed men. I should haue squiers for the body, & suche as should onely attende vpon myne owne persone: I should haue plentie of well appointed men, and lacke no ayde or succoure that would fight for me, that it should not be in the Jewes power to doe the thyng they goe about against me vnrequited.

(My kyngdome is not of this worlde. &c.

At this ꝑsente I haue fewe disciples, and those that I haue bee vnapte to warre, warre, weake and poore, I my selfe beyng vnarmed and no warryer, euen one that seketh to the helpe of other, because my kyngdome is not of this worlde.

The texte.

Pilate therfore sayed vnto hym: Arte thou a kyng then? Jesus aunswered: thou sayest that I am a kyng. For this cause was I borne, and for this cause came I into the worlde that I should beare witnes vnto the trueth. And all that are of the trueth, heare my voyce. Pilate sayde vnto hym: What thyng is trueth? and when he had sayed this, he went out agayne vnto the Jewes, and sayeth vnto them: I fynde in hym no cause at all: ye haue a custome that I should deliuer you one loose at Easter, wyll ye that I loose vnto you the kyng of the Jewes. Then cryed they all agayne, sayeng: Not hym but Barrabas, this same Barrabas was a murtherer.

For asmuche as Pilate beyng a lape man and a Gentile did not fully vnderstande this mistye and darke saying, albeit he eard that Jesus dyd not vterly renounce and denye the name of a kyng, but dyd put a difference of kyngdomes, Pilate therfore sayed vnto hym: Is it then true that thou arte somewhere a kyng whatsoeuer kynde of kyngdome it be, and thou not perteynyng to vs? Here now Jesus beyng earnestly asked of the iudge whether he were any wape a kyng, or naye, confessyth the trueth with great temperaunce and modestye, with muche lowlynesse and good aduisemente, aunswerynge thus: Thou sayest I am a kyng, for whosoeuer asketh a question, with lyke numbre of wordes, the pronunciacion onely chaunged, affirmeth the thyng. And Jesus sayed further: It is not my parte to denye any trueth, namely consyderyng that for this cause I was borne, and came into the worlde, that I should deceyue no mã with any lye, but that I shoulde beare witnes vnto the trueth.

For this cause was I borne, &c

He that hath a simple meke mynde not blynded with the lustes and desires of this worlde, acknowlegeth, lykyth well, and heareth my voyce. But Pilate hauyng no further intelligence of that whyche was spoken, then that he supposed the thyng to be no matter for hym to know, and as yet Christe had made Pilate no apte aunswere, therewith either to sette the Jewes at a quiet or to dispatche them thence, after he had asked of Jesus what was that trueth wherof he spake, and was come into the worlde to beare witnes therof: Pilate, I saye, wente oute agayne vnto the Jewes, not tarrying for an aunswere of the thing, that he questioned of. What nedeth many woordes, sayeth Pilate: I haue examined the man, and can fynde no faulte in hym worthy death. For I am not here president and chiefe iustice vnder the Emperour, because I shoulde with my sentence condemne the innocente, but in case he be noysome to you, and that ye thynke him fautye (which I fynde not) yet it standeth with equitie and good indifferencie, that if ye wyl not spare and forbeare hym as an innocent, at leaste waye in the honor of this holy feast and for religion sake, pardon hym his life as an offender. And in dede it is here a custome amonges you that in this feast of Phase (whiche is of you moste highly solemnised and kept moste holye of all feastes,) I should at your request pardon and set at libertie some one offender. Therfore ye shall haue free election to chose the one of twayne, eyther Barrabas that arrant theefe and notable robber, a disturber of the publique peace, or this Jesus, a man in my iudgement fautlesse, whome some folke sayeth is the kyng of Jewes. It were beste surely that this man, yea though he haue doen amysse, should fele and enioye the gracious fauour and priuiledge of youre solemne feast.

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon

Wyll ye therfore that I forgeue this persone for your sakes? for of trueth the president did not looke for so great outragiousnes in the Iewes, that they would preferre a felowe openly knowē full of mischiefe and a valiaunt ranke theefe, before Iesus a man moste meke and innocent. But the Iewes with a whole consent and with a great lowde voyce, cryed all of them: We will not haue Iesus geuen vs, but Barrabas.

The.xix. Chapter.

The texte. Then Pylate toke Iesus therfore and scourged hym. And the souldiers wound a croune of thornes, and put it on his head. And they did on him a purple garment, and came vnto him, and sayed: Hayle kyng of the Iewes: and they smote hym on the face. Pylate wente furth agayne and sayde vnto them: Behold I bryng hym furthe to you, that ye maye knowe that I fynde no faulte in hym. Then came Iesus furth wearing a croune of thorne, and a roode of purple, and he sayeth vnto them: Beholde the man.

After that Pilate, the Emperours Lieutenaunt, had also by occasion sente Iesus to Herode, leauyng nothyng vndoen eyther to shifte and tidde his handes of hym that was accused, or els to dimisse and sette hym loose as an innocent: when the lorde president (I saye) had thus assayed all wayes, and sawe he coulde do no good with the furiouse folkes of the Iewes, he than commaunded Iesus to be scourged, as the maner was at Rome, whiche feat he dyd to assuage theyr furie, and to saue the innocentes lyfe. This doen, the souldiers that were in the inner courte, of whome the Iewes had hyred a numbre to serue theyr tyrannye, dyd of theyr owne inuēcion adde muche cruel fearcenelle to that vncouth solemne piece of his passion: for when he had bene so scourged and beaten, to mocke hym withall, they putte vpon him a purple garment, and wounde a croune of thorne, and put it on his head, geuyng hym a reede in his hande in stede of a scepter, and byandby cassyng hym in the tethe with a kyngdome that he shoulde be desyrous of, who (God wotte) was to see to, an homely, a base, and a contempte persone, they came and kneled vnto him, saying: Hayle king of Iewes. And they spitted vpon his face, and buffeted hym, he beyng Lorde of all thynges and behauing hymselfe moste pacientely and moste coldly in al theyr kynde of mockage, for to teache vs lentye and pacience in aduersitie: vs (I saye) that haue hautye and dettye fierce myndes, though yet in dede we be thynges of nought. Sothe it is, that Pilate suffered Iesus thus to be delt withall, because he would with this the mans affliction, haue appeased the malice of the Iewes: for when the people hathe for a while rages agaynste whom they be sturred, theyr fury ceaseth sodainly, namely, if scornyng be added to the calamitie, and make hym that suffereth, lamentable, where before he was hated.

Hayle kyng of the Iewes.

Therfore Pilate the presidente wente furthe vnto them agayne, for to prouyde he coulde mittigate the fiercenes of the meane multitude, and sayeth: Lo, I bryng out the manne vnto you, that ye maye looke your fyll vpon hym, and perceyue how we he hath bene handled for your pleasure, not withstandyng

that

that I can finde no faulte in hym. And so therwith Jesus (at Pilates cõmaundement) cummeth furth as he was appareled, bounde, scourged and beate, bespitted, crowned with a crowne of thorne, and wearyng the purple garment. And Pilate presented hym, saying: Beholde the man is here.

When the hye preistes and ministers sawe hym, they cryed, saying: Crucifie hym, crucifie hym. Pilate sayeth vnto them: Take ye hym, and crucifie hym, for I finde no cause in hym. The Jewes answered hym: We haue a lawe, and by our lawe he ought to dye, because he made hymselfe the sonne of God. When Pilate heard that saying, he was the more afeard, and went agayne into the iudgemente hall, and sayeth vnto Jesus: whence art thou? but Jesus gaue hym no answere. The texte.

With this sight therefore, whiche had been ynough to haue tamed the crueltie (had it been neuer so great) of wild and rude barbarouse people, the myndes yet of the Jewes were not onely not mollified, but were therewith more set on fyre to finish the thing that they had so farre proceded in. For the bishops were now afeard, leste if he, which had been so horribly & so cruelly tormented, should now haue been let loose, that then the affection and mynde of the people, that were already sette on a roare, being once turned on the other side, the grudge of their extreme great crueltie, might light vpon their owne heades. The bishops therfore & their seruaũtes, with a great stier and shoue cryed woodly out, crucifie him, crucifie hym: Pilate perceyuing that there was no hope of pitie to be gotten at their handes by fayre intreatie, he goeth aboute to restrayne and bridle in their fury with feare, & sayth: I am a minister of lawe and iustice, and not a reuẽger of other folkes malice: and by lawfull processe to punishe trangressours of the lawe, am I autorisate: I am no butcherly murderer, no bloudshedder of innocẽcie. This that hath been doen, was to serue and satisfie your hatred. I will no more be fierce against him that is no noysome persone. And yf he shall algates be crucified, I wyll not haue this my courte of iudgemente distayned & polluted with the bloud of an innocente. Vpon your owne perill haue ye the man away: and yf it semeth good, doe ye crucifie him. I am not woonte to crucifie any but wicked doers. In this man I finde no crime that deserueth the crosse. For there is no likelihode in him of that trayterouse dede whiche is layed to his charge, conterning the kingdome. Nor it is not ynough to accuse a man of a fault, except it be proued to be a matter of certaintie, that is obiected, by sure euidence: specially if it be a cause that concerneth life and death. This whole matter is by no lawful processe hãdled, but ruffled out sedicously. When the Jewes heard Pilate the iudge so frendely and diligently withall, take Jesus parte and defende him, & vtterly thinking it not mete that any waye Jesus should escape, they falsely surmised a cryme whiche might seme to the iudge that was not learned in their lawe, a greuouse faulte, saying: Although he had doen none offence against the Emperours lawes, yet haue we a lawe geuen vs of God: which the Emperour also hath left vnto vs: And by the force of this lawe he hath well deserued to dye, because he hath made himselfe the sonne of God, and takyng vpon him the godhead, he did commit blasphemie against God. After that Pilate had heard this, hauyng no ready answere to make them, he led Jesus againe into the iudgement hall, & went in himselfe, and talked againe with Jesus, beyng very desyrouse to learne of hym what a thyng that was wherewith they charged hym, and howe it might bee refelled and auoyded. Therfore, first of all Pilate asketh hym whence he was, to the entent that after he had knowen of what progenie he came, he might haue confuted that, whereas they sayed he was desirouse to be taken for the sonne of God: though in dede among the Gentiles it was both written in Poetes fables, and commonly beleued, that some were taken for halfe goddes, as folkes borne of God and manne. But verily Jesus knowyng that Pilate did assaye all these wayes finally to saue his lyfe, and was not ignorannte that yet Pilate shoulde afterwarde (when all meanes had bene proued) geue place to the obstinate furye of the Jewes, Jesus (I saye) woulde make no aunswere at all vnto the president, leste he should be thought to haue made any meane howe to get oute of theyr handes, because he would not seme to be compelled to death. And that hitherto he made aunswere, was because he would haue recorde of his innocencie, but his pleasure was to dye willingly and gladly.

The texte. Then sayed Pilate vnto hym: Speakest thou not vnto me? knowest thou not that I haue power to crucifie thee, and haue power to loose thee? Jesus aunswered. Thou couldest haue no power at all agaynst me, except it were geuen the from aboue: therfore he that deliuered me vnto thee, hath the more synne. And ted thence furthe sought Pilate meanes to loose hym, but the Jewes cryed, saying: If thou let hym go, thou arte not Cesars frende, for whosoeuer maketh hymselfe a kyng, is agaynst Cesar. When Pilate heard that saying, he brought Jesus furth, & sate down to geue sentence in a place that is called the pauemet, but in the Hebrue togue Gabatha. It was the preparyng daye of Easter, about the fyft houre. And he sayth vnto the Jewes. Behold your kyng. They cryed, Awaye with hym, Awaye with hym, crucifie him. Pilate sayeth vnto them: Shall I crucifye your kyng? The hye prieches aunswered: We haue no kyng but Cesar. Then deliuered he hym vnto them to bee crucifyed.

Pylate meruaylyng at the mans silence standyng in hasarde of his lyfe, consideryng he had the iudge so muche his frende that he dyd prouoke hym to aunswere, saied: Why doest not thou that arte in iopardye of lyfe make me an aunswere? knowest thou not that I haue power and auctorytie ouer thee, whyther thou shalt lyue or dye? for I am the presidente and chiefe iustice of this region. And it dependeth vpon my will and pleasure, whether thou shalte be crucified, or quitte and let loose. Vnto these woordes Jesus made no suche aunswere as the presidente loked for, whiche presidente desyred to be instructed for the defence of Jesus cause, intendyng to bee in steade of a iudge, an aduocate on the defendauntes syde. But because that waye it shoulde somewhat haue appeared that Jesus hadde not bene willyng to haue dyed, he aunswered no suche lyke thyng: But his aunswere was onelye concernyng the power whiche Pylate dyd arrogantelye attribute to hymselfe: signifyng that it was neyther in Pylates power to sette hym at libertie (seyng that the power whiche he had shoulde condescende to the furie of the Jewes,) nor that Pilate hymselfe shoulde be able to doe oughte agaynst hym, excepte he wouldе of his owne boluntary will, suffer it: of trueth thou hast (sayeth Jesus) power accordyng to mannes lawes, but thou couldest haue no power on me, vnlesse it hadde been permitted thee of him, whose power passeth all mannes power. And in dede thou fauourest innocencie, but yet the naughtines of other ouercummeth thee, and leadeth thee from the righte trade. Wherfore the people of the Jewes, which be the auctours of this my passion and deathe, and that with theyr violence constrayneth the iudge to condemne an innocent persone, sume more grenously. When Pilate heard this, and thereby perceyued bothe the modestie and the clearenes of him, that was accused, and that also the malice of the Iewes, yea and his owne indifferencie too, was not yet wente to the same, & the more Pilate fauoured him, because he sawe that the manne was nothing moued or disquieted, no not with the perill of death that he stode in: when Pilate cõsidered all this, he wrought al maner wayes, that at leaste by some meanes, he might cleare and sette Iesus at libertie. The Iewes perceyuyng thesame, and that the presidente made light of the cryme whiche fyrste was layed against hym concernyng Moses lawe, and that he cra'ed not to doe all that he coulde, to dimisse Iesus, they fall in hand againe with the first fault, whiche to be neglecte they declare to be daungerous to the iudge hymselfe, and sayethefore. Though it doe not appertayne vnto the that he hath offended against our God, certaynly wheras he hath offended against the Emperoure, thou haste to doe withall.

Whosoeuer maketh clayme to a kingdome without the Emperours commaundement, offendeth in the cryme of leasse maiestie, & committeth hye treason: But this felowe maketh himselfe a king, if thou therfore doe let loose & acquite him, thou which fauourest his enemy, art not þ Emperours frende. Whosoeuer maketh himselfe a kyng is against Cesar.

After that Pilate had heard the Bishops and Pharisees, that were conspired togethers against Iesus, & the mayne multitude withal, cry out these wordes aloude, although he was not ignorannt that they went about a false matter, yet because he sawe well that the malice whiche the priestes and Pharisees bare towarde Iesus could not be appeased, and sawe also that the headmen, and the common people were wunderfully consentyng to the sayed grudge, and malice, and all they with one agremẽt bente to take away this one mans life: furthermore when Pilate perceiued also Iesus to be (in dede) nothyng fawtie at al, but symple & a poore innocent man, that made no shifte for himselfe, and lykewise thought in the meane tyme, howe that vnder Emperours many had been in daungerouse hasarde of beery enuy, without any iust cause: And thought too, of himselfe, that he alreadye had sufficiently trauelled against the whole conspiracie agreed vpon betwene the noble menne, and the commons, in the defence of one poore mannes innocencie: Pilate (I tell you) vpon these skilles, determined with hymselfe to condescende and satisfie theyr malice, but in suche sorte that in condemning Iesus, he thought withal to get him his pardon and deliueraunce: and begynnyng to speake fyrste of his owne innocẽcie, derined the grudge of the wicked facte vnto the Iewes, and layed it vpon theyr heades. Nowe than was Iesus therfore brought forth as giltie, when as in condemnyng of hym no kynde of lawfull iudgement was vsed: Pilate sate downe in the place of lawfull iudgemẽt on hye, to geue sentence, & he sate in a high place to be seen of all folke, and of the height it is called of the Hebrewes Gabatha: the Grekes verily call it Lithostroton, because it was paued. For so it behoueth Iesus condemnacion to be solemne, & publike, lest his innocencie should be hidde from any man. For so to be condemned was to be quitte and cleared. Iesus was be'fuered vp to the crosse, but the iudge gaue sentence vpon the Iewes. And nowe the tyme drewe nye, that accordiug to the maner of the solemne feaste, innocente blonde should be offered in sacrifice for the saluacion of the worlde, for it was the Sabboth euen, nowe called good fryday, whiche falleth in the Easter feast, aboute the fyrt houre. And therfore the Jewes called moze vrgently vpō the matter, bu-wittingly doyng therby seruice to the thyng that God appoynted: that is, to haue this sacrifice made in conuenient tyme and due season. And so than Pilate nowe by reason of his Judiciall garment playnly seen and perceyued of the people, shewed vnto them out of the Judgemēt place the accused person, to thentente that euen by the sight of hym and his facion, it myght appeare howe vnconueniently the ceyne of any cruel autozitie that he should be desirouse of, for his priuate commoditie, was layed against him: who beyng so dered & troubled, shewed such great quietnes of minde, & so great mildnes. Pilate (I saye) shewed them this person, and sayed: Beholde your kyng. But the Jewes whiche thirsted for nothyng els but innocent bloud, cryed: away with hym, away with hym: Crucifie hym. The infamous and reprochefull death pleased well the Jewes, trusting it would come to passe, that ꝑ shame and reproche of the crosse, would make the name of Jesus odious and detestable, and that there should no manne come after, whiche should professe his name beyng in suche wyse made awaye. Pilate deriding their obstinate madnesse, sayeth: what (ꝙ he) shall I doe so great a vilanie vnto your kyng as to nayle hym vnto the Crosse.

This dishonor shal redound to the shame & slaunder of all the people whiche haue brought theyr king to the crosse. This boyce of Pilate, although it dyd Jesus no good, yet it disclosed the malice of the Jewes, and forced them to confesse openly, & to knowledge a seruitude, which they hated. The Jewes had desyred and looked for many hundred yeares their Messias, that is to weet, a kyng promised of the Prophetes. Is for the Emperours kyngdome (wherwith they were sore pressed and ouerlayed) they had spitefully hated: yet that not withstanding, being through enuy and hatred wared wylde, and euen woode, they renounce openly in the face of the worlde, theyr Messias: and acknowlege the Emperour for theyr soueraygne Lorde: We haue (saye they) no kyng but the Emperour. The lust to reuēge was so great, that vnconstrayned they adiudged themselues to perpetuall bondage, that they might therby vtterly extinguish Jesus, the autor of libertie. Pilate therfore seyng all that he went aboute, disapoynted: committed Jesus vnto them to be crucified at theyr ordre and libertie.

The texte. And they tooke Jesus and led hym awaye, and he bare his crosse, and went forth into a place, whiche is called the place of dead mennes scalles: but in Hebrue Golgotha, where they crucified him: and two other with hym, on euery syde one, and Jesus in the myddes. And Pilate wrote a tytle, and put it on the crosse. The writyng was, Jesus of Nazareth kyng of the Jewes. This tytle read many of the Jewes, for the place where Jesus was crucified was nye to the citie, and it was written in Hebrue, and Greke and Latyne. Then sayed the hye priestes and Jewes vnto Pilate: write not kyng of the Jewes, but that he sayed, I am kyng of the Jewes. Pilate answered: What I haue written that haue I written.

The Jewes tooke the deliuerye of Jesus beyng brought out of the place of iudgement, and led him to the place of execucion, which was without the citie, that the place might also answer to the figure: For the sacrifice wherwith the testamēt was consecrate, was offered without the host. Jesus wēt

thither, hauyng yet his garmentes on, to thentent he might be the more shame to them that fauoured hym: and he goeth full meekely beareynge his crosse hymselfe. For the Jewes prouided that, leste there shoulde lacke any despyte or reprochе. Furthermore, a byle and a dikkamed place was also chosen and appoynted, wherein the maner was to put wycked malefactours to execution, a place perdye detestable and violated with dead bodyes, whose bones laye scattered here and there all abrode: euen a place that shewed it selfe to what purpose it was dedicate, and of the thyng it had the common name geuen it. For in the Hebrue toung it was called Golgatha, in the Greke toung Κρανίου τόπος, in the Latyn toung Caluarie locus, in Englyshe, a place of dead mens sculles: and leste he shoulde not be putte to shame ydoughe, the Jewes procured this also, that other two whiche were openly knowen to be wycked theues) shoulde be crucified with Jesus together, to thentente that of the felowshippe of them that were soch offenders, he might lyke wyse be thought and taken for an offender: and lyke as they had all one commune punyshemente, so to seme to haue all one commune faulte. But to thentente it might vtterly appere that he was a companyon of theyrs, the Jewes dyd so ordre and place the crosses, that Jesus honge in the mydde, hauyng a theefe hangyng on eyther hande of hym, howbeit the fountayne of all pureнes coulde not be polluted with any fylthynes of manne, yea, the fountaine of all glorie is magnified and renouned with mens reprochе. The crosse being afoze odyouse, and a thyng of reprochе, was made by hym a triumphant signe, wherunto the worlde boweth downe the heade, which aungels do worshyppe, and deuyls feare it. Jesus being thus condemned, founde one whome of a theefe he made a citizen of paradyse: so muche bylkelyhoode was it, that the felowship of punishement shoulde defile hym.

And verely, leste there shoulde wante any kynde of appearaunce of iuste and condigne punishmente, euery one had (as the manner was) his title and stile geuen vnto hym, whych did describe and declare both the person and the faulte. Now then, when Pilate had geuen to the other their titles accordyng to their deseruing, he commaunded that to the crosse of Jesus the Lorde, shoulde bee fastened this title and superscription, Iesus of Nazareth the king of the Iewes, euen for this cause truely, that by the very selfe inscription, he might cause bothe the malyce of the Jewes, and the innocencie of hym that was crucified, to be recorded: howbeit this title was not conuenient for him, in respect of the Jewes accusation: and yet accordyng to that whiche himselfe confessed to the presydent, it was a title moste semyng for hym. For truely Iudeus doeth signifie to the Hebrues, confessyng. And doubtles he was and is in very dede, a kyng and a setter of all them at libertie, whiche professeth his name: vnto whome he geueth felowshyp of the kyngdome of heauen. And to bryng the Bishoppes and the Pharisеis into more hatred thereby, Pilate prouided this title to bee writte in thre sundry languages, in Hebrue, in Greke, and in Latine: whereof the first was their owne countrey speache, and the other two tounges (by reason of the great occupying that they had with the Grekes, and the Romaines) was so brought in among them, that some Jewes also knewe the Greke and the Latine toung. Therfore it was prouided by the president, that no man neither resiaunt there and the same countreyman, nor straunger and resorter thyther, shoulde be ignoraunt of the title. This title thus wrytten, being odiouse vnto the Pharisеis, by reason that the place was muche haunted, and greate was the resorte and confluence there, because that Golgatha, the mounte of calvery, was nyghe vnto the cite, and laye full in theyr syght that by casualtie passed by that waye: many Jewes therefore read (I saye) this superscripcion: and sum bicause we will the name of Jesus of Nazareth. And howe litle he desyred any worldly kyngdome, many had true knowledge, whiche had seen hym hyde hymselfe when he shoulde haue been drawen by force to a kyngdome. That very kyng whiche was promysed by the prophetes, and whome the Jewes call Messias, was of very truthe loked for among all the Jewes. And although the Pilate was ouerseene herein, yet vnawares he gaue hym that tytle which dyd moste demonstrate & notifie to all folke, who he was that hong vpon the crosse. For of very truth that selfe kynge of kynges honge there crucifyed, whiche by his deathe, dyd vanquiche the tirannye of the deuyll. Thou oughtest to call it rather the token and banner of victorie, than a crosse. Thoughe all thynge semed full of shame and rebuke to the bysshops, scribes, and to the Pharisees, yet this tittleing and superscripcion did greuethem inwardes, because it was more honorably set out than they would haue had it. So great was the desyre of the wycked, to abolysh a name to the which onely, all glory of the whole world ought to be geuen. And therefore they treate and common with the president of chaungeing the title, and that it should not be written, the king of the Jewes, but that he dyd vsurpe and vniustly take vpon hym that name. But the presydent notwithstanding that euen then vnawares he dyd pronosticate what should folow, that is to wete, that the profession of that healthfull name (whiche the Jewes falsely denyed) should departe thence to the redy beleuyng Gentiles, that is to saye, to the true Jewes in dede: yet (I saye) this notwithstanding, and that also heretofore he did condescende and folowe their ymaginacions, the presydente would not alter and chaunge the title, but sayeth: that I haue wrytten, I haue wrytten. For because it was in verie deed to the commoditie and profit of all folke that Christe shoulde be put to death, and agayne also, it was for all menne weale that his name should be of most fame and renoume thoro we the whole worlde, by the profession wherrof, saluacion should bee brought to all folke.

The texte. Than the soudiers when they had crucified Jesus, they toke hys garmentes and made fower partes, to euery soudiour a parte, and also his coate. The coate was without seame, wrought vpon throughout. They sayed therefore among themselues, let vs not diuide it, but cast lottes for it, who shall haue it. That the scripture myght be fulfylled, saying: They parted my rayment among them, and for my coate dyd they caste lottes. And the soudiers dyd suche thynges in dede. There stoode by the crosse of Jesus, his mother, and his mothers sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene. when Jesus therefore sawe his mother, and the disciple standyng, whome he loued, he sayeth vnto his mother: Woman, beholde thy sonne. Than sayed he to the disciple: Beholde thy mother, and from that houre the disciple toke her for his owne.

Nowe therefore when the Lorde Jesus was nayled (as the maner was) all naked vnto the crosse, and the forsayed superscripcion aboue his heade, the soudiers that crucified hym (accordyng to the vsage) parted among them Jesus garmentes. For this thyng came to them as amendes and reward for theyr paynes taking. And forasmuche as they were fower in noumbre, they so deuided the residue of his garmentes saue his coate (by cause they were made of soundrye pieces and sowed together) that euery manne had hys parte porcionately.

cionately. But than his coate or iacket, a garmēt verely whiche was more inner and nere his bodye, no sewed garment, but so wouen from thouer hem to the lower, that beyng lousyd or rypte, it wouldе haue been good for nothinge and nought wourth. Therefore ỹ souldiers thought good that it shouldе bee kept whole vncut, and that sum one of them shouldе haue the whole iacket to whose lotte it should chaunce. But not withstandynge that the souldiers dyd these thinges of a prophane mynde, and of a worldlye purpole, yet vnawares they fulfylled in their so doyng, the prophecies of the Prophetes, that hereby also he might haue bene knowen to bee he, of whome the holy ghoste had spoken in the Psalmes thus: they haue deuyded myne apparel amonge thē, and caste lottes vpon my garmentes. And these thinges perdye, the souldiers did whiles yet the Lord honge vpon the crosse alyue. But there stoode by ỹ crosse of Jesus, Mary his mother, a Iociate with her lyster Marye, the daughter of Cleophas, and Marie Magdalene. Therefore Jesus lokynge from ỹ crosse vpon his mother, and castynge his eye withall vpon the disciple whom he loued more familiarly than the reste, to thentente that as (his clothes beyng distributed) he lefte no worldly substaunce behynde him, so he wouldе leaue vpō earthe no worldly or mannes affection: Jesus (I saye) turned towardes his mother and sayed: Woman beholde that thy sonne, pōyntynge with a nod of his head, and with a wincke of his eye, to the disciple. And turning furthwith to the disciple, sayeth: Beholde thy mother. And verily from that tyme, the sayd disciple boze a very sōnes mynde and affectiō toward the mother of Jesus, and toke the whole charge and care of her.

The texte. After these thinges, Jesus knowyng that all thinges were now perfourmed, that the scripture myght be fulfilled, he sayeth: I thirst. So there stoode a dessill by full of vinegre: therefore they filled a sponge with vinegre, and wounde it about ỹ hyssope, & putte it to his mouthe. Assone as Jesus receyued of the vynegre, he sayde: it is finished, & bowed his heade, and gaue vp the ghoste.

When these thinges were doen, and Jesus knew that nothing wanted pertayning to a lawfull sacrifice, yet to bryng thereunto and to accompiyshe the Prophetes saying where he sayeth: They gaue me gall to eate, and when I was thirstye they gaue me vinegre to drinke, he cried from the crosse: I am a thirst. For of trueth suche as dye in this kynde of death, are wonte to be sore greued with vehement thirst, by reason that thzough the woundes of ỹ body, the bloude is exhaust and cleane drawē out. And euen this now too, did much prone and declare him to be a very man, & to be oute of doubte, punyshed to his great payne. Now thā a vessel full of vinegre stoode there at hād, which was wont to be reached vp & geuen to thē that were athirste to make them the sooner dye. The souldiers therfore fylled a sponge with vinegre, & wosde it about with ysope, and helde it to his mouthe. But as sone as Jesus had tasted ỹ vinegre, he sayed: It is finished, signifying that the sacrifice was rightly doen and accomplyshed accordynge to his fathers will, and byanby he bowed his heade and gaue vp the ghoste.

The texte. The Jewes therfore because it was the preparing of the Sabbothe, that the bodies should not remayne on the crosse on the Sabbath day, for the Sabbath day was an hye day, besought Pylate that their legges might be brokē, and that they might bee taken downe. Then came the souldiers and brake the legges of the first and of ỹ other which was crucified with him, but whan they came to Jesus, and sawe that he was dead alreadye, they brake not his legges, but one of ꝓ ſouldiers with a ſpeare thruſt him into ꝓ ſyde, and ſtreyth with came there out bloud & water. And he that ſawe it bare recorde, & his recorde is true, & he knoweth that he ſayeth true ꝓ ye myght beleue alſo: for theſe thinges were doen, that the ſcripture ſhould be fulfilled. Ye ſhall not breake a bone of him, and agayne another ſcripture ſayeth: They ſhall looke on hym whome they pearced.

But it is a ſpoyte and a wonder withall to heare now againe in this caſe the peruerſe religion of the Jewes ſo farre out of courſe and myſorȝed: The Jewes vpon a myſcheuous malice, and by wicked meanes, brought with violence vnto the croſſe an innocent, and one that had bene beneficiall vnto them, beyng nothing abaſhed with the relygion of the feaſtfull daye, to do ſo cruel and ſo vngracious a dede, but they were very ſuperſticious, and made muche a do about taking the bodies of frō the croſſe. They came vnto Pilate, and beſought him ꝓ by his commaundement, the legges of them which were crucified, might be broken, to thentent they might the ſooner be deade: and then their corpſes be taken downe, and had out of the waye, leſte beyng ſene, they ſhoulde violate and breake the feaſtfull daye. That daye was a ſolemne greate daye, whiche (of the great aparelyng and fournature of holy adournmētes and diuine ſeruice) is called of the Grekes, Paraſceue, that is to ſaye, a preparation. And their holy and ſolempne Sabbothe daye was nye at hande, vpon whyche daye to worke was a deteſtable thing. For at this ſeaſon the men beeynge (ye wote well) very pzecile in their relygion, after they had finiſſhed and accompliſched ſo horrybie an acte, as thoughe the thinge, had been well doen, they bente their mindes to celebzate the ſacrifice that was to be offered by Moſes lawe, ſolemnely and purely, not knowyng that the very true Eaſter lambe was alreadi offered vp in ſacrifice.

Suche a poyſon and ſo peſtiferouſe a thing is holyneſſe that conſiſteth in outwarde and bodily thinges, and hath not holynes and godlynes of herte and mynde, ſoyned and annexed vnto it. Nowe therfore Pilate grauntyng them their requeſt, the ſouldiers brake bothe the theues legges, whome they found yet aliue. And then when they were come to Jeſus, becauſe they ſaw him alreadye deade, and therefore thought it a vayne and ſuperfluous thynge to breake his legges, they lefte them whole vnbzoken. For to this ende and purpoſe were the legges broken, that thoſe whiche hung vpon the croſſe, ſhoulde the ſooner gyue vp the ghoſte. But among the ſouldiers ſtoode a certaine man whiche (for the more certeintie of the Lozde Jeſus death) opened his ſyde with a ſpeare, and immediatly out of the wounde there guſhed forth bloude and water, in a great miſterye declarynge that his death ſhoulde waſhe and cleanſe vs from ſynne, and the ſame alſo geue to vs euerlaſtinge lyfe and ſaluacion. For baptiſme ſtandeth in water, and with water are we baptiſed. And ꝓ lyfe of a manne is in the bloude. But it is againſte the courſe of nature for water to runne out of a bodye that is wounded. Howbeit he that ſawe the thing with his eyes, teſtifieth, and beareth witnes hereof: And we knowe his recorde to bee true. And leſte any of you ſhoulde ſtande in doubte whether ye maye or no beleue the thing, whiche els might ſeme incredible, I aſſure you that Jeſus himſelfe knewe that witnes, to tell truely.

One of the ſouldiers thruſt him into ꝓ ſyde, and ſtreyth came there out water and bloude.

And althoughe theſe thinges ſemed to be doen by chaunce or caſualtie, that is to ſaye, that in ſtede of breakyng his legges, as the others were, his chaunce

was

was to haue his syde thruste thorowe, yet for all that were they doen by the forsight and prouidence of God, and as his diuine councell disposed, that in this pointe also, the effecte and conclusion of the thing, myght aunswere and agree with the prophecies of the Prophetes. For among other rites and customes wherwith Moses teacheth in Exodus, that the paske or passouer ought to be obserued and celebrate, he had prescribed eue that thing specially by name, that is to were, that lambe which was sacrifised, should be so slaine, that no bone of it should be broken: euen thereby notyng and declarynge, that Jesus was the very true phase or passouer, the figure whereof that Mosaicall lambe did beare, & resembled the same. For the bloud of this true lambe Jesus, saueth them that beleue in hym from death. And the spirituall eatyng of this lambe, conueyeth vs beeyng made free from the seruitude of Egypte, that is to saye, from the sinfull lustes of the worlde, and from the tyranny of sinne, into an heauenly region. And againe, the holy ghoste speaketh thus by Zacharye: They shall see hym whom they pearsed. For he shall once come with the same body wherwith he hong on the crosse, though it be already a glorious body, yet shall he shewe the printe of the wounde to all folke, and he shall shewe the vnkaythfull, to theyr rebuke, the fountayne that was open all in vayne to them, that would not beleue: with the flowyng and streames wherof, they might haue been cured.

The texte.

After this Joseph of Aramathia, which was a disciple of Jesus, but secretely for feare of the Jewes, besought pilate that he might take downe the body of Jesus. And pilate gaue hym licence: he came therfore and tooke downe the body of Jesus. And there came also Nicodemus, which at the beginning came to Jesus by night, and brought of myrrhe and aloes mengled together, about an hundred pounde weyght. Then tooke they the body of Jesus, and wounde it in lynnen clothes with odours, as the maner of the Jewes is to bury. And in the place where he was crucified there was a gardeyne, and in the gardeyne a newe sepulchre, wherin was neuer man layed. There layed they Jesus therfore, because of the preparyng of the Sabboth of the Jewes, for the sepulchre was nye at hande.

And so nowe his death beyng already certayne, and himselfe founde dead by the experience of many, it behoued furthermoze that his buryall should many wayes confyrme the belefe of the resurrection. And as Christe would (perdie) his whole life to be base and of a lowe poyze, so he would that his burial should be honorable, and of a great maiestie, not intendyng therby to teache vs to be carefull of a sepulchre, but to thentent that those thinges once accomplyshed, whiche concerned the abalyng of hymselfe and the whole ministery thereof, he might make a waye to the honour and prayse of his resurrection. And in very dede the honour whiche is geuen to a manne alyue, is not without either suspicion or daunger, but the honour whiche voluntarily we geue to the dead, is a sure wytnes of prowes, goodnes, and vertue. Nowe therfore Joseph beyng a manne of honour and of great power, & substaunce, an Iramathian borne, which sayed Joseph was a disciple of Jesus, but not openly knowen so to be for feare of the Jewes, which had made a lawe that whosoeuer did openly confesse himselfe to be Jesus disciple, the same person should be caste out of the Synagoge: Joseph (I saye) came vnto Pilate to whom he was well knowen, and desyreth licence of hym, to take downe Jesus body from the crosse: when Pilate had tried whether that he were dead or not, he was content withal. Therfore Joseph went his way to the crosse, and toke do wne the dead corps. In the meane season, as one to helpe furthe with those thinges and doynges, that pertayne to the funerals: euen Nicodemus also, cummeth thither, a man among the Pharisees of a notable estimacion and dignitie: and he also being a secrete disciple of Jesus, which had before that tyme come to Jesus in the night, because he myght so beste auoyde the displeasure and grudge of the Pharisees, as was before rehersed. These menne knowyng that death commonly maketh an ende of hatred, trustyng vpon the presidentes fauour, enterprysed hiely to honoure the dead, with whom (whiles he lined) they durst not raise openly. Nicodemus (of truethe) brought with him an ointment of myrrhe & aloes mingled together aboute an hundred pounde weyght, so muche as was sufficient to kweten the bodye, and honorably to preserue it from corruption. They now therfore toyntely together with one common seruice, anointed Jesus body being take downe, on euery parte with pleasaunte and swete sauerye spices, and when they had well imbrued the corps with the odours, thei wouñ it in linnen clothes, that the ointmẽt should not runne of from the body. For the maner of the Jewes is, after this sorte to bury, leste the bodies should corrupte and putrefie.

And verily they did this honour to the Lord Jesus as to a worthy mã, and one that was throughly good: and againe, they thus honoured him to thentent no man should thynke that he dyed for any cryme or faulte. For as yet, they had no hyer opinion of hym, but that he was an innocent good man and loued of god, whose name and memory ought to haue this honour doen vnto it, that is to saye, to be remembred as one that was enuied for his vertue euen to the death, a thyng that vsually happneth in maner to moste beste menne. Moreouer this preparation and great a doe was euen there finished, leste any man myght supect that the body had ben chaunged. And agayne the Lord was buried then in a garden, nyt to the place of the crosse. In the garden was a new sepulchre lately made out of an harde thicke stone, wherin was neuer man layed. And albeit these thinges were supposed to be doen by casualtie, yet they made much for the fayth of the resurrection. For the sepulchre could not seme to be digged vp with vndermynyng, becau'e it was cutte out of an whole sounde vnholowe rocke of stone, nor none other could be thought to haue risen out of it, in whiche he only was layed. But yet Joseph and Nicodeme did not this in respecte of his resurrecciõ, for in dede they had no hope that he should rise againe, but they were moued thus to doe with a Jewishe deuocion, for religion sake of the feastfull day. For in dede it was the Jewes Easter day euen, and therfore the Sabboth prouoked and set forwarde this dede. In which Sabboth day it was not lawful for them to worke. Wherfore leste the body should be vnburied, or the burial be to slender, and with to small honour doen, they eyd the thyng out of hande, and layed hym in the sepulchre that was nerte vnto them. Also furthermore, euen the diligence of the Jewes, serued for the beleefe of his resurrection that should be. For after that the Jewes had obteined of Pilate kepers for the sepulchre, & had procured that it should be watched and attended vpon, leste any body should secretly stele awaye the dead corps, they not contente therewith, close vp the mouthe of the sepulchre, with a great stone, and seale it, when they hadde so doen: so that eueuery side the malice of the Jewes, succeded and came to the glory of Christ, whose name they went about vtterly to destroy and abolish.

The

The. xx. Chapter.

The first daye of the Sabbothes came Mary Magdalene early (when it was yet somewhat darke) vnto the sepulchre, and sawe the stone taken awaye from the graue. Then she ranne, and came to Symon Peter, and to the other disciple whome Iesus loued, and sayed vnto them: They haue taken awaye the lorde out of the graue, and we cannot tell where they haue layed hym. Peter therfore went forth, and that other disciple, and came vnto the sepulchre. They ranne both the together, and the other disciple did out runne Peter, and came firste to the sepulchre. And when he had stouped downe, he sawe the linnen clothes lying, yet went he not in. The texte.

And verely the residue of the disciples, beeyng stryken partly with feare, and partely with dispayre, neglected the burying, and rought not for the dead corps. But certayne women that were his disciples cared asmuche for it, as did Ioseph and Nicodemus, but the religion of the feastefull dayes, stayed them from the labeurying aboute preparatiō of swete odours. Howbeit, as soone as the base Sabboth daye was past (the oyntmentes beyng made ready in the nyghte Mary Magdalene came earlye when it was yet somewhat darke vnto the sepulchre, the morowe after the Sabboth daye. And when she sawe the stone wherewith the entrie of the sepulchre was closed vp remoued thence, and the sepulchre to be open, the woman supposed nothyng els but that the deade corps hadde been taken awaye in the night, to the intent it might haue been more semely and accordyngly buried. For the body was layed there for a time, as of purpose, that it might soone after be adourned and set forth with the due and full solemnitie of burying. For in dede the hope of his resurrection fell awaye from all the disciples, they were so muche astonied with the certaintie of his death.

Therfore Marie ere she had loked into the graue, retyered backe agayne, and ran to Simon Peter, with whom was euen that disciple whome Iesus loued, and she sayeth: Our lord is taken awaye out of the sepulchre, and I know not whither they haue caryed him that toke him awaye. They both beyng styred with that woyce, went forth. Surely they had small hope, yet hadde they a great affection and desyre towardes theyr master, whom they so muche loued. And therfore they ranne both out together to the graue, but that disciple which was so beloued of Iesus, outranne Peter, and came firste to the sepulchre. And when he founde the dooze open, he wente not in, but stouped downe and looked into the graue, whether it were emptie or no. And he sawe well there was no dead corps, but the linnen clothes lefte imbued with swete odouriferous oyntmentes, wherwith the body had bene wrapped, and also the napkyn that Iesus head had bene bound in, not the linnen clothes and it lying together, but wrapt vp and layed aside by it selfe, so that it was easy to perceyue, that the body was not taken awaye by theues, whiche woulde haue rather purloyned the whole corps as it laye, wrapped and wounde vp with the swete smellyng spices, with the linnen clothes, and the fine kercher: though it had not bene for the valure therof, at least they would so haue doen, because thei should haue lacked laisure to haue separate the oyntmentes and swete spices from the bodye, seeyng they cleaued as fast therunto as byrdelime woulde haue doen, and because also they They haue take awaye the lord. &c should not haue had sufficient tyme to folde vp and couche euery thyng hande somely and seuerally in his place. This (suche as it was) was in dede the firste comforte and hope that was geuen to them of his resurrection.

The texte. Then came Simon Peter folowyng hym, and went into the sepulchre, and sawe the linnen clothes lye, and the napkyn that was about his head. not lyyng with the linnen clothes, but wrapped togethers in a place by it selfe. Then went in also the other disciple which came firste to the sepulchre, and he sawe and beleued. For as yet they knewe not the scripture, that he shoulde ryse agayne from death.

Now than anon after cummeth Peter also, who after that he was certified of the thing by John, as he was slower in runnyng, so was he both bolder and more diligent in tryyng out the trueth of the thyng. For not beyng content with lokyng into the graue, he also went into it. The other disciple a loker in as wel as he, (whiche yet durst not by hymselfe alone go in, howbeit in dede his companion beyng with hym, tooke parte of the feare awaye) nowe folowed Peter into the sepulchre. And so nowe they sawe certaynly at very hande the thing to be true, (whiche the one of them had seen as it had been a shadowe, or a glymmering sight therof,) that no corse or dead corps was any where in that place: but in dede they sawe the clothes wherin the body had been wrapped, in suche sorte pulled of, and laied aside, that it appeared to be done not of theues in hast, sleyghtly and shuffled vp, but quietly and layserly. Howbeit as yet they did not beleue that he was risen agayn to lyfe, they onely beleued that to be true, which Marie had tolde them: Tereyse that the corps was taken awaye out of the sepulchre. For although they had heard Jesus saye that he would rise againe, yet did not the saying sticke in wardly in their myndes, and though some hope therof were in their hertes, yet that whiche had already place in their myndes, the feare and tumulte of the crosse and his passion, draue it out of their myndes. For they did not fully understand as yet, the saying of the Prophet, which had prophecied that certaynly Jesus should suffer death, and rise againe the thirde daye from death to lyfe.

The texte. Then the disciples went away agayne vnto their owne home. Marie stode without at the sepulchre, weeping: So as she wepte, she bowed herselfe into the sepulchre, and seeth two angels clothed in white sitting the one at the heade, and the other at the feete, where they had layed the body of Jesus. They saye vnto her: Woman why wepest thou? She sayeth vnto them: For they haue taken awaye my Lorde, and I wote not where they haue layed hym.

Therefore the two disciples departed thence, and wente backe again to the place from whence they came. But Marie of a certain exceedyng loue and wonderfull desire that she had to the lorde, coulde not be drawen from the sepulchre: seekyng hym that was now deade, whome she had loued beyng aliue, and was desirouse to shew gentilnes, and to do seruice vpon the dead bodye, for somuche as she now could not haue the fruition of his liuely body: and she stoode without nye vnto the doore of the graue, and did nought els but all to wepe, & loke about her, if she coulde haue any hope or lykelyhoode to finde the bodye. Nowe than as she was weping, and in dede durst not go into the graue, she turned her head aside and loked into the graue, and she sawe two angels, goodly to looke too, both of good semblaunce and in pleasaunt white apparell, sittyng in seuerall places, the one at the head and the other at the feete of the place, where the dead corps was laied. And in very dede this pleasaũt, this chereful and peaceable sight, did some deale allwage the extreme feare of the night, and of her carefulnesse. The angels also to comforte her sorowfull pensifenesse, of theyr owne accorde and gentlenes, speake vnto the wepyng woman and saye: O woman, what is it thou wepest for? She than beyng all raupyshed, and as one dyzunke with a certayne behemencie of loue, sayeth: They haue taken awaye my lorde, and I know not where they haue laied hym. She calleth him her lorde, and she also loueth hym being dead, hauing yet no hope of the resurreccion. She was onely herewithall grieued, that is, because she couldc not haue the sighte of his bodye.

Whan she had thus sayed, she turned herselfe backe, and sawe Jesus standyng, and knewe not that it was Jesus. Jesus sayeth vnto her: Woman, why wepest thou? whome seekest thou? She supposyng it had been a gardiner, sayeth vnto hym: Sir, if thou haue borne hym hence, tell me where thou hast layed hym, and I wyl fetche hym. Jesus sayeth vnto her: Mary. She turned herselfe and sayed vnto hym: Rabboni, whiche is to saye, My father. Jesus sayeth vnto her: Touche me not, for I am not yet ascended to my father, but go vnto my brethren, and saie vnto them, I ascende vnto my father and your father, and to my God and your God. The texte.

Whyles she speaketh thus, she conjectured by the semblaunce of the angels, that some man stode behinde at her backe, and not tarying for the angels answer, she cast her ye aside, and incontinently she sawe Jesus standyng, whom ỹ angels had worshipped, but yet Marie knewe not that it was Jesus. For he did appere in the forme of a poore simple man, lest he being sodainly seen in his owne forme and shape, should haue muche astonished the woman. Therfore to bolden her withall, he calleth, speaketh gently vnto her with the same fater wordes that the angels did, saying: Woman, why wepest thou? whome seekest thou loking about the hither and thither? She suspecting him to be a gardiner, the worcheman and keper of the ground, wherein the sepulchre was, (for it was in a garden) with a womanly simplicitie sayed vnto hym: Sir, if thou hast taken hym awaye, tel me where thou hast hid him, that I maie go fetche him there. For she supposed that some frend for feare of the Jewes, had procured the body to be secretly caryed awaye, lest it should come into the Jewes handes, and should be otherwyse handled than she would it should be. Jesus therfore beyng delited in the great despyte of the woman, doeth now with a knowen familiar voyce, speake vnto her, and calleth her Marie. At this knowen voyce, the woman sodainly turnyng herselfe (for euen at this very presente she had bowed downe herselfe agayne towardes the angels, so muche was she by sodayne motions of mynde stered to loke this waye and that waye) the woman I saie, knewe Jesus, and rauished with a sodayne ioye, the a disciple, speaketh to the master, and calleth hym Rabboni, whiche woorde in the Syrians tonge, signifieth, Master: And withal she falleth flatte downe to the grounde, and would haue kissed his feete, hauyng yet in remembraunce theyr olde familiaritie. But Jesus knowyng that as yet she thought no great excellente thyng of hym, although she loued him sincerely and ardently, did prohibite her to touche his bodye. For Marie sawe well that he was aliue agayne, but she thought ỹ he was reuiued for none other cause, but as he did before, to liue familiarlye with his frendes, beyng now a man aliue, where as before he was dead: and ignoraunt she was that he now caryed about with hym an immortall body, which was to be handled with muche greater reuerence, whiche bodye the Lorde did neuer exhibite or present to the wicked, nor suffered it to be handled of euery e man, to thentent he might litle by litle, altogether withdrawe them from the loue of the bodye. Touche me not (sayeth he) it is the selfe same bodye whiche hong vpon the crosse, but it is nowe beautified and adourned with the glory of immortalitie. But truely thine affeccion is yet somedeale carnall, because I haue not yet ascended vp to my father, whiche thyng once doen, I shall sende vnto you the spirite that is the comforter, and he shall make you perfite and wurthy to haue the spirituall felowship of me.

In the meane time content thy selfe with that thou hast seen me and heard me speake, and specially nowe go thou to my brethren, whiche are thoughe my death comfortles, and forthwith make them partakers with thee, of the ioye and comforte whiche thou haste receyued by the sight of me: and vpon these my wordes shewe them that to this ende I am rysen from death to lyfe, euen that after I haue taried a certayne dayes among them, I maye leaue the worlde, and ascende vp to my father, who is also your father, and the selfe same both your god and mine, common to bothe. Let them therfore put away earthly affeccions and rectifie their mindes, applying the same to spirituall and heauenly thinges.

The texte. Mary Magdalen came and tolde the disciples, that she had seene the lorde, and that he had spoken suche thynges vnto her. The same daye at night, whiche was the firste daye of the sabbothes, when the doores were shut (where the disciples were assembled together for feare of the Iewes) came Iesus and stoode in the middes, and sayeth vnto them: Peace be vnto you. And when he had so sayed, he sheweth vnto them his handes and his syde. Then were the disciples glad when they sawe the lorde.

Now than Mary did as he had her, and returnyng againe to the disciples, shewed them that she had seen the lorde, and tolde them the thynges whiche he had commaunded to be made relacion of in his name: and this was doen that they should take right great comforte of that he nowe called them his brethren, and prepare also their myndes to the loue and desyre of eternall and heauenly thynges, forasmuche as the presēt vse of his body should not endure long with them. After that with these and certayne other apparicions the lord Iesus had litle by litle lift vp their myndes to quicknesse of spirite, and to the hope of the resurrection alreadi past, the selfe same daye that was the morowe after the sabboth daye whiche next folowed the sabboth of Easter, when it was nighte, and the disciples secretelye gathered together, whiche for feare of the Iewes durste not assemble together in the daye tyme, Iesus went in to them when the doores were shut, and standyng in the middes in the sight of them all, to take away al feare from them, he saluted them amiably and full gentlye, saying with a voice well knowen vnto them: Peace with you. And lest they shoulde suspect it to be a ghost or another bodye, he sheweth vnto them the printe of the naples in his handes, and the scarre of the wounde whiche the souldier hadde made in his syde with a speare. With this salutacion and sight, the fayth of his disciples was confirmed, the sorowe take away, and their myndes muche recreate and made ioyous. For Iesus had promised them before that thus it shoulde be, that within a shorte tyme he wouldse see them agayne, and after they hadde seen hym, and their sorowe put away, that he would make their hertes gladde and merye. And therewithal he tolde them this also should folow, that in the world they should haue sorow and heuinesse, but in hym they shoulde haue peace and quietnesse.

Then

Then sayed Jesus to them agayne: Peace be vnto you. As my father sent me, euen so sende I you. And when he had sayed these wordes, he brethed on them, and sayeth vnto them: Whosoeuers sinnes ye remit, they are remitted vnto the, and whosoeuers sinnes ye retayne, they are retayned. But Thomas one of the twelue (which is called Didimus) was not with them when Jesus came. The other disciples therfore sayed vnto hym: We haue seen the lorde. But he sayed vnto them: Except I see in his handes the printe of the nayles, and thrust my hande into his syde, I will not beleue. The text.

Therfore to confirme the Apostles in their hope and coumforte the more, he once agayne saluteth them with good lucke of peace, saying: Peace with you. And at the same tyme withal, he hiely auctorizeth them, and commaundeth the to preache the thinges whiche they had seen, and sayeth: As my father sent me, so do I sende you. I haue truely and faithfully glorifyed my fathers name, and you agreyng amõg your selues, shal with lyke trueth and faithfulnesse preache my fathers name and mine. Prepare your mindes to this fuccion and office: for ainsmuche as I now the that I haue doen diligently the thyng that I had in commission to do, go agayne to my father, and from thence I shall sende vnto you more plentie and more power of the holy ghost. In the meane while shall I also make you partakers of the holy ghost accordyng to your capacitie: and euen as he was thus speakyng, he brethed on them and gaue them the spirite, with auctoritie to forgeue all men their sinnes that would be ioyned to hym by profession of the ghospel and by baptisme, and that would forthinke their former life, and be ernestlons amended where they haue erred. Whosoeuers sinnes ye remit (sayeth he) they are remitted vnto them, and whosoeuers ye retayne, they shall abide subiecte to their synnes. When these thinges were doen, the residue of the disciples were assembled together, Thomas onely except, that than was absent: whiche name Thomas signifieth in the Greke tongue Didimus, and in the Latin Gemínus, in Englysshe doubtefull. For he was one of the twelue whõ the lorde did specially and peculiarly choose to the office of preachyng the gospell. Therfore after that he was come in to them, the disciples that could scant stande for ioye, shewed openly vnto hym that they had seen the lorde. Thomas supposyng them to be deceyued and illuded by some vision or spirite, denyed to beleue vnles he might see hym with his owne eyes: and not to beleue his owne eyes as sufficient witnesse, except he might see withall the printe of the nailes euen fresshe in his handes, yea and with putting his owne handes into Jesus side percepue by felyng, the wounde that the speare made. And truelye, this incredulitie of the Apostle, by the dispensacion of God as he shall dispose, dydde muche good to the confirmacion and stablishement of our fayth.

And after eyght dayes, agayne his disciples were within, and Thomas with them. Then came Jesus when the doores were shut, and stoode in the middes, and sayed: Peace be vnto you. After that sayed he to Thomas: Bryng thy fynger hither and se my handes, and reache hither thy hande, and thrust it into my syde, and be not faythelesse but beleuyng. Thomas answered, and sayed: My Lorde, and my God. Jesus sayeth vnto hym: Thomas because thou haste sene me, thou haste beleued. Blessed are they that haue not sene and yet haue beleued. And many other thynges truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this boke. These are written that ye might beleue, that Jesus is Christe the sonne of God, and that (in beleuyng) ye might haue life throughe his name. The text.

Therfore eyght dayes after, when the Apostles met together agayne, by stealthe, and at this tyme with the resse, Thomas was in coumpanye, whiche hitherto wouldē not beleue that Christe was ryſen: the Lorde came in to them where they were, the gates beyng hard faſte ſhut, and ſtandyng in the middes of them, he ſaluted them after his vſuall and well knowen maner and facion, ſaying: Peace with you. And turnyng hym vpandby to Thomas, whoſe vnbelefe he knewe, that was ignorāunt in nothyng: whiche lacke of beliefe, becauſe Jeſus knewe it came not as the phariſeis infidelitie did, that is, of malice, but of mans infirmitie, he vouchedſafe to heale it. He ſayeth thus to hym: Thomas (ſayeth he) forāſmuche as it dooeth not ſuffiſe the to haue heard of many (that I was ryſen to lyfe agayne) whiche hath ſeen me and heard me, except thy ſenſes mighte feale and perceyue the ſame, bring hither thy finger and feele the woundes of the nayles, and ſee that I truelye carye the very true markes therof. Put thy hande into my ſyde and handle the wounde whiche the ſpeare made, and hereafter be not vnfaythful, and harde of belefe in other matters: but after thou haſte nowe ſeen this thing proued certainly true, whiche per ſemed to thee incredible. ſee thou geue fayth to my promiſes, howe incredible ſoeuer they ſeme to the common ſence and iudgement of men. After that Thomas had ſeen and felte, knowyng bothe the face and accuſtomed voyce of the Lorde, he than conceyued a full fayth, and ſpake aloude: My Lorde and my God. For as he was more harde of belefe, ſo no body did more clearlye confeſſe Jeſus to be God and man, for becauſe the handlyng of the body which late before hong dead vpon the croſſe, witneſſed that he whiche was ryſen to lyfe agayne, was a very man in dede: and the knowleage of hidde ſecrete thynges, proued well his godhead.

So than of trueth, Jeſus did well accepte and embrace Thomas his confeſſion, but yet withall he did reproue his harōneſſe of belefe, ſaying: Thomas becauſe thou haſt ſeen me, heard me, and handled me, thou beleueſt: but bleſſed ſhall they be, whiche though they ſee not, will yet beleue. Hereby the Lorde Jeſus declared vnto his diſciples, his diuine power and godheade by many other tokens whiche are not written in this booke, but ſome thynges are reported and declared by other Euangeliſtes, and ſome thynges alſo were reported and tolde by worde of mouthe: and euen they were the tellers therof, which bothe ſawe and heard the thynges themſelues. For to ſet out and write all thynges (whiche wouldē haue bene a worke that for the greatnes it coulde not haue been meaſured) was not cared for, but yet it was thoughte neceſſarye to write of ſome thinges, that thereby ye mought come to the beliefe, that Jeſus was the ſonne of God. Whiche thyng yf ye do in dede, ye ſhall haue that full bliſſe, and beatitude whiche our Lorde Jeſus promiſed to them that when they ſee not, beleue. For lyke as he ſuffered death and liueth immortal, ſo ſhall ye alſo by profeſſion of his name in true fayth, obtayne eternall lyfe.

The. xxi. Chapter.

¶ Afterwarde did Jesus shewe himselfe againe at the sea of Tiberias. And on this wyse shewed he hymselfe. There were together Symon Peter and Thomas (whiche is called Didimus) and Nathanael of Cana in Galile, and the sonnes of Zebedei, and two other of his disciples. The texte.

AND verely, to confirme more and more the faythe of his disciples, Jesus oft times appeared vnto them, and talked with them, sometyme also eate meate in theyr company: lest any suspicion shoulde setle in theyr myndes that it was but a delusion or some ghoste, whiche they had sene, neyther was he therwhiles continuallye, for all that, presente in their company as he was wont before his death, nor so familiarly handled himself among them: nor yet was seen of all menne, because he hadde sayed before that he would appere to his and not to the world, nor to his neyther, but euen when he list. For nowe immortalitie shewed a certaine semblaunce full of maiestie, that was to be had in reuerence, to thentent that their fayth beyng full stayed and establyshed, he might withdrawe from them altogether the sight of the body, and spirituallye to be now amongst his. And so now therefore he appered and shewed himselfe againe to his disciples, at ꝑ depe lake called Tyberias. And he presented himselfe vnto them on this wyse. The disciples, which before ꝑ tyme kept theselues secrete in Hierusalem, to be in sauetie out of the Pharisees daunger, repayred againe into Galile, & there was a good sorte of the together, euen no fewer thā Symon Peter and Thomas, called Didimus, also Nathanael of Cana a citie of Galile, where Jesus turned water into wine. And besides these, ꝑ two sonnes of Zebedei John & James ꝑ greater, & with these was two other disciples.

¶ Symon Peter saieth vnto them: I wyll go a fishyng. They saye vnto him: We also wyl go with the. They went theyr waye, and entred into a shippe immediatlye, and that night caught they nothing. But when the morning was nowe come, Jesus stoode on the shore, neuertheles the disciples knewe not that it was Jesus. Jesus sayeth vnto them: Children haue ye any meate? They answered him: no. And he saieth vnto them: Cast out the net on the right hande, and ye shal fynde. The texte.

Nowe than, because they lacked theyr Lordes helpe, by whom they were woonte to be fedde of the mere fre bounteousnes of frendes, Peter wente in hande againe with his olde facultie, to get his liuinge with his owne handes: lest he should be burdenoule to any man, or to be fed by any others liberalitie in idelnesse. For then he might not preache, and he thoughte it was no right that he whiche serued not the ghospell, should liue of the ghospell. Therfore in the twie lyght, because they shoulde haue goen abrode vpon theyr perill in the daye, Peter saieth: I go a fishyng. The reste than saied vnto him: We also wyll go a fishing with the. And so goyng foorth a dooyes together warde, they entred into the shippe. And they fished all that night in vayne. For they gate neuer one fishe, to the intente that waye shoulde be made for a miracle, and therwith as in a misterie to be signified, that the labour of an Euangelist is all in vayne, vnles Christe do prosper the mannes endeuour.

But now when it waxed daye, Jesus stoode on the shore, but the disciples knewe not it was he, partely for the distaunce that was betwene him & them, and partely because it was scant daye: also partely because the Lorde wolde not furthwith be knowen. Therfore Jesus spake vnto them from the shore, saying: Children haue ye any meate? They than, forasmuche as they knewe not the Lorde by his voyce, but supposed him to be some other manne whiche came to the sea to bye fysshe, made answere that they had none: that they could selle him, because they had taken nothing. Jesus than to declare litle and litle who he was, sayed vnto them: Caste out the nette on the righte syde of the shyppe, and ye shall fynde that ye coulde not hytherto.

The texte. They caste out their nette, and anon they were not able to drawe it, for the multitude of fishes. Then sayed the disciple whom Jesus loued, vnto Peter: it is the Lord. Whē Simon Peter heard þ it was the Lord, he gyrded his coate vnto him (for he was naked,) and sprang into the sea. The other disciples came by shyppe, for they were not farre from lande, but as it were two hundred cubites, and they drewe the nette with fishes.

They dyd as he had them, for through wetynesse of their vaine labour, and of a great desire to take some fysshe, they conceiued some hope: by-and-by so great a multitude of fysshes was taken, that the net was laden withall, and coulde vnneth be drawen vp to the boate: And wete ye well, this was euen a resemblaunce of the multitude of men, whiche afterwarde by the preachynge of the apostles, should be brought and ioyned to the churche out of the whole world of what language or countrey soeuer they were. By the nouelte of the thing, that disciple whome Jesus loued, was moued to be more attentyfe and to marke the thing, and so knewe Jesus. And incontinently aduertysed Peter (who was altogether busye about drawynge vp the nette) that it was the Lorde, whiche standyng on the shore commaunded to loose and caste oute the nette. Peter, beyng alway one man and lyke himselfe, did forget both the nette and the fishe, and toke his shyrte (for before he was naked) and coulde not abyde but sprang into the sea, and so came he first of all to the Lord. The other disciples came to him by shyp, for they were not very farre of the shore, but as it were two hundred cubites, and they altogetherward drewe the nette full and laden with fysshe.

The texte. Assone as they were come to lande, they sawe hotte coales and fishe layde theron, and breade. Jesus sayeth vnto them: bryng of the fysshe whiche ye haue now caught. Symon Peter went vp and drewe the nette to lande full of great fyshes: an hundred and thre and fyftie. And for all there were so many yet was not the nette broken.

And when they wer come to lande, they sawe vpon the bancke hotte coales and fisshe layed theron, and breade withall. Therfore Jesus commaunded the also to bryng of their fysshes whiche they now caught. Than Peter returned againe to the shippe, and drewe the nette to land full of great fishes: in noumbre an hundred and thre and fyftie. This also made it seme the greater a mpracle, that when there was so great a multitude and that of great fishes, yet was not the nette broken in sundre with the weight therof. The thynge dyd represent the humble churche, and as to the worlde weake and narrowe, yet suche a thing as shall embrace all the nacions of the worlde, the Lorde Jesus beyng the head and chefe gouernour therof.

The texte. Jesus saieth vnto them: come and dyne. And none of the disciples durste aske hym: what art thou? for they knewe that it was the Lord. Jesus than came, and tooke breade and gaue them, & fysshe lykewyse. This is now the third time that Jesus appered to his disciples, after þ he was rayssed againe fro death. So whē they had dyned, Jesus saieth vnto vnto Symon Peter: Symon Joanna louest thou me more than these? He sayed vnto hym: Yea Lord, thou knowest that I loue thee. He sayeth vnto hym: Fede my lambes.

Furthermore, to shewe a more certeintie that he was verye manne and no ghoste, he therfore approuyng the veritie of his body by beyng sene with mens eyes, heard with their eares, and handled with handes, would also eate meate with them. He therfore muited his disciples to the dyner which was there ready for the. The disciples sate downe, but all whucht and spake no wordes: for the maiestie of the immortall bodye toke from them their accustomed boldnes. In dede they knewe hym to be the Lorde, but no whe appeared after a more high and glorious sorte, as one of great nobleneſſe and excellencie. Therfore none durste aske hym, who arte thou? and yet of the very thynge it selfe, they knewe hym to be the Lorde, although the shewe and semblaunce of his bodye was chaūged. Jesus therfore came to the feast, and as his maner was, brake bread with his owne handes, and gaue it to them, and fishe likewise: by example and dede teaching his, whome he had specially chosen to bee shepeherdes of the churche, to fede his euangelicall flocke with holy doctrine. But yet suche as hymselfe had taught them. And this is now the thirde time that Jesus appeared (certayne spaces betwene) to his disciples, for he was not in theyr company continually. After dyner was done, the lorde Jesus, in maner declaryng by worde of mouthe the thyng, whiche in his facte he signified, committed his shepe to Peter that he should fede the: but he first thrise required loue of him, to the entent he mighte powre into the mindes of his disciples, that no man is a fitte shepeherde of an euangelicall flocke, excepte he whiche beareth suche loue towardes them that he is put in truste withall to kepe, as Christe shewed himselfe to haue towardes his, for whom he bestowed his lyfe. And he specially spake to Peter, bitterly to put away the remembraunce of his denying Christ, and to notifie that he should haue the hiest and chiefe place in the ministerie of the gospel, that did passe other in excellency of charitie towardes the flocke of the Lorde. And therfore, by hym, whom Jesus knewe to be of a more feruente minde then the reste, he would expresse to all the Apostles and their successours, a proufe of a true and a perfite shepherde. And in dede Peter is wount at other tymes also to be as a mouthe of the Apostles, and by hym the Lorde woulde haue it knowen and to be heard what the other also would openly confesse: For because, by the expressed voice of this man, the publique confession of the whole churche dyd but a late tyme before, deserue a promise of the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen. And in the same wyse also, he than woulde that by this mannes voyce, open confession should be made of moste hye charitable loue towardes hym: to the entente that by this one man, the reste shoulde knowe what maner of men ought to be curates of the lordes flocke. Simon Joanna, sayeth Jesus, louest thou me more than these? The Lorde dyd not aske these thinges as ignorannte that he was muche loued of Peter, but he woulde haue inwardelye fastened in the hertes of his disciples, that moste hye charitie towardes Jesus, is nedefull to him that shoulde take cure of the Lordes flocke, for the whiche the Lorde himselfe suffered death vpon the crosse.

Jesus than came and toke breade &c.

But Peter nowe being come to more circumspection than he was wount to be of, made no aunswere concernyng howe muche the other loued the lord, because he knewe not fully other menns mindes: for his owne parte and conſcience, sciance, he maketh answere, whereof he is bolde to make the Lorde hymselfe witnesse. Howe muche any other loueth thee, (sayeth he) I knowe not: Lorde I loue thee, and thou askest me, that knowest I doe loue thee. Thou that knowest the secretes of mennes myndes, art not ignozaunte that I loue thee. Than sayeth Jesus: If thou louest me as thou openly sayest, fede my lambes whiche I loue moste dearely, and foz whom I haue spente my lyfe: and shewe thy selfe suche towardes them, as I haue shewed my self towardes you. This shall be a pzoufe of a perfite loue towardes me.

The texte. He sayeth to hym agayne the seconde tyme: Symon Joanna, louest thou me? He sayeth vnto hym: Yea Lorde, thou knowest that I loue thee. He sayeth vnto hym: Fede my shepe. He sayeth vnto hym the thyrde tyme: Symon Joanna, louest thou me? and he sayed vnto hym: Lorde, thou knowest all thyng, thou knowest that I loue thee. Jesus sayeth vnto hym: Fede my shepe.

The Lorde Jesus asketh hym agayne euen with like many wordes: Simon Joanna, louest thou me? Peter aunswereth him euen with lyke noumbre of wordes: Lorde I loue thee. Thy selfe knowest that I loue thee. Than sayeth Jesus agayne: if thou louest me in dede, fede my shepe, whyche are deare to me. The lorde asked Peter the thyrde tyme: Symon Joanna, louest thou me? The lordes asking so often repeted, caste Peter in a scruple and in a sozowe. Foz although he knewe in his owne conscience, that he loued the Lord exceadyngly, yet because he had thryse denyed the Lorde after he had so stoutely promysed the contrary, it caused hym also to distruste hymselfe. Foz Peters fall into the denial of his lorde, turned hym to good, and furthered his saluacion, whiche falle taughte hym humble sobziete, and caused hym to learne a newe lesson, that is, not to put to muche truste and affiaunce in hymselfe, suche a pestilence to euangelicall godlynesse, as none canne be moze pernicious and deadely then it. Therfoze he aunswereth sincerely of trueth, but timerously and very lowlye withall, and where befoze he trusted to hymselfe, he now putteth all his affiaunce in hym, to whom onely truste and affiaunce oughte to be geuen, saying: Lord, why asketh thou me so often, seing thou knowest all thyng? Thy self knowest that I loue thee. Than sayed Jesus: therfoze fede my shepe, and vpon them declare howe muche thou settest by me.

Thou shalte take an exaumple of a good shepeherde of me. I haue spente my lyfe foz my shepe, thou lykewyse shalte playe the faythfull shepeherde of my shepe, euen to the losse of lyfe and heade. The shepe be myne whom I haue redemed with my bloud, & now returning againe to my father, I cõmit & betake them to thy kedyng. Thou therfoze shalt playe the shepeherde & not the lozde, & thou shalt fede to saue, & not kyll oz pull of theyr skyn to their vtter vndoyng. Yf I be thyse deare and welbeloued of the, they shal be dearely beloued of the, whom I loue exceding well. The lord Jesus would haue these thinges wyth so greate diligence powred into the myndes of his disciples, because he knewe there would rise men, that should, not foz the loue of Jesus, but foz theyr own commodities sake, take cure of christen people, oz rather inuade and with violence take cure vpon hande: which maner of persons woulde in stede of shepeherdes, playe the tyrauntes, and robbe altogether. Moreouer the lorde didde vouchesafe to declare also what the thre tymes repeted confession of loue, did meane. He that foz the healthe and saftie of the lordes flocke, contemneth his ryches, carith not foz worldlye honoure, and neglecteth his owne affections, he weth greate lykelyhoode, of trueth, that he hath a pure sincere loue: but he

that for sauyng the flocke, letteth not to auenture his lyfe, that manne (ye wote well) hath (so doyng) geuen a most sure lesson of perfite loue and charitie.

Verely, verely, I saye vnto thee, when thou wast young, thou gyrdedst thy selfe, and walkedst whyther thou wouldest: but when thou arte olde, thou shalt stretche forth thy handes, and an other shall gyrde thee, and leade thee whyther thou wouldest not. That spake he signifying by what death he should glorifie god. The texte.

The Lorde nowe willyng somewhat to open that Peter in tyme to come, should do that thyng, sayed: Peter, I do well assure thee therof, thou shalt whe tyme is, perfourme and accomplishe the thyng whiche thou nowe sayest and cõfessest. For truely it is no delicate profession. For when thou wast young, and in bodily strength moze able to suffre laboziouse and grieuouse thynges, thou waste moze dayntely occupied and lued moze at ease. For thou vngirdedst or gyrdedst thy selfe at thyne owne will and pleasure, and walkedst at libertie whither thou wouldest. But when thou arte olde and than in bodily strengthe moze weaker, thou shalt be moze hardely entreated, thou than beyng in hearte and will moze strong. For thou shalt stretche furthe thy handes, and another shall gyrde thee, and leade thee whither thou wouldest not. By this riddle or parable, Iesus signified by what kynde of death Peter shoulde once glorifie God. For, because, beyng very aged, he was led to the crosse, whiche though he suffred gladlye for the excellente loue that he bare towardes his Lorde, yet the weakenesse of mannes nature lothed it.

Then when he had spoken this, he sayeth vnto hym: Folowe me. Peter turned about and sawe the disciple whom Iesus loued, folowyng, (whiche also leaned on his breast at supper, and sayed: Lorde, whiche is he that betrayeth thee?) When peter therfore sawe hym, he sayeth to Iesus: Lorde, what shall he here do? Iesus sayeth vnto hym: If I will haue hym to tarye tyll I come, what is that to thee? folowe thou me. Then went this saying abrode among the brethren, that the disciple should not dye. Yet Iesus sayed not vnto hym, he shal not dye, but yf I will that he tary till I come, what is that to thee? The texte.

When Iesus had sayed thus, he begunne to walke, and sayed to Peter, folowe me: so once agayne prouokyng and inuityng hym to the folowyng of his charitie and death: When Peter turned and loked aboute hym, he seeth euen that disciple whome Iesus loued, and that leaned on the Lordes breast at his laste supper, whilest he asked of him who should betraye hym. For as muche as Peter did entierly loue this disciple, and knewe that he was alwaye better beloued of the lord then the rest, and than sawe the same vnbidden folow, nerte vnto Peter, Peter asked the lorde what should become of that mã. For he now knewe already of his owne death, and he desyreth to knowe whether that he shoulde haue this man a companion to dye with hym. Folowe whon me.

For he thoughte that to be a glorioulse thing vnto hym, and a great token of the Lordes loue towardes hym, that he might dye after the exaumple of Iesus. But Iesus to correct this vnnecessarie care that Peter hadde of an other mannes death, sayed: If I will haue hym tary tyll I come, what is that to thee? He is myne, and after mine aduise will I ordeyne and determyne for hym that shalbe for the beste. Care and prepare thou for that whiche appertayneth to thy selfe, that is to saye, that thou folowe me. And than vpon the occasion of this saying, there arose a bruite among the disciples that Iesus his welbeloued disciple shoulde dye no violent death, but should liue styll vntyll the Lord shall come agayne to iudge the quicke and the deade, (which they all thought than should be sone after.) Albeit the Lorde did not saye, he shall science, he maketh answere, whereof he is bolde to make the Lorde himselfe witnesse. Howe muche any other loueth thee, (sayeth he) I knowe not: Lorde I loue thee, and thou askest me, that knowest I doe loue thee. Thou that knowest the secretes of mennes myndes, art not ignozaunte that I loue thee. This shall be a pzoufe of a perfite loue towardes me.

The texte. De sayeth to hym agayne the seconde tyme: Symoth Joanna, louest thou me? He sayeth vnto hym: Yea Lorde, thou knowest that I loue thee. He sayeth vnto hym: Feede my shepe. He sayeth vnto hym the thyrde tyme: Symon Joanna, louest thou me? and he sayed vnto hym: Lorde, thou knowest all thyng, thou knowest that I loue thee. Jesus sayeth vnto him: Feede my shepe.

The Lorde Jesus asketh hym agayne euen with like many wordes: Simon Joanna, louest thou me? Peter answereth him euen with lyke noumbre of wordes: Lorde I loue thee. Thy selfe knowest that I loue thee. Than sayeth Jesus agayne: if thou louest mein dede, feede my shepe, whyche are deare to me. The lorde asked Peter the thyrde tyme: Symon Joanna, louest thou me? The lordes asking so often repeted, caste Peter in a scruple and in a sozowe. Foz although he knewe in his owne conscience, that he loued the Lord exceadyngly, yet because he had thryse denyed the Lorde after he had so stoutely pzomysed the contrary, it caused hym also to distruste hymselfe. Thy self knowest that I loue thee. Than sayed Jesus: therfoze feede my shepe, and vpon them declare howe muche thou settest by me.

Thou shalte take an exaumple of a good shepeherde of me. I haue spente my lyfe foz my shepe, thou lyke wyse shalte playe the faythfull shepeherde of my shepe, euen to the losse of lyfe and heade. Albeit the Lorde did not saye, he shall not dye, but to make dull, abate, and repulse Peters curiositie, and ouermuche diligence, he denied it to pertayne vnto hym, though hys will and pleasure had been, that the man shoulde styll lyue vnto his laste cummyng.

The texte. Thesame disciple is he, whiche testifieth of these thynges, and wrote thesame thynges. And we knowe that hys testimony is true. There are also many other thynges whiche Iesus did, the whiche yf they shoulde be written euery one, I suppose the world coulde not conteine the bookes that shoulde be written.

And in dede this is thatsame disciple that witnesseth these thynges thus to bee dooen, and that wrote thesame, to the entente they maye more truely, and more farre abrode bee scattered and dispersed to the knowledge of all folke. And we haue knowen that his testimonie is true. For he wrote not other mennes hearynges, but at whiche hymselfe was presente. Nor he hath not made mencion of all the thinges whiche Iesus sayed and did. For if a manne shoulde goe about to tell them, euery thyng by it selfe, an vnmeasurable sorte of bokes shoulde bee made therof. But so muche is written as sufficeth to the obteynyng of saluacion. Therfore the rest is, that beleuyng these, and stickyng to the steppes and wayes of Iesus, we labour diligently to get the rewarde of immortall lyfe.

Thus endeth the Paraphrase vpon the Ghospell of S. John.

To the moste uertuous Ladie

Quene Kateryne late wyfe to Kyng Henry the eyght of moste famous memoyre deceassed, Nycolas Udall your graces most humble oratour, and seruaunt, wysheth perpetuall felicitee and ioye in Jesus Christ our lorde.

For as much as nothyng doeth with lyke spede or with better effecte eyther open to the worlde or engraue in mennes heartes the knowelage of Goddes commaundementes, and the rules of true christian doctrine, then deuout and godly tractates for the expoundyng and declaryng of holy scrypture: howe happie and blyssed are we, and howe greatly bounde to thanke God, that in these our tymes there daylye cum foorth so many and the same so fruictfull and Godly woorkes in our owne toung, to the ghostely coumfort and edifyeng of all deuout christian readers in the true fayeth and relygyon. For where in tymes past the studyous wyters of bookes wer enforced with much highe suite and seruice to procure the fauoure and good wyll of prynces or other estates, to whome to dedicate such woorkes as they wrote, to thentent that vnder the name and protection of such noble personages the sayd woorkes might be the better habled to the readers, and the better accepted of the people: nowe doe kynges, Quenes, prynces, and other piers (especyally here in Englaunde) of their owne mere motions, and good zele, not only with their prepensle fauour, and with their benefycyall ayde, coumforte, and lyberalitee, helpe forewarde the good endeuour and sedulytee of studious wyters, myndyng by their godly monumentes to edifie the feythfull congregacion: but also are dylygent and peynefull, bothe to put to their owne handes to the endictyng and pennyng of many holsome tractates for that purpose, yea and further by their exaumple and prouocacion to set other in hande with wryting or translatyng, to the fructefull exercise of the learned, to the holsome instruccion of Englysshe readers, and to the effectuall edifying of the simple ignoraunt multitude, if the same can bee content for their selle helthe to gyue eare and myndе thereto. And emong this sorte of publique benefactours, your excellent highnesse, Quene Katerynе, deserueth no lesse then next after our soueraygne lorde the kynges maiestee, whoe euen nowe already at the fyrst entreaunce of this his moste noble reigne, and within the peres of tender minoritee, doth with the aduice and consent of the moste prudent and the same his moste dere vncle Edwarde duke of Somersette, aswell of his moste royall persone in the tyme of his mynoritee gouernoure, as also of all hys Maiestees realmes, dominyons, and subiectes protector, together with the assent and consent of the other his moste honourable, moste trusty, and moste feythfull Counsaillours, moste forewardly, moste earnestly, and with all possible diligence labour daye and nyght as well by moste holsō lawes, as also by Omelyes of moste pure doctryne, and by true preachers, to reforme abuses, to sowe abrode the woorde of God, and to plante true relygyon in all partes of his realmes and dominyons, poure hyghnesse (I saye) rect vnto these twoe, deserueth no lesse then to be estemed and called the chiefe patronelle: not onely for diuers moste godly Psalmes and meditations of your owne penning and setting forthe: but also for procuring thys present worke of Erasmus Paraphrases to be translated to the vse of the vnlearned multytude, whiche can go no further then the vnderstanding or readyng of Englythe. For in this Paraphrase of Erasmus is conteined in maner a whole librarie of deuout & catholyke expositours vpon the whole new testamente, in which new testament is conteyned the plenteous richelle & most precious treasoures of Christes ghospell, that is, of the glad newes of Goddes fauour and mercy towardes mankynd. Which fauour and mercy of God whosoeuer doth faithfully & synceretly embrace, cannot but fauour and further the setting forth of scripture in the vulgare language, that al folkes maye knowe it, and also of any other godly traictises whereby that same generall benehyte of God towardes mankynde, maye the more clerelye and certainly be perceiued. And to this effecte for almuche as Deliderius Erasmus of Roterodam dooth especially directe al well these his Paraphrases vpon the newe testament, as also all other his right christian wrytynges, and that with as much indifferencie as is possible to be: I cannot but iudge, that whoso are prompte and hastly condemners of Erasmus, or eagre aduersaries vnto his doctrine: do vnder the name and colour of Erasmus rather vtter their stomake & hatred againste Goddes woord and the grace of the ghospell, which Erasmus for his parte moste diligently and moste simply laboureth to bryng to lyght. His doctryne (wyll some vnequall iudges saye) is scarcely sincere. If there shall no more vnsyncerytee of doctrine appere in the wrytynges of them that so wyll say, then the comon consent of the christian world doeth fynde and iudge in Erasmus: I doubte not but theyr woorkes shalbe of all good people approued, desyred, embraced and folowed. Erasmus (wyl some such headie persones say) doth somewhere erre. It maye so be for almuch as a man he is, and so estemeth hymselfe, and woulde his woorkes none other wyse to be reade or accepted then the wrytynges of other mortall men. But in case he shoulde in some place faie now & then a worde to much or to litel, or putte a wurde word for a more apte terme, or if he shoulde in some place stoumble or swarue (whiche pointe of humayne frayltee the best doctours that wrote sence the apostles tyme hathe not escaped), nor Erasmus so standeth in his owne wylfull opynion, but that beeyng found and troed a faulte, he woulde haue been as readye to retracte it, as euer any other godly & catholike wryter hath ben: yet were one lytle tryppe (after my poore iudgement) emong so many notable good woorkes for the enterpretacion of scripture, and for the helpe of the symple, rather to bee borne withall, then so many good thinges to be either reiected or kept away from the hungry christian readers. It is a colde charitee that can beare with nothyng: and an eagre malice it is, that for a trifle or a matier of nothyng woulde haue the ignorannt multitude to lacke so much good edifying as may be taken of Erasmus, al well in all hys other ryght deuoute and catholyke woorkes, as also moste specyally in these hys paraphrases, in which he laboureth so to enlarge the processe and tenour of the texte, as the sense therof may bothe euedentlye be gathered, & may well hange together. Erasmus therfore lyke as he hathe by a paraphrasticall discourse playnly sette forth the ghospelles of the fower Euangelistes afore: so dooeth he now here expoune the seconde parte of Lukes ghospel, entitled Actes of the Apostles, whiche woorke Athanasius (at lesse wyse if it were

Athanasius

Jehannius in dede, that wrote the litle traictise entitled of the bokes of bothe the olde and the newe testament.&c.) testifieth, that Luke wrote out of Peters mouthe, & that Peter endicted vnto Luke what and how he should wryte the, as Jherome endicted to ꝑ same Luke whan he wrote his ghospell. Whereof (as Erasmus in the preface to his paraphrase vpō Lukes ghospel recordeth) it is gathered and thought, that the sayde Actes wer wryten in Rome. But wherfoeuer they were wryten, certes the worke was no lesse expediente & necessarie to be written ne the paraphrase vpon the same any thyng lesse requisite to bee translated into Englysh, then the reste of the newe testament: firste for that it is a plain historical narracion & a piece of the veray ghospel, in that it declareth aswell the ascencion of Christe from ꝑrthe vp into heauen, as also hys sendyng downe of the holy ghoste from his heauenly father togeither with the spryngyng vp of the primatiue churche, & the fourme and ordre of preachyng that the Apostles than firste begonne with: secondely because it was (as Erasmus hymselfe testifieth) the last parte that he did of all the whole paraphrases vpon the testament, and by reason thereof (as I iudge) the moste absolute piece of worke and best doone of the reste, by reason of his long exercise afore in this kynde of writing: and thyrdely because this piece of the new testament is no lesse profitable for the publisshyng and furtheraunce of the ghospel, then Luke dyd deuise and entende it, ne to the poore younglynges in Christes discipline any thyng lesse auaillable. For here may we learne the beginninges of Christes churche, by whome and by what manier persones the feythe of Christe firste sprong vp, howe it proceded and grewe, howe it was persecuted, and how by persecucyon it wexed stronger & stronger. For as the Paulme tree the more weight and burde is layed vpon it, the more it ariseth and shooteth vpryght: so the ghospel the more persecucion that was inflycted vnto it, and the more rigour, wrong, reproche, cheynes, and aduersytee that was mynistred vnto it, the more it grewe, ꝑ more it prospered, the better it wente forewarde, and the more it flourysshed. In the Actes is to be reade by what meanes and practises of humayne polycy the enemyes of Christes bloude and ghospell wrastled to suppresse the glorye of his crosse, & howe the more that the wysedō of the world thought to euacuate the fruicte of Christes deathe and passion, the more dyd the humylytee of preachyng the Crosse, worke in the hartes of ꝑ simple to contemne not onely the pleasures and flattery of the worlde, but also the persecucion & tyranny therof, so that dayly encreased in euery place where the ghospell was preached, thousandes vpō thousandes to augmente ꝑ feythfull congregation. The Actes therefore were no lesse necessary to be translated then the rest of the paraphrases, which Actes I haue by occasiō of adding, digesting, and sorting the texte with the paraphrase throughly perused, and conferryng the same with the Latine I haue here and there dooen my good will and diligence to make the Englysh aunswerable to the Latyne booke, at leastwyse in sentences by the same occasion I did also with Matthewe. In John I haue in maner dooen nothing at all sauing only placed the texte, and diuided the paraphrase, because I knew the translatours therof, with whose requysite doonynges I myght not without the cryme of great arrogancie and presumpcion be busy to entremedle. Moste humbly therfore beseching your highnesse moste gracious Ladie, in good parte to take my good zele and diligence, and in case any thyng shall not sufficyently answere your myndē or de-ſyre, the ſame to impute rather to the lacke of facultee and knowlage, then to any default of good wil in me: I ſhal here without any further circũſtaunce of wooꝛdes, commend and leue this whole woꝛke to the diligent readyng and folowyng of all the deuout Engliſhe congregacyon: and wyth moſte hertye prayer beſeche almyghty God long yeres to preſerue and cõtynewe the proſperous eſtate of your highneſſe, to thende that by your good help and meanes the deuout people that are willing and forewarde to learne and to liue Chriſtianlye, maye re-ceiue many lyke godly woꝛkes and fruict-ful tractiſes, to theyr continuall ghoſt-ly profite, coumfoꝛt, and edifying in the ſame our Loꝛde Jeſus Chriſte, to whome with the father, and with the holy ghoſte be al laude, honour, and glory, both in heauen and yearth for euer and euer. Amen.

The Actes of the Apostles.

The.i.Chapter.

In the former treatise(deare Theophilus) we haue spoken of all that Jesus began to do, and teache, vntyll the daye in which he was taken vp, after that he, through the holy ghost, had geuen commaundementes vnto the Apostles, whom he had chosen: to whome also he shewed himselfe alyue after his passion, and that by many tokens(appering vnto them fourty dayes, & speakyng vnto them of the kyngdome of God) and gathered them togeyther and commaunded them, that they should not departe from Hierusalem: but to wayte for ỹ promise of the father wherof((saieth he) ye haue heard of me. For Johu truly baptised w̄ water, but ye shalbe baptised with the holy ghost after these fewe daies. The texte.

NOwe haue I accomplished thone halfe of my promyse, deare frēde Theophilus, forasmuche as I cōprised in my former treatise, ỹ life of Jesus Christ, more groundly rehersyng the history, then other ỹ write therof, ỹ is to wete euen frō the time that John Baptist, which was the forerunner of the Lorde, was conceaued, because ỹ in this same rehearsal, certaine prophecies were also disclosed, affirmig by expressed wordes of promise, ỹ Messias should some after come. This done, sum thinges haue I rehearsed more at large which of the other writers were lefte vntouched, as of Christes conception of hys byrthe, of his circumcision, and of the purificacyon of Mary, somwhat also I touched of his godly towardnes wherof he shewed a proufe & token being but xii. yeres olde. These thinges thought I for that cause worthy to be recited, ỹ by many tokens it myght bee euident, that this was he, whome the prophecies had notablye spoken of, and that euen the tendet youthe of Jesus lacked not wytnesse of good menne, and of those whiche were inspired with the holy gost. And thoughe it be not to be doubted but ỹ Jesus whole trade of lyfe, was an excellent example of perfecte holynesse, yet those thynges omitted whiche were doone in the meane space, we passed ouer vntyll that tyme, that John by his preachyng and baptisyng, began to shew hymselfe the forerunner of Christ, forasmuche as oure lorde Jesus began from that tyme forwarde, chiefly to be occupied aboute the healthe of mannes soule, accordyngly as it was conteyned in the figures and darke sayinges of Moyses lawe, and in the foreshewinges of the prophetes. All whiche his busye endeuour, resteth in these two poyntes: in dedes, that is as muche to saye, as in worke wyne of myracles, suffering paines of the crosse, and in resurrection, wherein he lefte none of al those thinges vndoen, that either by shadowes of the lawe wer signified, or spoken of before by the prophetes: and in wordes, by meane whereof he taught a newe kynde of philosophie, and a ioyfull, so that we might bothe learne of him, and take example to liue a godly lyfe. All these thynges haue I treated of in order, euen vnto that daye, that he was receiued into heauen from whence he came, after he had arisen from death to lyfe, and commaū ded his .xii. Apostles, and other his disciples to the numbre of thyrtie or .x. r. whōe he had specially chosen, to thende that they, whan they had receiued the holy ghost (whom he euen than breathyng in the very face of them endued them with, and afterward sente the same from heauen more aboundauntly,) shoulde go throughe all the worlde, and preache this ghospell, not to the Jewes onely, but vnto all maner nacions of the worlde. And fyrst of all it was expedient, that they by whom he had purposed to bryng all menne in beleefe of his wonderfull actes: shoulde be throughly confyrmed in fayth themselues. The eyghte poynt among the rest, was this, that all menne shoulde be fully perswaded, that Iesus was in verye dede deade, and that he veraylye arose from death to lyfe the thyrde daye, not with a phantasticall body, but with the verye same, beeing now immortall, whiche he before tyme had carryed on yearthe, subiecte to deathe, and whiche had been layed downe of lyfe, in the graue.

To whome also he shewed himself alyue after hys passion.

For this cause thought he it not sufficient, once onely to shewe hym selfe to his disciples, after he had arisen from deathe to lyfe, but often tymes appered he to them, not lyke as ghostes are wonte to appere, but in sundrywyse declaryng by euident tokens to them, that he had taken vnto him his liuely bodye agayne: fowerty dayes taryed he with them on yearth, for the same cause purposely, yet of all this tyme would not he be seene of any, but of his owne disciples. And not onely his pleasure was to be seene of them, hearde, and felte, but also familiarely he eate and dranke with them, which is the moste euident token that maye be of a lyuely body. And in the meane space, he often commoned with them of the kyngdome of god, puttyng them in mynd of those thynges, whiche he had done and taught before his deathe, that they myght finally perceyue, that euery thyng was comme to passe, whiche he sayed shoulde comme, warning them farder, what they from thence forthe shoulde eyther doe, or awayte for. For thoughe he had already geuen them authorytee to preache the ghospell, yet forbade he them, they shoulde not hastely set vpon the enterpryse of so weightie a matter, and that they shoulde not departe from Hierusalem, but that they assembled there, and together applying themselues eache with other to fasting, geuing laudes to God, and praying, should awayte for the commig of the holy ghoste, whome he before his death, had promysed that hys father should sende, to bee an other comfortour to them. I (sayed he) promysed with myne owne mouthe, and doubte not ye but my father will see the same vnfeignedly performed, that I haue promysed you in his name. For his will and myne bee bothe one. Thentreprysle that ye shall take in hande, is of heuen, and of no yearthely mannes inuencyon: ye shall not teache carnall thynges, as the Pharisees haue doen hitherto, but ghostely thynges: and greate trouble shal ye haue for preachyng of my ghospell. Wherefore it is necessarye that ye bee strēgthed with power from heauē, that ye may be hable to susteyne so chargefull an entreprysle, that shall not be brought to passe by mannes policie, but by helpe of the holy ghoste.

And commaunded them, that they shoulde not departe from Hierusalem. &c.

For Iohn truly baptised with water.

For those thynges that haue been hitherto done, are but as rules, instructions & principles for young beginners, in respecte of setting forward ỹ gospell. As that Iohn Baptyzed with water, but the holy ghoste gaue he not, for it passeth mannes power to geue hym, and nothing els preached he, but ỹ man should repent, and that the kyngdome of heauen was at hand.

Nowe muste ye haue stronger mayntenaunce to sette forthe the lyuelye doctryne of the ghospell, and to beare of the assaultes of the worlde, whiche shall stryue agaynste it. To bryng that about it is not sufficient that ye be voyde of synne, but ye haue nede of a newe spirite to the settyng forth of this newe kinde of lerning, a plenteous spirite, ỹ shal aboūdantly assist you, an heuenly spirite, a spirit lyke fier: in whō ye shal be chrystened within fewe daies.

This is the baptisme, ỹ John could not geue, but prophecied that I should geue it: For thus sayde he, in bearyng wytnesse of me: he shall christen you (sayed he) with the holy ghoste and fyer. In tymes past also god endewed hys Prophetes, and other holy men, with his spirite. And I haue bzethed my holy spirite on you. It is euen the veray same spirite, but nowe shall he most plenteously be powred ouer all the whole worlde, and shall renewe all thynges. Agaynst his cummyng, make your selues ready with fastyng and prayer, but specially with full truste and confydence, that ye maye be fytte instrumentes for hym to spreade abzode his heauenly power.

Whan they therefore were cum together, they asked of him, sayng: Lorde, wilte thou at this time, restore agayne the kyngdome of Israell? And he sayed vnto them: It is not for you to know the tymes, or the seasons, which the father hath put in his own power: but ye shall receyue power after that the holy ghost is cum vpon you. And ye shalbe witnesses vnto me, not onely in Hierusalē, but also in all Iewry, & in Samaria & euen vnto the worldes ende. The texte.

After Iesus had spoken these wordes vnto his disciples, beyng assembled into one place, because he wouldе haue no variaunce lefte emong theim, at hys departyng (for euen to that houre they had not yet put oute of theyr heades theyr phantasticall dreame, of the kyngdome of Israell, to be aduaunced and enlarged by hym) they enquyred of the Lorde, as he was euen readye streight wayes to departe, whether that as soone as he had sente downe the holy ghost, he wouldе restore his people of Israell to theyr worldelye kyngdome agayne, and whether he wouldе immediatlye appere before the face of the worlde in his maiestie. For they had not yet conceyued what manner a thyng thys ghostely kyngdome shoulde bee. Peter wouldе haue had hym stablyshe a kyngdome whan he was on the hille. The reste also of thapostles, what tyme mencion was made of ryssyng from deathe to lyfe, enquired of hys kyngdome, and nowe ekkones vpon that communicacion whiche they had hearde, of sendyng downe the holy ghoste, they came to remembraunce of a temporall kyngdome. For they trusted that it shoulde cum to passe, that the Iewes shoulde bee rewlers ouer all the world. And in veray dede sure it was to cum, that Israell shoulde reigne, not that fleashly Israell, but he that truelye had deserued this name, that is to saye, he that in dede were strong in God. For Iacob deserued well to haue that name whan he wrastled with thaungell. As longe as the worldly manne trusted to his owne desertes, he was not hable to satisfye the Justice of god. For all the world for sinne was reproued, and subdued vnto punishment. But after that manne began to mystruste his owne workes, and to sticke vnto the promyses of the gospell, he dyd as a man wouldе saye, ouercum the iustice of god, and by force obtayned mercye. This kingdome beyng decayed in euerye place, but specially emong the Iewes, Christe restored through hys gospell. The disciples not vnderstandyng thys, phansied with them selfes that sum good chaunce wouldе cum, whiche shoulde delyuer them from all persecucion of the wycked. But as for that was not to be loked for before the ende of the worlde. Whiche tyme the lorde wouldе not haue theim to knowe, because it was not expediente for them to knowe it. And therfore whan they curyously demaunded it, he put them to silence with this answer: Enquire not of those thynges, whyche are not expediente for you to knowe. Whan they therefore were cū together, they asked of hi, saynge: Lorde. &c.

Onely beleue stedfastly, & doo that ye are commaunded. Ye shalbe but ministers in this matter. Leaue the procedynges herin, & the ende of the same, to my
And he sayd vnto them: It is not for you. &c. heauenly father. It is not therfore your parte to knowe, what yeare, what mo-neth, or what houre, that kingdome of Israel shal cum, which thinges ꝑ folysh Children curiously seke for. As much as my fathers pleasure was, ꝑ you should knowe I haue tolde you, but that time haue I not uttered vnto you, because my father reteineth to himselfe the knowleage therof, to this ende, that ye be diligent in doing your duties. The kingdome of god shal cum finally, wheras both the good & the bad shalbee rewarded accordyng to their deserues, againste whose cummyng must ye bee alwayes ready. Albeit this spirituall kyngdome shall in the meane season also appeare, in setting forthe wherof, god shall vse your helpe, but as for rewardyng you therfore let him alone with that. Wherfore, setteyng aparte your desyre to knowe those matters whiche ye oughte not to know, make redy youre selues to that that is at hand. To the whiche thyng, because ye of your own habilitie are not sufficient, the holy ghoste, accordyng to my promyse, shalbe powred on you from heauen, to augment your strength of mynde, and to bryng into youre remembraunce agayne whatsoeuer I haue heretofore taughte you, and farther to put in your myndes, whatsoeuer thing els it shal behoue you to know. And so shal ye, being taught by his instructiō, and strengthed wyth hys ayde, beare witnesse of me, fyrste at Hierusalem ac-cordyng to the saying of the prophete, out of Syon shall the lawe procede, and the word of the lord out of Hierusalem: and sone after, throughout all Jewry, nerte throughout Samaria, which is nygh adioyning to Jewry, and fynally through al cuntreys in the world, where euer any dwelling of man is. For I came indifferently for all mens sakes. I died for euery man, and eche man hath the gracious fauour of my gospel proffered him. Hytherto the law hath reigned onely among the Jewes, but my father wyl haue his gospel to reigne, as farre abrode as the worlde is open or wyde.

The texte. And when he had spoken these wordes, while they beheld, he was taken vp on hyghe, & a cloude receyued him vp, out of their sight. And while they loked stedfastly vp toward heauen, behold, two men, as he went, stode by the in white apparell, whiche also sayde:
ye men of Galile, why stande ye gasyng vp into heauen? The same Jesus which is take vp from you into heauen, shall so cum, euen as ye haue sene him go into heauen.

These were the last wordes, that our lorde Jesus spake to all his disciples beyng gathered together into one place at Bethany: After which wordes whe he had blessed them, in syght of them al, caryed he was vp on hygh so long, vntil that a bryght cloude toke the bodie of him cleane out of sight. For tha was it full tyme for them to truste no longer vnto his bodely presence, that they might were the more spiritual, and myght behold Jesus none otherwise than with the yes of their fayth. And for this cause, when Jesus was taken vp on And while they looked stedfastlye vp towarde heauen, behol-de. &c. hygh, the disciples stode with their yes stedfastly fyxed towarde heauen. So hard a thing was it to put them from him, who they loued exceedyngly, though beyng yet but weake. They loked also, whether that any miracle should be shewed them from aboue. Therfore sodenly two messagers from heauen appered in mannes likenesse in white garmentes, the verye fourme caused them not to feare: the bryghtnesse of their garmentes, was conuenient for the messengers of hym, that than hastened to his glory. These two did with frendly wordes asswage

asswage the disciples sorow, that they had conceyued by the departure of their lord, and called them backe againe from theyr gasing vp, which profited them nothyng vnto theyr vocacion, saying: ye men of Galile, why stande ye here looking vp towardes heauen? This same Jesus, whiche is nowe taken from you to heauen, is returned whence he came, as ye haue often heard of hym, that he came from hys father, and that he wouldе, leauyng you in the worlde, returne to his father againe. He is not taken vp into the ayre as Helyas was, but he is receyued into his fathers Palayce, and there shall sitte at hys right hande as partener of the kingdom of heauē. You sawe him going to heauen, with a visible body, and yet immortall. And likewise in tyme to cum shal he returne, that they which would not whiles he was here, knowledge him to bee theyr sauiour, shal than feele hym to bee a iudge. He shal not cum againe to you poorely, but from on high shal he shewe himselfe to the yes of al men with greate glory. But a fewe of you sawe him goyng vp, but euery manne shall see him at his seconde comming. Albeit ye must not loke for him immediatly to returne. He himselfe shewed you that the gospel of god should fyrste be preached throughout the world. Nowe therfore endeuour yourselues rather to do that. For ye were not bidden tarye here, but to continue at Hierusalem, to the ende that after ye haue there receyued the holye ghoste, ye maye luckely take in hande this heauenly businesse.

The texte.

Than returned they vnto Hierusalem from the mount, that is called Oliuete. Whiche is from Hierusalem a sabboth dayes iourney. And when they were cum in, they went vp into a parlour, where abode both Peter and James, & John, & Andrewe, Philip & Thomas, Bartholmew & Mathew, James the sonne of Alpheus, & Symon zelotes, & Judas, the brother of James. These euery one continued with one accorde in prayer & supplicacion with the women and Mary the mother of Jesu and with his brethren: The numbre of the names that were together, were about an hundred and twentye.

The disciples than obeyed these wordes, & departyng from the mount, called Olyuete, whiche our lorde before his death was so delyted with, that berape often he relorted vnto it, and vpon the whiche he last (also) stoode when he was ready to returne vnto heauen, repayred to Hierusalem. That hyl is from Hierusalem as farre as it were a lawful iourney on the Sabboth daye, that is to saye, almoste two myles. From this hill went he to suffer that shamefull death of the crosse, and frō thence lykewyse he went to glorye: within the sight of this hill is Hierusalem situate, and sittyng thereupon had he prophecied with weping teres the distruccion of the same Citie. In this sytie whiche was a murtherer of the prophetes, the lorde willed first the lyght of the gospell to spredе, partely for because it was so forespaid by prophetes, & partely that they should haue no pretexte ne cloke lefte them for their excuse whiche otherwise through theyr owne infidelitie wouldе vtterly haue perished. Thapostles were more desirous to looke vpward to heauen, whither their lorde went before theim, but we for profite of our neyghbour must often come doune to thinges, which bee rather necessary then pleasaunt. When they came to Hierusalem, they went vp into a certaine parlour, where those disciples abode, that were emong the reste, moste kamylyar with Christe: that is to saye, Simon Peter and John, James and Andrewe, Philippe and Thomas, Bartholomewe and Mathewe, James the soonne of Alpheus, and Simon zelotes, whiche in Hebrewe was called Cananeus, and Judas, by surname called Thadeus, or Lebbeus of Lebbeus, brother to James the ponger. Certayne women besydes tarryed in the same parloure, whiche of a deuoute loue folowed the Lorde in hys waie rydyng to Hierusalem, and had serued him with their goodes. Among those was also Marye the mother of Jesus with certayne other hys kynsfolkes, whome the Hebrues called his brethren. Marke me here a litle the beginning of the churche, which was than as young borne. They were delyted with the cyte Hierusalem, whiche signifieth with the Hebrues, the sight of peace. But suche that take this worlde for theyr countrey, dwell not in Hierusalem neither attayne they to the quietnesse of an heuenly lyfe. Neyther they that haue their myndes troubled with worldlye desyres, dwell in Hierusalem. The holy ghoste entreth not into such hertes. They were also desired to be in a parloure, whiche is an high place of the house. For shoppes, or worke houses are wonte to occuppe the lower partes of houses. But he that maketh himselfe readye to bee a dwellyng place for the holy goste must be vtterly voide of all vile cares. This is that holye congregacion, whiche oure Lorde Jesus chose among all others. This parlour was the first house wherin that goodly churche dwelled. Nowe marke what was here done. They spent not the tyme in brabbling or in idle tales, but continued all together of one mynde in holye prayer. Christes church is not there, where is not agrement and concorde. Theyr prayers God accepteth not, whiche loue not brotherly. Neyther is he worthye to be heard, that prayeth not instantly. The holy congregation prayeth al one thyng. Where one prayeth for riches, an other wisheth the deathe of his enemye, an other for long lyfe, another for promotion, an other an other thynge, there is no prayer mete for Christes congregacion. The reste also of the disciples, resorted to the parlour where thapostles wer. And whosoeuer wil be accoumpted Jesus disciple, must flocke to the companye of the churche. Nowe was there of people gathered together aboute the numbre of an hundred and twenty. So fewe of them there were that loued Christe with all their hartes.

The texte. And in those dayes Peter stode vp in the myddes of the disciples, and sayed: Ye men and brethren, thys scripture muste nedes haue ben fulfylled, which the holy ghoste thorough the mouth of David spake before of Judas, which was guide to them that toke Jesus. For he was noumbred with vs, and obtayned felowshyp in this ministeracion. And the same hath nowe possessed a plat of grounde with the rewarde of iniquitie: and when he was hanged, he burste a sonder, and all his bowelles gushed out. And it is knowen vnto all the inhabytours of Jerusalem: insomuche that the same fielde is called in their mother tounge, Acheldama: that is to saye, the bloud fielde.

Here began Peter, as it ful well beseemed a faythfull shepeherd that earnestly wished for thincrease of Christes flocke, to be sumwhat careful that thapostles whome his master Jesus had chosen twelue in noumber, wer dimenished. For by reason of the death of Judas Iscarioth, of twelue there remayned but eleue. Marke me here, o Theophilus, the maner, that the churche than vsed in their consultacyon. A great multitude of disciples beeyng present, Peter representing the person of a bishop stode vp in the middes where the disciples wer sitting: to thintent that sum decree with eache mannes consent, myght be stablished, that should seme conuenient to make vp thapostolike order again. His beginning was of holy scriptures. For thence must a sermon bee taken, that is worthy to be spoken of a man of the church, neither was any thing here with them determined, before they all had made with one assent their prayers. His wordes were these: Brethren, ye ought not to attempt any new matter by mannes

polycie or perſuaſion, but what was ſpoken of long ſythens of the holy goſte by the mouth of Dauid, as touching putting in of ſome man to ſupplye the roume of Judas, muſte nedes bee fulfylled. For this was Dauids prophecye in his Pſalmes, howe it ſhoulde come to paſſe, that Judas in ſwarupnge from his lorde, ſhould make roume for a nother to ſuccede him. For our lorde Jeſus among all other had choſen ſpecially twelue, whome he woulde haue to beare witnes of all that he did and taughte. Ye ſee them all here preſente except Judas Iſcarioth. And him alſo had the lorde choſen into the numbre of the twelue, and woulde that he ſhoulde be partaker of the Apoſtles office. But he had rather chose to caſte of his Lordes company and ours, and to bee a guide vnto vnfull ſouldiers, whiche tooke Jeſus, than to folowe hys capitayne Jeſus, or to bee felowe with thapoſtles. But of his wicked purpoſe came an yuill ende. For couetouſenes ſo blynded him, that he ſolde and betrayed his lorde, whiche was giltleſſe, for thirtie plates of ſiluer. Afterwardes repenting his faulte, broughte he in againe thungodly money, and caſt it before the prieſtes feete, of whome he had been hyred. And hauing more in minde his miſcheuous dede, than the mercye of Jeſus, he wroughte hys owne deathe. For he hanged himſelfe: and as he hong, hys bealye brake, and all his bowelles fell out. But as for that vnlucky money, whiche he had caſt at the prieſtes feete, was by counſell of them contributed to bringe of a fielde, wherein ſtraungers mighte be buryed, becauſe they thought it vnmete, to laye by the price of an innocentes bloude in their treaſurye houſe. This deteſtable ſcrupuloſitie of the prieſtes and Phariſeis, cauſed that bothe Judas wicked acte, and their owne vngodlynneſſe, was the better knowen with all that were dwellynge at Jeruſalem. Inſomuche as that fielde was called among the Jewes Acheldama, whiche is almuche to ſaye, as a field of bloude. So that nowe we ſee it fulfylled in Judas, whiche the holy ghoſt in the.lxbiii. pſalme had prophecyed before ſhould cum vnto the Jewes, that with mortall enuye purſued Chriſte, and woulde not repent being entyced by ſo manye benefites, whiche thalbe accomplyſhed in the other alſo, whan the time cummeth. For this is the prophecie: let theyr dwelling place be ſolytarye, and no manne remayne to dwell in it. Vnhappy Judas hath loſt his roume. In tyme to cum alſo the temple ſhall bee deſtroyed the prieſthod, the Scribes and Phariſeis authoritie, with the citye Hieruſalem ſhall periſhe. The cruell Jewes ſhall be thruſte out, and in their places ſhall true Jewes enter, whiche beeyng circumcyſed in mynde, not in bodye, ſhall knowledge Meſſias whom they crucified. This alſo was ſhewed before by many forprophetes, and we our ſelues haue hearde of our Lorde Jeſus when he prophecied with wepping teares, that theſe thynges ſhoulde betide the citie Jeruſalem.

And whan he was hanged, he burſt aſunder. &c.

For it is written in the boke of Pſalmes: his habitacion be voyde, and no man dwelling therin: and his byſhoppryche let another take. Wherfore of theſe mē, which haue cōpanyed with vs all the tyme that the Lord Jeſus had al his conuerſacion among vs, beginnyng at the baptiſme of Johñ, vnto the ſame daye that he was taken vp frō vs, muſt one be ordayned, to be a witnes with vs of his reſurrection.

The texte.

Wherfore nowe it remayneth for our partes to ſee, that ſome manne bee choſen into Judas rowme. For this is meaned by the prophecie of the hundred and eight pſalme: let an other take his biſchoppryke. For oure office is nothing els, but that in takyng cure of the lordes flocke, we prouide the foode out of

out of the doctrine of the ghospell. He lefte his place, and yet ought not the flocke to bee defeated of theyr shepeherdes, nor that noumbre of them to bee diminished, whiche our lorde did first ordeyne, geuing them a speciall name, that they shoulde bee called Apostles. For his pleasure was to haue them alwayes for witnesses of his woordes and dedes, whome he had for the same purpose continually with him in householde and companye: wherefore one must we chose into Judas rowme, of those that hath been conuersaunte with vs all that while, that our lorde Jesus beyng busied about the health of mans soule, willed vs to be in companye with hym, & styll to goe with hym, whither euer he went (that is to saie, frō the baptisme of John, after which he straightwayes came, vnto that daye that he went vp to heauen,) to thintent he maye be a sufficiēt witnesse with vs of all thinges that our lord taught & wrought, but especially of his resurrection: for he appeared not often vnto all his disciples, but to those onely, whome he had specially chosen.

The texte. And they appointed two, Joseph which is called Barsabas (whose surname was Justus) & Matthias: And whā they prayed, they said: thou Lord which knowest the heartes of al me, shew whether of these two thou hast chosē: þ he may take the roume of this ministracion and apostleship, frō whence Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his owne place. And they gaue forth their lottes, & the lot fell on Matthias and he was counted with the eleuen Apostles.

The multitude approuing these sayinges, appoynted two chosen out of the noumbre of. lxx. disciples, Joseph, otherwise named Barsabas, (whiche also for his vpright liuyng was called Just) and Matthias, þ of these two whiche wer of lyke godlines, he whom the cumpanie liked better of the twain, should take vpon him thoffice of an apostle. But they mystrusting their owne iudgementes, prayed to god with one voyce, saying: Sen that iudge of thynges that they see and heare, may be deceiued, and fayle in their iudgements, but thou lord, which onely lokest on the heart, wherby man is in dede either good or bad, vouchesafe thou to shewe vs thy seruauntes by sum token, whether of these two persons thou hast chosen to make vp þ numbre of. xii. apostles, and to cum to þ exercisyng of such an office, whence Judas fell, to go to that place wherunto it was not vnknowē to the, who seest al thinges, that he shoulde go. For neyther was it long of the that he forsoke thy companye, whiche dyddest what might be done, to call hym to repentaunce, neyther were thou deceyued in iudgement when thou diddest admitte hym, that shoulde sone after shrinke from the, but thy heauenly wysdome sawe that it was expedient so for vs, that through his treason, thy sonne should be sacrificed for vs, and that we should take example by such a traitoure, what daūger it wer for vs negligently and recheles to execute thoffice, whiche we take in hande. After this prayer they caste their lottes accordyng to the custome of the Hebrues. For so was Jonas by lot caste into the sea, so Jonathas was perceyued to haue tasted of the hony, so lykewise the preestes did execute their holy misteryes by lottes.

And whan they prayed they layed. &c.

And they gaue forth their lottes

For the holy ghost was not yet cum downe, and thapostles smelled styll of certain Jewish maners. Albeit there was no daunger in drawing lottes, for whiche soeuer of them were chosen, was a good man, and mete for the office. And yet was not the whole mater committed to lottes. For two of the moste approued persones were firste chosen by voyces. And because they were in double

doubte whether of those two they myght take, lots decided the doubtefulnesse whiche coulde not bee rashely done, forasmuche as it was ruled by prayer.

Than this lot, whiche was nothing els but an opening of the will of god, chose Matthias, whereas Joseph, besides the commendacion he had as appered by his name, was also kin vnto Jesus. And yet Matthias was preferred, because it shoulde be a lesson to vs, that in chosing of bishops, to whose credite the dispensacion of the gospel must be committed, we must so vtterly forbeare to leane vnto mannes affection, that if there bee equalles, him we must prefer whome no carnall propertie doeth let forthe, leste that, whiche is doone for fauour, bee an ill president to sum other. There lyeth also in their names a certayne pryuy misterye hydden. Matthias, whiche in Hebrue betokeneth the gift of god, was preferred before Just, whiche name the Pharisees did chalenge for their good workes. And yet none more vnmete than they to preache the ghospell. But he that recogniseth the free gift of god, through fayth of the gospell, and preacheth the same, he is worthy to succede in place of thapostles. Neyther dyd Juste disdayne that his felow was preferred, neyther dyd Matthias, stande anye thing the more in his owne conceyte, for that he was joyned to the eleuen apostles, for to make vp that same holy noumbre, nor for that he being a verye especiall good man, should succede in ꝑ roume of the naughtiest felowe, that euer was.

The.ii. Chapter.

The texte.

Whan the fyftie dayes were come to an ende, they were all with one accorde together in one place. and sodaynly there came a sounde from heauē, as it had bene ꝑ cumming of a great wynde, and it fylled all the house where they sate. And there appered vnto them clouē tounges, lyke as they had been of fyer, & it sate vpon eche of them: & they were fylled all with the holy ghost, and began to speake with other tounges, euen as the same spirite gaue them vtterannce.

Whan the fiftie dates were cum to an ende.

WHan wyne and fowertie dayes after Christes resurrection, were in this wyse ouerpassed, that date longe loked for of Penthecoste, that is to saye. Fyftyeth, was come: whiche the Jewes also kepte holye with myrthe and great solempnitie, aswel for a remembrauce of the yere of Jubile, whiche came aboute euerye fiftieth yere, in course agayne, as also because the lawe was deliuered in writting vpon the Mounte Sinay, the fiftieth daye after the kyllyng of the Paschall lambe: throughe whose bloude they departed safely out of Egipte. Upon an high mountayne was the olde lawe geuen, beyng engrauen in tables of stone. But the newe lawe the holye ghoste intituled in faythfull beleuyng hertes, and in a high parlour it was disclosed. In thone and eke in the other, was highnesse of place: on the one syde, and like on the other, was fyer. But there is nought els for vs to considre, but an hyghe mountayne, whiche the people beyng verye carnall and worldlye, and therefore vnapte to conceyue spirituall thinges, were forbidden, yea, so muche as to touche. Here vpon this mounte an house there is, whereby maye we marke concorde and vnitee to bee in the churche. There the mount was called Sinay, a place conuenient for the setting forth of suche a lawe, as shoulde for the greate great nombre of sondry preceptes that it conteyned, kepe vnder a stubburne and rebellious people. For of precepte or commaundemente, was that hyll called Sinai. This mounte here is named Syon, whiche worde with the Hebrewes betokeneth an high hill, from the toppe wherof, al thynges on yearth beneath are despised, from whence heauenly thynges are seene far of, through faith as though they were nigh at hand. On that mouñte what is els seene but terrible fier, smoke, flames, lightening and thundring: on this mounte a spirite there is of greate behemencie, cherefull to man, & nothing dredful, and fier not to burne the bodye but to lighte the soule and richely to endowe the plaine tounged man with heauenly eloquence. There the people being at iquare among themselues, murmured against theyr captayne, here be they quiete in one secrete chaũbre, making their prayer with one assente, for an heauenly gifte, whiche they wayted for. This daye was chosen, lyke as the place was also, for a matter of heauenly comfort, wherunto they had been woont often to prayse, for nine dayes space before. But whã the fyftyeth daye was once come, than came they altogether with ful consent, into the selfe same parlour, ready to receyue the heauenly spirite. Where the minde is occupyed with vile and filthy cogitacions, there is no conuenient place for the holye ghoste, but in ỹ parlour, where the company was so godly occupyed, it behoued hym to bee. And where the mynde is troublous with discord, hatred, & contencion, there is no mansion place for the holy ghost. Whan they were come altogether into one place, and that on high, they continued in one fayth, prayer, and expectacion. And beholde, sodaynely came the gift of god on high from aboue. For sodaynly from heauen came a sounde, as it were of a great puffe of winde that caryed it, & replenished ỹ whole parlour, where they satte quiet and without trouble. It was not the northerne winde, whiche blustereth coolde out of the cloudes: nor ỹ Sowtherne winde, that bringeth warmthe with hym oute of the marrysh and fenny places, pestylent to all lyuyng bodyes. But it was a blast of heauen, procedyng thence, whither Christ hymselfe went, breathyng lyke euerlastyng into the soule of man, geuing strẽgthe withall to the weake, and cherefull courage vnto the litleones. This sounde afrayde no manne, but stered vp all their myndes to looke for that holy spirite, which was promysed thẽ. One token of his cummyng to them, serued the eare, another was for the eye. For these are the twoo principall senses in man. Tongues they sawe lyke as they had been all of fyer, dealyng themselues to euerychone of the disciples, parte to one, and parte to another, and restyng a whyle vpon euerye mannes heade, to the intent that we shoulde playnly vnderstande, howe that gift shall endure for euer. One spirite enspired all their myndes, one fyre kyndled ethe mannes herte and toung. And incontinent vpon this visible token there followed in them the efficacie of that heauenly gifte. For as many as there were present, like as if they had bene trankfourmed sodaynly into heauenly persons, and being replenished with the holy ghoste, began to speake diuerse lãguages which they had neuer learned of mannes communication, but such as the spirite from heauen had enprinted in their hertes. There is no membre in manne more pestilent than is an euel tõugue: none more profitable thã is ỹ good. But it was nedefull for suche that shoulde sowe in sundry wise the doctrine of heauen among people of all languages, to haue their toungues endowed with heauenly knowelage, and more ouer flamyng with that burning charitie,

And there apparech vnto thẽ cloue tongues. &c.

which is mete for the gospel. This was thā the chiefest token of Christes faith euangelicall, whiche token the lorde promised them, saying: they shall speake with new tounges. Thei that accuse men vniustly, that slaunder their nepghboure, such as forswere themselues, & those that speake rybaudrye, a toung thei haue inflamed, not with fyer celestial, but with the fyre of helle infernall. Al such as contende in disputacion for vile thinges of this world, haue not yet receiued this toung celestial. The apostles before this time reasoned of loaues of bread, which thei had left behynd, they reasoned how the temporal kingdom of Israel should be aduaunced, who should sit on ȳ vpper hand, & who should haue of al other, the souerayngntie. Such was the toung as man had, vnmete than to publyshe the gospel. But all that now they thynke on, and whatsoeuer they speake of, al is spirituall, all is celestiall, and burning, al like fier. But away the toung, laye aside the spirite, and no woord is spoken. But a spirit celestial, vttereth a voyce celestial, a burning toungue in loue like fier, rauisheth the hertes of the hearers, and inflameth their mindes. The proude pharisees toungue is stylle, the Philosopher be he neuer so well learned, the Rethoryzian in his toungue neuer so well spoken, no manne he moueth therby vnto trewe gladnesse. For this gyfte cummeth onely from heauen. As for the disciples wer nought els but instrumentes, whereby the holy ghoste vttered hys mynde. This gifte cannot one gyue an other, neyther any deale it to hymselfe, but god dealeth to eche man as he shal thinke good. He that hath moze geuen him, hath no cause why he should dispise an other that is not so rewarded, but hath cause why he should endeuoure himselfe the moze readily to profit many therwith. The spirite is a thing of great behemencie, the fyer a veray liuely thing in operacion, and neuer at rest. The Apostles nowe do slepe no moze so soundely as they did before the death of their lorde, they hide themselues no moze as they did soone after his resurrection, but nowe cum they abrode, they preache here, and there, and openly to all men healthe euerlasting, freely geuen them thzough faith in Jesus, who was a litle before crucifyed.

The texte.

* There wer dwelling at Jerusalem, Jewes, deuout men, out of euery nacion of thē that are vnder heauen. Whan this was noysed about, the multitude came together, & were astonied, because ȳ euery man heard them speake with his owne language. They wondred all, and marueiled, saying among thē selues: beholde, are not al these which speake of Galile? And how heare we euery ma his own toung, wherin we wer borne? Parthias, and Medes, and Elamites, and the inhabitours of Mesopotamia, & of Jewry, & of Cappadocia, of Pontus and Asia, Phrygia & Pamphilia, of Egipte & of the parties of Lybia, whiche is besides Syren, and trauligers of Rome, Jewes and proselytes, Gretes & Arabians: we haue heard thē speake in our owne tounges the great workes of god: Thei wer al amased & wondred, saying one to an other: what meneth this? Others mocked, saying: these men are full of newe wyne.

And the trueth to say, that same Citie Jerusalem was at that tyme, as it were a stage, where people do assemble to behold playes, fitte for the fitte begynnyng of this enterlude, partely for the famous renoume of the citye, and partely for honour of the Paschall feast whiche was paste, and finally, for the deuocion that the people had to the solemne feast of Pentheccoste, manye one wer than abiding at Jerusalem, not all onelye such as came out of all the parties of Siria, but out of all other cuntreyes allo, whither soeuer the violent rage of warres had dryeue them, or any chaunce els had brought them. He that hath moze geuen him, hath no cause why he should dispise an other that is not so rewarded, but hath cause why he should endeuoure himselfe the moze readily to prouyde many therwith. The spirite is a thing of great behemencie, the fyer a veray liuely thing in operacion, and neuer at rest. The Apostles nowe do slepe no moze so soundely as they did before the death of their lorde, they hide themselues no moze as they did soone after his resurrection, but nowe cum they abrode, they preache here, and there, and openly to all men healthe euerlasting, freely geuen them thzough faith in Jesus, who was a little before crucyfyed.

The texte.

¶ There wer dwelling at Jerusalem, Jewes, deuout men, out of euery nacion of thē that are vnder heauen. When this was noysed about, the multitude came together, & were astonied, because ꝑ euery man heard them speake with his owne language. They wondred all, and maruailed, saying among thē selues: beholde, are not al these which speake of Galile? And how heare we euery ma his own toung, wherin we wer borne? Parthias, and Medes, and Elamites, and the inhabitours of Mesopotamia, & of Jewry, & of Cappadocia, of Pontus and Asia, Phrygia & Pamphilia, of Egipte & of the parties of Libia, whiche is beside Syren, and trauelleres of Rome, Jewes and proselytes, Gretes & Arabians: we haue heard thē speake in our owne tounges the great workes of god: Thei wer alamased & wondred, saying one to an other: what meneth this? Others mocked, saying: these men are full of newe wyne.

When this was noysed about, the multitude came together.

And the trueth to say, that same Citie Jerusalem was at that tyme, as it were a stage, where people do assemble to behold playes, fitte for the firste begynnyng of this enterlude, partely for the famous renoume of the citye, and partely for honour of the Paschall feast whiche was paste, and finally, for the deuocion that the people had to the solemne feast of Penthecoste, manye one wer than abiding at Jerusalem, not all onelye such as came out of all the parties of Siria, but out of all other cuntreyes also, whither soeuer the violent rage of warres had dryeue them, or any chaunce els had brought them. Emōg whome many wer deuoute and well disposed people. When this so strange a matter was than comenly knowen ouer all the citie, a confuse multitude of people came together, and beyng in a great perplexitie, demaũded what these newes should meane: that where as thei wer gathered out of many cuntreys, and wer of soundry languages, yet for all that euery man so vnderstood them speaking, euen as though thei had spoken to them al, not in one tounge alone but to euerichon seuerally in his own cuntrey language. Yea ỹ Hebrew tonge is not without his diuersitie, accordingly as cuntreyes are diuided, whether it came of diuerse nacions whiche borde one vpon an other, or els of sum other chaunce. For the woman of Samaria, knewe that Jesus was a Jewe by the propertie of his toung, and Peters pronounciacion declared hym to be one of Galilee. And ỹ Greke toung likewise is parted into fyue sondry kindes. And other nacions also differetly no lesse in their languages. More than that, many Jewes vnderstoode none other, than that cuntrey language, wher they themselues were borne. All sortes therfore of people, did greatly wonder therat, & reasoned, how suche a thing might cum to passe, that neuer the lyke had been hearde nor reade of. Thus thei said: beholde, a straunge thing. Are not al these that speake, men of Galilee: howe than cummeth this aboute, that we, beeyng so many men of diuerse languages, as ofte as we heare any of them speake, do vnderstand hym as perfectly, as if eche of vs heardc his owne cuntrey language, where he was borne, sens that this multitude of vs is gathered of so diuerse and sondrye regions, there be of vs here Parthians, Medes, Elamites, and suche also as doeth inhabite all abrode the coastes of Jewry, and besides that Capadocia, Pontus and that cuntrey whiche peculiarly is called Asia, Phrigia, Pamphilia, Egipte, and those parties of Lybia, whiche reache to Ciren. Yea and sum be here whole dwellyng is at Rome, some of them Jewes borne, and some Proselites, that is to say, suche as hath of their owne desyre professed the Jewishe religion. Moreouer Cretes and Arabians. All we that here be gathered, of so many nacions, of so sondry languages, dooe heare and playnely vnderstãde them speakyng, nothing of comen blage, or els thinges to the worldly man pertenyng, but of high matters of weyghty importaunce, yea thinges conuenient & mete for god. After this maner reasoned as many as feared god, & wer abated in their courage at the strangeneſſe of the thing, & said: what meaneth this wondre? They found no fault with that thing whiche their reason could not attayne vnto, as ỹ Pharisets were wont to do, but they searched for diligently & desired to learne ỹ whiche they perceyued not. On the other parte suche as wer heding, & nothing vpright in iudgement, did say in scorne: the mẽ be dronke with new wine: these persons a man may call, those pharisets disciples, which repented of Jesus: ỹ deuil is within him. And to saye alwayes ỹ very trueth, great dronkenes is not muche vnlike to fury, for it chaunceth peraduenture, that some in a fury shall speake diuerse wordes of sondryr languages which they neuer learned. But no fury wil this vndertake, that al mẽ shal vnderstãd that that ỹ doeth speake. But truly these wordes spake they for a mocke. Albeit a man maye sometime tell the truth although he spake in a skoffyng wise. For a suerty full wer they of ỹ new wine, which ỹ lorde would not haue in any wyse put into olde bottels. For the olde wine of Moyses lawe had lost his strength & vertue, when Christe was fitste inſured by mariage to his churche, and the colde & vnsauery sence of the lawe was turned by Christe into newe wyne. Whatsoeuer is carnall is vnsauerye & fayute in vertue: all that spiritual is, whatsoeuer it be, is lyuely, strengthfull and sauery.

They wondred al, and marualled.

They were all amased, & wondred. &c.

and lauerp. They largely dyd they dyynke of that celestiall cup, whereof Dauid the wryter of psalmes speaketh: howe excellent is my cup whiche maketh the dyounke. And yf it were lawfull to compare thynges together, whiche are thoughout all their kynde moste vnlyke; thys vulgare and common dyounkennesse doth engendre in mã lower thynges chiefely: it vttereth the secretes of the herte: it causeth man to forget all his aduersitie that is past, and maketh the minde to reioyce in continuall hope of prosperitie to come: it enboldeth man to set nought pea, by his owne lyke. Last of all it maketh men, whiche are of a rude & barbarous tongue, to bee well spoken men. Nowe marke my sayinges, whither that newe swete wyne, whiche proceded of Goddes owne spirite, engendre not suche a lyke thyng in thapostles, for what they had syd for feare & durst not speake, what they before had learned secretely, and wouldo not be acknowen, that doe they nowe publisshe, & accordyng to the lordes prophecie, the same they preache vpon house toppes. Their olde Jewish fashions they haue clene forgotten, and lyke as infantes newly borne, no more do they nowe remembre their like before past, neither haue they in mynde the troublous afflictions, for feare whereof they had forsaken theyr maister. And although they were bare without all worldlye helpe and succoure, yet they feared neyther gouernoures, ne prynces, presidentes ne kynges, neyther counselles, nor imprisonmentes, no soondry tormentes, no enuiers kynde of deathe, endurynge iustie alwaye, beyng of courage, and therefull throughe the promysses of Christes ghospell. Fynally, they whiche were before but poore fyshers and men vnlerned, forthwith practised theyr celestiall eloquence, in rebukyng the proude Pharisies, confutyng the subtill and craftie Philosophers, and in puttyng theloquent oratours to vtter scilence. Nothyng there is of more perill or difficultie, than to speake before a greate companye, whyche as it is lyke a monstreous beaste of soundrye headdes, so it is moste of all tymes monstreous, whan the multitude is collected of soondry languages, and soondry nacions.

But Peter stepped forth with the eleuen, and lyft vp his voice and layd vnto theim: Ye men of Jewry, and all that dwel at Jerusalem: be this knowen vnto you, and with your eares heare ye my wordes. For these men are not as ye suppose, dyouncken, seeyng it is but the thirde houre of the day. But this is that, whiche was spoken by the prophet Joell: And it shalbe in the laste dayes, sayeth god: of my spirite I will power out vpon all fleshe: And your sonnes, and your doughters shall prophecie, and your young menne shall see visions, and your olde menne shal dreame dreames. And on my seruauntes, and on my handemaydens I will power out of my spirite in those dayes, and they shall prophecie. And I wyl shew wonders in heauen aboue, and tokens on the yearth beneath: bloud and fyer, and the vapour of smoke. The sonne shalbe turned into darkenes, and the moone into bloud, before that great and notable day of the Lorde come. And it shal come to passe that whosoeuer shall call on the name of the lord, shalbe saued. The texte.

Now marke me here Symon Peter, who sodaynly of a fysher was made an Orator. The multitude sturred vp a clamorous rumour: And as they dyd than, the same lyke shall other dooe hereafter vnto the worldes ende. But Peter stepped forth.

Than was it the parte of a good shepeherd, to step aforne valiauntlye amongest them, not for that intent he shoulde by force appeace or make theym styll, which murmured agaynst gods glory, or els to rendre one check for an other, but that he myght constauntly rather than fyercely, put away by testimonies of holy scripture, all false and craftye accusation, and stoutely defende the glorye of Christe. Than Peter, who had before ryseune vp in the parlour, to see the noumbre of thapostles fulfylled, nowe elleuenes stoode vp to the multitude of people, of ſoondry nacions, mengled together, partely to enſtruct them that had ſayde: What meaneth this? and partely to ſtoppe theyr mouthes, that had ſayed: theſe men be dronke wyth newe wyne. Albeit it is not of neceſſitie requiſite, that a biſhop ſhould preache to the people allwayes ſtandyng, foraſmuche as Chriſte hymſelfe ſittyng, taughte the people: Yet he that taketh in hand an apoſtles office, ought to ſtande vpright in mynde. And here conſydre in ỹ meane while Peters dignitie. He was the fyrſte man readye where occaſion required, to ſet fooyth the ghoſpell. Than had he put vp hys materiall ſwoorde, wherewithall Chriſte hymſelfe was not pleaſed, and pulled out a ſpirituall ſwoord. Suche one ought he to bee, that is the chiefe biſhop among the people. Peter ſtode vp, but not all alone, he had eleuen apoſtles ſtandyng beſydes with hym, leſte he ſhoulde ſeme to vſurpe to hymſelfe ſome violente gouernaunce. One vttered the tale, but one for all thother, lyke as he alone before openly confeſſed in the name of all the reſte, Jeſus Chriſt to be the ſonne of the liuyng God. But whereupon dyd this ſhepeherd, a poore creature, vnlearned, ſo boldely vaunt hymſelfe, as once to loke vpon ſo great an aſſemblye of people excellent oratoures, when they ſhall come afore an aſſemblye of people, or in preſence of prynces, to pronounce an exact oracion, whiche they haue canned on their fyngers endes, doe chaunge oftentymes their colour, cannot vtter their woordes, & in mynde they are not a lytle abaſhed. But this vndoubtedly was that heauenly dronkennelle, thys was that ſobrefulneſſe of ſweete wyne. He ſtode in preſence before a greate multitude, he tooke vnto hym eleuen apoſtles, not as a garniſon of men for hys defence, but as felowes wyth hym of one company: he ſet hys eyes ſtedfaſtly vpon the people, as one vnknowen to them, whome he knewe not, he lyft vp hys voice on hyghe, and takyng none aduyſemente wyth hymſelfe what he woulde ſaye, he ſpake to them, practiſyng euen than the ſelfe ſame thyng, whiche the lorde before had taught him. He ſpake not for his owne lucre and aduauntage, but as a good ſhepeherde, defended hys flocke, neyther handled he hys matters wyth ſharpe woordes of mans inuencion, but vſed for his defence, onelye holy ſcripture. Nowe was this multitude deſyrous to knowe what Peter woulde ſay. And let vs lykewyſe for oure partes geue hede, foraſmuche as theſe hys woordes wer ſpoken to all men. At the beginning, whan he had once wyth the mouyng of hys hande, aſſwaged the murmur & the noyſe of the company, he began with ſuch a preface, as ſhoulde, without any retorical colour of flatterp, make them attent. Ye that are my brethren (ſayeth he) of Jewry, who ought to knowe both the lawe and eke the prophetes, and of all other moſte ſpecially, whiche dwell in this noble citie of Jeruſalem, where the fountayne is of religion, and knowleage of the lawe, ſomewhat peraduenture here is for you to wondre at, but nothyng that any man can iuſtely fynd faute with all. Wherefore, all ye that here bee preſente geue good eare a whyle to my woordes, and learne of me how the thyng ſtandeth. For it is touchyng all your profittes ſo to doe. Theſe men of Galile, whom here ye ſee ſtand by me, are not, (as ſome of you ſuppoſe,) dronken wyth newe wyne, ſeeyng it is yet but three of the clocke, and no man is woonte to be dronke in the mornyng before the ſonne ryſyng. But nowe ye ſee that in theſe men is fulfylled, whyche thyng to come, god did long afore thys tyme promyſe by hys prophet Iohel. Herken vnto the prophecy, and truſſe ye to that that is promiſed you therein.

With the eleuen.

With youre eares beare ye my woordes.

For theſe men are not as ye ſuppoſe. &c.

Doe not ye fynde faute with the thing, because ye haue seldome sene the lyke, but rather enbrace that mercifulnes, whiche god dooeth profre vnto you. For Iohel, being inspired with the holy goste, foreseing that god, who had giuen to Moyses, and some others his prophetes at soondry times his owne blessed spirite for your saluacion, would at the last, after he had sent his owne onely begotten sonne, powre out moste plenteously the same spirite, not vpon one or .ii. lyke as ye haue sene for these many ages past but a fewe prophetes: but vpon all nacions through the worlde, whosoeuer wouldbe with sincere fayth receyue this chereful and gladsome message, whiche we at his commaundement doe nowe bring vnto all you, hath left that heauenly prophecy in writing after this manner. It shall come to passe, saieth the lorde, in the latter dayes of the world, I will powre out of my spirite bountifully vpon all men, and sodaynely shall your sonnes prophecy, and your daughters, and your yong men shall see visions, and your olde men shall dreame dreames, and vpon my seruauntes, and vpon my hande maydes will I powre out of my spirite in those dayes, and they shall prophecye. And I will shewe woonders in heauen aboue, and tokens on the yearth beneth, bloud and fyer, and the vapour of smoke. The Sunne shalbe turned into darkenes, and the mone into bloud, before that the great and notable day of the lorde come. And whosoeuer shall cal vpon the name of the lorde shall bee saued. These thinges hath the prophet Iohell tolde you in his prophecye, many liues a goe. And nowe ye see that, that he prophecied of, as touching the plentifull shedyng of the spirite, in effect declared before your eyes. And it is not to be doubted, but that god will as faithfully performe the same, that thafore sayde Iohell hath prophecied of the plages that shall chaunce. But there is no cause why ye shoulde dispayre, the prophet teacheth you a sure way to your saluacion, seeyng that he sheweth to you the perill and daungier thereof. Call ye vpon the name of the lorde, and ye shall be saued.

The texte.

Ye men of Israel, heare these woordes: Iesus of Nazareth, a manne approued of God among you, with miracles, wounders and signes, which God did by him, in the middes of you (as ye your selues knowe) hym haue ye taken by the handes of the vnrighteous persones after he was determined by the determinate counsell, and foreknowledge of God, and haue crucyfyed and slaine him: Whom God hath raised vp and loced the sorowes of death, because it was impossible that he should be holden of it: For Dauid speaketh of him: I fore sawe the I saw God alwayes before me: For he is on my right hande, that I should not be moued. Therfore did my herte reioyce, and my tongue was glad. Moreouer also my flesche shall rest in hope, because thou wilt not leaue my soule in hell, neyther wilte suffer thine holy, to see corruption. Thou haste shewed me the wayes of lyfe, thou shalte make me ful of ioy with thy countenaunce.

But as touching the maner howe ye muste call vpon the name of the lord, hysten ye that are the chyldren of Israell nowe vnto me, and to the texte of my tale geue good hede. Many of you knewe Iesus of Nazareth, whyche persone beeyng long a goe promised, by the sayinges of all the prophetes, god hath nowe sette abrode before all you to beholde, and hath commended hym to you in sondry and great myracles, and wonders whyche he hath doen and wroughte by hym before all your eyes. For verayly god was in him. I speake of a thing not vnknowen to you, for the fame of his miracles is not alonely blased wide abrode thorough out all Iewry, but is come vnto other cities also, bordering vpghe vpon the same. For why? He himselfe went on waykaryng from place to place, ouer all this region, healyng euery where the sicke with hys woorde, restoryng the lame and impotent to their strength a-gayne, geuing syghte to the blynde, clensyng the leprye, casting out deuils: a great sorte of you hathe seen the thynges that I reherse. None of all these miracles was doen, but God before purposed the same. And it was the wyll of god thus to saue the worlde. After that ye had taken this man, not by chaunce or at aduenture, but as one delyuered by the determinate wyll or counsell of God and hys foreknowledge, for the saluacyon of hys people of Israell, ye crucyfyed hym by the handes of the vnrighteous soulditers, and slewe hym.

For the souldiers were nought els ih doyng that haynous fact, saue only your ministers. But he slayeth the manne that procureth hys death. The matter is to playne for to be denyed. This manne whome ye haue slayne, as God wouldе haue it, who had deliuered hym for to bee slayne, the verye selfe same god, accordyng to the soothe saying of hys Prophetes, hathe called vp the thyrd day to lyfe agayne, that all, whiche truely shall beleue the ghospell, Whome God hath reysed vp, and loosed the sorowes of death.
shoulde hope for the same thyng to bee doen hereafter in themselues, whyche was by the power of God, once dooen in hym. For he in obeyinge hys fathers will, suffered the spitefull reproche of the crosse pacientlye, puttyng hys whole affiaunce & trust of saluation not in mans ayde and defence, but in the mer-cyfulnes of God: and therfore was he delyuered by him of all deadly sorowes and paynes infernall, whiche truely he myghte, by reason that he was man, haue tasted or felt. But as he was cleane without synne: so he coulde be kepte in no wyse in their bondage. For death and hell hath no perpetuall authori-tie and power, but vpon theym that are subiecte vnto synne. Wherefore, lyke as death was of might to swallow hym, so was it not able to holde hym, beyng once deuowred, but caste hym vp, as it was thereto constreyned, the thyrd day, euen as ord the whale reuomet the prophete Jonas. Than was it the wyll of God that this innocent should suffre all these iniuries, to thintent that he woulde delyuer vs all by hym, both of synne & deathes tyranny, yf that we, accordyng to Jesus example of Nazareth put our whole trust & affyance in God. What I haue tolde you nowe, my brethren of Israell, ye oughte not to thynke it incredible, seing that Dauid beeyng enspyred wyth the celestyall For Dauyd speaketh of him. Lorde hande I saw god all wayes before me.
spirite of prophecie, tolde you longe heretofore, that it shoulde euen thus come to passe. For in his fiftenth psalme he speaketh of Jesus of Nazareth, whome we preache to you in this manier. Aforehande haue I set the Lorde alwayes before me, for he is on my ryght hande, that I shoulde not bee moued. Therfore dyd my herte reioyce, and my tongue was glad, moreouer also my flesshe shall reste in hope beecause thou shalte not leaue my soule in hell, neyther shalte thou suffer thy holye to see corruption. Thou hast shewed me the wayes of lyfe, thou shalte make me full of ioye wyth thy countenaunce. Ye see howe euidently hath that kynge and prophete Dauid described, and as it were in a lyuely picture, sette beefore youre eyes, that, whiche ye knowe well ynough, is dooen and paste in Jesus of Nazareth. He had made God alone hys fortresse of defence, and trustyng to hys onely helpe, suffered he wyllingly and gladlye all those peynes, whyche he, as you dooe knowe, hath suffered. And in sufferyng bodyly peynes, he reioyced inwardely. Hys toung for ioy neuer ceased to speake, neuer kept in silence the wyll of God. He was conten-

tented for to bee buried, although he nothing mistrusted but that his father wouldo call him vp to lyfe agayne the third day, and wouldo not suffer hym, who had put his whole trust in god, beeyng in no poynt giltie, to putrefye in his graue. For whosoeuer trusteth to be saued by his owne woorkes, or putteth his trust in worldely succoure, he shalbe founde far vnmete to suffre the paynful dolours of death pacyently, neither shal he be hable whan he is once entangled, to looce hymselfe out of deathes snare. But he that continually fireth the inwarde eye of his soule to godward, whiche to al people is mercyful, he knoweth altredy the wayes of lyfe: and although god seemeth to turne away his countenaunce from him for a time, yet shall he agayne, or it be long, disclose to hym the beames of his mercy, and requite him for his tormentes, whiche endureth but for a time, with ioyes eternall, and for death, pelde euerlastyng lyfe, for yearthely reproche the glory of heauen. Wherefore than, we also are taught by him, and his example, the way to lyfe euerlastyng.

The texte.

Ye men and brethren, let me freely speake vnto you of the Patriarke Dauid. For he is bothe dead and buried, and his sepulchre remayneth with vs vnto this day. Therefore seeyng he was a prophete & knew that God had swome with an othe to him, þ Christe (as concerning the fleshe) should come of þ fruite of his loynes, and should sit on his seat, he knowing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soule should not be left in hell: neyther his fleshe should see corruption. This Iesus hath God araysed vp, whereof all we are witnesses.

For he is both dead & buried. &c.

Some peraduenture shall suppose that this prophecy doth perteine to Dauid himselfe, and not to Iesus: I am not ignorannt howe highlye ye esteme Dauid the Patriarke, and that not without a cause are ye in suche an opinion of him. For he was blessed and derely beloued with god, but frankelye to speake the trueth to you, welbeloued brethren, we muste not set to muche by Dauid the Patriarke, as to attribe to him that as his owne, which is due vnto Messias. The thing trewly it selfe declareth, that this prophecy agreeth neyther with Dauid ne with any other Patriarke or prophete. For Dauid, as eche one of you knowe full well, is dead and buryed, and neuer came afterwarde to lyfe agayne, seeyng that his sepulchre is with vs vnto thys present day, conteynyng noughte in yt els but dead dyre bones, wythout any lyfe at all in theym. Wherefore Dauid, who knewe that he hymselfe shoulde bee as other were, buryed, and as touching his bodye shoulde rotte in his graue, disclosed not this prophecye of hymselfe. But where as he was enspyred with the spyrite of prophecye, and knewe righte well that that shoulde come to passe, whiche god had assured to hym vpon an othe, that is to say, that Christ, as touching his humanitie, shoulde be borne of his progeny, and after the spirituall vnderstanding, shoulde sit vpon his throne to reigne for euer, prophecied as one that knew perfectly what should happen of these thinges which pe se now perfourmed in Iesus of Nazareth, who doubtlesse was borne as touching his humanitie, of Dauids kinred & family. Furthermore, sins that it is euidently knowen that Iesus in his lyfe tyme dyd assert no worldly kingdome, and neuer sate vpon Dauids regal seate, but was most spitefully dealed with al, it appereth plainly that there was some other kingdome promised which as the prophetes say, hath none end. He could not sit vpon Dauids seate if that he being once slayne, had neuer arisen to lyfe againe. He therfore is arisen from deathe to lyfe agayne, and sytteth nowe vpon Dauids seate, that is to saye, vpon the seate of hys eternall father, the Lorde of all thinges that are in heauen and eke in yearth.

Therfore seeyng he was a prophete.

He knowyng this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ.

This was it vndoubtedly, that Dauid beyng inspyred with the spirytе of prophecie, spoke of before, and what he before hath spoken, that is come to passe. And although Jesus soule went downe to hell, yet there it was not withholden, but rather deliuered the soules whiche were from liberтye restreigned. Yea although his body was layde in graue voyde of all lyfe, yet there it did not rotte or putrifye: but god who in all hys promises can not lye, hath called his soule from hell againe, and hath restored the same to his owne former body. Of this thyng we all beare witnes, whom here ye see standing, whiche haue traded our liues familiarly with him, whiche haue heard him oftimes say, that he shoulde bee both crucifyed accordyng to ỹ prophetes sayinges, and afterwarde ryse the thirde day to lyfe agayne. We were those persons that both sawe him a dooyng, and hearde him, and nowe bee witnesses of his resurrection, to whome he hath oftetymes appered not alonely as one seen of vs and heard, but felt also with our handes, we knewe his voyce, we knew his face, we knew ✠ felt the printed dentes of his woundes, finally he eate togither in cõpany with vs, to thintent that we might be wel assured, to se the very same body there with vs, that lay in his sepulchre.

Wherof all we are witnesses.

¶ Sens nowe that he by the right hande of God is exalted, and hath receyued of the father the promise of the holy goste, he hath shed forth this gifte which ye now see ✠ heare. For Dauid is not ascended into heauen: but he sayeth: The Lord sayed vnto my Lorde: sit thou on my ryght hande, vntill I make thy foes thy foote stole. So therfore let all the house of Israel know for a suerty, that God hath made that same Jesus (whom ye haue crucifyed) lorde and Christe.

The texte.

Wherefore than, the selfe same person, whome man ouerthrew and brought to extreme vilany and reproche, god hath now aduaunced to the heigth of eternall glory: whiche glory he shall once set open manifestly to all men, at the ende of the worlde: and now doeth he in the meane season, put forth with you the power of his godhead, by secrete operacion of the holy goste, whiche he, whiles he lyued vpon earth, promised to send vs from his father. Now hath he beyng returned agayne to heauen, powred from thence the same spirite vpon vs bounteously, accordyng to Iobels prophecie aboue mentioned.

And of him cummeth this straunge miracle that ye see and heare vs speake in languages, whiche you beyng gathered here togither out of sondrye nacions do semblably vnderstand. And like as the prophecy of the resurrection can not be vnderstand of Dauid, as we haue to you declared: euen so, that thyng which was prophecied of his ascending vp to heauen, and of the sitting on the right hande of god his father, and of his euerlasting kingdome, can not pertеyne to Dauid, like as the Phariseis theymselues, reasoning with our maister confessed. For Dauid neuer ascended vp to heauen, as he that had before returned to his lyfe agayne, and yet for all that in the misticall psalme, thus sayeth he beyng enspired with the spirite of prophecye: the lorde sayd to my lorde sit on my right hande, vntill I make thyne enemies thy footestole. Wherefore than, the matter is playne, that this prophecye was spoken of god the father, who hath exalted to heauen Jesus ỹ sonne of Dauid, as touching his humanitie, but as concerninge the spirite the lorde of Dauid, and would that he should sit by him as copartener of his kingdome. Therfore let al the whole people of Israell be wel assured that the selfe same Jesus of Nazareth, whome ye once crucifyed, god hath now aduaunced to the kingdome of heauen, and hath made him lorde ouer all, and Messias, that

For Dauid is not ascended into heauen.

God hathe made the same Jesus (whō ye haue crucifyed) Lord and Christ.

that is to say, the annoyncted, whome ye loke for as your Messias, whiche was promised of all the prophetes nowe many hundred yeres agoe.

When they heard this they were pricked in their hertes and saied vnto Peter, and vnto the other apostles. Ye men and brethren what shall we doe? Peter sayed vnto them: repent of your synnes, and be baptised euery one of you in the name of Iesus Christe, for the remission of synnes, and ye shall receyue the gifte of the holy ghost. For the promyse was made to you and to your children, and to all that are a farre off, euen as many as the Lorde our God shall call. And with many other woordes dare he witnesse, and exhorted them, saying: Saue your selues from this vntoward generation. Then they that gladly receyued his preaching, were baptized: and the same daye, there were added vnto the, about three thousande soules. The texte.

This tale of Peters made the hearers thereof sore afrayed. For they wer prycke in to their owne doynges, howe they had cryed out vpon Pilate, crucifye hym, crucifye hym, crucifye hym: and perceyued by reason of the prophecie, howe he was made on the righte hande of hys father, copartener of hys kingdom, vntyll all his enemies were broughte vnder his fotestoole. Whom they had put to deathe, beyng as he was vnto them beneficiall, of the same nowe, sence he is cum vnto his reigne, were they afrayed, leste he wouldo take vengeaunce vpon them. This is a beginning to a maimes saluation, to knowleage his faulte, and to feare the payne deserued for the same. Therfore they beyng thus pricked in conscience, sayde to Peter, and to the reste of the apostles: what must we do, welbeloued brethren? It is wel, whan a man feling hymselfe of a gilty conscience, dispaireth not, but enlearcheth for remedye.

Nowe what doeth Peter in this case, who representeth a sobre and a meke shepeherde: he exerciseth no tyrannye amongest them with reprocheful checkes, he heapeth not together theyr faultes, he putteth not them abacke with a delay, he willeth them not to kyll beastes for sacrifice, but declareth to the sorowfull hertes, a remedy euen at hande putting no difference betwixt them that had crucifyed Iesus, and those whiche had not consented to that wicked acte. For none of them all was cleane without sinne. And therfore sayeth he, doe ye repent your lyfe that is past, and let euerychone of you be baptysed in water, in the name of Iesus Christe: and for that benefites sake, whiche he hath freely doen to vs, ye shall haue forgeuenes of all your synnes: and shall receaue after that ye be purely clensed, the gifte of the holy ghost, whiche ye here see shed on vs. Let none of you ponder & weigh his owne merites, for all that here is geuen, is frely geuen, vpon this onely condition, that ye beleue. Iohels prophecy doeth specially pertaine to you, and your children that come after you, whome he calleth sonnes and doughters, whome he calleth seruauntes and handemaydes. For ye promyse was made to you and to your children.

Beleue god that made you the promis, and ye shall freely receaue forthwith that is promised. Neyther doeth Iohels promise in his prophecy pertayne to you alone, whiche are of the people of Israell, but to all the heathen also, whiche be far of both from al kinred with the Israelites, and far from knoweleage of god, whom euer our lord god shall of his merciful goodnes vouchesafe to call, to bee partakers with vs of this his gifte. And the same thynge hath the prophecy well declared, where it sayeth: and whosoeuer shall call vpon the name of the lorde, shalbe saued. Albeit eche man that sayeth, Lorde, Lorde, doeth not cal vpon the lord, but he that putteth all his whole hope and truste of saluacyon, in the mercyfulnes of the same lorde. Other prophetes also hath spoken of the same thyng, that the worde of the gospel shoulde in tyme cumming spreade throughout the world. And besides this, our maister Jesus gaue vs a speciall commaundement, that we shoulde firste of all declare to you, this mercifull message of peace and loue, and that we shoulde than afterward, call the gentiles to the same: For this calling cummeth not of mans deliuerances, but of the fre bounteousenes of god. In these wordes and others manye mo, Peter bare witnes to them of Christe, bryngyng foorthe to them, the prophetes sayinges to testify the same, and conferring with them those thynges, whiche had alredy than come to passe.

And with many other wordes bare he witnesse. &c.

And exorted them, sayinge: Saue your selues from this vntoward generacion.

And beside his teachinges, he exhorted them that he might the better pricke them forwarde whiche were of waueringe mindes. So to, he sayeth, my brethren, embrace ye this so excellent bountiousnes of god towardes you, so ready to meete you. Ye know what complaintes all the prophetes hath made of the ouerthwartenes, and stubbernes also, in this Jewyshe nacion, whiche hath declared themselues at all tymes, rebellyous to theyr lorde, and gods: and to those, whiche were sent to them, his mynisters for theyr saluacion. Howe often times dyd they resist Moses: howe many prophetes haue they slayne: how ofte haue they prouoked god to angre with theyr mischeuous dedes: & therefore they be iustly named the houle that maketh the lorde angry, and the vyne turned to bitternes, whiche yeldeth to his keper in stede of swete grapes, wylde vynes. John the baptiste lamented in them thesame thyng: callyng them a progeme of serpentes. And our maister Jesus complayned not a fewe times, of the selfe same thyng, beyng offended with many of them, for their inuincible frowardenesse, who seyng dyd not see, and hearyng dyd not heare, and vnderstanding did not vnderstande. The holesome doctryne for mans soule they despysed, and all suche benefites as he wrought in man thyrough hys miracles, they imputed to the spirite of Belzebub. Wherfore he called them a frowarde nacion, and harde of till wylled to beleue, and bewayling their state, tolde them that they shoulde be destroyed: for why? they had beaten, killed, stoned, and crucifyed, all that were sent from god. Draw your selues a backe my brethren, and get ye away from the vengeaunce of god, whiche hangeth ouer your heades, caste of all cankred frowardenes of the Jewish nacion, which, while they stande stifely in defence of theyr owne Justice, do wickedly rebell against the iustice of God. For ye haue by faith and sincere obedyence, alreadi for you pounded eternall saluacion. Than shall ye finally be accounpted the true Israelites, than shall ye be the very children of Abraham. Than shal ye be of the right sorte of Jewes, in dede, if ye will knowelage Jesus, and recognise him for youre king.

Ridde your handes of this carnall generacion whiche woulde rather perishe for theyr incredulite, than be saued. Be ye contented to be borne a new and transformed into a spiritual natiō. and celestial, whiche by trust in Jesus is in waye of saluacion. Of this sorte verely was the fishers eloquence whyche he pyked not out of Retorical preceptes or rewlers, but receiued it from heauē and therfore it was of muche more power and efficacie in his operacion. This was the same swerde, that entreth thyrough, euen to the diuiding of the soule and the spirite, whose edge hath punched a stricke ꝑ Jewes hertes. This was the first cast and throw of his net, wherein the fisher of mans soule, drew vp a great plenteous multitude. This was the seede of the gospel, that ought to bee caste euery where abrode, whiche (as Christe hath taught) falleth not dowme into all mens hertes, and yet here it found forthwith good grounde, which brought forth fruite. For than were baptised, and to the numbre of the disciples (whiche were at that time very few) were increased and ioyned, almost three thousand moe. These were the luckie first frutes that the ghospel brought forth for his retenewes. The new testament agreeth in this point also with a figure of tholde: Moyses commaunded a feast of the firste frutes to be kept holy the fiftyeth day after Easter. And here are consecrated to the lord this fiftyeth day 3 first frutes, not of eares of corne, but of mens soules. For now through preaching of the gospell, and fayth in the same, the water washed away all their sinnes, and nowe was that heauenly spirite gredely receiued. Nowe marke, what doeth that spirite of god in them, truely he is not idle, seinge that he is lyke vnto the fyer. We are freely made cleane in soule as innocentes, we haue freely receyued of the holy gost his gift of grace. Now it resteth for our parte to take hede, that we lose not that vnadmirably, whiche god hath of his mercifull goodnes, freely geuen vs. Suche are the first beginninges of euangelycall religion, suche is as a man would say, the childehood of oure first regeneracion in Christe. All that we haue taught hitherto, is as it were milke for infauntes, we must proceede further to whole & fast meate. Preachers and suche as feede with the woorde of god oughte to haue with them both kindes of meate euer redy at hande. For thus the lorde commaunded them, go ye foorth, he sayeth, and teache all people, baptizing them, and teaching them to kepe all that I haue commaunded you. Teache them that muste be christened, the rudimentes and firste beginninges of the gospell, whiche rudimentes or principles, except a manne wyll beleue, hys Baptisme is in vayne. Those that bee alredy baptized, thus must ye teache, that they liue after my teachynges, proceedyng alwayes to more perfection.

Then they that gladly receyued his preachyng. &c.

¶ And they continued in the apostles doctrine and felowschip, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And feare came ouer euery soule, and many woonders and tyknes were shewed by the apostles, at Jerusalem. And all that beleued, kept them selues together, & had all thinges in common, and sold their possessions and goodes, and parted them to al men, as euery man had nede, and they continued daily with one accorde in the temple, & brake bread from house to house, and did eate their meate together with gladnesse & singlenes of herte, praysing God, and had fauour with al the people. And the lorde added to the congregacion daily, suche as should be saued.

The texte.

Than such as kept themselues in company with the disciples, folowed on continually the apostles teachinges (for thereby came moste profite) and lykewyse continued still in receiuing a token of a couenaunte, that shall neuer bee broken, whiche they called communion. That token of couenaunt which the lord taught, and committed to vs of trust, was doen in this maner. The bread was broken and dealed to euery man a pece therof, & they in their practising of this in a remembrannce of the lordes passion, gaue thankes to god for his bountifull goodnes, that had clensed them from sinne by the innocent bloud of his owne sonne alone, & had chosen them for the deathes sake which he suffered, on his parte vndestroyed, to enherite life eternall lasting. They offered vp also their prayers with clenes of herte, whose petition was that the kingdome of Jesus might bee made to spreade euery daye further abrode than other, that his glory might throughout all the worlde bee known, that his will euery where might bee folowed, that suche as had once professed the fayth of the gospell, might through the holy woorde, and grace celestiall celeſtiall, profit euery day, and procede better and better, and ſo might liue in concorde one with an other, eche one in peace with his brother forgeuing all iniuries, if any faute were doen by mans frayltie, being at one with god, whiche is mercifull to them that bee mercyfull to theyr neyghboure, and that they beeyng daply ſtrengthned by the goodnes of god, myght ſtedfaſtly abyde all the aſſautes of Satan, vntill they myght after long bickering with the ſayde Sathan, at laſte receiue eternall rewarde. Theſe were than the ſacrifices that chriſten men vſed. This wonderfull miracle of tongues, Peters exhortacion ſo lively made, the ſodaine mutacion of ſo many men, ſo great puritie and clennelle of lyfe of the ſame menne, wrought ſuche an effect in all theyr myndes, whiche were giltie and pitie to theyr owne offences, that they were ſore afrayed of ſome cruell to come towarde them. For they ſawe playnely, that this thing was not broughte about by mannes conſpyracy, but by ſome celeſtiall power. And for becauſe thapoſtles did not alonely ſpeake in all mennes languages, but wrought alſo at Hieruſalem, many wonderfull miracles, at thinuocacion of Jeſus name, in healyng diſeaſes, in putting deuils to flyght, in reiſing the dead to lyfe. This trembleyng feare that they were in, encroched and grewe ſtil more and more vpon theim. This was ſome beginning in the people towardes theyr amendement. But the celeſtiall ſpirite wrought in theyr hertes, whome ſecretly he inſpired, aboue all other thinges, in mutuall good wyll and concorde. For this truely is the very cognisaunce that Jeſus wouldе haue his diſciples knowen by.

And in prayers.

And feare came ouer euery ſoule.

And as many as beleued the goſpell, aſſembled vnto a place ordinately together for theyr conſolacion, exhorting one an other in mutuall communycacions. They were than many in numbre and men of al ſortes were admitted, without acception of perſons, young, olde, menne, women, free, bonde, poore, and ryche. The loue of Chriſte beeyng planted in theyr hertes, dyd in ſo greate conformitie of myndes and mutuall concorde, knyt and ioyne together them all, beyng otherwiſe ſo ferre odde eche to other, that all thinges were common emõgeſt them, whiche is a thing ſeldome ſene, yea emong brethren that came all out of one belly. And to thintent that eche of them, might the better departe ſomewhat of that he had to an other, ſuche as had manoures of theyr owne, or other poſſeſſions, ſolde them, and of the money, or prise thereof, made a common dole, as euery mannes nede required, ſo that neyther they wanted whiche had noughte of theyr owne, nor they had more than was ſufficient whiche before had muche in poſſeſſion. And ſo made they theyr dole, not as it were of theyr owne proper goodes, but as of thinges in common. For perfite charytie chalengeth no goodes, as her owne, and emong them whiche bee all of one mynde, no man is accoumpted a lorde of his owne goodes, and where eche man is content with litel, there it wyll bee harde to find lacke of thinges neceſſary. But the diſtribucion of the common was made to euery man, accordinge to his neceſſitie, and not to his ſenſualitie. The apoſtles preſcribed none of all theſe thinges for them to doe: but charitie did more among them without compulſion, than any lawe of Moyſes durſt require. And euery day were they alſo in the temple, in muche vnitie of minde, ſtedfaſt in prayer, rendring thankes to god, and exhortinge theimſelues together, and entiſing other to that peace of conſcience, whiche ỹ goſpel requireth, all that euer they were hable to coumpace.

And ſolde their poſſeſſions and goodes.

Moreouer

Moreouer whan they had thus spent the whole daye in suche godly exercises, they brake in euery house theyr breade, and eate their meate together, with ioy that herte cannot thinke, and eche one with other in perfecte clennes of herte, gaue prayse to god, through whole goodnes they had gotten them so muche loue and fauour. They were in fauour and good estimacion with all the people. For who is he that woulde not loue suche persons, that hurt no man, and be ready to do euery man good, in whom also appered maruelously so muche godly power, so great sobrenesse and meknes withall. And brake breade from house to house. &c.

Here mayest thou well marke, Theophilus, howe the churche had at her beginning by reason of ioy in mens hertes and vnitie with all, luckie tokens well to prosper. There muste nedes be conformitee of myndes and vnitie, where that spirite is, whiche is the pacifier of all troublous hertes: there cannot be but ioy and gladnes, where is a cleane conscience, without any obstruste of the promises, whiche are made in the gospell. But as the bishopes, Phariseis, Scribes and chiefe auncientes, or head men among the people, wer euery where alwayes redy to stea Jesus: so here at the luckye beegynnynges of this young churche, no mencion is made of theim. Noe persone was enforced to come to this felowshyp, no violente authoritie kept theym together in league. Suche as thither came, abode there still with other of theyr owne gentle courage, and the lorde allured to theim, whom he had appointed to bee saued, euery day more and more, whyle the smale musterdsede, was by litell and litell sprynging, whiche shoulde afterwarde spreade his braunches abrode, through al the worlde.

The.iii. Chapter.

The text.

¶ Peter and John went vp together into the temple, at the ninth houre of prayer. And a certayn man that was halte from his mothers wombe, was brought, whome thei layd dayly at the gate of the temple, which is called beautifull, to aske almes of them þ entred into the temple. Whan he sawe Peter and John, that they woulde into þ temple, he desired to receiue an almes. And Peter fastened his yes on him with John, and sayed: looke on vs. And he gaue hede vnto them, trustyng to receyue some thing of them. Then sayd Peter: Siluer and golde haue I none: But such as I haue I geue thee. In the name of Iesus Christ of Nazareth, rise and walke. And he toke him by the right hande and lifted him vp: And immediatly his feete and ancle bones receiued strengthe. And he sprang, stode, and walked, and entred with them into the temple, walking and leapinge, & praysing God.

PEter and John wente vp together in company with other into the temple, about the ninth houre of the daye, beyng than farre ouerpaste, at whiche houre, they, whereas other bee woonte to playe the dyounkardes, or els to slepe, had accustomed themselues dayly to deuout prayer, fastyng vntill it were euentide. These two went forth, the piers of thapostles, without trapped hozses, or barted mules, without any princely garde, but heare what pompe they vsed. There sate before the temple gate a begger well knowen emong the people, whiche had been euer lame from the firste houre of his birthe, and so weake a body withall, that he was borne all a long of poyters. Many one, as it chaunced, fared the better by his misery.

For

For euery day layed they him fooryth for they? owne aduauntage, at the temple gate, whiche the vulgare people called beautifull (for that was moste haunted) to thintent that he shoulde there alke, as in a place moste frequented, mennes almes, whiche went into the temple. Beggery is not without his shrewde, it knoweth that those whiche enter into the temple, are than ryther disposed to geue with better wyll their almes, or els woulde appeare to the people so disposed. Whan he had once perceiued that Peter and Iohn, whom their compaune whiche folowed them declared to bee of some estimacion, and they themselues in countenaunce semed to bee liberall, woulde go into the temple, he asked of theim an almes. Here gaue the holy goste prime warning to thapostles, that it was than a time conuenient to worcke a myracle. Than Peter and Iohn also, stedfastely beheld the same creple, and sayed: looke on vs. The begger beyng at the sight and coumfortable hope of theym, quycker in spirite and of better cheare, syed them well, hoppyng shortly some thing to receiue of them. Money he craued, for money he loked, as for the good disposicion of his lymmes, he durst not once alke. For whye he thought them not able to geue it. And yet for all that, his herte gaue him that some goodnesse shoulde happen he wist not what. Than Peter set forth himselfe boutely in wordes, whiche were full well semyng to Christes highe vicare to speake, and sayd: Syluer and golde whiche thou lookeste for, haue I none. What is here ready at hande, not of myne owne, but of the bounteousenesse of god, whiche thou dooeste rather lacke, that geue I thee. In the name of Iesus Christe of Nazareth ryse vp and walke. And with that he tooke the creple by the righte hande, and reysed hym vp. And immediately without any delay, his feete and ancle bones were made strong, in suche sorte, that he might aryse without peyne or difficultie, yea and leape, stande, and walke, whyther euer he woulde. But he, as one ryghte gladde in herte of suche a benefite vnlooked for, went with thapostles together into the temple, walkyng cherefully and leappyng for ioy and reioyeng, and geuyng laude and prayse to god, of whome he knewe that this his benefite of healthe, had proceded. To hyde the benefites of God, is the condicion of an vnthankefull persone: to ascribe the same to manne, is a poynt of mucbe vngodlyneste.

Whan he sawe Peter & Iohn. &c.

In ỹ name of Iesus Christe of Nazareth, arise and walke.

The texte. And all the people sawe him walke and prayse God. And they knewe him, that it was he which sate and begged at the beautifull gate of the temple. And they wondered, and were sore astonied at that, which had happened vnto him. And as ỹ halte which was healed, helde Peter and Iohn, all the people ran amased vnto them, in ỹ porche, that is called Salomons.

All the people, that was in the temple, whiche were in numbre very many, behelde the manne that was wont to bee carted with potters, than walking on foote cherefully, and rendring praise to god. And eche man knewe him to bee the selfe same person, that was wount to sit at the beautiful gate a begging. They behelde him sodainly chaunged. They hearde him geuing God thankes. Wherupon all they were greately dismayed, and sodaynly stryken with no litle wondre. But after that they sawe Peter and Iohn, whiche than were knowen with many, for the chiefe emong all the apostles, (for he that was lame kept himselfe on their parte, and blased abrode howe it chaunced him to come to health by their meanes) the whole assembly of all the people made streight towardes them. Than were they in the porche, whiche is called

Salo-

Salomons porch, where Jesus the trew Salomon, was woont to bee and where he had been woonte ofte tymes to dispute with the Pharisees. The straungenesse of the thing abated all their courages.

Whan Peter sawe that, he aunswered vnto the people: Ye men of Israell, why meruaile ye at this? or why loke ye so on vs, as though by our own power & strength we had made this man goe? The god of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of your fathers hath glorified his sonne Jesus whom ye deliuered, and denied in presence of Pilate, whe he iuged him to be loosed. But ye denied the holy and iust, and desired a murderer to bee geuen you, and killed the lorde of life, whom God hath rayled from death, of the which we are witnesses. And his name, through the fayth of his name, hath made this man sound whom ye see and know. And the fayth which is by him, hath geuen to him this health, in the presence of you all. The texte.

Whan Peter saw the faste gathering together of the people, and knewe righte well the cause therof, he beganne in this manner to vttre agayne his minde to them, and sayed: ye men of Israel, why doe ye so muche meruayle at this matter, as though it wer a seldome thing with you, and long out of vse to see miracles: or lyke as if ye had not seen heretofore in times paste, greater thinges and more to meruayle at than this? But why doe ye beholde vs, as though it had by our owne power, or defetuing, be brought to passe, that this lame cripple, a manne well knowen emong you, doeth now walke? It is not mans practise whiche here is done, neyther is it a new thyng, whiche ye doe see that heretofore hath not been spoken of, but such a thing that god long a goe prompsled by your prophetes. Reuerently ye doe worship the god of Abraham, the god of Isaac, and the god of Jacob, and ye auaunt your selfes in that ye haue them as your chiefe fathers, and firste beginners of your auncestry, but the very sonne of this same god, whom the chiefe fathers of your auncestry hath worshipped, beyng sente to you for your saluacion, poore and simple to loke vpon, to thintente that you shoulde make the more of him, as a familiare person lyke to one of you, ye haue brought to extreme vilanny and reproche. Notwithstanding the selfe same god hath by his infinite might and power, aduaunced his sonne to high renoume and glory, one whome man of malice, hath ouerthrowen, and god hath in this fact, lyke as he hath also many other wayes, wroughte by him miracles out of numbre, before your eyes, and taught you doctrine from heauen. But ye neuer a deale the better for al such benefites, deliuered him at the last, after many reprochfull iniuries, into the handes of the wicked, to thintent he shoulde be slaine, yea and where as Pilate a Panim, a man both without knowleage of your lawe, and of no kinred with your forefathers, wouldе haue geuen sentence of him as of your king, as of a blessed person & innocēt for his deliueraunce, yee which ought by reason of that knowlage ye had of prophecies, to recognise hym, haue slyely denyed hym, and openly, in the presidentes hyghe hall of iudgemente, saying: we haue no kinge but Cesar. And in suche a cruell rage ye were of rancour againste hym and hatred, that lieffer had ye to haue Barrabas, that notable theefe and seditious person pardoned at your requeste, whiche had despatched other of their liues, than to haue Jesus saued, who brought with hym lyfe for all menne. For a murtherers lyfe, ye obtained pardon, but for the authoure of euerlasting lyfe, ye procured deathe. Nenertheless, God hys father, the authoure and maker of all lyfe, hathe rayled hym whome ye haue slayne, from the dead

to lyfe againe, and liberally hath rewarded hym with lyfe that neuer shall haue ende. To the which thing beare we witnes, vnto whom he himselfe, after he was reuiued, ofte ones playnely appeared for vs to beholde, for vs to heare, and handle, whom we beheld also goyng vp to heauen. He came fyrste to you in a poze and simple aray, which he was contented to take vpon hym for all your sakes, but now is he by his father aduaunced to glozy, and put-
Of which we are witnesses. teth forth his power and strength by vs, which be nought els but witnesses to the thinges, whyche we haue seen and hearde. And for that trust and affyaunce whyche we haue in his name, this man, whom you see walke, bozne, as ye well knowe, bothe halte and lame, almightye god hath restozed to hys perfit limmes agayne. No prayse herein are we wozthy to haue, neyther are we through oure merytes, the cause thereof, neyther he that is restozed, but god the father, as I sayd, would haue his sonnes name magnifyed with all men, in the whyche name his pleasure is, that all people shoulde put their full trust, and hope of health vniuersall: by this assured trust and confidence, is this man, which hath been euer weake, from the fyrst houre of his birth, perfectly now, as ye all do see, in all his limmes restozed. These be euident argumentes not alonely to proue that he is on liue, whom ye suppose to be dead, but to declare also that all mennes hope of saluacion, is to be put in him alone.

The texte. And nowe brethren, I wot that through ignozaunce ye did it, as dyd also your rewlers. But God (which before had shewed by the mouthes of all his prophetes howe Christe should suffer) hath in this wise fulfylled. Repent you therefore, & conuerte, that your sinnes may be doen away, whan the time of refreshyng cummeth, whyche we shall haue of the presence of the lorde, and when God shal sende hym, which before was preached vnto you, euen Jesus Christe, whyche muste receyue heauen vntyll the tyme, that all thinges, whiche God hath spoken by the mouthe of all hys prophetes sence the world began, bee restozed agayne.

And cause there is none at all, my brethren, why ye shoulde despaire, for it hath thus come to passe accoyding to the will of God and his sufferaunce. Your offence herein and trespas is partely excused by mans ignozaunce. For his feble and weake body was a lette to you and impedimente, to knowe his diuine power, whiche diuine and godly power, no not your rewlers them selfes knewe perfectly. Whyche thing in him, if they had knowen readily, neuer would they haue been in minde to crucify the Prince of glozy.
But so was it expedient for mans saluacion, so had god determined before the beginning, so had he before shewed by the mouth of all his prophetes, that Messias, whome he wolde sende hymselfe to redeme you, shoulde suffer death. Now is god no lyer: whome he promised to send, the same person hath he sent: whom he would haue slayn, euen so, as he wolde haue it, is he slayne. This sacrifice wolde he haue offered vp to satisfy for the sinnes of all the wozlde, by you was this sacrifice offered, not without blame to you, but suche as ye shall haue forgyuenesse of, if ye repente that ye haue doen amisse. And so shall it come to passe, that your offence, whyche you committed to the weale of all men, shall turne to your singular wealthe also.
For your pardon is easy to come by and redy at hand. Only be you ashamed of your cruell doinges and sozowful, not alonely for this fact, but for al other, and see that you turne to a new life: openly confesse that Jesus, whome ye before haue denied, is king and rewler ouer all: whome ye haue to death condemned, as a person giltie, now doe ye acknowledge to be the very fountain

and giuer of all innocency, and whom ye haue violently put to death, beleue ye to be the author of immortall lyfe. Now is the time of pardon for synne, haste you this meane while to penaunce, and you shall fynde mercifulnes, that when he shall come ekteslones to iudge the quicke and the dead on high aboue in the cloudes, whome his father once sent simple & poore for your sakes, ye may be able constauntly to abide his presence, whiche shall be terrible to them, and intollerable, whiche hath not be penitent. But suche as for this meane space doe beleue in Jesus name, whome the prophetes hath many yeres a go publyshed to you, and whom we also accordyng to theyr prophecies, beare witnes of, and submit themselues to hym by fayth, puttyng theyr synne away by penaunce, shall fynde ehere with the righteous iudge, (who hath promised to all menne for fayth in him, and repentaunce of sinne euerlasting health) refreshyng. All those thinges are come hitherto well to passe, whiche as the prophetes hath heretofore tolde, were for to bee dooen and performed. And it is not to bee doubted but God will performe all the rest also, which he hath promised as faythfully. Jesus Christ shal come agayne, but by and by shall not he come agayne. For the gospell and thereful tidinges from god must be preached ouer all the worlde before his cumming: In the meane while liueth he in all glory, sitteth and reigneth in high heauens aboue, vntil that prescript time, wherof the Prophetes, Johel hath spoken and Malachie, when all thinges shall come by restitucion agayne and be made vp, and all at a poynte perfectly finished whiche god hath spoken of, by the mouth of all his holy Prophetes, as many as hath been since the beginning of the world. For of this one persone haue al they prophecied.

When the tyme of refreshing cometh.

Moses truely sayed vnto the fathers: a prophet shal the lorde your God rayse vp to you, euen of your brethren lyke vnto me: him shal ye heare, in all thinges whatsoeuer he shall say vnto you. For the time shall come, that euery soule which will not heare y same prophete, shalbe destroied from emong the people. All the prophetes also from Samuel and thence forth (as many as haue spoken) haue in likewise tolde of these dayes.

The texte.

Moses is with you of autozitie most auncient, for vnder his protection, as vnder your chiefe guide and capitain, ye left Egipt, ye traueled through wildernesse, ye receiued the lawe, but yet a promyse made he to you of this Jesus of Nazareth whome ye haue slayne speakyng after this maner to the fathers in hys booke of Deuteronomi: a prophete shall the lorde your god reyse vp vnto you, euen from emong your brethren lyke vnto me: him shall ye heare, in all that he shall saye vnto you. And it shall come to passe, that what soule soeuer shall not heare that prophete, shall be destroyed from emong the people. Now doe ye acknowelage this prophecye of Moses, recognise ye the true Moses, knowledge ye that Jesus Christe was borne of Dauids linage, of the tryde of Juda, in the Citie of Bethelem, accordyng to the prophetes sayinges. By this your guide & capitaine, god calleth you out of bondage, to that libertie whiche allway shall endure: by this capitayn hath he disclosed a new law supernal and euangelicall, and by this persone he offereth remission of all synnes and lyke euerlastyng. Moses wouldе that all men shoulde heare hym: eche man heareth, that in him beleueth. What person soeuer shal beleue in him shal be saued, who that refuseth to beleue, shalbe banished out of the felowshyp, & out of the name of the Israelites, & shall perysshe with out all recouery. For without faith in Jesus Chryste, no hope there is of saluacion.

If you geue faythe to Moses, than muste ye hartely loue Jesus, whome he hath so highly commended to you in his prophecy. Neyther hath Moses alone thus prophecied of Jesus, but all the Prophetes also, from Samuels time vntill John the baptist, hath prophecied, describing his natiuitie, doctrine, miracles, punyshmentes, infamie, death on the crosse, hys buryinge, and resurrection, his goyng vp to heauen, and the sending forth of the holy goste vpon all that beleueth, whiche thinges euery one are euidentlye come to passe, the spreading of the ghospell ouer all the worlde abrode, and the glorypous cumming of the lorde agayne at the ende of the worlde.

The texte. Ye are the children of the prophetes, and of the couenaunt whiche God made vnto oure fathers, sayeng to Abraham: Euen in thy sede shall all the kinreds of the yerth be blessed: First whan God had reised vp his sonne Jesus vnto you, he sent him to bielde you, that euery one of you should turne from his wickednesse.

But if that ye in very dede be the prophetes children, wherof ye auaunte your selues, not without a cause, haue ye than no distruste in their promyses: yf ye be the children of the patriarches, whiche wer the chiefe fathers of all your auncestry, vnderstande ye and perceiue that to you pertaineth the couenaunt and promyse that god made to Abraham, saying: thorow thy sede shall all the nations of the worlde be blessed. This blessing performed not he in Isaac, for he is dead, and to life is not he come againe, but in Jesus of Nazareth, whom Isaac in figure represented, offrynge hymselfe vp in sacrifice willyngly, like as Christe obeying his father, was offred as a sacrifice on the crosse. This is that sede of Abraham, wherby shall not onely all Israelites, but all nations also of the worlde, if they beleue the gospell, be deliuered of the curse whiche is due for synne, and obteyne therwithal this blessing, that after they haue once receyued the holy ghoste they may bee called the children of the liuing God. Wherfore the promise that god made vnto Abraham pertayneth vndoubtedly to all nations of the worlde, yet that not withstanding, his pleasure was to haue you thus honourably preferred, that his promise shoulde firste of all bee profered to you, and that he woulde accordyng to Moses prophecie, rayse one vp of your nacion, and sende to you no meane prophet, but his owne onely sonne Jesus, that shoulde disclose this blessyng, whiche god promised to Abraham. This is than that blessing that euery person obeying the worde of the ghospell, maye vtterly forsake all vice and naughty liuyng, and frankely confesse Jesus to bee the author of mannes saluacion.

The. iiii. Chapter.

The texte. As they spake vnto the people, the priestes and the rulers of the temple, and the Sadducees, came vpon them, takyng it greuously, that they taught the people, and preached in Jesus the resurrection from death. And they laied handes on them, & put them in holde vntyll the next daye: for it was nowe euentide, howbeit many of them which hearde the woordes, beleued: and the noumbre of the men was about fyue thousande.

Where

Whyle Peter that heauenly Oratour, and John his felow in office wyth hym, were occupyed in these and suche other Oracions, exhortyng the people to embrace the gospell, without coloure of flattery towarde any manne, enducyng them to the knowledge of the trueth by wytnesse of Prophetes, sometymes makyng theym afrayed wyth dreadfulnes of the great Judgement that was to come, eftesones appeasyng them, and pleasauntly intreatyng, by meanes of an easy waye to come by pardon, euen than ready at hande, and for the certaintye that was in the promyse of their saluation, sodaynly there came vpon theim the prestes, and rewlers of the temple, accompanyed also with Sadduces, who caused them to breake of in the myddes theyr holsome communication. The prestes and rulers felt themselues in this poynte agreued, that men of the laitie, vnlearned, should beare rule in the temple, and teach the people, where none els ought to speake but doctours of the lawe, Phariseis and Scribes, and in that also they were offended, that so honourably they spake of Jesus, whom they for a spitie person had put to deathe, whose name to abolysshe, was theyr earnest desyre and study. But of all other thynges, that set the Sadduces on fyre against the apostles, because they stycked not openly to publysshe that Jesus was ryssen from death to lyfe, and to promise, that al men thorowe him, should ryse agayne. For the Sadduces beleue nother aungell to be, nor soule on lyue, after they be once separate from the body. Wherfore they coulde in no wyse abyde any rehersall of resurrection. Here doeth nowe the wycked bulshoppes eftsones make assault against the ghospel, which thyng Jesus had tolde before to his disciples, shoulde come to passe. But lyke as mannes malice, the more it wrastled and stroue against Christe, the more it set forth his glorye and renoume, euen so the more they dyd rebell against the preachers of his ghospell, the more vehemently dyd out the strength therof and vertue. But nowe what do they? They reason not with the apostles, but laye fast handes vpon them, furth awaye they hale theym to prysen for a tyme, that they myght be furth cummyng the nexte morowe. For than was euentyde at hande. The cruell and mischeuous prestes were ready in wyll euen there furthwith to haue slayne Jesus disciples, but for feare on the other parte, of the people, they stayghed theyr handes, and imagined the meane time some coulourable pretence of that cursed acte, that they myghte appeare to dyng about theyr pretensed purpose, lawfully. But as they malyce coulde naught prouayle against Christe, vntyll the tyme was come that he himselfe was contented to dye, so in lyke maner was their conspiracie nought able to doe against Christes disciples, before the day came that the father of heauen had prescribed to eche of theim. For Christes power was with hys Apostles. And yet was not that sermon whiche these twoo apostles made, (thoughe it were interrupted by the priestes,) wythout condigne frute. For many that heardethe Apostles preache, were therby perswaded to beleue.

And preached in Jesus the resurrection ted death

Than was the nette encreased, the lytle grayne of Mustarde sede was stretched out in the bredth, the leuen of the ghospell scattered abrode his vertue in sondry partes. For the faythfull at that tyme amounted to the noumbre of fyue thousande men. Note that the ghospell is a thyng accepted commonly and fauoured of the meane people, seldome doeth the nobles of the worlde, well agree with it. Note also the successe of the ghospell. The chiefe of all and capitaines moste excellent, are led to prison. Neither stroued they agayne their guydes, nor any trouble made the people therat, whiche were taught noughte els, but to obey Christe, and to put theyr trust in hym.

The texte. ¶ And it chaunced on the morowe, that their rulers and elders and scribes (and Annas the chiefe prieste, and Caiphas and Johu, and Alexander, & as many as were of the kinred of the high priestes) gathered together at Jerusalem. And when they had sette them before them, they asked, by what power, or in what name haue ye done this?

On the morowe, the wicked counsell assembled together, no where in one consent of myndes, but to put Jesus to death, and the trueth to oppresse. The priestes and temple rulers, the elders and auncientes of the people, with the Scribes of Hierusalem, assembled in one place together. Besydes these, came Annas thyther, the hygh bysshop, and Caiphas in one confederacie with him, by reason of aliaunce: moreouer John and Alexandre, the chiefe at that tyme emong the priestes. And fynally, as many as were of the priestes kinred, emong whome the higher that eche manne was at that tyme in authoritie, the more was he mischeuous. But well it doeth appeare of this theyr busy and paynfull diligence, that it was no common or smalle matter, whyche they so carefully labored to stente. For what should the matter meane that all they should bee afrayed of a fewe persons, men vnknowen, out of reputation, vnlearned, yea the disciples of a condemned persone, whiche was crucified? But soone there were brought bothe Peter and John, and for gilte persons, before them were they presented. What simple persone and vnlearned, would not be abashed at the syght of so greate an assemblie, and in autoritie so honourable: syght sat downe the stoute stately bishoppes and priestes, with them the heade men of theyr religion: than nert to them the rewlers of the temple, afterwarde the elders among the people, eche thyng there was doen with solemne authoritie. Euen than consydered the apostles with themselues, the cruel and vnryghteous iudgementes that they had vsed towarde theyr master Jesus. And yet for all that, stode they in countenaunce cleare and vndismayed. Their Lorde vndoubtedly and theyr mayster Jesus, had tolde them before that all these thynges shoulde betyde them, and had armed their myndes stowtely to stande agaynst suche casuall aduersitie. Here agayne marke me wel an example of that iudgemente, that Jesus himselfe was condemned by. Vpon the demaunde of a question, was Christ taken. And here lykewyse enquired they, as concernyng the creple that was healed: by what authoritie, or in whose name doe ye thys? Thys question myghte they haue asked in the temple, before they brought them to prison, thys thyng myght they haue learned as the people dyd: for Peter declared the cause of this facte euidently. But lieter had they to pyke a quarell with them. And as for the trueth, afterwarde passed they nothyng vpon: but sought occasion to worke them displeasure. A token this was, that theyr ordre of priesthood should within a shorte whyle haue an ende, seyng that they, both faultie and vicious, had nought els to defende their authoritie, but counselles of conspiracie, pryssons, and soondrye kyndes of death.

And when they had set them before them they asked, by what power, or in what name haue ye done this?

Then

Then peter full of the holy goſt, ſayed vnto theym: Ye rewlers of the people, and elders of Iſraell, yf we this day be examined of the good dede that we haue doen to the ſicke man, by what meanes he is made whole: Be it knowen vnto you al, and to al ſ peo-ple of Iſraell, that by the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God rayſed agayne from death: euen by him, doeth this man here ſtande preſente before you, whole. This is the ſtone which was caſt aſyde of you buylders, which is become the chefe of the corner. Neyther is there ſaluation in any other. For amonge men vnder heuen, there is geuen none other name, wherin we muſt be ſaued. The texte.

Now what doeth Peter in this caſe, he that thyſe before with an othe denyed his maiſter, at the threatninges of a litle poore wenche, being ſeruaũt: Doeth he tremble for feare? In he, as one that lacketh his ryght wyttes, diſ-mayed? Or cannot he ſpeake? No none of al theſe. Or what than? he vndoubtedly was framed after an other ſorte. For whyle Peter lyued after his owne will and phantaſie, he ſticked not to crake and promiſe of himſelfe verye largely: ſhortely after rennyth he awaye, and falſely forſwereth himſelfe, all promyſes whiche he before had vnaduiſedly made, cleane forgotten: but in thys place conſtantly, as one repleniſhed with the holy ghoſt, reaſoned he his cauſe, with-out any deliberation, fully to an ende; temperyng his tale with woonderfull wyſedome, in ſuche ſorte, that neyther his free talke was to any man reprochefull, neyther of his ſorte and gentle ſpeache appered any feare to bee in hym or flattery, but his endeuour was with all his wel decked eloquence, this to perſwade, that Jeſus was the authour of mannes ſaluation.

Than Peters woordes that he ſpake to them, were theſe: ye that are princes, the Rulers of the people, and elders, gyue eare vnto me: trewly ſuche marueil had I wherfore and why we were commaunded to pryſon, ſeyng that we knowe of none haynouſe crime that we committed, and becauſe prynces are not wont to empryſon men, but for theyr wicked doynges. Nowe ye haue no crime, as I can heare, to bryng in againſt vs, neyther any miſchenous dede to laye to our charge, but that ye wyll examyne vs of a good turne whiche this man hath gotten beyng now whole and ſounde, who was before ſycke, and ſhonke together. I wyll not ſtycke to declare to you the cauſe & maner ther-of. For it belongeth to our office gentily to make accompte or declaration of Chriſtes fayth, to all that be deſyrouſe to learne. Wherfore, be ye all well aſ-ſured of this, not only ye that are the chiefe and head menne, but all ye alſo which be the commons of Iſraell, (for the doctrine that we teache pertayneth to al mennes ſaluacion, whether they be prynces, and of the nobilitie, or els of the comminaltie,) that this man, whome ye ſee ſtande by vs in lymmes both whole and ſounde, who was wonte before, as it is not vnknowen to you, to be caryed of poſters, nowe hath obtayned this benefite of health, neyther by magikes art, nor by mans power, neyther yet through our deſeruynges, but by inuocation of ꝑ Lord Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, whom ye, but few dayes agoe, vpon ſentence gyuen of Ponce Pilate, nayled faſt vpon the croſſe. But God hath rayſed hym from death, and freely geuen him rule ouer all, in life euerlaſtyng. Therefore the ſtrength & vertue of his name, worketh now effec-tually the ſame thyng in healyng men and ſauyng theym, that he hymſelf was wonte here on yearth, to woorke. No doubt, this is it, that the Prophete Da-uid heretofore ſpake in his pſalme of a ſtone that man ſhould reiecte, but God shoulde see it highly exalted. This Jesus of Nazareth is the very same stone, whiche ye in buyldyng of your Synagogue, refused. From the whiche buyldyng ye threwe hym awaye as an outcaste, but God hath made hym the head corner stone, to holde streight together, by his diuine strength and power, the whole churche, whiche is for to bee sette vp and buylded, both of Iewes and Gentiles. For this persons sake, our father of heauen proffereth all men saluacion, and there is no hope at all for any manne to be saued, but thorowe Jesus. I knowe well that Moyses, the patriarches, and prophetes, are in holye and auncient authorittie with you. But so was it thoughte good to the father of heauen, that his sonne alone shoulde worke all mennes saluacion, whereof he would haue to be called Jesus. Any other name haue not we already vnder heauen, nor in tyme to come shall haue, whereby we must be saued. Than haue ye no cause to meruayle that this creple was hable so muche to obtaine, at thinuocatiō of this name, seyng that he hath worthely merited and deserued health euerlastyng, for all persones that calleth vpon hym.

The texte. When they sawe the boldenes of Peter and John, and vnderstoode that they were vnlerned and lay men, they maruepled, and they knewe them, that they had bene with Jesu: and beholdyng also the man (whiche was healed) standyng by them, they coulde not saye agaynste it: but commaunded them to goe a lyde out of the counsell, & counselled among themselues, sayeng: what shall we do to these men? for a manifest sygne is done by them, & is openly knowen to all them that dwell in Jerusalem, and we cannot deny it. But that it be nopsed no farther abrode among the people, let vs threaten & charge them, that they speake hence forth to no man in this name.

When Peter had spoken these wordes, as many as were in that counsell, beholdyng both in Peter and John, free courage and fredfastnes of mynde, whiche appered in their very countenaunce: and perceyuyng also, that they were of the comens, men vnlearned, wundered greatly whervpon they should beare themselues so bolde, howe they came by suche eloquence, and so perfyte vnderstandyng of the prophetes. In conclusion, they came into remembraunce of them, how they had kepte company with Jesus, whome they themselues knewe certaynly to be slayne of enuy. They were in a great perplexitie, by reason that they, beyng of the base sorte of men, and vnlearned, were so bolde spirited, & so free of tong and liberall, who neither for the deadly paynes whyche theyr master suffred, neither for the honour & authorittie of so famous assembly, were troubled any thyng at all in mynde. They beheilde the man himselfe present, well knowen with all the people, who beyng borne notably lame, than myght walke therefully. Moreouer was this myracle wrought, not in any secrete place, but before the temple doore, not by magikes arte, but at the inuocacion of Jesus name, whom they supposed deade. The facte was so euident, that they could not well deny it. And occasion had they none to finde faulte with them. For what is more worthy the fauorable reporte of many, than to make a wretched lame creature whole without rewarde. None answere therfore make they to ye apostles, for nought had they to answere: as for that whiche was alreadye done, they coulde not disprowe, and to allowe the same, they would not. Wherfore vpon commaundement geuen to the apostles, that they with the healed person also, shoulde departe out of theyr assembly, they fell in consultacion, and layed their heades together, sayeng: what shal we doe

with these men although but rude and rascall-like? For why? This notable miracle which was set forth by them, is better known withall that dwell in Jerusalem, then we shalbe able to disfourme. If we deny the facte, we shall gaine vs nought els therby, but shame, and dishonestie: yf we condemne and punyshe them, we shall seme wyde of all mercye, and cleane without iustice, and the more shall we stirre vp the people agaynst vs. There is none other counsell for vs to take, but some more quiet waye muste we folowe, and prouide that this euill (howe soeuer it hath sprong) creape no further abrode, neyther bee published among the people. For all suche maner sores, or poyntes of infection, whan they are once sprong in a communaltie, be wonte, yf a man bere and anger them, to ware stronger, and with a violent rage further to go abrode, than yf they were made syght of.

It semeth therfore a good waye for vs, to holde of our handes from them, but let vs make them afraped with sharpe and cruell threatnynges, that they make from henceforth no mencion of Jesus name to no manne on lyue, whether he be Jewe, or of any other nacion. This theyr counsell, which was as lyghe as myght be spoken, pleased all the whole assembly, and euery man with one assent, agreed therto. For than had they perceiued that the apostles were valiaunt of courage, and would not alter or chaunge their myndes. Thei perceyued lykewyse, that this miracle was not vnknowen to all the people, they were not to learne that Jesus name was with them of no small efficacie, and for mans health a present remedy. Howe could they than for shame commaund, or what hope had they to haue that name kepte vnder, specially seyng they myght thorowe the selfesame name, attayne vnto eternall saluacion? Suche berely are the counsels of prynces, of Bysshoppes, prieستes and of other the chefe of the communaltie, as ofte as they gather theyr assemblyes together, by policie of mannes witte. Sometyme there be amonges them, whiche canne playnely see what doeth well agree with good reason, but yet they perceyue in folowyng of the selfesame, some losse should ensue of their renowme, decaye of rychis, or some other suche lyke incommoditie.

Let vs threaten & charge them. &c.

¶ And they called them, and commaunded them, that in no wyse they should speake, ne teache in the name of Jesu. But Peter and John answered, and saied vnto them: whether it be right in the sight of God to herken vnto you more then to god, iudge ye. For we cannot but speake, that whiche we haue sene and heard. So threatned they them, and let them goe, and found nothyng howe to punyshe them, because of the people. For all men praysed God because of that whiche was doen: For the man was aboue fowertie yeare olde, on whom this miracle of healyng, was shewed.

The texte.

Whan eche of them had well allowed this decree, they called in the apostles it was declared to them in name of the whole counsell, that they shoulde teache no man on lyue, Jesus Doctrine: ne make in any wyse mencion of hys name, eyther by speche vnwares to them, ne yet in hearyng of any multitude, neyther openly, ne priuely at home, or els abrode. O the folyshe wysdome of the worlde, they could not kepe him in his graue whan he was deade, & nowe goe they about to burye or suppresse the name, whiche is wonte alwayes after death, to be better knowen. Peter and John, after the counsels decree was rehearsed them with solempne authoritie, made this answere thereunto very constauntly, but without any woorde spoken to mans rebuke: Iudge ye your selues that knowe the lawe, whether it be well before God that we shoulde be more obedient to you, than to Gods commaundemente. God hath heretofore sayed by the mouth of his Prophetes, that it should euen thus come to passe, Christe the sonne of God thus commaunded vs, and so lykewyse that heauenly spirite, whom he promysed vs to sende downe from his father, instourmeth vs secretly, and putteth into our myndes, that we should for all mennes saluacion, publyshe the name of our lorde Jesus Christe, bearyng wytnesse also to that that we haue sene and heard. If ye myndе to be of an vpright iudgement, ye also will submit your selues to the wyll of God. If not, whatsoeuer ye decree of vs, truly we may not otherwise do, than speake that we sawe with our eyes, what we heard with our eares, and that God, who ought to bee aboue all men obeyed, would haue preached abrode to all men. Whan the counsell had hearde of them this aunswere, so wysely made, and franckly, they wente nought els about, but to make them sore afrayed wyth threatnynges. Alas, a counsell without all hope of recouery, they haue no argument to perswademo reasons or causes, why they shoulde rebuke: neyther testimonies they haue of scripture, wherwithall to teache. Their whole authoritie is but threatninges. O the wicked conscience alwayes fearful. Their desyre was to punishe the innocentes, a malicious will was ready in them, but they beyng as they were, pryuces, yet were afrayed of theyr symple poore subiectes, mē in publike office, in dreade of pryuate persones, many in numbre, in feare of fewe, yea men defensed, of them that were vnarmed, men of learnyng, of men vnlearned: as for thapostles had neither any retinewe nor garde for their defence, nor bandes of noble estate allured to them. But lordes they were of that, that no yearthly power was hable to geue, as to make the lame at the name of Jesus Christe, to aryse and walke. To do man good, thapostles were in power myghtie, but as touchyng hurte they were doyde of all strength. And so were the apostles for that tyme dimitted of that counsell, beyng charged with their sore threatenynges. Yet had not the chiefe counsellers cast of theyr cākred malice, but differred it in myndе to get afterward some other occasion. For they could fynde no waye to punishe them, and that because of the people, whome they feared, hauing no regarde in themselfe at all to god. For all men highly praysed them, as touchyng that miracle whiche was done, in healyng the lame cripple. And eche manne noted it the more, bycause the persone in whome this miracle was wrought, was aboue fowertie yeres of age. So was he borne, and thus many yeres set forth this begger to the open sight of the worlde, his infirmitie, so that no man coulde accuse or finde fault with their doinges, as though his impediment had be counterfeite, or els some lyght or small defaymitie not worthy consideration.

So threatened they the and let the go.&c.

Alone as they were let go, they came to theyr fellowes, and shewed all that the hie priestes and elders had sayed. And whan they heard that, they lift vp their voices to god with one accorde, and sayed: Lorde, thou art God, which hast made heauen and earth, the sea and all that in them is, which in the holy ghost, by the mouth of thy seruaunt David our father, hast sayed: why hyd the heathē rage, & the people imagine vaine thinges? The kinges of the earth stode vp, and the rulers came together against the Lorde and against his anointed.

The texte.

Than Peter and John beyng dispatched of the counsell, retourned to their company company, beyng than in theyr high parlour altogether carefull in mynde what ende should come of that consultacion whiche was in hande, and rehearsed to them in ordre all the whole matter, what the princes had layed to theyr charge, and of the aunswer that they had made thereunto. The inward true loue that eche one bare to other, replenyshed theyr heartes vpon these tydynges tolde them, with exceding Ioye. The disciples were glad that the chiefe and pieres of all thapostles were dimyssed. Thapostles on the other parte reioyced in the bountcousnes of their lorde, by whome his disciples attained vnto suche ioye.

And when they hearde that, they lift vp their voyces to God with one accorde.

God after this maner and sorte tempereth all thynges in his seruauntes, so that with sorowe he mingleth ioy, to the ende that they may be hable patiently to suffer, and endure aduersitie, and that eyther vpon thother syde may for glad some thynges, rendre hertie thankes, and in heauinelle pray vnto the Lorde. After the whole company had than heard the apostles tale, they spake aloude with one assente vnto the Lorde, of whose goodnes the ghospell had begon to haue right good successe, & sayed: Lord God omnipotent, that madest thorowe thy woorde, heauen, earth, the sea, & whatsoeuer is in them contayned, whose moste blessed wyll no power of man is able to withstande: whose eternall decrees, no mans conspiracie is hable to empayre, for all that nowe we see here brought to passe, thy blessed spirite hath spoken of before, by the mouth of thy faythfull seruaunt Dauid our Patrypatche, saying: Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine vayne thynges? The kynges of the earth stande vp, and the prynces hath gathered themselues together agaynst the Lorde, and agaynste his Christe: All we recognise trueth in this prophecie. For what he sawe to come, beyng than enspired with thy holy spirite: that see we both doen in very dede, and the doyng of thesame.

The texte.

For of a trueth agaynste thy holy chylde Jesus, whom thou hast enoynted, bothe Herode, and also Poncius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, gathered themselues together, for to do whatsoeuer thy hande and thy counsell determined before to be done. And nowe lorde, behold their threatenynges, and graunt vnto thy seruauntes, that with all confidence, they may speake thy woorde, So that thou stretche fourth thy hand, that healyng, and signes, and wonders, be doen by the name of thy holy child Jesus. And assone as they had made theyr praier, the place moued where they were assembled together, and they were all fylled with the holy ghost, and they spake the woorde of god boldely.

For in this citie whiche professeth holines, both Herode, and Ponce Pilate yearthly prynces, with the heathē, and people of Israell, gathered themselues together, agaynst the maister and capitayne of all holynelle, thy holy chylde Jesus, whom thou hast enoynted with an heauenly oynctment, forcastyng with theyr wicked counsell, to bryng those thynges to passe, whiche thou of thy power inuincible, and eternall decree, haddest determined to bee doen for the saluacion of man. But whosoeuer conspireth againste thy sonne Jesus, sent downe from the, he conspireth agaynst the. And beholde a great assembly of the chiefe rulers, are cum eftsones together, to conspire agaynst the holy and blessed name of thy sonne Jesus. But lyke as thou dyddest reyse Jesus from death beyng slayne of them, and aduaunced hym to heauens, as partener of thy kingdome, dysapoynting them of theyr purpoles, euen so see nowe vnto theyr threatenung, that they in no wyse preuayle, but strength & courage thy seruauntes, that they may with moste stedfaste boldnes, vttre the ghospell, whiche is not mannes woorde, but thy woorde, that is to saye, brought downe from thee to earth, by thy sonne for all our sakes: and lyke as thy miracle in makyng whole the lame creple, allured many to profesle the name of Jesus, and feared the prynces, whiche were all bent in conspiracie agaynst his glory, euen so vouchesafe to ayde them nowe in tyme to come, wyth thy almyghtye power, that by meanes of healyng, & worksyng of wondrefull miracles thyrowe the holy name of thy sonne Jesus, the glorye of thy ghospell maye the clearer shyne and further abrode, while they that rebell agaynst the and thy sonne, doe rage all in vayne.

And alsone as they had made theyr prayer the place moued where they were pe.

Whan they had thus made theyr prayer with one accorde, the place where they together stode, trembled. Which thing betokeneth that their prayer was graciously heard with the lorde, and their desire ratified. For there is nothing so effectuall, as is the prayer of the churche in one whole consent.

Verely it ought to be of no small strength and power, that was hable to shake the earthe whiche is not of it selfe mouable. This was no token, for the lyuely strength of the holy ghost was forthwith in the all renewed and augmented, in somuch that they would not for all suche threatnynges as the prynces made, concele and hyde the ghospell, but preached the name of theyr maister Jesus more stedfastely, and more frankely, yea more of theym also in numbre than before. For suche is the nature of the ghospell as touching his encrease, that lyke as Sakron and other thynges many moe come forthe, although they be pyll handeled, more plenteously: euen so aryseth vp the ghospell agaynst the assaultes of the worlde, and the sooner by wrastelyng ther with, ouercommeth the same. The faithfull that profelled the name of Jesus, amounted than within fewe dayes to a woondrefull great numbre.

And they were fylled with the holy ghoste, & they spake the wordes of God boldly.

The texte.

And the multitude of them that beleued, were of one herte, and of one soule. Neyther saied any of them, that ought of the thinges whiche he possessed, was his owne, but they had all thynges common. And with great power gaue the apostles witnes of the resurrection of the lorde Jesu. And great grace was with them all. Neyther was there any among them that lacked. For as many as were possessours of landes or houses, sold them, and brought the pryce of the thynges that were solde, and layed it downe at the apostles feete: And distribution was made vnto euery man accordyng as he had nede. And Joses, whiche was also called of the apostles, Barnabas, that is to saye the sonne of consolation, being a Leuite, and of the countrey of Cyprus, where as he had lande, solde it, and laied the pryce downe at the apostles feete.

And yet that thou mayest vnderstande howe this theyr consent of myndes came not of mannes policie, among so many together in one companye, there was no ambicion at all, no enuy, no brawlyng, no stryuyng, but in suche conformitie of mynde and peaceable quietnes of herte were they all, as a man would haue thought them all, to be of one harte and one mynde. For than was eche man at a poynte with himselfe no longer to folow his owne mynde, which is in all sortes of men so diuerse, that vnneath a man maye finde two brothers germane, that can agree betwixt themselues. But as for this company, Jesus was the ruler of them all by his owne blessed spirite. From thence proceded that so great a consent of so many persons together, one vnlike an other either in kinred, age, or worldely substaunce, insomuche that not onely those thynges were common amongest them, whiche eche man is wonte to departe one to other, withoute losse to the geuer, of the whiche maner thynges bee learnyng, counsell, admonicion, consolacion and exhortacion, but temporall possessions also, whiche are communicate to other, not without damnage or losse to the possessour, and therfore scarcely may a man fynde any, that can be content to be in this poynte liberall. But ſuche thynges amongeſt them all were ſo common, that no man would ſomuche as once chalenge any thyng of all that he poſſeſſed, for his owne. Ac herfore he that gaue any of his owne goodes, looked for no thankes at their handes that receyued the ſame, becauſe he thought all that was geuen, to be hys owne property good, that had nede of it, and hymſelfe a robber and no iuſt perſon, yf he ſhould withholde any thyng that his brothers neceſſitie requyred. But the apoſtles, which were as chefe pieres of thys newe citie, keeping diſpuruyced of worldely goodes, but riche in gyftes of the holy ghoſt, augmented theyr company euery day more than other, bearyng wytnes of our Lord Jeſus Chriſtes reſurrection, wt wonderfull great ſtedfaſtneſſe of mynde, and myghty power in worſhyng of miracles. For his reſurrection was pryncipally to be perſwaded by witnes of miracles. For many one at his death had been preſent, and not a fewe had been pryuy to his burial. And ſo lyued thys newe communalitie vnder ryght valyaunte Capitaynes, hauyng aboundaunce of all thinges, for what they lacked in goodes, was ſupplied and borne out, with mutuall loue and concorde. For although many one were poore, yet was there none amongeſt them that lacked. For as many as were poſſeſſioners, eyther of landes, or houſes, made ſale of them, and brought ye pryce therof, and laied it at the Apoſtles feete, that they whom reuerently as fathers they regarded, myght diſtribute the ſame goodes in common, at theyr owne pleaſure. Fynally there was no leſſe vprightnes amongeſt them, that dealed the pryce of mennes poſſeſſions, then was with thoſe whiche brought it. Truerly and vprightly dealyng is ſeldome founde among ſtewardes of houſholde, and layers out of money. But here was that diſtribucion made among them, accordyng to euery mannes neceſſitie, without any choyſe had of perſons.

And diſtribucion was made vnto euery man accordyng as he had nede.

There was in this company, one Joſeph, whome the apoſtles by ſyrname called Barnabas, whiche worde in the Syrians toung betokeneth ſonne of comforte, by bloud and aunceſtry a Leuyte, borne in Cipres. This Joſeph becauſe he dyd excell among othet in great gyftes, and qualities of the mynde, by reaſon wherof he was called Barnabas, for the ioyfull comforte that the multitude had of his acceſſe, was an example for many to folowe that liberalitie, whiche was ſemely for the ghoſpel. For whereas he had lande in Cypres, he ſolde it, and brought the pryce therof, and layed it at the Apoſtles feete, as though it had been a vyle thyng and worthy to be deſpiled. But yet were the Apoſtles of ſuche holynes, that they would take nothyng therof for them ſelues, aboue other.

The.v. Chapter.

¶ A certayne man named Ananias, with Saphira his wyfe, ſolde a poſſeſſion, and kepte awaye parte of the pryce (his wyfe alſo being of counſell) and brought a certayne part, and layed it downe at the apoſtles feete. But Peter ſaid: Ananias, howe is it, that Sathan hath fylled thyne herte, that thou ſhouldeſt lye vnto the holy ghoſt, and kepe awaye part of the pryce of the landes? Pertayned it not vnto the onlyeſt after it was ſolde, was it not in thyne owne power? why haſt thou conceiued this thing in thine herte: thou haſt lyed not vnto me, but vnto God. Whan Ananias heard theſe wordes, he fell downe, and gaue vp the ghoſt. And great feare came on all them that hearde theſe thynges. And the yonge men aroſe vp, and put him aparte, and caryed him out, and buryed him. The texte.

But lyke as Barnabas playne trueth without colourable deceite, moued many to folowe his lyberalitie, so was here an exaple to put al people in feare, that in matters of spiritual charge, one should not decepue an other. For the holy ghost loueth playnes of heaerte, and hateth al deceite & dissimulacion. In like maner Judas among the twelue Apostles, was an example, that no man shoulde put affiaunce in hymselfe, but that eche manne should with all carefull diligence, continewe in doyng his dutie.

A certayne man named Ananias. &c

There was of this compaine, a certayne man called Ananias, one farre vnlyke vnto his owne name, because he thoughly not consented to the gracious fauour of God. This Ananias had a wyfe called Saphira, not vnlyke vnto the houlsande. Whan that Ananias, moze ambicious of honour, the destrous of perfite holynesse, sawe dyuerse persons hyghly commended of all menne, for their free & sincere lyberalitie, he solde his lande: & lated vp parte of the money, his wyfe being pryuy vnto it and allowing the same, that of the two partes, wherein his money was deuided, the one shoulde purchase him prayse of the people, with an estimation also of fame of holynesse, the other wouldo he kepe for hymselfe, yf any nede should happen, distrusting doubtlesse the holy ghoste, and moze caring of prouiding for hymselfe then for the whole company of his brethren, reckenyng thus with himselfe: yf other dye for hunger, I am sufficiently prouided for. Suche forecasting was not beseemyng a man that should put his whole affiance in Christe, who promysed that they shoulde wante nothyng, that seketh for the kyngdome of god, and the righteousnes therof: neyther was this imagination mete for hym whiche shoulde bee of one will with other, and of one mynde. Whan he had brought to the apostles feete, parte of the money, that his liuelode was solde for, better vnderstandyng by inspiracion of the holy ghoste, whiche was in him aboundauntly, the maners vngodly dissimulacion, sayed: Ananias, where as thou hast once dedicate thy selfe to the holy ghost, and seen his power by so many tokens euidently declared, why hast thou suffered the deuill nowe eftesones to put this in thy mynde, to take by stelth awaye, parte of that money, whiche thou receyuedst for thy liuelode, as though thou couldest face downe the holy ghost with a lye, who can in nowyse be decepued, and to bryng into this compaine suche a pestilente, moste daungerouse? If we had constrayned thee to sell thy liuelode against thy will, some cause peraduenture it might haue been for to dissemble, nowe sence thou diddest this of thyne owne free wyll, whiche thou haste done, to what purpose auayled it to deface that thyng with hypocrysie, whiche should haue bene to other an example of liberalitie? Rightest not thou haue kept thy lande in thyne owne hand, yf thou wouldest: and moreouer, after thou haddest solde it, couldest not thou haue reserued the money wholy vnto thy selfe? They for their truethe & playne dealyng, are well commended, whiche of theyr owne free will, bryngeth forth all that they haue. For we enforce no man thus to doe, yf he be not willyng to the same. Upon what occasion than hast thou stablyshed in thy minde, thus to dissemble in this matter? It is not man that thou hast made this lye vnto, but almightie god. Yf thou thinkest that god may be decepued: thyne opinion of him, is false and vngodly. But yf thou beleue that he is pryuie to all Ananias, howe is it that Sathā hath fylled thyne herte that thou shouldest lie vnto ỹ holy ghost. &c.

all thynges, eyther thou despisest his righteousnesse, or els thou thynkest that he fauoureth falsehood. Ananias than perceyuing that thapostles knewe hys falsehood, sodaynly fell downe, as one that had be stricken to the herte with a sharpe rebuke, and yelded vp the ghoste. One for an example suffered death, that many myght be therby preserued. For after that this facte was bruted abrode, it made many sore afrayed, that none durste enterpryse any suche lyke offence against the holy ghost: Young men remoued thence the dead corse, and when they had carryed it forth, buryed it.

When Ananias hearde these woordes, he fell downe, and gaue vp the ghoste. &c.

He deserued not to be buryed, yet ought he thence to be remoued, lest his dead body should infecte that pure and holy companie. Here peraduenture some wyll meruayle at Peters sharpnes towardes Ananias, that but late before so tentily entreated them, that had crucified Christe, to receyue pardon for their offences, ascribyng all that was doen to ignoraunce, and preferryng the penytent person, health of soule euerlastyng. But here rebuked he this person so sharpely for withholdyng a small portion of money, contrarye to his yberall promyse, that there was no hope at all for him to come by pardone. For whye Jesus the Lorde, that had geuen commaundement for all men to be called by meane of baptisme, to their saluacion, pardonyng theyr offences, would teache by the example of violent death in a fewe persons, howe muche the offence is more greuous to fall in synne after baptysme, and wyght receyued of the ghospell, not nowe of any vnadusednes or ignoraūce, but of a wilful dissimulacion. And Peter knewe that the moste pestilent plague that the plaine simplicitie of the ghospell could haue, should spryng of dissimulacion & auarice, and therfore euen at the begynnyng of the churche, a notable example was openly set forth, to admonisshe all people, þ none should escape, whosoeuer folowed the steppes of Ananias, the vengeaūce of god, although that his offence were not in this world forthwith punished. As for the losse of the money, was not here rekened vpon, but his mystrust in God, and mocking of his holy spirite. Peter hymselfe punished not the person, but for his soules health sharply he rebuked him. But bycause he neyther bzast out into weppyng, nor expressed any woorde at all of repentaunce, God toke vengeaunce on hym.

And thus of goddes wonderfull mercy towardes manne, one was stricken, that many might be saued. In example of iustice was set forth towardes hym that dyed, and mercy beside was largely powred out on many one, that toke heede, at his example, to eschewe synne.

The texte.

And it fortuned (as it were about the space of thre houres after) that his wife came in, ignoraunt of that which was doen. And Peter sayd vnto her: Tell me, solde ye not the lande for so muche? And she sayd: yea, for so muche. Than Peter sayd vnto her: Why haue ye agreed together to tempte the spirite of the Lorde? Behold, the fete of thē which haue buried thy housband, are at the doore, and shall carry thee out. Than fell she downe straightway at his feete, and yelded vp the ghost. And the young men came in, and found her dead, and carryed her out, and buried her by her housbande. And great feare came on all the congregacion, and on as many as heard it.

And as it were about the space of thre howres after, beholde the wyfe of Ananias, not knowing what had chaunced to her housband, (as folkes knowe later almoste then other, what euill is done at home in theyr owne house,) came in, beyng pryuy to that her housbandes craftie decepte, and in wyll ready also for her parte, to gette vayne prayse: vnto whose vngodly imaginacions Peter aunswered, saying: tell me woman, solde ye the lande for so muche, and for no more then this: She muche lyke to her houſbande, aunſwered without any ſhame, yea vtterly for ſomuche haue we ſolde it. Than Peter ſayed vnto her: why haſt thou with thy houſbande togyther agreed to tempte wyth a lye, not vs, but the ſpirite of the lorde, whom ye ſee worlyng in vs? But forasmuche as it liked thee to be felowe wyth thy houſbande in this wicked diſſimulacion, thou ſhalt be lyke wyſe partener with him in puniſhment.

Than Peter ſayed vnto her: why haue ye agreed togyther to tempte the ſpirite of the lorde?

Beholde they ſtande at the doore, whiche buried thy houſbande, and the ſelfe ſame perſons ſhall carry the out. Sone than immediatly as theſe woordes were ſpoken, fell downe and yelded vp the ghoſte: In went the young menne vpon the ſame, and founde the woman deade. Than they carryed her forthe, and buried her by her houſbande. Suche example this was, but yet profitable for manne, and not ofter put in vre, than once of thapoſtles. And yet did not Peter, the gentileſte creature that than was lyuyng, inflycte thys puniſhement, but as he that was inſpired with the holy ghoſt, expreſſed it in woordes. For Peter than knewe by ſecrete inſpiracion of the holy ghoſt, what was already doen, and what was for to be doen. God to whom all thynges be knowen, wyll for the puniſhed, that vnder coulourd falſehood, doe mocke apoſtolyke perſons, though that they be ſuche, as may be deceyued. For all men hath not all tymes that gyfte of the holy ghoſt, that Peter had at that tyme. Howe marke howe happily of an euell occaſion it ſucceded. Wonderfull great feare ſprang through the whole Churche of the faythfull, by meanes of that deathe whiche theſe twoe perſons vyght woorthyly ſuffered, yea, other alſo that than beleued not, were ſtricken with feare of this example.

The texte.

BY the handes of the apoſtles, were many ſygnes and wonders ſhewed emong the people. And they were altogether with one accorde, in Salomons porche. And of the others durſt no man ioyne himſelfe to them: neuertheleſſe the people magnified them. The number of them that beleued in the lorde both of men and women, grewe more & more: inſomuche that they brought the ſicke into the ſtreates, and layed them on beddes and couches, that at ſ leaſt way, the ſhadowe of Peter when he came by, might ouershadow ſome of them, and that they myght all be deliuered from their infirmities. There came alſo a multitude out of the cities round about, vnto Hieruſalem, bringing ſick folkes, and them whiche were vexed with vncleane ſpirites. And they were healed euery one.

And of the others durſt no man ioyne himſelfe to the.

Moreouer many and great myracles, were wrought emong the people by the apoſtles, wherby it myght playnly appere to all men, that this notable effecte came to paſſe by ſome dyuine power, aboue al ſtrength of man. And as many as ſticked to the ghoſpell, abode all with one accorde together in the porche, called Salomons porche. For than were not they deſyrouſe to be hyd in corners, but the tyme requyred, that the candle beeyng ſet vpon the candleſticke, ſhoulde gyue lyght to all that entred into the houſe. As for the others, which had not yet by baptyſme booked themſelues as ſouldiers, to fyght vnder the baner of Chriſtes capitayne, none durſt company with them. For they perceyued this ſorte of people to be dedicate to God, and holy, and therfore of a certayne reuerent feare, withdrewe themſelues from their company, lyke as the temporall ſorte of men are wonte to drawe backe from halowed thynges, whiche be for euer dedicate to the temple. For the people hated them not, but had them in an honourable reuerence, for the excellent vertue or gyftes of god, whiche clerely ſhone in them. And notwithſtandyng that the example of

Ananias

Ananias & Saphira had made many one soze afrayed, that none durst ioyne themselues after a counterfeyte fashion vnto their coumpanie, yet after thys the multitude of the faythfull encreased euery daye, in numbre moze and moze, both of men and women, insomuche that commonly they would bryng soz the sicke folkes into the stretes, and suche as were not able to go on foote by reason of great sickenes, those set they out abzode vpon couches and beddes, that agaynst Peters comyng, his shadowe as he passed by myght at the least wyse ouershadowe some of them. Wherby in them was that promyse performed, whiche Jesus the Lozde had made, speakyng thus of hys disciples: and greater thynges than these be, shall they doe. Jesus healed some persones by touching the hemme of his garment: but no man healed he by touching of hys shadowe. The fame of these myracles, spred euery daye further abzode, insomuche that a great multitude of people came out of the cities bordering nigh there aboute, vnto Hierusalem, bryngyng with them, those that were in sundry wise diseased, and troubled of vncleane spirites, whiche were made whole euerychone. In suche a wonderfull successe of thynges mete, it were soz vs to obserue howe sobze and demure the Apostles were at all times, who claymed no renoume oz glozy soz theyr doynges, but referred all prayse that was gyuen them to the name of theyr maister Jesus.

Recyueth-les the people magnifyed them.

¶ Then the chiefe priests rose vp, and all they that were with him (whiche is the secte of Saducees) and were full of indignation and layed handes on the Apostles, & put them in the common pryson. But the Aungell of the Lord by nyght, opened the pryson doores, and brought them forth, and sayed: go, and stande and speake in the temple to the people, al the wordes of this life. When they hearde that, they entred into the temple early in the mornyng and taught. But the chiefe priest came, and they that were with hym, and called a counsell together, and all the elders of the children of Israell, and sent vnto to the pryson to fet them.

The texte.

After that the name of Jesus Christe began in this maner to be knowen wonderfully well with all men, and the swete odour of the ghospel, to spreade it selfe euery daye farther abzode: Bysshop Annas a pzelate of false religion, could not abyde the encrease of this trewe religion. Beslydes all other, namely they that were of the Saducees secte, toke his part, for by cause the Apostles beare witnesse pzyncypally of our maister Jesus Christes resurrection. Whiche thing caused the Pharisees, that defended the resurrection agaynst the Saducees, to be moze quiet towardes the Apostles. It had alzoze been decreed, that this bulynesse, shoulde be layed on slepe, by dissemblyng therat for a time. But malicious enuy gotte the vpper hande of this theyr decree oz counsayle, and furyousnesse in them, shooke of all feare. For the head pzieste, whose mynde Sathã troubled with enuy, beyng afflicted with the Saducees, set handes on the apostles, & had them to warde, sayeng them in no priuate pryson, as though they shoulde bee cramped vpon suspicion, but in a common pryson, as though they had be taken in some manifest acte of myschiefe. A pryson was chosen oute verye strong, leste they myght by some meane escape, oz els be taken awaye through some commocion of the people. But the holy woorde of the ghospell, can neyther be bounden, ne kepte in pzison by mannes wytte and policie. For Jesus, who is the defendour of his owne elected, sente his Aungell, that opened by nyght the pryson doores, and brought them forth and sayed: be ye nothyng vnquieted in mynde wyth these malicious pzieste, but rather holde on the bolder, as ye haue begonne. Go your waye, and in the temple steppe vp and preache to the people, what soeuer he gaue you in commaundement to preache to all nations of the world. The time was once, whan he would not suffre you to publishe him for Christe. But nowe is cummethe tyme, that he spake of to you saying: there is nothynge hyd that shall not bee openly shewed, and what is whispered in your eare, that preache ye vpon the house toppes. The apostles beyng encouraged at this the angels exhortacio, came into the temple early in the morynyng, and according to their accustomed maner, taught the people, whiche were many there in numbre. The high bishop beyng ignorant what was doen by nyght of the angell, toyned himselfe in confederacie wyth the Saducees, and certayne other supporters of that wilfull mynde that he was of, and came into the counsell house. Thither was called all the whole counsell of prestes, officers and temple rulers, with all the whole ordre of elders among the people of Israell. For than were they all the more incensed agaynst them for theyr disobedience, and had determined to oppresse some cruell punishemente for theym: But here consider in the meane whyle, good reader, the malicious impudencie of the prestes, that where as they had no iuste matter to lay to the Apostles charge, yet brought they aboute in their great assembly, what euer they lusted: because theyr sentence, whyche was cursed and vngodly, should appeare in that, that it was decreed by consent of the whole counsell, good and vyghteous. After that the head men were sette downe eche one in his place after a stately maner, the sergeauntes were sent, to bryng forth thattached persons before them, into theyr sessions.

The texte. When the ministres came, and founde them not in pryson, they returned and tolde, saying: the pryson truely we founde shut with all diligence, and the keepers standing without before the dooores. But whan we had opened, we founde no man within. When the chiefe prestes and the rulers of the temple, and the hie prestes heard of this, they doubted of them, whereunto this would growe.

The sergeauntes came vnto the pryson, they founde the keepers watchyng at the pryson dooore. The dooore was shut open. But whan they were come in, none of the apostles couldе they fynde, nor any pryuy or token, what way they had escaped. Than went the ministers backe agayne vnto the counsell, and tolde them what they had sene. We founde, sayde they, the pryson on euery side surely shutte, and the keepers standyng fast by the dooore. But whan the dooore was open and we let in, no man founde we there. All they were muche troubled in theyr myndes at theke tydynges, and specially the temple rewlers and the head prestes, and as menne beyng at theyr wittes ende, dowted fore what ende should ensue of this business.

The texte. Than came one and shewed them: Beholde, the men that ye put in pryson, stande in the temple and teache the people. Then went the ruler of the temple, with ministers, and brought them without violence. For they feared the people, lest they should haue ben stoned. And when they had them brought them, they set them before the counsell. And the chiefe prestes asked them, saying: did not we straytely commaund you, that ye should not teache in this name? And beholde, ye haue fylled Ierusalem with youre doctryne, and entende to bryngе this mannes bloud vpon vs.

The meane time that they were in suche doubt, whiles they were trembling for feare in their consultacion, in came one & troubled more their myndes with heauy tydynges, sayinge: beholde, the men that ye emprysoned yesterday, nowe stand in the temple, teachyng no smalle noumber of people. Than the temple-rewlers, bycause it pertepned peculiarlye to theyr office to see that nothynge shoulde be other wise doen in the temple then ought to be, toke theyr wape, according to the prestes commaundement, vnto the temple, with a company of seruyng men, for theyr garde agaynste all assaultes or violence of the people: They founde them lyke as it was reported, standyng in the temple, and preachyng Jesus to a great sorte of people. Albeit they laide no handes on them, lyke as they had doen before. For they sawe there present a great numbre of people, & were afrayed of themselues lest they, yf any commocion should haue ryen among the people, should be stoned. But neyther was that companye of suche a sorte, that would make busines, neither thapostles those persons, that despyzed ayde of any temporall powre. They were in themselues very stedfaste and sobre in theyr doinges, without any fearsenes at all. They behelde thoffi-cers which led them the day before to pryson. And yet for al that, they neyther feared themselues, neyther fled away, nor brake once of their preaching of the gholpel, vntyll the officer of the temple entreated them gently, to goe vnto the counsell. The Apostles obeyed, lest they shoulde in any wise seme to despise the publike authoritie. For theyr maister had not taught them that they shoulde whan they were called, refuse to goe, but ỹ they should boldly speake, nothyng at all afrayed. In came these two lyghers to the counsell house, presented they were before a company of hygh and great officers, with no small trayne folowyng them. Than began Annas, the high preste with highe authoritie, and no lesse statelines of mynde, hys oracion in this maner: Did not we streightly commaund you at our last assembly by authority of ỹ hygh powers that ye should nemore teache the people, nor make mencion prively nor appartly to any mã, straungier or Jewe, of this name Jesus, whiche we wyll shalbe abolyshed?

And nowe wyll ye see howe contemptuously agaynst the authoritie of the whole counsell, ye haue not alonely kepte no silence herein at all, but the more behemently haue ye also preached, insomuche that ye haue fylled all Hierusalem wyth your doctryne, and the rumoures of youre doynges are the meane whyle publyshed abrode, yea to the cities that border about vs. Well, ye goe about malitiously to bryng vs in hatred for the death of this man. For openly ye do preache that we slewe him, which thing cannot we denye. Ye publyshe also that the selfesame persone was good and holy & well with God approued, and in his name ye worke miracles, whiche is as it were to dishonour, & condemne vs before the multitude, of cruelte, that haue procured suche a mans death. This was the hyghe Bysshoppes oracion, whyche contayned no honest matters to defende it selfe, only it made some afrayed with woordes of hyghe authoritie, that the trueth in dede, whiche ought to be for mans health publisshed to all men, should be kepte in silence for the wicked mennes glory.

And they brought the without violence.

For they feared the people, &c.

Beholde, ye haue fylled Hierusalem with youre doctrine.

Peter and the other apostles answered, and sayed: we ought more to obey God then men. The God of our fathers rayled vp Jesus, whome ye slewe, and hanged on tree, him hath God lyfte vp with his ryght hand, to be a ruler and sauioure, for to geue repentaunce to Israell, and forgeuenes of synnes. And we are recordes of these thynges whiche we saye, and so is also the holy ghost, whom God hath geuen to them that obey hym. Whan they hearde this, they claue a sunder, and sought meanes to slay them.

The texte.

Nowe let vs on the other parte heare a fylher, the very Archebysshop of Chyistes

Christes ghospell, hawe boldly, and soberly also maketh he an aunswere for all the apostles: Wigh and bountifull Bushop, he sayeth, and ye that are rewlers of great authoritie, with other also the elders very wurshipfull men, that sit here in counsell together, we despyse not youre authoritie, but we preferre the authoritie of God to mannes authoritie, and so prompted we to do in that aunswere we made you, when ye forbode vs to speake any woorde at all of Jesus name. And as I suppose there is not one in this assembly, that thinketh it mete that we shoulde for mannes prohibicion, take lyghte regarde to goddes commaundementes, and whyles we feare youre wrathe, renne into Goddes displeasure. If your commaundementes stoode with the wyll of god, we wouldo with all our hertes, satisfye both you and hym. Nowe sence youre prohibicions doe vtterly square wyth hys commaundementes, and that we cannot satisfye both the one and the other, we had lieffer obey God, than manne. And it is not our desyre to bryng any in hatred by preachyng of Jesus name, but to procure saluacion to euery manne. And more it were for you expedient, rather to submitte your authoritie to the will of God, then to bryng vs hither, refusyng vtterly to save ought, or els to doe contrary to goddes wil.

The God of our fathers reised vp Jesus whome ye slewe, and haue hanged on tree.

The wave is open for eche manne, to come by rempssion of his synnes, yf he a mende his lyfe, and lovingly doe embrace the trueth of the ghospel. Euen thus shall ye fynde it, as we haue shewed you heretofore: the God of oure fathers, whome ye and we, and we with you doe wurshyppe, hath reysed vp from death his sonne Jesus, whome ye faste nayling hym on a crosse, haue slayne. And verily so was it decreed by the diuine counsell, so it was heretofore spoken by the Prophetes, that one shoulde dye to saue the woorlde. This selfe same persone, euen lyke as he was but feble in bodye, manne hath put to death, but almyghtie God hath called him to lyfe agayne: and of hys infinite power, hath him exalted to suche renowne and glorye, as to bee a guide for all menne, and the chiefest worker of mannes saluacion, but principally for the children of Israell, and that all maye redily come thorowe hym to remission of synne, whiche bee contente to forsake theyr euell lyuyng, and to professe his holy name. And to these thynges that we rehearse to you, beare we recorde, that kepte in house wyth hym familiar companie, before he died, and after he was from death reuiued, oftentymes heard hym, sawe hym, and handled hym, vntill he ascended vp (all vs beholdyng hym) to heauen. But if ye esteme our wytnes to be of small impoztaunce, the holy ghoste beareth wytnes of the same, whome he powreth vpon all that receyue his ghospell, as ye see it in vs a ready. You heare straunge languages, you see woonderfull thynges wrought, exceedyng common reason. There is nought here of our owne doynges, it is Jesus holy spirite, that putteth forth his power and vertue abrode by his ministers. This oration of Peters, well beseemyng for an apostle to make, which ought eyther for dreade of punishment to feare them, or els for the hope of saluacion that was euen at hande to allure theym, chafed theyr myndes and made them the more incensed against them, insomuch, that theyr hertes would haue braste for anger, laying theyr heades together howe they myght slea them. Than had the priestes for their parte, of a long tyme customably vsed murther: and to cutte lyke buchers, sheepe, goates in the temple, wherby they had gotten themselues nought els, but a slaughte by men also, the more easily. In all this their communication not a woorde was heard of diuyne scripture, nothing godly spoken for mans erudicion, no reason at all. Onely this commaund we, this is our wil & pleasure, eyther obey thesame, or els shalte thou suffre death.

Then stode there vp one in the councell, a Pharisey, named Gamaliel, a doctourre of lawe (had in reputacion among al the people) and commaunded the apostles to goe aside a litle space, & sayed vnto them: ye men of Israell, take hede to your selues, what ye entende to do, as touching these menne. For before these dates rose vp one Theudas, boasting himselfe, to whome resorted a noumbre of men, aboure fower hundred, which was slayne: and they all whiche beleued hym, were scattered abrode, & brought to nought. And after this man, was one Judas of Galile in the dayes of the tribute, and drewe awaye muche people after hym, and he also perished: and all euen as many as harkened to him, were scattered abrode. And now I say vnto you refraine your selues from these men, and let them alone. For yf this counsell or this worke be of men, it will cum to nought. But & yf it be of God, ye cannot destroye it lest ye be hapely founde to stryue against God. The texte.

In that councell sat one Gamaliell, a Pharisey, at whose fete Paule the apostle learned the lawe, a man in high estimacion with the whole people of Israel both for his excellente knowleage in the lawe, & for his singuler wysdome. This Gamaliel, whan he sawe them so bent to bynthriftie councell, stood vp, and desyred that the apostles might for a while departe out of the councel. That doen this sayed he to them that were there sittyng: ye my brethren of Israel, proceede not headlyng in your councell, neyther determine any thinge vnaduisedly, whiche afterwarde may turne remediles vnto your shame, but take good hede what ordinaunce ye make, or iudgemente ye geue of these persones. Take counsayle of thinges past, what shalbe expediente for you to determyne for the tyme to cum. I will reherse no auncient examples of old tyme. That as I shall reherse to you, was done sence al ye may well remember. There was of late dayes one Theudas, an enchaũter, and a false deceauer, who by boastyng hymselfe to the people, and promysing of prodigiouse thinges, drue to his factionse opinion a great number of men, nigh vnto the nomer of fower hundred. But hys bulie enterpryse, because it proceaded of a malicious stomake had an vnthriftye ende. For both he hymselfe suffered paynes of death, and as many as had taken his parte, were sum slaine & sum taken prysoners. Whan all wer thus scattered abrode, the secte was brought to nought. For before thole dayes rose vp one Theudas.

After hym was Judas of Galile, a countreyman to these persons, that ye now consulte vpon, the same tyme that the whole worlde was taxed by commaundement of Augustus Cesar. And this same Judas, for as muche as he taught thynges pleasaunt to the people, that they beyng dedycate to god, ought to pay no tribute to Emperours, whiche were woorshypped for false goddes, drew to his faccion a greate parte of the comens. And afterwarde both he & captayne of this faccion was slaine, & as many as toke his parte, were scattered abrode. Wherfore this is myne aduise, that moze wisely shall ye do, yf ye forbeare these persones, and let theim goe, seyng that no man hytherto is hurte by them. For yf this, that they haue enterprysed, or that that they goe about to bryng to passe, procede of mans witte it shall of it selfe cum to nought. But yf god be the worker of this so woonderfull a matter, it were both an vngodly poynte in you, to mynde the destruction of that thyng which

God is the principall doer of/ for what were that els but to reſiſte God/ and beſydes that lacke of foreſight to goe aboute that that ye cannot bring to paſſe.
For who ſhalbe able to withſtand the wil of God?

The texte. And to hym agreed the other: and when they had called the apoſtles, they bet them: and commaunded that they ſhould not ſpeake in the name of Jeſus and ſo let thē go. And they departed from the councell, reioyſing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer rebuke for his name. And dayly in the temple, and in euery houſe they ceaſed not to teache and preache Jeſus Chriſt.

This his councell was ſo eſteemed with the whole aſſemblye, that the ſentence of death, which they would haue pronounced on them, was differred vntill an other tyme. And as for this tyme, they agreed to Gamaliels councell, not that they would vtterly holde their handes of thapoſtles, but that after they wer al twelue called together, and beaten, they ſhould be charged agayne vpon a ſtrayte commaundement, not to ſpeake from that daye forwardes, ſo muche as one woorde of the name of Jeſus. And ſo were they contented vpon this puniſhement to dimitte them, thinkyng that though they had made lyght at their thundryng woordes, and threatninges, yet would thei be better aduiſed what they did or ſaid, beyng once punyſhed for a warning: eſteminge thapoſtles whiche wer, to loke vpon, abiect perſons, and of the baſe cōmunaltie, to be like in condicion to the rude and barbarouſe people that are amended with ſtrokes. But the liuely ſpirite in a preacher of the woorde of god, is wont after ſuche iniurious afflictions, to gather his ſtrength together. Thapoſtles, because they wer well aſſured that the woordes of Jeſus ſpake wer trewe, that they ſhould be called before iudges, and that they ſhoulde be ſcourged in their Synagoges, and congregacions, for no euil dede, but for profeſſing his holſum name, departed from the councell, luſty to courage, and ioyous, takyng their reproccheful beatinges, whiche to other wer thought intollerable, to their prayſe and glory, for as muche that god would recognyſe them his apoſtles worthy ſuch honour, that they might for his owne ſonnes ſake, ſpitefully be entreated. They had in remembrauuce what Jeſus had ſaied to them before: reioyce ye & be glad, for great is your reward in heauen. So litle this puniſhment and menacing auapled the princes, to holde them abacke frō preachyng Jeſus name, that thapoſtles toke therof the more courage to preache continualliye what thei had heard of their maiſter Jeſus, both openly in the temple, and in euery mannes houſe priuily, and to bryng to eche man gladſum tydynges, that this was very Meſſias, by whome all ſhoulde be ſaued.

And they departed from ꝑ coūſell reioyſyng that they were counted worthy to ſuffer rebuke for his name.

The. vi. Chapiter.

The texte. In thoſe dates (whan the numbre of the diſciples grewe) there aroſe a grudge among ꝑ Grekes againſt the Ebrues, becauſe their widowes wer diſpiſed in the daily miniſtracion. Than the twelue called the multitude of the diſciples together, and ſaid: it is not meete that we ſhould leue the worde of God, and ſerue tables. Wherefore brethren, loke ye out among you ſeuen men of honeſt reporte, and full of the holy goſt, and wiſdome, to whom we may commit this buſines. But we will geue our ſelues continually to prayer, and to the miniſtracion of the woord. And the ſaying pleaſed the whole multitude. And they choſe Steuē a man ful of fayth, and of the holy ghoſt, ꝑ Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, ꝑ Nicholas a conuerte of Antiochie. Theſe ſeuen thei ſet before the apoſtles, and whan they had prayed, they layed their handes on them.

It

AT the same time, whan the disciples (for so were they than named, who afterwarde were called Christians) increased daylye moe in numbre, the Grekes that were amongest them, whiche were none other than Jewes, although not borne in Jewrye, by profession yet Jewes, and borne amonge the Gentyles, began to murmure and grudge againste the Hebrewes. The cause of this their grudgeyng, sprange of an affection or loue towardes their cuntrey folkes. For whereas the apostles carried about with them certayne women, whiche did them seruice, the Grekes were agreued that their widowes were not had in suche estimacion as that they mighte serue thapostles, and disciples, by dayly handyeachinge. For suche ministery or seruice was esteemed with them, to be a thinge of muche preferment. And this was the first ambicion in christes churche. And yet though the disorde amongest them was but little or small, forebecause thou shouldest vnderstande how sore a good shepherde ought to be displeased therwith, the twelue apostles in continente, whan they had called together a great company of the disciples, to thintent it should be of the more authorite that was determined with al their consētes, said in this maner to the: we see grudgeing, what soeuer the matter meaneth, spronge amongest vs, as touching the seruice we haue at womans hande. Some order therfore must be taken, that we, who are appoynted to an higher office, be not in this wise often interrupted, with such light matters of charge. The lorde hath inioyned vs by an especial cōmaundement, to teache the gospel. It is not therfore a thing well to be allowed, that we should lay alyde the office of preaching the gospel, that we be charged with al, and serue at tables. For like as in the bodie are sundry membres, and euery membre doth his office and duetie: euen so in suche a great multitude, trouble and cōfusion cannot be auoided, except diuers offices be distributed amongest diuers persons, after suche a sorte, that all together be referred to the profite of the whole bodye. For neyther seeth the eye for it selfe alone, but for all the membres. Neyther the handes labour onely for them selues, but for þ whole bodye. Wherfore brethren, loke out of youre noumbre, seuen men that are of honest reporte, replenished with giftes of the holy ghoste, and endowed with synguler wisdome, to whom we maye committe, hauyng your good wyll with-all, this necessarie busines, wherin we haue been hitherto occupyed, not without hindraunce to oure exercyse in the gospell. And whan we are set at more quietnesse by their diligence, than shall we apply our selues to those thynges that be long to vs for oure owne partes to do, as prayer and preaching of the gospell. They shall take charge with kedyng the bodyes, we wyll apply oure oracion. And so were seuen than chosen, with consent of all the congregacion Steuen a man in good credite, and one that largely had receiued þ holy gost. Philip, Prochorus, Nichanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicholas of Antioch, a proselite by his profession. These seuen, whan they were chosen, were set before thapostles, to thentent that what was done, they should allowe the same by their authoritie. Thapostles whan they had made their prayers to god as they were accustomed, layed their handes vpon them. For according to this

It is not meete that we shoulde leaue the woorde of god & serue tables.

Wherefore brethren, loke ye out among you seuen of honest reporte &c.

And they chose Steuē a man ful of faith and of the holy ghost. &c.

approued custome, were holy ministers assigned at the beginnyng, vpon example whiche was taken of oure maister Jesus, who was wonte to laye his hande vpon those that he blessed. But if any demaunde ꝑ quetion, what nede suche rites to the appoyntyng of ministers that should take charge of the table: let him vnderstand that handling of monye, is in very dede a tempozall exercise, moste cõmune among men, yet suche that would require sum speciall credit in him, ꝑ shalbe charged therwithall, and an vpright conscience. Wit-nesse herof was Judas, whome his vncleane herte, beyng corrupted wyth a-uarice, styred hym to betray his maister. And furthermoze, because that these seuen persons prescribed to other also, what was thoughte in suche busines necessarie foz to be done, it was mete for them to be put in authozitie, that all other should the rather obey them, as felowes with the apostles and their furtherers. Moreouer the disciples feastes wer not such, as be among ꝑ vulgare people, but as ofte as they toke any meate, they toke it very deuoutly. Euerye broken morsell of breade, representeed to them, the bodye of our lozde, euerye draught of wyne put them in remembraunce of oure lozdes bloude. Fynally both the lozdes bodye it selfe, and his bloude was ministred to the people by the Deacons. And if they were any tyme at leysure, besydes theyr tempozall ministerie, than preached they also themselues, the gospell, as those persons that wer next of all to the apostles.

The texte. ¶ And the worde of God encreased, and the nõbre of the disciples multiplyed in Jerusalem greatly, and a great company of the priestes, wer obedyent to the faith.

By suche maner meanes it came to passe that the doctrine of Christes gospell, was sparsed euery daye further abzode, and the disciples multiplyed at Jerusalem with right good successe in all their affayres. Foz a greate parte not onely of the comens receaued the gospell, but manye priestes also whiche had before conspired againste Christe and his apostles, whan they had repented themselues of theyr euil liuyng, and layed doune theyr pryde, submitted them vnto the swete yoke of the gospel.

The texte. But Steuen, ful of faith and power, did great wõders and miracles, emong the people.
Than there arose certain of the Synagoges, whiche is called the Synagoge of the Ly-bertines, and Sirenites, and of Alexandria, and of Cilicia, and Asia, disputing with Steuen. And they coulde not re siste the wysdome, and the spirit whiche spake.

But Steuens holines among all the deacons, glistened principally. Foz so handeled he hymselfe in his office appoynted hym, that he was moste in fa-uoure with the whole multitude of the faythfull, foz his excellente sobernes in behauioure: and towardes them that were rebellyous to the ghospell, he expressed so valiaunte a courage, that he was neuer by them ouercum, insomuche, that he wrought many and greate miracles amonge the people, in the name of Jesus, yea as one that endeuoured hymselfe to expresse the vertuous steppes of thapostles. But foz asmuche as excellente vertue procureth it selfe enuie, lyke as dothe the sterne wynde driue to hym the white cloudes, cer-tayne rose vp againste Steuen, of diuers felowshyppes, of the whiche one was called Libertines, another Cyrenites, sum of Alexandria, an other sorte of suche that came out of Cilicia, and Asia. Foz to these countreyes whiche were ioynyng vnto Syria, aboue al other were the Jewes dispersed: all these sortes, as though they had be of one conspiracie, arose together against Steuen dysputyng with him, and yet coulde not all they, although manye in numbre

numbre, stand in reasoning against this one yong mans wisdome, & the lively force of his courage, for because ỹ holy ghost whō he was ful of, spake in him.

Than sent they men, whiche sayed: we haue heard him speake blasphemous woordes against Moyses, & against God: and they moued the people, and the elders, & the Scribes, and came vpon him, and caught him, & brought him to the councel, & brought forth false witnesse, whiche sayed: This man ceaseth not to speake blasphemous woordes against this holy place and the law: for we heard him say: this Jesus of Nazareth shal destroy this place, and shal chaunge the ordinaunces whiche Moyses gaue vs. And all they that sate in the councel loked stedfastly on him, & saw his face as it had ben ỹ face of an angell. The texte.

Marke me here the maner and fashion of the wicked. When they had caste of al truethy, vnable to make their partie good in disputacion, they fell to practise of forecgoyng lyes, and beyng once put to the worse by wisdome of the holye ghoste, they gaue themselues wholy to the practyse of diuelyshe deceptes. For they brought in certaine men with false witnes, that sated they heard Steuen speake blasphemous wordes against Moyses, & against god. And there was none offence among the Jewes, that more deserued deathe, than did blasphemy, and more detested with the people. Consider here, good reader, lyke inuencions against the seruaunte, as wer before practised against the Maister. They brought in false accusers, bycause they would not be seen in their owne persons, to reuenge the inwarde grief of their mindes, whiche they had conceiued for the blanche they wer put vnto beyng meane of themselues insufficient to cope with Steuen in disputacion. An hainoule crime sought they out, by their false ymagination against him, and cloked their cankred malice, with a pretensed loue to religion. Than wer the people with the elders also & Scribes, by meanes of these false tale tellers, whiche had been preuelye sent in, sore moued against Steuen, insomuche as all they ỹ one assent together toke hym violently awaye, and haled hym before the councell. Here came they furth before them, that wer ỹ hyred recordes, for to playe out their partes and to saye: this man haue neuer done breaking out into blasphemouse woordes, against this place, bothe holy and with all vs honorable, and agaynste Moyles lawe that was delyuered vs of god. For we heardе hym saye, that Jelus of Nazareth woulde destroye this place, and chaunge the ordinaunces that Moyses gaue vs. But this was Steuens reporte vpon relacion of ỹ apostles, howe Jelus had prophecied to them, that the temple and citie lykewyse should be of their enemyes ouerthrowen, euen from the foundacion, for the peoples infidelitie. This rehersall of Steuen, craftely they wrested to a false and sclaunderouse accusacion. A man myght well affirme these to bee thelame persones ỹ accused Jelus, reportyng thus of his woordes: we heardе hym saynge: I wyll destroye this temple, and sette vp an other in three dayes. But Steuen at this sharpe and cruel accusacion, was nothing moued in his mynde for he was cleare in his conscience, insomuch that he, from the botome of his herte, appeared in his very countenaunce, to be innocent. For the minde that knoweth euel by it self, is neuer out of feare. This his stedfastnes in countenaunce put his accusers soone to rebuke, for their shameles falshood. For those that sate there in counsayle, beholdynge hym, and markyng well howe boldelye he toke the offence that was layed to his charge, sawe hym so lytle discouraged at the matter or dismayde, that his face seemed to utter by countenaunce, sum thynge aboue mannes excellencie, and a certayne cheerfulnes withall, and maiestie, besemyng for an Aungell to haue. And they moued the people & the elders and the Scribes. For we heardе hym saye, this Jelus of Nazareth shal destroye this place.

The.vii.Chapter.

The texte. ¶ Than sayed the chief priest: is it euen so? And he saied, ye mē & brethren & fathers, hertken. The god of glory appeared vnto our father Abraham, whā he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, & saied vnto him: Get the out of thy countrey, and from thy kinred, & cum into the lande which I shal shewe the. Than came he out of the lande of Chalde, and dwelt in Charran. And frō thence, whā his father was dead, he brought him into this lande, in which ye nowe dwel, and he gaue him none inheritaūce in it, no not þ bredeth of a foote: And promysed that he would geue it to hym to possesse, & to his seede after hym, when as yet he had no childe.

THan demaūded the high prieste of the accused person, to thintent he might frame his sentēce in iudgement towardes him, after forme of lawe, as he did before in condemning Christe, this questiō: whether he had ought to answer to thole thiges, & whether he would acknowledge þ offence that was brought againste him. Than Steuen beyng inspyred with the holye ghoste, beganne in this wise to make answere to the playnte proffoundly, with a rehersall made euen from the beginning. Honorable audience, all that here be presente, eyther brethren, by trade of our cuntrey religion, either els by reason of auncientnes and authorite fathers, geue eare to me in my defēce of innocencie, as ye haue done to mine accusers pacientlye. I haue neyther vsed to speake contumeliously against god, neither against Moyses, nor against the temple, but my endeuoure hath been not disagreynge here from Moyses, to aduaunce goddes glory, and that spirituall temple am I a buyldyng, like as god commaunded me, wherin god that is the very spirite, is best pleased. It is no blasphemy for a man to set furth that thing to the vttermost of his power, whiche Moyses shadowed in figures, whiche the prophetes, beyng inspired vō goddes holy spirite, hath before spoken of, whiche the sonne of god þ was sent downe to earth, for the same purpose, hath both begonne, and put his owne in credite withall to fynyshe, which the holy ghoste now perfourmeth for all peoples saluaciō, through them that beleue the gospel. But to striue so obstinately against the will of god, beyng so well knowen, and so bounteous towarde al men, is naught els, then to hate god, is none other thing, than to blaspheme god. Whiche obstinate maner, this nacion hath not of late dates begonne, but what they haue begonne longe agoe to do, now they neuer ceasse to continewe, so that nowe we ought to take it for no maruel, or thinke our selues otherwise than indifferently dealed withal, yf that cum to passe, that Iesus of Nazareth prophecied to cum, that is to sale, that this temple, that you so muche bragge and boast of, and this citie where ye raigne, that priesthood, that law, which ye abuse to your dishonest aduauntage, and vayne glorie, be taken awaye from you, and this your renowne and glorie be translate to them, that can be cōtent to worship god synceresly, in trewe faythe of the gospel, and to kepe the lawe spiritually, and to frame themselues a lyuely temple, and an holy, for the holy ghost. And although god prouoked our elders by many sondry waies to this poynte, yet this rebellyous and obstinate people, alwayes delyspyed hym. And

to begyn among al other, of the chiefe auncient father, and patriarche of this nation, whose obedience I would to god they kolowed, that bost themselues to be his childzen: God the father to whome all glozie is due, and whome we and you worshyp deuoutly, appeared longe tyme paste vnto Abzaham, our principal father, whyle he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, and sayd vnto hym: get the out of thy countrey and from thy kinred, and cum vnto a lande, which I wyl shewe the. He obeying goddes commaundementes, went out of the Caldeies land, & began his dwellyng in Charran, as purpoling to take his Joyney farther, into sum other place to dwell, whan he saw his tyme. God efterwes brought him thence ouer into this lande, where he dwelt nowe, & that after his father Thares death, for whose age he had differred to chaunge his dwelling place. But ouer brought he him in gest wise, and as a straunger, geuing him none inheritaūce here, in somuch as he possessed, no not þ breadth of a foote, except it were purchased: but god promysed to set his posteryte in possession of this land after his death, whan that Abzaham in those dates had no sonne. And though it semed to be a thyng vnbeleuable that was promised, yet both Abzaham beleued, and god performed: & his promesse herein is founde trewe, lyke as he in all other thinges which he hath heretofore spoken, alwaies was founde trewe of his woozde.

Get the out of thy countrey & from thy kinred.

And promised that he would geue it to hym to possesse.

¶ God verily spake on this wise, that his seede should sogeourne in a straunge land, and that they should kepe the in bondage, and entreate them euill. iiii. C. yeares. And þ people whom they shall serue, will I iudge, sayd God. And after that, shal they cum forth & serue me in this place. And he gaue hym the couenaunte of circumcision. And he begate Isaac, and circumcised him the eighte daye, and Isaac begate Jacob, and Jacob begat the twelue patriarches. And the patriarches hauyng indignacion, solde Joseph into Egypte. And God was with hym, and deliuered hym out of all aduersities, and gaue hym fauoure, and wisdom, in the sight of Pharao, kyng of Egypt, and he made him gouernour ouer all Egypt, and ouer all his househoulde.

The texte.

And thus sayd he than vnto him. Thy seede shalbe in a straunge lande, and the people whome thy posteritie shall lyue withall, lyke straungers, shal make them their bond men, and cruelly handle them for the space of fower hundred yeares and thryty: at the last, shall I delyuer them, sayth the lorde, of their bondage: and the people, whom they shal serue, wyl I iudge, and be auenged of. After that shall they serue me in this place, out of mannes subiection: and that god myght the moze by sum meane, bynde his people to sticke vnto hym, gaue he vnto Abzaham circumcision, as a seale of hys promise. And so Abzaham trusting to goddes promyse, begat Isaac, and hauing in remembraunce his couenaunte made with God, circumcised his childe the eight day after his birth. Isaac on the other parte circumcised Jacob, & Jacob his twelue sonnes the Patriarches, and chief fathers of our auncestry. Amongeste these twelue, sum there were that litle remembred goddes promyse, but beyng moued of enuye, deuysed suche a lyke thyng agaynst their brother Joseph, as their posteritie hath deuysed agaynst Jesus of Nazareth. They cast hym into a cestern, and furthwith solde him to marchaunt men, that brought him into Egypte. But lyke as almyghtie god rapted vp Jesus beyng slayne, and extolled hym on high after that he was cast doune: so deliuered he Joseph at that tyme, oute of all his troubles, and brought him by meanes of his good conditions, and forelodgement in thinges to cum, in fauour vᵗ Pharao king of Egypt, into-much that Pharao put him in authoritie ouer Egypt, and ouer all his house.

The texte. But there came a dearth ouer al the lande of Egypt and Canaan, & great affliction, that our fathers found no sustenaunce. But when þ Jacob heard that there was corne in Egipt, he sent our fathers first. And at þ seconde tyme, Joseph was knowē of his brethrē and Josephes kinred was made knowē vnto Pharao. Then sent Joseph a message, and called his father to be brought, and al his kynne, lxxv. soules. And Jacob descended into Egypt, & died bothe he and our fathers, and were carried ouer into Sichem, and layed in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for money, of the sonnes of Emor, the sonne of Sichem.

But there came a dearth ouer all the lande of Egipte, and Chanaan, and great trouble withal, so that our fathers could finde no sustinaunce for them. Jacob, whan he had knowledge that there was plenty of corne in Egypte, sent out our fathers thyther to fetche corne thence. And the seconde tyme that he had sent them thyther, was Joseph knowen of his brethren. The rumor herof, came also to Pharaos eare, that he was an Hebrewe borne, and had a father and eleuen brethren on liue. Joseph than sent for Jacob his father, and all his whole kinred into Egypte, because they shoulde not lacke. All they were in noumbre thre score and fyftene. And so came Jacob downe into Egipt to dwell, and died, bothe he, and his twelue sonnes, our fathers, and wer laied in a sepulchre, whiche Abraham bought for an hundreth siluer cicles, of the children of Hemor, sonne to Sichem.

The texte. But whan the tyme of promise drewe nye (which God had sworne to Abraham) the people multiplyed and grewe in Egypt, till an other kyng arose which knewe not Joseph,
The same dealt subtilly with our kynred, and cruel entreated our fathers, and made them cast out their younge children, that they should not remayne aliue. The same time was Moyses borne, and was acceptable vnto god, and nourished vp in his fathers house three monethes. Whā he was cast out, Pharaos daughter toke him, and nourished him vp for hir owne sonne. And Moyses was learned in all manor of wysdome of the Egipcians, & was myghtie in dedes, and in woordes.

But the time than drawing nyghe, whan god would haue that perfourmed whiche he had promysed Abraham, the Hebrewes encreased, and were multyplyed in Egypte, vntyl Pharao died, and an other kinge succeded hym, with whom Joseph was not so muche in fauoure, as he before had been with Pharao. This same king, fearyng lest the Hebrewes shoulde to muche increase, kepte vnder our kynred craftely, and dealte cruil with our fathers, commaundyng the mydwiues by proclamation, that they should cast out men children, that none shoulde remayne on lyue. At the same tyme was Moyses borne, agaynst whome, these men falsly reported of me, that I shoulde haue spoken blasphemous wordes. This Moises was in fauour before god: who suffered not him to perish, for by his prouidence, priuely was he nourished for thre monethes space in his fathers house. Yet for feare of þ kynges commaundement, he was cast out in a twiggen basket or hamper, playsted ouer with lyme, into the ryuer of Nilus. As it chaūced, Pharaos daughter toke him vp, & beyng muche delited with the propernes of the childe, nourysshed hym vp at home for her owne sonne. Than was Moyses taken for an Egyptian, and instructed from his childhood, in al manor cunning and wisdome of the Egypcians, and was myghty in woordes and dedes.

And

And whan he was full fourty yere olde, it came into his herte, to visite hys brethren the children of Israel. And whan he sawe one of them suffre wrong, he defended him & auenged his quarell, that had the harme done to hym, & smote ỹ Egyptian. And he supposed his brethren would haue vnderstande, how that God by his hand, should deliuer them. But they vnderstoode not. The texte.

But whan he was fully cum to fourty yeres of age, he thought it good to visite his brethren, the childre of Israel: For he expzelled alwayes, tendre loue towardes his owne nacion, of whom he had his begynnyng. And whan he had seene, as he was conuersaunt amongest them, one of the Israelites suffre wrog of an Egyptian, he auenged the Hebzewes quarell, and slewe the Egyptian. Declarynge euen than, the towardenes of a good capitayne. And he supposed that the Hebzewes had knowen allready at that time, howe God had determined to saue the people by hym, and to deliuer them from the bondage of Pharao. And thus Moyses presented in hymselfe, a figure of Jesus of Nazareth, whome god verily hath chosen to redeme the people from bondage of synne. But lyke as the Israelites perceiued not this in Jesus, euen so noz than dyd they vnderstande that in Moyses.

And the nexte day, he shewed hymselfe vnto them as they stroue, and would haue set the at one agayne, saynge: Syrs, ye are brethren, why hurte ye one another? But he that dyd his neighboure wrong thrust hym awaye, saynge: wilt ỹ kyl me as thou diddest ỹ Egyptian yesteroay? who made the a ruler and iudge ouer vs? Than fled Moyses at that sayng, and was a straunger in the lande of Madian, where he begate two sonnes. The texte.

The daye after, as he was in waye agayne to visite his brethren, he found two Israelites stryuing togyther, & partyng them a sundze, he would haue set them at one agayne, saying: what do ye syrs sithen that ye are brethren, and of one nacion, why hurte ye one an other: but he that dyd his neyghboure wzong, thrust him a backe that would haue sette them at one, saying: what medlest ỹ in out matter? who made the a iudge and ruler ouer vs? wylt thou slaye me al so as thou slewest the Egyptian yesterday? And where as al that Moyses did was by inspiracion of the holy ghoste, yet founde he shortly there amongest his owne brethren, sum that rebelled agaynst hym. Whan Moyses heard of this, perceyuynge how his fact was not vnknowen abzode, & feaxynge foz his owne parte, ỹ Egiptians fled into the land of Madian, where he begat two sonnes. Who made the a ruler and iudge ouer vs?

¶ And whan fowerty yeares were expired, there appeared vnto hym in the wildernes of Mount Sinai, an aungel of ỹ lord, in a flame of fyre in a bushe. Whan Moyses sawe it he woondred at the sight. And as he drewe neare to behold, the voyce of the lord came vnto him: I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abiaham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Moyses trembled, & durst not beholde it. Than sayd the lord to him: put of thy shoes from thy feete, foz the place where thou standest, is holy ground. I haue perfectly seen the afflictions of my people in Egipt, and I heard their groyning, & cum I am down to deliuer them. And now cum, and I will sende the into Egypt. The texte.

And fourty yeares after, an aungell of the Lozde appeared vnto Moyses in wyldernes, vpon Mount Synay, in a Bushe, which seemed to be all on fyre. Moyses beyng as one dismayde at this sight, assayed to go nere thervnto, to see what thynge it was. But the Lozde, whose voyce sounded in the bushe, bushe, forbade him: I am (he sayd) the god of your fathers, the god of Abraham, the god of Isaac, the god of Jacob. Moyses whan he heard this name, trembled therat for feare, and durst loke no neare. Than sayed the lorde: put of thy shoes from thy feete, for the place where þ̄ standest, is an holy ground. Moyses obeyed the lorde. Than forth he wente in his talke. I haue wel marked how my people in Egipte hath been troubled, and haue hearde their groning. And therfore of compassion towardes them am I cum downe to delyuer them. And now cumme, and for this cause wyll I sende the into Egypte. Beholde and see howe playnely is Jesus of Nazareth signified here by Moyses. The people of Israell refused Moyses before they knewe what he was, saying: Who made the a ruler, and iudge ouer vs? Lyke woordes spake oure brethren vnto Jesus: in what authorite dooest thou these thynges, and who gaue the this authorite? For al this while knewe not they that god, for þ̄ pite he had to our people, than had sent them this captaine and purchaser of libertie, and gruer of lyfe euerlasting.

The texte. This Moyses whom they forsoke, saying: who made the a ruler & a iudge? the same dyd God send to be a ruler and a deliuerer, by the handes of the angell, whiche appeared to hym in the bushe. And the same brought them out, shewyng wonders & sygnes in Egipt, and in the read sea, and in the wildernes fourty yeares. This is þ̄ Moyses which sayed to the childre of Israell: A prophete shall the lorde your god rayse vp vnto you, of your brethren lyke vnto me, hym shall ye heare.

And Moyses whom his brethren despysed, god aduaunced to honoure, and made him a capitaine, a gouernour, and a deliuerer of his people. And for his ayde and assistence, he had with him thangell presente, whiche appered to him oute of the burnynge bushe. By whose helpe brought he hys people oute of Egipte, worchynge manye woonders and merualles in the lande of Egipt, soone after in the rede sea, and despdes that in wildernes, by the space of fourty yeares. Is Moyses was to one nacion or people alone, so truly is Jesus of Nazareth vnto al that will folowe his guyding. Nowe lest any should thinke them to be Moyses aduersaries, whiche publithe and set openly furth Jesus of Nazareth, þ̄ same Moyses himselfe hath commended to you Jesus of Nazareth, promysyng many lyues agoe, that he should cum, whom ye see nowe is cum to you. This sayde he: a Prophete shal God raise vp for you, one of your brethren lyke me, hym ye shal geue eare vnto.

The texte. This is he that was in the congregacio, in the wildernes with the aungell (which spake to hym in the mount Sina) and with our fathers. This man receiued the woorde of life to geue vnto vs, to whom our fathers would not obey, but cast it from the: And in their herres turned backe againe into Egipt, saiyng vnto Aaron: make vs goddes to go before vs. For as for this Moyses, that brought vs out of the lande of Egipt, we woot not what is becu of him. And they made a calfe in those dayes, and offered sacrifice vnto þ̄ image and reioyced ouer the woorkes of their owne handes.

This Jsaye is the same Moyses, that lyke as before he talked alone with thangell vpon vnto the bushe, so comoned he with him afterwarde in wyldernes, vpon mount Syna, in presence of a great numbre of people, and semblably talked with our auncestours, to whome disclosed he that, that he had hearde of the lorde. He had receyued of hym a lawe, for that ende he shoulde make to vs redelyuerye of the same, whiche lawe shoulde gyue to the keepers therof lyfe euerlastynge. And for all that Moyses was of so greate authorytye, yet wouldde not our fathers obey him, but repelled hym, and as menne that had cleane forgotten out of what myserable and wretched bondage they were were deliuered, desyred to be againe in Egypt, to thintent they might, whan they had once caste of their capitaine, the authoure of their weale, and their redemer, and desyred the lawe of lyfe, repayre vnto the naughtye maners of suche that wurshipped false goddes. And therfore whyle Moyses was in cõmunicacion with thangell, sayde they vnto Aaron: make for vs sum goddes whiche maye goo before vs. For Moyses, ẏ brought vs out of Egypt, knowe not we what hath become of hym. And forthwith accordyng to the example of the Egyptians, whiche wurship their god Apis in the ymage of an ore, made thei for themselues a calfe, wrought out of pure golde, and offered vp sacrifice vnto this god without lyfe, and desyred the liuing god, by whose tendre goodnes, they had escaped bondage: and reioysing in so wicked a deede, as though it had been wel done, daunsed, and kepte their feastes and bankettes, reioysyng the frewe god, that made al thinges, and bragging of their dumme goddes, whom they had made for themselues, with their owne handes.

And they made a calfe in those dayes, and offered sacrifices.

Than god turned hymselfe, and gaue them vp, that they should worship the hoste of the ẏre, as it is writen in the booke of the prophetes. O ye of the house of Israel, gaue ye to me sacrifices & meate offerynges by the space of fowerty yeares in the wildernes? And ye toke vnto you the tabernacle of Moloch, and the sterre of your God Kempham, figures whiche ye made, to woorship them. And I will translate you beyonde Babilon.

The texte.

God beyng displeased at these thinges, turned hymselfe in lyke maner alwaye from them, and suffered them to take their owne pleasure, in somuche that thei worshypped at the laste, not one god onely, but accordynge vnto the Heathen example, the whole cõpanye of celestiall boodyes. The Sunne, Moone, Sterres, Mars, Mercury, Venus, and Saturne, whom the vngodly Poetes take for goddes, where as they be but bodyes fourmed of god, to serue for the vse and profit of man. This that I saye, can not be denyed. This was the verye thing that god had indignacion at, speaking by the mouthe of Amos his prophete: haue ye the house of Israel offered vnto me sacrifices. xl. yeares in wildernes-at the least waye ye haue embraced in steade of goddes frewe temple, Moloches tabernacle, whiche is an ydoll amonge the Amonytes, and Rempham, a celestiall figure of your god, whiche is Lucyfer, or Venus, that the Sarasins do worship. These dumme ymages haue ye made for yourselues to worship, and desyred the lyuynge and frew god, who alone hath made all thinges. But forasmuche as ye desyred in them, I will bryngye you ouer into Babilon, that ye maye serue ekelones idolaters. Now is it, as I suppose, sufficyently declared that I haue nought sayde, or spoken blasphemously, to the derogacion of god, whome I sincerely worship, neyther againste Moyses, whose Prophecie I hertely do embrace, but that they rather haue blasphemed who hath by folowynge the wicked steppes of our elders, despised for a longe tyme passed, both god him selfe speaking by his prophete Moyses, and yet at this present tyme, despise both god and Moyses speakyng in Jesus person of Nazareth. And as touching the law, I haue in no wise be fould blasphemoule, for whom the lawe hath appointed vs to receyue, whom the prophetes euery-chone hath promysed, him haue I louingly receyued: but rather they are to be accompted blasphemouse agaynst the law, that folowe stil the steppes of their wicked fathers, who set nought by Moyses lawe, and nowe refuse the lawe of the gospell, a lawe that Jesus published for all men, whiche lawe doth not abrogate Moyses lawe, but perfourme it.

And ye toke vnto you ẏ tabernacle of Moloch.

Our

The texte. Our fathers had the tabernacle of witnes in the wilderness, as he had appoynted them, speaking vnto Moises, that he should make it, according to the fashion that he had seen. Which tabernacle also our fathers that came after brought in with Iosue, into ꝑ possessions of the Gentiles, whom God draue out before the face of our fathers, vnto ꝑ time of Dauid, which founde fauoure before God and would faine haue founde a tabernacle for the God of Iacob: But Salomon buylt hym an house.

Nowe for the temple, whiche I am reported to blaspheme, harken what I haue to saye in fewe woordes. I am well assured this temple was buylded by goddes commaundemente, to the intent it myght be a figure of a temple more holye, ꝛ gyue place to a better, euen lyke as the tabernacle of witnesse wherein was an arke of testimonie or witnes, whiche our fathers caried aboute w̄ the in wilderness, gaue place to this youre temple. For god speakynge by the mouthe of his Prophete Moyses, had appoynted him the fashion of that tabernacle, accordynge to the whiche examplar, it should be buylded. That same tabernacle, our olde fathers made muche of, and Iosue than beyng their capitayne, brought it into the lande of the heathē people, whom god draue awaye before the face of our fathers, vntill kyng Dauids dayes. Who beyng than, as he was in very dede, an holy man, ꝛ for that in fauoure with god, delyred of hym that he myght make him a tabernacle seemely for the god of Iacob. But Salomon, for as muche as he all his dayes lyued peasibly, was he ꝑ first builded for him this magnificall temple wherof ye auaūte ꝛ boaste, saying: The temple of the lorde, the temple of the lorde, the temple of the lorde. But this youre temple is nought els than a figure of the trewe spirituall temple, that is the congregacion of the faythfull, whiche is a buildynge by youre kyng Iesus of Nazareth, whom Salomon figured.

The texte. Howbeit he that is hyghest of all, dwelleth not in temples made with handes, as saieth the Prophete: heauen is my seate, and earth is my foote stoole. What house wyl ye build for me, sayeth the Lord? which is ꝑ place of my rest: hath not my hand made al thinges?

For sence that god is a thing all togyther spirituall, he dwelleth not in houses made by mannes handē, neyther can he be enclosed within walles, who is of suche greatnes, that cannot be mesured, and contayneth all thynges. This is euen it, that he hymselfe beareth witnes of, speaking by Esay his prophete, heauen is my seate, and earth is my foote stole. What house wyl ye buylde for me, sayeth the lorde, or what place is for my repose? Hath not my hande made them all? Thā had god, who made all thinges, rest in hymselfe, before he made al. And if he take rest any where, he resteth not in houses made by man, seynge that heauen is a seate for him, ꝛ the earthe his foote stoole: but his delite is to reste in quiet hertes, and such as be alwayes readye at commaundement of the holy goste. Wherefore then, whose conscience is polluted with vicious lyuyng, he defileth goddes temple. And who that putteth them to busynes, whiche be alreadye at commaundement of his holy spirite, he polluteth the temple of the Lorde. And lyke as he offendeth not Moyses that preferreth Iesus, neyther breaketh he Moyses lawe, that placeth it behinde the gospell, euen so doethe not he violate this temple, that preferreth thetto a spirituall temple, wherein god is more delyted. For it is but reason that shadowes geue the veritie place, which putteth now herselfe forth to lyght. Ie is meete, that that thyng whiche of it selfe is carnal, geue place to that, that is spirituall. This vndowbtedlye is the very immutable will of God, and for this cause sent he downe his owne sone alone vpon earth, he sente also the holy ghoste, to thintent the lyght of

trueth in his ghospell myght cum abrode to all manner people.

Ye stifnecked and of vncircumcised hertes and eares. Ye haue alwaies resisted the holy ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye. Whiche of the Prophetes haue not your fathers persecuted? And they haue slayn thē, whiche shewed before of the cumming of that iust, whome ye haue nowe betrayed, and murthered. And ye also haue receyued the lawe, by the ministracion of aungelles: and haue not kept it. The texte.

But ye perlisting obstinately in defence of that, whiche of it selfe is carnall, now rebelle, as ye were wonte, againste goddes holy spirite, who called you now long ago, stubburne people. And yet thynke ye your selues to be Israelites, and the childrē of Abraham, because ye haue a piece of that skynne which coūercth your pryuie membre, circumcised, whereas youre heartes, as well as eares, are left vncircumcised. But they shalbe from hencefurth, the trewe children of Abraham, that be in hearte cleansed of all wicked delyres, that bepe theyr eares obedient to goddes commaundementes, and so pourged of grosnes, as touchinge carnall vnderstandyng, that they maye perceyue the spirituall meanyng of the lawe. For lyke as youre fathers by reason of theyr grosse vnderstanding and dull hearynge, resisted alwayes the holy ghoste: euen so did ye also, not vnlike in condicions to those youre auncestours, neuer leaue of your cupll speakyng and doyng againste the holy ghoste, as it of late appeared in Jesus of Nazareth, whome ye crucified, and nowe in hys Apostles. Howe often hath youre fathers rebelled againste Moyses? Why may not I call them your fathers, whome ye folowe in condicions? whiche of all the Prophetes hath not youre fathers persecuted? And those that prophecied to you of the iust to cum, by whome alone all shoulde be iustified, haue ye not onely punished, but murthered also. Ye hated them that tolde you of his cumming, and whan he was cum, & perfourmed all that they before had tolde you, ye not onely refused to embrace hym, but vpon a false impechement, ye put him into Pilates handes, and brought him by meane of hys sentence, vnto a more shamefull and mischeuouse death, then yt ye youre selues had had the perfourmaunce of the acte, all in your owne handes. And all this do ye vpon a pretexte to defende the lawe, whereas neyther your elders obserued the lawe, whiche was delyuered them by aungels, neither you that of late dayes put him to death, whome the lawe hath promysed and appointed, and now belydes do persecute hym, whom ye haue slain, enuying youre selues the gyfte of eternal saluacion, whiche is proffered you: and procuring your owne bitter destruccion, whiche ye without cause laye to our charge and to Jesus of Nazareth. Which of the Prophetes your fathers persecuted?

When they hearde these thinges, they hearte claue a sunder, and they gnasshed on him with their teeth but he beyng full of the holy ghoste, looked vp stedfastly with his eyes into heauen: and sawe the glorye of god, and Jesus standynge on the right hande of God and sayed: Beholde, I see the heauens open, and the sonne of man standyng on the right hand of God. Then they gaue a shoute with a loude voice, and stopped their eares and ran vpon hym, and stoned him. And the witnesses layed downe theyr clothes, at a young mans feete, whose name was Saule. And they stoned Steuen calling on & sayng: Lord Jesu receyue my spirite. And he kneled downe and cried: Lorde, laye not this sinne to their charge. And whan he had thus spoken, he fell a slepe. The texte.

This oracion of tale so truly tolde them, and so frankely spoken, sore chafed all their mindes, that wer in councell togyther, insomuch that theyr hearte were euen readye to breake in sounder, and gnasshed theyr teeth agaynste hym

hym. But Steuen as one vndoubtedly replenished with the holy ghoſt, was nothing at all in minde troubled by them, but in a redines to ſuffre death, caſt vp his yes, accordynge to Jeſus Chriſtes example, to heauenward, from whence all helpe & ſuccoure for a chriſten man, is to be loked for and deſyred. Than was forthwith this valiant champion ſtrengthed againſte the conflict, whiche was a cummyng. Heauen opened, and the glorie he ſawe of god, and Jeſus whome he confeſſed, ſtandyng on the ryght hande of his father. And this viſion kepte he not cloſe and ſecrete from the multitude, althoughe they wer wickedly bente. For it wer not expedient for mannes malice to ſuppreſſe goddes glory. Beholde, he ſaieth, I ſee heauens open and ſ sonne of man ſtading on the right hand of goddes maieſtie. It wer a profitable thinge, here to conſider the maner and forme of this his iudgement. Faultes wer laied in againſt him. He made anſwer to the al. And beyng but a young man, he alleaged for himſelfe, both teſtimonies of the law, and of the Prophetes. They wer vanquiſhed in their accion by pithy reaſons. There was nothing here ſpoken by him of god, but godlye, nothing of Moſes, but honorably, of the lawe nothyng, but accordyng to the meaning therof, of the temple, nothynge contumelpouſly. And yet their hartes for anger, were a breakyng in ſunder, and thei grinded their teethe togither, lyke woode men and frantyke. So loth were they to ſee their owne glorie dimpniſhed, and his glorye publiſhed and prayſed, whoſe glorye alone, god woulde haue openly declared to all men.

And the witneſſes laied downe their clothes at a younge mans feete, whoſe name was Saule:

If he hadde prayſed Moyſes or Abraham, they woulde haue forborne hym: but now that Jeſus ſhould be alyue, that he ſhould ſtande on the ryght hande of god, lyke as Dauid prophecied, that coulde not they abide. But as they had be al ſtryken than, or turned into a fury or madnes, thei ſtopped their eares againſte ſo holſome doctrine and communicacion, and ran al at once vpon Steuen violently with outragious cries. And as though he had ben thā conuict, and condemned for blaſphemie, they caſt hym oute of the citie, expreſſyng in this one poynte alone, Moyſes lawe: and there they ſtoned hym. And the witneſſes, as though they had gotten the vpperhande of hym, whoſe dewtye was after Moyſes lawe to caſt the firſt ſtone, to thintente they myght the redier be to that cruel murther, layed downe their garmētes at a young mans feete called Saule, who than of ignorāunce, and loue towarde hys countrey law, fauoured ꝑ wicked parte. Soone vpō this they began to ſtone Steuen,

Lorde, laye not this ſinne to their charge who neither contended againe, neither ſpake woordes to thē of any reproche, but made to him, whome he had ſeen, his inuocacion, and ſayde: Lorde Jeſu take to the my ſoule. Therby mayſt thou know him to be Jeſus diſciple. For in lyke maner ſayed he vpon the croſſe: father I commend my ſpirite into thy handes. After this, whyle the ſtones flygh on euery ſyde, and he was kneling vpon the grounde he cried out aloude with an highe voice, and an inwarde great affection of mynde, and ſayed: Lorde, laye not this vnto their charge, for they know not what they do, how plainly doth the ſeruaūt expreſſe his maiſter. This was the laſte woorde before his deathe, after the whiche he departed this lyfe, as it were with a ſounde ſlepe in the lorde, in whome whoſoeuer dyeth, doth not dye in very dede, but falleth into a ſlepe, and ſhall agayne, after he hath taken his pleaſaunt reſt, awake to lyfe euerlaſting. It beſemeth as many as be trewe chriſtians, to dye in ſuche a mynde. And ſo Steuen ryghte well agreyng to his name, deſerued firſt of all, the crowne of martyrdome,

and

and offered vp to the Lorde, the first fruytes of sacrifice, that were seamely for the gospell.

The. viii. Chapter.

Saule consented vnto his death. And at that tyme, there was a great persecucio against the congregacion, whiche was at Ierusalem. And they wer all scattered abrode throwout the regions of Iewry and Samaria. But deuout persons dyelled Steuen and made greate lamentacion ouer hym. As for Saul, he made hauocke of the congregacion & entred into euery house, & drewe out both men and women, & thrust them into prison. Therfore, they that were scattered abrode, went euerye where, preachyng the woorde of God.

The texte.

SOme there were emong that multitude, whiche were not than perswaded that Iesus was the sonne of God: and so by meane of suche ignorannce, their offence was the lesse, thoughe it excused them not of murther, forasmuche as they, beyng so blinded of their owne inordinate desyres, had leauer auenge, then learne the trueth. Yet of all other, none were lesse to be holden excused, than the byshoppes, scribes and pharisies. Sum agayne there were whiche of very ignorannce, not of any malice, beleued that it was a pleasant sacrifice to god, to dispatche the worlde of them, whiche went aboute to subuert the lawe that god had left to man. Albeit charitie of the gospell excuseth, yea those thinges, whiche cannot be with man excused. Amongest those that of plaine ignorannce did amysse, and of no malicious mynde, Saule was accompted one: who was borne in the Ile Tarsus, a young man, fauoryng Moyses lawe exceedyngly, whiche afterwarde became of a rauenynge woulfe, a meke lambe, of a cruel persecutor of Christes gospell, and egre defender of the lybertye therof. But stones verely cast he none that tyme at Steuen, but was assentyng to them, that had condemned and stoned hym, and for this purpose kepte he their garmentes, that he myghte be accounted one amongest the rest of them that stoned him. And yet were not the malycious Iewes quieted in their mindes, with the murther of this one person but a wonderful great persecution begune sone after to ryse against ỹ church of Christ, whiche than was at Hierusalem, in somuche as all they were scattered into sondry coastes of Iudea and Samaria, sauyng the twelue apostles whiche were more constante in mynde, and stedfast, than other were: neyther coulde the malicious Iewes ought do against them, no more coulde they against the other, but vpon Iesus the lordes sufferaunce. The lorde had permytted them in tyme of persecucion, to flye from citie to citie. And this theyr flying proceded not so muche of anye feare the disciples were in, as it came of the wil and ordinaunce of god, that of their teachinges, as it were of seedes cast in many places abrode, a plentifull harueste myght the sooner cum forth, in Christes religion. The twelue apostles and no moo, like faithfull shepherdes, shranke not awaye for all the great storme, but abode styll by it at Hierusalē. But sum well dysposed persones, because they perceiued Steuen vnworthely oppressed by subornate witnesse, cauled the dead body to be buried. Of suche a godly loue or affectiō was Ioseph moued, and Nycodemus, to prouide dyligently for the lorde Iesus funeralles: but Steuens death was celebrate after the Iewishe facion or maner, with weappnge and wailynge of good men.

And at that time there was a great persecution against the cōgregacion whiche was at Ierusalē.

For

As for Saul he made hauocke of the congregacyon. &c.

For Christen people taketh the death of suche that dye for Christes glory, to their great Ioye and comforte, and as it were for the victorye of goddes enemyes: and yf there be any teares shedde, it is not for his sake that is dead, but either for suche manquellers that purchaseth them selues helle, either els for Christes flocke beyng destitute of a necessary shepherd. In these dates Saul, whiche had before declared at the stoning of Steue sum tryal of his zeale, began of a great displeasure þ he had conceyued against the Christias, lyke an hungry woulfe, that teareth in peces, & scattereth abrode a flocke of shepe, euē so to wast goddes congregacion, pursuynge them that fledde, searching them oute that lay hid, walkynge about to euery house, and wher he thought any to be of Christes professiō, furiously there rushed he in haling men and lykewyse women into prison, more cruell (the truth to say) then were the priestes & Scribes, of the which none at al put womē to any trouble or busines. This did that yong man of a good zeale, but of a naughty iudgemēt. And therfore kepte the lord his cruelle and rageyng minde within such limites, that it was not polluted wt any murther. Whiles this persecucion was a doinge at Hierusalē, suche as were dispersed, though that feare drawe them far of, from one place to another, yet ceassed not to blase abrode Iesus of Nazareth: & in theyr walkyng al aboute Iudea, sowed here & there, as they went, the seade of þ gospell, for þ which selfe same purpose, þ lorde had suffered thē so to be scattered.

¶ Than came Philip into a citie of Samaria, and preached Christe vnto them. And the people gaue hede vnto those thinges which Philip spake, with one accorde, hearing and seyng the miracles, whiche he did. For vncleane spirites creyng with a loude voice, came out of many that were possessed of them. And many taken with palsyes, and many that halted, were healed. And there was great ioye in the citie.

Emong whome was also Philip, one of the seuen deacons, in order next vnto Steuen. This Philip being far driuen from Hierusalē, went down into a citie of Samaria, which selfe same citie is called Sebast. And thither likewyse had cum before, a certaine fame of Iesus name of Nazareth, of whome Philip preached diuers other thinges that were not there spoken of before, as how he was crucyfied, and had ryssen the thyrde day after, to lyke agayne: and furthermore whan he had been conuersaūt the space of fourty dayes with his disciples, ascended into heauen, and howe he had from thence sente downe to his disciples the holy ghost, and that all that wolde from thenceforth beleue in his name, should haue prouided for them euen at hande, their saluacio. The vulgar people among the Samarites (for of al other those did moste alwaies profit by hearyng the gospell) gaue good hede all with one accorde, to Philippes wordes. For that tale, that prompted all men saluacion, was wel worthy to be fauoured, and more then that, the miracles which were not a few in nūmber, wrought by Philip, affirmed his woordes to be trew. For diuilles out of many, whiche wer possessed of vncleane spirites, euen at hys inuocation of Iesus name, went forthe with a loude crye, declaryng that they went not forth willyngly, but that they wer enforced by vertue of that healthful name. Yea and that was more to meruaile at, many that wer taken with the palsye, and diuers other that were lame, recouered health. For these causes the whole citye in eache degre and state, was wonderfully glad. The farther that they went from Hierusalem, and the neaer as their accesse was vnto the heathen heathen, the more encrease came of the gospell that they had sowen. Beholde howe much profited the Jewes cruelty. Philip of a deacō, became an apostle, and for a fewe Hierosolomytes, whiche refused theyr teachinges, whole cities gladly receyued the doctrine of the gospell. But the churche feleth greatter dāmage at their handes, whiche beynge in themselues corrupted, taketh part with the churche, then she doeth by them, that openly persecuteth her. And of this example is here declared vs, that we shoulde take the better hede therby, of suche wolues, that are wrapped in shepe skynnes.

But there was a certaine man called Symon, whiche before tyme in the same citie vsed witchecraft, and bewitched the people of Samaria, saying that he was a man ꝑ coulde do great thinges. Whom they regarded, from the least to ꝑ greatest, saying: This man is the power of God, whiche is called great. And him they set muche by, because ꝑ of long tyme he had bewitched thē with sorceries. But as sone as they gaue credēce to Philippes preaching, of the kingdome of God, and of ꝑ name of Jesu Christ, they were baptised, both men & women. Than Simon himselfe beleued also. And whā he was baptised, he continued with Philip, & wondred, beholdyng the miracles & signes, which were shewed.

But as sone as they gaue credēce to Philippes. &c.

A man there was amonge the Samarites, called Symon, a decepuer of the people, and a practiser of delusions and inchauntemētes, who, before that Philip came thither, practised in that citie, magikes arte, & by his counterfeyt miracles, & monstreouse thinges against nature, had he made the Samarites fonde on hym and folyshe, who were beſydes of their owne selues, superstitious, & much enclined to deuilysh enchauntemētes. By meanes of such falsehode and decepte, auaunted he him selfe before the simple and plaine people, whiche wer lyghtly perswaded to superstition, boastynge that he was an excellent Prophete, vnto whom al the Samarites frō the highest to the lowest, gaue good hede. But nothing had he done in Jesus name, and therfore they, as people astonyed at suche monstruouse sightes, whiche he cypher fayned by craffte of iuglyng, eyther els brought to passe by helpe of deuylles, sayd: this felowe is goddes owne right hande which is called mighty. Many a day had he bene with them, and long had he made them with his sozcery to dote vpon him, and therfore whan he had once gotte hymselfe a name with thē of great estimation, many one beleued him in all that he taught. But after he perceiued Philip able to worke miracles in dede, & that more spedely then he coulde dooe, and also more surely at thinuocation of Jesus name, and the Samarites quite fallen frō him to Philippes beliefe, who brought thē a gladsom message of ꝑ kingdō of god, & of Jesus Christes name, not bragging of himselfe, as Simon dyd, but settyng forth Christes glory in miracles right famously, and promysyng eternall saluacion to all, that after baptisme once receyued, woulde profesſe that name, and sawe many one as well men as women receiue baptisme: at the last Symon also himselfe receiued Christes faith, and whan he was baptised, began to be of Philippes parte, more for ambicīō and desyre of worldly prayse and vaine glory, then for any loue he bare to Jesus. For as he was perfytlye sene in all artes magicall, so sawe he nothyng done by Philip, thorough suche maner falsehede and decepte, wherefore whan he beheld sum miracles set furth by him, whiche were of no small weight and valoure, (as be al welnyghe that enchaunters worke, as to make a dragon flyghe, or a strawe crepe,) but deuils to be caste out of a man with a worde, and men that were taken with a palsey to be deliuered therof at a word, he marueyled much

They were baptised both men & women. &c.

therat,as a man greatly astomed by what feate subtilitie, or by what power might suche thinges be brought to passe.

The texte. When the Apostles whiche were at Jerusalem,heard saye that Samary had receiued the worde of God,they sent vnto the Peter and John. Which whā they were cum,prayed for them, that they might receiue the holy goste. For as yet he was cum on none of the, but they were baptised onely in the name of Christ Jesu. Than layed they their hādes on the, and they receyued the holy goost.

But whan thapostles whiche than were at Jerusalem, had hearde tidinges how the Samarites,a sorte of carnall people, and theiame not clene vaye of idolatrie, had lovingly receyued at Philippes preaching the worde of god, they wer right glad,and sent to them Peter and John, the chiefe of all thapostles,to ratifye that,and set it well finished, whiche Philip had begon. These two being sent to ratifye that was begon, whan they had learned at their cōming thyther,howe Philip had christened many one, gaue thankes to God. Philip, and those that were with him, made petition to the apostles in theyr behalfe whiche were christened, that they might receiue the holy ghost,& that suche that were cleused than by baptisme of all their sinnes might receiue the gifte of god also more largely, lyke as they had doen,whiche being altogether in a highe parlour,first before all other,receyued ỳ holy ghost. For as yet was not the holy ghost cum vpon any of them, sauing that they wer onely christened in Jesus the lordes name. This authoritie to baptise,had the deacons geuen them, but to laye hande vpon the baptised, whereby was geuen the holye ghost,was reserued vnto thapostles alone, and their successours. Thapostles than,as sone as they were delyred, layde theyr handes vpon them, and they forthwith in a visible token, receyued the holy ghost which endowed their spirites with lively strength like vnto the fyre, and enriched their tounges with an heauenly eloquence.

The texte. Whan Symon sawe that thorough laying on of the apostles handes, the holy ghost was geuen,he offered them money,saying:geue me also this power, ỳ on whome soeuer I put the handes,he may receiue the holy ghost. But Peter sayde vnto him:thy money perishe with the because,ỳ hast thought,ỳ the gifte of God may be obteined with money. Thou haste neither part: nor felowship in this business. For thy herte is not right in the sight of God.Repent therfore of this thy wickednes,& pray God, ỳ the thought of thine herte may be forgeuē the. For I perceiue ỳ art full of bitter galle,& wrapped in iniquitie

When Symon the very same that was becum of a wicked enchaunter, no better a christen man then he was an enchaunter,perceyued that thapostles by laying their handes vpon them that wer baptised, gaue an heauenly gyfte, because he would wante nothing that might auaunce himselfe, and his owne commodities, profered them money,saying:geue me this power also and authoritie,that whomsoeuer I lay my handes vpon, maye receyue ỳ holy ghost. This deuilish inchaunter thought that money might with all sortes of men, bying euery thing to passe,beyng not to learne that who lacketh for gaynes, must be at some expenses:his mynde was to bye and sell for gaynes. And here ofttymes was an other sprynge of no litle mischefe in the church. Ananias and Saphira were punished for their dissimulation. And so was this an example to be repelled forthwith very sharpyly, whiche, yf it had ben receyued, shoulde haue vtterly subuerted all syncerite of Christes religion. Peter therefore declaryng to all other, what bysshoppes ought to do against

Simons

Symons disciples and folowers, made aunswere in this maner: It were better that this thy money that thou goest about to corrupte other with, were at the deuyll and thou together with all, whiche art now becum of thine owne seking for, ꝑ most wretched vnthryfte of all other lyuing, for as muche as thou thinkest that the gyft of god (which like as he of his bountiful goodnes geueth to vs freely, so wouldest he that we shoulde freely departe with the same to other) maye be bought for money. Thou canste be here no partener of any benefyte, nor haue any thing to do with vs in this oure office of preaching, or geuing the holy ghost, whiche we of a playne and a sincere minde to godward, haue taken in hand. For though thy bodye be dipped in water, yet art thou for all that, vncleane herein before god. But yf thou continue styl in this thy noughtye and deceitfull mynde, nothyng shall thy baptisme auayle the. Wherfore than be sorye for this thy noughty purpose, ⁊ alke god forgeuenes, if thou maye in any wyse cum by forgeuenes of so outragious a crime, whiche thoughe it was not already in acte perfourmed, yet so haddest thou purposed it in mynde, that the leauing of it vndone, was not longe of the, and an yll example, of all other most daungerous brought in therby amonge the faythfull of Christes congregacō. God putteth suche in commission to dispēce the giftes of his most gentle spirite, whiche be of a pure and sincere herte. I see plainly that thou art of no cleane conscience, but infected with poisonful couetice and ambicion, and tyed by meanes therof, with the bondes of sin. For the releasement wherof, pray thou must vnto god with weaping teares, that the great vengeaunce of his wrath, whiche thou hast thrugh so haynous an acte prouoked, may not light vpon the.

Thy herte is not right in the sight of god.

Repent thee for of this thy wickednes. &c.

¶ Than aunswered Symon, and sayde: praye ye to the lorde for me, that none of these thinges whiche ye haue spoken, fall on me. And they, when they had testified, ⁊ preached the worde of God, returned toward Jerusalem, and preached the ghospel in many cities of the Samaritanes.

The texte.

Than Symon beyng more afrayed of goddes punishment, then he was for his cupll doyng penitent, saide to Peter: Dooe ye rather pray to the lord for me, that none suche mischiefe as ye haue rehearsed, betyde me. Here thou seest, Theophilus, two Simons compared together: in thone is declared, what we ought to flye from thother, what is for vs to folow. After that Peter than ⁊ John had well approued by their authorite, and made vp all perfyte Philippes preaching at Samaria, and had taught many thynges whiche they themselues had learned of their mayster Jesus, they came backe againe vnto Jerusalem, and by the way, preached the ghospell to many vilages and small townes of the Samarites, alwayes in hāde with that, that their maister commaunded them to dooe.

Praye ye to the lorde for me, ꝑ none of these thinges. &c.

¶ The angell of the lorde spake vnto Philip, saying: aryse, and go toward the south vnto the waye that goeth downe from Jerusalem vnto the citie of Gaza, which is in the desert. And he arose and went on. And beholde, a man of Ethiopia, a Chamberlaine, ⁊ of great authoritie with Candace quene of ꝑ Ethiopians, and had the rule of all her treasoure, came to Jerusalem to worship. And as he was in his repayre home again, syttyng in his charlot, he read Esai the prophete.

The texte.

Philip who was muche desirous that the ghospell might cum forwarde, mette with an other playe. For good men be seldome without occasion to do good. For an angell of the lorde priuely warned hym, and sayde: aryse & take thy Journey southward, and kepe the high waye that leadeth from Jerusalem vnto Gaza. I meane olde Gaza, where no man nowe dwelleth, nigh vnto the sea. Philip was ready at thangelles commaundement, and set forthe on hys way, as a man might perceyue in him a chearefull courage, mete for a bysshop to haue, as ofte as nede shall require to allure any to the gospell. But like as the setter furth of enterludes appointeth time for his players to come and goe, euen so doeth here the angell moderate the settyng out of these two persons and their meting. For at ỳ same tyme, as god would haue it, a certaine gelded man, being a Chamberlayne, toke his iourney: a person halfe maymed, in that he lacked his stones, by reason wherof he was not a perfecte man of body, but right wyse for all that, and of a manly stomacke: an Ethiopian borne, blacke skynned, but one that shoulde sone after be clothed with a garment of a lâbes fleece, immaculate, as white as snowe, and chaunge his naturall complexion in the fonte of baptisme, a head officer to Candace quene of Ethiope, whom she had made her high treasurer. Here speake we of a sorte of people delicatly brought vp, by reason of theyr excesse and superfluitie, which are well worthy to be in subiection to a woman. Riches is the norisher of all superfluitie. This man of a deuout mynde, had taken his iourney towardes Jerusalem. For the temple there was of so great renowme, that diuers nacions, yea oute of far countreyes, came, and brought with them sundry gyftes. In consideracion wherof, the priestes had muche disdaine and hatred at them, that sayd this temple shoulde be once distroyed. This chamberlayne meaned well and godly, but fowle was he deceyued to seke in the Jewes temple for religion, whence it was euen than all ready to depart vnto the heathen. And as he was in his repayre homewarde, sitting in his chariot, he mispent not the tyme in fables, or elles in slepe, but for the loue that he had to religion, was in readyng Esaye the prophete, declaring to vs where we ought to seke for Christe. For in temples is not he hydden, but in bokes of holy scripture.

And behold a man of Ethiopia.

The texte.

Then the spirite sayde vnto Philip: go neare, and ioyne thy selfe to yonder charet. And Philip came to hym, & heard hym read the prophet Esaye, and sayde: vnderstandest thou what thou readest? And he sayde: how can I, except I haa a guyde? and he desired Philip, that he would come vp, & sytte by him. The tenour of the scripture that he read, was this: He was led as a shepe to be slayne: & like a lambe dumme before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth. Because of his humblenes, he was not eſteemed. But who shal declare his generacion? for his lyfe is taken from ỳ yearth. The Chamberlaine answered and said: I praye the of whō speaketh ỳ prophet this? of himselfe, or of some other man?

Whan Philip had here in his waye, mette with him, the angell warned hym againe priuely, and sayde: go to, and approche thou neare vnto this charet. Whan Philip had made good spede thyther, he heard the Chamberlaine readyng Esay the prophete, and streyght therupon perceyuyng his good zele, and endeuour vnto religion, sayde to him: vnderstandest thou what thou readest? Than answered he: howe should I vnderstand, a man as I am geuen wholy vnto temporall busines, excepte I had one to expounde to me the secret sence and meaning of the prophete? And with that desired Philip, ỳ he would step into the chariote, and sit by hym, that they might the more commodiously talke together. Up went Philip and sat by the Chamberlayne. Marke me how well doth Philip here resemble a trewe preacher of the gospell, and howe plainly in this chamberlayne, is suche Heathen people described, as coueted to knowe Christe. There must nedes be wonderfull great encrease of all godlynes, where the one hasteth in muche desyre to teache, the other hartely biddeth hym to his companyne, desirous to learne. Here was nothing done by chaūce, god did set al in rule and ordre. For this chāberlaine happened for his parte, vnawares, vpon that place of the prophete, whiche described Jesus Christ.

This was the place of Esay: he was led as a shepe to be slayne, and as a lambe before his peace before the person that clypped hym, and not once opened his lyppes. Because of his humblenes he was not estemed. Who shall declare his generation? For his lyfe is taken away from the earth. This texte of Esaye, whan Philip had repeated to hym, the chamberlayne was more enflamed with ardēt affeccion to knowe whome the prophete spake of, and sayd: of whō I praye the, speaketh the prophete these wordes, of himselfe, or of sum other? See how apte this chamberlaine was to learne. He had heard that Esaye himselfe was cut in pieces at commaundement of kyng Manasses, with a wodden sawe, and ignorāunt was he not, that prophecies laye sumtymes after suche sorte so doubtefull, that what seamed to be spoken of this person or that, after the historical sence, oftentymes myght after a more priuey or misticall sence, pertayne to another. But calye is it to teache that person, whiche in suche wyse demaundeth.

Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached vnto him Jesus. And as they went on their waye, they came vnto a certain water, and the Chāberlaine said: see, here is water, what doth let me to be baptised? Philip said vnto him: if thou beleue with all thyne herte, thou mayest. And he aunswered, and sayd: I beleue that Jesus Christe is the sonne of God. And he commaunded the charet to stand still. And they went downe bothe into the water, both Philip and also the Chamberlaine, and he baptised him: And as sone as they were come out of the water, the spirit of the lorde caught away Philip, and the chamberlayne saw him no more. And he went on his way reioysyng: but Philip was found at Azotus. And he walked thorowe oute the countrey preaching in al the cities, till he came to Cesarea. The texte.

Than Philip, as one that was ready with myght good wil to teache, opened his lyppes, and begynnyng at this place of the prophete, expounded to hym briefly the principall poyntes of the gospell, that is to saye, that this person, whom the prophete spake of, was the sonne of god, throughe whome god had decreed, and by his prophetes promysed, freely to saue all that wouldē put their trust in him, and that he wouldē for this cause haue hym to be borne againe very man of the virgin Mary. And where the one nativitie and the other can not be in worde expressed, whether it be his eternall generacio of his father, whiche from euer was without circumscripcion of tyme, or that he once had of the virgin, by the holy ghostes handywarke without mānes help, taking so vpō hym mannes nature, that he departed neuer from his godhed, the prophete Esay seing this in spirite, and muche astorned therat, sayde: who shall be able to declare at lengthe his generacion? Furthermore, that he was the trewe paschall lambe, for whose deathes sake, his father had appoynted to delyuer, not only the Israelytes, but al other nations also, from bondage of synne, and from death euerlastyng.

And therfore delyuered he hym into the handes of the priestes, scribes, phariseis, and head men amōg the people, who brought him afterward vnto Pilate, beyng than iudge and liutenaunt of the prouince, to thentent he might be crucified. And for as muche as his will was to dye for oure sakes, no aunswer made he before him for his releasement, but as he had bene a shepe, suffred pacietly al their mockes, and al their punishementes. But there bid he the puissaunce of his diuine power, and submitted himselfe for mans sake, to the lowest degree of humilitie. The Iewes supposyng verely that he was none other thing at all than he seemed to be, condemned hym, and putte hym to death. This is it vndoubtedly that the prophete speaketh of: In his humblenes is his iudgement exalted. An innocent is to death condemned, whiche shall cum once agayne on hyghe, and surmountyng all other, and shall iudge the quicke and the dead. But god the father hath called his sonne backe to lyfe againe the thirde daye. After what tyme of his resurrection, was he the space of fowerthe dayes conuersaunt on yearth, bothe seen often, and felte of his disciples corporally, and than finally in syght of them all, lyfte vp he was into heauen. And the tenth daye after his ascencion, sent he downe from heauen the holy ghoste, who in suche wyse enspired the apostles hertes and their tounges also, that they myghte without all feare, publyshe vnto all people through out the world, Iesus of Nazareth, for the chiefe authour and fountayne of lyfe, and health euerlastyng, not by any helpe of Moses lawe, but by faythe and baptisme. Of all these poyntes reheatsed, none there is, that Moses law hath not in figures sygnified, that the prophetes haue not before spoken of, yea that Iesus hymselfe hath not taught and promised. The chamberlayne, whiles that Philip was declarying to hym these poyntes of the gospel, with other many mo, was ware by chaunce, of a litle spring of water, fall by the waye, and sayde vnto Philip, why prolong we so great and weyghtye a matter? See where water is at hande. Thou hast nowe enformed me, and I am all ready. What shall let, but that I maye forthwith be christened? Than aunswered Philip: there is no let at all, yf thou stedfastly beleue, and kepe w all thy herte, those thinges whiche I haue taught the. This promyse alone is made at baptisme. Than aunswered the chamberlaine right gladly: I beleue that Iesus is the very same Christ, who the prophetes hath promysed, & I beleue that he is the sonne of god, for whose sake, al men haue prokered the, health euerlastyng. Philip caused the chariot forthwith to stand styll. It was a noble carriage, richely garnished, & semely for hym that was an head officer to a barbarous quene. But downe alowe muste he come, that shall be founde mete for baptysme, and strip himselfe naked of all garmentes. Bothe wente down into the water, and there Philip christened the chamberlayne, a poore man, the riche, a simple and an abiect, the puyssaut and mightie, a man in himselfe right perfect of all his lymmes, the vnperfect that lacked parte of his membres, a Iewe, the Ethiopian. So litle regarde here was had to mannes personage. There is no dilagreaunce where is faith in Iesus Christe, and consent of mynde together in one accorde. After baptisme, there was neyther chamberlayne, nor Ethiopian, but a newe creature. And as for Philip, as soone as he was come out of the water, an aungel of the lord toke him awaye, and more of him saw not this chamberlaine, neyther after desyred he to haue his teaching, being once enspired with the holy ghost in baptisme: but as one righte glad at the hert, that he had learned Christes fayth, made an ende of his iourney, that he might at home likewyse publishe the name of Christe among his countrey men of Ethiop. Fynally the aungell set Philip downe in the next

And as they went on their waye.

And assone as they were cum oute of the water.

citie

citie called Azotus, whence he came: and takyng thence his iourney, in euery place, where village or towne did lye in his waye, he preached the gospell, vntyll he came vnto Cesarea, a citie in Palestine, where his dwellynge was.

The.ix.Chapter.

The texte.

¶ And Saule, yet breathyng out threatnynges & slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went vnto the hie priest, & desyred of him letters, to carry to Damasco, to ỹ Synagoges, that if he found any of this waye, (whether they were menne or women) he might bring them bound to Hierusalē. And whē he iourneyed, it fortuned that as he was comynge to Damasco, sodēly there shyned rounde about him, a light from heauen, & he fell to the earth, and hearde a voyce saying to hym: Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he sayde: what arte thou lorde? And the lorde sayed: I am Iesus, whom thou persecutest. It is harde for the to kycke against the pyncke. And he both trembling, & astonyed, sayd: lorde, what wylt thou haue me do? And the lord said vnto him: arise, & go into the citie, & it shalbe tolde the what thou must doe.

While these thynges were in doing, Saule in all his procedynges against the Christians, expressed muche cruelte, not onely within the walles of Hierusalem, but where els he perceiued that the disciples, whiche were scattered abrode, had syred also the worde of the gospell purposyng than more and more with himselfe not onely, to threaten them and to enpuyson, but to kyll and murther them in sundyr wyse, went vnto the hygh Bysshop, to thentent that by maintenaunce of his authoritee, he myght the sooner consume them: & desyred to haue his letters of commission, not onely to cities nygh there about where he had already exercised his crueltie, but vnto Damasco, a citie in Phenicea, far of from Hierusalem, dyrected vnto the Synagoges of ỹ Iewes there dwellyng, for that ende that he might, thorowe their ayde at commaundement of the high Bysshop, bryng fast bounde to Hierusalem, whomesoeuer he had taken faultie in this heresye, eyther menne or women. These and suche lyke thinges was Saule moued to doe, of a plaine and no dessemblyng mynde, supposyng with himselfe, accordyng vnto the Lordes saying, that his deuoute and seruice herein, was pleasaunt to God. And therfore God suffered not his handes to be polluted with innocentes bloude, but called hym abacke in the myddes of his rage. For whan he was almoste at his iourneyes ende, not far from the citie Damasco, a sodaine light from heauen, shone about him: and sodainlye, as he was fallen for feare vpon the ground, hearde he a voice, saying vnto hym: Saule, Saule why doest thou persecute me? Thā Saule as one stricken w a great maruayle who he should be, that on hygh aboue, and so myghty, complayned of wrōg as it were done by his frēde and in doubt whether he were some aungell, or els God himselfe, aunswered fearfullye: who art thou, O Lorde? Than sayed he: I am the same Iesus of Nazareth, whome thou supposyste to be deade, whereas I doo liue & reigne in heauen. But thou in persecutiō of my disciples, & of my name, doest persecute me also, vnawares thereof. But all thy labour is in vaine.

For it shall be harde and paynfull for the, to beate thy heeles against the pyncke. For thy stryuyng is not against manne, but against god, whose wil no manne is hable to reſiſte. Wherefore thine office herein, is double the more, and nothing ſhalt thou preuaile therby, and yet doe thy ſelfe a ſhrewde turne. Saule hearing this, trembled for feare, and as one amazed, ſaide: Lorde, what wylte thou haue me doe? By this anſwere, his errour appeared to haue comme of plaine ignorance, and of no malice. To inſtructe once ſuche perſons, it were ſufficient. But it was expedient that an high and fierce ſtomake, were plucked downe, and ſuche one that mynded nought els but to threaten and kylle, were made afrayed, to thentent he myght be eaſlye taught. Than ſayed the lorde to him: aryſe and go into the citie. There ſhalt thou learne what is for the to do. The lorde ſtryketh man in ſuche a ſorte, that it maye be for his health: ſo he caſteth downe, that he maye ſet vp, ſo maketh he them blynde, that he maye lighten them. Saule beyng in his cruell rage, was throwen downe headlyng, but after that he became meke and ready to obeye, he was byd ſtande vp.

The texte. ¶ The mē which tourneyed with him, ſtoode amazed, hearyng a voyce, but ſeyng no man. And Saul arose from the yearth, & when he opened his yes, he ſawe no man. But they led hym by ỹ hand, & brought him into Damasco. And he was three dayes without ſight and neyther did eate nor drinke. And there was a certaine diſciple at Damasco, named Ananias, & to him ſaid ỹ lord in a viſiō: Ananias? And he ſayd: beholde, here I am lorde. And the lord ſaide vnto him: aryſe and go into the ſtreete, whiche is called ſtreyght, and ſeke in ỹ houſe of Judas, after one called Saule of Tarſus. For beholde, he prayeth, and hath ſene in a viſion, a man named Ananias cumming in to him, and puttyng his handes on hym, that he might receiue his ſyght.

Whyle theſe thinges were thus in doyng, the men that went with Saule, in his tourney, ſtode amazed, hearyng certainly one talke to Saule, but ſeing no man. Than Saule vpon good comforte that he toke hereof, arose vp. The firſt ſtep to vertue is to be ſet vp on foote. And beholde againe an other myracle, although his yes were open, he could not ſee. Than thoſe that came in his company, lead him by the hande into the citie of Damasco. And yet was not he than forthwith admitted to the gyfte of the holy ghoſte, that it ſhoulde be noted of vs that came after for an example, howe it were not mete to laye hande forthwith vpon eache perſon, but firſte to ſee them that are newlye inſtructed diligently tryed, and prepared by faſtyng, & prayer. Wherefore than, lyke as the apoſtles abode at Hieruſalem ten dayes ſpace, in expectation of the holy ghoſte, ſo tarryed Saule at Damasco three dayes, ſeing none yearthlye thyng with his corporal yes, but thinwarde yes of his ſoule, were in ỹ meane ſpace clearly illuſtrate: al that whyle receyuyng no foode, but his mynde was fed the meane time with heauenly doctrine. There was the ſame tyme at Damasco, a diſciple, (for ſo were they than called whiche had receiued the goſpel,) named Ananias. The lorde had pyked oute this Ananias, by whoſe handes his pleaſure was bounteouſly to replenyſhe Paule wᵗ gyftes of his holy ſpirit. And therfore hym ſpake he vnto hym by a ſleape, in his dreame, and ſayd: Ananias? He on the other part anon perceiuing that god called him, made anſwer: lo I am here lorde: as who ſayth diſclolyng a true chriſtian herte, ready at all commaundementes. Than ſayde the lorde: ryſe vp and go thy waye into the ſtreat, whiche they commonly call ſtreyght, and aſke at Judas houſe for one Saule, who was borne in Tarſus. For lo, there is he in prayer, ſuyng to haue grace and liberall comforte from vs. At the very ſame tyme, Saul lykewyſe as he was in prayer, thoughte ỹ one Ananias, had entred into ỹ houſe to hym,

And there was a certayne diſcyple.

and

and layde his handes vpon him, to thintent he myght receyue againe his eyesight. Euen so the lorde prepared in their mutuall vision eache one for other.

¶ Than Ananias answered: lorde, I haue heard by many, of this man, howe muche euil he hath done to thy saintes at Jerusalē: and here he hath authoritie of the high prestes, to bynde all that cal on thy name. The lorde sayde vnto him, go thy waye, for he is a chosen vessell vnto me, to beare my name before the Gentiles, and kinges, and the children of Israell. For I wyl shewe him, howe great thinges he muste suffre for my names sake. The texte.

But Ananias sore afrayed at the name of Saule, who for his cruelty, was than muche spoken of among the christians, made aunswere: I haue heard lord. of many one, howe sore this man hath vexed thy blessed saintes at Hierusalem, and yet not so contented, but nowe is he hither come also, keeping put in authoritie by a strenght commission from the hygh byshoppes, to lape the al fast in fetters, that call vpon thy name. Hereunto the lorde agayne made aunswere: I knowe right well howe ye my shepe are muche afrayed of that rauenous wolfe.

But there is no cause why thou shouldest feare. For that wolfe haue I chaunged into a right gentle shepe. Wherefore see thou go vnto hym boldly. For hym I haue chosen to myne owne selfe, as a notable instrument, to carye my name before the Heathen, before kynges of the yearth, and the children of Israel. What he hath done hytherto, was not done of malyce, but of a zele to the lawe of his countrey. And forasmuche as of plaine ignorāunce, his iudgemēt failed him, sum tryall hath he shewed of his towardnesse, how earnest a defendour of my gospell, I am lyke to haue of him, in tyme to cum. Hitherto hath he stryuen against the professours of my name, beyng armed therunto with bulles from the high byshoppes, with threatnynges, and with fetters for them. Hereafter more manfully shall he fight and stoutly, beyng armed but with my spirite, and gyrte with the sworde of my euangelicall worde, against all them that hate my name. For the glory and renoume wherof, far greater afflictions shall he willyngly suffre, than nowe of late he prepared against you.

¶ And Ananias went his waye, and entred into the house, and put his handes on him, and sayde: brother Saule, the lorde that appeared vnto the in ỹ waye, as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou myghtest receyue thy sighte, & be fylled with the holy ghost. And immediatly there fell from his yes, as it had ben scales, and he receiued sight: & arose, and was baptised, and receyued meat, and was comforted. The texte.

Ananias, well encouraged at these wordes, departed thence, and entred into Judas house: he founde Saule prayeng, and layde his handes vpon hym, and sayde: brother Saule, the lorde Jesus Christe, that appeered vnto the in the waye, as thou wastest cumming hither, hath sent me to the, to thintent thou shouldest receiue thi sight againe, and be replenished with the holy goste. Ananias had vneth spoken these wordes, but there fell from the yes of Paule in the same place, as it were certaine scales of a fishe, & so recouered he his sight. And immediatly he stode vp, and was baptised. After that, whan he had receiued sum foode, he was well strengthned. In this maner that excellent capitayne of Christes gospell, & he that shoulde soone after obscure the glory & renowme of other his apostles, receyued at the hand of Ananias, a poore and hūble disciple, the holy ghost, before that he receiued baptisme. But nothing is done out of order, that is done at Jesus Christes cōmaundement, whō Paule hadde for hys teacher. For so had he geuen his apostles authoritie, that he

woulde neuertheleſſe reſerue vnto hymſelfe, the highe ſette authoritie of all the whole matter.

The texte. Than was Saule certayne dayes with the diſciples, which were at Damaſco. And ſtreyghtwaye preached Chriſt in the Synagoges, howe he was the ſonne of God. But all that hearde him, were amaſed, and ſayed: Is not this he that ſpoyled them which called on this name in Hieruſalem, and came hyther for that entent that he might bring them bounde vnto the highe prieſtes? But Saul encreaſed the more in ſtrength, & confounded the Iewes whiche were dwelling at Damaſco, affirmyng that this was verye Chriſte.

Than Saule beyng ſodainly chaunged, abode for certaine dayes in companye with the diſciples, whiche were at Damaſco. And without any further delaye, he begonne furthwith eaſen there, contrary to the byſhoppes commaundement, to ſette vpon the office that he was appoynted vnto by Chriſte. And he went into the Iewes Synagoges, and publiſhed openly and frankly, affirming that Ieſus of Nazareth was the ſonne of god, for whoſe ſake alone, all men ſhoulde haue profered them, accordyng to the Prophetes foreſayinges, health euerlaſting. The Iewes, which knew of Saules cruel fiercenesſe agaynſt the Chriſtians, by the rumoure that was bruted abrode, reioyſyng that they had gotten ſuche a valiaunt defendour of Moſes lawe, whan they had hearde that he did ſo earneſtlye preache Ieſus name of Nazareth, they marueyled what had chaunced vnto the manne, that he was ſo ſodainlye quyte altered, and ſayde amongeſt themſelues: is not this the ſame Saule, who of late dyd all that euer he could, aſſaulte theym that called vpō this name at Hieruſalē, whiche name he blaſeth nowe abrode, and famouſly publiſheth: and nowe but of late came hyther, purpoſelye to take all ſuche perſons, (yf he myght fynde any here) and to byrng them faſte bounde to the highe Byſſhoppes, there to be punyſhed at theyr wyll and commaundement? Nowe cumneth this to paſſe, that he hathe ſo ſodaynly caſte of his Iewyſhe conditions, and forſaken Moſes, and hathe become a profeſſoure of the crucified? But Paule, whome that name in verye dede than better agreed with, after that he once became of a troubleſome perſon, a teacher of ſobernesſe and quiet libertee, ſo litle was afrayed at ſuche maner ſayinges of the Iewyſhe, that he beyng euery daye the better ſtrengthened with ſpirituall counſoyle, confounded and muche troubled the Iewes that were dwellynge at Damaſco, affirmyng conſtauntly, and prouing by the teſtimonies of holy ſcripture, that Ieſus of Nazareth, whome he had before of ignorannce perſecuted, and dyd nowe preache, was the trewe Meſſias that was promyſed to the worlde, and that none other ſhould be borne hereafter, at whoſe handes the Iewes ought to looke for euerlaſtyng health.

The texte. ¶ And after a good whyle, the Iewes tooke counceil together, to kyll him. But their layinge wayte was knowen of Saule. And they watched the gates daye and nyght to kil hym. Than the diſciples toke him by nyght, and put him thorowe the walle, and let him downe in a baſket. And whē Saule was cumme to Ieruſalem, he aſſayed to couple himſelfe with the diſciples: but they were all afrayed of him, and beleued not that he was a diſciple. But Barnabas tooke him, and brought hym to the Apoſtles, and declared to them, how he had ſeene the Lorde in the waye, and that he had ſpoken vnto him, and how he had done boldely at Damaſco in the name of Ieſu. And he had his converſacion with them at Ieruſalem, ſpeakyng boldely in the name of the lorde Ieſu.

Whan Paule had taken ſuche an enterpryſe vpon him, many dayes at Damaſco, no litle to the diſciples ioy and comforte, and not without a greate rumble rumble and murmour of those, that did not than beleue, the Iewes at length the layed their heades in councell togither, to thintent that they might (by lying in wayte for him) slaye hym. O what a nacion is this that murthereth men? Paule reasoned, taught, and vanquished the Iewes with testimonyes of their owne lawe, as it were with their owne weapons. But there was nothyng els with them, but conspiracies, stockes, prisons, stripes, and sondry kyndes of deathe. But this had the lorde by promisse, assured his welbeloued seruauntes of, that they shoulde not lose, no not a heare of one of their heades, excepte his father suffered it. The tyme was not than come for that excellente warryoure to dye in the gospelles cause, he had than many battels behynde, to fyght for Christes people, many daungerouse perylles were to come, for him to sustayne in fyght of battell, many cities and countreys wer lefte for him to subdue by goddes holy worde, and to call vnto Christes yoke. Wherfore Paule, as it was goodes wil, had warnyng that ỹ Iewes laye in wayte for him, insomuche that they kept the gates day and night in watche for him, that he should not away escape, but that they would kil him. To bring this acte to passe, they had procured them ayde of the Lieftenaunt of the citie, who was the debytie of king Aretas, to thintent that yt theyr priuey watche had not wel proceeded to theyr purpose, they would neuertheles openly & by force slay him. The disciples than, conceyuing in their myndes, how that the lesse the person cared for himselfe, the more was he worthy to be saued, wouldе not suffer, so valiant a warryer in Christes worde, perysshe. Wherfore they hydde him, and by night let hym downe by a corde of the towne walles, in a balket. Euen so oftentymes, yea, bolde and valiaunt captaines do runne awaye, to thintent that they maye, accordyng to the prouerbe, be able to fyght againe.

They watched the gates day and nyght to kyll hym.

O what a woondre is it to see ỹ course of thinges turned vpside downe? Nowe lurketh he in corners & flatteth alway, who a litle before with many sore threatnynges persecuted: and now prouide they to saue Paules lyfe, whome he before inuented crafty meanes to slay. After this, whā he was once come to Hierusalem, and would haue accōpanyed with the disciples, with whome the olde Saule was to well knowen, Paule as thā vnknowen, al were afraied of him, as the shepe of the woulfe: not trustyng his woordes that he was a disciple, callynge well to their remembraunce what cruelties he was wonte to exercise, in persecutyng Christes flocke. They suspected than that some priuie wyles had been cloked vnder the name of a disciple. But Barnabas the Leuyte, of whome we spake before, that knewe what was done concernynge Paule, brought him to thapostles, before whome, he declared all the whole matter, how the lorde had appeared vnto him as he was goyng to Damasco, & spake to him, and how sodenly his mynde was chaunged, and how fraekly and frely he had preached the gospel in Jesus name the lord. Thapostles reioyced therat, and with theyr honeste reherſall, commended him to the whole companye. So was he for a time, busyly occupyed at Hierusalem, keppng companye with thapostles, and disciples, & boldely there professyng, and preachyng the name of the lorde, whiche he had of plaine ignorannce, persecuted.

¶ And he spake, and disputed againste the Grekes, but they went about to slay him, whiche whan the brethren knewe, they brought him to Cesarea, & sent him forth to Tarsus. Then had the congregacions reste throughout al Jewry and Galile, and Samaria, and were edified, and walked in the feare of the lorde, and multiplied by the coumforte of the holy ghoste.

The texte.

And

And that did not he onely before the people of Hierusalem, nothyng afrayd of the reprochefull name of an Apostata, because he had swarued from the byshoppes trade in religion, but preached likewyse Iesus name before the Gentyles, whiche for the great renowme of that citie, dwelled than at Hierusalem, and before the Iewes, whiche were borne among the Grecians, reasonynge with them, and by verye testimonies of the lawe prouyng that Iesus was the sauiour of the worlde. But in no wyse coulde they abyde suche libertie of speache, & therefore resorted to suche, as they were wonte to do for ayde againste him, whome they were not able in disputacions to banquysshe, searchinge out some waye to slaye Paule. Suche bee their disputacions, that are of Iewysshe condicions. And euen than were priuie wyles also inuented to betrappe him withal, whan that he leaste thought vpon any suche daungier, After that the brethren knewe of this, lest any thinge shoulde betyde hym otherwyse then well, they conueyed hym awaye vnto Cesarea Philippi, whiche is a cytte in Phenicea, and sente hym eftsones thence vnto Tarsus in Cilicia where he was borne. For by meanes of Paules wanderyng about, and his leadyng from place to place, the gospell well prospered. In the meane while, after the tyme of persecution was well ouerblowen, the congregacion of disciples, whiche than were dispersed throughout all the partes of Iurye, Galile, and Samarye, in the whiche countreys principally taught the lorde, and where before all other places, he commaũded that his gospell shoulde be preached, lyued at some reasonable quietnes, takynge comforte eache one of other, throwowe mutuall vnitie and concorde: and what for the smalle regard they had to mannes threatninges, and the dayly increase bespoes of theyr nũber, they were well edifyed in Christes faythe, lyuyng in feare of the lorde, and replenished in tyme of aduersitie with spirituall consolacion of the holy goste. This was it vndoubtedly that the lorde had promysed them: in the worlde ye shalbee well assured of trouble and aduersitie, but in me shal ye haue quietnes of mynde, and ghostelye comforte.

The texte. ¶ And it chaunced as Peter walked thorow out al quarters, he came also to the saintes, which dwelt at Lydda. And there he found a certaine man named Eneas, which had kept his bed eyght yeares, and was sicke of the palsey. And Peter said vnto him: Eneas, the Lorde Iesu Christe make the whole: arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately. And al that dwelt at Lydda and Sarron, sawe him, and turned to the Lorde.

It befell that Peter, whyles he as a vigilant shepeheardе, of a stoute courage, went abrode, trauelyng many countreyes, nowe these to visyte, nowe those, came also vnto the holy sainctes that dwelte at Lydda. That Lydda is a citie on the sea syde in Palestine. There soiorne he one called Eneas, who had layne bedrid eyght yeares before. For he was taken with a palsey. Peter thã remembryng the lordes commaundement, that what house soeuer they came into they should heale the sicke, for it were not sittyng for bodely diseases to raigne, where spirituall phisycions be present, saydе to hym: Eneas, Iesus Christ make the whole. Aryse, and make thy bed. Immediatlye vpon these wordes spoken, he rose vp whole, and made his bed himselfe. This was a token of perfyte healthy. Whan they sawe hym sodenly made whole by vertue & power of Iesus name, who had layne bedrid so many yeares, as many as dwelt at Lydda & Sarona, a towne on the sea coaste nyghe vnto Lidda, were conuerted to the Lorde, and professed the name of Iesus Christe. And so of one whiche was restored to his corporall healthy, were many a one moued to healthy of soule.

The texte.

¶ There was at Joppa, a certaine woman, named Tabitha (whiche by interpretacion, is called Dorcas) the same was full of good workes and almes dedes, whiche she did. And it chaunced in those dates, that she was sicke and died. Whom whē they had washed, they layd her in a chamber. But forasmuche as Lydda was nygh vnto Joppa, & the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent vnto him, desyryng him that he would not be greued to come vnto them.

There was agayne at Joppa, a disciple called Tabitha, whiche with the Ebrues signifyeth Dorcas, with ꝑ Latynes Capra, whiche name gyue they of the cleare sight of the ye. This woman had bene vertuously occupied in all maner godlynesse, but chiefly in workes of mercy, wherwith she releaued the poore. It befell the same time that Peter was busye in his office at Lydda, that she died of the same disease that she had bene sicke of. And whan they had done with washyng the dead corps, accordynge to they⁹ accustomed maner, they layde it in a highe chamber for to be annointed. And for as muche as Joppa was not far from Lydda, and the disciples had vnderstandyng that Peter was there, thei sente two men in message to him, desiring that he would vouchsafe to come vnto them.

The texte.

¶ Peter arose, and came with them. And when he was come, they brought him into the chamber. And all the wyddowes stode rounde about him, weaping, & shewyng the coates, and garmētes, which Dorcas made, while she was with thē. And Peter put them all forth and kneled downe, and prayed, and turned him to the body, & said: Tabitha, arise. And she opened her yes, and whan she sawe Peter, she sate vp. And he gaue her the hāde & lifted her vp. And whan he had called ꝑ saintes and widdowes, he shewed her alyue. And it was knowē throughout all Joppa, & many beleued on the Lorde. And it fortuned that he taryed many dayes in Joppa, with one Symon a tanner.

Peter than declaryng in himselfe an example of a good shepeheardē, came to them vndelayedly. After his cumming within the house, they brought hym vp into the chamber, to the intent he shoulde be moued at the light of the dead corps, to take some pitie or compassion for her death. There stode about Peter all the wydowes, who among other ministeries, whiche were prayse worthye, chefely were commended for seruing the holye in all their necessities: they mourned her with weeping teares, whiche they let fall, more of pitie towarde the poore whome she was wont to refreshe with many good turnes, then for her lake that was departed. Their weapyng was then a sufficient openyng to hym of they⁹ myndes what they desyred to haue.

They called not to rehearsall her good dedes, but brought forth to sight, the coates and other garmentes, whiche Dorcas had already made to clothe the holye withall. But this her indeuour in doyng good, was by death interrupted. Then Peter hauing in remembraunce Jesus example, where as he rayled vp the chefe priestes doughter of the Synagoge, after the multitude of those that mourned were first of all put oute of dooores, commaunded them all to go forth. For the widowes were onely they that mourned. And weping is a let to prayer. And moreouer because that women, whiche of their owne nature are weke spirited, shoulde not be troubled at the rysyng vp of the deade bodye he would haue none of them to be present, but he all alone prayed, kneling on his knees. For the holy ghost, by whom all miracles are wrought, is not at all times in like force with mā. But his vertue by prayer, is quickened, like as fayth is also: without the whiche no miracle at all is wrought. Whan Peter had made his prayers, and conceyued spirituall strength of the holye ghoste, he turned hym to the bodywarde, and sayde: Tabitha, rise vp. Than shee, as these wordes were spoken, awaked, as though shee had ben in a slepe, and loked vpon Peter. And after that she had beheldе hym well, sate her down agayne. Peter than putting forth his hande to ayde her withall, set her vp, beyng than on liue and lusty. After this maner must they be lifte vp vnto godlines, whiche be of their owne selues weake: First of all muste god be prayed vnto, that he would take mercy vpon them. That done they muste be taughte what to do, rebuked for they? lyfe misspent, and exhorted to amende. Finally they muste haue ayde as Dorcas had, to be lyfte vp by good example, to more perfection of lyfe.

And turned hym to the body & sayd: Tabitha, aryse.

Whan Peter had called the holy brethren and widowes, whome he before had bidden go forthe into the chambre againe, whiche were likewyse theyr selues occupyed in prayer, lokyng for the mercifulnes of the Lorde, he shewed them the woman on lyue for them all to beholde. That miracle was soone brupted abrode ouer all the citie of Joppa, and caused manye one to beleue in Christe. For that is the very chefe commoditie that cummeth of miracles. For it shoulde not otherwyse muche auayle to call one or two amongest so manye thousandes, that come by tymes into this worlde and departe theclame, vnto lyfe againe, whiche muste neuertheles soone after dye. And this was an occasion for Peter to tarye manye dayes at Joppa. For where shoulde he that fisheth for mennes soules abide more to his contentacion, than there as manye cummeth vnto his nette? All this meane whyle abode Peter the chefe of all the apostles, and he that by reason of so greate myracles whiche he hadde wrought, both was famous and mighty, at one Simons house, a tanner by his occupacion.

The.x. Chapter.

The texte.

¶ There was a certaine man in Cesarea called Cornelius, a capitaine of the souldyers of Italy, a deuoute man, & one that feared God with al his houshold, whiche gaue muche almes to the people, and prayed God alway. The same sawe by a vision euidently (about the ninth houre of the daie) an angel of god cumming in vnto hym, & saying vnto him, Cornelius: when he loked on hym he was afrayde, and sayde: what is it Lorde? He sayd vnto him: Thy prayers, and thy almes are cum vp into remembraunce before God. And now send men to Joppa, & call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter. He lodgeth with one Simō a tanner whose house is by the sea side. He shal tell the what thou oughtest to do. And when ỹ aungel which spake vnto him, was departed, he called two of his housholde seruauntes, and a deuout souldier, of them that awayted on him, & told them all the matter, and sent them to Joppa.

HYtherto had none of ỹ apostles bene conuersaunt among the heathen but by occasion was that chamberlaine whiche came from Ethiop, induced to Christes religion. And yet sum of the gentiles were the better, that they dwelt nere vnto ỹ apostles. For in Cesarea, ỹ most florysshing citie of Palestine, whiche to fore was called Stratos castle, was a certaine manne named Cornelius, capteine ouer a band of me, which wer of Italie. This mā, though by trade of his auncestry, he were heathen, & by reason of his office, a man of armes, armes, yet as one that desyred to be a christen man, he was a good lyuer and feared god. Like him was all his whole housholde. For it is commenly seene that the residue of the housholde, do frame themselues in condicions, like vnto the maister of the house. He in two poyntes chiefly, declared hymselfe meete to take vpon hym Christes religion, in liberally refreshing the needy, & poore, and in continuall prayer to the lorde. He knowledged the true god, for: that he learned, by reason that he was conuersaunt among the Jewes. He knew that his fauour was chiefly obtayned, by deyng benefitiall to the poore, and by cõtinuall prayer. It remayned alwaye certaine, that he whiche had already abundauntly ynoughe, shoulde haue more geuen hym. This man deyng in his prayer, not muche before supper tyme, the nynth houre of the daye, did euidẽtly see a vision, the angel of god comming towardes hym, and callyng hym by name. Cornelius, as though he had ben familiarly acquaynted with hym. But Cornelius beholding than the angel, and deyng sore afrayed by reasõ of the maiestie of so rare a personage, sayde: Lorde what art thou? The angell answered: thy prayers are not ipente in vayne, neyther yet thy almes dedes, wherwith hitherto thou hast earnestly called vpon god, to be mercifull to the. For what thou hast bestowed to refreshe ꝑ poore, ꝑ lord vouchesafeth to cõte it bestowed vpon himselfe: & he wil reward thee in their behalfe, which are not able to requite. Wherfore thou hast not employed thy benefite on him that wil forget it. Thou haste done for thy parte accordyng to his will, he agayne on thother parte, will accomplishe that thy requeste, whiche thou haste continually by prayer, desyred. The lorde hath heard thy prayers, because thyne eares were not stopped from the poore. Nowe therfore this must thou doo without delaye, that from hence forwarde the lorde maye shewe vnto the, his bountifull goodnes. Sende sum of thy seruauntes to the citie Joppa, and enquire there for a certaine man named Simon, and desyre hym to cum speake with thee, this man in the yes of the world, is not of any great estimacio, but in the sight of god, highe in fauour by reason of his godlynes, and is otherwise called Peter. He hosteth at a certaine mannes house in Joppa, whose name is Simon, a tanner by his occupacio, and dwelleth by the sea syde. Of this Peter shalt thou learne what thou must do to obtayne saluacion. When the aungell had this sayde, he vanished awaye. Than by and by Cornelius sent a couple of his housholde seruauntes, and with them one that was a souldier retaynyng to hym, whose honeste conuersacion and trustynes, he hadde great proofe of, for not onely all Cornelius owne housholde resembled him in godly liuinge, but there were sum souldiers also, that folowed the vertuous trade of their capitaine. And whan he had shewed them all the matter and effecte, as touching his vision, he sent them to Joppa. These thinges were done in the euening.

Deuoute mẽ and one that feareth God.

The texte.

On the morowe as they wet on their iourney, and drewe nye vnto ꝑ cytie, Peter went vp vpõ ꝑ top of the house to praie, about ꝑ sixt houre, And whil he wicked hũgry, he would haue eaten. But while they made readye, he fell into a traunce, & sawe heauen opened, & a certaine vessell came downe vnto him, as it had bene a great shete knyt at the fower corners, & was let downe to the earth, wherein were all maner of fower footed beastes of the earthe, and vermin, and wormes, and fowles of the ayer.

The nexte daye Cornelius messengers went on their iournaye. In those dayes, so meane an embacie as that was, had Peter the chiefe pastoure of Christes Churche no disdayne at. And whan as they were almoste at Joppa, Peter the same time, as he was accustomed, had gon vp into an hyghe chamber to praye, almoste at the syxte houre, that is to say, about noone. And as he was an hungred in his prayer, he mynded to eate summe meate after his long abstinence. And whyles that meate was a dressyng accordyng to Peters commaundement, he was rauyshed with the spirite of god. So chanceth it specially with them, that vse prayer and fasting. For god discloseth not his mysteryes to the fulle belyes, and slouthfull persons. His vision was this. He sawe heauen open, and from thence a great vessell let downe to the yearth, as it had ben a great sheete, knotted and fastened with coardes at euery of ỹ fower corners. For in olde tyme meate was serued to the table in great bredde lynen clothes. In this vessell were all kyndes of fower foted beastes, and vermin which crepe on the ground and lyue on the earthe, and byrdes that lyue in the ayre, as well vncleane as cleane, together indifferently. This was meate that the Jewes dyd abhorre, but yet was it sheame that Jesus longed after, whan he layd to his disciples, prokering him meat: I haue meat to eate ỹ ye knowe not.

Christes

The texte. And there came a voyce to him. Aryse Peter, kill & eate. But Peter sayed: not so lorde, for I haue neuer eaten any thing that is common, or vncleane. And the voyce spake vnto hym againe the seconde tyme: what God hath clensed, that call not thou common. This was done thryse, and the vessell was receyued vp againe into heauen. Whyle Peter altemused in himselfe what this vision (which he had seene) meaned, beholde, the mẽ which were sent from Cornelius, had made inquirraunce for Symons house, and stoode before ỹ doore: and called out one, and asked whether Symon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there.

Peter muche maruayling what this vision ment, a voyce spake and sayed vnto him: aryse Peter, kyll and eate. And although that the lorde had warned his dysciples that they shoulde make the Gentiles also partakers of his ghospell, yet to thintent they shoulde the more boldely doo the same, he againe was admonished by a vision. But Peter, as a Jewe, yet abhorring the meate that by the lawe was forbyd, sayed: Oh lorde, god forbid that I shoulde eate any suche meates. For vnto this day haue I dewly kepte the trade of my forefathers. For hytherto neuer eate I any meate that was suspected, or vncleane. To this, the same voyce that had spoken before, made answere: that whiche God hath made cleane, thou whiche art but man, call not it vncleane. After this vision had thryse appered, to this ende, that he should more certainly beleue it, straycht wayes the vessell was taken vp into heauen.

Than Peter beyng summe what in remembraunce, whyles he was musing with himselfe in a greate perplexitie, what this vision shoulde meane, and whether it were a dreame, eyther els some signification of goddes wyll, beholde those menne that Cornelius had sente, stoode at Symons doze the tanner, and callyng forth one of the seruauntes, enquired whether that one named Peter were holed there.

The texte. Whyle Peter thought on the vision, the spirite sayde vnto him: beholde, men seke thee aryse therfore, and get the downe, and go with them, & doubte not, for I haue sent them. Peter went downe to the men which were sent vnto hym from Cornelius, & sayde: beholde, I am he whom ye seke, what is the cause wherfore ye are come? Thei said: Cornelius the Capitaine a iust man, and one that feareth God, and of good report among all ỹ people of the Jewes, was warned by an holye Aungell, to sende for thee into his house, and to heare wordes of thee. Then called he them in, and lodged them.

But

But before that woude was brought to Peter, that some there were that woulde speake with hym, and whyles he satte imaginyng in hys mynd, what the vision should meane, the spirite of god layed to hym (for god speaketh after sondry wyse to his electe) beholde three menne stande at the doore and enquyre for the. Therefore aryse and get the downe, and goe with theym, nothyng doubtyng: For I sent them. And then shalte thou understande what the meanyng of thys vision is, that thou somuche muste of. With that Peter wente downe, and came to the menne, and sayde, loo I am the verye same Symon Peter whome you seke for. What is thoccasyon of your cummyng hyther? Peter boasted not of his vysyon, but required the heathens confessyon. For the benefyte of grace that cummeth by the ghospell, ought not to be thruste before them whiche set nought by it, as in lyke maner it ought not to be denyed to the that are desyrouse of it. Than they aunswered: Cornelius whiche by office is a capitayne of a bande of menne, but yet a manne of good conuersation, and that feareth God, well credited and lykewyse esteemed, and reported as wel of his owne housholde, as also throughout all Jewry, was warned by the appearaunce of an holy aungell that spake to hym, to sende for thee home to his house, that he myght receyue at thy handes knowleage what he ought to doe to obtayne saluation. Peter perceyuing the billions to agree, and nowe understanding what that voyce signified, whiche thryse had layed, what God hath cleansed, that accompte thou not uncleane, bad them comme nere the house. For it was euentyde, and he lodged them. This was the fyrst begynnyng of any conuersation betwene the Jewes and the Gentyles, whiche Gentyles by theyr owne accorde, prealed to be partakers of the ghospell. But the Apostles dyd wisely in that they were not to hastye in the settyng forth of this matter, that it myght be cuydent to all men, that they dyd not rashly, but by the commaundement of God, receyue the Gentyles to the benefyte of the ghospell. Cornelius sent for Peter, but by the commaundement of the Aungell. Peter came downe and mette them, but not before he had commaundement by the vysyon. On the one parte, marke the eatnest desyre that the Gentiles had to the gracious benefyte of the ghospel, on the other parte the cherefulnesse of him, a tydynes, that was desirouse to saue al sortes of men.

Beholde I am he whose ye seke what is the cause wherefore ye are cumme.

Than called he the iii. lodgeth.

¶ And on the morowe Peter went away with them, and certayne brethren from Joppa, accompanied hym. And the thyrde daye entred they into Cesarea, and Cornelius awayted for them, & had called together his kynsmen, and his speciall frendes. And as it chaunted Peter to cum in, Cornelius met him, and fell downe at his feete: and worshypped him. But Peter toke hym by saying: stande up, I my selfe also am a man. The texte.

The nexte daye Peter went to Cesarea, beyng accompanied with certayne christen men from the cytie Joppa, that should beare wytnes of those thinges that were for to be doen. For their mynde gaue theym, that sum good lucke was towarde, they wyst not what. In the meane time, Cornelius beyng very desyrous of saluacyon, wayted for the retourne of his messengers, that should bryng with them Peter, and had called togethere as well his nygh kynsfolkes as his other chiefe frendes, partely that moe myght be wytnesses of this facte, and partely also that moe myghte be partakers of so greate a benefyte. But whan as Peter entred into the house of this captayne Cornelius, he much reioysyng therat for reuerence towarde him, went forth to mete him, and fallyng downe to Peters feete worshypped hym: percepuyng to be in hym sum what more excellencie then was semely for a manne to haue.

Thus ought Christ to be worshipped in his ministers, but yet so, that the glory dewe vnto God, be not attrybuted to manne. Then Peter geuing example howe muche the preachers of Christes woorde, ought to abhorre ambicio, and the desire of honoure, and howe smalle prayse ought they to chalenge for those thynges whiche be done thorowe vertue of Christes name, suffred not thys captayne to lye prostrate vpon the grounde, but embracyng hym in his armes, dyd lyft him vp, sayeng: aryse, I am but a man as thou art. Geue vnto God this homage, for I am but his minister.

The texte. ¶ And as he talked with hym, he came in and founde many that were cum together. And he sayde vnto them: ye knowe howe that it is an vnlawful thyng for a man that is a Iew, to company or cum vnto an Alien: but god hath shewed me, that I should not call any man common or vncleane: therefore came I vnto you without delay, assone as I was sent for. I aske therefore, for what entent haue ye sent for me?

It is an vnlawful thyng for a man to be a Iew, to company or cum vnto an alien.

For what entent haue ye sent for me?

And commonyng than in thys wyse familiarly wyth him, entred into the house together. Whan they were cum into the inner house, Peter found there, a greate numbre assembled together. Here conceyued he as a couetous pastour good hope that he shoulde haue great bauntage. And so whan Peter was set doune, he began, as an heauenly orator, to speake to them in thys wyse, partly that those that came wyth hym, shoulde not haue occasyon to be offended, and partly that he myghte stablysshe the captaines houshold in that theyr confydence, whiche they had conceyued: you know that it is not permytted by the lawes, that a Iewe be eyther in houselhold, eyther otherwyse in company with aliens, men of a sundry kynde of religion, and not cyrcumcised. Yet I being a Iewe, am not afrayed so to doo, not yet despisyng eyther the trade or custome of my countrey, but folowyng herein the commaundement of God, that signified vnto me by vision, that I oughte not to esteme any manne, what countrey soeuer he be of, to be vncleane, or hate worthy, for as muche as god taketh no man to be vncleane. For onely he maketh holy euery thyng. I therefore sticking to the commaundement of god, came hither wythout delay as soone as you sent for me, wherefore it is your part to shewe me what the matter is, that you sende for me. Peter speaketh to all, that he maye wynne them all, percepuyng that for thys cause they were assembled together, that they myght al at one tyme, heare the ghospell preached. Marke howe featly Peter playeth the pastours part: for he doeth not cōmunicate the high misteries of the ghospell vnto them, before he perceyued them to be desirous to learne.

The texte. ¶ Than Cornelius sayd: this day nowe. iiii. dales about thys houre, I sat fasting: and at ỹ ninth houre I prayed in my house: and beholde, a man stode before me in bright clothynge, and sayde: Cornelius thy prayer is hearde, and thyne almes dedes are had in remembraunce in the syght of God. Sende men therefore to go to Ioppa, and call for Symon, whose syrname is Peter. He is lodged in the house of one Symon a tanner, by the sea syde, whiche assone as he is cume, shall speake vnto the. Than sent I for the immediatly, and thou hast well done, that thou art cume. Nowe therefore are we all here present before God, to heare all thynges that are commaunded vnto the of god.

Than Cornelius before them all, rehearsed howe the matter stode, saying: fower dayes paste I was here in my house fastyng, and earnestly in my prayers, about the ninth houre of the daye. And sodaynly beholde a certayne man, whose countenaunce was full of maiestie, stoode visible before me, in a glystenyng tening garment, and sayed vnto me: Cornelius thy prayer is heard, and thy liberall and bountifull almes, that thou hast bestowed on the poore, is not forgotten in the syght of God. Wherfore sende to Joppa, and desire Symon, otherwyse called Peter, to come to thee. He is herbed in the house of Symon the Tanner, nere to the sea. Than sente I incontinent messaungers of myne owne folkes vnto thee, whiche thyng I had not been so bolde to haue enterprysed, vnlesse an aungell had so wylled me. And I moste hertely thanke you of youre goodnes, that vouchesaked to come hyther. Nowe therefore we are here presente all of one myndе, without hurte meanyng towardes any man, as we take God to wytnesse, very delirous to heare what God hathe geuen you in commaundement to shewe vs. For I hauggell that put me in this confidēce, promysed me so: and we doubte not but you wyll so dooe, forasmuche as you also by the commaundemente of God, vouchesaued to come and common with vs.

Than Peter opened his mouthe, and sayd: of a treuth I perceyue that there is no respect of persons with god, but in al people, he that feareth him, & worketh righteousnes he is accepted with him. The texte.

Than Peter perceyuing their vnfayned meanyng, opened his mouthe, and began to speake in thys wyse: I doe eyght well perceiue that in the syght of God, one person is not preferred before another: but that in all countreys who that feareth God, and liueth lyke a good man vprightly to God and the worlde, is set by of hym.

Ye know the preachyng that god sent vnto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ, which is lord ouer al thynges. Which preaching was published throughout al Jewry (and began in Galile after the baptysme which Iohn preached) how god anoynted Jesus of Nazareth with the holy goost & with power. Which Jesus went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed with the deuill, for god was with hym. The texte.

For asmuche as I vnderstande that you are free from ourte lawe, and yet neuertheles that ye worshyp one God whiche is the true God, as we do: I that dayly ye offer thorowe prayer, sacrifice, and seeke hys fauoure by succourng of the nedye: For why? this is thonely thyng that the lawe and prophetes doe teache. And although that God hath nowe at the last performed that thing whiche he long sence promysed, by the mouthes of his prophetes, that he would sende Messias, that is to saye, Christe the kyng to ỹ Israelites his wyll, nowe not by meane of any prophete, but by hys onely begotten sonne Jesus Christ and proferyng them, thorow fayth & obedyence to hym whome he sent, remission of synne, and that he ekthones wil be reconcited with theym: Yet that notwithstandyng breaule there is none other God but he, as well of the Gentiles as also of the Israelites, his wyll is that this fauour be shewed to all men, whosoeuer beleueth the gospell. And I am assured, that the rumour of this thyng beeyng spated, as it is, thorowout all Jewrye, is heard among you also, howe that Jesus walked ouer all partes of Jewry, exhorteyng all men to repentaunce, bearyng wytnes that the kyngdome of God is cuen at hand. And chiefely hys beginning to preache, was about Galile after he had ben christened of Iohn, whiche was his forerunnaunger, and openlye bare witnesse of hym, ỹ Jesus of Nazareth was the lambe of God that should take away the synnes of the worlde, and that god had anoynted hys Messias with the holy ghoste, whome he had seene in lykenesse of a dooue, as cumyng from heauen and restyng on his heade, and that it was onely he that shoulde

Howe god anoynted Jesus of Nazareth with the holy ghost.

Christen all the faythfull, not in water, as he hymselfe Christened, but wyth an heauenly power. And this oure lorde Jesus also expressed in deades, walkyng thorowout all partes of Jewry, helpyng all men, not onely in teachyng the heauenly Philosophye of the gospell, whereby the soule is healed, but also in curyng the sycke, castyng oute of deuyls, healyng lepers, and reysyng the dead, and to be shorte, in helpyng all men whome the deuyll by tyrranny kept vnder hys yoke. For as he onely was free from all synne, so he only was habile and of power, to vanquisshe the tyrranny of the deuyll, the whiche rayngneth ouer them, that leadeth theyr lyfe in synne. For God expressed hys might in his sonne, whiche all Satans power was not able to withstande. All these thynges beyng comonly spoken of thorowout Jewry, I am assured that you likewise haue heard, and doe beleue them.

The texte. And we are witnesses of all thynges whiche he dyd in the lande of the Jewes, and at Jerusalem: whome they slewe, and hanged on tree, hym God reysed vp the thyrde day, and shewed him openly, not to all the people, but vnto vs witnesses, chosen before of god for the same intente, whiche did eate and drynke wyth hym after he arose from deathe. And he commaunded vs to preache vnto the people, and to testifye that it is he, which is ordeyned of God, to be the iudge of quicke and dead. To him geue al the prophetes witnes, that thorow his name, whosoeuer beleueth in him, shall receiue remission of sinnes.

But that you maye moze surely beleue thys, we that were conuersaunte wyth hym, both in house, and in all other places, as long as he, beyng manne, lyued among men, doe beare wytnes of all suche thinges, as he did in all coastes of Jewry, and in Hierusalem also, whome the highe preestes, scribes, and Pharisees, with the consentes bothe of the nobilitie, and the commens, put to death, fastenyng hym on the crosse, rendryng hym euyll thankes for hys so manyfolde benefites employed on them. But God, by whose permission all these thinges were doen for the health of man, restored him to lyfe the third day after his death, and endowed him with life euerlasting. To make this certainly to be beleued, he did personally appeare alyue, he was hearde, sene, and felt also with the handes, not of all the people, as he had bene before his death, but of certayne that were before chosen witnesses by God purposely, of vs I say, vnto whom he appered after he had arisen from death, being conuersaunt on earth fowertie dayes: yf we did eate and drynke wyth hym, and he wyth vs lykewyse, lest we should doubte in our myndes, whether his body were in very dede raysed or not. And before he went into heauen, he commaunded vs, whome he before had chosen to this office, that we should openly preache to euery man, and beare witnes, that he was one, whom god had aduaunced to hyghe estate and power, that in thende of the worlde he shalbe iudge of all, bothe quicke and dead. In the meane space a sure and an easy remedy is proffered euery man. For all the prophetes long synce with one consente prophecied the very same of hym, that we teache, that it is onely he, in whose name remyssyon of synne shalbe geuen, not to the Jewes onely, but to all nacions also thorow out the worlde, not by merite of their workes, wherein the Jewes put confidence, but by fayth wherby we beleue the ghospell, and by meane of the ghospell, beleue in Christe.

Hym God raysed vp the thyrde day, and shewed hym openly.

To hym geue all the prophetes witnes. &c.

The texte. Whyle Peter yet spake these woordes, the holy ghost fell on all them whiche heard the preachyng. And they of the circumcision whiche beleued, were astonied, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentyles also was shedde out the gyft of the holy ghost.

ghoſt. For they heard them ſpeake with tongues, and magnified god. Then anſwered Peter: can any man forbyd water, þ theſe ſhould not be baptiſed, which haue receiued þ holy gooſt as well as we? And he commaunded them to bee baptyſed in the name of the lorde. Than prayed they him, to tarie a fewe dayes.

Peter had not yet made an ende of his tale, and beholde the holy ghoſte viſibly deſcendyng from heauen, came on all that had hearde, and beleued the apoſtles wordes. Whiche thing made the Iewes, that were conuerted to the goſpell, and had come in Peters company from Ioppa, to beare wytnes to thoſe thynges that were for to be done, aſtonied thereat, meruelling that the gracious gyfte of the holy ghoſte, was alſo powred furth vpon the Gentiles, whiche were not circumciſed. For they ſuppoſed the promiſe of the Prophetes to pertayne to the Iſraelites onely, whereas in very dede, the prophetes ſayed before, that the ſpirite of God ſhoulde bee ſhed on all thoſe, whatſoeuer they were, that woulde call on the name of God. For they heard them ſpeake with tonges, and magnifie god.

And the chaunce that folowed, expreſſed the meaning of thys token whyche they had ſene. For they began, in preſence of all men that hearde thē, to ſpeake diuers languages, prayſyng muche the bountifull goodnes of God. This ſo euident a token, was declared for the Iſraelites, that were alreadye preſente and circumciſed, that from thenceforth they ſhoulde not ſtycke to call theym, whiche were not circumciſed, to be partakers of the faythe of Chriſte: it was lykewyſe done for Cornelius frendes, to put them oute of doubt that by theyr fayth, they were nothyng inferiour to the Iewes, yea thoughe they kepte not the Iewes lawes. Here accordyng to þ pleaſure of god, the ordre was chaunged, for firſt they whiche were newly inſtructed in the fayth, had wonte to be chriſtened, and afterwardes by layeng handes on theym, receyued the holye goſt. But here without laying of theyr handes on them, fyrſte the holy ghoſte was geuen, that the apoſtle ſhoulde nothyng ſtycke to miniſtre that, whyche was of leſſe eſtimacion, ſeeing that God of hys owne accorde, had gyuen that, whiche was of more excellencie. Than Peter, as thoughe that he woulde doe nothyng wythout the conſent of the Iewes, thoughe he had alreadye purpoſed it, ſayed to them that came wyth hym: Is there any man here that wyl ſaye nay, but that theſe men maye be chriſtened, albeit they bee not circumcyſed, whiche haue receyued the holy ghoſt aſwell as we? And whan as no man ſayed contrary, he commaunded them to be chriſtened in the name of Ieſus Chriſte. All this matter beyng happely finiſhed, as Peter was makyng hymſelfe ready to returne to Ioppa, they entreated him to tarry wyth them a fewe dayes, for aſmuche as they were very deſirous to haue more perfecte knowledge of the goſpell. Peter beyng thus intreated, was content to abyde. For he knewe that the Iewes would ſcarſely brooke it, that he ſhoulde be in houſholde conuerſaunt with them, that were not circumciſed.

¶ The.xi. Chapter.

The texte. And the apoſtles and brethren that were in Iewry, hearde that the heathen had alſo receiued the word of God. And whan Peter was come vp to Ieruſalem, they that were of the circumciſiō, contended againſt him, ſaying: thou wenteſt vnto men vncircumciſed, and broakeſt cake with them.

The rumour of this fact, came ouer to the other apostles eares whiche remayned at Hierusalem, and to the eares of the brethren also, whiche were abrode in Iewry, that the gentyles had also receyued the woorde of God. For it was an harde thyng to kepe this matter close, partely because this captaine was by reason of his office of so great estimation, and partly agayn for that many were Christened together, either els because the Iewes were present at the dede doonig (for the chaumberlaine that we spake of before, whan he was Christened as he rode by the waye, was alone without wytnes, as one that had stollen the benefitte of the ghospell from the Iewes) and partely also because it was doen in one of the noble cytes of Palestine. But Peter knowing certainly that it would be noysed abrode, and that there woulde some Iewes reprooue this hys doyng, toke diligent hede euery wayes, that he myght not deserue any rebuke, forasmuche also as God had put thys in his mynd, which had shewed hym this vision three times, because he shoulde nothyng stycke to doode it. On the other parte, by reuelacyon of the holye ghoste, he perceyued that messangiers were come from Cornelyus: whome he foorthwith dyd not receyue into the house, lest he beyng a Iewe myghte haue semed to haue been desyrous to companyne wyth the heathen, but spake to theym at the doore, and before wytnesses asked theim why theyr cummyng was. Thys question he asked rather for the Iewes sakes that were present, then for hys owne. Beyndes thys after he perceyued that the byshops dyd agree, bothe on the one parte and the other, he went thyther, but yet not withoute the compainy of some Iewes, whiche were knowen to bee menne of good credence, who shoulde beare wytnes what were doen, and without whose consent he woulde do nothyng, to thentent that by these meanes afterwarde, yf anye man would grudge at his doynges, they, as wytnesses, myght become prooctours of hys cause. Agayne whan he was come to Cornelius house, he dyd not foorthwith enter in, as a man desyrous to talke with hym, but sente in woorde to him that he was come, that Cornelius myghte meete hym and bryng hym in: and yet was he neuertheles well assured, that he shoulde bee welcum. This captayne fell prostrate at Peters feete and worshypped hym, whiche was to all the Iewes that were present, a greate token to meruayle at, of his ready minde. Agayne in hearing of the all, he asked what his will was with hym, that he had sent for hym, to thentent that the Iewes, whiche came with hym, hearyng the tale of Cornelius owne mouthe, myghte the better beleue it. And fynally the holy ghoste came downe by hys owne accorde, before that they had eyther made theyr prayers, eyther had theyr handes layde on them, either they had receiued baptisme. Neither yet did he vpon this, christen them, before he had commoned with the circumcised that were present, and had expressed vnto them, that it were not mete to deny them baptisme, whome God had endowed wyth hys holy ghoste. This was that great wysedome of Peter beyng a pastor and agreable with the ghospell. He well knewe the nature of the Iewes, howe muche they stode in theyr owne conceyte, because they were circumcised, and howe deadly they abhorred those that were not circumcised. This was the occasyon that he imagined all shyftes to auoyde offence of any manne. He was desyrous to make the Gentyles partakers of the ghospell,

And whan Peter was but yet in suche sorte, that by the occasion thereof, he should not lese the Iewes, yet

pt it myght be. Nowe after that Peter had by chaunce returned to Hierusalem, where, by reason of the rumours, it was knowen howe Cornelius had been christened, they whiche were circumcised and had receyued the gospell, disputed against hym, saying: wherefore dyddest thou enter into the houses of the vncircumcised contrary to the tradicion of our forefathers, and not content with that, diddest also sitte at the same table, and eate those meates whiche are forbydden in Moyses lawe.

cum by to Hierusalem they that were of the circumcision contended against hym.

¶But Peter rehearsed the matter from the begynnyng, saying: I was in the citie of Ioppa, praying: and in a traunce I sawe a vision, a certen vessell descende, as it had been a great sheet, let downe from heauen by the fower corners, & it came to me. Into ỹ which wnan I had fastened myne eyes, I considered, and sawe fower foted beastes of ỹ yearth, and vermine, and wormes, and fowles of the ayre.

The texte.

In this matter it becommed not Peter to holde his peace, but he tolde all the matter euen frome the begynnyng, howe as it had chaūced in this wise. Certes I durst not breake the lawe whiche we haue deliuered vs of our forefathers, but in this poincte folowed I him, whiche is aboue the lawe. I was in the citie Ioppa, fastyng, and in my prayers', that no manne can suspecte it to be a vayne dreame. And whan I had commaunded, (as very hungre enforced me) some meate to be dressed, I was in the meane time rauyshed, and in a traunce sawe this vision. A great vessell muche after the fourme of a greate linen sheete, knitte fast at fower corners, was let downe from heaue, and came to me. Wherupon whan I had sette myne eye, being very hungry, I loked what maner of meate there was.

And there I sawe dyuerse kyndes of fowerfoted beastes, besydes those that were noxious beastes, with other kyndes also of beastes, that crepe on the yearthe, and fowles of the ayre, whome the lawe by expressed commaundement, wouldo vs to abstayne fro.

And I heardo a voyce saying vnto me: Aryse Peter, slay, and eate. But I sayd: not so Lord, for nothing common or vncleane, hath at any tyme entred into my mouthe. But the voyce answered me againe, saying from heauen: count not thou those thinges cōmē, which God hath clensed. And this was done thre times. And all wer taken vp againe into heauen. And beholde, immediatly there were tyre men all ready cum vnto the house where I was, sent frō Cesarea vnto me. And the spirite sayed vnto me, that I should go with them wout doubtyng. Moreouer, these. vi. brethren accompanyed me, and we entred into ỹ mans house. And he shewed vs, how he had seen an angell in his house, which stoode and sayed to hym, sende menne to Ioppa, and call for Symon: whose surname is Peter: he shall tell thee woordes, wherby both thou and all thyne house shalbe saued.

The texte.

Whyles I was lookyng on this, I heard also a voyce whiche exhorted me that I shoulde not sticke to eate thereof, and sayed vnto me: aryse Peter, kyll and eate. To whome I made than answere: God forbyd. For to this daye hath no vnclene meate entred into my mouthe. Than aunswered the voyce eftsones in this maner: call not thou, whiche art but man, those meates vncleane, whiche god hath purified. This vysion dyd thre tymes appere. And afterwardes all those meates, whiche I thought worthy to be abhorred, were taken vp into heauen.

And after I was cum to my selfe, whyles I reuolued in my mynde what this vision, whiche so often apered, shoulde meane, the spirite of god forthwith gaue me knowlege that there were three men at ỹ dooze where I hosted, sent from Cesarea, that would speake with me. And the same spirite commaunded me that I shoulde not sticke to goe with them. I obeyed the bisp-

on, and by the holy ghostes sendyng, I tooke my iorney to Cesarea, not alone, but I tooke syx brethren with me, to beare wytnesse of all those thynges, whiche I dyd by the commaundement of God. And brefely we entred into the mannes house that had sente for vs. There he in presence of vs all, shewed howe that fewe dayes before, whyles he was fastyng and in hys prayers, at home in hys house, he had seene an Aungell standyng before hym in a glistenyng garment, when it was brode daye, and saying vnto hym, Cornelius, sende some of thy seruauntes to Ioppa, and let theym desyre Symon, otherwyse named Peter, in thy behalfe to take the paynes to come speake with the. He shall tell the those thynges, whereby thou and all thy housholde, maye be saued. I perceyuyng these visions to had agreed on both partes, and perceyuyng farder howe earnest they desyre was with out all dissimulacion, beganne to teache them those thynges that our Lorde Iesus had willed vs to preache.

The texte.

And as I began to preache, the holy goste fell on them, as he did on vs, at the begynnyng. Than came it to my remembraunce, howe that the lorde sayed: Iohn baptised with water, but ye shall be baptised with the holy ghost. For as muche than as god gaue the like gyftes, as he dyd vnto vs, when we beleued on the Lord Iesus Christ: what was I, that I should haue withstande god? When they heard this, they helde their peace, & glorified God, saying: than hath God also to the Gentyles graunted repentaunce vnto lyfe.

I had not fully fynished my communication, but beholde the holy ghost cummyng from heauen, entred into theym, in lyke maner as he at the fyrste tyme, had into vs: and they began to speake dyuerse languages, euen as we than spake. Thys was an euident token, that their faythe was approued before God. And euen than the very thyng it selfe shewed, what this hard vision to vnderstande, that I had seene, dyd meane. For these were those same fowerfooted creping beastes, and fowles, whiche we that are circumcised, do abhorre, but goddes wyll is to haue theym purified thorowe faythe, yea he wyll not, that we take anye thyng as vncleane, whiche thorowe faythe of the ghospell, is made holy. And farther I remembred the wordes that the Lorde spake vnto vs whan he was ready to ascende to heauen: Iohn baptised in water, but you shalbe baptised in the holy ghoste. And we diepe the body in water, but it is not water that gyueth saluation, vnlesse by faythe we obtaine the fierye baptisme. And whan as the matter of it selfe in effect was euident enoughe, that they had receyued the baptisme whiche Iesus the lorde had promysed, and that the same fauoure thorowe faythe, was employed on thole whiche wer not circumcised, whiche we before had receyued: not because we had so deserued by kepping of the lawe, but thorowe our fayth, wherby we beleued our lorde Iesus Christ, how coulde I be agaynste the wil of god? Was it for me to staye, that they shoulde not be baptised in water, whiche were than already baptised in the spirite of God, seyng that water is nothyng elles but a token of the grace that shalbe geuen vs from heauen? But than was grace gyuen them before, without outer ministerie. So that to deny them to be baptysed in water, had bene nothynge elles, but to improue that whyche God had done. Whan they had hearde these hys wordes, they helde their peace, and praysed God, saying: than the verye thyng in effect is euidently declared, that God hath gyuen repentaunce, not to the Israelytes onely, but to the Gentyles also, that they therby maye obteyne lyfe euerlastynge. They also which were scattered abrode through the affliccion that arose about Steue, walked throughout vnto Phenice, and Cypres, and Antioche, preachyng the word to no manne, but vnto the Iewes onely. Sum of them were menne of Cypres and Cyrene: whiche when they were cum to Antioche, spake vnto the Grekes, and preached the Lorde Iesus. And the hande of the lorde was with them, and a great number beleued, & turned vnto the lorde.

For they that by reason of sore persecucion after Steuens death were dispersed, wente from village to village, and frome citye to citie, vntyll they came to Phenice, and sum to the Ile Cypres, whiche lyeth tyghte ouer agaynste Phenice, sum also scattered to Antioche, whiche deuideth Phenyce from Cilicia preachyng to euery man the doctrine of the ghospell, which they had receyued of the Apostles, and yet durst not they communicate it to anye man, but those that were Iewes, not because they hated all menne beſydes, but of a certayne godly feare whiche they had, forasmuche as they thoughte, that it was not lawfull to gyue to dogges the holye, whiche to do the Lorde had forbydden theym. Aboute thesame tyme, arose vp certayne menne that were cõuerted to the fayth, borne parte in Cypres, and parte in Cyrene, which entryng into the citie of Antioche, durste boldly speake of Christe to the Grecians, and preached oure Lorde Iesus vnto theym, and they prospered, the matter succedyng very well, as the will of God was that it shoulde do, who gaue strength and courage to the setters furthe of his name. For among them also a great numbre that gaue credence to the ghospell, were conuerted to the Lorde.

And ỹ hand of the lorde was with them. &c.

Tydynges of these thynges came vnto the eares of the congregacion, whiche was in Hierusalem. And they sent furth Barnabas, that he shoulde go vnto Antioche: which when he was cum, and had seene the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them al, that with purpose of herte, they would continually cleaue vnto the lorde. For he was a good man, and full of the holye ghost and fayth: and mucke people was added vnto the Lord. Than departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seke Saule. And when he had founde hym, he brought hym vnto Antioche.

The knowleage of this matter by noysyng of it abrode, from one to another, came to the eares of the churche whyche was at Hierusalem. And for this purpose ỹ leuite Barnabas, a man whiche was borne in Cypres, one of suche perfeccion, as was semely for an apostle, was sent thyther by the apostles to see what was dooen there, and that he, yf he perceiued it to be agreable to the will of god, shoulde allowe it by the authorite of thapostles. So great heede they tooke in receyuyng the heathen to be partetakers of the ghospell, although thapostles mucke delyted that it shoulde so be, partelye lest that it shoulde be afterwardes called bache for broken of the Iewes, as a thyng vnadui sedly or rashely doone, and partely lest the gentyles shoulde berye muche mistruste theymselues, in that that they had dooen, as thoughe the lawe of Moyses muste haue been their helpe and their staye. But after that Barnabas was cum to Antioche, and perceiued that the Grecians had obtayned them lyke fauoure of god thorowe fayth, without obseruacion of the lawe, as the Iewes had, he mucke reioyced that the numbre of the faythfull was encreased, and exhorted them all, that they shoulde stande stedfaste

And therefore came it to paſſe by meanes of hys preaching, that manye moe dyd ioyne wyth the other numbre, that profeſſed the Lorde. And becauſe that Antioche is adioyning to Cilicia, the very nereneſſe of the place moued hym to ſeke for Paule, whiche was more meete for thys office, than anye other, foraſmuche as he was choſen of Chriſte to glorifie hys name among the Gentiles, and princes of the yerth. ¶ And it chaunced that a whole yeare they had their conuerſacion with the congregacion there, and taught muche people: inſomuche as the diſciples at Antioche, were fyrſt that were called Chriſten.

And ſo they continued together at Antioche a whole yere, wyth the congregacion of the faythfull, that were there gathered together in a greate numbre, aſwell of Grecians, as of Iewes, whiche was afterwardes muche increaſed by acceſſe of no ſmalle multitude of people, gathered together by the preachyng of Paule and Barnabas, inſomuche that they, whiche before were called diſciples, (becauſe the name of Chriſte was odious) at Antioche firſte were called of the principall authour of their religion, al Chriſtians that profeſſed Chriſtes doctrine.

¶ In thoſe dayes came prophetes from the citie of Ieruſalem vnto Antioche. And there ſtode vp one of them named Agabus, and ſignified by the ſpirite, that there ſhould be great dearth throughout all the worlde, which came to paſſe in the Emperoure Claudius dayes. Than the diſciples euery man accordyng to his habilitie, purpoſed to ſende ſuccour vnto the brethren, whiche dwelt in Iewry, which thyng they alſo dyd, and ſente it to the elders by the handes of Barnabas and Saule.

About this ſeaſon certayne Prophetes came frome Hieruſalem to Antioche, among whome, one, whoſe name was Agabus, ſtanopng vp in the congregacion, inſpired with the ſpirite of God, certified theym that there ſhoulde come greate ſcarſnes ouer all the whole worlde. The whiche came to paſſe in Claudius Cefars tyme that ſucceded Caligula. And becauſe that the Iewes, whiche were conuerted to the fayth, and dwelled in Hieruſalem, were for the moſte parte poore men, and partly had geuen all that they had in common, and manye of theym by reaſon that they profeſſed Jeſus Chriſtes name had been ſpoiled of their goodes by the prieſtes, they prouided that thoſe whyche had abundantlye pnoughe, ſpecially amongeſt the Gentyles, and had receiued the ghoſpell, ſhoulde euerye man gyue a portion, and the money ſo gathered, ſhoulde be ſente to the chriſten menne that dwelled in Iewrye, for their ſuſtentacion ſo that no mannne was compelled to gyue any thyng, but that euery man ſhould geue that, that he coulde fynde in his herte with a good will to depart withall, accordyng to the valew of his goodes. And euen as they had ordeyned, ſo was it doen. And the ſame money was ſent to Hieruſalem by Paule and Barnabe to the elders, that they ſhould diſtribute it as they thought beſte, to thoſe that had nede therof.

The.xii.Chapter.

At the same tyme, Herode the kyng stretched furth his handes, to vexe certayne of the congregacion. And he killed James the brother of John with a swoorde. And because he saw that it pleased the Jewes, he proceded farther, and toke Peter also. Than were the dayes of swete breade. And when he had caught him, he put him in prison also, and delyuered hym to xvi quatcryons of Souldyers to be kepte, entendyng after Easter to bryng him forth to the people. And Peter was kepte in prison. But prayer was made without ceasyng of the congregacion, vnto God for him. The texte.

Whyle that Paule and Barnabas were occupied aboute thys embassade, kyng Herode, whiche had before tyme beheaded John, and sente Christ agayne to Pilate, apparelled with a white garmente in a mockage, beeyng sorye that thys sorte of menne dayly encreased, and that the name of Jesus, kyng of the Jewes, was well knowen in many countreyes, thoughte it to apperteyne to hys duetye, that thys secte so growynge and dayly encreasyng, shoulde bee cleane vanquyshed: Sathanas euen than wooxkyng effectuously by theym, as by hys tooles, the same tyme whiche he before went about, but yet obteyning nothyng els thereby, but that the name of Jesus was more gloxyously set fooxth. And ỹ same tyme Herod the kyng stretched furthe hys handes, &c.

Therefore Herode practysyng hys regall and absolute power, sente certayne of hys garde with weapons, to lay hande on some of the congregacyon that professed Jesus of Nazareth, Loxde of all thynges. And so he whyche in choppyng of Johns head, had learned to behead good men, and those that freely spake the trueth, did now lykewise lay handes vpon James thapostle, brother to John, because he in thole dayes was estemed of greatest autoxitie amonges thother apostles, and commaunded hym to be headed whyche stedfastly contynued in professyng the name of Jesus. And when he perceyued that this cruell acte, dyd well please the Jewes, he heaped myschiefe vpon myschiefe, and commaunded that Peter shoulde bee taken, whiche was chiefe among the reste of thapostles, thinkyng that it woulde come to passe, that the shepehearde beyng ryd oute of the waye, the flocke myghte easily bee dispersed and scattered: vpon whiche consyderacyon the Jewes had before slayne our loxde Jesus, staying their handes from the apostles. He would immediately & without delay haue put Peter to death, but onely that their Easter day, whiche was had in greate honoure among the Jewes, was at hande, at which time the Jewes before had ben also afrayde to slea Jesus. Suche is the Jewes deuocion in keppyng theyr holy dayes. They are not afrayde to sacrifice an innocent mannes bloude at the peoples requeste, but they are afrayed to breake theyr holy daye, as thoughe that he were nothyng gyltie of murder, whiche hath in harte practised to commyt murder. He than commaunded that Peter beyng thus taken, shoulde be caste into prysone, and for feare lest he shoulde any waye escape, lyke as Paule had, he sette xvi. strenge hatneste men to kepe him lying in bandes, to thintēt that no man myghte by force take him awaye. For he had purposed, after the holy dayes to bryng this sacrifice before the people, that euen thirsted for innocente bloud. Lyke people lyke kyng. knowledge before by God, that suche thynges shoulde happen, neyther made the disciples any commocion agaynste the vngodly cruelnes of thys tyraunt, hauyng well in remembraunce, howe the Lorde had commaunded, that they shoulde wyshe nothyng but well, yea to those that pursued them. Herode was not satisfyed wyth imprysonyng of Peter, ne with double chaynes, nor wyth once fower souldiers in armour, whiche in other tymes & cases were thoughte enoughe to haue the safe keepyng of one man, for this purpose onely, that his cruell entente with so great diligence, myghte muche more auayle to the settyng forth and encreasyng of the glory of our sauiour Christ. In thys wyse Peter, whome the souldiers tooke diligent hede on, kept his holy day in pryson. In the meane while the congregacion of the disciples, tarying not a lytle thought for their shepeherde, neuer ceassed day ne nighte to prayr to God, that Peter myght escape.

The texte.

¶ And whan Herode wolde haue brought him out vnto the people, the same nighte slept Peter betweene two souldiers, bounde wyth twoo chaynes, and the keepers before the doore, kepte the prison. And beholde, the angell of the Lorde was there present, & a lyghte shyned in the inhabytacyon. And he smote Peter on the side, styrred him vp, sayinge: aryse vp quickely. And hys cheynes fell of from hys handes. And the aungell sayd vnto hym: gyrde thy selfe, and bynde on thy sandales. And he dyd so. And he sayeth vnto him: caste thy garment about the, and folowe me. And he came out and folowed him, & wyste not that it was trueth, whiche was doen by the aungel, but thought he had sene a vision. Whan they were past the first and ſ seconde warde, they came vnto the yron gate, that leadeth vnto the citie, which opened to them by the owne accord. And they went out, and passed thorowe one strete, and forthwith the aungell departed from hym.

And whan as Herode purposed to bryng hym forth before the people after the holy dayes were ended, as God would, the nyghte before he shoulde haue bene brought forth, Peter was a slepe betweene two souldiers bounde wyth two chaynes. The rest of the souldiers watched at the prysons doore. And beholde thangell of god sodainly stode by Peter, and a wonderfull lyght withall made al the house bryght notwithstandyng that it was both a darke pryson, and a darke nyght also, and smytyng Peter on the syde, reysed hym, sayeng: Arise speadily. And forthwyth allone as these wordes were spoken, the chaines, fell from hys handes. Than sayed the angell, gyrde thy selfe, and put on thy shoes, and see that thou leaue no parte of thy apparell beare. Whan Peter had thys doen, than sayed the angell agayne: cast on thy cloke and folowe me. In this wise Peter folowing the Jungell hys guide began to goe forth of the pryson, not yet perceiuing that this was in very dede done that the aungell did, but supposyng that he sawe a vision, as he had before seene. But after they had passed the first and the seconde warde, they came to an yron gate that leadeth into the citie, which by it owne accorde, opened vnto them, though it had many lockes and boltes vpon it. And whan they were cleane forth, they passed on vntyll they had gone throughe one strete of the citie, and than forthwith the aungell vanishyng away, left Peter, as soodaynly as he before had comen to him.

And behold, the angell of the lorde was there present. &c.

And they went out & passed. &c.

The texte.

And whan Peter was come to himselfe, he sayed: Now I knowe of a surrie, that the Lorde hath sent his angell, and hath delyuered me out of the hande of Herode, and from all the wayting for of the people of the Iewes. And as he consydered the thyng, he came to the house of Mary, the mother of one John, whose surname was Marke, where many were gathered together in prayer. As Peter knocked at the entry doore, a damosell came forth fearth to harken, named Rhoda. And whē she knew Peters voyce, she opened not the entry for gladnes, but ranne in and tolde how Peter stoode before the entry. And they said vnto her, thou art mad. But she affirmed that it was euen so. Than said they: it is his Aungell. But Peter continued knocking: and whan they had opened the dooze, and saw hym, they were astonied. And whan he had beckened vnto them with the hand that they myght holde their peace, he tolde them by what meanes the Lorde had brought hym out of the prison. And he sayed: goe shewe these thynges vnto James, and to the brethē. And he departed, and went into an other place.

Then Peter lookyng about hym, and perfectly knowyng in what part of the citie he was, cummyng to hymselfe, sayde: Nowe I perceyue it is no dreame that is done, but the Lorde pytyynge those that be hys, hath sente hys Aungell, and hath delyuered me out of the handes of Herode, whiche had decreed to put me to deathe, and hath disappoynted bothe the cruell kyng, and also the earnest expectacion of the multitude. Than as he was in consultynge and deutling with hymselfe whither he myghte moost safely goe, thynkyng that he wouldē make hys dyscyples and felowes to be partakers of hys hys topfull chaunce, wente to the house of Mary that was the mother of John, not the same John that was brother to James, but that was otherwise called Marke, in whose house many were assembled, prayyng wyth one assente, for the delyuery of theyr pastoure.

And as he consydered therthing, he came to the house of Mary. &c.

And whan Peter knocked at the wicket of the gate whyche was towardes the streate syde, a lytle mayden came foorthe softely to harken what the matter was. Her name was Rhoda. Whome Peter perceyuyng to come to the dooze, willed her spedely to open the dooze. Whan she heard Peters voice, beeyng halfe amased for sooddayn ioye, did not open the dooze, but runnyng backe agayne into the house, broughte theym woorde that Peter was at the dooze. But they beeyng well assured howe safe Herode had caused Peter to bee kepte, aunswered to the mayden. Surely thou arte peuysshe. But whan shee contynued styffely affirmyng that it was true that shee had sayed, some of theym sayd, it is not Peter but his ghoste, or angell that speaketh lyke him. For they were of this opinion, that euery man hath an Angell to be hys keper and guyde, whiche often tymes woulde take mannes lykenes vpon hym.

But peter contynued knockyng. &c.

But when as Peter styll knocked, they opened the dooze, and whan they sawe Peter come in, they woondred at hym. But Peter hearyng the greate noyse of those that reioyced that he was come agayne, beckened to theym with his hande, that they shoulde holde theyr peace, and harken wythoute noyse what he woulde saye, leste that any manne shoulde perceyue the matter, that had chaunced, by so straunge and vnaccustomed noyse that they made. Whan silence was made, he shewed theym all the matter as it had chaunced in ordre, howe the Lorde had broughte hym out of the pyson, by the guydyng of his aungell. And looke, sayde Peter, that James the brother of the Lorde, be certified hereof (he was than bysshope of Hierusalem) and the reste of the brethren, that they maye bee partakers with vs of thys ioye. In thys wyse the good God dooeth myxte sadnesse with myrthe, and myrthe wyth sadnesse, that we shoulde not vtterely delspayre. After Peter had spoken these woordes, he forthwith departed thence, and went into an other place whereas he myghte more safely bee hyyde, for feare leste Herode, whose contynual endeuoure in cruelltie he had experyence of, shoulde agayne espie him out.

And he departed and wente into an other place.

Assone as it was daye, there was no lytell to doone emong the souldiers, what was becum becum of Peter. Whan Herode had sought for hym, and founde hym not, he examined the keepers, and commaunded them to be had away. And he descended from Iewry to Cesarea, and there abode. Herode was displeased with them of Tyre and Sydon. But they came all with one accorde, and made intercession vnto hys Blastus the kinges chaumbelayne, and desired peace, because their countrey was nourished by the kinges prouysion.

But as sone as it was daye the souldiers, to whose custody he was committed, keeping the chaynes remayne whole, and that the prysoner was escaped (the doores keeping shutte) were sore amased, marueylyng what was become of Peter. And Herode, whan he had sente for Peter, to thyntente that he myght bryng him tooth before the people, and so to condemne hym to death, and founde hym not in the pryson, after crampnacyon hadde of the keepers, commaunded them to warde, that he myghte at laysure put theym to execution. But God euer mercyfully tenderyng those that loue hym, restrayned Herodes rage, aswell prouydyng for the safetye of the Apostles, as also of the souldiers. For it was not sytting that the safegarde of Peter shoulde be occasion that the innocentes shoulde suffer the paynes of death. And in the meane space it it befel that Herode had occasion to take hys iourney to Cesarea, a citie of Palestine. He was offended with thinhabitours of Tyre and Sydon, and dyd euen than purpose in his mynde, to wage battayll agaynste theym. But they hearyng of that, repaired wyth one accorde vnto hym, and fyrste desiryng the fauoure of one Blastus, whyche was chefe of the kinges priuy chaumbre, and obteynyng the same, sued for peace, forasmuche as they thought it expedient for them to haue the frendshyppe of hym, beyng a kynge that dwelte so nere theym: Because that their tythes and welthynes in Tyre and Sydon, stoode moste by marchaundyse, and therefore it was theyr commoditie and bauntage, to bee at league wyth the countreys that adioyned nere vnto them, and that they could not wage battell, without theyr great hynderaunce, hauyng not free passage for occupiers to cary out, and bryng in marchaundises.

The texte. ¶ And vpon a day appoynted, Herode arayed him in his royall apparell, and sat vpon his seate, & made an oracion vnto them. And the people gaue a shout sayeng: it is the voice of a God and not of a mā. And immediately the angel of the Lord smote hym, because he gaue not God the honour, and he was eaten of wormes, & gaue vp ? goste. And the woorde of God grew and multiplied. And Barnabas and Paule returned to Hierusalem, when they had fulfilled their office, and tooke with them Iohn whose surname was Marke.

After these matters were peaceably ended, whan as vpon a certayne solemne feaste, or high daye, that was by powre kepte holy for the health of the Emperour, by occasion whereof the chiefe rulers of the whole countrey were assembled thither, the seconde daye that the playes were kepte, (for they continued many dayes) Herode was speakyng vnto the people out of an hyghe place or pulpet before the people, hauyng on hym a gorgeous garmente that was very richely and cunningly wouen and embrodered, with bothe syluer and also gold: when that the brightenes of the Sunne beames shyning on the lap and bolome of the kinges garment, by reason of reflexiō, glistered vpon euery mans eyes, that no man might abyde the bryghtenes thereof, euen as it had been lyghtening, the multitude with flattery made a shout thereat, prayeng hym, & sayd: the voyce of god and of no man, as though they had perceyued in hym some thyng to surmount mans excellency. Such flattery of the people, doeth often cause the kynges become tyrantes, whan they are praised as goddes, that are scarcely worthy the name of man. And princes on the other parte flatter the people, exhibiting vnto theym thewes to gase vpon, & vncleanly plaies, and oftentymes by puttynge good menne to death, as he before had obteyned the peoples fauour by the death of James. And yet Herode for hys parte refused not, nor abhorred this so vngodly flattery, but as a wretched person, and one that should within short space after dye, reioysed to be called god. But the vengeaunce of god immediatly lighted on hym. For streight waies in presence of the multitude, before he came downe, the aungell of god smote hym, whom; he lokyng backe fawe, because that he beynge man, had taken on hym the honoure that cannot be communicate or parted with any creature, but is due vnto god alone. And beyng taken with a sodayne disease, whiche was as fylthy and dolorouse as anye myght be, died for the verate payne and anguithe therof, within fewe dayes after, his body beyng eaten vp with wormyne.

And he was eaten vp with wormes, & gaue vp the ghoste. &c.

In this wyse whan he, that had persecuted the flocke of god, was rydde oute of the waye, the doctrine of the gospell encreased, and spred more and more abrode. And Barnabas and Saule, whan their busynesse was done, that they had in hande by the consent of the brethren, and had delyuered the money to ỹ apostles, and sent the same distributed to the helpyng and relyuing of ỹ poze, as it was ordeyned that it shoulde, returned from Hierusalem to Antioche, bryngyng wyth them a companion, whose name was John, otherwyse called by his syrname Marke.

¶ The.xiii.Chapter.

The texte.

There were in the congregacion that is at Antioche, certain prophetes, and teachers, as Barnabas and Symeon that was called Niger, & Lucius of Cyrene, and Manahen, Herode the Tetrarches nourselelowe, & Saule. As they mynystred to the lorde, and fasted, the holy ghost sayed: seperate me Barnabas and Saule, for the worke whereunto I haue called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and layed theyr hades on them, they leat them goe. And they after they were sent forth of the holy gost, departed vnto Seleucia, & from thence they sayled to Ciprus. And when they were at Salamine, they shewed the worde of God in the Synagoges of the Iewes. And they had John to their minister.

THe Churche at Antioche, dyd than so flozysshe, that in it were dyuers that had the gifte of Prophecye, and other that had the gyfte of teachyng the same. Emong whome were Barnabas, and Symeon, whiche was sirnamed Niger, & besydes these were also Lucius, a Cyrenian borne, and Manahen whiche had ben brought vp euē of a child with Herode the Tetrache, and was his nourselelowe, & playfiere, whose compaignie he had lefte, and dyd than folow Christ. But Saule emong all these, was moste excellente, and one that passed all the other in qualyties required in an apostle.

And whereas they studyed for the profyt of the Churche, besidowyng those gyftes that they had, to eche mannes welth, and to set forth the glozye of Chrystle fayethfully, whyche is a sacrifyce so acceptable to god, that there is none more, fastyng in the meane space, that they by prayer in puritie of lyfe, myghte further the profytes of the Churche, besydes the executing and doinge of al other duetyes: the holy ghoste beeyng moued with their prayers, certifyed theym by Prophetes what he wouldе haue doen, sayinge: diffeuer me Barnabas and Saule, two the chief of all the reste, for my purpose, that they maye take in hande that office, for the whiche I haue specially chosen theym: that is to saye, that they maye be instructours of the gentiles, and that I maye sowe farre abrode the gospell by theyr meanes. At this commaundemente of the holye ghost, Barnabas and Saule were separated and set apart from the reste, that it myght appere to euery man, who wer chosen. And after that they wyth one consente, by fastyng, and prayer had made petition to God that he would turne the office that they toke on them to ꝓ profite of the congregation: those that were highest of authoritie emōg them, layed their hādes on them, & so dismissed them ready to take theyr iourney, whyther soeuer the holy goste would leade or appoynte theym. And so firste by mocion of the holy ghost, Barnabas and Saule went to Seleucia, whyche is a great promontory, or peake on the weste parte of Antioche, & thence they sayled vnto Cypres. And as soone as they had arryued at Salamin, whyche is a noble citie in that yle, and ꝓ first that ye cum vnto on ꝓ easte syde, they preached not fables inuented by mans witte, but the worde of god: and that not in corners, but in the Iewes Synagoges, of whome there was a greate noumber, by reason that it was nere vnto Syria. They had with them, as a partaker of thys mynysterie, John otherwyse called Marke, whome they had brought wyth them from Hierusalem. Suche honor was euery where geuen to the Iewes, accordynge to the commaundement of Christe, that wylled the ghospell first to be offered them, iesse that sorte of people, whiche otherwyse was euer full of complaynes and waywarde, shoulde saye, that they wer despised and nought set by.

And they had John to their ministre.

The fecte.

Whā they had gone through the yle vnto Paphos, they found a certayne sorcerer, a false prophet, a Iew, whose name was Barieſu, which was w ꝓ ruler of ꝓ countrey, one Sergius Paulus, a prudent mā. The same ruler called vnto him Barnabas & Saul, & desired to heare the word of god. But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretacō) withstode them, and sought to turne away the ruler from the fayth. Than Saul (which is also called Paul) being ful of the holy goste, set his eyes on him, and sayde: O thou ful of all sutteltie & deceitfulnes, thou chylde of the deuyll, thou enemy of all rightewsnes: wilt ꝓ not cease to peruerte the straight wayes of the lord: And now beholde the hande of the lord is vpon the, and thou shalt be blynd, and not see ꝓ sunne for a season. And immediatly, there fel on hym a myste & darkenes, and he wente aboute, seking them that should leade him by the hande. Than the ruler whan he sawe what had happened, beleued and wondred at the doctrine of the Lorde.

They beyng thus occupied, walked aboute all the whole yland, vntyll that they came to Paphos, whiche was a citye dedicate in the honoure of Venus. For this cytie standeth fardest of, on the West parte of Cipres. There they founde a certayne enchaunter whose name was Barieſus, as a manne woulde say, the sonne of Iesu, a Iewe borne, and one that professed the Iewes religion, and vnder pretense therof, falsely bearyng men in hande, that he had the spirite of prophecie. He was retenynge to Sergius Paulus, whiche was proconsull, that is to saye lieutenaunt, or the lorde deputie of that yland, and was a wyse man and of good experience. For suche felowes had wonte commonly to get them in suche greate mennes fauour, that they may do more mischiefe among men, when they haue once broughte theym in errour. The proconsul hearyng than that the gospell was sowed throughout Cypres, dyd not onely not withstande it, but also sent for Barnabas and Paule, beyng verye desirouse to learne of them this heauenly doctryne. But Barieſus beynge an enemye to oure sauiour Iesus, endeuoured hymselfe to resyste the increase of the gospel, and strived against the trueth whiche was cumming to lyghte, where as he was in very dede a worker of falsehood. And Elimas, whiche worde in the Syrians language betokeneth an enchaunter and a false prophet also, withstode the apostles that were true prophetes. For he perceiuing that the proconsul was desyrous to heare the gospell, and wel assured that in time to come, there would be no place for his deceitfull crafte amonge them that had once learned the lure and stedfast trueth, wente about to alienate the proconsulles minde, that he should no more beleue the apostles. Here marke the buckling together of mannes crafte, and the liuely force of the gospell. Saule whiche was also named Paule, could no lenger forbeare this felowe, whom he perceyued ful of the deuils spirite, that strived with myschieuous crafte against the pure trueth, but taknynge to hym herte courage, by inspiracion of the holy ghost, stedfastly loked on this enchaunter, and sayde vnto him: O thou wicked, full of all deceite and wylynes, that exyllestte thy father the deuyll, whiche first by his wiles and lyes drew man to deathe. O enemy of al iustice and truth, and in this shewynge thy selfe to be the sonne of the deuyll, for he firste tooke from man his innocencie, thou openly strivest that truth shall not spring againe. And thou art not contented that thou hytherto hast deceyued simple men with thy deceitefull crafte but nowe also when the wyll of god is, that the trueth of the gospell, in whiche is no deceit, shall dyne throughout the worlde, thou stubbernely continuyng in thy euyll intent, doest not cease to striue againste the wyll of god, rather haupynge an eye to thine owne vayne glorye and fylthye lucre, than to the health and saluacion aswell of thine owne soule as of a great sorte of other mennes also. And that thou mayest perceiue that the crafte whiche thou workest by the deuils power, can nothinge preuayle againste the trueth of the gospell, beholde thou shalt nowe fele what he is able to do, whose wyll thou doest withstand. Thou braggest that thou arte a Prophete, and one that knoweth hygh misteries, whereas in very dede, thou art inwardely in thy soule blynde. Here halte thou deceyued men, who iudge of those thinges that they see, but God that knoweth the blyndnesse of thy herte, shall streight wayes take awaye the vse of thy bodely yes, that euery man shall perceyue that thou art blynde in very dede, and one that is vnworthy to see the same lighte whiche all other men see, forasmuche as thou wagest open warre against the lyght of the gospel, that now beginneth to aryse in the worlde. This waye shall God take vengeaunce on the vntyll that thou repent. Paule had scarcely spoken these worde, but sodainly this enchauntoure was stricken with a great blyndnesse, insomuch that he, as one amased wandred vp and downe, seknge for some man to leade him by the hande. These thinges were doen, the proconsul beyng a wytnes of it, and lokyng theron, who meruelyng muche at the great efficacy of this heauenly doctrine, by vertue wherof the Phantasticall worckynge of suche enchauntours was trode so soone vnder foote, was conuerted to the faythe and professed the name of Christe, and in stede of the false Prophet Barielus he had in high fauoure the dyscyples of Iesus.

O thou full of all sutteltie & deceitfulnes thou chylde of the deuel. &c.

And nowe beholde the hande of the lord is vpon the, & thou shalt bee blynde. &c.

When Paule departed frō Paphos, thei that were with him, came to Perga in Pamphilia: and Iohn departed from them, and returned to Ierusalē. But they wandred thorow the countreys, & came from Perga to Antioche, in Pisidia: And went into the Synagoge of the Iewes on the Sabboth day, and sate down. And after the lecture of the lawe

These thinges were doen at the citie of Paphos, from whence Paule sa ling with his company into the lesse Asia, landed at Perga, whiche is a ci of Pamphilia. But Johu whiche by surname was called Marke, wente fre them, and returned to Hierusalem, whence he before came to beare Barnab and Paule compayne. But they with no lesse speadynes whan they had go ouer Pamphilia, came to Antioche, whiche is a citie of Pisidia. There entri into the Synagogue, where as the Jewes vsyd customably resorte, they sa downe as other men vsyd, to heare a lesson of the lawe, and of the Prophete whiche after it was rehersed, and no man arose vp, the chiefe rulers of t Synagoges perceyuing by their garmentes and apparell, that these stra gers were of the Jewes, and that their face and outwarde behauour shew them to be vertuous men, sente worde vnto them by theyr vnder officer any exhortacion to the people, it shoulde be lawfull for them soe to doe.

the people, whē they dwelt as straungers in the lande of Egipt: And with an high arm or meaning of this lesson, whiche is euery Sabboth daye customablye read in your Synagogue. God the defendour of the Jsraelites, chose our forefa thers, that is to saye, this sorte of people, to serue him before all other, insl muche that whan they serued in Egipte, beyng kept in great seruytude an but by his high and mighty power, ꝑ all men might certainly know, that the people was fauoured of God. And whan as he of a tendre loue to warde them had deliuered them out of Egypte, bery gently he bare with theyr condyc ons in the wyldernes by the space almost of fowerty yeares, thoughe they of ten made seditions, and commocions, and grutched against Moyses. And yet dyd not he extremely punyshe them, to the ende that he myghte perfourm his promyse whiche he had made before vnto the patriarkes.

seuen nations within the lande of Chanaan, the same land parted he by lottes amongest them, and that within the terme of. CCCC. yeres. Whiche was an euidente token howe ernestly he loued oure countrey. And so whan they had obteyned peace, he gaue them iudges, vnder whose gouernaunce they myghte quietly lyue, vntyll the tyme of Samuell the Prophete, whiche was last of the iudges. In tyme of his rule, they desyred of god, that he would gyue them a kyng (Samuel dissuadyng them from it) and whan as they continued styll in the same mynde and desyre, he made Saul king ouer them, that was the sonne of Cis, of the tribe of Beniamin, whome the lorde reiected, partely for his pryde, and partely for disobeying his commaundement. And thus continued they vnder the dampnion of the good iudge Samuel, and vnder the vngodly Saule, fowerty yeares. Yet for all this, the fauour of the mercyfull god forsoke not vs his people whome he had once chosen, but in stede of an euyll kynge, whome they had contrarye to the wyll of God desyred, he raysed vp vnto theim kyng Dauid, of whose ryghteousnes god hym selfe bare witnes, saying: I haue founde Dauid the sonne of Jesse, a man to my mynde, whiche shall obey my wyll in all thinges. For euen as god, what tyme he is angry, for a greate punishement, geueth vnto the people a foolysh and an vngodly king, euen so whan he is pleased and reconciled vnto vs, he geueth for the euyll kyng, whome he taketh out of the way, a good man, and one that will fulfyl his commaundemente.

And after-warde, they desired a king, & god gaue vnto them Saule the sonne of Cis.

Of this mannes sede hath god (according as he had promised) brought vnto Israel, a sauiour, one Jesus, when John had firste preached before his cummyng, the baptisme of repentaunce to Israel. And when John had fulfilled his course, he sayde: whome ye thinke that I am, I same am I not. But beholde, there cumeth one after me, whose shoes of his feete, I am not worthy to louse.

The texte.

Vnto him hadde GOD made a promyse, that one of his lynnage should become kyng of Israel, who shoulde raygne for euer. Nowe is it at length fulfilled, whiche oftentimes and long ago, was by the prophetes promysed. For of the stocke of Dauid, according to his promyse, he hath exhibited vnto vs Jesus the sauioure of the Israelites, his name ryghte well agreeyng with the effecte ensuinge therof. This sauioure, as he was promysed of the prophetes, and as he was signified before in shadowes of the lawe, and figures: so before he shewed hymselfe to the worlde, he was prophecied and spoken of, and also was shewed to be already cum, by the mouthe of John the baptiste, who also was sent before, according to the prophecye of Esaye, as a messenger to shewe that he was cummyng, exhortinge all the people of Israel to bee baptysed, and to repente their lyfe whiche they had ledde before, openly renouncinge, that the kyngdome of god was euen at hande. But whan John, (whome god purposely sent to be the foremessenger of our sauiour which was cummynge, and to make ready the myndes of men against he came) had almoste made an ende of his course, and was thoughte of many for his good tuning to be Christe, he openly reiected this title from hym, and referred it to hym that it was dewe vnto, saying: Why thynke ye that I am Christe? I am nothing els but his messenger. And yet he, whome ye (though in dede not truly) suppose me to be, wyl within shorte space cum. For he, as concerning time, shall cum after me, but so far he passeth me in power and dignitie, that I am far vnworthy, yea to vnbuckle hys shoes, whiche amonge men is accounted but an homely office, and a base seruice. For what is in him of leaste reputacion, the same doeth farre surmounte that is in me moste excellent. Wherfore we preache vnto you no newe thing, but that the same saluiour is now come, that hath so many hundred yeres sence, been promised to oure forefathers, and whiche hath so long time ben looked for of your owne selues, whome John, whiche among the Jewes was in great estimacion, knowledged to bee the same saluiour, and so pronounced openly of hym before the Jewes.

The texte. Ye men and brethren, children of the generacion of Abraham, and whosoeuer among you feareth God, to you is this worde of saluacion sent. For the inhabitours of Jerusalem and their rulers, because they knewe him not, nor yet the voyces of the prophetes, whiche are read euery Sawboth daye, they haue fulfilled them, in condemning him. And whan they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate to kil him. And whan they had fulfilled all that were written of him, they toke him downe from the tree, and put hym in a sepulchre. But God reysed hym againe from death on the third daye, and he was sene many dayes of them, whiche came vp with hym from Galile to Jerusalem: whiche are witnesses of him vnto the people.

Wherfore brethren ye that haue the lawe in price, and that greatly regarde the prophetes, and that come of Abrahams linage, to whome god promysed issue, by meane wherof all nacions should be blessed, yf you bee the children of Abraham in very dede, yf ye earnestly stande in the feare of god, folowe in this poynt the godlynesse of your father Abraham, and receyue this wholesome doctrine that we bring vnto you, and embrace hym beyng now alreadi come, and beyng lyuely exhibited and geuen to you in very dede, whome the Patriarkes did most highly reioyce to haue no more but promysed vnto them, that he shoulde come. This helth of loule thorow Jesus, is indifferently brought to all men, but vnto you especially is it proffered, to whom, and for whose saluacion the prophecies were disclosed, and of whose stocke Christe was borne. Let not the vulgare example of them that inhabite nowe Hierusalem moue you any thing, or of those that be rewlers there, whiche in condemning Jesus to death, whome they wouldе not knowleage for their Messias, nor vnderstande the Prophetes whiche yet bee read euery sabboth daye to them, hath vnawares fulfilled that, that was before prophecyed. For so was it determyned by the wyll of god, and so did the Prophetes with one consēt, signifie and declare before, that one that was free from al sinne, should be sacrifyced as a lambe without spotte, for the sinnes of all men. And whan the priestes, Pharisees, Scribes, and other of the piers, with the consente also of the commons, had assayed all meanes, and couldе finde no iust cause why they shoulde put him to death, yet obteyned they with importune clamours of Pilate, that he wouldе put him to death. And whan they hadde vnadutsedly fulfilled all those thynges that wer spoken before of hym by the mouth of the prophetes, they toke him downe from the crosse, and layed hym in his graue. But he whom man of malyce had slayne by the permission of god, the very same was reysed from death, by the power lykewise of God the thirde daye, accordyng as it was before prophecied. And lest ye shoulde thinke this to bee but a vayne tale that I tel you, he was seene harde, felt, and in his owne person, knowen of his dysciples that folowed hym, whan he went from Galile to Hierusalem to suffre, by the space, after he rose from death to lyfe, of fowertie dayes, and they be almoste all aliue vntil this day, testifyeng faythfully before all the people, those thinges that they sawe with their eyes, and heard with their eares, and felt with their handes.

For the inhabitours of Hierusalem. &c.

But God reysed hym againe from death on the thirde daye. &c.

The texte. And we declare vnto you, how that the promise (whiche was made vnto the fathers) God hath fulfylled vnto their children (euen vnto vs) in that he reysed vp Jesus again, euen as it is written in the first psalme. Thou art my sonne, this day haue I begotte the.

As

As concerning that he reysed him vp from death, now no more to returne to corruptio, he thus wrote. The holy promises to Dauid made, wyll I geue faithfully to you.
Likewise, he saith also in an other place. Thou shalt not suffre thyne holy to see corrup-
cio. For Dauid (after he had in his tyme fulfilled ỹ will of god) fell on sleape, & was laid vnto his fathers, & sawe corruption, but he whome god reysed again, sawe no corruptio.

And we lyke ewyse beyng commaunded by our sauiour to execute the office of apostles, doe witnesse that god hath now fulfylled his promyse to you and your posterite, in rayling Jesus from death to lyfe: whiche thing long ago was promised to Abraham, and Dauid your forefathers, and to your other auncestry, by the mouthes of the prophetes. For this is the same sonne of god, borne of the virgin Mary as concerning his humayne nature and bodye, of whome the father himselfe speaketh in the first misticall psalme saying: thou art my sonne I haue begotten the this daye. And that he hath reysed him from death to lyfe, who shall neuer after be more subiecte to mortalitie or death, he affirmeth by his prophete Esaye saying: I wil performe vnto you faithfull-ly, the promyse that I made vnto Dauid. Now had he kept no promise, if he had not rayled Jesus to lyfe euerlasting. For this was his promyse vnto Da-uid: I haue once sworne to Dauid, as I am holy, and I will not deceiue hym, his seed shall continue for euer, and his throne, or royall seate, shall continue as the Sunne in my sight, & as the full Moone without ende, & as a faithfull witnesse in heauen. But ye see now that none of the lynage of Dauid, obtay-neth this kingdom: but this prophecie signified Christ, that sitteth on the right-hand of his father, and enioyeth the kyngdom that neuer shall haue ende.
Of this selfe same matter, speaketh also the .xv. psalme in this wyse: Thou shalt not suffre thy holy to see corruption. Whiche prophecie can not be referred to kyng Dauid in his owne persone, of whome we certaynly knowe, that after that he had liued and reigned as long as pleased god he than died, & was buried sembleably as his auncestry was before him. But if to see corruption be nothing els but to die, than his graue, whiche yet vnto this daye is remaining among vs where his bones lye, bothe euidently proue, that he hath seene corruption. Wherfore this prophecy cannot be referred vnto hym but to another, whome we preache vnto you of, whom god rayled from death to lyfe ere his body began to putrifie, and made him immortall.

For Dauid (after he had in hys time fulfilled the will of God) fell on sleape, &c

The texte.

Be it knowen vnto you therfore ye men and brethren, that through this man is preached vnto you, remission of sinnes: and that by him, all that beleue, are iustified from all things, from whiche ye could not be iustified by the law of Moyses. Beware therefore lest that fal on you, whiche is spoken of in the prophetes: Beholde ye despisers, & wonder, and perish ye: for I doo a worke in your dayes whiche ye shal not beleue, though a man declare it to you.

Be it therfore knowen vnto you brethren, that through thafore sayde Jesus, ye haue proffered vnto you remission of sinnes, and freedom from all offenses, which you could not hitherto be cleane ridde of, by keping of the lawe. For the lawe was vnperfect, take carnally, neither could it put awaye all sinnes, but punished sum of them, nether it helped all nations. But through this same Jesus, eche man without respecte of any persone or els offence, hath rightcousnesse or iustification, and innocencie proffered vnto him, so that he beleue the promyses of the ghospel. Beware therfore lest it may be spoken of you, that god threteneth to the vnfaithful, and those that resiste the preaching of his ghospell, saying by the mouthe of his prophet Abacuc: Looke ye despisers, and maruayle ye beyng amased, and euen dye for angre, for I woorke in your dayes a woorke that ye shall not beleue, thoughe a man tell you of it.

Who euer yet did beleue that a virgin shoulde beare a childe? Who woulde haue thought that all countreyes should obtaine life euerlasting by the death of one man? Who woulde haue beleued that a man beyng slaine and buried, coulde within three dayes aryse agayne from death to lyfe euerlasting? This wonderfull worke, god, accordynge to his promyse heretofore made, hath wrought nowe in your time. Become not ye despisers, bee not occasion that your selues perish through stubberne and wylfull vnbeliefe, but beleue ye in him, I embrace ye that health of soule whiche is now freely profered vnto you.

The texte. ¶ When the Iewes were gon out of the congregacion, the Gentiles besought that they would preache the worde to them, the next Sabboth. When the congregacion was broken vp, many of the Iewes, and deuoute proselites folowed Paule & Barnabas: which spake to them: and exhorted them to continue in the grace of God.

After Paule had concluded, and the hearers began to departe, they desyred Paule and Barnabas, that they woulde speake more of the same matters the sabboth day next folowing in audience of the synagoge. And whan the cumpany was dimissed, many that were partly Iewes borne, and partely other straungers whiche yet lyued accordynge to the trade of the Iewes, and were lykewyse desirous to know this kinde of religion, folowed Paule and Barnabas, couetyng to be more playnly, and familiarely taught of the Apostles. And than talked they with them aparte, exhortinge them to continue in that fauoure and grace whiche once they had begun to embrace, of free gifte at the hand of god, and what they had once begun, in the same to procede with continuall increase. In the meane time the rumoure of this matter was publisshed far abrode, one telling another what he had hard as men commonly do.

The texte. And the next Sabboth daye came almost the whole citie together, to heare the worde of God. But when the Iewes sawe the people, they were full of indignacion, and spake against those thinges whiche were spoken of Paul, speaking against it, and rayling on it. Than Paul and Barnabas waxed bolde, and saied: it was mete that the woorde of God shoulde first haue been preached to you. But seeyng ye put it from you, and iudge your selues vnworthy of euerlastyng lyfe, loe, we turne to the Gentiles: For so hath the Lord commaunded vs. I haue made the a lighte of the Gentiles, that thou be the saluacion vnto the ende of the worlde.

So the next sabboth daye not onely the Iewes, and suche straungiers as obserued the Iewes lawes, but also all the whole citie came to the Synagoge to heare the ghospell preached. But the Iewes for the most parte of them, that had perswaded themselues, that this fauoure through beleuing the gospell, was promised to suche onely as were carnally dyscended and came of Abrahams stocke, whan they sawe that a great multitude of Iewes, and suche other as kept their lawe, (whiche were proselites, and Gentiles also,) were gathered together indifferently, the said Iewes grudgeyng in their minde, disdayned at it meruelously, speaking against suche thinges as had ben spoken of by Paule, and not absteyning from blasfemyng, oppobrius, and rayling wordes. Whan Paule and Barnabas perceyued their malicious stubbernes, remembryng that the lord had commaunded the apostles, that if in any place they chaunced to mete with suche, as woulde reiecte the ghospell whan it is profered them, they shoulde leaue that citie and place, shakyng the dust of theyr feete also to such stubberne persons againe, saide freely: we haue doen our duties: For according to the commaundement of Iesus the lorde, the gospel first was to be preached vnto you. Suche reputacion Christ had you in. But seeyng that you refuse so great fauour that hath ben freely and without suyte

profered vnto you, & thinke your selues vnworthy of eternal life, beholde we wyll turne our preaching to the Gentiles. And yet wyll not we so doo vpon our head: But Iesus oure lorde so commaunded hys disciples, that after they had preached his gospel throughout Iewry, they should afterwardes preache it to all nacions vnto the ende of the worlde. This was long since prophecied by the prophet Esay, that Iesus should saue, not the Iewes onely, but all the nacions also in the worlde. For in his booke of prophecy, the father speaketh vnto the sonne in this wyse: I haue set the to be a lighte vnto all nacions, and to saue all the whole worlde.

The texte.

¶ When the Gentiles hearde this, they were glad, and glorified the worde of the Lorde, and beleued: euen as many as were ordeyned vnto eternall lyfe. And the woorde of the Lorde was published throughout all the regyon. But the Iewes moued the deuout, and honest women, and the chiefe menne of the citie, and reysed persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled thē out of their coastes. But they shoke of the dust of their feete against them, and came vnto Iconium. And the disciples were filled with ioye, and with the holy ghoste.

When those that were of the gentiles hearde this, they muche reioyced, not because that the Iewes shoulde perishe, but so that they rendred to God thankes, that had turned the Iewes incredulitie vnto their saluacion. The Iewes spake blasphemously against this healthfull doctrine: but the gentiles beyng lodenly conuerted, did receiue it very promptly, and readily, and glorified the worde of the lorde. Whiche worde many of the gentiles beleued, but yet not all, but as many as god of his mercye had ordeyned to haue euerlasting lyfe, whereunto no manne attayneth, vnlesse he be called, and chosen of god. In this wise the worde of god was sowen abrod throwout all that countrey. But the Iewes enuying the gentiles, stirred vp certayne deuout women (for suche commonly are soonest deceiued vnder the fayned pretence of holynesse) and those that were in estimacion honorable, to thentent that all might bee doen with the more authoritie: and furthermore they moued diuerse of the head men of the citie, and through them, cauled Paule and Barnabas to bee persecuted, and banished them out of their coastes. Here marke good Theophilus, the crafte, that the Iewes had to styrre vp the myndes of men against those, that sincerely preached Iesus. Malyce first moueth them that doe counterfet holynesse, and soone after thinwarde sorowe of their malicious myndes, breaketh out into woordes of reproche. Than vpon this, bad women, and suche as be deuoute, be meanes wherby they call the commons vnto sedicion, for by the auncient matrones they stirre vp the rewlers. And in this wise were the Apostles driuen out. Than Paule and Barnabas shaking of from them the dust of their feete, tooke theyr iourney to Iconium, which is a citie in Licaonia. The disciples also reioycing that the ghospell had so good successe, were replenished with gladnesse and with the holy ghoste.

And the woorde of ỹ lorde was published throughout all ỹ regiō.

The. xiiii. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And it fortuned in Iconium, that they went bothe together into the Synagoge of the Iewes, and so spake, that a great multitude bothe of the Iewes, and also of the Gretkes beleued. But the vnbeleuing Iewes, stirred vp, and vnsuspected the myndes of the Gentiles against the brethren. Long tyme abode they there, and quit themselues boldly with the helpe of the lorde, whiche gaue testimony vnto the worde of his grace, and graunted signes and woonders to bee dooen by their handes. But the multitude of the citie was deuided: and parte helde with the Iewes, and parte with the Apostles.

But whan as they were come to Iconium, they went together as their custome was, into the Synagoge of the Iewes, & there they preached also the ghospell of Iesus Christe, lyke as they had before done at Antioche, insomuche that a great numbre alwell of Iewes as of Grecians, were conuerted to the faith. Here against likewyse ỹ Iewishe malice was occasion of sedicion. For ỹ Iewes that wouldenot obey the ghospell, beyng not contente to perishe themselues, except they might drawe many with them to damnacion, stirred vp & corrupted the myndes of the gentiles, against them ỹ did beleue. But the gospel increased and waxed stronger, alwell by aduersitie, as by prosperitie. Wherefore Paule & Barnabas continued a long space in this syghte at Iconium, valiantly settyng forth the matter, by the helpe of god, whiche bare witnesse (whiche was greater than any testymony of man) to thys hys free gift, that he exhibited to al men thzough his ghospell. For power he gaue to these his preachers of the ghospel, that were but weake persons, and out of reputacion, to woorke signes and wonders, to thentent that it might bee knowen therby, to bee the very handye woorke of god. So by meane of the Iewes, the citie Iconium was diuided in two partes, of whiche thone fauoured the vnfaythfull Iewes, the other thapostles.

The texte. When there was an assaulte made bothe of the Gentiles, and also of the Iewes with their rewlers, to do them violence, and to stone them, they were ware of it, and fled vnto Listra, and Derba, cities of Licaonia, and vnto the regyon that lieth rounde about, and there preached the gospel. And all the multitude was moued at their doctrine, but Paul and Barnabas tarried stil at Listra.

And at the last, whan they that were of the gentiles, adioyning themselues to the Iewes, and gouernoures of the citie, went about to laye violent handes on thapostles, that they might punish and stone them, they hauing knowlege of the matter, fled to Listra, a citie in Licaonia, whiche is parte of Pamphilia and from thence to Derba. In the meane space they walked ouer all coastes of the countrey that were neare, sowing in euery place, seede of the ghospell, so that in this their syghte the apostles dyd not so muche procure their owne health, as spreade abzode the ghospel.

The texte. ¶ And there sate a certaine man at Listra, weake in his feete, beyng a creeple from his mothers wombe, and neuer had walked. The same heard Paul preache. Who beholding him, and perceiuing that he had faith to be whole, said with a loude voice: stand vpzight on thy feete. And he sterte vp, & walked. And whan the people saw what Paule had doen, they lift vp their voyces, saying in the speche of Licaonia: Goddes are come down to vs in the likenes of menne. And they called Barnabas Iupiter, & Paul Mercurius, because he was ỹ preacher. Than Iupiters priest, whiche dwelt before their citie, brought oxen and garlandes vnto the porche, and would haue doen sacrifice with the people.

There

There was the same time in Listra a certaine manne, whose legges were so feble and impotent, that he continually satte still, nothing hable to walke and was lame euen from his mothers wombe, neyther could he go of all the dayes in his life before. This man among the other multitude, hearde Paule speakyng of Christe, and Paule looking vpon this man, perceyued by his countenaunce, howe earnest and desirous he was to heare hym, because he trusted, that by the name of Jesus whiche he had hearde preached, he shoulde obtayne health of his limmes, and said vnto him with a loude voyce: Stande vp on thy feete, and with that worde this lame man leaped vp and was wel hable to go. But whan the multitude saw this wo[illegible]rke (for there was no man but he knew this lame creature, and that with one woorde he was restored vnto his health) they spake with loude voyces in their owne countrey language of Licaonia, and said: doubtlesse the gods haue taken on them the likenes of men, and haue descended from heauen vnto vs. And the people of Licaonia did so muche more perswade themselues that it was so, because there went commonly certaine talkes of Jupiter, and Mercurius how they being gods, tooke on them the lykenesse of men, and were receiued as gestes of Licaon, of whome it appereth that they were called Licaonians. Wherefore they called Barnabas by the name of Jupiter, because he shewed in hys countenaunce great grauitie and auncientnes, and Paule they called Mercurie, because he was the spokesman: for the Gentiles were of this opinion that Mercurius was the messengier of the goddes and the president of eloquence. And Jupiters priest, who dwelled in the subburbes of the citie of Listra, brought oxen and garlandes to ꝑ gate of the house, where the apostles were lodged, to thintente that he wolde haue doone sacrifice vnto them. For they supposed that Jupiter was most delighted with sacrifising of oxen. And aswell the priestes, as also the beastes that were killed in sacrifice, had wont to weare garlandes. And a great number of all estates indifferently one with an other, folowed hym.

And they called Barnabas Jupiter, & Paule Mercurius. &c.

Whiche whan the Apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rente their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying and saying: Syrs, why dooe ye this? We are mortal men like vnto you, and preache vnto you, that ye should turne from these vanities vnto the liuing God, whiche made heauen and earth, and the sea, and al thinges that are therein: the whiche in times past, suffered all nations to walke in their owne waies. Neuertheles, he left not himselfe without witnesse, in that he shewed his benefites from heauē in geuing vs rayne and fruitful seasons filling our hertes with foode and gladnes.

The texte.

But whan Paule and Barnabas had enquired what the matter ment, and learned how they were taken as goddes, and that the priest hastened to sacrifice vnto them, they wolde no longer abyde so greate blasphemye against god, to haue that same honoure that was due to god onely, applyed to manne, but cuttyng their garmentes as the Jewes manner was in sorowe, they with haste came foorth to the multitude cryinge, and sayde: Syrs what meane ye? Why doe you thus? We are no goddes, but mortal men as ye bee, ready and apte to fall into lyke mischaunces as you are, and we dooe not onely not desire thus to bee honoured of you, but rather we came hyther to you for this purpose, that by oure counsell ye maye turne to the true lyuyng god, that made heauen, and yearth, and the sea, and all thinges whatsoeuer is contayned therein, leauing these false goddes, whome ye haue hytherto with heathen sacrifice woorshipped, whiche in dede are nothing els,

but

but eyther men that be nowe dead, or els ymages boyde of lyfe, or finally euil ſpirites. For there is but one god the maker and gouernour of al thinges. His wyll is now to be knowen and worſhipped of all nacions in the worlde, that all men thrꝛough him maye obtaine lyfe euerlaſting. For in times paſſe, he, winking as it were, at mennes factes, permitted all nacions to lyue euery one after his owne trade, to the ende that after it were once euidente that man coulde not be ſaued by his owne meanes, all men might bee ſaued, if they would beleue in god, ỹ the ghoſpel taught by his ſonne. And although the moſte parte of menne thrꝛough errꝛoure, hath lefte the true God, worſhipping ymages of diuerſe thinges in ſtede of God, or thinges that were created in ſtede of their creatoure, yet he by ayd by dyd not reuenge hymſelfe on them, as he iuſtly might haue done, nor ceaſed not to prꝛouoke them to know, and loue him, by his continuall benefites.

In grꝛuping his ſonne and fruitfull ſeaſons &c.

For he that made the worlde to the vſe of man, doeth make both fruitful, and plentifull the grounde, by ſending downe rayne from heauen, and cauſeth perely increaſe of fruites to ſuffice aboundantly to the vſe of mannes life, refreſhyng vs plentyfully with ſoondry kyndes of meates, and ſtirryng our hertes, to myrthe, with pleaſaunte wynes. For ye haue not receyued theſe benefites of Jupiter, Ceres, or Bacchus, whome ye haue hytherto worſhipped, but of the ſame god whome we preache vnto you. Than although the apoſtles had ſo plainely ſhewed the trueth in the hearing of all the multitude, yet they coulde ſcarcely ſtay their handes, from doyng ſacrifice vnto them.

The texte.

¶ Thither came certaine Jewes from Antioche and Iconium: whiche (whan they had obtained the peoples conſent, and had ſtoned Paule) drew him out of the citie, ſuppoſing he had been dead. Howbeit as ỹ diſciples ſtode rounde about him, he aroſe vp and came into the citie. And the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derba.

In the meane ſpace while theſe thinges were done at Liſtres, certayne perſones beyng Jewes borne, that repined againſt the ghoſpell, came thyther from Antioche that is in Piſidia, and from Iconium: whiche Jewes, when they had turned many of the people to their minde and opinion, that is to ſay, when they had cauſed them to lay violent handes vpon the apoſtles whyche thing they had alſo attempted afore at Iconium, they ſtoned Paule and drew him out of the citie, thinking that he had ben dead. Thus is mans fortune ſodaynly chaunged. They were but a litel before taken for gods, and ſhould haue had ſacrifice done vnto them, but now Paule being ſtoned, was caſt out of ỹ citie. For they were more angry with him, becauſe he by reaſon of his eloquence, entiſed many to folowe Chriſte. Then the diſciples compaſſed him about there as he was caſt, and left for dead, and wouldehaue buried the corps. But Paule cummyng to himſelfe againe, aroſe priuely, and entred into ỹ citie, and the next daye fled to Derba with Barnabas, whither they firſt of all had purpoſed to haue gone.

The texte.

And whan they had preached to the cytie, and had taught many, they returned againe to Lyſtra, and to Iconium and to Antioche, and ſtrengthned the diſciples ſoules again, exhorted them to continue in the faith, affirming that we muſt thꝛow muche tribulacion, entre into the kingdome of god.

And whan they had preached the goſpell there in that citie, and had taught many thinges, and (as a man would ſay) had caſt the ſeede of the ghoſpell abrode, they returned to Liſtres, Iconium, and Antioche making the myndes of the

of the disciples stedfast in the fayth, as many as they had conuerted to Christ, and geuing them exhortacion to continue in the fayth, and that they woulde not for any feare be withdrawen from the truthe whiche they had once put in our lorde Jesus, nor should not be moued because they heard saye that Paule was stoned at Listres forasmuche as Christ had tolde his disciples, that this was the way, that through muche trouble they shoulde entre into the kyngdom of heauen: So that Paule toke more thought, lest those that were weake in the fayth shoulde be alienated from Christ, seyng how sore he was vexed of the wicked Jewes, then that he himselfe pained so muche on it, geuing example to Bisshoppes that they ought to folowe thyrsty husbandmen, whiche thynke it not sufficient to plant, or to sow except they do also their diligence, that the same that beginneth to growe, may come to his full ripping.

The texte. ¶ And when they had ordeined them elders by election, in euery congregation, and had prayed and fasted, they commended them to the lorde, on whom they beleued.

And forasmuche as it was requisite to the setting forwardes of the ghospell, that the apostles shoulde trauail through many countreyes, they sit priestes or auncientes, who were chosen by the voyces of the comens of euery citie, to ouersee them, and to supply the rowmes of the apostles in their absence, and so when they had vsed generally prayer and fastinge, they commytted them to god, that they might profite in him, whome they had once professed.

The texte. ¶ And when they had gon through out Pisidia, they came to Pamphilia, and when they had preached the worde of God in Perga, they went downe into the citie of Attalia, and toke departed by shippe to Antioche, fro whence they were committed vnto the grace of God, to the worke whiche they fulfilled.

These thinges were doen in Antiochia, whiche is a citie in Pisidia, and when they had walked ouer that countrey, they likewise went throughe Pamphilia, sowing the gospell in euery place, where as it was not sowed alredy, and strengthening them that alreadi beleued, vntyll they returned to Perga. And when they had there also set all matters in order, they came to Attalia, whiche is a Citie of Pamphilia, sumwhat neare the sea. From thence againe they toke shypping to Antioche in Syrya, whence they firste came, when the office of preaching to the Gentiles was committed vnto them by the elders, and when by laying of handes vpon them, by prayer, and by fasting, they were commytted to the grace of god, that throughe his helpe it might happely come to passe, that they had taken in hande.

The texte. ¶ When they were cum, and had gathered the congregacion together, they rehearsed all that God had done by them, and how he had opened the doore of fayth vnto the Gentiles. And there they abode long time with the disciples.

Wherfore when they were retourned thither, as men accoumptable for theyr doynges, they called together the congregacion of the faythfull, and opened vnto them all suche thinges as it had pleased god to worke by them, shewing them that the fauoure of god had furthered their endeuour, and how he had geuen occasion to call the Gentiles to the fayth, by whiche they myght obtaine saluacion without the obseruing or keping of the heauy & burdenous commaundementes of the lawe.

The

The texte.

¶ And certayn men whiche came downe, taught the brethren: except ye be circumcised after the maner of Moses law, ye cannot be saued. So whan there was arisen a dissencion and disputing not a litell vnto Paule and Barnabas against them, they determined that Paule and Barnabas, and certayne other of them, shoulde goe vp to Jerusalem vnto the apostles and elders about this question.

PAule and Barnabas continued a long space at Antioche with the disciples, because that in so noble a Cytie as that was, a great multitude of faythfull were gathered together of sundry sortes of men, whiche daily encreased more and more. And the apostles were glad to tarry longer there where the greatter increase of faythfull men was, because the inhabitours of Hierusalem, and of that parte of Syria, whiche is properly named Jewry, dyd more sticke to Moses lawe, than any other: forsomuche as they were lesse conuersaunte with the Gentiles: and because that they dwellyng more neter the temple, woulde not permyt the Gentiles to be partakers of the ghospell, vnlesse they woulde kepe the lawe, whiche they dyd not yet perceyue shoulde bee abrogate, as concerninge the shadowes, figures, and ceremonies, after the true lyghte was once come. Of this sorte were circumsicion, vacacion, and forbearyng from worke on the Sabboth day, choyce of meates, holy dayes, diuersities and differences betwene one sorte of men and an other, in garmentes, bowes, fastinges, eschewing the eating of suche beastes as dyed by themselues: whiche thinges all that grosse people were commaunded to kepe for a season, yt they might accustome themselues to obey Gods commaundemente, vntyll that the true lyght dyd appeare throughe the ghospell, and to it shadowes shoulde geue place.

Wherfore suche as vnderstoode not the lawe to bee spirituall, affirmed that that whiche was commaunded and appoynted by god, and lefte to them of their fathers, and obserued or duely kept of their auncestry, so many hundred yeares ought to continue for euer. This opinion in them proceded not of malice but rather of a superstitious fauour to the lawe, whiche, whyles they endeuoured to kepe it, they cleane ouerthrewe. For Paule at the first time beyng prouoked with lyke zele, persecuted the christen men. And so whan as the rumour and brute of those thinges which wer doen at Antioche (from whence Paule and Barnabas of a common consente, toke their iourney towardes Cyprus, and thence to Pamphilia, and had openly without respect of any person preached the ghospell, both to the Jewes, to the Prosilites, and also to the Gentiles, and had not willed them to obserue or kepe any parte of the lawe) had bene spred as far as Hierusalem, certaine came from Jewry to Antioche, teaching a new doctrine disagreeyng from that, that Paule and Barnabas had taught. For they sayde to those of the Gentiles that were turned to the faith: Except ye bee circumcised accordyng to the rule appointed by Moses lawe, ye can not bee saued. This was the beginnyng of dyssencion betwene those that stucke to the litteral sence of the lawe, and the other that folowed the pure and spyrituall lybertye of the ghospell, whiche stryfe and dyssencion will still euermore continue among christen menne also. And to none other ende did god suffer this same stryfe to aryse vp, but that all suche as were

were the disciples of Christe, myghte the better perceiue, howe pernicious a thing relygion is, that is wholy founded vpon ceremonyes. But whan as Paule and Barnabas, lyke valiaũt defendoures of the libertie of the gospel, had ernestly resisted their doctrine, whiche outwardly semed to be godly, but in very dede was very ful of mischiefe, there arose a great variaunce, whyles that the apostles strongly defended the puritie of the doctrine of the ghospell, whiche is spirituall, by testimonies of the prophetes, againste thos, that superstitiously defended the lawe, and they on the other side beyng affectionate to the law that they had receyued of theyr forefathers, went about to bryng the Gentiles, vnder the same yoke, not perceiuyng in the meane season what slaunder and reproche it was to Christe, whose grace they thought lacked assistence of the lawe. For it was lawful for him, that made the law, to abrogate and abolyshe the same. Howbeit he doeth not abrogate the law that perfourmeth it. This sedicion was more hurtful to the ghospell, than the crueltie of Herode, or any other prince, because it stroue against the true relygion, vnder a false and cloked pretence of godlynes. Wherfore lest that this mischeuious dyscorde shoulde increase, it was thought expedient by the congregacion of the disciples, that Paule and Barnabas, and certaine other of the same sorte, shoulde take their iourney to Hierusalem to Peter and the other apostles and prestes, whiche did than rule the churche of Hierusalem, that this question, or controuersie that was arisen, myghte bee decysed by theyr cunning and knowledge. For hitherto the chiefe autozitie remayned there, where the doctrine of the ghospell firste sprong vp, & the same autozitie remayned emong them, that firste were sent abrode by Jesus Christe to preache.

They deteremyned that Paule and Barnabas, &c.

And after they were brought on their way by the congregacion, they passed ouer Phenice & Samaria, declaring the conuersacion of the Gentiles, and they brought great ioy vnto all the brethren.

The texte.

Than Paule and Barnabas toke their iourney, and a great multitude of disciples honorably brought them on their waye, and as they passed by Phenice and Samaria, they shewed in euery place howe the Gentiles were conuerted to the faythe: so sure were these apostles that they had preached well, that they feared not openly, and of theyr owne accorde to rehearse the same: neyther wente they to Hierusalem to learne of the apostles, whether they had dooen well before tyme or not, but that the troublous commocion, and disquieting of the weaker sorte, mighte be layed downe and appeased by the autozitie of the elders. And as many as were conuerted to the faythe in those partes, did not onely not reyse sedicion as the Jewes had doen, but reioyced also wonderfully.

¶ And whan they were come vnto Jerusalem, they were receiued of the congregacion, and of the apostles and elders, and they declared al thinges that God had doen by them.

The texte.

But whan Paule and Barnabas and their other companions were come to Hierusalem, they were iently receiued of the congregacion whiche was there, and lykewise of the apostles, and seniours, vnto whome beyng assembled together, they shewed all thinges, that God had wrought by them emõg the Gentiles.

¶ Then arose vp certain of the secte of the Pharisees, which did beleue, saying that it was nedefull to circumcyse them, and to commaunde them to kepe the lawe of Moyses. And than the apostles and elders came together, to reason of this matter.

The texte.

And wheras the more parte of the multitude approued their doynges, there arose certaine of the Phariseis secte, that had been conuerted to the faythe: whiche were in this opinion, that they thoughte that man coulde not obtayne saluacion by grace and fauour throughe the gholpell, vnlesse he kept the lawe. And therefore earnestlye reloned that no Gentiles ought to be made partakers of the gholpell, vnlesse they woulde before take vpon them the yoke of Moles lawe, whiche thing the Gentyles exceedyngly abhorred. But the Phariseis woulde be seen more earnest folowers of the lawe than others were. And therefore they, as doctours of the lawe, affirmed that thole Gentyles, that were receyued to the faythe, ought to bee circumcised and that a streyght commaundement ought to bee geuen vnto them that they ſhoulde kepe Moles lawe, not vnderſtanding þ none brake the law more then they as sticked so muche to the letter, and not to the meaning of the law. And what in this matter ettsones diſſencion was moued (see howe perillous a thynge and how calye to set men together by the eares superſticion is) the Apostles and elders assembled together, to thentent that they might conſulte and deuyſe what was beſt to bee doen in this matter. For they beyng muche deſyrous of their mayſters auauncement, and to wynne moe vnto him, feared leſte that many of the Gentyles myndes woulde be alienated and turned awaye from Chriſte, because they coulde not abyde the lawe. And againe, they thoughte it not expedient to geue a iuſte cause to the Iewes to forſake the gholpell, as thoughe it were dyſagreeyng from the holye lawe, forasmuche as they were ſo earneſtlye rooted in the lawe, whyche they had receiued of theyr forefathers, and had at that tyme in great reuerence, that they mighte not ſodainly be plucked from it.

Then arose vp certayne of the ſecte of the Phariſeis.

And when there was muche diſputing, Peter arose vp, and laide vnto them: ye menne and brethren, ye knowe how that a good while ago, God did chooſe emōg vs, that þ Gentiles by my mouth ſhould heare þ word of the golpel, and beleue. And god which knoweth the hertes, bare them witneſſe, and gaue vnto them the holy ghoſt, euen as he did vnto vs: and put no difference betwene vs and them, ieyng that with faith he purified their hertes. Now therefore, why tempte ye god, to put on the diſciples neckes the yoke which neither our fathers, nor we are able to beare? But we beleue, that throughe the grace of þ lorde Jeſu Chriſt, we ſhalbe ſaued, as they do. Than all the multitude was pleaſed, and gaue audience to Barnabas and Paule, whiche tolde what ſygnes and wunders God had ſhewed emong the Gentiles by them.

The texte.

Wherefore bothe parties beyng in earneſt diſputacion and reaſonyng, and bothe parties allegyng teſtimonies out of ſcriptures, and groundyng theyr argumentes vpon theſame, Peter arose vp and ſpake vnto them in this wiſe. Brethren, wherefore call ye this matter into controuerſy, or diſputacion as though it were doubtfull, and as whe ſayth, that it were in mannes arbitrement to allowe or diſſallowe that thing, that god hath already allowed. Your ſelues do knowe that fewe yeares ſince it chaunced me to haue the practyſe of ſuche a lyke thing in Jewry, as ye finde fault withal emong all the Gentiles nowe. For whan ye likewyſe grutched that Cornelius a his houſeholde were Chriſtened, I ſhewed vnto you all the whole matter, howe that I toke my iourney to Ceſarea, not of myne owne heade, but by the commaundement of God, to preache his gholpel to the Gentiles alſo, that they throughe faythe in hym, mighte obteyne ſaluacion. And where as they, that hearde me thus preache the golpell, were vncircumciſed, and free without bondage of Moles law, yet neuertheleſſe god, (who eſteemeth not man of his apparel or outward furniture, but of the inwarde affeccion of his herte, whiche he alone doeth

knowe:) gaue bs manyfest tokens that he approued they? fayethe, forasmuche as he, whiles they harkened vnto bs, powred on them his holy ghoste, yea so plentifully, that they spake diuerse languages, as well as we, and that also before they were christened, so that he put no difference, as concernynge the gracious fauour that cummeth by the gospell, betwene them whiche were not circumcised, and bs that are Iewes.

For their hertes he clensed through fayth, playnely declaring to bs that thys fauour doeth not consist in the power of the lawe to geue it vnto men, but in fayth, whiche maketh man acceptable in the syght of God. For God geueth not his holy spirite to the vncleane. And they had nothing els but cue a playne beliefe, whan the holy ghost came downe vpon them. Wherefore nowe seeyng that God hath expressed his mynde, and will, that the Gentiles shoulde bee receyued to the gholpell, and shoulde bee partakers therof through onely faith without the burden of the lawe, why than doue ye prouoke and tempte God, whiles that contrary to his will, ye go about to lay vpon the disciples neckes this so heauy a yoke of the lawe, whiche they were neuer hitherto vled vnto: and the whiche neyther our forefathers, nor yet we oure selues that wet bozne vnder the lawe, coulde euer bee able to beare? For whyche of bs all euer kepte the lawe as it oughte to bee kepte? Wherefore there remayneth no hope for bs to attayne vnto saluacion by keppnge of the lawe, but we truste to bee saued by the grace of oure Lozde Iesus Christe, beeyng in this behalfe, nothynge better then the Gentiles, vnto whome he willed thys gyft to bee freely communicate, and parted as he freely gaue it vnto bs also. By these woozdes of Peter, the contencious disputacion betwene the Pharisees, and those that were of opinion contrarye, was ceassed. And so afterwarde the multitude quietly harde Barnabas and Paule, shewing by howe sondrye myracles, and woonders, whiche had by their handes bene wroughte amonge the Gentiles, God had witnessed that his will was, that the Gentyles shoulde bee made partakers of the gholpell, without kepeynge of the heauy burden of the lawe, accozdyng as he had declared his mynde beefore to Peter, whan he was preachyng Christe in Cornelius house, by sendyng downe the holy goste vpon them.

But we beleue.&c.

¶ And when they helde their peace, Iames answered, saying: Men and brethren, herken vnto me. Simeon tolde how god at the beginning did visit þ Gentiles, to receiue of them a people in his name. And to this dooe agree the woordes of the propheres, as it is written. After this I wil returne, and will buylde vp agayne the Tabernacle of Dauid whiche is fallen downe, and that whiche is fallen in decaye of it, wil I build again, I I wil set it vp, that the residue of men myght seke after the lozde, and also the Gentiles, vpon whome my name is named (saith the lozd) which doeth all these thinges, knowe vnto god are all these his woorkes fro the beginning of the world. Wherefore my sentence is þ we trouble not them which from among the Gentiles, are turned to God: But that we write vnto them that they abstayn themselues from filthynes of ymages, and from fornication, and from strangled, and from bloode. For Moses of olde tyme hathe in euery cite them that preache him in the synagoges, whan he is read euery Sabboth day. She texte.

Whan they had ended their communication, Iames whiche otherwyse was called Iames the iust, or Iames the good, and was commonlye named the brother of our lozde, to whom the apostles had than cõmitted chiefe autozitie, arose, and approued their sayinges, in this wise: Brethren, for asmuche as ye haue quietly heard the other that spake vnto you, I pray you heare me also, whiles

whiles that I shew you my conceite, what I thinke best to bee doen in this matter. Symon Peter declared euen now that thynge whiche all we knowe to be very true, how that first it pleased god, whiche had great pitie vpon mankynde, seeyng in what distresse and extremitie of peryll and daunger to be lost the Gentyles were, and how they were all gyuen to worshyppynge of idols, to chose hym a people euen of those also, that semed to bee none of his people, a people that shoulde be well accepted with him, and call on his name, as wel as we. And that same thynge whiche God begon by Peter, he hath enlarged by Paule and Barnabas. And what we heard was doen by them, the same long sence was prophecied and shewed afore by the prophetes that it shoulde come to passe: And amonge the reste of the sayde prophetes, Amos speaketh in the person of god, in this wyse: After this wyll I returne, and repayre the tabernacle of Dauid, that is fallen in decaye, and I wyll buylde vp againe his ruines, and falles, and set them eftsoons vp, that all mey whiche are on lyue shall seke the lorde, and all gentiles that haue taken my name on them (sayeth the lorde) that doe accomplyshe these thinges. Whatsoeuer promyse god maketh he wyll vndoubtedly performe. For before the creacion of the worlde, he had appoynted, what he would doe from time to tyme. And whatsoeuer he hath ordeyned, muste nedes bee wondrefully wel doen. Nowe therefore seeing that we perceyue that it is come to passe, whiche he promysed, I thinke it not expedyent to resist the wyll of God nor to speake ought againste them that of heathen, are become worshyppers of the true god: neyther yet to charge them with the obseruing of the lawe, forasmuche as faith through the gospel, is sufficient for the saluacion of all men. But let them onely haue this monicion, that for their sakes, whiche be weake in faythe, and can not yet bee perswaded that an Idoll is of no pryce, and that there is no difference betwene the fleashe that is sacrificed to Idolles, and any other fleashe that is solde in the market: and because of suche persons likewise as thinke whordome to be none offence, forasmuche as it is commonlye vsed and permitted without any punyshment appoynted by mans lawe, they abstayne from fylthinesse of Idolles: that is to say, that they neyther sacrifice to them, nor eate of that whiche is sacrificed, and that also they abstayne from whordome.

Symon told how god &c,

Againe because of certaine Jewes that be somewhat superstitious, and can not yet be perswaded, that all thinges are pure and clene vnto them that bee pure and clene theyr selues, let them abstayne from strangled beastes, and from bloude, not because these thinges pertaine any whit to the healthe of the soule, but because that charitie so prouoketh vs to doe, that for a tyme we beare with certayne of our brethren, whiche be weake, vntyll suche tyme that they maye attayne to more perfeccion, and in the meane time let euery manne beare one with an other, and so nourysshe concorde betwene you, doynge eche for other as louing brethren.

Neyther nede the Jewes to feare lest Moyses shoulde bee abrogate, or decay, for he hath certaine, and hath had this many yeres, that speake of hym in the Synagoges, where he customably is read euery sabboth day.

The tenor.

¶ Than pleased it the Apostles and elders with the whole congregacion, to sende chosen men of theyr owne cumpany, to Antioche with Paule and Barnabas. They sent Judas (whose syrname was Barsabas) and Silas, whiche were chefe men among the brethren, and gaue them letters in their handes, after this maner.

Whan

Whan James had this sayde, and euery man had allowed his sayinges thapostles and semtours, and the whole congregacion, thought it expediente, that certayne shoulde be chosen oute of that noumbre, to goe wyth Paule and Barnabas to Antioche. And so they chose a couple that were knowen to be men of good credite, thone was Judas, whiche for hys godlye behauioure was otherwyse called by synname the Juste, and Silas, which both were accoumpted to bee of moste vpright liuyng among all thother brethren. ¶ To these they gaue certayne messages to doe, and deliuered them an epistle to carye, the tenour whereof was this.

¶ The Apostles, and elders and brethren, sende gretynges vnto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioche, Siria, & Cilicia. For asmuche as we haue beard, that certaine whiche departed fro vs, haue troubled you with wordes, & encumbred your mindes, saiynge: ye must be circumcised, & kepe the law. To whom we gaue no such cõmaundement. We therfore thought it good, whs we were cum together with our accorde, to sende chosen men vnto you, with our welbeloued Barnabas & Paul, beyng men that haue ieoparded theyr liues for the name of our lorde Jesus Christ: we haue sent therefore Judas & Silas which shal also tell you the same thynges by mouth. For it semed good to ꝑ holy goost and to vs, to charge you with no moze then these necessarie thinges: that is to say, that ye abstayne from thynges offered to ymages, & fro bloud, and from strangled, & from fornication. From which if ye kepe your selues, ye shall do well. So fare ye well. The texte.

The Apostles and elders with the other brethren also, whiche of Jewes are becum christen men, sende gretyng vnto those of the Gentiles, whiche are conuerted to Christe, and are nowe abydyng in Antioche, Siria and Cilicia. Forasmuche as we vnderstande, that certayne of the Jewes which came from hence, as though they had bene sent of vs, haue troubled you, whereas before they cummyng, ye were quiet, and continued in vnitie together, lyuyng after the trade of ghospell, and forasmuche as the sayde persones so cummynge to you, haue peruerted your myndes with theyr newe doctrine, in that they wylled you to be circumcised and to kepe the lawe, where as we gaue them no such thyng in commission: we haue now thought good and expedient by the assemblye of the whole conuocacion, that certaine amongest vs purposely chosen, shoulde be sent vnto you, with Paule and Barnabas, whome we, not without good cause, bode fauour and greatly tendre, forasmuche as they haue auentured theyr lyues for the settyng furthe of the name of our Lorde Jesus Christe. Wherfore we haue sent Judas & Silas, men who we know to bee very godlye & faythfull, by whose reporte, ye maye certaynlye haue knowledge of those thynges that we wryte. The whole summe wherof is this that followeth: It hath pleased the holy ghoste, and through his mocion vs all with one consent, not to burden you with any moze, then wyth these thinges which we thoughte very necessarye to be obserued, that is to saye, fyrste that ye abstayne frome that that is sacrificed to Idolles, leste that yf ye should eate of it, ye myght seme to fauoure the same superstition, whiche ye haue once renounced and forsaken. Secondly that ye eate no beastes bloude, or any beast that is strangled, which are vnlawfull meates and forbydden by the lawe. Fynally, that ye abstayne from whoredome, whiche the Gentiles supposed to be lawfull. If ye abstayne from these thynges, ye shall do well. And thus fare ye well. The texte.

Whan they therfore were departed, they came to Antioche, and gathered the multitude together, & deliuered the epistle. Which whan they had red: they reioyced of the consolacion. And Judas & Silas beyng Prophetes, exhorted the brethren with much preachynge and strengthened them. And after they had tarried there a space, they were lette go in peace of the brethrē vnto the Apostles. Notwithstandyng it pleased Sylas, to abyde there still, but Judas departed alone to Hierusalem: Paule and Barnabas continued in Antioche, teachyng and preachyng the worde of the Lorde with other manye.

After this done, they were dimissed with the letters and message: & whan they came to Antioche, they delyuered the letters to the congregacion. Which, whan they were in audience of them al rehearsed, the whole multitude reioysed with great comforte, because the Apostles and elders, and commons of Hierusalem, had vouchesafed by theyr authoritie to stape theym in that opinion, whiche they had already conceyued in theyr myndes. And than Judas and Sylas hauyng the gyfte of expoundyng scriptures, satisfyed euerye man in those thynges that were not namelye expressed in the letters, accordyng to the commission of the Apostles. And & large they exhorted the brethren and made them stedfaste in theyr mynde, wyllyng them to contynue in that that they had begonne. And whan they had tarryed there a good sorte of dayes, they were dimissed of the brethren in peace, and were permitted to returne vnto theym that hadde sente theym. And forasmuche as Sylas thought it best to tarrye there, Judas returned alone to Hierusalem. In the meane space Paule also and Barnabas remayned at Antioche, teaching indifferentlye bothe Jewes and also Gentiles, preaching saluacion vnto euery manne to be obteyned, yf they wouldē beleue the Gospell, that is to saye, the worde of God.

The texte.

¶ But after a certayne space, Paule sayde vnto Barnabas: Let vs go agayne, and visite our brethren in euery cite where we haue shewed the worde of ꝑ Lord, and see how they do. And Barnabas gaue counsel to take with the John, whose surname was Marke. But Paule would not take him vnto theyr cōpany, which departed frō the at Pamphylia and went not w the to the worke. And the contencion was so sharpe betwene them, that they departed alonder one from another, and so Barnabas tooke Marke & sailed vnto Cipres. And Paule chose Silas, and departed, beyng cōmitted of the brethren vnto the grace of god. And he went through Syria and Cilicia, stablyshyng the congregacions. The came he to Derba & to Listra, cōmaunding them to kepe the preceptes of the apostles & elders.

But Paule woulde not take hym vnto theyr compe. &c.

And after a good space, Paule became carefull for the disciples, that he hadde lefte at Cypres, and in Pamphilia. Than he sayde vnto his cumpanion Barnabas: Let vs go visitte our brethren that be abyode in all cities, whereas we haue preached the woorde of God, and see how they do. Barnabas allowed hys sayinges, but hys mynde was to haue John, whiche otherwyse was called Marke, to go with them, whom they before had brought out with them whan they toke theyr iourney thytherwardes. In whiche matter Paule dissented or disagreed from hym, thynkyng hym not mete to be receyued in parte of that businesse, keepyng that he before tyme of hys owne accorde, had forsaken them before they had finished that businesse, whiche they had taken in hande, and had sayled backe from Pamphilia to Antioche. And they were so earnestle in disputing or reasonyng this matter, that where as none wouldē gyue place to other, one departed from the cumpany of the other. Not because that anye grenous displeasure was arysen betwene so greate apostles, but because that both contended to bryng to passe that they thought expedient for setting furth the Gospell. And we haue here example lefte vs, not strayght wayes to esteme curill, whatsoeuer disagreeth with our opinion. It is no matter to be of a dyuerse opinion, so that mennes myndes do agree in furtheryng the ghospell.

And god also prouyded this, that by the dissencion of the Apostles, whan two chiefe capitaynes wer disseuered, the ghospell should spreade more at large, then yf they yt they had continued together in one companye, as they had done before. And then Barnabas taking Marke with him sailed into Cyprus whiche was hys natiue countrey.

And so Barnabas toke Marke, and sailed to Cyprus.

And Paule takyng to hym Silas, (whiche, as god wouldе, had remayned at Antioche, euen as it had bene for the nones and of a purpose, that Paule shoulde not be destitute of a sad man to beare him cumpanye, and a manne that was in good estimacion, beyng dimissed of the brethren, and committed to the grace of god,) toke his iourney whither euer he had any token of hope, that the gospel should haue increase. So he went ouer to Syria, and Cilicia, wheras he hymselfe was borne, and ecchewyng stablychinge the cumpanyes of suche disciples, as he before had gotten there, and encreasyng also the number of them, as his purpose before was, cōmaunded them to kepe those thinges that the apostles, and elders had decreed at Hierusalem, as concerning eschewinge the cūpany of such as were worshyppers of Idolles, and eschewyng whoredome, strangled beastes, and bloud, and that they were none otherwyse bound to kepe Moses lawe. Whan all these thinges were done in Cilicia he returned againe to Derba, and after to Lystres.

The.xvi. Chapter.

The texte.

¶ And beholde, a certaine disciple was there, named Timotheus, a womans sonne which was a Jewesse, and beleued: but his father was a Greke. Of whom reported well, of the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium. Hym wouldе Paule, that he should goo forth with him, and tooke, & circumcised him, because of the Jewes whiche were in those quarters. For they all knewe, that his father was a Greke.

And beholde there was a certaine disciple, whose name agreed with his dedes, and was called Timothie, as a man wouldе saye, in estimacion with God, who was borne of Parentes, that were of sondry sectes. For his mother beyng nowe a widowe, was a Jewe borne, and had of late bene conuerted from the faythe and peruerse beliefe of the Jewes, vnto the true faith of Christe. And his father was a gentile. This Timothie for hys vertuous dispolicion, and lyuing, was muche spoken of among all the brethren that were at Lystres, and also at Iconium. And so Paule desiring nothyng more than by all meanes dayly to enlarge the boundes of the gospell, searched out in euery corner, suche as might serue hys turne, euen as ambicious kinges are accustomed to do, whiche beyng wholy geuen to enlarge their dominions, care for nothynge more, then to get mete capitaynes, and rulers, to whome they may commit their affaires. But it is not sufficient for him that is captayne, or guyded in matters of the ghospell, to haue meane qualities, nor yet to be of an vpright behauioure, but he muste haue commendacion of all good men, leste that an euil name going on him, thoughe it be false, may hurte the furthering of the gospel. Wherefore Paule was desyrous to haue Timothie to beare him cumpany in his tournies, because he was good, and esteemed also of all good men, to bee good and vertuous. And whan he had obteined hym, to goyne with hym, he circumcised him, not because he thoughe he myghe

Of whome reported wel, the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

therby obteyne saluacion, whiche onely fayth coulde doe, but leste the Jewes shoulde make any commocion, of whome there was no small noumber in those partes, he vouchesaued rather to suffer Timothie to lese a lytle piece of thinne, (which yf he had styll kepte, he had not bene the better, nor yet the worse for lacke of it) then by occasion thereof, to turne awaye the Jewes myndes from the gospell, whose stubbornesse he knewe well enough. The Gentiles were free from the burden of the lawe, by the decree that the apostles had made at Jerusalem Paule beeyng present: And circumcision was a profession made to obserue the lawe, and as a token therof. But the Jewes were not yet openlye deliuered from the yoke of the lawe, whiche ought by litle and lytle to be abolished. Wherfore seeyng that it was euident by al tokens, that Timotheus mother was a Jewe borne, and his father a paynym, by occasion whereof he had not been hytherto circumcised, Paule vpright well perceyued that the Jewes would make sedicion yf they myght haue neuer so lytle a cause, and specially yf Timothie, whiche was halfe a Jewe borne, were not onely made partaker of the gospell without circumcision, but also called to the office of a preacher. Wherfore Paule in those dayes did beare so muche with theym, hauyng euer respecte only to further the gospell, and to kepe men in quietnes, whiche had professed Christ the authour of all true peace.

For they all knewe yͤ his father was a Greke.

The texte.

As they went through the cities, they deliuered them the decrees for to kepe, that were ordeyned of the apostles & elders, which were at Hierusalem. And so wer the congregacions stablished in the fayth, and encreased in number dayly.

And not only thus did he, but whatsoeuer cities they wer that he wente by, he commaunded those that of heathen wer becum christen, to kepe those thynges that had bene decreed by the apostles, and elders at Hierusalem: for the whyche purpose Judas, and Sylas, had been sente before to Antioche, leste the Jewes should fynde any faulte therwith. And god furthered Paule in all hys businesse. For ỹ congregacions of the disciples wer both establysshed in the fayth of the gospel, and dayly also augmẽted, many persons beyng day by day conuerted to the fayth.

The texte.

When they had gon throughout Phrigia, and the countreye of Galacia, and wer forbydden of the holy ghost to preache the word in Asia, they came to Mysia, & sought to go into Bithinia. But the spirit suffred them not. But when they had goen throughe Mysia, they came downe to Troada.

And whan they had trauayled ouer Phrygia, and Galacia, with greate profite in wynnyng many to the fayth, although they were but a grosse, and a rude people, and were muche desyrous to take their iourneye towardes that parte whiche is properly called Asia, the holy ghoste woulde not suffer theym to preache the gospell there. And this the secrete and priuie wyl of God obeied they, forasmuche as it is not fitting that manne should withstand god. And so chaungeyng their entent, they turned to Mysia fast boordeyng vpon that countreye, which is properly called Asia. Thence they attempted to take their iourney towardes Bithinia, turnyng theym northwarde. For that was a noble prouince of the Romaynes, and therfore they hoped there to haue great auauntage. But the spirite of Jesus whiche was theyr guide, would not permit them to go thither, the cause why is vncertayne. Wherefore returnyng backe towarde the weste, whan they had goen ouer Mysia, they came to Troas. That same is a citie of Phrygia, stondyng nere vnto the sea, and otherwyse called Antigonia,

And

¶ And a vision appered to Paule in the nighte. There stoode a man of Macedonia & prayed hym saying: cum into Macedonia, and help vs. After he had sene this vision, immediately we prepared to go into Macedonia, beyng certified that ꝑ lord had called vs, to preache the gospel vnto them. Whe we loosed forth then from Troada, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Naples, & from thece to Philippos, which is ꝑ chief cetie in the partes of Macedonia, & a free cittie. We wer in that citie abyding certayne dayes. And on ꝑ Sabboth dayes we went out of ꝑ cittie besides a riuer where men were wont to pray. And we sate downe, & spake vnto the women which resorted thyther. The texte.

There had Paule a vision in his slepe, which shewed him whither he should goe: The vision was this. There stoode by hym a certayne man apparelled like a man of Macedonia, which entreated hym, and sayde: Cum to Macedonia, and helpe vs. And he that so appered, was the Aungell that is defendour of that countreye. And as soone as Paule had sene that vision, whiche happe once or twyse before bene forbydden by ꝑ holy goste to preache the ghospell, we that were his cumpanions, were very glad of it. For I also that wrote thys, was in that iourneye, and by and by we prouyded al thinges to take our iourney to Macedonia, beyng assured that God had called vs thyther to preache the gospell vnto theym, the whiche we doubted not, but God wolde prosper them wel. And in thys wyse leauyng Troas and sayling by Cherronesus, we arriued at Samothrace the yland, whiche is situate directly against Thracia. And from thence the nexte daye we came to Naples, whiche is a citie on the sea syde in the marches of Thracia and Macedonia. And from thence to the citie Philippos, whiche is a free citie, and the first that ye come vnto, whan ye go from Naples. In this citie abode we certayne dayes, lookynge for a good tyme and occasion to begynne the matter, wherfore we came. And on the Sabboth date we walked forth of the citie into a certayne place, without ꝑ gates that was nere to a riuer, where as a greate multitude of the people together, did customably resorte & assemble for to make their prayers. And as we were there syttyng, our talke was vnto certayne women that were come thyther, and we were preachyng vnto them Jesus of Nazareth.

¶ And a certayne woman (named Lydia) a seller of purple, of the citie of Thyatira, whiche worshipped God gaue vs audyence. Whose herte ye lorde opened, that she attended vnto the thynges, whiche Paule spake. When she was baptised, & her housholde, she besought vs, sayng: If ye thynke that I beleue on the lorde, cum into my house, and abyde there: And she constrayned vs. The texte.

Emonge theym was one whiche was verye deuout, whose name was Lidia, a seller of purple, and one that was borne in the citie Thyatira, whiche is a citie in Lidia. And emong all other that hearkened vnto Paules preachynge of Christe, god opened her herte diligently to heare those thynges that Paule taughte. And so after that she was Christened with all her housholde, she desyred Paule, and his companions, saying: If ye haue thought me one not vnworthye to be receyued by meane of baptisme, & your instruction, as a partaker of the ghospel, I pray you do so much also for me, as to cum into my house, and do it honour with youre presence, and take not me as an Ethnicke, as I was erewhiles, but take me as I am nowe, renewed by fayth of the gospell throughe your ministery. By these woordes she entreated the Apostles to tary as gestes at her house a good space. Here is an example for preachers, that they refuse not tenyplnesse profered vnto theym, by those that are newlye conuerted to Christe, yf it be readely and instauntly profered, lest they seme not to knowledge them for theyr . And on the other syde, they ought not to preache on them, vntyll they be desyred, lest they seeme to craue rewardes for preachyng the ghospell. But he that hathe receyued a spirituall or ghostely benefyte, ought earnestly to cause those that haue so doen for hym, to receyue al his handes againe corporall benefytes, yf they shall haue nede therof.

The texte. ¶ And it fortuned as we went to prayer, a certaine damsell possessed with a spirite that prophecied, met vs, which brought her master and maystres, muche auauntage with prophecying. The same folowed Paule and vs, and cryed, saying: these men are the seruauntes of the moste high God, whiche shewe vnto vs the waye of saluacion. And this dyd she many dayes. But Paule not contented, turned about, and sayde to the spirite: I commaunde the in the name of Jesus Christ that thou comme out of her. And he came out the same houre.

And it chaunced, as we wer goyng to prayer, as our custome was, that a certayne damsell met vs, whiche had in her the spirit of the deuyll Pithon, whiche by prophecying and tellyng thinges before hand, gotte greate auauntage to her master and maystresse. She ouertakyng and folowyng Paule and vs, cryed saying: These men are the seruauntes of the high god, whiche are cum to teache you the waye of saluacion. And where as she contynued thus dooyng many dayes, Paule beeynge displeased, lest that he should seme to knowlege that prayse whiche the wenche beeyng possessed with a deuell, attributed vnto hym, turned to her, and layed to the spirite: I commaunde the in the name of Jesus Christ that thou depart out of her. And the spirite lefte her immediately.

The texte. And when her maysters and maystres, sawe that the hope of their gaynes was gone, they preached Paule and Silas, and drewe them into the market place vnto the rewlers, and brought them to the officers, saying: These men trouble our citie, saying they are Jewes, and preache ordinaunces, whiche are not lawfull for vs to receiue, neyther to obserue seeyng that we are Romaynes. And the people raune against them, and the officers rente their clothes, and commaunded them to be beaten with roddes. And when they had beaten them sore, they caste them into prison, commaundynge the iayler of the prison to kepe them diligently. Whiche when he had receiued suche a commaundement, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feete fast in the stockes.

But the damsels maister and maystres, seyng that their vauntage was goen, toke Paul & Silas, & brought them violently into the market place before the chiefe of the citie, & there before the officers, accused them, saying: These men whiche are cum hyther from sum straunge countrey, do trouble all the whole cyttie: forasmuche as they beeyng Jewes borne, teache vs a newe religion, and teache vs newe ordinaunces, whiche is not lawfull for vs to receyue, seeyng that we lyue accordyng to the lawes of the Romaynes, whiche wyll not permitte ne suffer vs, neyther to receyue any straunge goddes, nor to practyse any newe kyndes of worshyppyng the goddes. Vpon these complayntes, the people there cruelly whom the verye name of a Jewe was in great hatred, clustryng all in a rage together, made assaulte vpon the Apostles. And the officers, to satysfye the people in their furye, cut a sondre their garmentes for wrathe, and commaunded them to be beaten with roddes. And beeyng not satysfyed with this punishement, whā they had laied many a sore stripe on them, they caste them in prison, commaundyng the iaylour to kepe them dyligently. The iaylour whan they had so streyghtly charged hym, for the better safegarde, layed their beneathe in a lower prison: and yet was not contented, but feete them faste in the stockes. This lucke had they at their first entryng to preach preache in Macedonie. Marke here that euermore either lucre, or ambition, or els superstition, letteth the furtheraunce of the ghospell. But whan the worlde moste cruelly rageth in persecucion of Christes members, than especially appereth comforte from heauen.

The texte.

¶ Mydnyght Paule and Silas prayed, and lauded God. And the pryssoners hearde them. And sodenly there was a great erth quake, so that the foundacion of the pryson was shaken, and immediately all the doores opened, and euery mannes bandes were loosed. When the keper of the pryson waked out of his slepe, and sawe the pryson doores open, he drewe out his swearde and wolde haue killed hymselfe, supposing that the pryssoners had bene fledde. But Paule cried with a loude voyce, saying: do thy selfe no harme, for we are all here.

All the doores opened & euery mans bandes were loosed.

About mydnyght Paule and Sylas, not pallyng for theyr whyppyng, nor yet that they were cast into pryson, prayed and song hymnes in the laude & prayse of God, thankyng hym, that he had vouchesaued to do theym beyng hys seruauntes, suche honour, as to lette theym suffer these iniuries for hys name. And dyuers, whiche were pryssoners there, heardе theym merily syngynge the prayse of God, and of hys sonne Jesus Christe, and meruayled, that they in suche aduersitie coulde be so merye. And sodaynely came a greate yearthe quake, insomuche that all the whole pryson was shaken euen the foundacyon and all, and all the doores of the pryson were open with the same, and all the pryssoners gyues and other lyke bondes were loosed. The keper, at the greate noyse and tumblyng that was made, awaked: and whan he had slaine fourth, and founde all the pryson doores wyde open, thynkyng vpon and verely imagynyng that the pryssoners were all gone, and hauyng in remembraunce the charge that he had of the officers, pulled out hys swearde and was aboute to kyll hymselfe, wyllyng rather to slaye hymselfe, then fyrste to suffer manye paynefull tormentes, and afterwarde at the hangmannes hande, whiche was executioner of the towne, to suffer death. But Paule whiche laye beneth in the darke, seyng hym about suche a dede, cryed out wyth a loude voyce, that although the man were astonied, yet he made hym hearken vnto hym, and sayde: Bewarе, holde thy handes, and hurt not thy selfe, for thou shalte haue no damage by vs. For we are all here, and not one of vs fled hence.

The texte.

¶ Than he called for a lyght, and sprang in, and came trembling vnto Paule, and fell downe at the feete of Paul and Silas, and brought them out, and sayd: Syrs what must I doe to be saued: And they sayd: Beleue on the lorde Jesus, and thou shalt be saued, and thy housholde. And they preached vnto hym the worde of the lorde, and to all that were in his house. And he toke them the same houre of the nyght, & washed their woundes, and was baptised, & all they of his houseolde streyght way. And whan he had brought them in to hys house, he set meate before them, and ioyed, that he with all hys houseolde, beleued on God.

When the keper heard these wordes, he came to himselfe againe, & commaũded lyght to be brought: and seyng it to be so, & that the thynge was not done by any crafte of man but by suꝑ diuine power: consyderyng also wyth hymselfe, howe that Paule had sene in the darke what he was about to do, and the cause therof, went downe into the lower pryson, and fell at Paules and Sylas feete. And regarding not the charge ỹ was geuen him by the officers, brought them forth of pryson, into a more commodious place, & sayed: Mayisters what must I do to be saued: Hys mynde was to exchaunge helth for helth. Hys entent was to saue theyr lynes and lykewyse he mynded to heare of theym howe he shoulde obteyne lyfe of his soule. Than they aunswered: Beleue in our lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saued with all thy houseolde. And there streyghte-wares he called theym all together, and the apostles preached vnto theym the doctrine of the ghospell. Thou mayest here see that no tyme, ne place is vnmete to preache or to heare the ghospel. For that same darke & stynkyng prison was as a churche to the apostles. They ceased not from syngyng hymnes thoughe it were mydnyght. By preachyng the gospel in prison a vauntage was gotten to Christe. The prison is here as a chapye to preache the gospell in. And furthwith the keper beyng newly instructed in the fayth, hastened to recompense or sumwhat to rewarde his instructour. For he anone had them aside, and washed cleane theyr woundes. The iaylour thought this to be hys duetie. And he hymselfe afterwarde with all his whole houseliolde, had the woundes of theyr soules washed cleane awaye. After this so doen, he led thē into his own house where he dwelled the daye tyme, and gaue them meate to refreshe theyr bodies.

For after baptisme nexte was the communion of the table. And the keper of the prison retopsed muche, that it had bene his chaunce to haue, in custodye suche prisoners, wherby both he and all the house had receiued the faith. These thynges were done in the myght.

The texte. ¶ And whan it was daye, the officers sente the minysters, saying: let those men go: The keper of the prison tolde this saying to Paule: The officers haue sent worde to loose you. Now therfore, gete you hence, & goen peace. Than saied Paule vnto them: they haue beaten vs openly vncondemned, for all that we are Romaines, & haue caste vs into prison, & now would they sende vs away pryuely? Nay verily, but let them cum themselues, and fet vs out. When the minysters told these wordes vnto the officers, they feared whē they heard that they were Romaynes, they came & besought them, and brought them out, and desyred them, to departe out of the citie.

Whan it was daye the officers more diligently hauinge the matter in communicacion, after they had weyed it well, sente the minysters to the keper, commaundyng hym to let Paule and Sylas departe at their owne lybertye. The keper heatyng thys tidinges, beyng glad as well for his owne parte, as for the apostles sakes, brought this woorde to Paule, that the officers had ipcenced them to go at lybertie. Wherfore, (sayth the keper,) seyng it hath so well chaunced, go ye in goddes blessyng. But Paule of an earnestc mynde, to make both his innocencie the better knowen, and to fynde occasion also to saue many, made answer vnto the messengers in this wise: For asmuche as they beatte themselues to be Cytezens of Rome, by theyr lawes it is forbidden to punysse any man, before he be hearde to pleade his cause, and lawfully conuicted of the same, this notwithstandynge they haue openly beaten vs beyng Romaynes before we pleaded our matter, or were lawfully conuicted: and as though thys had been to lytle, they caste vs also, after that we had been sore beaten, into prison. Nowe for their owne sauegarde, that they maye seme to haue done nothyng but that theyr office woulde beare them in, and that it male be thoughte that we were gilty, they woulde haue vs pryuily to cōuey our selues hence to ỹ intent, that men myght suppose that we brake prison and fled awaye. No, we will not so do, but let them cum themselues, and delyuer vs hence by the same ryght, that they cast vs in. The minysters told to the officers, what Paule had saied.

May verily but let them cume themselues and fet vs out.

Whe heatyng that they were citizens of Rome, came themselues to Paul, and Silas, and desired them to pardone them, in that they had doen agaynst the the custome of the Romayne lawes, beeyng compelled by the commocion of the people, and byyngyng them honourablye out of the keepers house, they desyred them, leste the people shoulde make any busynesse, to departe from theyr citie named Philippos.

The texte. And they went out of the pryson and entred into the house of Lydia, and whan they had sene the brethren, they comforted them, and so departed.

The Apostles were contente to accomplyshe their requeste, and whan they were out of pryson, they went into the house of Lydia, where they had been fyrst hosted, which Lydia with all her whole housholde, had before receyued the doctryne of the ghospell. And whan they had seen her, and the rest of ꝑ brethre, they comforted them, rehearsyng vnto them what had chaunced in the nyghte whiles they were in pryson, exhortyng them to continue in that they had begon. This doen, they lefte Philippos the citie, and went another waye.

The.xvii.Chapter.

The texte. As they made theyr iourney through Amphipolis, and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagoge of ꝑ Iewes. And Paule as his maner was, went in vnto them, and three Sabboth daies declared out of the scriptures vnto them, opening and alleagyng, ꝑ Christ must nedes haue suffered, and aryse by agayne from death, & that thys Iesus was Christ, whom (sayed he) I preache vnto you. And some of them beleued, and came and cõpanyed with Paule and Silas, and of the deuoute Grekes a great multitude, and of the chiefe women, not a fewe.

And passyng by Amphipolis and Apollonia, both Cities of Macedonie, they came to Thessalonica, whiche is the chiefe and head Citie in Macedonie. Where (because it was a noble cytye) was a Synagoge of Iewes, and therfore hoped they to haue there great encrease. Wherefore Paule (as he customably vsed to do) entred with the multytude in to the Synagoge, & three sabboth dayes reasoned he with them, allegyng for his parte, Prophecies out of the scriptures, & expoundyng the harde meanynges of figures, citynge testimonies out of the lawe, and conferryng these sayinges together with the actes that were past, he shewed howe that it was the wyll of God, that Christ should in that wyse suffre for the worlde, and aryse agayne frõ death to lyfe. And forasmuche as all Prophecies that were spoken afore of Messias commyng, & all those sayinges that were shadowed vnder figures, did agree in Iesus of Nazareth, he affyrmeth in his teachinges that the Iewes should looke for none other Messias, but only the same that he preached vnto them, which was Christ. When Paule had reasoned this matter in the Synagoge, certayne of the Iewes beleued, & ioyned themselues with Paule and Silas, and besides these, a great number of the Gentyles that feared God, were conuerted to the faythe, and emong other, diuers worshypfull women of the chiefe of that citie.

The texte. But the Iewes whiche beleued not, had indignacion, and take vnto them euill men whiche were vagabounders: & gathered to them a company, & set all the Citie on a roare and made a saute vnto the house of Iason, & sought to bryng them out to the people. But when as they founde them not, they drue Iason, and certayne brethre vnto the heades of the cytie, cryeng: these that trouble the worlde, are come hyther also, whome Iason hath receiued priuily: And these all doo contrary to the decrees of Cesar, affyrmynge

another kyng, one Jesus. And they troubled the people, and the officers of the citie, whē they heard these thynges. And whan they were sufficiently aunswered of Jason, and of the others, they let them go.

On the other parte, certayne Jewes beeyng ouermuche wedded to Moyses lawe, whiche Paule sometyme had earnestly fauoured, beyng of a zele moued, and toppyng themselues with a certayne numbre of naughty bagaboundes, whom they had made of theyr parte: for of suche fellowes haue they that be authours of any commocion, nede of, and gatheryng to them a great compayne beſydes, repled vp the cytye. And seditiously commyng to the house of Jason, woulde haue brought Paule and Sylas furth before the people. But forasmuche as they entryng in to the house, founde not them that they sought for, they brought Jason hymselfe, and with hym certayne other disceples, before the gouernours of the cytye, cryeng alowde (for so had they before tyme letued Christe) and sayed: These felowes that alreadye haue troubled all the worlde, are nowe cumme hither lykewyse to trouble vs. And Jason knowyng them to be suche felowes, receyued them into his house.

But all those that goe about any suche matters, or lodge such as go about the same, doe agaynste Cesars actes, forasmuche as they saye, that there is an other kyng, beſydes Cesar. For they preache of one Jesus, that was a good whyles since, doen and napied vpon the crosse by Cesars deputie, because he affyrmed hymselfe to be kyng of the Jewes. Marke howe they here abuse the name and authoritie of Cesar, agaynste the gholpell. Whan the people and rewlers of the cytye hearde these woordes, they were muche moued therwyth, euen as Pylate before in lyke manier was moued agaynst Christ.

And whan they were sufficyently aunswered of Jason. &c.

For than cried the vnhappy Jewes: we haue none other kynge beſydes Cesar: and agayne: If thou let hym goe, thou arte not Cesars frende: and yet agayne: Wholoeuer maketh hymselfe a kyng, withstandeth Cesar. On the other parte, the true Jewes thus doe crye: We haue none other kyng but onely Jesus of Nazareth: and agayne, wholoeuer conformeth himselfe to folowe Cesar, is not Christes frende. For he onely is kynge ouer all the worlde. But after that Jason and the other brethren had alleaged a lawfull excuse, the officers let them goe.

The texte.

¶ And the brethren immediatly sent away Paule & Sylas by nyght, vnto Berea. Which whan they were cum thyther, they entred into the Synagoge of the Jewes. These were the noblest of byrthe emong them of Thessalonica, whiche receyued the word with all diligence of mynde, and serached the scripture dayly, whether those thynges were euen so. And many of them beleued, also of worshypfull women which were Gekes, and of men not a fewe. When the Jewes of Thessalonica had knowledge that the worde of god was preached of Paule at Berea, they came, and moued the people there.

But whan the brethren perceyued that throughe displeasure and malyce Paul and Sylas were lyke to be in daungier, they with spede, conueied them out preuely in the nyght season to Berea, whiche is a citie in Macedonia, not far from Pella, wheras Alexander the greate was borne. In thys wyse, the euangelicall captaynes flye, but so that they neuertheless fyght still. For as soone as they came to Berea, they entred into the Synagoge, nothyng afrayed for all so many seditions that the Jewes had rayſed agaynste them. But these were more gentyll, than the others that were at Thessalonica. For they receyued receyued the doctrine of the ghospell verap readely, euery dape searchyng the scriptures diligently, that they myght see howe thole thynges that they had learned by thapostles instruction, agreed with the prophecies, and figures of the lawe. And so were many of the Citizens of Berea, conuerted to the faythe, not Jewes onely, but also dyuerse worshipfull women that were Grekes borne, and a greate noumber of men besydes. But whan the Jewes that were at Thessalonica, whiche had made a commocyon there, heard that the ghospel was preached at Berea by Paule, whome they had dryuen from them, they tooke their iourneye thither, and as they before had doen, so ekstones they stirred by the multytude there also against the Apostles.

When the Jewes of Thessalonica had knowledge, that the woorde of god was preached of Paule at Berea.

And than immediatly the brethren sent awaie Paule to gooe to the sea syde: But Silas and Timotheus abode there styl. And they that guided Paule, brought hym vnto Athens, and receiued a commaundement vnto Silas and Timotheus, for to cumme to him with spede, and came theyr waye.

The texte.

And whan time the brethren perceyued that daungier was of the Apostles had taryed, they immediatly sent forthe Paule, whome they thoughte to be moste in daunger, to gooe & take the sea, whiche is not far from Berea. And Silas & Timothie remayned at Berea. Than the brethren that had brought Paule thither, taking theyr waye with him, brought hym as farre as Athens. There they left Paul, & returned to Berea, hauing message frō him to Silas and Timothie, þ they should folow after as sone as they might conueniently.

Whyles Paule wayted for them at Athens, his spirite was moued in him whan he sawe the citie geuen to worshipping of Ymages. Thus dysputed he in the Synagoge vnto the Jewes, & with þ deuout persones, & in the market daply with them þ came vnto hym by chaūce. Certaine Philosophers of the Epicures & of þ Stoickes, disputed with him.

The texte.

There Paule though he wer left alone & without companions, yet seeyng so noble a citie as that was and so full of learned men, wholy and vtterly geuen to worshipping of idols, waxed hote in spirite, in so muche that he coulde not abyde the cummyng of his felowes, but entred into the sinagoge, and ther disputed with the Jewes, and other deuout persons. And besydes that also, he reasoned in the market place with all that came vnto him, whether they were Jewes, or els Grekes. Among whome were some Philosophers, of Epicures secte, some Stoickes, betwene whō was great diuersitie of opinions. For thei that were of Epicures sect mesuring the felicitie of mā by pleasure, thinke that either there be no gods, or if there be any, that they nothing regarde the lyfe of man. The Stoickes besides other straung opinions, dooe sette and esteme the felicitie of man by the stedfast qualities of the soule, whiche felicitie they call vertue or honestie. These men disputed with Paule, as he had bene a Philosopher that were a begynner of some newe secte.

And some there were that saide: what will this babler saye? Others saide: he seemeth to be a tydynges bringer of newe deuyls, because he preached vnto them Jesus, and the resurrection. And they tooke hym and brought hym into the Sterte of Mars, saying: may we not knowe what this new doctrine whereof thou speakest, is? For thou bringest straunge tydynges to our eares. We would be knowe therfore, what these thinges meane. For all the Athenians & straungiers whiche were there, gaue them selues to nothing els, but either to tell or to heare some newe thing.

The texte.

But after that Paule had taught them the euangelycal Philosophie, whiche farre dysagreed from the Philosophers opinyons, some saide in mockage: What is it that this prateyng felowe saieth? For by this reprochefull worde spermologus, the Grekes meaned a iangler, and a foolyshe talker

He semeth to be a tydinges bringer of newe deuilles.

of vayne wordes, and a prattler: for the heauenly wisedome semed vnto them foolysshenesse. And others there were that sayde: He semeth to bryng in some newe kynde of gods, because that he preached vnto them that Jesus was the true sauiour, and the sonne of God, and that the dead in tyme to cum shoulde aryse agayne. For they of Athens, according as they had bene instructed of Plato, called the gods children gods, whome they supposed to haue bodyes whiche shoulde continue for euer. Wherefore, inasmuche as whiles they were in the market place, they had diuerse opinions of Paule, they thought it beste to leade him aside in to a strete, whiche is called Mars strete. The strete is a place in Athens of muche resorte of people, by reason that there they did sit on matters of lyfe and death in the nyght season. And that place was meete for that kynde of disputation, whiche proffered saluacion to them that beleued therein, and death to the vnfaythfull. For they sayde: Maye a manne learne of the what newe kynde of doctrine this is, that thou speakest of. For where as all kyndes of Philosophye are treated of amongeste vs, yet thou shewest vs newes, and such as we neuer hearde of yet: we are therefore desyrous to heare the more at large, to what ende these thinges maye growe, that thou speakest of, or what they meane. And for asmuche as that citie was namely emong all the cities of Greece, moste exercised in all kyndes of learnyng, and gyuen to eloquence, by occasion wherof, many resorted thyther out of all partes of the worlde, to be studentes there, bothe the citizens of Athens, and other straungers that wer continuing there, did nothyng els, but either harken for newes, or els tell some newes: and that more for their pleasure, then that they desyred by knowlege of matters, to be the better experte. But god that is desirouse of mannes healthe, as fyshers and hunters doe inuent all meanes to get their praye, so taketh euery man by occasyon of thole thynges, that he is moste delyted with all.

The strete.

Paul stode in the middes of Mars strete, and sayde: ye men of Athens, I perceiue that in all thynges ye are to superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld the maner how ye worshyp your goddes, I founde an alter wherin was written: vnto the vnknowen God. Whom ye than ignorauntly worshyp, him shewe I vnto you: God that made the world and all that are in it, seeyng that he is lorde of heauen and yearth, dwelleth not in temples made with handes, neyther is worshypped with mens handes, as though he neded of any thyng, seeyng he hymselfe geueth lyfe and breath to al men euery where, and hath made of one bloud all nations of men, for to dwel on al the face of the yearth. And hath appoynted before howe longe time, and also the endes of their inhabitacion, that they shoulde seke god, if they myght fele and fynde him, though he be not farre from euery one of vs. For in him we lyue, we moue, and we haue our being, as certaine of your own poetes sayd. For we are also his generacion. For asmuche than as we are the generacion of God, we ought not to thinke that the Godhed is lyke vnto golde, syluer, or stone, grauen by craffe or ymagination of man.

Wherefore Paule that knewe howe to behaue himselfe emonge all sortes of men, and to frame his eloquence to all mennes capacities, nowe beeyng in the myddes of Mars strete, as it were in a stage to playe his parte alone, hauing about hym a great multitude, spake vnto them in thys wyse: Ye men of Athens, although this citie flourysheth more the any other in learnyng & knowlege, yet I perceyue that ye, as concerning your trade in religion, are verye superstitious, where as true religion in dede, is the chief parte of Philosophye. For as I walked about, desirous to knowe the customes and ordre of your citie, marking thole thinges ye haue in honoure and do worshyp, emong

all other thynges, I espied a certayne alter, whiche in the title that was grauen on it, made mencion of an vnknowen God. Wherefore they are deceiued, that say that I bryng in newe and straunge goddes, but I rather preach him vnto you, yea euen the verye same vnknowen God whome ye worshyp, for it appeared by the title on the aulter, that ye knowe not what he is, so that you maye hereafter reuerently worshyp hym, whan ye know hym, whom ye haue hytherto as vnknowen, worshypped with superstition. Whiche God forasmuche as he is an infinite mynde, moste pure, present euery where, and yet after that sorte, that he is contayned in no one certeyne place, ought not to be beleued to dwell in temples of mannes handywarke, or in ymages made by any crafte of man: neither is he dewly worshipped with the sacrifice of beastes, as thoughe that eyther he lacked, or els were delited with any thyng that is doen by mannes handes, and cummeth of hys owne brayne. For where as he is infinite in hymselfe, and able to doe all thynges that shall please him beyng also moste blessed, and that naturally, so that he can neyther be hurted by anye malice of manne, nor yet be holpen by any seruice that manne can doe, yet for asmuche as he is pryncipally best, and moste bountifull and beneficial, he created and made thys worlde matuaylously for mannes cause: and ordeyned for his vse all thynges that are conteyned in the same.

Whome ye than ignorantly worshyp, him declare I vnto you.

God hath made the worlde and all that are in it. ¶.

Wherefore althoughe that he be the founder, lorde, and gouernour as well of heauen and yearthe, as of all thynges in theym contayned, yet of all these thynges, taketh he hymselfe no fruction, for because that he by reason of hys eternall felicitie, and blysse, hath no nede of any externall or outward goodnes to the augmentacion of hys perfectnesse, but thys worlde hath he lefte vs, as his worke to muse and maruayle at, that mortall menne lyuyng therin, myght perceyue by so wonderfull a woorke, the power, wysedome, and goodnesse, of the maker of it, and hauyng therby once knowlege of hym, shoulde loue hym, and with greate reuerence worshyp hym, by whole benefite they haue the fruicion of so many commodities.

Now yf he be aboue this frame of the worlde, and hathe nede of none of those thynges that he hathe made, howe muche lesse maye it bee thought that he is delyted with temples, with Jmages, or els with the sauoure of burned offerynges. But for asmuche as he is a substaunce without body, he ought to be worshipped with puritie of mynde: neither loketh he for the slaughter of oxen or sheepe, that endoweth all thynges with lyfe, and gyueth to all that breathe, both theyr lyfe and their breath. For he made all kyndes of beastes, and they liue al by him continuyng and multyplying euery one their owne kynde from tyme to tyme by generation. But all mankynde made he of one man, to haue the rewle ouer all these beastes, and to dwell in all partes of the worlde, and hathe lymitted and appointed euery man a determinate space to lyue, whiche no manne can for himselfe prolong: and hath lykewyse appoynted euery nacion certayne partes of the yearthe to inhabite, for they are deceyued, that suppose the world, whiche god himselfe made, not to be rewled by hym, but that eche thing is at all aduentures, and without any consideracyon, vnaduisedly brought forth, & for no purpose, where as in dede there is nothyng doen in the worlde, be it great or small, but it cummeth by the prouidence of him that created the worlde.

Keeping he himselfe geuerth lyfe & breath to all men euery where. ¶.

And because that the wytte of man cannot conceyue hym as he naturally is in dede, in dede, by reaſon of groſſenes of the body, he endowed menne with reaſon, that by one thinge they maye vnderſtande an other, that is to ſaye, thinges that cannot be ſeene by thoſe that are ſeene, and generall thynges by the particuler, eternall by thoſe that laſte but for a tyme: and ſuche thynges as by the mynde, reaſon, and ſpirite, onely maye be ymagined, by thoſe that be open to the ſenſes of the body, and ſet him in the myddes of all thinges, as in a ſtage to ſeeche out the creatore and maker of all thinges by meane of his creatures whiche maye eyther be ſeene, felte, or otherwyſe perceyued, by ſuche commodities as dooe enſue to manne therof: and that like as blind menne by feling, ſumtyme fynde that out, whiche they can not ſee, ſo they conſyderyng howe wonderfully all thinges were made, myght cumme to ſumme knowledge of god, whome to haue true knowlegt of, is the higheſt felycitie that manne can haue. And yet we ſhall not nede to ſeeke for god in forreyne thinges, for we may fynde hym in our ſelues, yf euery manne will looke on hymſelfe, and marke in hymſelfe the myghty wyſdome, and goodneſſe of his maker. For where as god hath ſhewed vnto vs certaine tokēs of his godhed, in the heauenly balles and circles aboue, and on the earth beneth in the ſea, and in all lyuing creatures on the yearthe, yet hath he wrought in none of theym more wonderfully than in manne.

But yf any man be of ſuch groſſe wyt and capacitie, that he cannot attayne to the knowlege of the mouyng of the ſtarres, in the ſkye aboue, or of the ebbyng and flowyng of the ſea, how water ſhoulde ryſe ſpryng, howe ryuers ſhoulde ſtyl euermore continue runnyng, and briefly the priuie and ſecrete cauſes of other lyke thinges, he nede not loke far, for he maye ſee god in euery man. For by hym all we dooe lyue, we moue, and we haue our beeyng, and there is none other that we are dettours vnto for that we bee any thyng at all, but only he, that created this worlde of nothyng: and his benefyte it is, and none others, that we haue lyfe, whiche we muſte ſone forgoe and leaue, yf he leaue vs: and we ought to thanke none other, that the members and partes of this lyuely body dothe eche of them his dutie, the eyes ſee, the legges goe, and the handes worke. It is curdent than that god is in euery one of vs, that he wooreketh in vs, as a worke man woulde by a toole, that he hymſelfe hath made. And man expreſſeth god, not onely as the wooke expreſſeth the wooreke man, but as the chylde doeth reſemble his father or mother, by a certaine lykeneſſe and ſymplytude of fauour or complexyon. For ſo doeth the holy ſcriptures teache vs, that God made Adam (whiche was the firſte manne, of whome all men came) a body of moyſte clay, wherein he ſhoulde be lyke vnto other beaſtes, but with his owne mouthe breathed he into the ſame yearthen Jmage, parte of his heauenly breathe, whereby we might more nere reſemble god our father. And forbecauſe the natures bee ſumwhat lyke, we ſhoulde more eaſyly attaine vnto the knowledge of hym: whiche propertie he gaue to none other creatures on yearthe lyuyng. Thinke not ye this thynge vnlyke to a thynge of trueth, for ſome of youre owne countrey menne that were poetes haue affirmed the ſame, that I alleged out of the ſcriptures, and emonge other, Aratus ſayeth the ſame in his wooreke called Phenomena, in halfe a verſe, in thys wyſe: We all cumme of hys lynage. It is no matter thoughe he ſpeake this of Jupiter, for in that, that he called Jupiter the chiefe and higheſt god, he thought hym withall to be the father of all lyuyng thynges, but eſpecially of menne.

For in him we lyue and we moue. &c

For we are alſo his generation.

Wherefore

Wherefore seeyng that we are of the lynage of God, by symyltude of our mynde, whiche he hathe geuen vs, we haue an eupl opinion of oure father, yf that where as we be accounted menne for that parte in vs, whiche we cannot see, (the whiche is reason,) we wyl thynke hym to be lyke an Imagе of golde, syluer, woode or stone grauen by wytte of manne. For what is a greater inconuenience, or more agaynste reason, then that manne, (who thoughe he be somewhat kynne to God hys heauenly father, yet for all that is nothyng lesse then God,) shoulde be hable to make any Imagе with hys handes, that can haue in it the power and vertue of God: Reason wolde that the same thynge whiche is wurshypped as God, shoulde be more excellent, then he that geueth wurshyppe vnto it. Nowe howe diuerse wayes doeth man passe an Imagе, whiche he doeth wurshyppe as it were god? First of al thys shape of his body, man hathe receyued of God, beslydes and furthermore dooeth he bzeath, he lyueth, he moueth, and worketh. Finally by agilitie and quickneſſe of the minde, he beareth in hym a certayne resemblaūce of god the father. But in an Imagе there is no suche matter. Wherefore yf it bee to goddes greate dishonour yf we wurshyp a mortall manne for god, howe muche more than doeth it disagre with the true honoure of God to wurshyppe an Imagе made of tymber, as it plased ỹ artificer to make him: of which tymber, yf he had bene so disposed, he myght haue made a benche, or a fourme to sit on, whiche thinge is not onelye nothyng lyke god, (who hath no body) but also, beslydes the outward shape of the body, hath nothyng lyke a manne, no, not one iote of that parte, whereby manne is lyke vnto god.

¶ And the tyme of this ignozaunce, God regarded not. But nowe byddeth all men euery where repent, because he hath appoynted a day, in the which he will iudge the worlde with rightwiſenes, by that man, by whō he had appoynted, and hath offered faith to all men, after that he had rayſed hym from death. The texte.

Whiche reprochefull iniury though it be haynous before God, yet he of his greate fauoure and loue that he beareth to man, hath not reuenged himſelfe, but hytherto hath wynked at mans ignozaunce, vntyll the tyme was cumme that he had determyned to open hymſelfe to all men, and to caſte cleane awaye all darke and blynde errours, which menne haue so long bene conuerſaunt in. Whiche tyme is now present, wherin he monitheth all mē to leaue their old errours, and turne to him. For hys wyl is that thoſe ỹ repent, shal haue forgiueneſſe, whiche they that wil be stubberne, shal not in time to cū, haue: for because he hath appoynted a daye, whan he will iudge the whole worlde, and that with a iuſte and streight iudgement, which no man shal escape. And therfore he sendeth his meſſangers to warne men, leſt any man myght pretende ygnozaunce in these thinges for his excuſe, & prokereth remyſſion of synne to them that wil repent, leſt any should say that god were not merciful. For both these purpoſes chose he Jeſus of Nazareth an excellent perſon, whom he sente into the worlde for this cauſe, that al men by his meanes, might be conuerted to wurshyp the true god: and hathe geuen him power to iudge the vnfaythfull, and such that will reſyſte thys doctrine. And this is he whome he promyſed by the mouthes of his prophetes many yeres paſt, that he shoulde cum to bee bothe a saluiour and also a iudge. And loke what he promiſed, he hath hitherto perfourmed be yp certainly. For he was so borne, so taught, euē so troubled with veraciō, and so slayne: and in concluſion, so arose he frome deathe to lyfe, as it was before

Because he hath appointed a daye, in the whiche he wyll iudge the worlde &c.

prophe-

prophecied that he shoulde. And there is no doubte, but that he will as surelye perfourme all other thinges that remayne behynde.

¶ Whan they heard of the resurrection from death, sum mocked, and other sayde: we will heare ꝑ agayne of this matter. And so Paul departed frō among thē: Howbeit certaine men cleued vnto him, and beleued: among ꝑ which was Dionisius a Senatour, & a woman named Damaris, and other with them.

The texte.

Whyles Paul spake these wordes, certayne that stoode by, gruping good eare to all other thynges that were spoken, whan they had hearde mencion made of arysyng from death to life, they mocked at it as an vnlyke thing and a thyng that were not to be beleued, because that no Philosopher had holden any suche opinion before, though there were summe, whiche sayed that the soules remayned on lyue after the death of the body, and sum other also which sayed that the soules entred out of one bodye into an other. But others that were not of so rashe a iudgement, sayed: We wyl heare the agayne an other tyme of this same matter. And in this maner Paule dimissed that company. Yet sum ther wer among them, that wer perswaded, and ioyned themselues with Paule: emong whom was Dionisius a Senatour which afterward was bishop at Athens, instituted by Paule, & a certayne woman whose name was Damatis, and besydes these dyuerse others.

The. xviii. Chapter.

After this Paule departed from Athens, and came to Corinthe, and found a certaine Iewe named Aquila, borne in Pontus, lately cū frō Italy wt his wife Priscilla (because that ꝑ Emperour Claudius had commaunded al ꝑ Iewes to depart frō Rome) and he drewe vnto them, because he was of the same craft, he abode with thē, & wrought: their craft was to make tentes. And he preached in ꝑ Synagoge euery Saboth daye, settyng forth in the meane whyle the name of the Lorde Iesus) and exhorted the Iewes and the Gentyles.

The texte.

When Paule had gotten thus muche gaynes (litle and slender thoughe it were) of encreasyng and auaunceyng the ghospel of Christe at Athens, a cytye of very corrupte manners, he wente thence to Corinthe whiche is the chiefest marte towne in all Grece: and as it was the welthiest, so was it by reason of ryot, incontinencie, and pryde, very vicious. There he by chaunce met with a man whose name was Aquila, which obserued the Iewes religion, but was borne in Pontus, whiche Pontus is a part of the lesse Asia, bendyng towardes the North. This person, as God would, was cum thyther but of late afore from Italye, wt his wife Priscilla, forbecause that the Emperour Claudius had cōmaūded al Iewes ꝑ were in Rome, (as there wer a great number) to auoyde the citte. And because these wer of the same crafte that Paule was, he lodged in one house togyther with them, (for he would not be alone,) labouryng, as they dyd, wyth hys handes, lest he shoulde burthen any manne. And they: crafte was to sowe together skynnes to make tentes wythall.

And lyke as Peter was not ashamed to returne to hys crafte of fyshyng, as often as nede compelled him, so the greate Apostle Paule, whiche valiauntlye had sustayned and borne manye stormes for Christes sake, was nothynge ashamed to take in hande agayne sowyng of skynnes, whiche for to further the Gospell, he had for a tyme layed aside. Yet in thys meane whyle cealed

not he to preache the gospel, disputing in the synagoge euery sabboth day both with the Jewes and also with the Gentiles.

When Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paule was constrayned by the spirit, to testifie to ỹ Jewes ỹ Jesus was very Christ. And when they layd contrary, and blasphemed, he shoke his rayment, & layd vnto them, your blode be vpon youre owne heades, fro henceforth wyl I go blameles vnto the Gentiles. And he departed thence, & entred into a certayne mans house, named Justus, a worshipper of god, whose house ioyned hard to the Synagoge. Howbeit, one Crispus ỹ chefe ruler of the synagoge, beleued on the lorde with all his householde, & many of the Corinthians when they gaue audyence, beleued, and were baptised.

In the meane season Silas and Timothee, whome Paule willed to folowe him to Athens, came from Macedonie. This doon, Paule, because he was muche lothe that he had dooen beary lytle good there, was constrayned by the spirite neuertheles, to preache yet dylygently Jesus of Nazareth to the Jewes, affyrmyng that he was Messias, whome the Prophetes hadde before promysed, that throughe hym onelye and none other, man shoulde obtayne saluacion. But whan they clamoured agaynste hym, yea in so much that they were not afrayde blasphemously and slaunderously to speake agaynste Jesus and Paule, he hauyng in remembraunce what the gospell in that case woulde hym to doe, shooke his lappe, as who shoulde saye, that he cast in their teeth that he had freely brought vnto them the message of saluacion, whiche they ought to haue ioyfully receyued, and sayed vnto them: Jf you had rather perishe then to be saued, stande ye to your owne harme, for aslmuche as ye are the occasion of your owne death. For seeyng that I haue doen my duetye, the fault cannot be layed to me. Wherefore I wyll hereafter go to the Gentiles accordynge as the lorde commaunded vs. And in this wyse he, withdrawynge himselfe from the cumpany of the Jewes, entred into the house of a certayne man named Titus, and Justus by synname, a man that was well dyspoled, who dwelte harde by the Synagoge. Than Crispus whiche was chiefe of the Synagoge, by reason that he dwelled nere, beleued in the Lorde with all hys whole householde: and diuerse others of the Corinthians after they had heard Paule, beleued, and were christened.

¶ Than spake the lord to Paule in the night by a vision: be not afrayed, but speake, and holde not thy peace: for I am with the, & no man shall inuade thee that shall hurte thee. For I haue muche people in this citie. And he contynued there a yeare & syxe monethes, and taught them the worde of God. The texte.

But whan Paul had there neyther, not profited so muche as his moste gredie desyre and dilygente seking was, by reason that the Jewes dydde stiffely barke agaynste hym, and he had in hys mynde purposed to leaue Corinthus, the Lorde stayed hys wauetynge mynde, appetyng to hym in hys sleepe in a vision, and saying: let not the stubbernesse of the Jewes feare thee, neyther kepe thou close the doctrine of the gholpell for their cause: for thou muste not more regarde the inuincible malice of a Jewe, then the healthe of many. Wherfore continue boldly in preachyng the gospell, and put thy truste in me, and I shall resiewe and defende the agaynste theym, be they neuer so manye. And no man shall set handes on thee to vexe or trouble thee, for I wyll be thy defen doure. Wherfore departe not hence, for in this citie (thoughe it bee vicious) there is a greate numbre of people whiche I haue alreadp appointed to lyue euerlastyng. Whan Paul hearde this, he leauyng and forsakyng his owu purpose and determynacion, whiche was but of mannes deuise, and obeyng the counsell of God, continued at Cozinthe a peare and an halfe, constantely and frankly preaching the ghospell.

The texte.

¶ Whan Gallio was rewler of the countrey of Achaia, the Jewes made an insurrection with one accorde against Paul, & brought him to the iudgement seat, saying: this fellow coũselleth men to worshyp God contrary to ỹ law. And now whan Paul was aboute to open his mouth, Gallio sayd vnto the Jewes: yf it were a matter of wrong, or an euyll deede (o ye Jewes) reason would that I shuld heare you: but if it be a questiõ of wordes of names, or of your law, looke yet to it your selues. For I will be no iudge of such matters, & he draue them from ỹ seat. Than all the Gekes toke Sosthenes the chiefe rewler of ỹ Synagoge, & smote hym before ỹ iudges seat. And Gallio cared for none of those thynges.

And whereas one Gallio beyng proconsull, that is to saye the lorde deputie there, dyd in those dayes rule the realme of Achaia vnder Cesar the Emperoure, within whiche countrey the sayed citie of Cozinthe is situate, the Jewes whiche had made conspiracie agaynst Paule, and a cõmotion among the people, drewe hym before the place of iudgement where the lorde deputie sate, accusyng hym, and saying: This man contrarye to Moyses lawe, counseileth men to worthyp God after a newe sorte, and dyuergeth in newe trades of religion. Whiche complaynte whan Paul openyng his mouthe was about to make answere vnto, Gallio perceyuyng by the accusacion or endytement that was brought in and declared, howe the controuersye betwene theym concerned the Jewishe religion, dyd fynd a meane to ridde his handes of the examinacion thereof: And preuentyng Paule, who was than in a redinesse to speake in defence and declaracion of hymselfe, sayed vnto the Jewes: Maysters, I occupie here the roume of an officer to minister iustice in causes, by the authoritie of the Emperour, and to see ciuile iustice kepte, and that nothyng be doen agaynst the common ciuile lawes of Rome. Wherfore yf wrong were doen to any man, or anye haynous dede of mischiefe committed, that ought to be punyshed by the lawes, ye myght iustly compell me, yea and it were my duety to heare you. For the serchyng out of suche matters appertayneth vnto me. But if it be no suche matter, but some speciall or priuate contencion, that is grõwe emong your selues, about names of sectes, or cõmunication of the Jewes religion, & of your own cõuntrey lawes emong certayne priuate persones of your own selfe: because neither it appertayneth to myne office, nor I can discusse the whiche am ignorannte of your lawe, it were beste for you to make an ende of it youre selues. For I will medle in no suche matters. With these woordes he causled them to auoyde from the place where he sate in iudgemẽt. The Gekes seeyng thys, smote Sosthenes whyche was of the chief of the Synagoge, because that he and his household had take Paules part, forsakyng the Jewes: and were more moued with Sosthenes then with Paul, because they supposed that Paule could haue doen nothyng at Cozinthe, vnlesse that he had bene mayntayned by Sosthenes. Yet for all this, the proconsul would not meddle, seyng this businesse, but dissembleth that he sawe it. Forasmuche as the Romaynes maynes hated the Jewes, and yet put no difference betwene a Jewe and a christen man, the proconsull, whiche was a Romayne, did not passe or regarde what one Jewe dyd vnto another, beeyng perfecte that that sorte of people, had wonte to be euery where busy and full of trouble and contencion.

* Paule after this, taried there yet a good while, & than toke his leaue of the brethren & sayled thence into Syria, Priscilla, & Aquila accompanyng him. And shore his heade in Cenchrea, for he had a vowe. And he came to Ephesus, & left them there, but he himself entred into the synagoge, & reasoned with the Jewes. Whē they desyred him to tarye longer time with them, he consented not, but bad them fare well, sayeng: I must nedes (at this feast that cometh) be in Hierusalē: but I will returne agayne vnto you yf god will. And he departed from Ephesus: & when he was come vnto Cesarea, & asked vp, & saluted the congregacio, he departed vnto Antioche: & whē he had taried there a while, he departed, & went ouer all the countrey of Galatia, and Phrygia by order, strengthenyng all the disciples. The texte.

But Paul hauyng in mynde the warnyng that god had geuen hym, thoughe he perceyued the rage of the Jewes daylye to encreale more and more, yet he contynued there a good sorte of dayes more. And at the laste perceyuyng that the gospel was wel forward there, he thought it best to depart for a season and to geue place to the furious rageyng of the Jewes. And so takyng his leaue of the brethren, he appoynted to sayle into Syria, hauyng Aquila with hym and his wyfe Priscilla. And forasmuche as Paul perceyued that the Jewes were most moued, because that he a man borne vnder the Jewes lawe, semed to sette no store by the traditions of the lawe, before he toke shyppyng at Cenchrea, whiche is the hauen at Corinthe, he shore his heade, makyng a solemne vowe accordyng as the custome was among the Jewes.

He did not this craftily to colour or to feigne with them, but he had regarde vnto charitie, that they should not be offended. For his desyre was to wynne theym all to the gospell, and therfore did he frame himselfe to al mennes appetites, as nere as he could, to thentent that he myght wynne them all to Christ. Emong the Jewes, he ordred himselfe as a Jewe, and whan he was emonge those that were not circumcised, he also behaued himselfe as a man vncircumcised. But thus bare he with them for a space, because they were so wedded to superstition, that they could not easely bee plucked from it, vntyll suche tyme as the trueth of the gospell myght more clerely spyyng abrode. For to make a vowe and to shere thy head vpon the same, is not that thynge whiche of it selfe is euyll: but to put confidence in suche Jewyshe ceremonies is damnable.

And in like maner, circumcision hurteth not a man that believeth in Christe, neyther yet to be vncircumcised, in whiche matter at a tyme it is the parte of charitie to geue place, vntyl a man see opportunitie, and in suche wyse as whan he shall haue opportunitie, he speake against the same. But in all other matters that of themselues are nought, we muste not geue place to any mannes weakenesse. For Paul neuer bare with the Gentiles in any matter of committing aduoutrye, or worshyppyng Idolles: but in familiar conuersation together, in neglecting choyse of meates, in citeyng or allegeyng their Poetes, sometyme he bare with them. So firste they arryued at Ephesus, whiche is a citie vpon the sea syde in the lesse Asia, whiche properly and without any other addicion, had wonte to be called Asia. There he lefte Aquila and Priscilla, who were desirous to tarye and to dwell at Ephesus. And himselfe entring into the Synagoge of the Jewes that dwelte there, disputed with theym. Of whom whan he was desired to continue there a great while, he excused hymselfe, and toke his leaue of them, and puttyng them in hope that he wouldē shortely see them agayne, he coumforted them in this wise: There is no remedy, I muste nedes kepe this feaste that is nowe at hande, in Hierusalem, but I wyll returne agayne vnto you, by goddes grace. Whan he had spoken these wordes, he departed from Ephesus, and sayled towardes Hierusalem: and whan he hadde arryued at Cesarea, a cytie in ỹ countrey of Palestine, he wente vp to Hierusalem, and saluted the congregacion. From thence he toke his tourney to Antioche that is in Syria. After he had taried there a while he wente forewarde on his tourney that he had begon, goyng ouer all the countrey of Galacia, and Phrigia, confirmyng the disciples fayth in euery place, wherefoeuer he mette with any assembly of them. Thus carefull was Paule for hys flocke that he had wonne to Christe.

The texte. ¶ And a certayne Jewe named Appollos, borne at Alexandria, came to Ephesus, an eloquent man, ỹ mighty in the scriptures. The same was enformed in ỹ way of ỹ lorde, and spake feruentely in the spirite, ỹ taught diligently the thynges of the lorde, ỹ knewe but the baptisme of John only. And the same began to speake boldly in the Synagoge. Whō whan Priscilla ỹ Aquila had heard, they toke him vnto them, ỹ expouded vnto him the way of God more perfectly. And whē he was disposed to go into Achaia, ỹ brethē wist, exhorteyng the disciples to receyue hym. Whiche, when he was cum, helped them muche which beleued through grace. For he ouercame the Jewes mightyly, ỹ that openly, shewing by the scripture, that Jesus was Christ.

In the meane spare one Apollos an Alexandrian borne, but one that kepte the Jewes religion, a man that was well learned, and had good knowlege of holy scriptures, came to Ephesus, where as Paul had left Priscilla ỹ Aquila. This Apollos was halfe a christen man. For he had learned the rudimentes and first rewles of the ghospel, of the christen men, and wyth feruente desire he dyd communicate the same to others, that himselfe had learned, and suche thynges as he knewe of Jesus, before that he the sayed Apollos was christened with Christes baptisme, (wherby grace was more plētifully geuen) he taught diligentlye, but as yet he knewe not the sayed baptisme of Christe, but knewe onely the baptysme of John, wherby penaunce was taught and preached. This Apollos beyng not yet fully enstructed in those thinges that Christ had taught, thought that sufficiente: Whome whan Priscilla and Aquila hearde boldely speake of Jesus, but yet in suche sorte that they well perceyued hym to bee not fully instructed in the principles of the gospell, and seeyng hym endued with so many good qualities, that, as it appered, he would bee an excellent preacher and setter forth of Christes name, they toke hym home with them, and seuerallye taught him more perfectly the misteries of the ghospell accordyng to the doctrine that Paul had taught them before. They refused not him to be a teacher, whiche thought he were diligent, yet was not perfecte: and he on the other syde disdayned not to be monished of any manne what euer he were. They gaue example in so doyng, that suche oughte gently to be holpen forwardes, in whome any hope of doyng well remayneth. Agayne here is an example, that we muste gladly learne of any man suche thynges, the knowlege whereof cannot be let passe without perill of damnacion. Apollos was christened in the name of Jesus, and receyued the holy ghoste. But than afterwardes he was desyrous to go into Achaia, where as Corinthe is, to the end

the

that he myght preache the ghospell: the brethren seeyng hym wyllyng of hys own accorde, dyd set him forwardes, and moze prouoked hym to it, and wrote letters in commendacion of him, to the disciples in Achaia, that they shoulde receyue hym. Who did after his cumming thyther, muche good vnto thē, that had bene conuerted to the fayth, and valiauntly dyd sette forth the ghospell. For the holy ghoste holpe to set forwardes his eloquence that he had ioyned with knowlege of the holy scriptures. With whiche weapons he beeyng armed, did stoutly put the Jewes to syleuce, that continually contended against the young sowen corne of the ghospell that was bladyng vp, shewyng openly and also playnelye by euydente testimonies of the scriptures, that Jesus was the same Messias, whom the Jewes had so many hundred yeares looked for, and that all thynges that the Prophetes spake before of Messias, dyd agree in him.

For he ouercame the Jewes mysbeleyue.

The.xix.Chapter.

The texte.

It fortuned that whyle Appollo was at Corinthe, Paul passed throughe the vpper coastes, & came to Ephesus, and founde certayne disciples, and sayde vnto them: haue ye receyued the holy ghost, sence ye beleued? And they sayed vnto him: no, we haue not hearde whether there be any holy goste or no. And he sayd vnto them, wherewith were ye than baptised? And they sayed: with Johns baptisme. Than sayed Paul: John verely Baptised with the baptisme of repentaunce, saying vnto the people, that they shoulde beleue on hym: which should come after him: that is on Christ Jesus. Whē they heard this, they were baptysed in the name of the lorde Jesu. And whan Paule had layed his handes vpon them, the holy goste came on them, and they spake with tounges, and prophecied, and all the men were about twelue.

But euen as Priscilla and Aquila hadde amended Apollos in suche poyntes as he lacked, beeyng necessarye for a christen manne to haue, so Paule fyndynge others in lyke takyng, dyd. For whiles that Apollos was at Corinthe, whiche is the chiefe citte in Achaia: it chaunced that Paule, after he had goen ouer the other countreyes of Asia the lesse, whyche declyne moolte to the Northe and Easte, returned to Ephesus. There he certayne of the disciples that were no perfecte Christians, whiche were in one flocke emong the other brethren. Wherfore Paule to the intent that he myght moze perfectly instructe theym, asked whether that they had receyued the holy ghoste, synce the tyme that they were conuerted to the fayth. They, forasmuche as they erroure was of no malyce, but of plaine ignorauncē, stākely aunswered and freely as it was in dede, and sayed: No, neyther haue we euer hearde yet hytherto, whether there be anye holy ghoste, that is gyuen to them that beleue. Than sayed Paule, forasmuche as ye are taken for christen men, whyche baptisme than were ye baptised with? They made aunswere: with the baptisme of John: for we thought that sufficient for vs. Than sayed Paule: In that haue ye not doen amisse, that in tymes past before the ghospell came to mannes knowleage abrode, ye receiued Johns baptisme. But that is not sufficient for your eternal saluacion. For lyke as the doctrine of

We haue not hearde whether there be any holygoste or no.

John was not perfect, but did onely testifie of Jesus that he was the true gyuer of saluacion, who shoulde come after him, makyng readye theyr myndes, that they shoulde beleue hym whan he came: so dyd not Johns baptisme wholy iustifie, but onely exhorted menne, that by repentaunce for theyr like misdet they shoulde prepare theyr hertes for the Phisicion that woulde strayghte after wardes come, whiche with his baptisme throughe faith, woulde take awaye all maner of synnes, and by his spirite should enryche the myndes of the faythfull with heauenly gyftes of grace. This tradicion had the Apostles receyued of Jesus the Lorde, that they that beleued in the ghospell, shoulde be christened in the name of the father, of the sonne, and of the holy ghoste. They that erred onely through simplicitie, and for lacke of knowleage onelye, deserued thus to be instructed. And they beyng once warned therof, obeyed theyr counsellours, and immediatly were christened in the name of Jesus the lorde. This doen whan Paule had layed his handes on them, the holy ghoste came down on them, and the thyng it selfe that ensued, dyd manifestly expresse what the visible token meaned. For they did both speake diuerse languages, and prophecied also of hidden and secrete thynges that were to come. The numbre of those persons that were men, amounted euen to a dosen or ther about.

The texte. ¶ And he went into the synagoge, and behaued himself boldly for the space of three monethes, disputing and geuyng them exhortacions of the kyngdom of God. Whē diuerse were hard harted & beleued not, but spake euell of the waye (and that before the multitude) he departed frō them, & separated the disciples. And he disputed daily in ỹ schoole of one called Tyrannus.

Whan Paule had this doen, and as a man woulde saye, had renewed his authoritie, forasmuche as he beyng the preacher of the gentiles, had geuen the holy ghost by layeng on his hande ouer the faythfull, euen as the other Apostles had doen, he entryng into the Synagoge of ỹ Jewes that dwelled there, openly and freely spake to all men, preachyng that hope of saluacion was to be obteyned by Jesus onely: whiche thing he dyd me then fewe dayes, for it was the space of whole three monethes, disputyng of the kyngdome of God, whiche is heauenly and spirituall, agaynst them that with tooth and nayle stikly vpheld the carnall kyngdome of the lawe. But whan certayne of the Synagoge gaue no credence to those thynges, that were spoken of Paule, but stubbernely resisted, insomuche that openly before the multitude they blasphemously spake agaynst the doctrine of the ghospell: Paule percey uyng that it was to be feared, lest that they that beleued myght bee corrupted by their malice, left the synagoge of the Jewes, and dyd lykewyse separate the disciples from theym and yet he ceased not in the meane season to preache the ghospel. But he dayly disputed in the schoole of one Tyrannus, hauynge euen than in mynd, the image of a pure churche, that were not corrupted with the leauen of the synagoge, whiche churche shoulde receyue none but those that woulde learne, and that woulde reiecte suche as were praters, and blasphemous persons.

The texte. And this continued by the space of two yeres: so that all they that dwelt in Asia, heard the worde of the lord Jesu, both Jewes & Gickes. And god wrought especiall myracles by ỹ handes of Paul: so that frō his body, were brought vnto ỹ sycke, napkyns & partelettes, and the diseases departed from thē, and the euyll spirites went out of them.

This

Thus dyd he continue by the space of two yeres, with suche successe, that not onely the Ephesians, but also diuers others, some Iewes, and some Gentiles (that resorted thyther from that parte of Asia the lesse, whiche properlye is named Asia, where as Ephesus is) gaue eare vnto the ghospell. And myracles did cause them to beleue his preachyng, for god wrought both many, and also great woonders by the handes of Paule, insomuche that he put awaye diseases, not with woordes or by touchyng onely, but also napkins and partlettes, whiche had touched Paules bodye, were caried to the sicke, that were so fayne that they coulde not come to Paule, and with touchyng therof aswell diseases, as also euill spirites were put away. So great confidence had Paul on Jesus whom he preached.

The texte.

¶ Than certayne of the vagabound Jewes, exorcistes, toke vpon them to call ouer them (which had euil spirites) the name of ỹ lord Jesus, saying: we adiure you by Jesu, whō Paule preacheth. And there were seuen sonnes of one Sceua a Jewe, and chiefe of ỹ priestes, whiche did so. And the cuyll spirite answered and sayd: Jesus I knowe, and Paule I know, but who are ye? And the man in whom the euyll spirite was, ranne on them, & ouercame them, & preuayled against them, so that they fled out of that house naked, and also wounded. And this was knowen to all the Jewes, & Grekes also, which dwelte at Ephesus, and feare came on them all, and the name of the lord Jesus was magnified. And many that beleued, came & confessed and shewed their workes. Many of them whiche vsed curious crafftes, brought their bokes, and burned them before al men. And they accoumpted the price of them, and found it fiftie thousand syluerlinges. So mightily growed the woorde of God, and preuayled.

Jesus I knowe, and Paule I knowe: but who are ye?

Whiche thing whan certayne Jewes perceyued, whiche were of that sorte of men, that go about and for lucre do cast out euil spirites, with certaine ceremonies and solemne prescribed woordes, as it were of conturation, crakyng that they had receyued thys cunnyng of Salomon, whom they affirmed to be the authour therof, they also attempted to cast out cuyll spirites by inuocacion of the name of our lorde Jesus, not bycause they entended to set forth the glory of his name, or bycause they wouldе endeuour themselues to do men good, but becaule that they supposed therby to get more aduauntage, & greater name. Wherfore they chaungeyng certayne woordes wherewith they hadde woonte to coniure, sayde to the euill spirites: I coniure you in the name of Jesus, whom Paule preacheth, that ye departe. This especially dyd the seuen sonnes of one whole name was Sceua, whiche was a Jewe, and one of the chief priestes. And whan they attempted in this wyse, to proue thys kynde of conturation, on a certayne manne that was possessed with an cuyll spirite, the euill spirite aunswered to those conturers: I knowe Jesus, by vertue of whose name, ye go about to feare me, I knowe also Paule the seruaunt and professour of Christe, but what be you, that abuse the name of Jesus, and Paule, to your lucre, whereas ye are the disciples neither of Jesus, ne yet of Paule? And assone as he had spoken these woordes, the man that was possessed wyth the euyll spirite, ranne vpon these exorcistes, and conturers, and gotte the ouerhāde of them, insomuche that they had muche a doe to escape with their lyues, and scarce got away at last naked and wounded, oute of the house. This thing after it was bruted abroade, and knowen throughe oute the citie of Ephesus, both emong the Jewes and the Gentiles that occupied there, they were sore afrayed euerye man, and muche praysed the name of the lorde Jesus, whyche was so healthfull to all suche as beleued well, that it wolde not bee applyed to ꝑ lucre or glorye of any man. And this the mischaunce of fewe, dyd profytte many. For many one being attayed by the ensample of the sonnes of Sceua, and specially suche as had begon to beleue the gospell, whan as they saw that punishmente was ready at hande for suche, as called vpon the name of Jesus with vncleane heartes, they repayred to Paule, confessing, and vttering their offences, that by penaunce they might escape the punishment of God. For the citie of Ephesus was more then all other, geuen to superstitious crafftes, as this their owne prouerbe doeth witnesse: The Ephesians learning: by which prouerbe was signified sorceries and wordes of conjuration, whiche the Ephesians learned and vsed, that they might prosper and haue good happe in al thinges ꝑthey went about, and might preuayle against others in any thing that they attempted. Wherefore many were there in that citie whiche beeyng seduced, had eyther vsed such Judaical coniurations, or elſe had geuen credite vnto them. And besides this, diuerse of those that had vsed magical and curtouse crafftes, brought their bokes to the common market place, and burned them in the sight of al persones. Whet of there was so great a noumber, that the value of them, whan it was rated by castyng accoumpte of it, amounted to the summe of fiftie thoulande pieces of syluer coyne, euerye piece beeyng in valiue aboute a grote sterlyng or more. But the losse of this moneye was greate aduauntage to ꝑ furtherynge of the ghospell. For by meanes hereof, the worde of God did muche increace and waxed strong, whiche woorde was to their saluacion that fully without glosyng and clokyng, dyd embrace it: but to suche, as did not vprightly walke therin, it was terrible.

Many of them, which vsed curtous crafftes broughte their bokes and burned them before all men.

The texte.

After these thynges were ended, Paule purposed in the spirite (whan he passed ouer Macedonia and Achaia) to goe to Hierusalē, saying: after I haue bene there, I must also see Rome. So sent he into Macedonia, two of thē that ministred vnto him, that is Timotheus and Erastus: but he hymselfe remayned in Asia for a season.

Whan Paul had thus happely spedde by the space of two yeares, continuyng at Ephesus, he was monyshed by the holy ghost, to departe thence, and so purposed with hymselfe to walke ouer Macedonia and Achaia, and than to take his iourney to Hierusalem, saying: I muste see Rome also, but I wyll fyrste go to Hierusalem. Whan he had fully decreed thus with hymselfe, he sent before hym, a couple of those that awayted on hym, that is to saye, Timothee and Erastus, vnto Macedonie, to gather mennes almesse for succouryng those nedy that were at Hierusalem, and that they myghte make readye theyr myndes agaynst Paule came. But Paule hymselfe stayed for a season in Asia.

The texte.

¶ The same tyme there arose no lytle a doe aboute that way: For a certayne man named Demetrius, a syluersmith (which made siluer shynes for Diana) was not a lytle benefycial vnto ꝑ craftesmen. Whō he called together with the workemē of like occupacion, and sayd: Syrs ye know that by this crafte we haue aduauntage. Moreouer, ye see & heare, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout Asia, this Paule hath perswaded and turned away muche people, saying that they are not Goddes which are made with handes. So ꝑ not only this our crafte cūmeth into parel to be set at nought: but also that the temple of the great goddesse Diana, should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the worlde worshypperth.

Aboute thys tyme, a greuous commocion was stirred vp agaynst the gospell pell among the Ephesians: but not by the Jewes than, as it was accustomed before to be, but by suche as stycked ouermuche to the tradicion, that they had receyued of theyr forefathers, as concernyng the superstitious worshippyng of their goddes. The Ephesians, as is afore sayed, were wonderfullye gyuen to curious learning, and Diana (as the Gentiles supposed) had a great power in enchauntementes, and therefore they sayed she had three faces or headdes, as Hecate had. This was the cause that she was so greatly worshipped at Ephesus. Marke here nowe that lucre and gaynes was the fyrste occasion of this commocion, and the superstitious people furtherers to the same. For there was at Ephesus in those dayes, a certayne man named Demetrius, a siluersmyth by his occupacion. This Demetrius, where as he was a maker of siluer shrynes or tabernacles for Diana, because the moone in colour somewhat resembleth siluer, procured for all that were good craftes men of ỹ same occupacion, no small gaynes. Wherefore Demetrius called together, al suche as had aduauntage by makyng ymages of Diana, and all craftes men of the same occupacion whom he knewe would fauour his cause, because they were of the same crafte, and made a seditious oracion in this wyse: Maisters, it is time for vs to loke to oure prosperite with all oure endeuour. I nede not make rehearsal, for it is well knowen vnto you all, that our crafte is very gaynefull throughout all Asia, by reason that Diana is so worshipped, which religiō yf it shoulde fayle, nedes muste it folowe, that our auauntage shalbe smalle. But ye bothe heare and see, (for the matter is playne and open) that thys felowe Paule hath preached here these .ii. yeres nowe, that those goddes, whiche are made by the handes of man, are no goddes: neyther any ymage to haue anye power of the goddes in them, that is either grauen of tymbre, or made of anye metall in mouldes. And by this his preachyng hath he perswaded manye, not here in Ephesus onelye, but also throwe all Asia, and hathe turned an huge noumbre of people from worshipping of the goddes. Nowe forasmuche as this crafte is our lyuyng, and thereby we fynde also oure howsholdes, what shall els come of it, but yf this his preaching continue, our gaynes and liuing wyll decay, and we shall fall into pouertie. Wherefore if we shoulde nowe let this matter slippe, we myght well be accompted very slacke in lokyng to our owne profites. But yf there be any man here present, that passeth light on this daungier of leesyng his profite and gaynes, by the decaye of our crafte, whereby we now haue great lucre and aduauntage, yet the common religion ought to moue all menne, forasmuch as if we suffer Paule to continue in doing these thinges without punishemente, we see it is to be feared, leste that the temple of the greate goddesse Diana, whiche is nowe of greate fame and renoume, & whereunto men of their zeale & deuocion haue now daply great recourse, and whiche is enriched with great offerynges, shal in processe bee had in no reputacion at all. For who is so mad to worshyp the temple yf he be perswaded th at the patrone of the temple is no god? And by this meane will it come to passe, ỹ a goddesse so full of maiestie, and beyng at this day for many causes, iustely had in great honour, shall by lytle & litle be rooted out of mens myndes and hertes, whereas she is nowe worshypped, not in this citye onely and in Asia, but also throwow out all the whole worlde. And therefore yf ye suppose it be a wise mannes part to see to his profite, in case ye thinke it bee a godlye thyng to defende the goddes of our countreye from dishonoure, nowe shewe youre selues to be men outright, and helpe to withstande this mischefe that is at hande.

The texte. ¶ Whan they herde these thinges they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying: Great is Diana of the Ephesians. And al the citie was on a roare, and they rushed into the common halle with one assent, and caught Caius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, being Paules copartners. Whan Paule would haue entred in vnto the people, the disciples suffred him not. But certayne of the chiefe of Asia (which were his frendes) sent vnto him desiryng him that he would not preasse into the common halle. Some therfore cried one thyng, and some another, and the congregacion was all out of quiete, and the more parte knewe not wherfore they were come together.

With this oracion the myndes of the multitude were so stirred vp, that euery one of them began to crie with greate lowdnesse. Diana the great goddesse of Ephesus. With this same so seditious a clamoure all the whole citie of Ephesus was stirred vp, and as the people ranne hastely the multitude of them beyng cleane out of al order, they mette together, and made straight waye to the common place of the citie, where playes and syghtes are wonte to be shewed, and in suche a place commonly the people beyng in any rage or fury, is moste mayster, & beginneth frayes and seditions, and thither they haled with them by force and violence, a couple of men beeyng Macedonians borne, that is to wete Caius and Aristarchus, whiche were two companions of Paules. But whan Paule vnderstandyng what had bene doen, was in minde to come forth before the multitude, partly to helpe his felowes, and partely to perswade and pacifie the people, the disciples wouldе not suffer him, thynkyng it to bee an vnaduised parte for him to delyuer himselfe to the multitude, beeyng in suche a rage, seeyng that he coulde thereby nothyng at all further the ghospel. Beesydes the disciples, others also the peeres and chiefe rewlers of Asia, whiche although they had not hitherto professed the name of Christ yet was muche as they wished nothing but good to Paule, sente worde vnto him and required him in their names, that he wouldе not put himselfe in daungier with the multitude, which than was muche moued agaynst him, and vp in a greate roare. In the meane space there was amōg the people many sōdry murmurynges, neuer an one lyke another. For (as in suche cases commonly it chaunceth) one cryed that one thing was to be doen, another another thyng. For the multitude was gathered together of diuerse nacions, and they among themselues of sundrye myndes, insomuche that some there were, yea, the moste parte of them, that wiste not what the matter was, that they were come thither for.

The texte. Some of the cumpany drewe forth Alexander, the Jewes thrustyng him forwardes. Alexander beckened with the hande, and would haue geuen the people an answere. Whe they knewe that he was a Jewe, there arose a shoute almoste for the space of two houres of all men, crying: great is Diana of the Ephesians.

Wherfore the verye tyme required that some man should make an oracyon vnto them whyche was in fauour with the people, that this sodayne commocion myght by some meanes be asswaged and pacified. Than was there one Alexander compelled to stande foorthe out of the thickest preasse of the people, by reason that the Jewes dyd thrust him forwarde to cease thys seditious commocion with some oracion. For no man durste bee so bolde, as to treate or to make anye woordes of the matter before the multitude, that was than in a rage, and in diuerse and sondrye myndes, forasmuche as whatsoeuer shoulde bee spoken, it coulde not bee chosen but that one parte or other would be offē-

ded with it . Wherefore he beyng so thruste forwardes, beckened wyth hys hande, and desyred them to geue eare vnto hym, and was than aboute to haue made some aunswere. But whan as the multitude vnderstode that Alexander was a Iewe, (which people wurshippe one God, & abhorreth the goddes of the Gentyles.) then was this tumulte eftsones renewed, forsomuche as they supposed that he would save somewhat to the dishonour of their goddesse Diana. Wherefore they all cryed with one voice. Diana the great goddesse of Ephesus. And thus they continued crying, by the space of almoste two houres.

The texte.

Whā the rowne clarke had ceased the people, he sayed: Ye men of Ephesus, what man is it yt knoweth not, how that the citie of ỹ Ephesians is a wurshypper of the greate goddesse Diana, of the image whiche came from Ieoue. Seyng than that no man sayeth here agaynst, ye ought to be cōtente, & to do nothyng rashely: For ye haue brought hyther these men, which are neyther robbers of Churches, nor yet dispisers of your goddesse. Wherefore, if Demetrius and the craftes men which are with him, haue matter agaynst any man, the lawe is open, & there are rewlers, let thē accuse one another, but yf ye go about any other thig, it shalbe determined in a lawfull cōgregacio. For we are in ieopardy to be accused of this daies vproure, forasmuch as there is no cause, wherby we may geue a reckenyng of this cōcourse of people. And when he had thus spoken, he let the congregacion departe.

But at the last whan as the Scribe of the citie had entreated the multitude to kepe silence, Alexander spake vnto them in this wise: Ye men of Ephesus, for what purpose do ye make all this clamour and busines? For what man is there lyuyng so ignorant, but that he knoweth howe the citie of Ephesus doeth wurship greate Diana, and her ymage that fell from heauen? And for asmuche as no man sayeth contrary to the thinges that ye affirme, ye nede not to make all this busines, but ye must go peaceably to worke and do nothing rashely. For ye haue brought hither these two men, whiche haue neyther committed sacrilege, by robbyng any Churche or other holy place, ne yet blaspheme agaynst your goddesse. If it so wer thā the people might iustely flocke together and reuenge their quarell. But if that Demetrius the siluersmithe, and other his adherentes of the same occupacion, that were the occasion of al this businesse, haue any matter to lay to any mannes charge, thei nede not thus to runne into the open place, whiche was made for an other purpose, that is to say, for enterludes, and pageauntes, wrastlyng and suche other syghtes, nor yet thus seditiously to make this vnlawfull assemblie, with such greate clamoure and wonder. For there be lawes here in this citie, there is sessions kept, and there be officers sent from the Emperour, by the name of Proconsuls, or lorde deputies that may discusse suche causes, and maye ende all controuersies, and matters of variaunce, and maye punyshe the malefactours. Let them there pleade their matters, that were the occasion of this assembly, forasmuche as it appertayneth not to the commons to medle with their priuate matters. Yet yf it were so that the matter were publike, and pertayned to the commons, it were not for al that nedefull to discusse it so seditiously: But yf ye require that any thyng bee doen, it maye be brought to passe in a lawfull assemblye, called together by those that haue authoritie, and in due fourme, accordyngly. Now is it to be feared, lest that we be complayned of vnto thofficers for this cōmocion, and that it be thought that we went about to make an insurrection, seeyng that we can allege no probable cause, wherfore this assemblye of the people was gathered together into the common place of enterludes, syghtes, and games. When he had thus sayde, the multitude departed.

The

The.xx. Chapter.

The texte. AFter that the rage was ceased, Paule called the disciples vnto him, and tooke hys leaue of them, and departed for to go into Macedonia. And whā he had gone ouer those partes, and had geuen them a long exhortacion, he came into Greece, and there abode thre monethes. And whan the Iewes layd wayte for him, as he was about to sayle into Syria, he purposed to returne throughe Macedonia. There accompanied him into Asia, Sospatre of Berreans of Thessalonia, Aristarchus and Secundus, & Gaius of Derba, and Timotheus: and out of Asia, Tichicus, and Trophimus. These going before, tarried vs at Troas. And we sayled away from Philippos after the dayes of swete breade, & came vnto them: to Troas in fyue dayes, where we abode seuen dayes.

AFter that this commocion was cleane ceassed, Paule called the disciples together, and exhorted them stedfastly to continue in those matters, that they had taken in hande, concernyng their fayth in Christ: than he enbraced them, and bad them farewell, and so departed towarde Macedonia. And after that he hadde walked ouer the parties of Macedonia, and had geuen exhortacion at large to the congregacions whereseuer he chaunced to meete wyth any of them, wylling them to continue in the puritie of the ghospell, and that they should profite therin, he came to that part which is properly called Greece, in whiche Greece, Achaia is situated: Where, after that they had continued by the space of three monethes, and were aboute to departe thence and to sayle into Syria, he perceyued that the Iewes had layed awayt to hurt him in that iourney by water, he therfore thoughte it better to take chyppyng at an other hauen, and to returne to Macedonia agayne, and from thence to sayle to Syria, where as he fitste arriued, whan he came to Macedonia. At this iourneye Sospater of Berrea ioyne vnto Pyrrhus, and beside him Aristarchus, and Secundus, beeyng both of them Thessalonians, and besydes these, also Caius of Derba, & Timothie were with vs. And besides them Tichicus & Trophimus, bothe of them beeyng of Asia. These men whyles that Paule tarryed in Macedonia, had goen before to make ready all thinges that were necessari, to entre the sea without daungier, and taried oure comming at Troas. We passed by Macedonia, and so came to Philippos: From thence, after the dates of swete breade, whiche folowe easter, immediatly we departed, and wythin fyue dayes we came vnto them at Troas, where we taried seuen dayes.

The texte. AND vpon one of the Sabboth dayes, whan the disciples came together for to breake bread, Paul preached vnto the, ready to depart on the morowe: and cōtinued ꝑ preaching vnto mydnight. And there we many lightes in the chāber where we wer gathered together, & there sate in a windore a certayne young man named Eutichus, beyng fallen into a depe slepe. And as Paule was preaching, he was more ouercome with slepe, & fell downe from the thyrd lofte, and was taken vp deade. But when Paule went downe he fell on hym, and embraced hym, and sayd: make nothing a do, for his life is in him. So whan he was come vp agayne, & had broken the bread and eaten, and talked a long while: euen tyll the morning: at the last he departed. And they brought the young man alyue, and were not a lytle coumforted.

There chaunced a wonderfull notable thing. For vpō one of the Sabboth dayes, whan the disciples were assembled, as they custome was, to breake breade,

breade, Paule playing eache where the parte of a good pastour, refreshed their myndes with preachyng of scriptures, and forasmuch as he was purposed the nexte daye to departe thence, he continued so preachyng vnto them vntyll it was ferre fourth nightes. And lest that nyght nyghte haue bene occasion to breake of this delectable and pleasaunt sermon, there were many candelles in the solliare wheras we were than assembled. Among the multitude there was a certayne younge manne, whose name was Eutichus, that sate in one of the wyndoes. This young man by reason that Paul continued talkyng so long, wexed slepie, and at the last so sore came the slepe vpon hym, that he fell flatlyng downe to the grounde three stoores hyghe: by and by men ranne to him, but he was founde deade, and brought into the house. When as Paul perceyued that, he came downe, & after the ensample of the prophete Hely, he bended his body, and lay vpon him, as thoughe that he dyd by embracyng, cherisshe or kepe warme the deade bodye. When he had so done, he turned hymselfe to the disciples, that were muche troubled with this sodeyne chaunce, and sayde: be ye nothyng troubled with this chaunce, there is yet lyfe in hym: for the bodye is not cleane deade. When he had thus comforted them, he wente agayne vp into the solliare, and brake the breade, and eate thereof: and after this, when he had agayne so long commoned with them that it began to be lyght, and that the breake of daye appeared, he toke his leaue of them, and so at length departed. So paynefull a thyng is it, for a moste louyng father to departe from his dere chyldren. And they that remayned with the young manne, brought hym aliue and whole into the solliare agayne. Whych thyng dyd not a litle refreshe the myndes of all that were there presente. For it was not sittyng, that that same worde that byngeth health to all men, shoulde haue bene occasion of the young mannes death.

¶ And we went afore to shyppe, & loused vnto Asson, there to receyue Paul. For so had he appoynted, for he would himselfe go on foote. When we were cum together at Asso, we toke him, & came to Mittilenes. And we sayled thence, & came the nexte day ouer against Chios. And the nexte day we arryued at Samos, and tarried at Trogillion. The nexte daye we came to Miletum: for Paul had determined to sayle ouer by Ephesus, because he wolde not spende the tyme in Asia, for he hasted (if it wer for him possyble) to kepe at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost. And fro Miletum he sent messegers to Ephesus, and called the elders of the congregacion. The text.

And we, whan we had taken shippyng at Troas, sayled to Asson, whyche is a citie nere to the sea syde within the countrey of Troas. For Paul had so determined that we shoulde go thyther before by water, and he would folowe by lande, either because it was more safer so to dooe, or els that he myghte salute the moe by the waye. And after that we mette togyther at Asson, and had receyued Paule into the shyppe, we came all together to Mittilene, whiche is a citie on the sea syde in the Yle of Lesbus. Thence departed we and the nexte daye after, we came against Chios Yslande. Lykewyse agayne the daye folowyng, we arryued at the Yslande of Samos, and from thence sayled to Trogillion, that is a citie on the sea banke of Asia, directly against Samos. There tarryed we the same nyghte, and the nexte daye after, came to Mileton, whiche is a citie in Caria. And although that we in oure saylyng by the coastes of Asia, shoulde eyther come to Ephesus, then to Trogillion or

Miletón,

Mileton, yet Paule had purposed with himselfe to passe by Ephesus, lest that he shoulde spende awaye the time tarying in Asia, yf it should haue chaunced that he coulde not safely, for watche beyng layd for him, saple into Syria. For he hastened to kepe his wittontide in Jerusalem, yf he possibly myght so do. Yet leste that he shoulde seme eyther not to regarde, or els to hate the Ephesians, he sent from Mileton, some that should wil thauncient curates of the congregacion of Ephesus, whom he had left charged with theſame congregacion, to come vnto him.

The texte. Which whē they were come to him, he sayd vnto them: ye know frō the first day that I came into Asia, after what maner I haue ben wt you at all seasons, seruing ye lord wt all humblenes of mynde. And with many teares, and temptacions, whiche haue happened vnto me by the lyinges in awayte of the Jewes. Because I would kepe backe nothyng, that was profitable vnto you. But to shew you & reache you openly, & throughout euery house, witnessing both to the Jewes, & also to the Gretes, the repentaunce ye is towarde God: And the fayth towardes our lorde Jesus.

To whome after they were come, he spake in thys wise. Brethren, I shall not nede to reherse vnto you my vpright behauiour in preaching the ghospel. It is not vnknowen vnto you your selues, whiche haue sene the same, howe I haue behaued my selfe among you, all the whyle euen from the first daye that I came into Asia, vntill this houre: and that I sought not myne owne glorye, or lucre, but that I haue obeyed the cōmaundement of our Lorde Jesus Christ in preaching his gospel, and haue in al thinges bene cōformable vnto his wil, inasmuche as I folowed his steppes, who made lowe, humbled hymselfe, and delyuered himselfe to be afflicted & tormented, and to dye, that he might clense & establysshe his churche. Euen so lykewyse hath bene my conuersacion in setting forth the gospell, with all humilitie or lowlynesse, yea and also shame, whiche I haue suffred of the enemyes of the gospel, with often teares whiche I haue shed beyng careful for the congregacion, with muche affliccion, or trouble that I haue bene in, through the deceytes of the Jewes, that cannot abide that the benefite of the gospel should be cōmunicated and partened vnto the Gentiles. And yet none of al these mischaunces haue troubled my minde so greatly, that I haue at any tyme for feare of affliccion, let passe any thyng that appertcined to your health, neither yet haue I spared, though it were with daunger of my lyfe, to open vnto you any thyng that myght be profitable for you, and to instructe you both openly in the synagoges, and also priuely within mēnes houses, as occasion hath serued: not preachyng vnto you, as the Jewes myndes were that I should haue done, that is to say, circumcisiō, obseruing of sabboth dayes, and washynges, but repentaunce for your lyfe that ye did leade before, which god requireth in all men, that he maye saue all men: and full confidence in our lorde Jesus Christe, whose gospell whosoeuer beleueth, shall be saued whether he be a Jewe, or a Greke, whether circumcised, or els vncircumcised. And therefore theſame fauour and grace whiche is indifferently proffered vnto all men, I shaue indifferently preached vnto all men, not hauyng respect to the person, state, or degre of any manne, nor beeyng feared or discouraged by the malice of the Jewes, who for the settyng forth and magnifying of the lawe, doe withstande the gospell: nor yet dryuen from it by the fiercenes of the Gentiles, whiche do so stiffelye vpholde and maynteyne the superstition whiche

they haue receyued of theyr forefathers. For that same affliccion and perse-cucion in whiche I was here, dyd moue me, rather because I sawe that the cōgregacion was in some daungier, leste any man beyng offended with mine ad-uersitie, might be alienated and turned awaye from the ghospell, then because that I passed for ꝑ shame that I was put to, or for the sorowes or woe whyche
I suffred and endured. And in case I did at any tyme eschewe perill or daungier, I dyd it rather for your pleasure, to satisfye your appetites, hauyng respecte to your profit, then because I cared or passed any thyng for the losse of myne owne lyfe.

The texte. And now beholde I go bound in the spirit vnto Hierusalē, not knowyng the thynges that shall come on me there, but that the holy goost witnesseth in euery cite saying: that bondes and trouble abyde me. But none of these thynges do moue me, neyther is my life deare vnto my selfe, so I might fulfyl my course with ioye, & the ministeracō of the word whiche I haue receiued of the lorde Iesu, to testifye the ghospell of the grace of god.

And I am very glad that I haue so done. Yea and nowe, thoughe I bee free in bodye and not in any bandes, yet beyng in spirite or mynde, as it were, in holde, I take my iourney towardes Hierusalem, where I am not verye cer-teyne what wyll become of me, but onely because that the holy ghost in euery citie, partely by mouthes of the prophetes, and partely in myne owne mynde, doeth sygnifie vnto me, that it shall come to passe that I shalbe bothe fettered and tormented. Whiche thing though I bothe beleue and knowe certaynelye, shall chaunce vnto me, yet none of all these thinges make me afrayed to execute the dutie of an apostle, whiche I am called vnto, though I shoulde be assured to abyde the paynes of death for my labour. For it is not this lyfe that I so muche regarde, whiche cannot perishe beyng vnder the tuicion of Christe, but more do I esteme my maysters commaundemente, then my lyfe: and that I may ende this my course in preachyng the ghospel as cherefully, as I haue hitherto lyfully abyden it. Nothing is there that more delyteth me, then that the ghospell maye be furthered by my afflictions. I haue delite in nothyng els but styll to runne forwardes in the race of the gospell, wherein the lorde hath set me, vntyll that I come to the marke, beyng well assured that I shall accor-dyngly be rewarded at his handes, whyche is mayster of the game, when he shall see tyme at his owne pleasure, who is without deceite. I auaunced not my selfe vnto this office, but the lorde Iesus set me in this rowme, for to preach as well to the Iewes, as also to the Gentiles these moste gladsome tydynges, whiche is, that it hath pleased god freely to saue euery man by beleuyng in the ghospell. Wherfore willyngly and with all my herte wyll I nowe fulfyl this my vocacion, not regardyng whether I lyue or dye.

And now behold, I am sure that henceforth ye all (thorow whom I haue gone preaching the kyngdōe of god) shal se my face no more. Wherefore I take you to recorde this daye, that I am pure fro the bloud of all men. For I haue spared no labour: but haue shewed you all the counsel of god. Take hede therfore vnto your selues, & to all the flocke, among whō the holy goost hath made you ouerseers, to rule the congregacion of god, whiche he hath purchased with his bloud. The texte.

As long as I conueniently myght, I was present with you, and holpe to-wardes

wardes your saluacion, teachyng, admonishyng, exhortyng, comfortynge & rebukyng, as I sawe occasion, with ofte recourse to see you. But nowe am I certayne by inspiration of the holye ghoste, that ye shall neuer moze see me in this worlde agayne, neither ye Ephesians, noz yet any others that are inhabitours of the lesse Asia, vnto whom I haue already preached the kyngdome of God. I haue done my duetie with all diligence, and vprightly. Wherfoze seyng that I muste departe from you without any hope of returne, this do I protestе before you all, that yf any man perysche eyther by hys owne, oz els by others defaulte, I am not gylty of theyr death. I haue shewed euery man the true way to euerlastyng lyfe. I haue opened vnto you the wyll of God, howe he is mynded to saue mankynde and what they muste do that continue in stedfast beliefe towarde oure lozde Jesus, in suche wise that no man can saye foz excuse of himselfe, that he knewe it not. I my selfe haue geuen you ensaumple, both doyng, and also sufferyng al that I myght, to haue you continue in puritie of the Gospell. No mannes death can be imputed to me. And nowe it ariseth not of my free wyll that I muste hence departe frome you, noz yet do I foz feare of anye persecution conuey my selfe awaye, but wittingly and willyngly goe I to vndoubted daungier of my lyfe, beeyng so wylled by the spirite of Christ. Wherfoze what ye cannot come by through my presence, that muste ye supplye wyth youre owne dylygence. See that your owne hertes fayle you not, oz els that your foote slyde not backe from those thynges, that ye haue well entred into, but ye that are the elders, and vnto whom I haue committed cure of this flocke, watche, partely foz your own behalfes, lest ye be seduced by false apostles, and partely foz the flockes sake, whyche ye haue taken in hande to feede. I haue vprightly executed myne office, that was assygned and deputed to me of oure lozde. Take ye lyke care and thought, and with semblable good wyll and vprightnes of behauiour, foz the flocke that the holy ghost hath made you bisshoppes of, that is to saye, ouerseers, to take diligent hede that Christes shepe lacke no holsome foode, and not to playe the partes of woulues, but of faithfull shepeherdes, towarde goddes owne congregacion, whiche ye muste not negligently looke vpon, forasmuche as god did set so muche store by it, that he purchased it by the bloud shedyng of his onely begotten sonne. Ye must therfoze beware that in no wyse the ware whiche god hath so derely boughte, maye perishe oz miscary through your negligence.

The texte. For I am sure of this, that after my departyng, shal greuous woulues enter in among you, not sparing the flocke. Moreouer, of your owne selues shall men arise speaking peruerse thynges to drawe disciples after them. Therfore awake, and remember, that by the space of thre yeares, I ceased not to warne euery one of you, both night and day with teares.

I do not warne you of these thynges aforehande so earnestly foz nothyng. Foz right certaynly assured I am, that you shall not still haue Paules wyth you, but after my departyng, fierce rauenyng woulues shall preasse in among you, as it were in to foldes destitute of the shepeherde, whyche shall not spare the flocke, but shall assaye by all meanes to disperse and scatter the congregacion. Than it is to bee feared, leste that suche as are weake, beeyng euen ouerthrowen with aduersitie, will forsake the ghospell. But yet is there another daunger muche greater then this, that I haue already spoken. There shall come

come not onely from forepn places, whiche by feare, by thcatnyng, by decepte full perſwations, and by fayned & cloked holineſſe, ſhall endeuour themſelues to corrupte your pure lyuing, and to withdrawe your lyberrye, that ye haue by the ghoſpell of Jeſus Chriſte: but alſo euen amonge your ſelues ſhall certayne men ariſe, whiche betraying this concorde and vnitie of myndes, that ye are nowe in, ſhall ſpeake wicked and pernicious thinges, and ſuche thinges as ſhall much ſwerue from the ſyncere veritie of the ghoſpell: And ſuche ſpeakers ſhall not meane, entende, or labour, ỹ Chriſtes flocke may be ſafely preſerued vnto hym, but to haue diſciples in their owne name to folowe their tayles, to the entente that they maye ſeme to be no ſmall fooles; as thoughe they were afeard leſte they ſhoulde ſeme preachers nothing excellente, but altogether vnlearned, vnleſſe they ſhould teache ſome new ſtraunge poinctes of doctryne, of their owne brayne. But dayrlyhe is that newe inuencion, whan men ſhall adde vnto the goſpell, whiche of it ſelfe is ſufficient. He that is a paſtour or ſhepherd in dede, had rather that Chriſt had diſciples, then himſelfe to haue diſciples. And of him doeth a good paſtoure receyue meate wherewith to fede them. But theſe men for to get themſelues renoume, and for their owne pryuate and worldly lucre, make of Chriſtes diſciples, theyr owne diſciples, and wyll be thought to be founders of the doctrine of the ghoſpell, whereof we in deede dede are but ſtewardes and miniſters. Wherfore the greater the daunger is that is at hande, ſo muche the more diligently watche ye, hauyng ſtyll in mynde howe that I (whan I was in Aſia by the ſpace of thre yeres) ceaſſed not daye and nyght to admonyſhe and warne euery one of you with teares.

And nowe brethren, I commende you to god, and to the woorde of his grace, whiche is able to buylde further, and to geue you an inheritaunce among al them which are ſanctified. I haue deſired no mans ſiluer, golde, or veſture. Yea, you your ſelues knowe ỹ theſe handes haue miniſtred vnto my neceſſities, and to thē that were with me. I haue ſhewed you all thinges, howe that ſo labouring, ye ought to receyue the weake, and to remember the woorde of the Lorde Jeſu, howe that he ſayed it is more bleſſed to geue then to receyue. The texte.

And thus brethren, becauſe I muſt parforce departe from you, I commite you all to god (who wyll not forſake his flocke) and to preachinge the woordes of his ghoſpell, wherin whatſoeuer parſones doe ſyncerely and vprightlye vſe themſelues, and doe rather ſette forth the franke bountie, & goodneſſe of god, whiche he freely geueth to all men, then the iuſtice of the lawe: them wyll the fauour of God helpe forewarde in theſame. For my parte accordynge to my duty, haue caſt the foundacion: but god, that worketh all theſe thinges by me, may buylde on it, that the ſame whiche is begonne, maye accordyng to his wyll, be finiſhed, and lyke as it hath hitherto chaunced vnto you, by profeſſyng the ghoſpell to bee the ſonnes of God by adopcion, ſo pe continuyng in this godly purpoſe, maye attayne to ỹ heritage whiche is promyſed vnto all ſuche, as are ſanctified by the grace of god, whether they be Jewes, or els Gentyles. Ye haue ſeen howe carefull I haue been, what trauayle I haue taken, ye haue ſeen what perilles I haue ſuſtayned for your ſakes, ſekyng of you no rewarde for it, neyther honour, neither aduauntage of gaynes, in ſomuche, that I haue not receyued ſo muche as neceſſaries at your handes, whiche the other apoſtles abrode doe, and I both lawfully and alſo with good conſcience myghte haue receyued. I neuer deſired golde, or ſyluer, or ap parell of any manne. For (as it is not vnknowen vnto you all) theſe handes of myne haue ſufficientlye miniſtred all thynges that eyther I, or my felowes with me needed. I myghte haue taken these thinges of you, knowyng that a labourer is worthy his wages and hiere. but I thought it better to loke for all my rewarde at gods hād: and I endeuoured my selfe by all meanes to geue you a ryghte perfite ensample, that ye which haue by succession receyued the charge of the flocke, may perceyue it to be the dutye of a good shepeherde, that whereas he refuseth no laboure to profyte his flocke, yet that he abstayne from receyuyng reward of any man, because of the weake, lest that any man be the more lothe, or maye beare the worse wyll to the ghospell, for that he is compelled to fynde his curate, or els lest any mame passe lesse on the woordes of the pastours, because that he maye thinke them in his daungier, forasmuche as they receyued benefite at his hande. For the nature of men is suche, that they, (after what sorte I can not tell,) set lesse by them to whome they haue been any thing beneficiall. And although it be right, that they which bestowe the tychesse and treasures of the ghospell on you, be holpen againe of you, with youre temporall goodes, whiche be so vyle in respecte of the other, that there is no comparison betwene them, yet I knowyng many weake persones to bee emong you, woulde not gyue any man occasion to ymagine cupll of vs. Endeuoure your selues to folowe this myne ensample as nere as ye maye, haupng styll in minde, what our lorde Jesus sayde: It is better to gyue then to receyue.

And to remembre the woordes of the Lord Jesu.

The texte.

And whan he had thus spoken, he kneled downe and prayed with them all. And they all wepte sore, and fell on Paules necke, and kyssed hym, sorowyng moste of all for the woordes whiche he spake, that they shoulde see his face no more. And they conueyed him vnto the ship.

Whan Paule had thus sayed, he kneled downe as his custome was, & all they lyke wyse dyd the same and made their prayers. Than euery man wepte excedyngly, insomuche that they toke hym about the necke, and kyssed him, as takyng gredely the fruition of hym that streyghtwayes shoulde bee plucked awaye from them: for euery man was sorye in his mynde for his departure, but moste specially for one woorde that Paule had spoken whan he sayed that they shoulde see his face neuer more in the worlde. Whan this was doen, they brought him all a longe to the shyppe (as they dwelte was,) and loked after him, whyles he sayled, as farre as they coulde see him.

The. xxi. Chapter.

The texte.

And whan it chaunced that we had launched furth, and were departed from them, we came with a streyght course vnto Chous, and the day folowynge vnto the Rhodes, and from thence vnto Patara. And whan we had gotten a shyp that would sayle vnto Phenices, we wente aborde into it, and set furthe. But whan Cyprus began to appere vnto vs, we lefte it on the left hande, and sayled vnto Syria, and came to Tyre. For there the shyp vnladed her burden.

AND after we had sette vp sayle, & wer goen out of syght of them ꝑ stoode on the banke lokinge after vs, we sayled streight furth & arryued at ꝑ Yla̅nde called Chous, and nexte day after at Rhodes, & thence furth tyll we touched at Patara, whiche is a citie of Licia, nere to the sea syde. There founde we a shyppe, ꝑ was redye to sayle towarde Phenice & we toke shyppyng there, & sayled therein. But whan the Yla̅nde of Cyprus appeared vnto vs, we leauyng leaupng it on the lefte hande, sayled towarde Syria, & arriued at Tyre, whiche is a citie situate on the sea banke of Phenice, as Sydon is lykewyse . We desired rather to saple strayght forth to Palestyne, but because Tyre was a marte toune, the master of the shyppe wouldе nedes set his marchaundyse on lande there.

¶ And when we had founde brethren, we tarped there seuen dapes. And they told Paule through the spirite, that he should not go vp to Hierusalem. And when the dapes were ended, we departed, and they all brought vs on our wape, with wyues and children, til we were come out of the citie. And we kneled downe in the shore and prayed. And whan we had taken our leaue one of an other, we tooke shyp, and they returned home againe. The texte.

But whan as we founde some disciples there also, we tarted with them seuen dapes. Emong them were some, whiche beynge enspired with the spirite of prophecye, counselled Paule, that he should in no wyse go to Hierusalem. But yet for all that, when the seuen dapes were expired, we departed from Tyre, all the disciples with their children and wyues accompanying and bringyng vs out of the citie to the sea banke. Where after we had kneled downe and made our prayers with one consent, and had taken our leaue one of an other: we tooke shyppyng, and they returned home againe.

¶ When we had full ended the course frō Tyre, we went downe vnto Ptolomaida, & saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day. The nert day, we that were of Paules cumpany, departed & came vnto Cesarea. And we entred into the house of Philip the Euangelistе, whiche was one of ỹ seuen, and abode with him. The same had fower doughters virgins, whiche dyd prophecie. The texte.

From Tyre we sayled to Ptolomaida, whiche is a citie on the sea, nere to the hyll named Carmelus. Here we saluted our brethren, and remayned one daye with them. Nexte daye after, Paule and we wente furth on our tourney, and came to Cesarea, a citye of Palestine, and entred into the house of Philip, whiche firste of all had preached the gholpell to the chamberlayne and to the Samaritanes, and was one of the seuen deacons, that the apostles had instituted and ordeyned at Hierusalem. With him we abode. This man had fower daughters all vnmarred, whiche had aboundantly the spirite of prophecye, accordyng to the prophecye of Ioel.

And as we tarried there a good many of dapes, there came a certaine Prophete from Iewry, named Agabus. Whan he was come vnto vs, he tooke Paules girdle, and bounde his feete, and handes, and sayed: Thus sayeth the holy ghoste, so shall the Iewes at Hierusalem bynde the man that oweth this girdle, and shall delyuer him into the handes of the gentiles. The texte.

And whan we had continued soiourning in his house certaine dates, there came a Prophete from Iewry, whose name was Agabus. He takinge his lodgeing emong vs, and bapting there, tooke Paules gyrdle, whiche after he had knotted about his owne legges, accordynge to the custome of the olde prophetes, whiche had wount to expresse before by some visible token, that thing that they prophecied of, thorough the inspiracion of the holy ghoste, sayed: Thus sayeth the holy ghoste. He that oweth this gyrdle, shall so be bounde of the Iewes at Hierusalem, & they shall delyuer him into ỹ handes of the Gentiles.

When we heard this, both we and other which were of the same place, besought him that he would not go vp to Hierusalem. Then Paul answered and sayed: What do ye weping and vexing myne herte? I am ready, not to be bound onely, but also to dye at Ierusalem for the name of the Lorde Iesu. When we could not turne his mynde, we ceased, saying: the will of the Lorde be fulfilled. The texte.

We beeping muche feared with these woordes, and the disciples also that dwelled there with many wepyng teres desyred him, that he shoulde not committe nc put himselfe into the handes of the Jewes at Hierusalem. This was the godly affeccion and zele of them, that were lothe to haue so excellente a pastour to perysshe. But Paule, whiche had a more certaine aunswere of the holy ghost in his mynde, and knewe that he shoulde fynde goe to Hierusalem, and shoulde after that see Rome, sayed vnto them: wherefore do ye make my herte sory with your bayne teares? For the daungier that the Prophetes warne me of doeth nothyng moue me, but youre douloure and sorowe maketh me to be sory and pensyfe. I am fully mynded to further that thyng whiche the holy ghost wylleth me, namely the ghospell. I nothinge feare bondes, whiche I haue been well enured with. For god forbyd, that I for feare of empryſonment, should leaue of from furthering of the ghospell, seeing that I am ready, yea, yf it were to dye at Hierusalem, for my Lord Jesus sake. Let Paule lye in chaynes, so that the gospell maye haue free lybertie to passe. Let Paul lese his lyfe, so that the glory of Jesus name maye lyuely shyyng and flouryshe emong all men. I am desirous of lyfe for none other ende, but that I maye profite the ghospell. But otherwyse I wouldе recken it great aduauntage gotten, to be shortly ryd out of this lyfe for Christes sake. Wherefore do not ye mourne for that thing that I my selfe am desyrous of, (yf it shall so please God,) and cease ye therefore to make my mynde pensyfe with your wepping and waylyng, for I cannot chose but be sad, seynge my frendes sad. To these his woordes, whē we had nothinge to aunswere, and sawe him fully bent to go to Hierusalem, we suffred hym to departe, saying: the wyll of the Lorde be fulfylled. For these ought to be the woordes of true Christians, and though they haue not ꝑ same woordes styll in their mouthes, yet must they continually thinke them in their hertes, so that in aduersitie, as well as prosperitie, styll muste they saye: The wyll of the lorde be fulfylled.

The texte. After those dayes we tooke vp our burthens, and went vp to Hierusalem. There went with vs also certayne of the disciples of Cesarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an olde disciple, with whome we should lodge. And whan we were come to Hierusalem, the brethren receyued vs gladly. And on the morowe, Paul went in with vs vnto James. And all the elders came together. And whan he had saluted them, he tolde by order all thinges, that God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministracion.

And so whan we had tarryed a fewe dayes at Cesarea, we made readye oure selues to take our iourney towarde Hierusalem. And some of the disciples folowed Paule, and went in cumpany with vs from the citie of Cesarea, bringing with them a certaine man named Mnason, which was a Cyprian borne, with whome we shoulde hoste at Hierusalem. For he was knowen to bee a good and godly man, for he had than of longe tyme beleued the ghospell, and had persisted and continued in the sincerite of the faythe. But whan we were come to Hierusalem, the brethren gladly and ioyfully receyued vs. And Paule the nexte day takinge vs with him, went to James his house the iuste, whiche was called the brother of the Lorde. For he was instituted of the Apostles, byshop of Hierusalem. And thyther assembled all the elders. Whome as soone as Paule had euery chone saluted, he rehearsed to them in order, what God had wrought emong the Gentiles by his ministerye, emonge whome he had nowe a good sorte of yeares preached the ghospell.

The texte. And when they heard it, they glorified the Lorde. And sayed vnto him: Thou seest brother, brother how many thousande Jewes there are whiche beleue, and they are all earnest followers ouer the lawe. And they are informed of the, that thou teachest al the Jewes whiche are among the Gentiles, to forsake Moises, and saiest that they ought not to circumcise their children, neyther to lyue after the customes. What is it therfore? The multitude must nedes come together: For they shall heare that thou art come. Do therfore this that we saye to the. We haue fower men, whiche haue a vowe on them: Them take and purifie thy selfe with them, and do coste on them, that they maye shaue their heades:

and all shall knowe that those thinges, whiche they haue heard concernynge the, are no thing: but that thou walkest and kepest the lawe.

Whan they heard all the matter they glorifyed the Lorde, that had also powred his grace vpon the Gentyles. But forasmuche as Paule was accused to many of the Jewes, to be one that abhorred Moyses law, and that he in settyng furth the benefyte that came by the ghospell, peloed lesse to the obseruacio of the lawe, then he ought to do: to the entent that a remedy myght be founde for this inconuenience also, they sayed vnto hym: brother Paule, sayed they, thou seest howe many thousande Jewes be here that beleue the ghospell, and all these are muche affectionate to the lawe of Moses. And a rumour there is come to their eares, whiche we knowe to bee false, that thou teachest the Jewes, which are among the Gentyles, to forsake and renounce Moyses law, so that they neyther circumcise theyr children, ne kepe the trade of theyr forefathers, as concerning choyse of meates, kepyng of the Sabbothe dayes, washyng, and suche other thinges, as the Jewes, whiche are not conuersaunte with the Gentyles, do with great deuocion, obserue and folowe. These men, beyng restrayned by an acte made of their forefathers, are indifferently contented, that the Gentiles be not burdened with the lawe. But that those, which are Jewes borne, shoulde be led awaye from the obseruacion of the lawe, to the Gentiles kynde of lyfe, they can in no wyse abyde. Wherfore we must take here good hede, that no sedicion be made about this matter. What remayneth thā to be doen? First it cannot be chosen, but that the multitude must be called together. For it wyll soone be knowen, that thou art come. Wherfore to the entente that thou mayest bee out of this suspicion, folowe our counsell. Here be among vs fower men, whiche accordynge to the custome of the Jewes, haue taken a vowe on them, ioyne the with them, and fulfyll together all solemne ceremonies, as they do, that dclyze to be purified and made holy after theyr vowe: and pf there be any thing besydes that is to be bestowed on sacrifice or offeringes, bestowe lyke coste as they do, vntyll suche tyme that they haue sha-uen their heades. And in so doyng, euery man shall knowe for a suertie, those thinges to be false, that be rumoured abrode of the, and they shall also perceyue, that thou in suche sorte besydes doest preache the gracious benefite of the ghospell, that it is without reproofe of thole, that kepe the ceremonies of the lawe, whiche God deliuered them, and other tradicions of their elders, whā they see thee do the same, which some had reported the to dispraue. And by this meanes shall the Jewes cease to speake euyll of the, whiche are so manye in numbre, that they must nedes be had inestimacion and not neglected.

¶ But as concernyng the Gentiles whiche beleue, we haue wyttren and concluded, that they obserue no suche thing, saue onely that they kepe them selues from bloud, and from The texte.
thinges offered to ydolles, and from strangled, and from fornicacion.

But as for the Gentyles, that are conuerted to the fayth, we haue wyt but of late vnto them, as it was agreed vpon, and decreed by the apostles and the whole cumpanye of dyscyples, that they shall not be compelled to kepe Moses lawe, sauyng onely that they absteyne from that fleshe, that is sacrificed vnto goddes, from bloude, from strangled beastes, and from aduoutry.

The texte. ¶ Then the nexte daye, Paule toke the men, and purified himselfe with them, & entred into the temple, declaryng that he obserued the dayes of the purification, vntil that an offeryng shoulde be offered for euery one of them. And whan the seuen dayes were now almost ended, the Iewes whiche were of Asia (when they sawe him in the temple) moued all the people, and layed handes on him, cryeng: men of Israel, helpe. This is the man that teacheth all men euery where against the people and the law, and this place. He hath also brought Grekes into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place. For they had seen with him in the citie, one Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple. And all the citie was moued, and the people swarmed together. And they toke Paul, and drue him out of the temple, and forthwith the doores were shut.

Than Paul dyd after this counsell of James and of the brethren, and takyng vnto hym those fewer persones, whiche had solemnely made a bowe, wente into the temple, and there proclaymyng that his dayes of purifiyng were fynyshed, he omitted nothing, vntyll that sacrifyce was offred vp for euery one of them. All this required seuen dayes space for the accomplyshement therof. Whiche beyng almoste expired, certayne Iewes that beleued not, whiche before had seen hym in Asia, and there raysed commocion agaynste him, whan as they sawe Paule in the temple, they stirred vp the people, and layed handes on Paul, cryeng: Ye men of Israel helpe: this is he, whom you haue by report hearde of, that hath wandered ouer all countreyes, and hath taught in all places a newe doctrine against this people, whiche God chose generally to hymselfe, against our lawe also, whiche we receyued of God, and against this temple, whiche is had in great honour through all the whole worlde. And yet is not this wycked person so contented, but hathe moreouer brought with him into this our temple bothe Grekes, and others, that are not circumcised, and hath prophaned or polluted and suspected this holy place. (For ouryng the tyme that Paule had been in the citie, they had dayly seen in his cumpanye, one Trophimus whiche was an Ephesian borne, and thereby

And al the citie was moued. &c. they coniectured that Paule had brought him into the temple.) With this troublesome noyse all the citie was reysed, and the multitude flocked together. And they toke Paule and drewe hym out of the temple, (as a man worthy to bee deliuered into the handes of the furious rageyng people, to do with hym what they would, and forthwith the doores of the temple were shut faste vp, that he myght haue no place whither he myght safely escape. For they sought opportunitie, that is to saye, a tyme and waye conuenient to kyll him, whiche thing was not lawefull for their religion to doe in the temple,) as though it were not an vngodly and a wicked thing in any place els to slay an innocente.

The texte. As they went about to kyll hym, tydinges came to the high captayne of the souldiers that al Ierusalem was moued. Whiche immediatly toke souldiers and vnder captaines and ran downe vnto them: whan they saw the vpper captayne & the souldiers, they lefte smytyng of Paul. Than the captayne came nere and toke hym, and commaunded him to be bound with two chaynes, and demaunded what he was, & what he had done. And sum cryed one thing, sum another, among the people. And when he could not know the certaynte for the rage, he commaunded him to be caried into the castell. And when he came

vnto a stayre, it fortuned that he was borne of the souldiers, for the violence of the people. For the multitude of the people folowed after crepyng: away with him.

In the meane space, tidynges came to the capitaine marcial of the Romayne armye, that all the cittie of Jerusalem was reysed vp. The captayne forthwith taking a topning vnto hym souldiers, with theyr vnder captaynes, hastened to them. But whan the Jewes sawe the captayne marciall hastenyng toward them with harnessed men, they surceassed, and lefte smytyng of Paule. And whan the captayne was come some what nere, he commaunded them to lay handes on Paule, and to bynde hym with two chaynes, supposyng him to bee some haynous malefactoure, for as muche as the multytude ordred hym so roughly and so sore. That doen, the capitayne enquyred of the Jewes what he was, and what he had committed. But whan he coulde haue no certaynte knowlege, by reason of the troublous noyse that they made on eche syde, toryng and cryng with a loude voyce, one one thyng, and another another thyng, he commaunded that Paule shoulde bee brought into the castell, bounde as he was, that he myght knowe the trueth within the place of defence, and of safe custody, the people beyng set aparte. And whan as Paul came to the staythes of the castell, he was caryed of the souldiers, for feare lest ỹ multitude shoulde violently take hym awaye. For they feared lest they woulde hurte him before he coulde be conueyghed into the castell. For the multitude of the people folowed euen to the very staithes of the castell, crying out as high as they could, awaye with him, dyspatche him awaye with him.

And whan he coulde not knowe the certaintie. &c.

And whan Paule began to be caried into the castell, he sayed vnto the high captaine: maye I speake vnto the? Whiche sayed: Canste thou speake Greke? Art not thou that Egyptian, whiche before these dayes madest an vproze, and leddest out into the wyldernes foure thousand men that were murderers? But Paule sayed: I am a manne which am a Jewe, of Tarsus a citie in Cilicia, citizen of no vyle citie, I beseche ỹ suffer me to speake vnto the people. And whan he had geuen him lycence, Paule stoode on the steppes, and beckened with the hande vnto the people, and whan there was made a greate sylence, he spake vnto them in the Hebrewe toung, saying.

The texte.

But after they came to the entry of the holde, Paule beyng desyrous to satisfye the mynde of the Jewes that made this bulinesse, sayed to the captaine marciall, maye it pleale you to geue me leaue to speake vnto you? The marciall answered: canst thou skill of the greke toung? For Paul had spoken those woordes in Greke. Art not thou (sayed the marciall) the same Egiptian, that hast made commocion before tyme whyle, & that leaddest foure thousande murderers hence into the desert? Paule answered: I am not he whome you take me for, but I am a Jewe borne, and my natyue countrey is Tarsus, a noble citie in Cilicia. But I praye you geue me lycence to speake my mynde to the people. Which whā he had permitted him, Paule standyng on the steppes, beckened with his hande and certified the people by tokens, that he woulde speake vnto them. And streyghtwayes sylence was made, and he began to speake on this wyse, in the Hebrewe tounge.

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon

The.xxii. Chapter.

The texte. Men, brethren, and fathers, heare ye myne answer which I make nowe vnto you. When they heard, that he spake in the Hebrewe tongue to them, they kepte the more silence. And he saieth: I am verayly a manne whiche am a Iewe, borne in Tarsus a citie in Cilicia: neuertheles, yet brought vp in this citie, at the feete of Gamaliel, and instructed diligently in the lawe of the fathers, and was feruently mynded to godwarde, as ye all are this same daye, and persecuted this waye vnto death: byndyng and deliueryng into prison both men and women, as the chiefe priest doeth beare me witnes and all the estate of the elders, of whom also I receyued letters vnto the brethren and wente to Damasco to bryng them which were there, bound vnto Ierusalem, for to be punished.

Men menne whiche be here present, partely by lynage brethren, and partely for your auncient yeares & dignitie fathers, giue eare to me, whiles that I purge my selfe of those thinges, wherof I am falsely accused vnto you. Whā Paul had spokē these wordes in maner of a preamble, ỹ multitude hearinge him speake Hebrewe, made ỹ more silence, whither it were because ỹ euery man vnderstoode this language, or els because ỹ al men beare more fauour to their owne countrey speache, thē to any other. Than did Paul procede and goe furth in his tale in this wyse. To the entent that ye maye perceyue me to haue committed nothing blasphemously, eyther againste this Iudaicall people, or againste Moyses lawe, or els against the temple: I am a Iewe borne, my father and my mother both Iewes, and borne I was at Tarsus, a citie in Cilicia. But brought vp was I in this citie, at the feete of a man, that ye all knewe well inough, whose name was Gamaliel, and euen from my childehoode was I diligently instructed in the lawe of my countrey, earnestly bent to the honouring of the true God, in suche sorte as ye do to this presente tyme: insomuche that I, for the affection that I bare to the lawe, dyd persecute this doctrine of the ghospell, whiche I nowe profesle, puttynge suche as profelled thesame, not to prison and bandes onely, but also to death, entendyng nothyng els then persecucion, with sore threatnynges, and sondry kyndes of death againste the professours of the ghospell, byndyng and castyng into prison, bothe man and woman, that stycked to the sayed doctrine. And that I tell nothinge otherwyse then truely, he can beare me witnesse whiche was than the high priest and all the other auncientes with him, from whom I receyued letters and tooke my iourney towardes Damasco, that I myght bryng thē prisoners from thence to Hierusalem, whiche profelled Christes name, to the entente that they myght be punyshed, accordyng to the dyscrecion of the priestes and elders.

The texte. And it fortuned (as I made my iourney, and was come nygh vnto Damasco) about none, sodaynly there shone from heauen a great lyght rounde about me, and I fell vnto the yerth, and I heard a voyce saying vnto me. Saule, Saule, why persecutest thou me? And I aunswered: what art thou Lord? And he saied vnto me: I am Iesus of Nazareth, whome thou persecutest. And they that were with me, sawe verily a lyght and were afrayed but they heard not the voyce of hym that spake with me. And I sayed: what shall I do Lord? And the Lord sayed vnto me: aryse, and go into Damasco, and there it shall be tolde the of all thinges, whiche are appoynted for the to doe. And when I sawe nothyng for the bryghtnesse of the lyght, I was led by the handes of them that were with me, and came into Damasco: And one Ananias a perfecte manne (and as pertayning to the lawe, hauyng hauing good reporte of all the Iewes whiche dwelt there) came vnto me, and stoode and saied vnto me. Brother Saule, receyue thy sighte. And the same houre I receyued my syghte, and sawe him. And he saied: the God of our fathers hath ordeyned the before, that thou shouldest know his will, and shouldest here the voyce of his mouth, for thou shalte be his witnesse vnto all men of those thinges whiche thou hast seen and heard. And nowe why tarieste thou? Aryse, and be baptised, and washe awaye thy synnes, in callyng on the name of the Lorde.

This mynde dyd I than beare them, for none other cause, then for the affection that I had to the lawe, and to our religion, whiche I had receyued of my forefathers, whiche thing is the occasion that ye nowe at this presente are so muche against me. Nowe wyll I tell you, by what occasion I chaunged my mynde, whiche whan ye shall perceyue, perchaunce ye also wyll turne your myndes. For it chaunced, whan as I went thyther, and was almoste at Damasco, about high noone, sodaynlye a great syght compassed me about from heauen, wherewyth stricken I was, and I fell downe to the grounde, and hearde a voyce speake vnto me from heauen, saying: Saule, Saule, why doest thou persecute me? Vnto whome, whan I had made aunswer: What art thou lorde? the voice saied againe: I am Jesus of Nazareth whom thou pursuest. But my companions that were with me sawe the light, and were sore afrayed, as for the voyce that spake vnto me, they heardе it not. Than sayed I: Lorde what is thy wyll that I shoulde doe? The lorde made aunswer againe in this wyse: Aryse and go to Damasco. There shall eche thynge that thou must doe, be tolde thee. And where myne yes were so daseled with the brightnes of that syght, that I coulde see nothyng at all, my felowes led me by the hande, vntyll I came to Damasco. There mette I with a good man, and one that for his vpryght walkyng in the lawe, was allo Godly, named Ananias, of whome all the Jewes that dwelt than at Damasco reported well. This Ananias standyng by me, sayed thus. Brother Saule receyue thy syght againe. And I forthwith receyued my syght and sawe him.

Than sayed he: The God of our fathers hath chosen and ordeyned the for this ende, that thou shouldest knowe his wyll, and that thou shouldest see him, that is onely iuste: whiche iustifyeth all thynge, and that thou shouldest heare the voyce of his mouthe. For Jesus was in the same syghte, that daseled thyne yes, and it was his voyce that thou orddest here, forbecause thou shalte bee a witnes vnto him before all menne, of those thinges, whiche thou hast seene and hearde, and now seeing this is the wyll of god, wherefore doest thou stay. Aryse, and be christened, and washe awaye thy synnes, callyng vnto his name, whom thou before hast persecuted.

¶ And it fortuned, that when I was come agayne to Hierusalem, and prayed in the temple, I was in a traunce, I sawe him, saying vnto me: Make haste and get the quickely out of Hierusalem: for they wil not receyue thy witnes that thou bearest of me. And I saied: Lord, they knowe, that I pursoned and bet in euery Synagoge them that beleued on thee. And when the bloud of thy witnes Steuen was shed, I also stode by, and consented vnto his death, and kept the rayment of them that slewe hym. And he saied vnto me: departe, for I wyll sende thee a farre hence vnto the Gentyles. The texte.

These thynges doen at Damasco, when as I within shorte space after, had returned vnto Jerusalem, beeyng than a newe man, and was prayeng in the temple, tarriyed I was beſydes my ſelfe, and Ieſus I ſawe whiche ſayed vnto me: Make haſte, and get the ſpedely out of Hieruſalem, for here wyl they not receyue thy teſtimony of me. Than aunſwered I in this wyſe: Lorde, I haue a good hope, that I ſhall doe good amonge this people, forasmuche as themſelues knowe, that I for fauoure that I dyd beare vnto the law cruelly handled thy diſciples, halyng into pryſon as many as I coulde take, & whyppyng them in all congregacions, that gaue credence vnto thy goſpell. And yet was I not ſatisfyed with this doyng. But whan the bloude of Steuen was ſhed, whiche by his death bare faithfull witnes of the, and with great boldnes and conſtancie, I alſo was by whan they ſtoned hym, & conſented to the death of the innocent man, inſomuche that I kepte their garmentes, whiche brought hym to the place of execucion, and that fyrſt began to caſt ſtones at him. And ſeyng that euery man may well vnderſtande by this, howe muche affectionate I was once towardes the lawe, they may now ryghte well perkeyue that I chaunged not myne intent without great cauſes, & many ſhall be founde, that wyll ſo muche the more gladly folowe myne enſample, the more they ſhall ſee that my zeale was towardes this olde religion, for loue whereof I the more cruelly perſecuted thyne. Whan I had this ſayed, the Lorde aunſwered: Goe, I ſay, and do as I byd the, for nowe is tyme come, that the ſpreadynge of my goſpell all the worlde abrode were begun. And for this ende haue I choſen the, that I maye ſende the from hence to far countreyes amonge the Gentyles.

The texte. ¶ They gaue him audience vnto this worde, and then lyfted vp theyr voyces, and ſayed: away with ſuche a felowe from the yearth: for it is not reaſon that he ſhould liue. And as they cryed, and caſte of theyr clothes, & threwe duſt in the ayre, the captayne commaunded him to be brought into the caſtel, and bad that he ſhoulde be ſcourged, and to be examined, that he might know, wherfore they cryed ſo on him. And when they bound hym with thonges, Paule ſayed vnto the Centurion that ſtode by hym: Is it lawful for you to ſcourge a man that is a Romayne, and vncondemned? Whan the Centurion heard that, he wente and tolde the vpper captayne, ſayeng: what entendeſt thou to do? for this manne is a citizen of Rome.

The Jewes had peaceably ſuffred Paule to ſpeake his mynde, vntyll he ſpake thoſe wordes, Yis (I wyll ſende the to farre countreyes among the Gentiles.) Theſe wordes renewed ſtirres euery mans griefe, becaule that the Jewes beare great deſpite, and wunderfully abhorred the Gentiles: & for this cauſe dyuerſe of thoſe alſo whiche delyuered not the ghoſpell, would in no wyſe that the Gentyles ſhoulde haue been made partakers of the gracious benefite that cummeth by the ghoſpell: or yf they nedes ſhoulde be receyued, that than they ſhoulde not be receiued, vnleſſe they woulde be circumciſed, as who ſhould ſay, that a man might not bee a good man & in the fauour of God, vnleſſe he wer a Jewe. Wherefore whan they heard that the Gentiles were preferred before the inhabitauntes of Hieruſalem, with great clamoure and noyſe they interrupted Paules tale, and ſayed vnto the marcyall: Ryd out of the worlde, for it is pitie that he lyueth. And whan the Jewes by many tokens, vttred the outrageous griefe of theyr myndes, by cryeng, and caſtyng of their garmentes, and finally by throwyng duſt into the ayre, the marciall ſuppoſed that ſome haynous crime had been committed, by occaſion wherof, all the people thus was ſtirred vp after ſo ſtraunge a ſorte: ſpecially ſeeyng that through licence gyuen by hym vnto Paule to tell his tale, there had come nought els, but more inconuenience, cõmaunded his ſouldiers to bryng Paule

into the castell, and by wape of examinacion to whyppe hym, to the ende that by that meanes at the least wise, they might of his owne confession, get out of him the cause, why the people tooke vp suche exclamacion against him.
And whyles they at the commaundemente of the marcyall, were in byndynge him towardes his whyppynge, Paule saied vnto an vnder captayne standing by, whiche was appoynted to see hym examined with tormentes: What, is it a thing lawfull for you to whyppe a Romayne, yea, and that before he be cast or founde guilte of his trespace? Whiche woordes whan the petie captaine heard, he spedely went vnto the marcyall, and shewed hym what he had heard, saying: what intende ye to doe? For this man, whome ye haue commaunded to be whypped, is a citizen of Rome.

Than the vpper captayne came, and saied vnto him: tell me, arte thou a Romaine? He saied: yea. And the captayne answered: with a great sum obtayned I this freedome. And Paule saied: I was free borne. Then streyght waye they departed from him which should haue examined hym. And the high Captaine also was afrayed, after he knew that he was a Romayne, and because he had bounde hym. The texte.

But assone as the marcyall heard this, he came to Paul himselfe, and saied vnto him: Tell me is that same true, that my petie captayne hath certified me of? Art thou a citizen of Rome? And when Paule had affirmed that he was a citizen of Rome, the marcyall answered: It is a great matter that thou speakest of. For it coste me a great some of money, before I could be franchised and made a citizen of Rome. Then saied Paule: In this matter my chaunce was better, for I was borne citizen of Rome, and that lawfullye, for my parentes before me were lykewyse. Than furthwith those whiche were ready there to haue gotten out the truceth of him by meane of tormentes, departed from Paul. And the marcyall also himselfe feared of his owne parte, after that he perceiued hym to be a citizen of Rome, because that he had bounde him. So greatly was the name of the Romaynes than feared.

On the morowe (because he would haue knowen the certaintie wherefore he was accused of the Jewes) he loused him from his bandes, and commaunded the high priestes and all the councell to come together, and he brought Paul forth, and set him before them. The texte.

The nexte daye the captayne beyng desyrous to knowe what the matter was, that the Jewes had accused him, loused him out of his bandes, and commaunded that the chiefe priestes shoulde assemble togyther, and all the whole councell lykewyse, and further brought he Paule before them, that the matter myght be entreated by the heades without commocion of the multitude.

The.xxiii.Chapter.

Paule beholde the councell, and saied: men and brethren I haue lyued in all good conscience before God vntyll this daye. And the hye priest Ananias commaunded them that stoode by, to smyte him on the mouthe. Then saied Paule vnto him: God shall smyte thee thou paynted wall. Sittest thou and iudgest me after the law and commaundest me to be smitten contrary to the law? And they that stode by, saied: reuilest thou Gods hye priest? Then saied Paul: I wyst not brethren, that he was the hye priest. For it is written: thou shalt not curse the ruler of thy people. The texte.

Than

THan Paule hauyng his yes fixed and stedfastly set on ꝑ councell, begon to speake in this wyse: I haue been conuersaunt in the sight of God, who onely gyueth rightful iudgement, vntyll this present day, beating my selfe vprightly and with a good conscience, in all matters.

Whan the high priest Ananias had heard him so boldly speake, and so freely, howe that strayght wayes he declared and auouched himselfe to be giltles, to the iudges reproche, and other his accusers, takyng the matter greuously, that he had not reuerently spoken of hym, neyther that he any thynge cloked the matter, commaunded those that stoode by, to buffet hym on the face whyles he was speakyng. This was it, that the lorde had certified Paul of before, whan he sated: They shall not receyue thy wytnesse of me. Thā Paule on the oue syde disdeynyng in his mynde at this iniury, whiche was neuer vsed, no not in the iudgementes of the heathen, and on ethe other syde certifyinge hym that he should be punished at Gods hande afterwardes in time to come for such manifest tirany, saied vnto him: God shall smite the thou whitelymed wall. Sittest thou in this wyse, that whan thou hast heard the matter, thou mayest geue sentence accordyng as the lawe requireth, and commaundest thou me to bee smitten before thou heareste the matter, contrary to the lawe whiche forbyddeth that any man shoulde be punyshed, exepte he be lawfully conuicted and cast. Than they whiche stoode nexte vnto Paule, saied vnto hym: Doest thou in this wise reuyle Gods high priest? To suche extreme tyranny was than the priesthoode of the Iewes come, that they claymed it as a thing lawfull for them, againste right and equyte, to do euery man hurte, and yet would not they permit other me freely to speake. Whiche was an euidēt token that their priesthood shoulde not long continue, after it was come to the extremitie of all mischiefe. Than Paul, perceyuing that he should nothing further his cause vnder such a iudge, thought that best it was onely to seke occasion, howe that assembly myght be dissolued. Wherefore he aunswerd: Brethren I was vncertayne that this man was the high priest. Els I remembre well, that it is written in the booke of Exodus: Thou shalte not speake euyll by the Prince or rewler of the people. After he had with this aunswere, somewhat appeased these that warned hym therof, he ymagined some occasion, howe he myght auoyde the tumulte and murmouring of the people. For lawfull it is to voyde peryll by crafte, whereas appereth no hope of profityng.

Sittest thou and iudgest me?e.

The texte.

Whan Paule perceyued that the one parte were Sadducels and the other Phariseis, he cryed out in the councell. Men & brethren, I am a Pharisee the sonne of Pharisee. Of ꝑ hope & resurrection fed death, I am iudged. And whā he had so sayd, there arose a debate betwene the Phariseis & the Sadducels: and ꝑ multitude was deuyded. For: ꝑ Sadducels say, ꝑ there is no resurrection, neither aungell, nor spirit: but the Phariseis graunt both.

Wherfore Paul, considerynge that in the congregacion there were two sortes of menne, the one Sadducels, the other Phariseis, whiche agreed not one with an other, saied with a loude voyce in audience of the counsell, so that euery man might here him: Brethren I am a Phariley, and my parentes were Phariseis, and I am arrayned, for because that I preache, that the dead shal ryse agayne. After he had thus saied, there arose dyssencion betwene the Phariseis, and the Sadducels: And the multitude also that was presente keepyng them at variaunce, parted among themselues, and were of sundrye

opinions and partes. For the Sadducees, in asmuche as they beleue that the soule dieth with the body, do nether alowe resurreccion, nor suppose that there is any spirite or aungell: The Phariseis on the other part beleue both that resurreccion shalbe, and that there be bothe Angelles and spirites. Wherefore the multitude with great clamour began to make trouble.

The texte. And there arose a great crye, and whan the Scribes whiche were of the Phariseis parte arose, they stroue saying: we finde no euil in this man: Though a spirite or an angel hath appered to him, let vs not striue against God. And whan there arose great debate, the capitayne (fearing lest Paul shoulde haue ben plucte a sundre of them) commaunded the souldiers to go downe, and to take him from among them, and to bring him into the castle.

In the meane space certayne Scribes of the Phariseis secte, arose, and contended in the fauour of Paule, and sayed: We perceyue nothynge wherein this man hath transgressed. And yf that the holy ghoste or an aungell hath spoken vnto him, it is not oure parte to contende ne striue with God. This they sayed, vpon the occasion that Paule the day before had shewed the, that the lorde had appered vnto hym by a vision in the temple. So muche doeth it anayle in cases alredye rewled and determined, to be of this secte, or of that. But whan this dyssencion encreased more and more by reason that the Sadducees cryed out so sore against the Phariseis, and the matter seamed like to growe to nothing els, but to an extreme and deadly commocion, the marciall fearing lest that Paule shoulde be plucked in pieces among them, commaunded the souldiers to go downe, and take Paule from the throng, and to bring him into the castell againe.

The texte. The night folowynge, God stoode by him and sayed: be of good chere Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou beare witnes also at Rome.

Than was it tyme, that God shoulde somewhat coumforte him, that so manfully had wrastled for hym, seyng that these troubles were so sore, and yet lyker wer at hande. Wherefore the nexte night againe, the Lorde stoode by hym, saying: Be of good courage Paul. These troubles shal not make an end of the, for the tyme of death is not yet come: but yet is it to come, that euen as thou hast valiauntly borne witnesse of me at Jerusalem, so shalte thou witnesse of me at Rome also. Thou hast doen thy parte in this citie, whiche is the chiefe in all Jewry, it remayneth nexte that thou do the same in Rome, whiche is the head citie of all the worlde.

The texte. And whan it was daye, certayne of the Jewes gathered themselues together, and made a vowe, saying that they would neither eate nor drinke, tyll they had killed Paul. They were mo then fowertie men, which had made this conspiracion. And they came to the chiefe priestes & elders, and sayed: we haue bounde our selues w a vowe, that we wil eate nothing, vntyll we haue slayne Paul. Nowe therefore geue ye knowlecge to the vpper captayne and to the councell, that he bring him forth vnto vs to morowe, as though we would knowe some thinge, more perfectly of him. But we (or euer he come nere) are ready to slyl hym.

But as soone as it was day, certayne Jewes made a conspiracion, and cursed them selues to the deuyll and to damnacion, yf they dyd eyther eate or drinke, before they had slayne Paule: so greate malyce had they conceyued against hym. And it was no small noumbre, that had made this conspiracie, but they were aboue fowertie. These persons wente to the high priestes and elders, and shewed them their entente and purpose, sayinge: We haue moste depely

cursed our selues, to be perpetually damned in hell, if we eyther eate or drynke, before we shall haue slayne Paule. Nowe must ye lykewyse put vnto your helpyng handes to the furtheraunce of our request, that we maye the more easely bryng to passe that thinge, whiche we are all desyrous to doe. Stande ye wooyde to the highe marciall, both in your names, and also in the name of the whole counsell, that he bryng Paule before you againe, pretendynge that ye wyll enquyre more dilygently of him, forasmuche as yesterdaye ye coulde not, by reason of the commocion. And we shall so prouyde, that he shall not come safely into the castell againe, as he yesterdaye dyd, but before he come to the place, where the counsell shalbe kepte, we wyll be ready to slay him.

The texte. ¶ When Paules syster sonne herd of their layinge wayte, he wente, and entered into the castell and tolde Paul. And Paul called one of the vnder captaynes vnto him, & sayde: Bryng this young man vnto the high captayne, for he hath a certaine thing to shewe him. And he tolde hym, and brought him to the high captaine, and sayde: Paul the prisoner called me vnto him, and prayed me to bryng this young man vnto the, which hath a certaine matter to shewe the. The hyghe captayne toke him by the hande, and wente with him out of the waye, and asked him, what is it that thou hast to tell me? And he sayde: the Iewes are determined to desire the, that thou wouldest bring forth Paule to morowe into the counsel, as though they would enquire sumwhat of him more perfectely. But folowe not thou their mynides: for there lye in wayte for him, of them, more then fowertye men, which haue bound them selues with a vowe, that they will neither eate nor drynke, tyll they haue killed hym. And nowe are they ready, and loke that thou shouldest promyse. The vpper captayne then let the young man departe, and charged hym, sayinge: see thou tell it out to no man, that thou hast shewed these thinges to me.

Whiche craftye trayne of so deadly daungier, after that a certaine young manne, neuewe vnto Paule by his sisters syde, had perceyued, he thought the matter woulde not be slepte, but forthwith entred into the castell, and vttred vnto Paule, the daungier that was at hande. Whan Paul knew of this he called one of the vnder captaynes vnto hym, and sayed: Bryng this younge man vnto the marciall, for a certaine matter he hath to dysclose to hym.

Than the Captayne toke the young manne, as he was desired to doe, and led hym to the marciall, and sayd: That same felowe Paule, which is in holde, desired me to bryng this young man vnto you, and sayed that he had a certaine matter, whiche he desyred to talke with you of. Than the marciall toke the young man by the hande, and wente a syde with him, and asked: what is the matter that thou wouldest speake with me? He answered. The Iewes haue conspired the death of Paule, and haue thus agreed among themselues, that they wyll entreate you, to bryng Paule againe before the councell to morowe: vnder the pretence, that they wyll more dilygently make enquirie of hym, forasmuche as yesterday they coulde not well saye al that they wouldе haue sayed vnto hym. But they entende an other matter. Wherefore ye had nede to take hede, that ye do not vnawares graunt them their desyres. For they haue layed their heades together and do vtterly purpose to destroy Paule, yea there be aboue fowerty, that haue cursed themselues depely, yf they eyther eate or drinke, before they haue slaine him. And euen nowe are they ready to commit this mischiefe, and loke but for an answer of you. Whan the marciall had heard this, he let the young man departe chargeyng him, that he shoulde tell no man, that he had vttered this matter vnto the marciall. For he was desyrous to saue Paules lyfe, but yet so, that he myght auoyde the yll wyll of the Iewes.

The texte. ¶ And he called vnto him, two petie Captaynes, saying: make redye two hundred souldiers souldiers to go to Cesarea, and horsemen three score and ten, and speare men two hundred at the thirde houre of the nyghte. And delyuer them beastes that they may set Paule on, and bring him safe vnto Felix, ꝑ high deputie: and he wrote a letter after this maner. Claudius Lisias vnto the moste mighty ruler Felix, sendeth greetinges. This manne was taken of the Iewes, and shoulde haue been kylled of them. Then came I with souldiers, and rescued him, and perceyued that he was a Romayne. And when I would haue knowen the cause, wherefore they accused hym, I brought him foorth before the counsell. There perceiued I that he was accused of questions of the lawe. But was not guilty of any thing worthy of deathe or of bandes. And when it was shewed me howe that the Iewes layed waite there for him, I sent him streyght wayes to the, and gaue commaundement to his accusers, that the thynges, which they haue against him, they should tell before the: fare well. The texte.

Wherefore he called two of his petie Captaynes vnto hym, and sayed: Make ye readye of souldiers, two hundreth foote men, and three score and ten horsemen, and two hundreth speare men, that may go to Cesarea, soone vpon the thirde houre of the nyght: prouyde also horses, that ye maye carry Paule safe to the ꝓcurydest Felyx: the cause of the marcyalles so ꝓfytte diligence, was not for this onely cause and purpose to saue a magnes lyfe (for he was not a man of any suche conscience) but his desyre was to be dyspatched of Paul whome he neyther coulde defende or mayntayne against the lette malice of the whole counsell, nor yet durst commit him beyng a citizen of Rome, vnto their furiouse handes. And therfore commaunded he that he shoulde be had forth away by nyght, with a great bende of men, fearyng lest that yf he had gone in the daye, or with a small company, the Iewes would haue taken him away in his iourney, and kylled him: and than the fault should haue lyen on his necke, because it would haue been thought, that he had betrayed a citizen of Rome. And he sente also a lettre vnto Felix, the tenour wherof foloweth. Claudius Lysias vnto the moste worthye ꝓsident Felix, greetyng. The Iewes had layed handes on this man, and would haue slaine him, vnlesse I, vpon knowledge that he was a citizen of Rome, had rummen with a bende of men, and taken him from them. And forasmuche as I was desyrous to knowe the cause wherfore they accused him, I brought him before their owne councell. Whome I founde to be clere without fawte, eyther worthy death, or els wherfore he had deserued to be empryssoned, sauyng that certayne questions of the Iewes lawe were layed to his charge, but nothinge els. As soone as I was certifyed, that the Iewes had appointed to lye in wayte for him, I sente him forthwith vnto you, admonyshynge the Iewes withall, whiche bee his accusers, that yf they haue any thing to laye to his charge, they shoulde take theyr iourney to plead their matter before you. And thus fare ye well.

Then the souldiers (as it was commaunded them) tooke Paule, and brought him by night to Antipatras. On the morowe they lete their horsemen to go with him, & returned vnto the castell. Whiche whan they came vnto Cesarea (and deliuered the epistle to ꝑ deputie) presented Paul before him. Whā the deputie had red the letters, he asked of what countrey he was. And when he vnderstoode that he was of Cilicia, I will heare the (sayed he) whan thyne accusars are come also: and he commaunded hym to be kept in Herodes iudgement hall. The texte.

Than the souldiers, accordyng as they were commaunded of the marcial, beyng charged with Paule, brought him by night to Antipatras the citie.

The nexte daye forasmuche as Cesarea was not ferre of, and they supposed then that there was no great daungier to be feared, the footemen returned to Hierusalem into the castell agayne, and the horsemen wente with Paule vnto

Cesarea.

Cesarea. Whyther after they were come, and had delyuered the letter vnto the presydent, they brought Paul also before hym. And whan the presydente had perused the letters, he asked Paul of what prouynce he was. Whan Paul answered that he was a Cilician borne: I wyll heare the, (sayed he,) whan thy accusers are present. And so commaunded that he should be kepte in Herodes iudgement hall.

The. xxiiii. Chapter.

The texte.

After fyue dayes, Ananias the high priest descended with the elders, and with a certayne oratour named Tertullus, whiche enformed the deputie against Paule. And whan Paul was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying: Seyng y we lyue in great quietnesse by thy meanes of the, and that many good thinges are done vnto this nacion, through thy prouidence, that allowe we euer, and in al places, most noble Felix, with all thankes. Notwithstanding, that I be not tedious vnto thee, I pray the, that thou wouldest heare vs of thy curtesy, a fewe wordes. For we haue found this man, a pestilet felowe, and a mouer of debate vnto all the Iewes, in the whole world, and a mayntener of sedicion, of the sect of the Nazarites, whiche hath also enforced to pollute the temple. Whom we toke, and would haue iudged him according to the lawe: but the high captaine Lisias, came vpon vs, and with great violence toke him awaye out of our handes, commaunding his accusers to come vnto the. Of whom thou mayest (yf thou wilte enquire) knowe the certaynte of all these thinges, whereof we accuse him: The Iewes ihe wyse affirmed, saying that these thinges were euen so.

Than within fyue dayes after, Ananias whiche was than the high priestе, and certaine other elders, came downe to Cesarea: hauing in their traine a certaine oratour named Tertullus, whiche should pleade this matter. So carnestly were they set to slay Paul. Whiche men after they had spoken with the presidente, and had required that the prysoner myght be brought forth, Felix commaunded Paule to be called forth to appere.

Than Tertullus, beeing but a flendre and base defendour or protectour of an euyll cause, beganne in this wyse to accuse Paule: Where as we maye thanke you that all matters haue been quiet and peaceable emonge vs this long space, and many dyuerse and soondry thinges are tyghte well gouerned in our common weale by your wysedome, we at all tymes and in all places knowelege and sette forth this your goodnesse towardes vs, moste noble captayne Felix, and nowe therfore, doe rendre vnto you moste herty thankes.

And this your redynes of right gentle herte towardes our nacion, putteth vs in great hope and confidence, that ye wyll consydre the tranquillitie of our countrey, as concernyng this cause also, whiche we nowe bryng before you. But lest that I should retaine, and kepe you awaye from your soondry and weighty affayres with ouer long a processe or circumstaunce of wordes, I shall desyre you, as your accustomed gentilnesse is, to here vs speake oure myndes in fewe wordes. We haue perceyued this manne to bee a deadly enemye to our countrey, for as muche as he hath sette debate betwene the Iewes, not onely those that inhabite Sitia, but the others also in all countreys through the worlde, wheresoeuer is any resorte of Iewes, makynge hymselfe the bringer in of a new secte, whiche is called the Nazarenes. And not contented with this,

hé was not afrayed to come to Hierusalem, and bryngyng into the temple men that were not circumcised, stricked not to prophane & fulspende our temple, whō we tooke with the dede doyng, and would haue iudged accordyng to our law, but Lisias the hygh marciall, came with a greate bande of men, and toke hym out of our handes, leauyng the cramynacion of the matter vnto you, and willed hys accusers to come before you: so that the marciall hymselfe canne testifye vnto you, that these matters are true, whether we laye to his charge. In this wyse this slender and lyeng oratour sayed: and the Iewes that were present at this accusacion, affyrmed that it was euen so, as Tertullus had sayed.

Then Paul (after that the debate hymself had beckened vnto him, that he should speake) answered: With a more quiet mynde do I answere for my selfe, for as much as I vnderstand, that þ hast bene of many yeares a iudge vnto this people: because that thou mayst know, that there are yet but twelue dates sence I went vp to Ierusalē for to worship, & they neyther founde me in the temple disputing with any man, neyther rayssyng vp þ people, neyther in the Synagoges, nor in the citie. Neither can they proue the thynges where of they accuse me. The texte.

Than after this Paule whan the presidente by his beckenyng had willed hym to make answere for hymselfe, began to defende his owne part in this wyse: I shall with a great dele the more quiet mynde answere for my selfe, for asmuche as I knowe that ye haue bene of many yeres enbuilded emong thys people: and that by reason of deciding matters belongyng to the Iewes, ye are not ygnoraunt of our lawes. And the later that this matter hath been discussed whereof these men accuse me, so muche the more certaynlye maye ye, by enquirie, knowe it, for it is yet but twelue dayes sence that I accordyng to the custome of the Iewysshe religion, came vp to Ierusalem, there to make my prayers, and to purifie my selfe, after I had taken on me a vowe accordyng to the solemne maner and fashion of the Iewes. If ye call this violatyng or pollutyng of the temple, I knowledge my faulte and offence. Neyther founde they me in the temple disputyng with any man, neither making þ people to flocke together, no nor in the Synagoges, nor yet in any place of the citie. Neyther can they dewlye proue by any reason, such faultes as they laye vnto my charge.

But this I confesse vnto the, that after þ waye (which they call heresy) so worship I the God of my fathers, beleuyng all thynges which are writtē in the law & the prophetes, & haue hope towardes God, that þ same resurrectiō of þ dead (which they themselues loke for also) shalbe vnto of iust & vniust. And therfore study I to haue alway a cleare conscience towarde God, and towarde man. The texte.

As for that poynete whiche they laye vnto me concernyng the secte of the Nazarenes, I will not denye that that is true. And yet myne accusers haue nothing to doe therwith, forsomuch as the Iewes haue not condemned that secte, and agayne I am not the autour therof. But if ye bee desirous to heare what secte I profesle, I will shewe you: I doe accordyng to the tradicion of þ Pharisees, and their secte, worshipp the God, that is commonly worshipped in my countrey, and am not autour of any new religion, but kepe those thynges, that I haue receyued of my forefathers dylygentlye, beleuynge all thynges to be true, that are wrytten in the lawe, and in the prophetes, whiche thynges al for the moste parte, inasmuche as god, lyke as he promysed, hath now fulfylled. I doe fully beleue that those thynges also will cum to passe, whiche he hath promysed for to cum, that is to say, that the dead shall ryse againe in tyme to cum, as well the badde as the good: the good to receyue gloriously lyfe euerlasting, the badde to euerlastyng punishement. These thynges am not I in a wauc- Beleuyng all thynges whiche are wrytten in þ law and the prophetes.

tyng beleke of, but so earnestly I am perswaded in the, that for asmuche as I knowe that in time to cumme, I shall appeare before god in ỹ place of iudgement, & shalbe rewarded according to my dedes, I endeuoure my selfe earnestly, so to lyue, that I in nothing offende the lawe of God: but that I may haue a pure & a clere conscience, not only in the sight of god, which examyneth mans herte, but also in the syght of man. And this haue I diligently obserued & followed, euen vntyll thys day. And therfore haue they nothyng wherof to accuse me as touchyng my lyfe that is past, whereby that suche matters as they laye vnto my charge, maye appere the more probably to be true.

The texte. But after many yeares, I came & brought almes to my people, & offerynges, in the which they founde me purified in the temple, neyther ỹ multitude, nor yet with tumultuousnesse. Howbeit there were certayne Iewes out of Asia which ought to be here present before thee, & accuse me, yf they had ought against me: or els let these same here saye, yf they haue founde any cyll doing in me, whyle I stand here in the councell, except it be for this one voyce, that I cried standyng among them: of the resurrection from deathe, am I iudged of you this daye.

For whan I had lyued vprighte wythoute faulte many yeares, at the laste came I to Hierusalem, there to make deliuery of certayne money which I had gathered in Asia, to helpe the poore & nedye folkes in my countrey. If this be the parte of a malefactour, for to helpe my poore countreymen, beslowyng on them my benefite, I wyll acknowledge that, that they laye to my charge. And in the meane time, lest that they, which sought occasion, might make any trouble or businesse, I chaued my heade, and so went into the temple, and was purified with accustomed ceremonies, doyng nothing whereby anye trouble or businesse mought aryse. For I began no newe thing, but the same ceremonies vsed I, that all the whole countrey vseth. But the commocion that was made, was reysed vp by certayn Iewes of Asia, whom it had bene expedient to haue bene present at the debating and triall hereof, forasmuche as they are the workers of this matter, and that they shoulde accuse me yf they had anye thyng to laye to my charge.

But it is a greate suspeccion, that they haue smal confidence in their cause forasmuch as they absent themselues from this iudgemente, perceiuyng that the matter is pleaded before you whiche are the presidente here. Yf I had offended, I myght haue bene conuicted by the, or els quitte by them. Albeit I feare no manne, what euer he be that accuseth me. Yea let them themselues whiche are here present, speake: seing that I stand here before the counsel, if they haue sene me do any thing otherwise, then is lawful before god, and standyng wyth the lawe. For it is lawful where iudgement is kept accordyng to the law, both for the plaintie to laie to the charge of the transgressour, and for the defendaũt to be his owne man of lawe, or procloure.

But I knowe thei haue nothing against me, excepte thei wil laie these wordes in my teathe, whiche I with a loude voyce spake: that I was a Pharisee, and that I was for this poinct accused, because I preached resurrection of ỹ dead, agayne vnto lyfe: whiche wordes I sayed, forasmuche as standyng as I dyd emong them, and permitted of the marcial to vtter my mynde, I saw nothyng doen vprightly by lawe, but all to passe vpon playne hatred and malice. And whan I had so sayed, they contended betwene themselues, vntill that the marciall tooke me out of theyr handes. I spake nothyng but the trueth, and met-it was that the multitude should knowe wherfore I was endaungered before the counsell: forasmuche as I sawe there was no helpe to be loked for, at the handes of the chefe rewlers.

Whan Felix heard these thinges, he deferred them, for he knewe very wel of that way, & sayed: whan Lisias the captaine is cum downe, I wyl know the utmost of your matter. The texte.
And cõmaunded an vnder captaine to kepe Paul, & to lette him haue rest, & that he should forbid none of his acquayntaunce to ministre vnto him, or to cum vnto him.

Whan Felix had hearde this, because he was well acquainted with the secte of the Pharisees which Paule professed, he minded to deferre the exampnation of the matter, vntill an other tyme, and sayed: Forasmuche as Lisias knoweth al this whole matter how it standeth, whan he cummeth hyther, I will heare you. And than gaue he commaundement vnto his vnder captaine, that he shoulde in the meane season kepe him in warde, but yet so, that he myght be gentely ordred, and that he myght dyuerse tymes be at lybertye, and that hys familiars myght freely repayre vnto hym, and bryng him suche thynges as he lacked.

And after certayne dayes, when Felix came wt his wife Drusilla (which was a Jewesse) he called furth Paul, & heard him of ye faith, which is toward Christ. And as he preached of righteousnes, temperaunce, & iudgement to cum, Felix trembled & answered: Go thy way for this time: whan I haue a conuenient season, I will sende for the. He hoped also, ye money should haue bene geue him of Paul, that he might leuse him: wherfore he called him the oftener, & cõmoned with him. But after two yeares, Festus Porcius came into Felix roume. And Felix willyng to shewe ye Jewes a pleasure, lefte Paule in prysõ bounde. The texte.

And whan a good sorte of dayes were past, Felix came to Cesarea wt his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewe borne, and than sent he for Paule, beyng desyrous to haue further knowledge of him, as concerning ye fayth that he professed. Than Paule opened vnto him the way to saluation by ye gospel, which thing he before had not spoken of, and how that saluation was not obteyned by obseruing of Moyses lawe, as the Jewes supposed, but by beleuyng in Jesus Christe, whome beyng so many hundreth yeres loked for, the Jewes had crucyfied: and that by baptisme, all synnes committed by the whole time & course of mannes lyfe before, were at once washed away, so that suche as were regenerate in Christ, should lyue sincerely and holyly, accordyng to the rewle of the gospel, from thence forth, vntyll suche tyme that the same Jesus, which hath geuen himself for the redemption of manne, dyd gloriously returne in syght of all menne, with the power of his father, to iudge the quicke & the dead. Whan as Paule had talked on this wise at large of suche matters as these be, that is to wete, of the gracious fauour of god, that man cummeth to thzough fayth: of euangelical iustitie, of temperaunce, and sobernes of the spiritual life, and of the latter iudgement, that no manne coulde escape, Felix was afrayed, and so muche moued therewith, not that he forthwith dyd acquite Paule (for he feared the Jewes, whom he knewe dyd deadly hate hym) but that Paule was for the meane space kepte in holde after a gentle sorte, vntyll that he myghte haue occasion to delyuer hym.

There was an other matter also, that caused hym not streight wayes to quitte hym, for he trusted that Paule woulde gyue hym some readye money, that he myght be delyuered. And for this cause did he often sende for Paule, and commoned with hym, that he myght gyue him occasion to proffer him money, that he vpon familiar acquayntaunce and gentyll entertaynement of ỹ president, myght put awaye thamekfastenes, whiche he thought dyd stape Paule, that he durst not profer money. For the Emperours lawes doe punyshe the iudge, that suffereth a malefactour to escape by bribery. In the meane tyme, whan Paule continued two yeares at Cesarea, the Emperoure Nero sent a certaine man named Porcius Festus to succede Felix in the roume. And than had he a good occasion to dimisse Paul. But he thought he wouldе not departe from his prouynce with mennes displeasures, and willing rather to shewe ỹ Iewes a pleasure, then with an vpryght conscience to deliuer an innocēt, he lefte Paul bound. So harde a matter it is for the great men and rewlers of the worlde, to behaue themselues in all matters vprygtly.

The.xxb. Chapter.

The texte. Whan Festus had receiued the office, after three daies, he ascended frō Cesarea vnto Ierusalē. Than enformed him the high priestes & the chief of the Iewes, of Paule. And they besought him & desired fauour agaynst hym, that he would send for him to Ierusalem, & they laid awaite for him in the way, to kil him. Festus answered, ỹ Paul shoulde be kepte at Cesarea, but that hymselfe would shortely departe thyther, ler thē therefore (sayd he) which among you are able, cum downe wt vs, & accuse him, if there be any faulte in the man.

Within three dayes after Festus came to hys prouynce, he went frō Cesarea to Ierusalem. But whan the Iewes hearde tel ỹ a newe president was cum, their malice was newely kyndeled agayne. For byanby the high priestes & chiefe rewlers of the Iewes came vnto him and desired his fauour ỹ it myghte please him to sende for Paule to Ierusalem, forasmuche as it was not so cōmodious to haue ỹ matter pleaded at Cesarea. For they trusted, that ỹ president (which, by reason that he late came into that prouince, was ignorannt of those thynges ỹ had bene done) would soone in this so sma! a matter shewe thē fauour. But the Iewes were at this poynte, that yf Festus had graūted thē theyr requeste, they would haue layed watche, & haue slayne Paule by the way. But Festus beyng more indifferent then they woulde he shoulde haue bene, made answere: ỹ Paul should remaine in custody at Cesarea, & that he within fewe dayes, would repaire thyther, & heare their matter. Wherefore sayed he, if there be anye amonge you that be mete men to folowe this matter, leate thē go with me downe to Cesarea, there shal he be arrayned before you. And yf this man that you speake of, be giltie, they maye accuse hym.

And they layed awaite for hym on the waye to kyll hym.

Whan he had taried there among thē more then ten daies, he went down vnto Cesarea, and the nexte day sate down in the iudgement seate, & cōmaunded Paul to be broughte, which whan he was cum, the Iewes, which were come from Ierusalem, stoode about him: & layde many & greuous cōplayntes agaynst Paul which they couldе not proue, as long as he answered for him selfe, that he had neyther agaynst the lawe of the Iewes neyther agaynste the temple, nor yet agaynst Cesar, offended aup thyng at all.

The texte.

And whan he had continued there among thē more then ten daies, he wente to Cesarea. And the nexte daye he sat in the place of Iudgement, and commaunded Paule to be brought before him. And after that he was brought forth, the Iewes, whiche came from Ierusalem, stoode rounde about him, layeng many and sore matters to his charge, but none of them were they hable to proue: for Paul answered for himselfe, and euidently declared, that he had neyther offēded the Iewes lawe, forasmuche as he had diligently kepte it, neyther yet had prophaned prophaned or suspended the churche, seyng that he had purely and peaceablye been conuersaunt therin, nor had offended againste themperoure at any time.

¶ Festus wyllyng to doue the Iewes a pleasure, answered Paule, and saied: wilte thou go vp to Ierusalem, and there be iudged of these thinges before me? Then said Paul: The I stande at Cesars iudgement seate, where I ought to be iudged. To the Iewes haue I no harme doen, as thou very well knowest. If I haue hurte the, or committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die, yf none of these thinges are, whereof they accuse me, no man maye deliuer me to them, I appeale vnto Cesar. Then spake Festus with deliberacion, and answered. Thou hast appealed vnto Cesar: vnto Cesar shalte thou goe.

But whan Festus perceyued on thone parte the innocencie of Paule, and on the other, the hatred that the Iewes bare against Paule, whiche neuer would be satisfyed, endeuouryng themselfe so to gratifye the Iewes, that he myghte leme yet to doe the partye whiche was accused no wronge, sayde vnto Paule:
wylt thou go to Ierusalem and there be iudged before me? For he supposed that this would please the Iewes well, forasmuche as it was theyr owne request before: Than Paule beyng allured of thyntent of the Iewes, made aunswere: I see no cause wherefore this matter shoulde be dyfferred vntil an other tyme, for there is no let, but that euen here I may be eyther quit, or caste: I am arrained nowe at the barre before themperours officer, in this citie of Cesarea, where nedes muste I receyue my iudgement. I haue doen the Iewes no hurte or iniurye, as you your selfe knowe right well. But yf that I haue noted them in any thinge, or haue committed any thing whereby I haue deserued deathe, I am well content to dye. But yf all those thinges, which these men haue layed to my charge, be false, it is not the parte of a Iudge contrarye to ryghte and iustice, to permitte them to handle me, accordynge as they of concepued malyce and hatred, would desire to doe. For the iudge can not for fauoure of any person, condemne a man that is arrained, and I appeale to themperoure. Than Festus after that he had communicacion with the councel of the Iewes, made answere vnto Paul. Seyng that thou hast appealed to the Emperour, to the Emperour shalte thou goe. For the Iewes were better content þ Paule should be sente to themperoure, then that he should be quit: for they trusted that some thing would chaunce whereby they at the last might rid him out of the waye.

¶ And after a certayne dayes, kynge Agrippa and Bernice came vnto Cesarea to salute Festus. And whan they had been there a good season, Festus rehearsed Paules cause vnto the kyng, saying: there is a certaine man lefte in prysone of Felix, aboute whome whan The text
I came to Ierusalem, the hye prestes and elders of the Iewes enformed me, and desired to haue iudgement against him. To whom I answered: It is not the maner of the monarches, for fauour to delyuer any man, that he shoulde perysshe, before that he which is accused, haue the accusers before him: & haue licence to answere for himselfe, concerning þ crime layed against him. Therefore, whan they were come hither together, without anye delaye, on the morow I sate to geue iudgement, & commaunded the man to be brought furth.
Against whom, whan the accusers stode vp, they broughte none accusacio of such thinges as I supposed: but had certaine questions against him of their owne superstition and of one Iesus whiche was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alyue. And because I doubted of such maner of questions, I asked him, whether he would go to Ierusalem, and there be iudged of these matters. But whan Paul had appealed to be kept vnto the knowlege of Cesar, I commaunded him to be kept til I might send him to Cesar.

In the meane space within a fewe dayes, kynge Agrippa, whiche had succeded Herode his father in the kyngdom, whom the Iungel of god had striken, came to Cesarea with his wyfe Bernice, to salute and to welcome the newe pryndent Festus. And when they had continued there a good sorte of dates, Festus by occasion referred vnto the kynge, Paules matter, in this wyse: Felix whiche was my predeceſſor hath left here a certain man in holde, whom the high prieſtes and chiefe rewlers of the Iewes complayned on, whan I was at Hierusalem, and deſired me for their sakes to geue ſentence againſt him. Vnto whom I made answere, ꝑ the Romaynes wer not accuſtomed to geue ſentece of death on any mā for fauour of any perſon, before that his accuſers appeared, & gaue ſufficient euidence againſt him, and he had liberty to answere to ſuch thinges, as ſhoulde be layed againſte him. And ſoe whan his accuſers were cumme hyther, I without any delaye, ſate the nexte daye in iudgement, and wylled the priſoner that was accuſed, to appere before me. And whan as his accuſers came forth, they laied no ſuch matters to his charge, as I thought they would haue doen, but certaine queſtions demaunded they of him, concerninge theyr owne ſuperſtition, and layde to his charge, that he ſhoulde affirme one Ieſus, whiche was dead, to be riſen from death to lyfe again, and that he alſo is now alyue. But I perceiuyng that it was the leſte parte of myne office, to make enquirie of ſuch queſtions, neyther wyl knowing what I might saye in ỹ matter, asked him whether that he were willyng to go to Hierusalem, and there to ſtande to iudgement, as concerning thoſe thynges that were layed vnto hym, forſamuche as the prieſtes, Scribes and Phariſeis, knew better how the matter ſtoode, then I. But when as Paul had refuſed that, and appealed to Ceſar, it wyll to be attained before him, I cōmaunded ỹ he in the meane space ſhoulde be kept in cuſtodie, vntil ſuch time ỹ I might haue occaſiō to ſend him to Ceſar.

The texte. Agrippa ſaid vnto Feſtus: I would alſo heare the man my ſelf. To morow (ſayd he) thou ſhalt heare him. And on the morow whā Agrippa was cum & Bernice with great pompe, and wer entred into the counſel houſe, wt the captaines & chief men of the citie, at Ieſus commaundement was Paule brought forthe. And Feſtus ſayde: kyng Agrippa, and all ye men which are here preſent with vs, ye ſe this manne, about whom all the multitude of the Iewes haue cōmuned me, both at Hierusalem and alſo here, crying that he ought not to lyue any longer. Yet found I nothing worthie of death ỹ he had cōmitted. Neuertheles, ſeyng that he hath appealed to Ceſar, I haue no certaine thing to write vnto my lord. Wherefore, I haue brought him vnto you, and ſpecially vnto the, O kyng Agrippa, that after examination had, I might haue ſumwhat to write. For me thinketh it vnreaſonable for to ſende a priſoner, and not to ſhew the cauſes whiche are layde againſt him.

When Agrippa had heard this, he ſaide vnto Feſtus: I haue of late heard much ſpeakyng of that ſame Ieſus, and of his diſciples, and therfore would I my ſelf heare that felowe before he goe to Ceſar. Than ſaied Feſtus: To morowe ſhall you heare him. The nexte day, after ỹ Agrippa and his wyfe Bernice had with much pompe and a great trayne, entred with the captaynes and the chiefe of the citie into the common hall, Feſtus commaunded Paule to be brought before him. Than Feſtus, leſt ỹ he ſhould ſeme to haue brought furth Paule onely to get fauour of the kyng, ſpake in this wyſe: king Agrippa, and you all that are here preſent, ye ſe the man, whom al the Iewes haue complayned on to me, as well at Hierusalem, as here alſo in this citie, & haue with great clamour cried, that it was pitie of his life. But I haue made enquirie, and can not ſee that he hath any waye deſerued deathe. Albeit foraſmuche as he hath of his owne free wil appealed to the Emperour, I am in full mynd to ſende hym thyther. And yet I cannot wel tell, what I maye certifye vnto his maieſtie in wryteyng. Wherfore I haue here brought him furth before you, and eſpecially before you, kyng Agrippa, that we may examyne him, and to haue ſumwhat to wryte. For me thinketh it ſtandeth with no reaſon, to ſende a priſoner and not to ſhewe withal what is layde to his charge.

The

The.xxvi.Chapter.

Agrippa sayed vnto Paul: thou art permitted to speake for thy selfe. Then Paul stretched forth the hande and answered for himselfe. I thinke my selfe happy (king Agrippa, because I shal this day answer before the, of al the thinges wherof I am accused of the Iewes: namely, because thou art expert in all customes and questions, whiche are among the Iewes. Wherefore I beseche the to heare me patiently. The texte.

THen kyng Agryppa turned himselfe to Paul, who stoode before him bounde, and sayd: Thou hast pardon to speake for thy selfe, yt thou haue any thing to saye in thine owne defence. And forthwith Paul holdyng vp his hande, began to defende hymselfe in this wyse: It maketh not a litell matter in my opinion, O kyng Agrippa, before what iudge, a man that is indicted, pleadeth his cause. For he whose confidence is wholy in his own innocencie, desireth nothinge more, then to haue suche a iudge, that eyther knoweth his cause very well already, or els can soone perceiue it. For yt the iudge bee ignoraunt of the matter, he that pleadeth it, shall in vayne go about to set it forth in fyne painted termes. And therefore, although the Iewes haue layed dyuerse trespaces to my charge, yet I thynke my selfe happy for this cause, that I shall this day pleade this matter before you, whiche knowe ryght wel the customes, and order, and also the doubtfull questions and poyntes that concerne the law of the Iewes. Wherefore I wyll desire you to heare me patiently.

My liuing yͤ I haue led of a childe (whiche was at the firste amonge myne owne nacion at Ierusalem) knowe al the Iewes, which knewe me from the beginning, yf they would testifie. For after yͤ most streyght secte of our religion, I liued a Pharise. And now I stande and am iudged for yͤ hope of the promyse, made of God vnto our fathers, vnto which promyse our twelue tribes (instantly seruing God day & night) doe hope to com. For which hopes sake, kyng Agrippa, I am accused of the Iewes. The texte.

First and formoste wheras they laye vnto my charge, that I haue trespaced against the lawe, howe false that is, al my whole lyfe, whiche I haue hitherto led shall declare. For although I was borne at Tarsus, yet haue I euen from my childehode been brought vp among the Iewes at Ierusalē, where I diligently applyed the lawe at the feete of Gamaliel. So that the Iewes know wel ynough, how syncerely and godly I dyd lede my lyfe among my countrey men, and in the most royal citye, for they knewe me many yeres agoe, sence yͤ I was fyrste conuersaunt at Ierusalem, yf they would speake, as they knowe it to be true in dede. For I did not onely kepe the Iewes religiō diligently, but I professed that secte also whiche excelleth the reste, bothe in obseruinge the religion, and also in moste perfecte knowledge of the lawe: that is to saye, the secte of the Pharisees. And it is a thing doen without al shame, to accuse me that I am not a Iewe, seeyng that I was, and euen yet at this present also am a Pharisee by profession, as who say, yͤ any man could denye him to be a Iewe, that is borne at Ierusalem. For among the Iewes, yͤ secte of the Pharisees especially doeth beleue, that the bodies shal arise agayn, and that euery manne shalbe rewarded according to his liuing and dedes that he did here in this worlde. Neither haue I at any tyme, shronken from the Pharisees secte: for euen now am I here arrayned, because I beleue that they shalbe in a great felicitie, that haue here lyued well, according as god made promyse to our forefathers.

But if it be a faulte to looke for that, that god promysed to them that worshyp him, not I onely, but many one moe than I, are in the same faulte. For why do the twelue trybes of our countrey worshyp god daye and nyght, but onely for because they trust ꝑ they shall come to this blisse, which he hath promised: And therefore scarcely is he worthye to be called a Jewe, which trusteth not to that, that god hath promised. And yet, O kyng Agrippa, for this cause chiefely that I so beleue, I am nowe endicted here of the Jewes.

The texte. Why should it be thought a thing incredible vnto you, that God should rayse agayne the dead? I also verely thought in my selfe, that I ought to doo many thinges contrary, cleane against the name of Jesus of Nazareth: which thing I also did at Jerusalē. And many of the sainctes did I shut vp in prison, hauyng receiued authoritie of the hye priestes. And whan they were put to death, I gaue the sentence. And I punished them oft in euery synagoge, and compelled them to blaspheme: and was yet more mad vpō them, and persecuted them, euen vnto straunge cities. About which thinges as I went to Damasco, with authoritye and licence of the hye priestes, euen at mydday, (O kyng) I sawe in the way a light from heauen, aboue the bryghtnes of the Sunne shyne rounde about me & them which iorneyed with me.

I knowe many wil thinke it a thing impossible, yf a man should affirme that the bodye, whan it is once dead and putrified, should arise againe. But many thinges seme to menne impossible, whiche afterwarde yet they finde true. If a manne should saye ꝑ one manne might rayse an other from death to lyfe, he might iustely seme to speake a thing impossible, and ꝑ not without a cause. But wherefore shoulde you thinke it impossible, that god, whiche is hable to doe whatsoeuer shall please him, should raise the dead to lyfe againe? Can not he, whiche gaue euery manne lyfe, restore to lyfe whome shal please him? Shal we thinke him to be a lyar, or breakyng promyse in that whiche he hath made? Yea I my selfe haue supposed thinges to be impossible whiche I afterwarde proued true: and thinges to bee contrarye to oure lawe, and vngodlye, which I tried afterwarde to bee the principall pointes of perfect godlynes and religyon. In somuche, that once I was of the same mynde towarde the disciples of Jesus of Nazareth, that the Jewes are now towarde me: for I stryued with al my power against thadauncing of his name, and thought that I did wonderfull godly, whan that I persecuted those, that professed him, to the vttermost ꝙ I coulde: and so did I euen at Jerusalem. For many holy men did I caste into prysone, haupng a commission of the high Priestes so to doe, and pronounced ꝑ sentence of deathe against them, whan they should suffre. And I punyshed thē not onely at Jerusalē, but in al Synagogues, whersoeuer I could heare of thē in any assembly, purposing earnestly to bring them by veracion, once to suche a pointe, as to make them to speake in dispite of that moste blessed name lyke as I my selfe dyd in those dayes. Neyther was I thus contented, but more madly raged against them, insomuche that I rode to foreyn cities, and suche as were farre from Jerusalem, to thentent that I myghte punyshe suche as professed his name. And vpon a tyme whan I was most fette and bent to this cruell businesse, whiche I dyd not yet of malyce, but onely of zele that I bare to the lawe of my countrey, and in this mynde tooke my iourney towarde Damasco, being supported with authoritie of the high priestes, euē at mydde day, O king Agrippa, I sawe a certayne light, whiche was muche clerer then the bryghtnesse of the Sunne, sodainlie to shine from heauen. And it shyned round aboute me, and those that were with me.

Whan

¶ Whan we were all fallen to the yearth, I heardē a voyce speakyng vnto me, and saying in the Hebrue tong: Saule, Saule, why persecutest thou me? It is harde for the to kycke against the pryckes. And I sayde: who art thou lorde? And he sayde: I am Jesus whom thou persecutest, but ryse and stande vpon thy feete: For I haue appered vnto the for this purpose, to make the a mynistre, and a witnesse of these thinges, which thou hast seen, and of those thinges in the whiche I wyll appere vnto the, delyuerynge the from the people, and from the Gentiles, vnto whome now I sende the, to open their eyes, that they maye be turned from darkenes to lyght, and from the power of Sathan vnto God, that they may receyue forgeuenesse of synnes, and inheritaunce emong them, which are sanctified by fayth that is towarde me. The texte.

And whan we all, beyng amased by reason of the bryghtnesse of the lyght, had fallen doune on the grounde, I heardē a voyce speake vnto me, that sayd in the Hebrue tong: Saule, Saule, why poest thou persecute me? It is hard for the to wynche against the pryeke. Than answered I: what arte thou lorde? Than spake he againe, and sayed: I am Jesus of Nazareth whome thou persecutest. But aryse, and stande vp on thy feete. Therefore haue I striken the downe, beyng a persecutour, that I may set the on thy feete againe, Unto whō a preacher of my name. For I haue now appered vnto the to this ende, that now I send beeyng chosen by me, thou mayest beare witnesse of me, and execute suche thee to open thinges, as thou hast sene, and others that I hereafter by vision, shall shewe their eyes.
vnto the. In all whiche thinges wyll I bee thy defendoure, and deliuer the from the people, and from the barbarous nations of the heathen that be far of, whither I wyl now sende the in legate, that lyke as thou art, by delyuerāce of thyne errour made of a blinde man, perfecte in syght: so thou thirself by preāchynge the true worde of my ghospell, open their eyes, that from synne vnto rightwisnesse, whiche they haue been hitherto holden with all, they lykewyse may bee conuerted to the lyght of my gospel: and that suche as haue been heretofore geuen to ydolatrie, and by reason therof haue become subiectes vnto Sathan, maye be made the seruauntes of god, who is lorde of all thinges: and they that hitherto haue been defiled with al kinde of vnthinesse, nowe through faith and credence geuing to my gospell, may freely obtayne remission of all sinnes:
and suche as hytherto haue been called not an electe people, but separated from God, and deuyded from all the companye of good men, may nowe haue parte amonge them that be sanctified, not by circumcision, or obseruing of the lawe, but by beleuynge in me, and because they geue credence to my gospell. For there is nowe none other way remaynynge whereby man maye bee sanctified.

¶ Wherefore (o kynge Agrippa) I was not disobedient vnto the heauenly vision: but The texte.
shewed first vnto them of Damasco, and at Jerusalem, and throwe out all the coastes of Jewry, and then to the Gētiles, that they shoulde repente and turne to God, and do suche workes as become them that repent. For this cause the Jewes caught me in the temple, and went about to kylle me. Seyng therfore that I haue obtayned helpe of god vnto this day, I continewe, witnessyng both to small and to great, sayeng none other thynges then those whiche Moyses, and the prophetes did say should come. That Christ should suffer, and that he should bee the first that should arise from deary. And should shewe light vnto the people, and to the Gentiles.

These thinges, kyng Agrippa, were not doone eyther in the nyght tyme, or in any dreame, but whan it was hyode daye, many of vs sawe the cleerenesse of the lyghte, and heard the voyce distynctlye speakyng. Wherefore I beyng assured that this was doen of god from heauen, was not disobedient to the heauenly vision, but lettyng passe the businesse that I had than taken in hande, by authoritie of the high prieste, I tooke a cleane contrarye waye, thynkyng it more expedient and neceſſarie, to put in execucion that god commaunded me, then that the hyghe prieſtes had wylled.

For both with I preached the ghoſpell at Damaſco, and than at Hieruſalem, afterwardes throughout all the partes of Iewrye: and to be ſhorte, emong dyuerſe nacions of countreyes beyng farre a ſunder, wyllyng them to repent their lyfe paſte, and that they ſhoulde turne from dumme Idolles, to the true and lyuyng God: and that after they were once baptiſed, they ſhoulde worke from thencefoorth ſuche workes, as became ſuche perſones as earneſtly hath repented. For this cauſe the Iewes, when they ſawe me in the temple, tooke me, and woulde haue ſlayne me. Neyther haue I hytherto defended me with weapon, and yet by the ayde of God, at whole commaundemente I dooe this that I dooe, I am yet alyue, teſtifyeng to bothe greate and ſmalle, thoſe thinges that I was commaunded to preache to all men without reſpect of any perſon, feynyng no newe doctrine of myne owne head, but preaching onely thoſe thinges, that Moyſes and the Prophetes affirmed ſhould cum to paſſe. For the Iewes alſo had wont to diſpute in this wyſe of Chriſte by the prophecies of the Prophetes, whether that Meſſias ſhoulde cum, as a man ſubiect to miſery and death, or whether he ſhulde begynne to rayſe the dead to lyfe, and whether that he ſhoulde preache the true lyghe, fyrſte to the Iſraelites, and after to the Gentyles. Whiche thinges euery-chone, forſamuche as they were ſpoken of before by the Prophetes, and by Moyſes hymſelfe of Meſſias, I preache, that we muſte looke for none other Meſſias, for why? All theſe thinges are fulfylled in Jeſus of Nazareth: and nothing newe remaynyth, but that all menne through penaunce and purrtie of lyfe prepare themſelues againſte his cummynge, whan he ſhall cum to iudge all the whole worlde.

The texte. Cas he thus ſpake for himſelfe: Feſtus ſayed with a loude voyce: Paul, thou art beſyde thy ſelfe. Muche learning doth make the mad. And Paule ſayed: I am not madde (moſt dere Feſtus) but ſpeake forth the wordes of trueth and ſobernelle. For the kynge knoweth of theſe thinges, before whome alſo I ſpeake freely, neyther thinke I that any of theſe thinges are hydden from him. For this thinge was not doen in a corner. Kyng Agrippa, beleueſt thou the Prophetes? I wote well that thou beleueſt. Agrippa ſayed vnto Paul: Sumwhat thou driueſt me in mind for to beleue, and becum chriſtened. And Paul ſayed: I would to God that not onely thou, but all alſo that heare me to day, were not ſumwhat onely, but all together, ſuche as I am, excepte theſe bandes.

Whan as Paule had ſpoken this and muche more in his owne defence, Feſtus, whiche coulde nothing ſkylle of the Iewes religion, eſtemynge all as dotage, that he had ſpoken of his bilyon, and of the aryſynge agayne of the dead, ſayed with a loude voyce: Thou dotelt Paule. It is ſo with the as it often chaunceth to other men. Muche knowledge in learning hath taken thy ryght mynde clene from the. Paule anſwered: I dote not moſte noble Feſtus. For dotynge is called, whan a man through erroure of his mynde, ſwerueth from reaſon. But I am ſober, and ſpeake as the truth is, the whiche trueth to knowe, is berayne witte in dede. And that theſe thinges are ſo, it is not vnknowe to the kyng, before whom I doe muche the more frankely talke of theſe matters, becauſe I ſuppoſe, that he is ignorante in none of theſe poyntes, that I haue ſpoken. For this thing was not dooen in a corner, but openly, and the rumour of it was ſparſed throughout all Iewry. Than Paul turned himſelf to Agrippa, and ſayed: O kynge Agrippa, beleue ye the Prophetes to bee

true: J knowe ye doe beleue them. And he that beleueth them, cannot chose but beleue the gholpell, which sheweth that it is cum to passe, that the Prophetes sayed shoulde cum. Than Agrippa breakyng his communycacion, sayed vnto Paule: Thou doest sumwhat perswade me to becum a Christen man. Than sayed Paule: verily J would wysshe of God with all my herte, that ye shoulde beleue, not onelye sumwhat, but throughly: and not your selfe onely, but also that all men, that heare me this daye, shoulde be lyke me, this thing onely excepted, that J would not wysshe any of them to bee thus in bandes as J am.

The texte. ¶ And whan he had thus spoken, the kyng arose vp, and the deputie, & Bernice, and they that sate with them. And whan they were gone aparte, they talked among them selues, sayeng: This man doeth nothing worthy of death, or of bandes. Than sayed Agrippa vnto Festus. This man might haue been let leuse, yf he had not appealed vnto Cesar.

Whan Paul had this sayed, the kyng, the prelydent, and Bernice, arose, and all the other that sate there by. And whan they had gone aside to common of the matter, they agreed euery man in this opinion, that they sayed that Paule hath committed nothing worthy death, ne yet of imprisonment. Wherfore it had cum to passe, that Paul had been dimissed, had not kyng Agrippa sayed vnto the prelident Festus, this man myghte haue been quytte, yf he had not appealed vnto the Emperour.

The.xxvii.Chapter.

The texte. ¶ Whan it was concluded, that we shoulde sayle into Italy, they delyuered both Paul and certaine other prisoners, vnto one named Julius, an vnder captaine of Cesars souldiers. And we entred into a shyp, of Hadramicium, and ment from lande, appoynted to sayle by the coastes of Asia, one Aristarchus out of Macedonia, of ꝑ countrey of Thessalonica tarying wt vs. And the next day we came to Sydon. And Julius courteously entreated Paul, and gaue him libertie to go vnto his frendes, and to refreashe himselfe. And whan we had launched from thence, we sayled hard by Cypres, because the wyndes were contrary. And whan we had sayled ouer the sea of Cilicia, and Pamphilia, we came to Myra, whiche is in Licia.

And after that kyng Agrippa had geue suche sentẽce, that euen as Paul had appealed to the Emperoure, so shoulde he goe into Italy, they deliuered Paule, and with him certaine other prysoners in bandes, vnto ꝑ vnder captaine of the Emperours souldiers, named Julius. And thã entred we into a shyppe, whiche came frõ Hadramicium, a citie of Affrike, whiche shoulde set vs vp in Asia the lesse, forasmuche as her iourney laye by the coastes of Asia, at what time Aristarchus out of Macedonia, a Thessalonian borne, contynued with vs, and would nedes beare vs company in our iournep. And so the nexte daye after we had ment from Cesarea, we arriued at Sydon. There the captayne Julius, forasmuche as he entended to handle Paule gentilly, permitted him to goe out of the shyp, and to goe visite his frendes yt he had any in Sydon, to the ende that he might the better bee refreshed of them. And whã we had ment thence also, we aduẽtured not into the maigne sea, but tooke the left hande, and shoted by the lydes of Cypres, for because that the wynde was against vs. After we had passed ouer the sea, whiche is righte against Cilicia and Pamphilia, we came to Myra, whiche standeth on the sea lyde in Licia.

And

The texte. ¶ And there the vnder captaine found a ship of Alexandria ready, that sayled into Italy, & he put vs therein. And when we had sayled slowely many dayes, and scarce were cum ouer against Gaydon (because the wynde withstode vs) we sayled hard by the coastes of Candie, ouer against Salmon, & with much worke sayled depon it, and came vnto a place whiche is called the fayre hauens: nygh whereunto was the citie of Lasea. What muche tyme was spent, & what sayling was nowe leopardouse, because also that they had ouer lōg fasted, Paul put them in remembraunce, and sayed vnto them: Syrs, I perceiue that this vyage wyll be with hurte and muche damage, not of the ladyng and shyppe onelye, but also of our lyues. Neuertheles the vndercaptayne beleued the gouernoure and the maister of the shyp, more then those thinges whiche wer spoken of Paul. And because the hauen was not commodiouse to wynter in, manye toke counsell to departe thence, yf by any meanes they might reache to Phenice, and there to wynter: whiche is an hauen of Candie, and lyeth towardes the Southwest and Northwest wynde. When the Southwynde blewe, they supposyng to obtain their purpose, leused vnto Asson. And sailed past all Candie.

There met the capitayne with an other shyppe, whiche had cum from Alexandria, a citie of Egypte, and was readye to sayle into Italye, and shyfted vs into the same. And after that we had sayled many dayes slowly, and scarcely at the last were cum ryghte against Guidus, by reason that the wynde was against vs, we turned to the Yland Candie, nighe to a citie of the same Yland, whiche is situate on the very sea banke, and is called Salmon, or (as sum menne called it,) Sammontum. After we had with muche a doo passed by Salmon, we came to an other hauen of Candie, that is called fayre hauens. This place was not far of from the citie of Lasea. And after that we had spent a long season in this nauigacion, or saylyng, Paule perceyuing that it was daungerous sayling, not onely for because they could not kepe such course as they would haue kepte, by reason of the winde being against them, but also because they had ouer long abstayned from meate, he admonished and warned the mariners in this wyse: Syrs I perceiue that this saylynge wyll be daungerous, and full of damage and perpil, not onely of the burden that is in the shyppe and the shyppe it selfe likewyse, but of our lyues, wherefore we were better cease from sayling forwarde. But the captayne gaue care to the maister of the ship and to the Sterne man, rather then to Paules sayinges. And for as muche as there was no conuenient hauen, where they might couch to lye at rode beynge wynter season, manye were of this mynde, that yf they possyble coulde, they woulde sayle as farre as Phenice, whiche is an hauen of Candie, hangyng into the sea towardes the Southwest, and Northwest wynde. In the meane tyme the South wynde blewe, and they trustynge that they might obteyne their purpose, and that they might reache to Phenice, leused from the sea coaste of Asson, that is a citie of Candye, and shored by the coastes of Candie.

The texte. But not long after, there arose against their purpose, a flawe of wynde, out of the Northest. And when the shyp was caught and could not resist the wynde, we let her go, and she drawe with the wether. But we wer carryed into an Yle which is named Clauda, and had muche worke to cum by a boate, whiche they toke vp, and vsed helpe, and made fast the shyp: fearing lest they shoulde fal into the Syrtes. And so they let downe a vessell, and were carried.

But within a shorte space, there arose a sodeyne and boysterous wynde whiche the shyppemen feare moste of all other wethers, and they call it a whyrle wynde and a pierrie. And the same, because it cummeth betwene the Northy and the east, is called the Northeast wynde. After this wynde had had taken the shyppe, & the shyppe could not withstande the tempest, we let her go at al aduentures whither soeuer ꝑ windes and waues would cary vs. And whan we were at the last brought into a certaine Yland whiche is on the south syde of Candie, named Clauda, we had much worke to get a boate, wherby we myght succour our selues, if any thing chaunced otherwyse then wel. And whā at the last we had drawen the boate vp into the shyp, they vsed other polices to preserue the shyp, for feare lest that the chaunce to breake by beatyng herselfe on the shalowes & flattes, shet girded the shippe, about with ropes, they feared lest the wynde shoulde driue them in to the Syrtes, whiche were certayne flattes & quicke sandes not farre from them fouth warde, seyng that the pierie blew and droue that wape, and therwith they let downe a certaine vessell to stape the ship that she should not runne so fast forwarde. And by suche meanes we beeyng sumwhat holpen, droue with the wind and were caried forwarde. Feating lest they woulde fall into the Syrtes. &c.

The nexte daye (whan we were tossed with an exceading tempest) they lightened ꝑ shyp, and the thirde day, we cast out with our handes the tackelyng & ꝑ shyppe. When at ꝑ last neither ꝑ Sunne, nor starres, in many dayes appeared, and no small tempest lay vpon vs, al hope that we should escape, was then take away. But after long abstinence, Paul stode furth in the myddes of them, and saied: Syrs, ye should haue harkened to me, & not haue leused from Candie, neyther to haue brought vnto vs this harme & losse: And nowe I exhorte you to be of good chere. For there shalbe no losse of any mannes lyfe amōg you, saue of ꝑ ship onely. For there stoode by me this night the Aungel of god, whose I am, & whom I serue, saying: feare not Paul thou must be brought before Cesar: and lo, God hath geuen the all thē ꝑ sayle with the: wherfore Syrs be of good chere, for I beleue God, that it shalbe euen as it was tolde me, howbeit we muste be cast into a certayne Yland. The texte.

But the tempeste styl continuyng, whan we had been tossed and waterbeaten very daungerously, the nexte daye they went to extreme shyftes, for they vnloded the shyppe, and caste all into the sea, for to lyghten and sumwhat to ease the shyppe. But whan the tempest styll contynued the thyrde daye we caste awaye ouer boorde with our owne handes, the tackelyng of the shyppe. And forasmuche as neither the Sunne, ne yet the starres appered for the spaces of manye dayes, but the tempeste styll waxed more and more, euerye manne was in despayre, and looked for none other but deathe. And moreouer by reason of this troublous sayling, they had eaten no meate, of a long space. Thā Paul standyng in the mydle amonge them, saied: Syrs ye should before haue folowed my councell, whan I gaue you warning, that ye should not leuse from the sea coaste of Candie. For yf ye hadde so doen, ye hadde escaped this daungier, and also this losse of goodes. But forasmuche as that nowe cannot be vndoen againe that is paste, beginne yet at the laste to folowe my councell, and to waxe wyse. Be of good chere, for not one of you shal perysshe. The shyp onely shal be loste. This is no dreame, that I speake, but the Aungell of god, whō I serue and wurshyppe, stoode by me this night and saied: Paul be not afraied, thou shalt not perisshe here, but thou muste firste appeare before Ceasar, and not onely thou shalt escape safe, but God hath heard thy prayers, and geue vnto the all these, that are in shyp with the: wherefore I say, be of good chere. For I doubt not, but that it shal cum to passe, that god hath promised by his Aungell. And yf ye will knowe, howe we shall escape safe with our lyues. I wil tell you: we shalbe cast vp into a certayne Yland, & there shal we be saued, but not without shyppwrecke.

But

The texte. But whā the fowerteth night was cū, (as we wer ſayling in Adria, about mydnight) the ſhippmen demed that there appered ſome countrey vnto them: ꝙ ſounded, & found it twenty fadoms. And when thei had gon a litle further they ſounded againe, and found fiftene fadoms. Then fearing leſt they ſhoulde haue falleu on ſome rocke they caſt fower ankers out of the sterne, and wiſhed for the day. As the ſhippmen were about to flie out of the ſhip (whan they had let downe the boate into the ſea, vnder a colour as though they wouldo haue caſt ankers out of the forethippe) Paul ſayed vnto the vnder captaine & to the ſouldiers: except theſe abyde in the ſhippe ye can not be ſafe. Then the ſouldiers cut of the tops of the boate and let it falle away.

And ſo whan the fourteenth nyght was cum well on, and we were ſayling in the ſea, whiche was called Adriaticum, the mariners lokyng further aboute mydde-night ſuppoſed that they ſaw lande. And dyving myndeth to proue, whether they might ſafely arryue thyther, they let downe a lyne with a plummet, whiche the ſhippmen call in ꝓ Greke toung Bolis, becauſe it is caſt down into the water to ſounde: and they founde that it was twentye fadoms depe: than ſayled we a litle farther, and they let downe againe the plummet and ſounded, and founde that it was fiftene fadoms. And whan they perceiued, that it wered ſhalower & ſhalower, fearing leſte they ſhould hytte vpon ſharpe rockye places, they caſte fower ankers out of the sterne, and wyſhed for day, that they might certainely perceiue, what countrey it was, that appeared. Than ꝓ mariners, hauing ſmal hope to ſaue the ſhyppe, foraſmuche as they perceyued that they were not farre from lande, they firſt thought to ſaue themſelues, and for that cauſe, they lette downe a boate into the ſea, feynyng and ſemblyng they went not aboute to con-ueigh them ſelues away, but pretendyng that they would lette down ꝓ ankers out of the forepart of ꝓ ſhippe, becauſe the tempeſt was great. But Paul per-ceyuing what they entended, and knowyng that ꝓ mariners could not be miſ-led, but muſt nedes helpe to ſaue the reſte that wer in the ſhyp, warned the vn-der captaine, ſaiyng: Except theſe men abyde in the ſhyppe, ye can not be ſaued. Whan the ſouldiers heard this worde, they out with their ſwordes, and cutte the ropes, that the boate hong by, and lette it fall into the ſea.

The texte. And whā the day began to appeare, Paule beſought them al to take meate, ſayeng: this is the fowerteenth day, ꝓ ye haue tarryed & cōtinued faſting, receiuing nothing at all. Where-fore I praye you to take meate. For this (no doubte) is for your helth: for there ſhal not an heare fal frō the head of any of you. And whan he had thus ſpoke, he toke bread & gaue thankes to God in preſence of them all: & when he had broken it, he begonne to eate. Thā were they al of good chere, and they alſo tooke meate: We wer altogether in the ſhyppe, two hundred, thre ſcore and ſyxtene ſoules. And whē they had eaten ynough, they lyghte-ned the ſhyp, and caſt out the wheate into the ſea.

But whan the vyght by litle and litle vanyſhed awaye, and day began to breake, Paul exhorted them all to eate ſum meate, & ſayed: It is now fower-tene dayes ſence ye eate any thing, and ye are ſtyll faſting, wherfore I wouldo counſel you to take ſumme ſuſtenaunce: for it is for your helth: ſo to doo, leſt that whan ye haue eſcaped this tempeſt, ye bee in daunger for lacke of foode. For ye muſte not thinke in your mynde, what ſhoulde we nede to eate, keepyng that we ſhall ſtreyght wayes dye. For this will I promyſe you, that not ſo-muche as an heare of any of your heades ſhall periſhe. Whan Paule hadde thus ſayde, he tooke bread in his handes, and gaue thankes to god in ſyghte of them all, and whan he had broken it, after the enſample of Jeſus the lorde, than began he to eate. And the others beyng than ſumwhat reuiued, and en-

courtaged partely by Paules exhortation, and partely by his ensample, began also to eate. For were in noumbre in the shyp, two hundred, threscore and syxtene. Whan they had taken sustenaunce, they eased the shyp, that she myghte approche nere vnto the lande, and they cast out a great quantitye of wheat, whiche they had brought out of Egypt towardes Italye. For Egipt had been of long continuaunce, a sure store and kurnyther of Rome, with wheate and other grayne.

The texte. When it was daye, they knew not the land, but they spied a certaine bayen with a banke into the whiche they were mynded (yf it were possible) to thrust in the shyp. And whē they had taken vp the ankers, they committed themselues vnto the sea, & lewsed the rudder bandes & hoysed vp the maine sayle to the wynde, & drue to the land. And whē they chaunced on a place, which had the sea on both sides, they thrust in the shyp. And the fore part stucke fast and moued not, but the hynder parte brake with the violence of waues.

After þ it was day they sawe lande, but they knew not what countrey it was. But they perceiued that it had a certaine creeke, by reason that the banke stretched furth on bothe sydes, into whiche creeke, they purposed yf they possibly might, to drawe the shyppe. And so they toke vp the ankers, and committed themselues to the sea, and lewsed withal the iointes of the sterne and the rudder, to þ intent that they might vse them also at their pleasure and ease, to guide and to turne the shyp whither they thought best. Then they set vp þ saile, and than they turned also the crosse piece, whereupon the sayle hangeth, to the wynde, and hauing þ wind with them, hastened toward þ shore. But whan they could not get into the creeke as they had purpoled, but by violence of the wyndes were drue into a place þ hong a great way into the sea, there they pytched in the shyp. And þ fore part of the shyp being fastened in the ground, which was there shalowe, stoode stiffe, and the hinder part lewsed asunder by vyolence of the waues. And than was there none other remedy, but that euery man should shift for himself, and swimme furth.

The texte. ¶ And the souldiers councel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them whan he had swimmed out, should runne away. But the vnder captaine, wyllyng to saue Paule, kepte them from their purpose, and commaunded that they which could swymme, should cast themselues first in to the sea, and scape to land. And the other he commaunded to go, some on bordes & some on broken pieces of the shyp. And so it came to passe, that they escaped all safe to lande.

Than the souldiers thoughte it best to kyll the prisoners, lest that any of the whan he had swimmed furth to lande, should happen to runne awaye, but the captaine was against this cruel & vnmercyful counsel, beyng desyrous to saue Paul, forasmuch as by his meane, they all had bene preserued. And lest that any one should perishe, he commaunded, þ suche as could swymme wel, should first leape into the sea and swymme to lande. And they that could not swimme, should partly take bordes and lye on them, and partly help themselues with other instrumentes of the shyppe, and so to escape to lande. By this meane at þ last it came to passe, that euery one came safe to lande.

The.xxviii. Chapter.

The texte.

And when they were escaped, than they knewe that the yle was called Melite. And the straungers shewed vs no litle kyndenesse, for they kyndled a fyer, and receyued vs euery one, because of the present rayne, and because of the colde. And when Paul had gathered a boundell of stickes, and layed them on the fyre, there came a vyper out of the heate, and caught him by the hande. When the straungers sawe the beast hang on his hande, they sayed amonge themselues: no doubt this man is a murtherer. Whome (though he haue escaped the sea) yet vengeaunce suffereth not to lyue. And he shoke of the vyper into the fyer, and felt no harme. Howbeit they awayted when he should haue swolne, or fallen downe dead sodenly. But after they had looked a great whyle, and sawe no harme cum to him, they chaunged their myndes, and sayed that he was a God.

And when they wer gotten on land, they knewe not what yland it was, but after wardes they enquired of the inhabitours, and heard that it was called Melite. The same Melite is situate lyeth betwene Epirus and Italy, towarde the northe parte of Sicile. Than the people therof pitiyng our myschaunce, entertayned vs very gentilly. For they made a great fier for vs, & brought vs al together to it, beyng sore handled, what with weate and what with cold. And when Paule had gathered a great boundel of stickes, and had layd them on the fyer, a vyper, whiche before was euen styffe for colde, and laye hydden there, beyng flieted vp with the heate, crept forth, & stynged the hande of Paul. But the inhabitauntes of Melite seeyng this venemous beast hangyng by the tyng at the hande of Paule, sayde: vndoubtedly it must nedes bee true, that this felowe is sum murderer: whiche though he haue escaped the daunger of the sea beyng rast vp by tempest, yet the vengeance of god suffereth not him to remayne on lyue. But as soone as Paul perceyued the vyper styng him, he cast her of into the fier, and had no hurte at all. But the people that looked on him, supposed it would cum to passe that the poison would get throughout the paines and that his body would straight wape burne and swell, or that he would sodaynly fall downe dead, the strength of the poyson percyng furthwyth to the heart. And when they had marked a greate whyle to see what would becum of Paule, and sawe that he had no hurte by the stynging of the vyper, with like lyghtnesse they ekefones chaunged their myndes, and sayed that he was a God. For the inhabitours of Melite had not yet heard the fame of Iesus, whiche gaue this to al them that confessed his name, that no strength of poyson, wer it neuer so extreme or deadly, myght hurt them.

There came a vyper out of the heate and caught him by the hande.

In the same quarters wer landes of the chief man of the yle (whose name was Publius) which receyued vs, & lodged vs three dayes courteously. And it fortuned that the father of this Publius, lay sycke of a feuer, & a blouddye flix. To whom Paul entred in, prayed, & laye his handes on him, & healed him. So, when this was doen, others also which had diseases in the yle, came, & were healed: which also did vs great honour. And when we departed they laded vs with suche thynges as were necessary.

And here besydes the shore where we arryued, laye a lordshippe belonging to the chiefe man of the yle, named Publius, who receyued vs into his house, and for the space of three dayes, entertayned vs very gentilly. The same tyme Publius father was sicke of an agewe, and of a blouddye flixe, so sore, that he kepte his bedde. This Paule hauyng in mynde the commaundement of his mayster, came in to the displeased person, and when he had made hys prayers to God, he layed his handes on him, and healed him. Whiche thyng after it was bruted abrode ouer all the land, others lykewyse that wer sycke, came vnto Paule, and were healed. Wherefore they, as long as we continued there

shewed vs muche gentilnes, and whan we made readye our selues to departe, they bi ought into our shyppe all maner necessaries.

After three monethes, we departed in a shyp of Alexandria, which had wintered in the ile, whose badge was Castor & Pollux. And whā we came to Syracusa, we taried there three dales. And frō thence we fette a coumpace, & came to Rhegium. And one daye after, the south wind blew, & we came the nexte day to Puteoli: where we founde brethren & were desired to tary wᵗ them seuen dayes, & so came we to Rome. And frō thence whā the brethrē heard of vs, they came to mete vs at Appii forum, & at the three tauernes. Whā Paul saw thē, he thanked God, & waxed bolde. And whā we came to Rome, & vnder capitayne deliuered the prisoners to the chiefe capitayne of the host: but Paul was suffered to dwell by hym selfe with a souldier that kept hym. The texte.

And so whā we had continued three monethes in the Yle, we gotte an other shyp of Alexandria, that al the winter had harboured in Melite. The baner of it had paynted on it Castor and Pollux, for theyr badge: whome the Grecians doe call Dioscuros, and suppose that they prosper thole ỳ sayle on the sea, whan they appeare sitting toyntlye together, the one by the other on the crosse pyece; whereunto the sayle is fastened. Whan we had entred into the shippe, we seuered from Melite. And after ỳ we arriued at Syracusa, a citie of Sicilie harde vpon the sea, we taryed there three dayes. Than seuered we from Syracusa, & shoring about by the coastes of Sicilie we came to Rhegium, a citie in ỳ borders of Italy, situate and lying wythin ỳ territory, that belongeth to the Brutians. From thence is but a smale tourney to Sicilie. For on that syde bothe Sicilie and Italy sumtime toyned together, vntyll suche tyme that the violence of the sea dyuyded the one countrey from the other, breakyng in betwyxte them no moze but a myle & an halfe, for which cause the Grecias called it Rhegium. From thence a day after, it chaunced vs to haue a good wynde, that is to saye a southwinde, & so we sailed to a toune called Puteoli. Where we mette with christen men which desired vs to tary there with them for a certain space. Wherfore we satisfyed their request, and remayned there seuen dayes, & thence we wente streyght to Rome. And forasmuch as the brethren, that wer at Rome had heard that we wer cummyng thyther (for the name of Paul was very wel knowen among al the christen men, that were than at Rome, by reason that he had wrytten afore ỳ time, an epistle vnto them) certayne of them came forth of the citie to a place that is there called Appii forum, and to a certain place, called ỳ three tauernes, to mete vs. And whan Paul sawe thē, he was muche coumforted, perceiuyng ỳ there also were sum, that hertily fauoured the gospel: and geuyng god thankes, he toke a bolde hert with him, and hoped wel. And whan we were cum to Rome, the vnder captaine deliuered the others that wer in bōdes, vnto the chiefe captayne of the army there. But Paul had libertie to abid and remayne at his libertie, sauyng onely that he had one souldier to kepe him.

And after three dayes, Paul called ỳ chiefe of the Iewes together. And whan they were come, he sayd vnto thē: Men & brethren, though I haue cōmitted nothing agayns ỳ people or lawes of ỳ elders: yet was I deliuered prisoner frō Ierusalē, into the handes of the Romaynes. Which whē they had examined me, would haue let me goe because there was no cause of death in me. But whā the Iewes spake contrarye, I was constrained to appeale vnto Cesar, not because I haue ought to accuse my people of. For this cause haue I called for you, euē to see you, & to speke with you: because that for the hope of Israell I am bounde with this cheyne. The texte.

And forasmuche as he was brought to Rome in bandes wyth others left any of the Iewes shoulde suppose that he was thus serued for sum trespace after-the thyrde day, he called together all the heades of the Iewes ꝑ were abydyng at Rome, and spake vnto them in this wyse.

the

Brethren (sayeth he) whereas I haue committed nothyng agaynste my countreymen, or els against the traditions of our forefathers, beyng cast in bandes at Hierusalem, I was deliuered into the handes of ꝑ Romaines, who brought me into Cesarea before the president Felix, afterwardes before Festus. Which after they had examyned my matter, would haue quitte me for almuche as eue as they themselues graunted, they founde nothyng in me worthy death. But whan ꝑ Iewes maliciously renoūced and cried agaynste me, I was compelled to appeale to Cesar: not because that I auoffended wyth my countreymen for this matter, or ꝑ I intende in lyke maner to accuse them of anye thynge before Cesar, and so to encrease ꝑ hatred that he beareth agaynst them, but to defende myne owne innocencie. For I wyshe well to all men, that wt a pure herte worshyp god, accordyng to the lawe of my countrey. And for this cause, bearynge such good affection and zele towardes you, & yet by reason of these bandes beyng in suche case ꝑ I myght not come vnto you to visite you, I willed you to be sent for, that with the syght of you and cōmunication withal, I myghte be somwhat the more cōforted. And why do the Israelites so earnestly worshippe god, despysing the Idolles of the Gentiles, but because they trust at the fynall resurrection to be rewarded for theyr good dedes? And for this hope, which all my countreymenne, as well as I are in, am I nowe thus bounde, as ye see, in cheynes. And other fault can not they laye vnto my charge.

The texte. And they sayed vnto him: we neither receyued letters out of Iewry pertaining vnto the, neyther any of the brethren that came, shewed or spake any harme of the. But we wyll heare of the what thou thinkest. For as concernyng this secte, we know ꝑ euery where it is spoken against. And when they had appoynted hym a daye, there came many to him in his lodgyng. To whō he expounded & testified the kyngdome of god, & preached vnto the of Iesus, both out of the law of Moises, & out of ꝑ prophetes, euen frō morning to nyght. And some beleued the thinges whiche were spoken, and some beleued not.

Unto this the chiefe of the Iewes aunswered in this wyse: Where as thou purgest thy self vnto vs, as though some man had accused the, be thou assured that no man hath so much as wrytten a letter vnto vs frō Iewry concernyng any harme done of thy parte, neyther hath anye man come from thence hyther and spoken any harme of the. Yet are we desyrous to heare thy mynde, euen of thyne owne mouth. For as cōcernyng this newe secte of Iesus of Nazareth whiche arose to lyfe agayne, assured we are that euery man constauntly cryeth out agaynst it, as a vaine thyng. Thou shalt therefore do vs a good pleasure yf thou instruct vs certaynlye what thy mynde is therin. Which thyng whan Paule had aunswered, he woulde gladlye do, vpon the daye appoynted, the Iewes resorted vnto hym agayne in hys ynne where he tarved, vnto then hadde cūmen vnto hym before, vnto whom he expounded the doctrine of the gholpel, witnessyng that the kyngdome of God was than come, and ꝑ Messias ought no longer to be loked for, forasmuche as Iesus of Nazareth was he: and that he prooued by the figures of Moises law, and the forsayinges of the prophetes cupdently expressyng, that whatsoeuer was shadowed in the lawe, and spoken of before by Moyses and the prophetes, was playnly and wholly fulfilled in in Iesus of Nazareth.

Whan Paul had very largely spoken of these matters, from morynyng vntyll euenyng, sum of the Iewes beleued the woordes of Paul, sum beleued not.

And

And whan they agred not among theselues, they departed, after ꝑ Paul had spoken one word: wel spake the holy goste by Esay the prophete vnto our fathers, saying: Goe vnto this people, & say: with your eares shall you heare, & shall not vnderstande: & with your yes shal ye see, and not perceiue. For the hert of this people is wexed grosse, & with their eares haue they had no lust to heare, & their yes, haue they closed, lest they should see w their yes, & heare with their eares, and vnderstande with their hertes, & shoulde be conuerted, & I should heale them. Be it knowen therfore vnto you, that this saluacion of God is sent to the Gentiles, & they shal heare it. And whan he layd these wordes, the Iewes departed from hym, & had great disputations among the selues. And Paule dwelte two yeres full in his lodgeyng, & receyued all that came in vnto hym. Preaching the kyngdom of God, & teaching those thynges whiche concerne the Lorde Iesus with al confidence, no man forbydding him. The texte.

And whan they were at variaunce among themselues, they began to departe, after Paul had once added vnto his long sermon, a woorde or twoo wherein he reproued their hardenelle of belefe, whiche couldne not finde in their hertes to beleue so manyfest testimonies of the lawe and prophetes beyng playnely fulfylled in Iesus. The holy ghoste, layed he, hath well prophecied of you by the prophete Esai, speakyng vnto our forefathers, whose stubberne mysbelefe you resemble. Goe, layd he, vnto this people, and saye vnto them: With eares ye shall heare, & not vnderstande: and with yes shall ye see, and not perceyue. For the hert of this people is wexed grosse, and they haue hadde wyth theyr eares no lust to heare, and theyr yes haue they closed, lest they should see, and heare with their eares, and perceyue with their hertes, and should be conuerted, that I myght heale them. Wherfore be you well assured, ꝑ this health, whiche is offered vnto you of God by Iesus, shalbee carled vnto the Gentyles, for asmuche as you doe reiecte it. For he reiecteth it, that beleueth it not, neyther is any man apte to receyue this fauour, that beleueth not the gospell. Vnto you firste is the gyfte of god declared. For so the lorde commaunded: And ye ought chiefly to haue beleued, whiche profelled the law and the prophetes. but ye kepe your yes closed, & shut vp against all these thinges, your eares stopped, and a hert hardened, fyll gaynesaying the euident light of the truth of the ghospell. But the Gentiles, whiche neyther knowe God, nor haue the lawe or prophetes, shall turne from theyr wouthypping of idols, and through fayth shall obtayne this fauoure of God which ye refuse, beeing freely profered vnto you. Whan Paule had spoken these woordes, the Iewes departed from hym, beyng at great disputacio among themselues. And so continued he by ꝑ space of two yeares in the house that he had hyred, gentyly receyuing al me that came to him, whether they were Iewes, or vncircumcised, preachyng vnto them the kyngdome of god, and teaching with all boldenelle the doctrine of the gospell, no mā forbidding or letting him, alleging prophecies, which were many yereslence spoken of Iesus: confertyng his dedes, woordes & promyses thereunto.
